Fal. Did'st thou? Lord, Lord, how the world is giuen to Lying? I grant you I was downe, and out of Breath, and so was he, but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long houre by Shrewsbury clocke. If I may be beleeued, so: if not, let them that should reward Valour beare the sinne vpon their owne heads. Ile take't on my death, I gaue him this wound in the Thigh: if the man were aliue and would deny it, I would make him eate a peece of my sword.

Iohn. This is the strangest Tale that e're I heard.

Prin. This is the strangest Fellow, Brother Iohn.

Come

Come bring your luggage Nobly on your backe.
For my part, if a lye may do thee grace,
I'le gild it with the happiest termes I haue.
A Retreat is sounded.
The Trumpets sound Retrait, the day is ours.
Come Brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what Friends are living, who are dead. Exeunt
Fal. Ile follow as they say, for Reward. He that rewards me, heauen reward him. If I do grow great againe, Ile grow lesse: For Ile purge, and leaue Sacke, and liue cleanly, as a Nobleman should do. Exit

Scena Quarta.

The Trumpets sound.
Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, with Worcester & Vernon Prisoners

King. The sinister did Rebellion finde Entrance
In the fayre Worcester, and wee thee Grace,
Pardon, and termes of Loue to all of you?
And would'st thou turne our offers contrary?
Misuse the tenor of thy Kinsmans trust?
Three Knights vpon our party slaine to day,
A Noble Earle, and many a creature else,
Had been alyue this houre,
If like a Christian thou had'st truly borne
Betwixt our Armies, true intelligence
Wor. What I haue done, my safety vrg'd me to,
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be auoyded it falls on me.
King. Beare Worcester to death, and Vernon too.
Other Offenders we will pause vpon.
Exit Worcester and Vernon.
How goes the Field?
Prin. The Noble Scot Lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy slaine, and all his men,
Vpon the foot of feare fled with the rest;
And falling from a hill, he was so bruz'd
That the pursuers took him. At my Tent
The Douglas is: and I beseech your Grace,
I may dispose of him.
King. With all my heart.
Prin. Then Brother Iohn of Lancaster,
To you this honourable bounty shall belong
Goe to the Douglas, and deliuer him
Vp to his pleasure, ransomlesse and free:
His Valour shewne vpon our Crests to day,
Hath taught vs how to cherish such high deeds,
Euen in our bosomes, and our Aduersaries.
King. Then this remaines: that we deuide our Power
You Sonne Iohn, and my Cosin Westmerland
Towards Yorke shall bend you with your deerest speed
To meet Northumberland, and the Prelate Scroope,
Who as we heare are busily in Armes.
My Sonne, and you Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March.
Rebellion in this Land shall lose his way,
Meeting the Check of vs, and our another day:
And since this Businesse so fortunately is done,
Let vs not leaue till all our owne be wonne. Exeunt

FINIS.

The Second Part of Henry the Fourth,

Containing his Death: and the Coronation of King Henry the Fift.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

INDVCTION.

Enter Fame.

[illegible]

Vnto the listning fearefull Multitude.
[illegible]
Me [illegible], from the [illegible] East,

[illegible] Rumours Tongues,
[illegible] worse then True-wrongs.

Exit

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lord Bardolfe, and the Porter.

L. Bar. Who keepes the Gate heere hoa?
Where is the Earle?
Por. What shall I say you are?
L. Bar. Tell thou the Earle
That the Lord Bardolfe doth attend him heere.
Por. His Lordship walkes in the Orchard,
Please your Honor, and come but to the Gate,
And I will tell him your mind.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bar. Heere comes the Earle.
Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? every minute now
Should be the Father of some Stratagem,
The Times are wilde: Contention like a Horse
Full of high Feeding, must make wanton worke,
Or breake some Owner.
L. Bar. Noble Earle,
I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury.
Nor. Good, and God crowne them.
L. Bar. As good as heart can wish.
The King almost wounded to the death:
And in the Fortune of my Lord your Sonne,
Prince Harry slaine outright, and both the Blunts
Kill'd in the like: Vernon, your Brother,
And Westmerland, and Stafford fled the Field.
And Harcourt Almost with ruine (grim'd like Hee
That winnes by Iohn)
Is prisoner to your Sonne. O such a Day,
(So fought, so followed and so fairely won)
Came not, till now, to dignifie the Times
Since Cæsars Fortunes.
Nor. How is this deriued?
Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury?
L. Bar. I spake with one my Lord that came thence,
A Gentleman well bred and of good name,
That freely rendred me these newes for true.
Nor. Heere comes my Seruant Trauers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last to listen after Newes.

Enter Trauers.

L. Bar. My Lord, I ouer-rod him on the way,
And he is furnished with no certainties,
More then he haply may retaile from me.
Nor. Now Trauers, what good tidings comes frō you?

Tra.

Fra. My Lord, Sir John [illegible] heard me speake
With other all-dreadings and beleeuers of
Out-ragine. Attended, came [illegible] read
Assurance all that [illegible]
I left opprest, to bid [illegible]
He took the way to Chester. And of [illegible]
I told him and what Newes from Shrewsbury
He told me, that Rebellion had ill lucke,
And that young Harry Percie Spurre was cold
With that he gaue his able Horse the head,
And bending forwards strooke his able heeles
Against the panting sides of his poore Iade
Vp to the rowell head, and starting so
He seem'd in running, to deuoure the way,
Seeking to giue reporte.
Nor. Hah, what's he?
Said he yong, Harry Percie Spurre was cold?
(O Hot-Spurre of dSpurre!) that Rebell,
Had met his like?
L. bar. M. Lord I tell you what,
If my yong Lord your Sonne had not the way,
Vpon mine honor, for a hot man
I'le giue my Barony. Neuer take of it.
Nor. Why the [illegible] Gentleman that rode by Trauers
Giue then such instances of Loffe?
L. bar. Who, he?
He was some hilding Fellow that had stolne
The Horse he rode on, and vpon my life
Speake at aduenture. Looke, here comes more Newes.

Enter Morton.

Nor. Yet this across his brow, like a faire Title-leafe,
To tell the Nature of a tragicke Volume,
So looks the Strond, when the imperious Flood
Say Morton, did'st thou come from Shrewsbury?
Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my Noble Lord,
Where hatefull Death put on his vgliest Maske
To fright our party.
Nor. How doth my Sonne and Brother?
Thou tremblest, and the whitenesse in thy cheeke
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Euen such a man, so faint, so spiritlesse,
So dull, so dead in looke, so woe-begone,
Drew Priams curtaine in the dead of night,
And would haue told him, Halfe his Troy was burn'd:
But Priam found the fire, ere he his Tongue,
And I my Percies death, ere thou report'st it.
This thou would'st say, Your Sonne did thus, and thus,
Your Brother thus: So should my Newes be long.
Say Morton, did I not? another breath,
In telling me of my Sonnes fortune,
Tells me this newes: for what is in this Fame,
But that my Sonne is dead?
Mor. You are too great to be by me gainsaid,
Your Spirit is too true, your Feares too certaine.
Nor. Yet for all this, say not that Percies dead.
I see a strange confession in thine eye:
Thou shak'st the head, and hold'st it fear or sinne,
To speake a truth. If he be slaine, say so:
The Tongue offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth sinne that doth belye the dead,
Not he which but reports the Gentleman.
Let horrid deeds lye in their owne report.
Or that same Tongue that tells the Newes impos'd,
Was but a Bell to ring the Deuill his Paine,
Fall'n from the Dyzie of his Fellowship.
Mor. Pardon me, Lord, I feare will proue it true,
The breathlesse Trumpet doubles it to you.
Your Spirit is too true, your Feares too certaine.
Nor. Yet for all this, say not that Percies dead.
I see a strange confession in thine eye:
Thou shak'st the head, and hold'st it fear or sinne,
To speake a truth. If he be slaine, say so:
The Tongue offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth sinne that doth belye the dead,
Not he which but reports the Gentleman.
Let horrid deeds lye in their owne report.
Or that same Tongue that tells the Newes impos'd,
Was but a Bell to ring the Deuill his Paine,
Fall'n from the Dyzie of his Fellowship.
L. bar. Remember, Lords, all dying mouthes are fed
Mor. Vpon the wholesome parts of this our head.
Nor. Why, he that cures my Lord, his Sonne or me dead.
Mor. I am sorry I should force you to be seene
That, what I would to heauen I might not speake:
But flesh and blood so cowers at fear or sense,
As dumbe and soundlesse as a Stone it moues,
Ere it can out-breath griefe. (Stout Worcester
The Hotspur Mowbray, the Seuen-times-victorious
Thrice from the banks of Wye and Seuerne clad,
From whence with life he neuer more sprung vp.
In these two Princes, one three Crownes should beare,
In both their Fates, Fearefull Ambition sate,
And bade it make Angell me ready, or not.
Both to the Impartiall Enemy of Peace,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody houre,
As by discharge of their Artillerie,
And shocke of Armes, it did appeare to me,
Communicating with the dead.
How these my Newes were receiued, can I tell,
But this I know, my Lord, that in mine eye,
And my poore Soldiers, standing by my Lord,
I saw both griefe and feare, and my poore part
Of this odde accident, so pierce the heart,
As that the Body of my Tale lyes here,
Full of sad Patience, mocking sinfull Playe,
And in the Limits of good Oldmans Duty,
Keepes Prisoner the Attention of your eares,
Till it find Vent in Teares, and Heate in Sighes.
Come Sorrow, as a good enough Physicke now,
And thou most welcome Silence.
Nor. Yet speake Morton,
Tell thou their griefe how euer taking vp,
Thou speak'st of euery Accident of Griefe,
That hath begot it selfe, or doth beget
This Actions Quarrell, were it twice told,
Or twice so many Trumpets, twice so many Fames,
That were to vs, as is a Friend growne cold,
As Winters Thunder, or a sommers Storme,
Or as the Obsequies to the next Morne.
Or hath the Guilty Hand, and Eare of Death
Cut off the Breath from all the Noble Bodies,
Which were the Motiues of the Northerne Seate?
Tydes, Seasons, Causes, Habits, Formes,
Are these dissolu'd? If they are not, would they
Haue not resisted? Or not all resist?
Grones like to Children, ere they can be borne,
Must I haue them? No mother when she heares
Of the vprore of her Childes Nurse,
Shall hold to the vnrighteous Horse his Bit,
As you (Rumor) vpon your gasping Notes
Doe gallop vp your owne Reports of Wrath,
Scalding with your Breath, the fallen Regions,
And Blasting with wide Stretch the Feares of Men,
Like to the Snakes in Iune.
Mor. Heare me speake.
Do so, and then speake Death a hundred times,
Ere hee bids, Morton, stand, for Rumors Toong,
Is but a Warriner to Consequence,
And Death the Master-Feare.
Nor. How might'st thou make me sicke,
But in recounting of thy Sicknesse?
Which to auoyd, as I would any Bane,
I lyke a Coward stop my hearing quite.
Thy Newes being told, as I may rightly iudge,
Will rise as farre beyond the Reach of Thought,
As that I am from Reuerence of my Mind,
When first I did perswade my selfe to feare.
Speake how high's Fame can raise Report to Truth,
So should we thinke the Newes we heare is true.
The Spirit of the Time shall teach me speed.
Mor. Therefore my Lord, thinke fit for to endure
The worst that may befall, and what the Time may doe,
And what indeed it doth: Counsell is still for vse.
Whilst we are heere discoursing Honors losse,
And dreame vpon the Minutes of the Time,
Time flies from vs, and now the swift Aduice
Of Warre, the Powres which it hath rays'd in Feare,
Growes great in Strength, in Skill, and Policie.
Nor. Let Heauen kisse Earth: Now let not Natures hand
Keepe the wilde Flood confin'd: let Order die,
And let the world no longer dure in rest.
Let Confusion [illegible]

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe and Page

Fal. Sirra, you giant, what saies the Doctor to my water?

Pag. He said sir, the water it self was a good healthy water: but for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at mee: the brayne of man is not able to invent any thing that intends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in my selfe, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walke before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the Prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set mee off, why then I have no judgement. Thou horson Mandrake, thou art fitter to be worne in my cap, than to wait at my heeles. I was never manned with an Agot till now, but I will inspect you well, for I will retain you.

Pag. I would my Master would make me sicke, that he might be rid of me.

Fal. Well, if I be served such another trick, I'le have my brayne ta'ne out and buttered, and give it an arrant Cocke and Pullet: and I warrant you, my retention holds, for the villanous Mistake of man keepes not out more villanous Houses. How now? whose Mare's dead? what's the matter?

Pag. Sir, Master Dombledon, about the Sattin for your short Cloake and Slops.

Fal. He may keepe it still at his own best discretion: if he make mee no better Attendance than he does, I'le not weare his bond & yours, by this Counterfeit Security. I am scurvily transformed now I serve no other way than mine owne Legges, and I take pride in them neither: I am the more scorned for it. God may blesse them, they are my onely meanes to advancement. If I have not ere long a better Suite than ever I had, or meane ever to have, or else let mee lose all the Calves of my Legges, I'le make Bucks of Woodmen, and Woodcocks of Weavers. Have you provided me any Souldiers?

Fal. Yes, I have pressed a Souldier to carry your worship a Mace.

Fal. Then I will to Paules and hire me a horse in Smithfield. If I could get me a wife in the Stewes, I were Manned, Horsed, and Wived.

Enter Chiefe Iustice and Servant.

Ser. Sir, here comes the Nobleman that committed the Prince for striking him, about Bardolfe.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch. Iust. What's he that goes there?

Ser. Falstaffe, and please your Lordship.

Iust. He hath [illegible] of late for the Robbery?

Ser. He my Lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury: and (as I heare) is now going with some Charge, to the Lord Iohn of Lancaster.

Iust. What to Yorke? Call him backe againe.

Ser. Sir Iohn Falstaffe.

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deafe.

Pag. You must speake lowder, my Master is deafe.

Iust. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good. Go plucke him by the Elbow: I must speake with him.

Ser. Sir Iohn.

Fal. What? a young knave, and begge? Is there no wars? Is there no employment? Doth not the King lacke subjects? Do not the Rebels want Soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on

on any side but one, it were worse shame to be one, then to be one: the worst man, were it worse then the name of Rebellion can make it,

Ser. You mistake me Sir.

Fal. Why sir? Did I say you were an honest man? Setting my Knighthood, and my Souldiership aside, I had lyed in my throat if I had said so.

Ser. I pray you Sir then set your Knighthood and your Souldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you, you lye in your throat, if you say I am any other, then an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so? I lay aside that which grows to me? If thou get'st any leave of me, hang me up by the heels for a Rabbet-sucker, or a poor Jack: If thou dost, I will not take it of my Soveraign the Prince, but of my Lord your Master.

Ser. Why my Lord would speak with you.

Iust. Sir John Falstaffe, a word with you.

Fal. My good Lord, give your Lordship good time of the day. I am glad to see your Lordship abroad: I heard say your Lordship was sick. I hope your Lordship goes abroad by advice. Your Lordship (though not clean past your youth) hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltness of time, and I most humbly beseech your Lordship to have a reverend care of your health.

Iust. Sir John, I sent you before your Expedition, to levy Souldiers for the Service.

Fal. It is true, my Lord, if the King's Majesty is returned with victory from Wales.

Iust. I, I must tell you Manly, your dilatory sloth is such, as becomes not those that are so employed as you are.

Fal. Your Lordship may minister the Potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of poverty: but how I should be your Patient, to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or indeed a scruple it self.

Iust. I partly know the reasons you have to be pressed rather than your selves. I have not forgotten the complaints I have heard of you, of late, in the City: how you bestow your time and your means there.

Fal. My Lord, I had some business there, and went only for my own private: I owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of no man's advancement, sorry for no man's disgrace, open to conference, and apt to please every man. Never purchase displeasure, never lay wait for my Commodity, nor ever disdain the Society of those that are vendible to any indifferent Customer. I am vilely slandered by some that are my Enemies, when it is known to many, that I am as subject to Temptation, as a sworn Brother of the Fraternity of Steepe-up-hill: but he that will not be overthrown by Temptation, shall pass by my House, and say, there dwells no sinner.

Iust. Well, I am loth to gall a new-healed wound: your days are ill spent in your wicked courses, such a little grace even your Nay, is expected of you. You may think the rather vagarie time, for your quarrel to go great Action.

Fal. My Lord?

Iust. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping Wolf.

Fal. To wake a Wolf is as bad as to smell a Fox.

Iust. What? you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A Wassel-candle, my Lord, all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Iust. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravity, gravity.

Iust. You follow the young Prince up and down, like his ill Angel.

Fal. Not so, my Lord: your ill Angel is light, but I hope he that looks upon me, will take me without weighing: and yet in some respects, I grant I cannot go: I cannot tell. Virtue is of so little regard in these costermongers, these time-shifters, that I am come to lurch: but sorrow take him that cares for it, I will speak the truth. A good gingerbread face you have, it would do well at a new Fair. What call you the right vaward of your Regiment? Is it not a new Forrest?

Iust. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye, a dry hand, a yellow cheek, a white beard, a decreasing leg, an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken, your wind short, your chin double, your wit single, and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call your self young? Fie, fie, fie, Falstaffe.

Fal. My Lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice, I have lost it with hollowing, and singing of Anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not: the truth is, I am only old in judgement and understanding: and he that will caper with me for a thousand Marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box of the ear that the Prince gave you, he gave it like a rude Prince, and you took it like a sensible Lord. I have checked him for it, and the young Lion repents: marry not in ashes, and sackcloth, but in new silk, and old sack.

Iust. Well, heaven send the Prince a better companion.

Fal. Heaven send the Companion a better Prince: I cannot rid my hands of him.

Iust. Well, the King hath severed you and Prince Harry: I hear you are going with Lord John of Lancaster, against the Archbishop and

Fal. Yea? Can you speak English? Why this is excellent. I am glad of it. I have a kinsman is to command the English. I think you have seen him, Lord Mowbray, Duke Norfolk, or Norfolk: I know not well the name of him.

Iust. Yea, my Lord Norfolk.

Fal. Is not he a proper man?

Iust. A brave man of Arms, by my troth: and very well given, in my conscience.

Fal. Then I see Lord John of Lancaster is not come: if he be, he is well met by my troth. Where lies he, my good Lord? Where, my Lord?

Iust. Of my Cousin Vernons, are you not?

Fal. Where, my Lord?

Iust. Where, but in Yorkshire, as you well know.

Fal. Heaven comfort him then, for I am his Baggage, his Lackey, his Gentleman-Beetle. A man can no more separate Age and Covetousness, than can part young limbs and lechery: but the Gout galles the one, and one, and the pox pinches the other; and to both the Degrees prevent my curses. Boy?

Page. Sir.

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seuen groats and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this Consumption of the purse. Borrowing only lingers, and lingers it out, but the disease is incureable. Go beare this letter to my Lord of Lancaster, this to the Prince, this to the Earle of Westmerland, and this to old Mistris Vrsula, whome I haue weekly sworne to marry, since I perceiu'd the first white haire on my chin. About it: you know where to finde me. A pox of this Gowt, or a Gowt of this Pox: for the one or the other playes the rogue with my great toe. It is no matter, if I do halt, I haue the warres for my colour, and my Pention shall seeme the more reasonable. A good wit will make vse of any thing. I will turne diseases to commodity. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Archbishop, Hastings, Mowbray, and Lord Bardolfe.

Arch. Thus haue you heard our causes, & know our Means
And my most noble Friends, I pray you all
Speake your minds our opinions of our hopes,
And first Lord Marshall, what say you to it?

Mow. I well allow the occasion of our Armes,
But gladly would be better satisfied,
How (in our Meanes) we should aduance our selues
To looke with forehead bold and big enough
Vpon the Power and puissance of the King.

Hast. Our present Musters grow vpon the File
To fiue and twenty thousand men of choice:
And our Supplies, liue largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose bosome burnes
With an incensed Fire of injuries.

L. Bar. The question then (Lord Hastings) standeth thus Whether our present fiue and twenty thousand
May hold vp-head, without Northumberland:

Hast. With him, we may.

L. Bar. I marry, there's the point
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My iudgement is, we should not step too farre
Till we haue his Assistance by the hand.
For in a Theame so bloody fac'd, as this,
Coniecture, Expectation, and Surmise
Of Aydes incertaine, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true Lord Bardolfe, for indeed
It was yong Hotspurres case, at Shrewsbury.

L. Bar. It was (my Lord) who lin'd himself with hope,
Eating the ayre, on promise of Supply,
Flatter'd with hope, & promise of a power,
Much smaller then the smallest of his Thoughts,
And so with great imagination
Proper to mad men led his Powers to death,
And (winning) leapt into destruction.

Hast. But (by your leaue) it neuer yet did hurt,
To lay downe likely-hoods, and formes of hope.

L. Bar. Yes, if this present quality of warre,
Indeed the instant action (a cause on foot,
Liues so in hope) As in an early Spring,
We see th'appearing buds which to proue fruite,
Hope giues not so much warrant, as Dispaire
That Frosts will bite them. When we meane to build,
We first suruey the Plot, then draw the Modell,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the Erection,
Which if we finde out-weighes Ability,
What do we then, but draw a-new the Modell
In fewer offices? Or at least, desist
To builde at all? Much more, in this great worke,
(Which is (almost) to plucke a Kingdome downe,
And set another vp) should we suruey
The plot of Situation, and the Modell;
Consent vpon a sure Foundation
Question Surueyors, know our owne estate,
How able such a Worke to vndergo,
To weigh against his Opposite? Or else,
We fortune in Paper, and in Figures,
Vsing the Names of men, instead of men
Like one, that drawes the Modell of a house
Beyond his power to builde it; who (halfe through)
Giues o're, and leaues his part-created Cost
A naked subiect to the Weeping Clouds,
And waste, for churlish Winters tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes (yet likely of faire byrth)
Should be still-borne, and that we now possest
The vtmost man of expectation:
I thinke we are a Body strong enough
(Euen as we are) to equall with the King.

L. Bar. What is the King but fiue & twenty thousand?

Hast. To vs no more: nay not so much Lord Bardolfe.
For his diuisions (as the Times do braul)
Are in three Heads: one Power against the French,
And one against Glendower: Perforce a third
Must take vp vs: So is the vnfirme King
In three diuided: and his Coffers found
With hollow Pouerty, and Emptinesse.

Arch. That he should draw his seuerall strengths together
And come against vs in full puissance
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaues his backe vnarm'd, the French, and Welch
Baying him at the heeles: neuer feare that.

L. Bar. Who is it like should lead his Forces hither?

Hast. The Duke of Lancaster, and Westmerland:
Against the Welsh himselfe, and Harrie Monmouth.
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I haue no certaine notice.

Arch. Let vs on:
And publish the occasion of our Armes.
The Common-wealth is sicke of their owne Choice,
Their ouer-greedy loue hath surfetted:
An habitation giddy, and vnsure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond Many, with what loud applause
Did'st thou beate heauen with blessing Bullingbrooke,
Before he was, what thou would'st haue him be?
And being now trimm'd in thine owne desires,
Thou (beastly Feeder) art so full of him,
That thou prouok'st thy selfe to cast him vp.
So, so (thou common Dogge) did'st thou disgorge
Thy glutton-bosome of the Royall Richard,
And now thou would'st eate thy dead vomit vp,
And how'st to finde it. What trust is in these Times?
They, that when Richard liu'd, would haue him dye,
Are now become enamour'd on his graue.
Thou that threw'st dust vpon his goodly head
When through proud London he came sighing on,
After th'admired heeles of Bullingbrooke,
Cri'st now, O Earth, yeeld vs that King againe,

And take thou this (O thoughts of men accurs'd)

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hostesse with two Officers Fang, and Snare.
Hostesse. Mr. Fang, haue you entred the Action?
Fang. It is entred.
Hostesse Where's your Yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman? Will he stand to it?
Fang Sirrah, where's Snare?
Hostesse I, I good M. Snare.
Snare. Heere, heere
Fang Snare, we must Arrest Sir John Falstaffe
Host. I good M. Snare, I haue entred him and all.
Snare. It may chance cost some of vs our liues: he will stab
Hostesse. Alas the day take heed of him: he stab'd me in mine owne house, and that most beastly: he cares not what mischeefe he does, if his weapon be out: he will foyne like any diuell, he will spare neither man, woman, nor childe.
Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.
Hostesse. No, nor I neither: I'le be at your elbow
Fang. If I but fist him once: if he come but within my Vice.
Host. I am vndone with his going: I warrant he is an infinitive thing vpon my score. Good M. Fang hold him sure: good M. Snare let him not scape, he comes continually to Py-Corner (saving your manhoods) to buy a saddle, and he is indited to dinner to the Lobster in Lombard-street, to M. Smoothie the Silkeman: I pray ye, since my Exton is entred and my Case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A ton of Man-slaughter is a light one, for a poore Lone woman to beare: & I haue borne, and borne, and borne, and haue been fub-bed off, and fub'd off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing, vnles a woman should be made an Asse and a Beast, to beare euery knaues wrong. Enter Falstaffe and Bardolfe. Yonder he comes, and that arrant Mal-tasty Nose Bardolfe with him. Do your Offices, do your offices M. Fang, & M. Snare, do me, do me, do me your Offices
Fal How now? whose Mare's dead? what's the matter?
Fang. Sir John, I arrest you, at the suit of Mist Quickly
Falst. Away Varlets, draw Bardolfe. Cut me off the Villaines head: throw the Queane in the Channel.
Host Throw me in the channel? He throw thee there. Wilt thou? wilt thou, thou bastardly rogue. Murder murder, O thou Hony-suckle villaine, wilt thou kill Gods officers, and the Kings? O thou hony-seed Rogue, thou art a hony-seed, a Man-queller, and a woman-queller.
Falst Keep them off, Bardolfe. Fang A rescue, a rescue.
Host. Good people bring a rescue. Thou wilt not, thou wilt not? Do, do thou Rogue. Do thou Hemp-seed.
Page Away you Scullion, you Rampallian, you Fustilarian: I'le tucke your Catastrophe. Enter Ch. Iustice
Iust What's the matter? Keepe the Peace here, hoa.
Host. Good my Lord be good to me. I beseech you stand to me
Ch. Iust How now sir John? What are you brauling here? Doth this become your place, your time, and businesse? You should haue been well on your way to Yorke. Stand from him Fellow, wherefore hang'st vpon him?
Host O my most worshipfull Lord, and't please your Grace I am a poore widdow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit. Ch. Iust. For what summe?
Host. It is more then for some (my Lord) it is for all: all I haue he hath eaten me out of house and home: he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his: but I will haue some of it out againe, or I will ne're eate a pennie. Nights, like the Mare
Falst. I thinke I am as like to ride the Mare, if I haue any vantage of ground, to get vp.
Ch. Iust How comes this, Sir John? Fy, what a man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not asham'd to inforce a poore Widdow to so rough a course, to come by her owne?
Falst What is the grosse summe that I owe thee?
Host. Marry (if thou wer't an honest man) thy selfe, & the money too. Thou didst sweare to me vpon a parcell-gilt Goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber at the round table, by a sea-coale fire, vpon Wednesday in Wheat-week when the Prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor. Thou didst sweare to me then (as I was washing thy wound) to marry me, and make me my Lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech the Butchers wife come in then, and call me Gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a messe of Vinegar, telling vs she had a good dish of Prawnes: whereby thou didst desire to eate some: whereby I told thee they were ill for a greene wound? And didst not thou when she was gone downe the staires, desire me to be no more familiar with such poore people, saying that ere long they should call me Madam? And didst not thou commit? Why nowe? Why nowe? Why nowe? Has not she paid thee? Why nowe? Why nowe? Why nowe

Fal. Glasses glasses, is the only drinking: and for my walles a pretty slight Drollery, or the Story of the Prodigall, or the Germane hunting in Waterworke, is worth a thousand of these Bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten Tapistries. Let it be ten pound if thou canst. Come, if it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy Action. Come, thou must not be in this humour with me: dost not know me? come, come.

Host. Pretty Sir John, I must be bold twenty Nobles, I cannot pawne my Gowne, by my troth, by my troth.

Fal. Let it alone, I will make other shift: you'l be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it although I pawne my Gowne. I pray you come to Supper. You pay nothing.

Fal. Will it come? Go walke, and talke with the Musicke, go.

Host. Will you [illegible] Lord, I pray you leave me.

Fal. I will not sup to night, I cannot eate any thing.

Host. Now I pray you sup, Sir John.

Fal. Rogue, if I be cold, I will stand by the fire and bake my knees. When the Boy knocks at the doore, bid him come downe, and aske after my Horse, and be gone window: at last I spy'd his eyes, and me thought he had made two holes in the Ale-wifes new Petticoat, & peeped through.

Prin. Hath not the boy profited?

Bar. Away you horson vpright Rabbet, away.

Page. Away, you rascaly Althea dreame, away.

Prin. Instruct vs Boy: what dreame Boy?

Page. Marry, my Lord Althea dream'd, she was delivered of a firebrand, and therefore I call him her dream.

Prince. A Crowaes-worth of good Interpretation: There it is, Boy.

Poin. O that this good Blossome could be kept from Cankers: Well, there is fourepence to preserue thee.

Bard. If you do not make him be hang'd among you, the gallowes shall be wronged.

Prince. And how doth thy Master, Bardolph?

Bar. Well, my good Lord: he heard of your Graces comming to Towne. There's a Letter for you.

Poin. Deliuer'd with good respect. And how doth the Martlemas, your Master?

Bard. In bodily health Sir.

Poin. Marry, the immoderate spirits hourely needes a Physician: but that moues not him, though that be sicke, it dyes not.

Prince. I do allow this Wen to be as familiar with me, as my dogge: and he holds his place, for look you how he writes.

Poin. Letter. John Falstaffe Knight. Euery man must know that, as oft as his occasion (as may sometimes fall out) hath need of any one, so he hath occasion to vse him. In that he dubs me Knight, I am not Iohn of Gaunt your Father, but I prick my knighthood downe in Sacke. How comes this, Sweet-heart? Why, this flat and counterfeit Rascall scores me out of his Commendations. Well, I cannot last euer: but was alwayes good enough for a shallow Lad, and liues by Sea-coale. You, and all other young Princes, doe the like. Giuen vnder the Dog-house, the 30. of February. By the Moone, or some other Planet, good enough to serue the purpose. Your Majesties to vse, Sir John Falstaffe.

Prin. Well, this is a Certificate.

Poin. Peace.

I will imitate the honourable Romanes in breuitie.

Poin. Sure he meanes breauity in staues-straight. I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leaue thee. Be not too familiar with Poines, for he misuses Fauours so much that he weares thou art to marrie. Seale Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayst, and so farewell.

Thine, by yea and no, which is as much as to say, as thou feelst him. Iacke Falstaffe with my Familiars. Iohn with my Brothers and Sisters, and Sir Iohn, with all Europe.

My Lord, I will steepe this Letter in Sacke, and make him eate it.

Prin. That's to make him eate twenty of his Words. But do you vse me thus, Ned? Must I marry your Sister?

Poin. May the Wench haue no worse Fortune. But I neuer said so.

Prin. Well, thus we play the Fooles with the time, & the Spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mocke vs. Is your Master heere in London?

Bard. Yes my Lord.

Prin. Where sups he? Doth the old Bore, feede in the old Franke?

Bard. At the old place my Lord, in Eastcheape.

Prin. What Company.

Prin. Sup any women with him?

Page. None my Lord, but old Mistris Quickly, and Mistris Doll Teare-sheet.

Prin. What Pagan may that be?

Page. A proper Gentlewoman Sir, and a Kinswoman of my Masters.

Prin. Euen such Kin, as the Parish Heyfers are to the Towne-Bull? Shall we tell this vpon them (Ned) at Supper?

Poin. I am your shadow my Lord: Ile follow you.

Prin. Sirra, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your Master that I am yet in Towne. There's for your silence.

Bar. I haue no tongue Sir.

Page. And for mine Sir, I will gouerne it.

Prin. Fare ye well, go.

This Doll Teare-sheet should be some Roade.

Poin. I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S. Albans, and London.

Prin. How might we see Falstaffe bestow himselfe to night, in his true colours, and not in his disguises?

Poin. Put on two Leather Iackets, like Appren. and waite vpon him at his Table as Drawers.

Prin. From a God, to a Bull? A heauie descension: it was Iupiter to Europa. Because she was a Prettie one. It is for this Villaine, that he hath beene long in his Debt, and threatens him euery time he meets him. And his pretence shall be, to arrest me, when I am King of this Forsaken Towne. Come, let's hence.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Northumberland in his Night-Gowne, and Harcourt.

North. I prethee louing Wife, and gentle Daughter,
Giue an euen way vnto my rough Affaires:
Put not you on the visage of the Times,
And be like them to Percie troublesome.

Wife. I haue giuen ouer: I will speake no more.
Do what you will, your Wisedome be your guide.

North. Alas sweet Wife, my Honour is at pawne,
And but my going, nothing can restraine it.

La. O yet, for Gods sake go not to these Warres.
The Time was (Father) when you broke your word,
When you were more endeer'd to it then now,
When your owne Percy, when my heart-deere Harry,
Threw many a Northward looke, to see his Father
Bring vp his Powres: but he did long in vaine.
Who then perswaded you to stay at home?
There were two Honours lost, Yours and your Sonnes.
For Yours, may heauenly glory brighten it.
For His, it stucke vpon him, as the Sunne
In the grey vault of Heauen: and by his Light
Did all the Chiualrie of England moue
To do braue Acts. He was (indeed) the Glasse
Wherein the Noble Youth did dresse themselues.
He had no Legges, that practis'd not his Gate:
And speaking thicke (which Nature made his Blemish)
Became the Accents of the Valiant.
For those that could speake low and tardily,
Would turne their owne Perfection to Abuse,
To seeme like him. So that in Speech, in Gate,
In Diet, in Affections of delight,
In Military Rules, Humors of Blood,

He was the Marke, and Glasse Copy and Booke,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous him,
O Miracle of Men! Him did you leaue
(Second to none) vnseconded by you,
To looke vpon the hideous God of Warre,
In disaduantage to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspurs Name
Did seeme defendable to you and him.
Neuer, O neuer doe his Ghost this wrong,
To hold your Honour more precise and nice
With others, then with him. Let them alone:
The Marshall and the Archbishop are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but halfe their Numbers,
To day might I (hanging on Hotspurs Neck)
Haue askt a doole of Drammes for his Grace
North. Beshrew your heart,
Faire Daughter, you doe draw my Spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient Ouersights.
But I must goe, and meet with Danger there,
Or it will seeke me in another place,
And finde me worse prouided.
Wife. O fly to Scotland,
Till that the Nobles, and the armed Commons,
Haue of their Puissance made a little taste.
Lady. If they get ground, and vantage of the King,
Then ioyne you with them, like a Rib of Steele,
To make Strength stronger. But for all our loues,
First let them try themselues. So did your Sonne,
He was so aduis'd, to come a Weeke
And neuer shall I make distemperature of Teares and woe.
To raine vpon Remembrance with mine Eyes,
That it may grow and sprout, as high as Heauen,
For Recordation to my Noble Husband.
North. Come, come go in with me: 'tis with my Minde
As with the Tyde swelling vp vnto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neyther way.
Fame would I goe to meet the Archbishop,
But many moodes and Reasons of my State,
I will refolue for Scotland: there am I,
Till Time and Vantage craue my company. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter two Drawers

1. Drawer. What hast thou brought there? Apple-Johns? I know Sir Iohn cannot endure an Apple-Iohn.

2. Draw. Thou sai'st true: the Prince once set a Dish of Apple-Iohns before him, and told him there were but more Sir Iohns: and, pitying the olde round, wrinkled Knight, it angred him to the heart: but he hath forgot that.

1. Draw. Why then cover, and set them downe: and see if thou canst finde out Sneakes Noyse, Mistris Tearesheet would faine haue some Musique.

2. Draw. Sirrha, heere will be the Prince, and Master Poynes anon: and they will put on two of our Ierkins, and Aprons, and Sir Iohn must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1. Draw. Then heere will be old Vtis: it will be an excellent Stratagem.

2. Draw. Ile see if I can finde out Sneake. Exit

Enter Hostesse, and Dol.

Host. Sweet-heart, me thinkes now you are in an excellent good temperality: your Pulsidge beates as extraordinarily, as heart would desire, and your Colour (I warrant you) is as red as any Rose. But you haue drunke too much Canaries, and that's a marueilous searching Wine; and it perfumes the blood, ere wee can say what's this. How doe you now?

Dol. Better then I was: Hem.

Host. Why that was well said. A good heart's worth Gold. Looke, here comes Sir Iohn.

Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. When Arthur first in Court—(empty the Iordan) and was a worthy King. How now Mistris Dorothy?

Host. Sicke of a Calme: yea good sooth.

Fal. So is all her Sect: if they be once in a Calme, they are sick.

Dol. You muddie Rascall, is that all the comfort you giue me?

Fal. You make fat Rascalls Mistris Dol.

Dol. I make them? Gluttony and Diseases make them, I make them.

Fal. If the Cooke make the Gluttony, you helpe to make the Diseases (Dol) we catch of you (Dol) we catch of you. Grant that, my poore Vertue, grant that.

Dol. I marry, our Chaynes and our Iewels.

Fal. You, brooches, Pearles and Owches: For to serue bravely, is to come halting off: you know: to come off the Breach, with his Pike bent bravely, and to surgery the bravely; to venture vpon the charg'd Chambers bravely.

Host. Why this is the olde fashion: you two never meete, but you fall to some discord: you are both (in good troth) as rheumatike as two drie Toastes, you cannot one beare with another's Confirmities. What the good-yere? One must beare, and that must be you: you are the weaker Vessell; as they say, the emptier Vessell.

Dol. Can a weake empty Vessell beare such a huge full Hogs-head? There's a whole Marchants Venture of Bourdeaux-Stuffe in him: you haue not seene a Hulke better stuffe in the Hold. Come, I'le be friends with thee Iacke: Thou art going to the Warres, and whether I shall euer see thee againe, or no, there is no body cares.

Enter Drawer.

Drawer. Sir, Ancient Pistoll is below, and would speake with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering Rascall, let him not come hither. It is the foule-mouth'dst Rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: I must liue amongst my Neighbors, Ile no Swaggerers: I am in good name, and fame, with the very best: shut the doore, there comes no Swaggerers heere: I haue not liu'd all this while, to haue swaggering now: shut the doore, I pray you.

Fal. Do'st thou heare, Hostesse?

Host. 'Pray you pacifie your selfe, Sir Iohn, there comes no Swaggerers heere.

Fal. Do'st

Falst. Do'ſt thou heare? it is mine Ancient.

Hoſt Tilly-fally, Sir Iohn) neuer tell me, your ancient Swaggerer comes not in my doores. I was before Maſter Tiſicke, the Deputie, the other day: and as hee ſaid to me, it was no longer agoe then Wednesday laſt Neighbour Quickly (ſayes hee;) Maſter Dombe, our Miniſter, was by then: Neighbour Quickly (ſayes hee) receiue thoſe that are Ciuill; for (ſayth hee) you are in an ill Name: now hee ſaid ſo, I can tell whereupon: for (ſayes hee) you are an honeſt Woman, and well thought on; therefore take heede what Gueſts you receiue Receiue (ſayes hee) no ſwaggering Companions There comes none heere. You would bleſſe you to heare what hee ſaid No, no Swaggerers.

Falſt Hee's no Swaggerer (Hoſteſſe) a tame Cheater, hee: you may ſtroake him as gently, as a Puppie Greyhound: hee will not ſwagger with a Barbarie Hennе, if her feathers turne backe in any ſhew of reſiſtance. Call him vp (Drawer.)

Hoſt. Cheater, call you him? I will barre no honeſt man my houſe, nor no Cheater: but I doe not loue ſwaggering; I am the worſe when one ſayes, ſwagger. Feele Maſters, how I ſhake, looke you, I warrant you.

Dol. So you doe, Hoſteſſe.

Hoſt. Doe I? yea, in very truth doe I, if it were an Aſpen Leafe: I cannot abide Swaggerers.

Enter Piſtol, and Bardolph and his Boy.

Piſt 'Saue you, Sir Iohn.

Falſt. Welcome Ancient Piſtol. Here (Piſtol) I charge you with a Cup of Sacke: doe you diſcharge vpon mine Hoſteſſe.

Piſt. I will diſcharge vpon her (Sir Iohn) with two Bullets.

Falſt. She is Piſtoll-proofe (Sir, you ſhall hardly offend her.

Hoſt. Come, Ile drinke no Proofes, nor no Bullets: I will drinke no more then will doe me good, for no mans pleaſure, I.

Piſt. Then to you (Miſtris Dorothie) I will charge you

Dol. Charge me? I ſcorne you (ſcuruie Companion) what? you poore, baſe, ratcally, cheating, lacke-Linnen-Mate: away you mouldie Rogue, away; I am meat for your Maſter.

Piſt. I know you, Miſtris Dorothie.

Dol. Away you Cut-purſe Raſcall, you filthy Bung, away: By this Wine, Ile thruſt my Knife in your mouldie Chappes, if you play the ſawcie Cuttle with me. Away you Bottle-Ale Raſcall, you Baſket-hilt ſtale Iugler, you. Since when, I pray you, Sir? what, with two Points on your ſhoulder? much.

Piſt I will murther your Ruffe, for this.

Hoſt. No, good Captaine Piſtol: not heere, ſweete Captaine

Dol. Captaine? thou abhominable damn'd Cheater, art thou not aſham'd to be call'd Captaine? If Captaines were of my minde, they would trunchion you out for taking their Names vpon you, before you haue earn'd them. You a Captaine? you ſlaue, for what? for reſcuing a poore Whores Ruffe in a Bawdy-houſe? Hee a Captaine: hang him Rogue, hee liues vpon mouldie ſtew'd-Prunes, and dry'de Cakes. A Captaine? Theſe Villaines will make the word Captaine odious: Therefore Captaines had needs looke to it.

Bard Pray thee goe downe good Ancient.

Falſt Hearke thee hither, Miſtris Dol.

Piſt Not I: I tell thee what, Corporall Bardolph, I could teare her: Ile be reuenged on her.

Piſt Ile ſee her damn'd firſt: to Pluto's damn'd Lake, to the Infernall Deepe, where Erebus and Torments vile alſo. Hold Hooke and Line, ſay I: Downe, downe Dogges, downe Fates: haue wee not Hiren here?

Hoſt. Good Captaine Peeſel be quiet, it is very late I beſeeke you now, aggrauate your Choler.

Piſt. Theſe be good Humors indeede. Shall Packe-Horſes, and hollow-pamper'd Iades of Aſia, which cannot goe but thirtie miles a day, compare with Cæſar, and with Canniballs, and Troian Greekes? nay, rather damne them with King Cerberus, and let the Welkin roare. Shall wee fall foule for Toyes?

Hoſt. By my troth Captaine, theſe are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good Ancient: this will grow to a Brawle anon.

Piſt. Die men, like Dogges; giue Crownes like Pinnes Haue we not Hiren here?

Hoſt. On my word (Captaine) there's none ſuch here. What the good-yere, doe you thinke I would denye her? I pray be quiet.

Piſt. Then feed, and be fat (my faire Calipolis) Come, giue me ſome Sacke, Si fortune me tormente, ſperato me contente. Feare wee broad-hoes? No, let the Fiend giue fire Giue me ſome Sacke: and Sweet-heart liue thou there. Come wee to full Points here, and are et cetera's nothing?

Fal. Piſtol, I would be quiet.

Piſt. Sweet Knight, I kiſſe thy Neaffe. what? wee haue ſeene the ſeuen Starres.

Dol I thruſt him downe ſtayres, I cannot endure ſuch a Fuſtian Raſcall.

Piſt. Thruſt him downe ſtayres? know wee not Galloway Nagges?

Fal. Quoit him downe (Bardolph) like a ſhoue-groat ſhilling: nay, if hee doe nothing but ſpeake nothing, hee ſhall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you downe ſtayres.

Piſt What? ſhall wee haue Inciſion? ſhall wee embrew? then Death rocke me aſleepe, abridge my doleful dayes: why then let grieuous, gaſtly, gaping Wounds, vntwin'd the Siſters three Come Atropos, I ſay.

Hoſt Here's good ſtuffe toward.

Fal Giue me my Rapier boy.

Dol I prethee Iack, I prethee doe not draw.

Fal. Get you downe ſtayres.

Hoſt Here's a good yoake of it: Ile forſweare keeping houſe, before Ile be in theſe tirrits, and frights. So Murther I warrant now. Alas, alas, put vp your naked Weapons, put vp your naked Weapons.

Dol. I prethee Iack be quiet, the Raſcall is gone: ah, you whorſon little valiant Villaine, you.

Hoſt. Are you not hurt i'th' Groyne? me thought hee made a thruſt at your Belly.

Fal. Haue you turn'd him out of doores?

Bard Yes Sir: the Raſcall's drunke: you haue hurt him Sir in the ſhoulder.

Fal A Raſcall to braue me.

Dol Ah you ſweet little Rogue, you: alas poore Ape, how thou ſweat'ſt? Come, let me wipe thy Face Come on, you whorſon Chops. Ah Rogue, I loue thee Thou art

arta valorous as Hector of Troy, worse then of Agamemnon and ten times better then the nine Worthies: ah Villaine

Fal. A rascally Slaue, I will toste the Rogue in a Blanket.

Dol. Do, if thou dar'st for thy heart: if thou doo'st, Ile canuas tree betweene a paire of Sheetes.

Enter Musique.

Page. The Musicke is come Sir

Fal. Let them play: play Sirs. Sit on my Knee, Dol. A Rascally yea-forsooth knaue, to beare a Gentleman in hand, and then stand vpon Security.

Dol. And thou a withered Seruingman, how can'st thou vilifie mee, for I am as honest as my Neighbour, she sels Bread and keeps Geese, as I may: and you play the Saint to me, you neuer buckled to any thing but Mistresses and Seruingmen, and begin to patch vp thine old body for Heauen.

Enter the Prince and Poines disguised.

Fal. Peace (good Dol) I doe not speake. Death, my Heart is very heauy now, that I cannot sleepe. Death, I am as melancholy as a Gyb Cat, or a lugd Beare.

Dol. What's the matter?

Fal. Here's Bardolph and Page, and one Peto, will you vnderstand Welsh, Mistris Dol? I could be contented to be there in this company, if the Legge.

Dol. Well thought vpon Falstaffe, good eyes and good words to them, and Drinke too, if thou can'st. Tell me, how many Lords and Princes came with him o'Horsebacke?

Fal. There's but one Prince, and they call him Hall: a plague vpon him, he will learne of mee to make base Welsh, and then he will stab. I am damn'd for keeping his company. A weake Mungrell, if the Prince follow'd him, I would forsake him: there comes no grace from him, he brings his Pouertie with him, and they say he lies in the Woods one night a Robbing Egges, and thefts them hot and rosted. Is it not strange that desire should so many yeeres outlue performance?

Fal. Kisse me Dol.

Prince. Saw'st thou euer an Impudent Embossed Rascall, if there were not a Law to restraine thee, thou would'st driue all the Boyes in the Land, for stealing Dutches.

Dol. Nay truely I kisse thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am olde, I am olde.

Dol. I loue thee better then I loue ere a scuruie young Boy of them all.

Fal. What stuffe wilt haue a Kirtle of? I shall receiue Money on Thursday: thou shalt haue a Cappe to morrow. A merry Song, come: it growes late, wee will to Bed. Thou wilt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. Thou wilt set me a weeping if thou say'st so: proue that euer I dresse my selfe handsome, till thy returne: well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some Sack Francis.

Prince, Poins. Anon, anon Sir.

Fal. Ha? a Bastard Sonne of the Kings? And art not thou Poines, his Brother?

Prince. Why thou Globe of sinfull Contents, what a life doest thou lead?

Fal. A better then thou: I am a Gentleman, thou art a Drawer.

Prince. Very true, Sir, and I come to draw you out by the Eares.

Host. Oh, the Lord preserue thy good Grace: Welcome to London. Now Heauen blesse that sweete face of thine: What, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad Compound of Maiestie, by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome.

Dol. How you fat Foole, I scorne you.

Poins. My Lord, he will driue you out of your reuenge, and turne all to a merryment, if you take not the heed.

Prince. You whoreson Candle-mine you, how vilely did you speake of me euen now, before this honest, vertuous, ciuill Gentlewoman?

Host. Blessing on your good heart, and so shee is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou heare me?

Prince. Yes: and you knew me, as you did when you ranne away by Gads-hill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose, to trie my patience.

Fal. No, no, no not so: I did not thinke, thou was't within hearing.

Prince. I shall driue you then to confesse the wilful abuse, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hall, on mine Honor, no abuse.

Prince. Not to dispraise me, and call me Pantler, and Bread-chipper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse, Hall.

Poins. No abuse?

Fal. No abuse (Ned) in the World: honest Ned, none. I disprou'd him for the Wicked, that the Wicked might not fall in loue with him: In which doing, I haue done the part of a carefull Friend, and a true Subiect, and thy Father is to giue me thankes for it. No abuse (Hall) none, Ned, none, no Boyes, none.

Prince. See now whether pure Feare, and entire Cowardize, doth not make thee wrong this vertuous Gentlewoman, to close with vs? Is she of the Wicked? Is thine Hostesse heere, of the Wicked? Or is the Boy of the Wicked? Or honest Bardolph, whose Zeale burnes in his Nose, of the Wicked?

Poins. Answere thou dead Elme, answere.

Fal. The Fiend hath prickt downe Bardolph irrecouerable, and his Face is Lucifers Priuy Kitchin, where he doth nothing but roast Maulte-Wormes: for the Boy, there is a good Angell about him, but the Deuill outbids him too.

Prince. For the Women?

Fal. For one of them, shee is in Hell already, and burnes poore Soules for the other, I owe her Money, and whether shee be damn'd for that, I know not.

Host. No I warrant you.

Fal. No,

Fal. No, I tell thee thou art not. I think thou art quicker of that. Marry, there is cause of impediment: my Page, my Horse, my Lackey, my Groome, and my selfe, diuersly to be seuered, casting that their course, contrary to the Lawes of the Watch: I haue not lookt on Winter and Summer.

Host. All Vittailers will not doe. What say'st thou to a Cygnet of Mutton or two, in a Veale Pie?

Prince. You, Gentlewoman.

Dol. What saies your Grace?

Fal. His Grace saies that, which his flesh rebels against.

Host. Who knocks so loud at doore? Looke to the doore there, Francis?

Enter Peto.

Prince. Peto, how now? what newes?

Peto. The King your Father, is at Westminster,
And there are twentie weake and wearied Posts
Come from the North: and as I came along
I met, and ouer-tooke a dozen Captaines,
Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the Tauernes,
And asking euery one for Sir Iohn Falstaffe.

Prince. By Heauen, Poines, I feele me much to blame,
So idly to prophane the precious time,
When I empe for Command on, like the Sparrow,
Beate with black Vapour, and begin to hatter,
And drop vpon our bare vnarmed heads.
Giue me my Sword, and Cloake:
Falstaffe good night.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest Morsell of the night, and we must hence, and leaue it vnpickt. More knocking at the doore? How now? what's the matter?

Seruant. You must away to Court, Sir, presently,
A dozen Captaines stay at doore for you.

Fal. Pay the Musicians, Sirrha: farewell Hostesse, farewell Doll. You see (my good Wenches) how men of Merit are sought after: the vndeseruer may sleepe, when the man of Action is call'd on. Farewell good Wenches. If I be not sent away post, I will see you againe, ere I go.

Doll. I cannot speake: if my heart be not readie to burst. Well, sweete Iacke, haue a care of thy selfe.

Fal. Farewell, farewell. Exit.

Host. Well, fare thee well: I haue knowne thee these twentie nine yeeres, come Peascod-time: but an honester, and truer-hearted man: Well, fare thee well.

Seruant. Mistris Tearesheet.

Host. What's the matter?

Seruant. Bid Mistris Tearesheet come to my Master.

Host. O runne, Dauy, runne: O the Villaine! Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter the King, with a Page.

King. Go call the Earles of Surrey, and of Warwicke:
But ere they come, bring me a Cup of Sacke.
And well consider of them: make good speed. Exit.

How many thousand of my poorest Subiects
Are at this houre asleepe? O Sleepe, O gentle Sleepe,
Nature's soft Nurse, how haue I frighted thee,
That thou no more will weigh my eyelids downe,
And steepe my Senses in forgetfulnesse?
Why rather, Sleepe, liest thou in smoakie Cribs,
Vpon vneasie Pallads stretching thee,
And hush'd with buzzing Night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd Chambers of the great,
Vnder the Canopies of costly State,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest Melodie?
O thou dull God, why liest thou with the vile,
In loathsome Beds, and leau'st the Kingly Couch,
A Watch-case, or a common Larum-bell?
Wilt thou vpon the high and giddy Mast,
Seale vp the Ship-boyes eyes, and rock his braines,
In cradle of the rude imperious Surge,
And in the visitation of the Winds,
Who take the ruffian Billowes by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
With deafning clamors in the slippery Clouds,
That with the hurly, Death it selfe awakes?
Canst thou, O partiall Sleepe, giue thy repose
To the wet Sea-boy in an houre so rude,
And in the calmest and most stillest Night,
With all appliances and meanes to boote,
Deny it to a King? Then happy Low lie downe,
Vneasie lies the Head that weares a Crowne.

Enter Warwicke and Surrey.

War. Many good morrowes to your Maiestie.

King. Is it good morrow Lords?

War. 'Tis One a Clock, and past.

King. Why then good morrow to you all (my Lords).
Haue you read o're the Letters that I sent you?

War. We haue (my Liege.)

King. Then you perceiue the Body of our Kingdome,
How foule it is: what ranke Diseases grow,
And with what danger, neere the Heart of it?

War. It is but as a Body yet distempred,
Which to his former strength may be restored,
With good aduice, and little Medicine.
My Lord Northumberland will soone be cool'd.

King. O Heauen! that one might read the Book of Fate,
And see the reuolution of the Times
Make Mountaines leuell, and the Continent
(Wearied of solid firme) may wearily
Iump in the Sea: and other Times, to see
The beachie Girdle of the Ocean
Too wide for Neptunes hippes: how Chances mocks
And Changes fill the Cup of Alteration
With diuers Liquors? 'Tis not ten yeeres gone,
Since Richard and Northumberland, great friends,
Did feast together, and in two yeeres after,
Were they at Warres. It is but eight yeeres since,
This Percie was the man, neerest my Soule,
Who like a Brother toyl'd in my Affaires,
And layd his Loue and Life vnder my foote:
Yea, for my sake, euen to the eyes of Richard
Gaue him defiance. But which of you was by
(You Cousin Neuil, as I may remember)
When Richard, with his Eye brim full of Teares,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland)
Did speake these words (now prou'd a Prophecie?)
Northumberland, thou Ladder, by the which

My

My Cou[sin] Westmerland, as [illegible] my Throne
Thorough the Hearts [illegible] had no [illegible] steele,
[illegible] proceed [illegible] the State,
[illegible] Tame Crowne, [illegible] stole
[illegible] with [illegible]
[illegible] new Conquest, as [illegible] garments, [illegible],
[illegible] make [illegible] of [illegible] to wend on,
[illegible] [illegible] Tames Condition,
And [illegible] of our Amitie
[illegible] These are [illegible] Tames Lines,
Figures [illegible] of the Times deceased:
[illegible] [illegible], a man [illegible] prophecie
[illegible] [illegible] me, of the [illegible] of things,
As yet not come to Life, which [illegible] Seedes
And weake beginnings lye entreasured.
[illegible] [illegible] come the hate and bloud of Time;
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of Land,
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] perfect prosse,
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible], then [illegible] to him,
[illegible] [illegible] that Seed [illegible] to a greater [illegible],
[illegible] [illegible] not [illegible] a grobs to [illegible] upon,
[illegible] on us.

King. Are these things then Necessities?
Then let us meet them [illegible] Necessities,
And [illegible] the word, [illegible] [illegible] us:
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and Northumberland
Are [illegible] [illegible].

Prince. It cannot be [illegible] Lord,
Rumors do [illegible], [illegible] Voice and Eccho,
[illegible] [illegible] the feared. Please it your Grace
[illegible] [illegible] upon [illegible],
The Powers that you already have [illegible],
Should [illegible] [illegible] [illegible],
To come [illegible] more, I [illegible] read
Advantage [illegible] that Commons dead.
Your Majesties [illegible] [illegible] [illegible],
And [illegible] [illegible] how [illegible] the mallice
Vnto your Sovereignty.

King. I will take your counsell:
And [illegible] these [illegible] Wars [illegible] and,
Which [illegible] (deare Lords) [illegible] to the [illegible]

Scena Secunda.

Enter Shallow and Silence with Mouldie, Shadow, Wart, Feeble and others.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, give me your Hand Sir, give me your Hand Sir, an early Stirrer, by the rood. And how does my good Cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good Cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how does my Cousin, your Bed-fellow? and your fair Daughter, and mine my God-Daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black Ouzel, Cousin Shallow.

Shal. By yea and nay Sir, I dare say my Cousin William is become a good Scholler: He is at Oxford still, is he not?

Sil. Indeede Sir to my cost.

Shal. He must then to the Innes of Court shortly: I was once of Clements Inne, where I think they will talke of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called lusty Shallow then, Cousin.

Shal. I was called any thing, and I would have done any thing indeede too, and roundly too. There was I, and little Iohn Doit of Staffordshire, and blacke George Barne, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele a Cotsolman, you had not foure such Swinge-bucklers in all the Innes of Court againe: And I may say to you, we knew where the bona-robas were, and had the best of them all at commandement. Then was Iacke Falstaffe now Sir Iohn a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolke.

Sil. This Sir Iohn, Cousin, that comes hither anon about Soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir Iohn, the very same: I saw him breake Scoggans Head at the Court-gate, when he was a Crack, not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a Fruiterer, behinde Gray's-Inne. O the mad dayes that I have spent! and to see how many of mine olde Acquaintance are dead?

Sil. We shall all follow, Cousin.

Shal. Certaine: 'tis certaine, very sure, very sure: Death is certaine to all, all shall dye. How a good Yoke of Bullocks at Stamford Fayre?

Sil. Truly Cousin I was not there.

Shal. Death is certaine. Is old Double of your Towne living yet?

Sil. Dead, Sir.

Shal. Dead! See, see he drew a good Bow: and dead! he shot a fine shoote. Iohn a Gaunt loved him well, and betted much Money on his head. Dead! he would have clapt i'th' Clout at Twelve-score, and carryed you a forehand Shaft at fourteene, and fourteene and a halfe, that it would have done a mans heart good to see. How a score of Ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good Ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter Bardolfe, and the Boy.

Sil. Here come two of Sir Iohn Falstaffes Men (as I think).

Bard. Good morrow, honest Gentlemen.

Boy. I beseech you which is Iustice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, Sir, a poore Esquire of this County, and one of the Kings Iustices of the Peace. What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My Captaine Sir commends him to you: my Captaine Sir Iohn Falstaffe: a tall Gentleman, and a most gallant Leader.

Shal. He greetes me well (Sir) I knew him a good Back-Sword-man. How doth the good Knight? may I aske how my Lady his Wife doth?

Boy. Sir, pardon: a Soldier is better accommodated than with a Wife.

Shal. It is well said, Sir, and it is well said, indeede, too. Better accommodated: it is good, yea indeede is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were very commendable. Accommodated, it comes of Accommodo: very good, a good phrase.

Pard. Pardon, Sir: I have heard the word. Phrase call you it? by this day, I know not the phrase: but I will maintaine the Word with my Sword to be a Soldiers Sword: and a Soldier in the Word Accommodated: good Command. Accommodated: that is, when a man is (as they say) accommodated: or, when a man is being whereby

…wherby he thought to be accommodated, …was an excellent thing

Enter Falstaffe &c.

Shal. It is very iust: Looke, heere comes good Sir Iohn. Giue me your hand, giue me your Worships good hand: I trust me you looke well, and beare your yeares very well. Welcome good Sir Iohn.

Fal. I am glad to see your Worship, good Master Robert Shallow, Master Surecard as I thinke?

Shal. Nay Sir Iohn, it is my Cosin Silence in Commission with mee.

Fal. Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good Worship is welcome.

Fal. Fye, this is hot weather. Gentlemen, haue you prouided me heere halfe a dozen of sufficient men?

Shal. Marry haue we sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so, so, yea marry Sir: Raphe Mouldie. Let them appeare as I call: let them do so, let them do so. Let me see, Where is Mouldie?

Mould. Heere, if it please you.

Shal. What think you Sir Iohn? a good limb'd fellow: young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldie?

Mould. Yea, if it please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert vsed.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, most excellent. Things that are mouldie lacke vse: very singular good. Well said Sir Iohn, very well said.

Fal. Prick him.

Mould. I was prickt well enough before, if you could haue let me alone: my old Dame will be vncle ouer me now, for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery: you need not to haue prickt me, there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go too: peace Mouldie, you shall go. Mouldie, it is time you were spent.

Mould. Spent?

Shallow. Peace, fellow, peace, stand aside. Know you where you are? For the other, Sir Iohn. Let me see: Simon Shadow.

Fal. I marry, let me haue him to sit vnder: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shad. Heere sir.

Fal. Shadow whose sonne art thou?

Shad. My Mothers sonne, Sir.

Fal. Thy Mother's sonne: like enough, and thy Fathers shadow: so the sonne of the Female, is the shadow of the Male: it is often so indeed, but not of the Fathers substance.

Shal. Do you like him, Sir Iohn?

Fal. Shadow will serue for Summer: prick him: for we haue a number of shadowes to fill vp the Muster-Booke.

Shal. Thomas Wart.

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Heere Sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea Sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged Wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him down, Sir Iohn?

Fal. It were superfluous: for his apparrell is built vpon his backe, and the whole frame stands vpon pinnes: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, you can do it Sir, you can do it: I commend you well. Francis Feeble.

Feeble. Heere sir.

Shal. What Trade art thou, Feeble?

Feeble. A Woman's Tailor sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir?

Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's Tailor, he would haue prick'd you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemies Battaile, as thou hast done a Woman's petticoat?

Feeble. I will do my good will Sir, you can haue no more.

Fal. Well said good Woman's Tailor. Well said Courageous Feeble. Thou wilt proue as valiant as the wrathfull Dame of Brentford, as the Moone. Prick the woman's Tailor well Master Shallow, deepe Master Shallow.

Feeble. I would Wish me able to my profession.

Fal. I would thou wert a man's Tailor, that thou might'st mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a priuate Souldiers place, though he has the Liuer of a Woman: For what says the Lord of Harmony, the Prouerbe? Let him be Feeble.

Feeble. I desire you more acquaintance, Sir.

Fal. I am glad to see thee, reuerend Feeble. Who is the next?

Shal. Peter Bullcalfe of the Greene.

Fal. Yea marry, let vs see Bullcalfe come.

Bull. Heere sir.

Fal. Trust me a likely Fellow. Come prick me Bullcalfe till he roare againe.

Bull. Oh Lord good my Lord Captaine.

Fal. What dost thou roare before thou art prickt?

Bull. Oh Lord sir, I am a sore man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold sir, a cough sir, which I caught with ringing in the King's affayres, vpon his Coronation day sir.

Fal. Come thou shalt go to the Warres in a Gowne: we will trouble you no more. Boyes, and we will haue an order, that shall apprehend all Ruffians alike, which is well said.

Shal. Let me see, two more are wanting to their number: you must haue but foure heere sir: and so I pray you go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will accept the motion: this dinner-time I cannot tarry. Come, I haue a small consumption: good truth, Master Shallow.

Shal. Master Falstaffe, you are to take your number vp: we lay all vpon you. Where's Saint George's day?

Fal. No more of that good Master Shallow. No more of that.

Shal. Ha? 'Twas a merry night. And is Iane Nightwork aliue?

Fal. She lies at Master Shores.

Shal. She neuer could away with me.

Fal. Never, never: she would alwayes say she could not abide Master Shallow.

Shal. By the Mass I could anger her to the heart: she was then a Bona Roba. Doth she hold her owne well?

Fal. Old, old, Master Shallow.

Shal. Nay she must be old, she cannot choose but be old certaine shee's o[ld] and [a] Action, Night-worke, by old Nightworke, before I came to Clements Inne.

Sil. That's fiue hundred yeeres ago.

Sence. Ha, Cousin Silence, that thou had'st seene that day that the Lords and Ladies were a Maying, how I was?

Fang. We haue heard the Chimes at midnight, Master Shallow.

Shal. That we haue, that we haue, in faith, Sir John, we haue our watch-word was, Hem-Boyes. Come, let's to Dinner, come let's to Dinner. Oh the dayes that wee haue seene. Come, come.

Bar. Good Master Corporate Bardolph, stand my friend, and heere is foure Harry tenne shillings in French Crownes for you. In very truth, Sir, I had as liefe be hang'd sir, as goe: and yet, for mine owne part, I do not care, but rather, because I am vnwilling, and for mine owne part, haue a desire to stay with my friends: else, sir, I did not care, for mine owne part, so much.

Bard. Go-too: stand aside.

Mould. And good Master Corporall Captaine, for my old Dames sake, stand my friend: she has no body to doe any thing about her when I am gone, and is old, and cannot helpe her selfe: you shall haue forty, sir.

Bar. Go-too: stand aside.

Feeble. I care not, a man can die but once: wee owe a death. I will neuer beare a base mind: if it be my destiny, so: if it be not so, no man is too good to serue his Prince: and let it go which way it will, he that dies this yeere is quit for the next.

Lord. Well said, thou'rt a good fellow.

Feeble. Nay, I will bee no base mindes.

Fang. Come, wher's the Rogues that I haue?

Bard. I am at your sword, sir.

Fang. Where are you, sir?

Shal. Marry there, Mouldy, Bullcalfe, Feeble, and Shadow.

Lord. Masters, you are welcome: for you Mouldy, stay at home still, you are past seruice: and for your part, Bullcalfe grow till you come vnto it: I will see you.

Sence. Sir, I pray you let your kindred, they are your Tenants, I beseech you intreat them the best.

Fang. Will you tell me, Master Silence, how to value a mans Cattell for the Loane, I pray, I beseech you, briefe, and briefe: for my wit is dull, Master (name) what say you, Wart? you see what a ragged appearance it is: I shall charge you and discharge you with the moity of a Pewterers Hammer come off and on, (worke you now) one halfe penny worth of sope will serue the turne: and for a replication, withall, with this Feeble the Woman's Tailor, sir, you shall not be charged: for men, sir, for men you are rated, and shall be vsed accordingly, so glory be to God and the Prince: and my friends, I pray you.

Sil. Hee is not his Craft-master, hee doth not doe right. I remember at Mile-end Greene, when I lay at Clements Inne, I was fellow with Sir Dagonet in Arthurs show, there was not such a Squire to be seene, and I was then reputed for a proper man about, and about, and I could shew in a corner, and come you in: Rah, tah, tah, would hee say, bounce would hee say, and away again I would go, and againe would he come, I shall neuer see such a fellow.

Fals. These fellowes will doe well. Master Shallow, farewell. Master Silence, I will not vse many words with you. Fare you well Gentlemen both: I thanke you. I must a dozen mile to my Lord Chiefe Iustice. Good Master Corporate, and my very good friends,

Hast. We haue sent forth already.
Arch. 'Tis well done.
My friends and brethren (in these great Affaires)
I must acquaint you, that I haue receiu'd
New-dated Letters from Northumberland,
Their cold intent, tenure and substance thus.
Here doth he wish his Person, with such Powers
As might hold sortance with his Quality,
The which he could not leuie; whereupon
He is retyr'd, to ripen his growing fortunes,
To Scot-land, and concludes in hearty prayers,
That your Attempts may ouer-liue the hazard,
And fearefull meeting of their Opposite.
Mow. Thus do the hopes we haue in him, touch ground,
And dash themselues to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now? what newes?
Mess. West of this Forrest, scarcely off a mile,
In goodly forme, comes on the Enemie.
And by the ground they hide, I iudge their number
Vpon, or neere, the rate of thirtie thousand.
Mow. The iust proportion that we gaue them out.
Let vs sway-on, and face them in the field.

Enter Westmerland.

Bish. What well-appointed Leader fronts vs here?
Mow. I think it is my Lord of Westmerland.
West. Health, and faire greeting from our Generall,
The Prince, Lord Iohn, and Duke of Lancaster.
Arch. Say on my Lord of Westmerland, in peace:
What doth concerne your coming?
West. Then (my Lord)
Vnto your Grace do I commend my soule,
The purport of your late Commission,
Gaue me full power to take the present view
Of all the griefes, and hearing their Complaints,
Enforc'd to this vniust, vnlawfull Rage,
And counter-sign'd by Boyes and Beardlesse.
I by that Warrant, cast my selfe along
Into the Forrest, and (my Noble Lord)
Haue met the eare, to stretch it strongly forth
Our Bases and our Hopes, our Iudges,
Were not our Honors. You, Lord Archbishop,
Whose seate is by a Canon, Peace maintained,
Whose Learning and good Letters Peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white Inuestments figure Innocence,
The Doue and very blessed Spirit of Peace.
Wherefore do you so ill translate your selfe,
Out of the Speech of Peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boyst'rous Tongue of Warre?
Turning your Bookes to Graues, your Inke to Blood,
Your Pennes to Launces, and your Tongue, a Trumpe
To a lowd Trumpet, and a Point of Warre.
Bish. Wherefore do I this? so the Question stands.
Briefe (to this end) We are all diseas'd,
And with our surfetting, and wanton hours,
Haue brought our selues into a burning Feuer,
And we must bleede for it: of which Disease,
Our late King, Richard (being infected) died.
But (my most Noble Lord of Westmerland)
I take not on me here as a Physician,
Nor do I, as an Enemie to Peace,
Troope in the Throngs of Military men:
But rather show awhile like fearefull Warre,
To diet rancke Mindes, sicke of happinesse
And purge th'obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very Veines of Life. Hear me more plainely.
I haue in equall balance iustly weigh'd,
What wrongs our Arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And finde our Griefes heauier then our Offences.
We see which way the streame of Time doth runne,
And are enforc'd from our most quiet there,
By the rough Torrent of Occasion,
And haue the summary of all our Griefes
(When time shall serue) to shew in Articles;
Which long ere this, we offer'd to the King,
And might by no Suit, gaine our Audience.
When we are wrong'd, and would vnfold our Griefes,
We are denied Access vnto his Person,
Euen by those men that most haue done vs wrong.
The dangers of the dayes but newly gone,
Whose memorie is written on the Earth
With yet appearing blood; and the examples
Of euery Minutes instance (present now)
Haue put vs (these interessed) in fearefull Armes.
Not to break Peace, or any Branch of it,
But to establish here a Peace indeede,
Concurring both in Name and Qualitie.
West. When euer yet was your Appeale denyed?
Wherein haue you been gall'd by the King?
What Peere hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should seale this lawlesse bloody Booke
Of forg'd Rehearsall, and so scandalous
Arch. My Brother generall, the Common-wealth,
I make my Quarrell, in particular.
West. There is no need of any such redresse:
Or if there were, it not belongs to you.
Mow. Why not to him in part, and to vs all,
That feele the bruzes of the dayes before,
And suffer the condition of these Times
To lay a heauy and vnequall hand vpon our Honors?
West. O my good Lord Mowbray,
Construe the Times to their Necessities,
And you shall say indeede, it is the Time,
And not the King, that doth you Injuries.
Yet for your part, it not appeares here,
How that the King hath done the present Time,
Did you finde cause (so farre as to your selfe)
Vnto the Duke of Norfolkes Summons.
Your Noble and right well remembred Father's?
Mow. What thing (in Honor) had my Father lost,
That need to be reuiu'd, and breath'd in me?
The King that lou'd him, as the State stood then,
Was force perforce compell'd to banish him:
And then, when Harry Bullingbrooke and he
Being mounted, and both roused in their Seates,
Their neighing Coursers daring of the Spurre,
Their armed Staues in charge, their Beauers downe,
Their eyes of fire sparking through sights of Steele,
And the loud Trumpet blowing them together,
Then, then, when there was nothing could haue staid
My Father from the Breast of Bullingbrooke,
O, when the King did throw his Warder downe,
(His owne Life hung vpon the Staffe he threw)
Then threw he downe himselfe, and all their Liues,
That by Indictment, and by Dint of Sword,
Haue since mis-carried vnder Bullingbrooke

West. You speak Lord Mowbray, now you know not what
The Earle of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant Gentleman.
Who knowes, on whom Fortune would then haue smil'd?
But now, in banishment, it is growne worse,
Heere re-ha's borne out of Country,
For all the Country, in a generall voyce,
Cry on hate vpon him; and all their prayers, and loue,
Were set on Herford whom they doted on,
And blest, and grac'd, and did more than the King.
But this is meere digression from my purpose.
Heere come I from our Princely Generall,
To know your Griefes, to tell you from his Grace,
That hee will giue you Audience: and wherein
It shall appeare, that your demands are iuft,
You shall enioy them, euery thing set off,
That might so much as thinke you Enemies.
Mow. But hee hath forc'd vs to compell this Offer,
And it proceedes from Policy, not Loue.
West. Mowbray, you ouer-weene to take it so
This Offer comes from Mercy, not from Feare.
For lo, within a ken our Army lyes,
Vpon mine Honor, all too confident
To giue admittance to a thought of feare
Our Battailes more in heart, not Numbers then yours,
Our Men more perfect in the vse of Armes,
Our Armour all as strong, our Cause the best,
Then Expectation wils our hearts this not as good.
Say you not so then, our Offer is compell'd.
Mow. Well, by my will, we shall admit no Parley
West. That argues but the shame of your offence.
A rotten Case abides no handling.
Hast. Hath the Prince John a full Commission,
In very ample vertue of his Father,
To heare, and absolute, and determine
Of what Conditions we shall stand vpon?
West. That is intended in the Generals Name:
I muse you make so slight a Question.
Bard. Then take (my Lord of Westmerland) this Schedule,
For this contains our generall Grieuances:
Each seuerall Article herein redrest,
All members, of our Cause both here, and hence,
That are insinewed to this Action,
Acquitted by a true substantiall forme,
And present execution of our Wills,
To vs, and to our purposes confin'd,
We come within our awfull banks againe,
And knit our Powers to the Armes of Peace.
West. This will I shew the Generall. Please you Lords,
In sight of both our Battailes, we may meete
And either end in peace (which Heauen so frame)
Or to the place of difference call the Swords,
Which must decide it.
Bard. My Lord, wee will doe so.
Mow. There is a thing within my Bosome tells me,
That no Conditions of our Peace can stand.
Hast. Feare you not that: for if we can make our Peace
Vpon such large termes, and so absolute,
As our Conditions shall consist vpon,
Our Peace shall stand as firme as Rockie Mountaines.
Mow. I, but our valuation shall be such,
That euery slight and falsely-borne Cause,
Yea, euery idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall to the King taxe foule Infraction,
That were our royall faiths Martyrs in Loue,
We shall be winnowed with so rough a winde,
That euen our Corne shall seeme as light as Chaffe,
And good from bad finde no part nor name.
Bard. No, no, my Lord. Note this: the King is weary
Of dainty and such picking Grieuances:
For hee hath found, to end one doubt by Death,
Reuiues two greater in the Heires of life.
And therefore will hee wipe his Tables cleane,
And keepe no Telltale to his Memorie,
That may repeat, and History his losse,
To new remembrance. For full well hee knowes,
Hee cannot so precisely weede this Land,
As his mis-doubts present occasion:
His foes are so en-rooted with his friends,
That plucking to vnfixe an Enemie,
Hee doth vnfasten so, and shake a friend.
So that this Land, like an offensiue wife,
That hath enrag'd him on, to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant vp,
And hangs resolu'd Correction in the Armes,
That was vp-reard to execution.
Hast. Besides, the King hath wasted all his Rods,
On late Offenders, that he now doth lacke
The very instruments of Chastisement:
So that his power, like to a fang-lesse Lion
May offer, but not hold.
Bard. 'Tis very true.
And therefore be assur'd (my good Lord Marshal)
If we do now make our Atonement well,
Our Peace will (like a broken Limbe vnited)
Grow stronger, for the breaking.
Mow. Be it so.
Heere is return'd my Lord of Westmerland.

Enter Westmerland.

West. The Prince is heere at hand: pleaseth your Lordship
To meete his Grace, iust distance 'twixt our Armies.
Mow. Your Grace of Yorke, in Heauen's name then forward.
Bard. Before, and greet his Grace (my Lord) we come.

Enter Prince Iohn.

John. You are well encountred heere (my cosin Mowbray)
Good day to you, gentle Lord Archbishop,
And so to you Lord Hastings, and to all.
My Lord of Yorke, it better shew'd with you,
When that your Flocke (assembled by the Bell)
Encircled you, to heare with reuerence
Your exposition on the holy Text,
Then now to see you heere an Iron man
Cheering a rout of Rebels with your Drumme,
Turning the Word, to Sword, and Life to death:
That man that sits within a Monarches heart,
And ripens in the Sunshine of his fauour,
Would hee abuse the Countenance of the King,
Alack, what Mischiefes might hee set abroach,
In shadow of such Greatnesse? With you, Lord Bishop,
It is euen so. Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deepe you were within the Bookes of Heauen?
To vs the Speaker in his Parliament;
To vs, th' imagin'd Voyce of Heauen it selfe.
The very Opener, and Intelligencer,
Betweene the Grace, the Sanctities of Heauen,
And our dull Workes. O who shall beleeue,
But you misuse the reuerence of your Place,
Employ the Countenance, and Grace of Heauen,
As a false Fauourite doth his Princes Name,
In deedes dishonourable? You haue taken vp,

Vnder

Vnder the counterfeited Zeale of Heauen,
The Scrutcels of Heauens Substitute, my Father,
And both against the Peace of Heauen, and him,
Haue here vp-warmed them.
Bish. Good my Lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your Fathers Peace:
But (as I told my Lord of Westmerland)
The Time (mis-order'd) doth in common sence
Crowd vs, and crush vs, to this monstrous Forme,
To hold our safetie vp. I sent your Grace
The parcels, and particulars of our Griefe,
The which hath been with scorne shou'd from the Court:
Whereon this Hydra-Sonne of Warre is borne,
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleepe,
With grant of our most iust and right desires;
And true Obedience, of this Madnesse cur'd,
Stoope tamely to the foot of Maiestie.
Mow. If not, wee readie are to trye our fortunes,
To the last man.
Hast. And though wee here fall downe,
Wee haue Supplyes, to second our Attempt:
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them.
And so successe of Mischiefe shall be borne,
And Heire from Heire shall hold this Quarrell vp,
Whiles England shall haue generation.
Iohn. You are too shallow (Hastings)
Much too shallow,
To sound the bottome of the after-Times.
West. Pleaseth your Grace, to answere them directly,
How farre-forth you doe like their Articles.
Iohn. I like them all, and doe allow them well:
And sweare here, by the honor of my blood,
My Fathers purposes haue beene mistooke,
And some, about him, haue too lauishly
Wrested his meaning, and Authoritie.
My Lord, these Griefes shall be with speed redrest
Vpon my Life, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your Powers vnto their seuerall Counties,
As wee will ours: and here, betweene the Armies,
Let's drinke together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may beare those Tokens home,
Of our restored Loue, and Amitie.
Bish. I take your Princely word, for these redresses.
Iohn. I giue it you, and will maintaine my word:
And thereupon I drinke vnto your Grace.
Hast. Goe Captaine, and deliuer to the Armie
This newes of Peace: let them haue pay, and part:
I know, it will well please them.
Hie thee Captaine. Exit.
Bish. To you, my Noble Lord of Westmerland.
West. I pledge your Grace:
And if you knew what paines I haue bestow'd,
To breede this present Peace,
You would drinke freely: but my loue to ye,
Shall shew it selfe more openly hereafter.
Bish. I doe not doubt you.
West. I am glad of it.
Health to my Lord, and gentle Cousin Mowbray.
Mow. You wish me health in very happy season,
For I am, on the sodaine, something ill.
Bish. Against ill Chances, men are euer merry,
But heauinesse fore-runnes the good euent.
West. Therefore be merry (Coose) since sodaine sorrow
Serues to say thus: some good thing comes to morrow.
Bish. Beleeue me, I am passing light in spirit.
Mow. So much the worse, if your owne Rule be true.
Iohn. The word of Peace is rendred: hearke how they showre.
Mow. This had been deere to me, after Victorie.
Iohn. A Peace is of the nature of a Conquest
For then both parties nobly are subdu'd,
And neither party loser.
Iohn. Goe (my Lord)
And let our Army be discharged too.
And good my Lord (so please you) let our Traines
March by vs, that wee may peruse the men Exit.
Wee should haue coap'd withall.
Bish. Goe, good Lord Hastings:
And ere they be dismis'd, let them march by. Exit.
Iohn. I trust (Lords) wee shall lye to night together.
Enter Westmerland
Now Cousin, wherefore stands our Army still?
West. The Leaders hauing charge from you to stand,
Will not goe off, vntill they heare you speake.
Iohn. They know the duties. Enter Hastings.
Hast. Our Army is dispers'd:
Like youthfull Steeres, vnyok'd, they tooke their course
East, West, North, South: or like a Schoole, broke vp,
Each hurryes towards his home, and sporting place.
West. Good tidings (my Lord Hastings) for the which,
I doe arrest thee (Traytor) of high Treason
And you Lord Arch-bishop, and you Lord Mowbray,
Of Capitall Treason, I attach you both.
Mow. Is this proceeding just, and honorable?
West. Is your Assembly so?
Bish. Will you thus breake your faith?
Iohn. I pawn'd thee none:
I promis'd you redresse of these same Grieuances
Whereof you did complaine; which, by mine Honor,
I will performe, with a most Christian care.
But for you (Rebels) looke to taste the due
Meet for Rebellion, and such Acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these Armes commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.
Strike vp our Drummes, pursue the scatter'd stray.
Heauen, and not wee, haue safely fought to day.
Some guard these Traitors to the Block of Death,
Treasons true Bed, and yeelder vp of breath. Exeunt
Enter Falstaffe and Collenile.
Falst. What's your Name, Sir? of what Condition are you? and of what place, I pray?
Col. I am a Knight, Sir:
And my Name is Collenile of the Dale.
Falst. Well then, Collenile is your Name, a Knight is your Degree, and your Place, the Dale. Collenile shall still be your Name, a Traytor your Degree, and the Dungeon your Place, a place deepe enough: so shall you be still Collenile of the Dale.
Col. Are not you Sir Iohn Falstaffe?
Falst. As good a man as he sir, whoe're I am: doe yee yeelde sir, or shall I sweate for you? if I doe sweate, they are the drops of thy Louers, and they weep for thy death: therefore rowze vp Feare and Trembling, and doe obeysance to my mercy.
Col. I thinke you are Sir Iohn Falstaffe, & in that thought yeeld me.
Fal. I haue a whole Schoole of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a Tongue of them all, speakes any other word but my name. And I had but a belly of any indifference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe. My wombe, my wombe, my wombe vndoes me. Heere comes our Generall.

Enter Prince Iohn, Westmerland.

Iohn. The heate a peu'ish tedious iourney now Concludes it selfe. Speake good Cousin Westmerland.
Now Master Sir, where have you beene all this while?
You leaue your businesse (ere done) to come.
The taske-full Thewes of yours weare (in my sight)
Confusion, or other, breaker of the Ouer-back.

Falst. I would it were (my Lord, not I) should bee so, I neuer knew yet, but rebuke and checke was the reward of Valour. Doe you take me a Swaggerer (an Arrow, or a Bullet?) I haue, in my poore and olde Motion, the expedition of Thought? I haue speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibilitie. I haue rode a hundred mile hereabout on my Feete (trauell-tainted as I am) haue in my pure and immaculate Valour taken Sir Iohn Colleuile of the Dale, a most furious Knight, and valorous Enemie: But what of that? Hee saw mee, and yeelded: that I may iustly say with the hooke-nos'd fellow of Rome, I came, saw, and ouer-came.

Iohn. It was more of his Courtesie, than your deseruing.

Falst. I know not: Heere he is, and heere I yeeld him: and I beseech your Grace, I may be booth, with the rest of this day's deedes; or I sweare, I will haue it in a particular Ballet, set downe by mine owne Pen, on the top of it (Colleuile kissing my foote) To which course if I be enforced, if you doe not all shew like Gilt-two-pences to me, and I in the clere Skie of Fame, o're-shine you as much as the full Moone doth the Cynders of the Element, which shew like Pinnes-heads to her; beleeue not your Worth of the Noone: Therefore let mee haue right, and let desert mount.

Iohn. Thine's too heauie to mount.

Falst. Let desert mount.

Iohn. Thine's too vnctuous to mount.

Falst. Let the Court of Requests come, (my good Lord) that may doe me good, and call him what you will.

Iohn. Is your Name Colleuile?

Col. It is (my Lord.)

Iohn. A famous Rebell art thou, Colleuile.

Falst. And a famous true Subiect I tooke him.

Col. I am (my Lord) but as my betters are,
That seldome or neuer boast of what they doe,
You shou'd haue won much honour at their hands.

Falst. I know not how they value themselues, but thou like a kinde fellow, gau'st thy fellow away, and I thanke thee, for thee.

Enter Westmerland.

Iohn. Haue you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made and Execution stay'd.

Iohn. Send Colleuile, with his Confederates,
To Yorke, to present Execution.
Blunt, leade him hence, and see you guard him sure.
Exit with Colleuile.
And now dispatch we toward the Court, my Lords:
I heare the King my Father is sore sicke.
Our Newes shall goe before vs, to his Maiestie,
Which Cousin, you shall beare to comfort him:
And we with sober speede will follow you.

Falst. My Lord, I beseech you, giue me leaue to goe through Glocestershire: and when you come to Court, stand my good Lord, 'pray in your good report.

Iohn. Fare you well, Falstaffe: I, in my condition,
Shall better speake of you, than you deserue. Exit.

Falst. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better than your Dukedome. Good faith, this same young sober-blooded Boy doth not loue me, nor a man cannot make him laugh: but that's no maruell, he drinkes no Wine. There's neuer any of these demure Boyes come to any proofe: for thinne Drinke doth so ouer-coole their blood, and making many fish-Meales, that they fall into a kinde of Male Greene-sicknesse: and then, when they marry, they get wenches: they are generally Fooles, and Cowards, which some of vs should be too, but for inflamation. A good Sherris-Sack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the Braine, dryes me there all the foolish, and dull, and crudde Vapours, which enuiron it: makes it apprehensiue, quicke, forgetiue, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which deliuer'd o're to the Voyce, the Tongue, which is the Birth, becomes excellent Wit. The second property of your excellent Sherris, is, the warming of the Blood: which before (cold, and setled) left the Liuer white, and pale, which is the Badge of Pusillanimitie, and Cowardize: but the Sherris warmes it, and makes it course from the Inwards, to the parts extreme. It illuminateth the Face, which (as a Beacon) giues warning to all the rest of this little Kingdome (Man) to Arme: and then the Vitall Commoners, and inland petite Spirits, muster me all to their Captaine, the Heart, who great, and puffed vp with his Retinue, doth any Deed of Courage: and this Valour comes of Sherris. So that skill in the Weapon is nothing, without Sack, for that sets it a-worke: and Learning, a meere Hoord of Gold, kept by a Deuill, till Sacke commences it, and sets it in act, and vse. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of my Father, he hath, like lean, barren, sterile Land, manured, husbanded, and tylled, with excellent endeauour of drinking good, and good store of fertile Sherris, that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand Sonnes, the first Principle I would teach them should be, to forsweare thinne Potations, and to addict themselues to Sack. Enter Bardolph.
How now, Bardolph?

Bard. The Armie is discharged all and gone.

Falst. Let them goe. Ile through Glocestershire, and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, Esquire: I haue him already tempering betweene my finger and my thombe, and shortly will I seale with him. Come away. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Warwicke, Clarence, Gloucester.

King. Now Lords, if Heauen doth giue successefull end
To this Debate that bleedes at our doores,
We will our Youth lead on to higher Fields,
And draw no Swords, but what are sanctify'd.
Our Nauie is addrest, our Power collected,
Our Plates, in absence, well supplied,
And euery thing lyes leuell to our wish,
Only we want a little personall Strength:
And pawse vs, till these Rebels, now a-foot,
Come vnderneath the yoake of Gouernment.

War. Both which we doubt not, but your Maiestie
Shall soone enioy.

King Hum-

King Humphrey (my Sonne of Gloucester) where is the Prince, your Brother?

Glo. I thinke hee's gone to hunt (my Lord) at Windsor.

King. And how accompanied?

Glo. I doe not know (my Lord)

King. Is not his Brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glo. No (my good Lord) hee is in presence heere.

Clar. What would my Lord, and Father?

King. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence. How chance thou are not with the Prince, thy Brother? Hee loues thee, and thou do'st neglect him (Thomas.) Thou hast a better place in his Affection, Then all thy Brothers: cherish it (my Boy) And Noble Offices thou may'st effect Of Mediation (after I am dead) Betweene his Greatnesse, and thy other Brethren. Therefore omit him not: blunt not his Loue, Nor loose the good aduantage of his Grace, By seeming cold, or carelesse of his will. For hee is gracious, if hee be obseru'd: Hee hath a Teare for Pitie, and a Hand Open (as Day) for melting Charitie: Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, hee's Flint, As humorous as Winter, and as sudden, As Flawes congealed in the Spring of day. His temper therefore must be well obseru'd: Chide him for faults, and doe it reuerently, When you perceiue his blood inclin'd to mirth: But being moodie, giue him Line, and scope, Till that his passions (like a Whale on ground) Confound themselues with working. Learne this Thomas, And thou shalt proue a shelter to thy friends, A Hoope of Gold, to binde thy Brothers in That the vnited Vessell of their Blood (Mingled with Venome of Suggestion, As force, perforce, the Age will powre it in) Shall neuer leake, though it doe worke as strong As Aconitum, or rash Gun-powder

Clar. I shall obserue him with all care, and loue

King. Why art thou not at Windsor with him (Thomas?)

Clar. Hee is not there to day: hee dines in London.

King. And how accompanyed? Canst thou tell that?

Clar. With Poines, and other his continuall followers.

King. Most subiect is the fattest Soyle to Weedes And hee (the Noble Image of my Youth) Is ouer-spread with them: therefore my griefe Stretches it selfe beyond the howre of death. The blood weepes from my heart when I doe shape (In formes imaginarie) th'vnguided Dayes, And rotten Times that you shall looke vpon, When I am sleeping with my Ancestors For when his head-strong Riot hath no Curbe, When Rage and hot-Blood are his Counsailors, When Meanes and lawlesse Manners meete toge ther, O, with what Wings shall his Affections flye Towards fronting Perill, and opposed Decay?

War. My gracious Lord, you looke beyond him quite: The Prince but studies his Companions, Like a strange Tongue: wherein, to gaine the Language, 'Tis needfull, that the most immodest word Be look'd vpon, and learn'd: which once attayn'd, Your Highnesse knowes, comes to no further vse, But to be known, and hated. So like grosse termes, The Prince will, in the perfect'st eare of time, Cast off his followers: and their memorie Shall as a Patterne, or a Measure, liue, By which his Grace must mete the liues of others, Turning past-euils to aduantages.

King. 'Tis seldome when the Bee doth leaue her Combe In the dead Carrion.

Enter Westmerland.

Who's heere? Westmerland?

West. Health to my Soueraigne, and new happinesse Added to that, that I am to deliuer. Prince Iohn, your Sonne, doth kisse your Graces Hand: Mowbray, the Bishop, Scroope, Hastings, and all, Are brought to the Correction of your Law. There is not now a Rebels Sword vnsheath'd, But Peace puts forth her Olive euery where The manner how this Action hath been borne, Here (at more leysure) may your Highnesse reade, With euery course, in his particular.

King. O Westmerland, thou art a Summer Bird, Which euer in the haunch of Winter sings The lining of the day.

Enter Harcourt.

Looke, heere's more newes.

Harc. From Enemies, Heauen keepe your Maiestie: And when they stand against you, may they fall, As those that I am come to tell you of. The Earle Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolfe, With a great Power of English, and of Scots, Are by the Sherife of Yorkeshire ouerthrowne: The manner, and true order of the fight, This Packet (please it you) contaynes at large.

King. And wherefore should these good newes Make me sicke? Will Fortune neuer come with both hands full, But write her faire words still in foulest Letters? She either giues a Stomack, and no Food, (Such are the poore, in health) or else a Feast, And takes away the Stomack (such are the Rich, That haue abundance, and enioy it not.) I should reioyce now, at this happy newes, And now my Sight fayles, and my Braine is giddie. O me, come neere me, now I am much ill.

Glo. Comfort your Maiestie.

Cla. Oh, my Royall Father.

West. My Soueraigne Lord, cheare vp your selfe, looke vp.

War. Be patient (Princes) you doe know, these Fits Are with his Highnesse very ordinarie. Stand from him, giue him ayre: Hee'l straight be well.

Clar. No, no, hee cannot long hold out these pangs, Th'incessant care, and labour of his Minde, Hath wrought the Mure, that should confine it in, So thinne, that Life lookes through, and will breake out.

Glo. The people feare me, for they doe obserue Vnfather'd Heires, and loathly Births of Nature. The Seasons change their manners, as the Yeere Had found some Moneths asleepe, and leap'd them ouer.

Clar. The Riuer hath thrice flow'd, no ebbe betweene: And the old folke (Times doting Chronicles) Say it did so, a little time before That our great Grand-sire Edward sick'd, and dy'de.

[illegible] Speake lower (Princes) for the King recouers
[illegible]
Cha. This Apoplexie will certaine, be his end.
King. I pray you take me vp, and beare me hence
Into some other Chamber softly pray.
Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends,
Vnlesse some dull and fauourable hand
Will whisper Musicke to my weary Spirit
War. Call for the Musicke heere within.
King. Set me the Crowne vpon my pillow here,
Cla. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.
War. Less noyse, lesse noyse.

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. Who saw the Duke of Clarence
Cla. I am heere brother full of heauinesse
P. Hen. How now? Rain within doores, and none abroad? How doth the King
Cla. Exceeding ill.
P. Hen. Heard he the good newes yet?
Tell it him.
Cla. He altered much vpon hearing it.
P. Hen. If he be sicke with ioy,
He'le recouer without Physicke.
War. Not so much noyse my Lords,
Sweet Prince speake low,
The King your Father is disposed to sleepe.
Cla. Let vs withdraw into the next Roome.
War. Speake softly, till the King be layd asleepe:
Yet not so much as whisper, for I heare
(As I receiued it from the best Aduise)
Sleepe is the surest Medicine to him,
In this his Extremity: Were it not so,
That Dreames (by reason of vnbodied Fluxe
Of blood and Vapours which the Melancholy
Doth send vp to the Head) doe often adde
Some other Passion to the Fantasie,
Then doubtlesse, by this Time, his Head were broke.
And therefore, gentle Princes, make no Noyse,
Nor stir from hence, till he awake himselfe.
Shall Dreames of Sleepe (my Father) haue more
Power with him, then those weake Rites of Life?
Mine, I am sure, haue not: O yet sleepe gently,
Whose waking could haue call'd vp Greefe from Death,
Rather then this Sleepe, from his Watch. Good Angels,
Which Heauen hath left
And pour'd vpon him, vanish Armes,
Let all, not Force, to Enuy driue him hence,
Thus from thee, will it to mine Eares,
As soft as Sleepe. Exit

Enter King, Warwicke, Lords, &c.

King. Warwicke? Gloucester? Clarence?
Cla. Doth the King call?
War. What would your Maiesty? how fares your Grace?
King. Why did you leaue me here alone (my Lords?)
Cla. We left the Prince my Brother, here (my Liege)
Who vndertooke to sit and watch by you.
King. The Prince of Wales? where is he? let me see him.
War. This doore is open, he is gone this way.
Cla. He came not through the Chamber where we stay'd.
King. Where is the Crowne? who tooke it from my Pillow?
War. When we withdrew (my Liege) we left it heere.
King. The Prince hath taken it hence:
Go seeke him out.
Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose
My sleepe, my death?
Find him (my Lord of Warwick) chide him hither:
This part of his conioynes
With my disease, and helpes to end me.
See Sonnes, what things you are
How quickly Nature falls into reuolt,
When Gold becomes her obiect?
For this, the foolish ouer-careful Fathers
Haue broke their sleepes with thoughts,
Their braines with care, their bones with industry.
For this, they haue engrossed and pil'd vp
The canker'd heapes of strange-atchieued Gold.
For this, they haue been thoughtful to inuest
Their Sonnes with Arts and Martiall Exercises:
When, like the Bee, culling from euery flower
The vertuous Sweetes, our Thighes packt with Wax,
Our Mouthes with Honey, we bring it to the Hiue,
And like the Bees, are murthered for our paines
This bitter taste yeelds his engrossements,
To the ending Father.

Enter Warwicke.

Now, where is he, that will not stay so long,
Till his Friend Sicknesse hath determin'd me?
War. My Lord, I found the Prince in the next Roome,
Washing with kindly Teares his gentle Cheekes,
With such a deepe demeanure, in great sorrow,
That Tyranny, which neuer quaft but blood,
Would (by beholding him) haue wash'd his Knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
King. But wherefore did he take away the Crowne?

Enter Prince Henry.

Loe where he comes. Come hither to me Harry.
Depart the Chamber, leaue vs here alone. Exit
P. Hen. I neuer thought to heare you speake againe.
King. Thy wish was Father Harry to that thought.
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Dost thou so hunger for my empty Chayre,
That hast no patience till my breath be spent,
To haue it possessed with so vile a Guest?
As the full-fed Hart-sicke Swine
Stay but a little, for my Cloud of Dignitie
Is held from falling, with so weake a Winde,
That it will quickly drop: my Day is dimme.
Thou hast (I feare) ouer-watcht your Father to his graue,
Before his Time. What Businesse hath brought you
To seeke so soone, my Honour, with my Death?
P. Hen. Supposing that you are dead indeed,
Will you afflict me with a double Griefe?
Where shall I lament,
Before my Father? Or dare I stirre
(Without Offence to your Imperiall Greefe)
Where I may haue some Weeping Company?
King. Harry, I do not only marke, but feele
Thy part in his Vntimely Ouerthrow.
I haue bedew'd his Reuerend Graue with Teares,
And miz'd my Sorrowes with his Obsequies,
Till Sorrow's Selfe, and Teares, and Mone, and Griefe,
Haue left me Hollow Bankes to any Woe.
I haue set Watches round about his House,
For feare of Murther, and resolue my Selfe
To see the Funerall Day well Furnished.
And for the Rest of my Estate hereafter,
No more but this: Be gracious, and my Father,
That euer was a Husband, was a Father.
Let me intreat you (for it is a Time
Most apt to doubt your Truth) amongst the Number,
Not to be slacke in Office (gentle Harry)
Lest that your Truth in my Time, come to Wrong you
In mine Age. Harry, I do not write it Needfully.
But that the Earth, which now holds Kings his Slaues,
Scarce feeles the Monarke that it carries now.
Crownes are no more worne when Heads are gone.
Their Vse and Duty makes my Danger such,
That I no more can see what should secure me,
Then those that haue not Fortune worth my Keeping.
Which Heauen (to guard a Head so full of Vertue)
Doth euer watch with Miracle and Prodigie.
A dispossessed and displaced Man,
Is left to all the Hate, and Enuy of Time.
Thus from thee, will it to mine Eares,
As soft as Sleepe. Exit

Enter Warwicke, Gloucester, Clarence.

War. Doth the King call?
Cla. Doth the King call?

Thou hast (I feare) ouer-watcht your Father to his graue,
Before his Time. What Businesse hath brought you
To seeke so soone, my Honour, with my Death?
Were it not, what I feare, much after some new howres
Were it me, without offence; and at my death
Thou hast seal'd vp my expectation.
Thy life did manifest thou lou'dst me not,
And thou hast wish'd vpon my Crowne and me.
Thou (Impatient) and Rage-full in thy thoughts,
Vnbecoming thy Noble heart,
Lo'dst at me to an howre of my Fate
What can'st thou not forbeare me halfe an howre?

Then

Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thy selfe,
And bid the merry Bels ring to mine eare
That thou art Crowned, not that I am dead.
Let all the Teares, that thou shalt drop to day,
Be drops of Balme, to sanctifie thy head:
Onely compound me with forgotten dust,
Give that, which gaue thee life, vnto the Wormes.
Plucke downe my Officers, breake my Decrees,
For now a time is come, to mocke at Forme.
Henry the fifth is Crowned: Vp Vanity,
Downe Royall State: All you sage Counsellors, hence
And to the Englishe Court, assemble now
From euery Region, Apes of Idlenesse.
Now neighbour-Confines purge you of your Scum.
Haue you a Ruffian that will sweare: drinke? dance?
Reuell the night? Rob? Murder? and commit
The oldest sinnes, the newest kinde of wayes?
Be happy he will trouble you no more:
England shall double gyrd, his sorrie shore
Shall flesh his tooth in euery innocent.
O my poore Kingdome sicke, with ciuill blowes:
When that my Care could not withhold thy Riots,
What will become of thee, when Rule is thy Care?
O thou wilt be a Wildernesse againe,
Peopled with Wolues, thy old Inhabitants.

Prince. O pardon me (my Liege)
But for my Teares,
The moist impediments vnto my Speech,
I had forestall'd this deere and deepe Rebuke,
Ere you (with Griefe) had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so farre. There is your Crowne,
And he that weares the Crowne immortally,
Long guard it yours. If I affect it more,
Then as your Honour, and as your Renowne,
Let me no more from this Obedience rise,
Which my most true and inward duteous Spirit
Teacheth this prostrate, and deepe kneeling thing.
Heauen witnesse with how wet an eye I speake,
And how accordant in the very Pith,
But now not common breath, with your Maiestie,
How euer it seeke my ends: If I be false,
Or that my Nature, by the vicious Mould
And Tempure of some second Ouerdrowne Ill,
Become disdainefull, lewd, vniust, and stirre
Against the State: Nurse all Impietie,
Wrong, Spoile, and Murther, and in the last,
To make the Sacrament of this my Sinne,
Euen marry my Sister, by the Rites of Mother,
Inforce the Law, from my behauiour banish
Mercie, and pittie, both of Heauen, and Earth,
And all the gentle Vertues: Do this deed,
Adde to the Heape of all that you haue done,
And I, in stabbing my selfe, haue done enough.
Waste it no more on me, for those that could
Speake low and kneele faire, to winne a Throne.

King. God send the Land peace, and it may be said,
Henry the fifth got Conquests, France and Spaine,
Henry the fourth left Peace, and Blessings, home.
Let me take Counsell of my troubled Braine,
That am not troubled through my Bodies Toyle,
Perplexed with Tumults, Feares, and Broiles,
Commotion'd by my Hands: How I came by it,
And (to say truth) how much by my Bolde
And ready Counsell (Time, that shames all things,
Shames my Deuices, and my Plots brooke lawfer
Euen to my selfe) and how I euer know well
How these Crownes came vpon my Head:
Yet (Couering all with lesser Quiet,
Better Conueniencie, better Circumstance)
For all the Rage, the Act, the Heate of Greatnesse
With Blood, and Expedition will be answered,
And thereto bold Peace,
Thou (since I cannot get it) shalt answered
For all my Reigne, hast been but as a Scene
Acting that Argument. And now my death
Changes the Mood: For what in me, was purchased,
Falles vpon thee, in a more fayrer sort.
So thou, the Garland wearest successively.
Yet, though thou standst more sure, than I could do
Thou art not firme enough, since Greeces are growne
And all my Friends, which thou must make thy Friends
Haue but their stings, and teeth newly taken out,
By whole fed Kindnesse, I was first assured,
And by whole power, I well might dare a Feare
To cope malicious Warwicke, and him raised,
I cut them off, and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land
Least rest, and lying still, might make them looke
Too neere vnto my State.
Therefore (my Harry)
Be it thy course to busie giddy Minds
With forraine Warres: That Action hence borne out,
May waste the memory of the former dayes.
More would I, but my Lungs are wasted so,
That Strength of Speech is vtterly denied me.
How came my Crowne, O heauen for, meet
A little rest to me, my true peace true.

Prince. My gracious Liege:
You won me worne it, kept it, gaue it me,
Then plaine and right must my possession be:
Which I with more than with a Common paine,
'Gainst all the World, will rightfully maintaine.

Enter Lord Iohn of Lancaster,
and Warwicke

King. Looke, looke
Here comes my Iohn of Lancaster.

Iohn. Health, Peace, and Happinesse,
To my Royall Father.

King. Thou bring'st me happinesse and Peace (Sonne Iohn,
But health (alacke) with youthfull wings is flowne
From this bare, wither'd Trunke. Vpon thy sight
My worldly houre doth make a period.

Where

Where is my Lord of Warwicke?
Prin. My Lord of Warwicke.
King. Doth any name particular, belong
Vnto the Lodging where I first did swoone?
War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my Noble Lord.
King. Laud be to heaven.
Even there my life must end.
It hath been propheſied to me many yeares,
I ſhould not dye, but in Jeruſalem
Which (vaine ſ) I ſuppoſd the Holy Land
But bear me to that Chamber, there lle lye:
In that Jeruſalem, ſhall Harry dye. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Shallow, Silence, Falſtaffe, Bardolfe, Page, and Davie.

Shal. By the Maſſe, you ſhall not away to night. What Davie, I ſay.
Fal. You muſt excuſe me, M. Robert Shallow.
Shal. I will not excuſe you, you ſhall not be excuſed. Excuſes ſhall not be admitted: there is no excuſe ſhall ſerue: you ſhall not be excuſd.
Why Davie.
Davie. Heere ſir.
Shal. Davie, Davie, let me ſee Davie, let me ſee. William Cooke, bid him come hither. Sir Iohn, you ſhall not be excuſd.
Davie. Marry ſir, thoſe Precepts cannot be ſerued: and againe ſir, ſhall we ſowe the head-land with Wheate?
Shal. With Wheate Davie. But for William Cooke: are there any Pigeons?
Davie. Yes Sir.
Heere is now the ſmith's note for ſhoeing,
And Plough-iron.
Shal. Let it be caſt, and paide. Sir Iohn, you ſhall not be excuſd.
Davie. Sir a new linke to the Bucket muſt needes be had. And Sir, do you meane to ſtoppe any of William's Wages about the Sacke he loſt the other day, at Hinckley Fayre?
Shal. He ſhall anſwer it.
Some pigeons Davie, a couple of ſhort-legg'd Hennes, a ioint of Mutton, and any pretty little tine Kickſhawes, tell William Cooke.
Davie. Doth the man of Warre ſtay all night ſir?
Shal. Yes Davie.
I warrant Yea, and a Breakfaſt too. Vnleſſe Cold Cut, is better then a penny purſe. Well ſaid my wel. Davie, for they are arrant knaues, and will backe-bite.
Davie. No worſe than they are bitten, ſir. For they have marvellous foule linnen.
Shallow. Well conceited Davie about thy Buſineſſe, Davie.
Davie. I beſeech you ſir,
To countenance William Visor of Woncot, againſt Clement Perkes of the Hill.
Shal. There are many Complaints Davie, againſt that Viſor, that Viſor is an arrant Knaue, on my knowledge.
Davie. I graunt your Worſhip, that he is a knaue Sir: But yet heauen forbid Sir, but a Knaue ſhould haue ſome Countenance at his friends requeſt. An honeſt man Sir, is able to ſpeake for himſelfe, when a Knaue is not. I haue ſeru'd your Worſhip truely Sir, theſe eight yeares: and if I cannot once or twice in a Quarter beare out a knaue, againſt an honeſt man, I haue but a very little credite with your Worſhip. The knaue is mine honeſt friend Sir, therefore beſeech your Worſhip, let him be Countenanced.
Shal. Go too.
I ſay he ſhall haue no wrong. Looke about Davie.
Where are you Sir Iohn? Come, off with your Boots.
Giue me your hand M. Bardolfe.
Bard. I am glad to ſee your Worſhip.
Shal. I thanke thee, with all my heart, kinde Maſter Bardolfe. and welcome my tall Fellow.
Come Sir Iohn.
Fal. I'le follow you, good Maſter Robert Shallow. Bardolfe, looke to our Horſes. If I were ſawed into Quantities, I ſhould make foure dozen of ſuch bearded Hermites ſtaues, as Maſter Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to ſee the ſemblable Coherence of his mens ſpirits, and his: They, by obſeruing of him, do beare themſelues like fooliſh Iuſtices: He, by conuerſing with them, is turn'd into a Iuſtice-like Serving-man. Their ſpirits are ſo marryed in Conioynement, with the participation of Society, that they flocke together in conſent, like to many Wilde-Geeſe. If I had a ſuit to Maſter Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being neere their Maſter: if to his men, I would curry with Maſter Shallow, that no man could better command his Seruants. It is certaine, that either wiſe bearing, or ignorant Carriage is caught, as men take diſeaſes, one of another: therefore, let men take heede of their Company. I will deuiſe matter enough out of this Shallow, to keepe Prince Harry in continuall Laughter, the wearing out of ſixe Faſhions (which is foure Termes) or two Actions, and he ſhall laugh without Intermiſſion. Or a night, ſhall I lye (as I may ſo ſpeake it) with a Iade of Lanceſter, who ſhall be now a Starre-chamber matter of Conſequence, and ſhall ſay to himſelfe, I am the Shadow of Lanceſter. But I come not to ſpeake it thus, for feare I ſhould loſe the matter by thinking on it. Honeſt Plaine words beſt pierce the Eare of Grauity, and heedfull reſolution. I will counterfeit the ſimple of Comprehenſion, that ſhall preſently diſcloſe the vaſt paſſage of his Wit, build vp his Anſwer, and then tell him the Summe. Body of me, I ſhall haue Sir Iohn and Maſter Shallow, like two Gallies and a Flye-boate, lye at my backe, to waft me to my Lodging.
Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Earle of Warwicke, and the Lord Chiefe Iuſtice.

Warwicke. How now, my Lord Chiefe Iuſtice, whether away?
Ch. Iuſt. How doth the King?
Warw. Exceeding well: his Cares
Are now, all ended.
Ch. Iuſt. I hope not dead.
Warw. He's walk'd the way of Nature,
And to our purpoſes, he lies no more.
Ch. Iuſt. I would his Maieſty had call'd me with him,
The ſeruice, that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all iniuries.

War

[illegible] indeed I thinke the young King loues you not.
Ch Iust. I know he doth not, and do arme my selfe
To welcome the condition of the Time,
Which cannot looke more hideously vpon me,
Then I haue drawne it in my fantasie.

Enter Iohn of Lancaster, Gloucester, and Clarence.

War. Heere come the heauy Issue of dead Harry:
O, that the liuing Harry had the temper
Of him, the worst of these three Gentlemen:
How many Nobles then, should hold their places,
That must strike sayle, to Spirits of vilde sort?
Ch. Iust. Alas, I feare, all will be ouer-turn'd.
Iohn. Good morrow Cosin Warwick, good morrow.
Glou. Cla. Good morrow, Cosin.
Iohn. We meet, like men, that had forgot to speake.
War. We do remember: but our Argument
Is all too heauy, to admit much talke.
Iohn. Well: Peace be with him, that hath made vs heauy
Ch Iust. Peace be with vs, least we be heauier.
Glou. O, good my Lord, you haue lost a friend indeed.
And I dare sweare, you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow, it is sure your owne
Iohn. Though no man be assur'd what grace to finde,
You stand in coldest expectation
I am the sorrier, would 'twere otherwise.
Cla. Well, you must now speake Sir Iohn Falstaffe faire,
Which swimmes against your streame of Quality
Ch. Iust. Sweet Princes: what I did, I did in Honor,
Led by th'Imperiall Conduct of my Soule,
And neuer shall you see, that I will begge
A ragged, and fore-stall'd Remission.
If Truth, and vprighte Innocency fayle me,
I'le to the King (my Master) that is dead,
And tell him, who hath sent me after him.
War. Heere comes the Prince.

Enter Prince Henrie.

Ch Iust Good morrow, and heauen saue your Maiesty
Prince. This new, and gorgeous Garment, Maiesty,
Sits not so easie on me, as you thinke.
Brothers, you mixe your Sadnesse with some Feare:
This is the English, not the Turkish Court;
Not Amurah, an Amurah succeeds,
But Harry, Harry: Yet be sad (good Brothers)
For (to speake truth) it very well becomes you:
Sorrow, so Royally in you appeares,
That I will deeply put the Fashion on,
And weare it in my heart. Why then be sad,
But entertaine no more of it (good Brothers)
Then a coyne burthen, laid vpon vs all.
For me, by Heauen (I bid you be assur'd)
Ile be your Father and your Brother too:
Let me but beare your Loue, Ile beare your Cares;
But weepe that Harrie's dead, and so will I.
But Harry liues, that shall conuert those Teares
By number, into houres of Happinesse
Iohn &c. We hope no other from your Maiesty.
Prin. You all looke strangely on me: and you most,
You are (I thinke) assur'd, I loue you not.
Ch Iust. I am assur'd (if I be measur'd rightly)
Your Maiesty hath no iust cause to hate mee
Prin. No? How might a Prince of my great hopes forget
So great Indignities you laid vpon me?
What? Rate? Rebuke? and roughly send to Prison
Th'immediate Heire of England? Was this easie?
May this be washd in Lethe, and forgotten?
Ch Iust I then did vse the Person of your Father:
The Image of his power, lay then in me,
And in th'administration of his Law,
Whiles I was busie for the Commonwealth,
Your Highnesse pleased to forget my place,
The Maiesty and power of Law, and Iustice,
The Image of the King, whom I presented,
And strooke me in my very Seate of Iudgement;
Whereon (as an Offender to your Father)
I gaue bold way to my Authority,
And did commit you. If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the Garland,
To haue a Sonne, set your Decrees at naught?
To plucke downe Iustice from your awefull Bench?
To trip the course of Law, and blunt the Sword
That guards the peace, and safety of your Person?
Nay more, to spurne at your most Royall Image,
And mocke your workings, in a Second body?
Question your Royall Thoughts, make the case yours:
Be now the Father, and propose a Sonne:
Heare your owne dignity so much prophan'd,
See your most dreadfull Lawes, so loosely slighted;
Behold your selfe, so by a Sonne disdained.
And then imagine me, taking you part,
And in your power, soft silencing your Sonne:
After this cold consideration, sentence me;
And, as you are a King, speake in your State,
What I haue done, that misbecame my place,
My person, or my Lieges Soueraignetie.
Prin. You are right Iustice, and you weigh this well.
Therefore still beare the Ballance, and the Sword:
And I do wish your Honors may encrease,
Till you do liue, to see a Sonne of mine
Offend you, and obey you, as I did.
So shall I liue, to speake my Fathers words:
Happy am I, that haue a man so bold,
That dares do Iustice, on my proper Sonne;
And no lesse happy, having such a Sonne,
That would deliuer vp his Greatnesse so,
Into the hands of Iustice. You did commit me:
For which, I do commit into your hand,
Th'vnstained Sword that you haue vs'd to beare:
With this Remembrance; That you vse the same
With the like bold, iust, and impartiall spirit
As you haue done 'gainst me. There is my hand,
You shall be as a Father, to my Youth:
My voice shall sound, as you do prompt mine eare,
And I will stoope, and humble my Intents,
To your well-practis'd, wise Directions.
And Princes all, beleeue me, I beseech you:
My Father is gone wilde into his Graue,
(For in his Tombe, lye my Affections)
And with his Spirits, sadly I survive,
To mocke the expectation of the World;
To frustrate Prophecies, and to race out
Rotten Opinion, who hath writ me downe
After my seeming. The Tide of Blood in me,
Hath proudly flow'd in Vanity, till now.
Now doth it turne, and ebbe backe to the Sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of Floods,
And flow henceforth in formall Maiesty
Now call we our High Court of Parliament,
And let vs choose such Limbes of Noble Counsaile,

Then

That the great Body of our State may go
In equall rancke, with the best gouerned Nation,
That Warre or Peace, or both at once may be
As things acquainted and familiar to vs,
In which you (Father) shall haue foremost hand.
Our Coronation done, we will accite
As I before remembred all our State,
And (heauen consigning to my good intents)
No Prince nor Peere shall haue iust cause to say,
Heauen shorten Harries happy life, one day. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Silence, Bardolfe, Page, and Davie.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine Orchard: where, in an Arbor we will eate a last yeares Pippin of my owne graffing, with a dish of Caraways, and so forth (Come Cousin Silence) and then to bed.

Fal. You haue here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren: Beggers all, beggers all Sir John. Marry, good ayre. Spread Davy, spread Davie: well said Davie.

Dav. This Davie serues you for good vses. he is your Seruingman, and your Husband.

Shal. A good Varlet, a good Varlet, a very good Varlet Sir John. I haue drunke too much Sacke at Supper. A good Varlet. Now sit downe, now sit downe. Come Cousin.

Sil. Ah sirra (quoth-a) we shall doe nothing but eate, and make good cheere, and pray to heauen for the merrie yeere; when flesh is cheape, and Females deere, and lustie Lads roome heere, and there so merrie, and euer among so merrie.

Dav. There's a merry heart, good M. Silence, Ile giue you a health for that anon.

Shal. Giue M. Bardolfe some wine, Davie.

Dav. Sweet heart, me be with you anon: most welcome Sir. Master Page, good M. Page, proface. What you want in meate, wee'l haue in drinke. but you be heare, the heart is all.

Shal. Be merry M. Bardolfe, and my little Souldiour there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all.
For women are Shrewes, both short and tall:
'Tis merry in Hall, when beards wagge all,
And welcome merry Shrouetide. Be merry, be merry.

Fal. I did not thinke M. Silence had been a man of this Mettle.

Sil. Who I? I haue been merry twice and once, ere now.

Dav. There is a dish of Leather-coats for you.

Shal. Davie

Dav. Your Worship: Ile be with you straight. A cup of Wine sir?

Sil. A Cup of Wine, that's braue indeed. Hee drinke vnto the Leman mine, and a merry heart liues long-a.

Fal. Well said, M. Silence.

Sil. Do me right, and dub me Knight, Samingo. Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why then say an old man can do somewhat.

Dav. If it please your Worshippe, there's one Pistoll come from the Court with newes.

Fal. From the Court? Let him come in.

Enter Pistoll.

How now Pistoll?

Pist. Sir Iohn, saue you sir.

Fal. What winde blew you hither, Pistoll?

Pist. Not the ill winde which blowes none to good. sweet Knight. Thou art now one of the greatest men in the Realme.

Sil. Indeed, I thinke he bee, but Goodman Puffe of Barson.

Pist. Puffe? puffe in thy teeth, most recreant Coward base. Sir Iohn, I am thy Pistoll, and thy Friend, and helter skelter haue I rode to thee, and tydings do I bring, and lucky Ioyes, and golden Times, and happie Newes of price.

Fal. I prethee now deliuer them, like a man of this World.

Pist. A foutra for the World, and Worldlings base, I speake of Affrica, and Golden Ioyes.

Fal. O base Assyrian Knight, what is thy newes? Let King Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin-hood, Scarlet, and Iohn.

Pist. Shall dunghill Curres confront the Helicons?
And shall good newes be baffel'd?
Then Pistoll lay thy head in Furies lappe.

Shal. Honest Gentleman,
I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then Lament therefore.

Shal. Giue me pardon, Sir.
If sir, you come with news from the Court I take it, there is but two wayes, either to vtter them, or to conceale them. I am Sir, vnder the King, in some Authority.

Pist. Vnder which King?
Besonian, speake, or die.

Shal. Vnder King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth: or Fift.

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A foutra for thine Office.
Sir Iohn, thy tender Lambe-kinne, now is King,
Harry the Fift's the man, I speake the truth,
When Pistoll lies, do this, and figge-me, like
The bragging Spaniard.

Fal.

Fal. What, is the old King dead?
Pist. As nayle in doore.
The things I speake, are iust.
Fal. Away Bardolfe, Saddle my Horse,
Master Robert Shallow, choose what Office thou wilt
In the Land, 'tis thine. Pistol, I will double-charge thee
With Dignities.
Bard. O ioyfull day.
I would not take a Knighthood for my Fortune.
Pist. What? I do bring good newes.
Fal. Carrie Master Silence to bed: Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am Fortunes Steward.
Get on thy Boots, wee ride all night. Oh sweet Pistoll: Away Bardolfe. Come Pistoll, utter more to mee: and with all expedient speed to doe thy selfe good. Boote, boote Master Shallow, I know the young King is sick for
mee. Let vs take any mans Horses: The Lawes of England are at my commandement. Happie are they, which haue beene my Friendes: and woe vnto my Lord Chiefe Iustice.
Pist. Let Vultures vil'de seize on his Lungs also:
Where's the life that late I led, (say they)?
Why here it is, welcome those pleasant dayes. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Hostesse Quickly, Dol Teare-sheete, and Beadles.

Host-esse. No, thou arrant knaue: I would I might dy, that I may haue thee hang'd: Thou hast drawne my shoulder out of ioynt.
Off. The Constables haue deliuer'd her ouer to mee: and shee shall haue Whipping-cheere enough, I warrant her. There hath beene a man or two (lately) kill'd about her.
Dol. Nut-hooke, nut-hooke, you Lye: Come on, Ile tell thee what, thou damn'd Tripe-visag'd Rascall, if the Childe I now go with, do miscarrie, thou had'st better thou had'st strooke thy Mother, thou Paper-fac'd Villaine.
Host. O that Sir Iohn were come, hee would make this a bloody day to some body. But I would the Fruite of her Wombe might miscarry.
Officer. If it do, you shall haue a dozen of Cushions againe, you haue but eleuen now. Come, I charge you both go with me: for the man is dead, that you and Pistoll beate amongs you.
Dol. Ile tell thee what, thou thin man in a Censor; I will haue you as soundly swindg'd for this, you blew-Bottel'd Rogue: you filthy famish'd Correctioner, if you be not swing'd, Ile forsweare halfe Kirtles.
Off. Come, come, you shee-Knight-arrant, come.
Host. O, that right should thus ouercome might. Well of Sufferance, comes ease.
Dol. Come you Rogue, come
Bring me to a Iustice.
Host. Yes, come you staru'd Blood-hound.
Dol. Goodman death, goodman Bones.
Host. Thou Atomy, thou.
Dol. Come you thinne Thing
Come you Rascall.
Off. Very well. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter two Groomes.

1. Groo. More Rushes, more Rushes.
2. Groo. The Trumpets haue sounded twice.
1. Groo. It will be two of the Clocke, ere they come from the Coronation. Exit Groo.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Pistoll, Bardolfe, and Page.

Falstaffe. Stand heere by me, M. Robert Shallow, I will make the King do you Grace. I will leere vpon him, as he comes by: and do but marke the countenance that hee will giue me.
Pistoll. Blesse thy Lungs, good Knight.
Falst. Come heere Pistoll, stand behind me. O if I had had time to haue made new Liueries, I would haue bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But it is no matter, this poore shew doth better: this doth inferre the zeale I had to see him.
Shal. It doth so.
Falst. It shewes my earnestnesse in affection.
Pist. It doth so.
Fal. My deuotion.
Pist. It doth, it doth, it doth.
Fal. As it were, to ride day and night,
And not to deliberate, not to remember,
Not to haue patience to shift me.
Shal. It is most certaine.
Fal. But to stand stained with Trauaile, and sweating with desire to see him, thinking of nothing else, putting all affaires else in obliuion, as if there were nothing else to be done, but to see him.
Pist. 'Tis semper idem, for obsque hoc nihil est. 'Tis all in euery part.
Shal. 'Tis so indeed.
Pist. My Knight, I will enflame thy Noble Liuer, and make thee rage. Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts is in base Durance, and contagious prison: Hall'd thither by most Mechanicall and durty hand. Rowze vppe Reuenge from Ebon den, with fell Alecto's Snake, for Doll is in. Pistol, speakes nought but troth.
Fal. I will deliuer her.
Pistol. There roar'd the Sea: and Trumpet Clangour sounds.

The Trumpets sound. Enter King Henrie the Fift, Brothers, Lord Chiefe Iustice.

Falst. Saue thy Grace, King Hall, my Royall Hall.
Pist. The heauens thee guard, and keepe, most royall Impe of Fame.
Fal. 'Saue thee my sweet Boy
King. My Lord Chiefe Iustice, speake to that vaine man.
Ch. Iust. Haue you your wits?
Know you what 'tis you speake?
Falst. My King, my Ioue; I speake to thee, my heart.
King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy Prayers.
How ill white haires become a Foole, and Iester?

I haue

[illegible]
[illegible] and peace,
[illegible]
Make [illegible] by [illegible] Grace,
[illegible] Know Grauel't gape
[illegible]
[illegible]
Preuented, hatcht and [illegible] out,
For cause (I do know, of [illegible] would perceiue)
That haue turn'd away my former Spirit,
Sham'd through poore heart to beare Companie.
Which hope yet doth acquaint me, and shall not
Vntill some heauy body of reuolt
The Tutors and the Feeders of my Riots
Inuite (beside this taste of death)
As I haue done the rest of my Misleaders,
Not to come neere our Person by ten mile
For competence of life, I will allow you,
That lacke not meanes for your liues,
And as we heare you doe reforme your selues,
We will according to your strengths and qualities,
Giue you aduancement. Be it your charge (my Lord)
To see performed the tenure of our word. Set on.

Exit King

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. I marry Sir Iohn, which I beseech you to let me haue home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be M. Shallow. Do not you grieue at that. It is accessary, or an appertinent to my selfe. Looke you, I must come neere to the world. I feare not your aduancement. I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot see perceiue how, vnlesse you giue me your Doublet, and stuffe me out with Straw. I beseech you, good Sir Iohn, let me haue fiue hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word. This that you heare, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour I feare, that you will dye, In Sir Iohn.

Fal. Feare no colours, go with me to dinner.
Come Lieutenant Pistol, come Bardolfe,
I shall be sent for soone at night.

Ch. Iust. Go carry Sir Iohn Falstaffe to the Fleete,
Take all his Company along with him.

Fal. My Lord, my Lord.

Ch. Iust. I cannot now speake, I will heare you soone.
Take them away.

Pist. Si fortuna me tormento, sperame contento.

Exit Manet Lancaster and Chiefe Iustice.

Iohn. I like this fire proceeding of the Kings:
He hath not drawne his wonted Followers
Shall be very well prouided for.
But all are banisht, till their conuersations
Appeare more wise, and modest to the world.

Ch. Iust. And so they are.

Iohn. The King hath call'd his Parliament, my Lord.

Ch. Iust. He hath.

Iohn. I will lay odds, that ere this yeere expire,
We beare our Ciuil Swords and Native fire
As farre as France. I heare a Bird so sing,
Whose Musicke (to my thinking) pleas'd the King.
Come, will you hence?

Exeunt

FINIS.

EPILOGVE.

FIRST, my Feare: then, my Curtſie: laſt, my Speech. My Feare, is your Diſpleaſure: My Curtſie, my Dutie And my Speech, to Beggeyour Pardons. If you looke for a good Speech now, you vndoe me: For what I haue to ſay, is of mine owne making; and what (indeed) I ſhould ſay, will (I doubt) prooue mine owne marring. But to the Purpoſe, and ſo to the Venture. Be it knowne to you (as it is very well) I was lately heere in the end of a diſpleaſing Play, to pray your Patience for it, and to promiſe you a Better: I did meane (indeede) to pay you with this, which if (like an ill Venture) it come vnluckily home, I breake; and you, my gentle Creditors loſe. Heere I promiſe you I would be, and heere I commit my Bodie to your Mercies: Bite me ſome, and I will pay you ſome, and (as moſt Debtors do) promiſe you infinitely.

If my Tongue cannot entreate you to acquit me: Will you command me to vſe my Legges? And yet that were but light payment, to Dance out of your debt: But a good Conſcience, will make any poſſible ſatisfaction, and ſo will I. All the Gentlewomen heere, I hope forgiuen me, if the Gentlemen will not, then the Gentlemen do not agree with the Gentlewomen, which was neuer ſeene before, in ſuch an Aſſembly.

One word more, I beſeech you: if you be not too much cloid with Fat Meate, our humble Author will continue the Story (with Sir Iohn in it) and make you merry, with faire Katherine of France: where (for any thing I know) Falſtaffe ſhall dye of a ſweat, vnleſſe already he be kill'd with your hard Opinions: For Old-Caſtle dyed a Martyr, and this is not the man. My Tongue is wearie, when my Legs are too, I will end you a good night; and ſo kneele downe before you: But (indeed) to pray for the Queene

Epilogue

The Life of Henry the Fift.

Enter Prologue.

O For a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest Heaven of Invention:
A Kingdome for a Stage, Princes to Act
And Monarchs to behold the swelling Scene.
Then should the warlike Harry, like himselfe,
Assume the Port of Mars, and at his heeles
Leash'd in like Hounds, should Famine, Sword, and Fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles all,
The flat unraised spirits, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy Scaffold, to bring forth
So great an Object. Can this Cockpit hold
The vastie fields of France? Or may we cramme
Within this wooden O the very Casques
That did affright the Ayre at Agincourt?
O pardon, since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a Million,
And let us, Cyphers to this great Accompt,

On your imaginarie Forces worke.
Suppose within the Girdle of these Walls
Are now confin'd two mightie Monarchies,
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts,
The perilous narrow Ocean parts asunder.
Deere my Liege, gently peruse my Play,
Eake out our imperfections with your thought:
Into a thousand parts diuide one Man,
And make imaginarie Puissance.
Thinke when we talke of Horses, that you see them
Printing their proud Hoofes i'th receiuing Earth:
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our Kings,
Carry them here and there, iumping o're Times,
Turning th'accomplishment of many yeeres
Into an houre-glasse: for the which supplie,
Admit me Chorus to this Historie,
Who Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to heare, kindly to iudge our Play. Exit.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter the two Bishops of Canterbury and Ely.

Bish. Cant. My Lord, I'le tell you, that selfe Bill is vrg'd,
Which in the eleuenth yeere of the last Kings reign
Was like, and had indeed against vs past,
But that the scambling and vnquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.
Bish. Ely. But how my Lord shall we resist it now?
Bish. Cant. It must be thought on. If it passe against vs,
We lose the better halfe of our Possession:
For all the Temporall Lands, which men deuout
By Testament haue giuen to the Church,
Would they strip from vs, being valued thus,
As much as would maintaine, to the Kings honor,
Full fifteene Earles, and fifteene hundred Knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good Esquires:
And to relieue of Lazars and weake age
Of indigent, faint Soules past corporall toyle,
A hundred Almes-houses right well supply'd:
And to the Coffers of the King beside,
A thousand pounds by th'yeere. Thus runs the Bill.
Bish. Ely. This would drinke deepe.
Bish. Cant. 'Twould drinke the Cup and all.
Bish. Ely. But what prevention?

Bish. Cant. The King is full of grace, and fayre regard.
Bish. Ely. And a true louer of the holy Church.
Bish. Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no sooner left his Fathers body,
But that his wildnesse, mortified in him,
Seem'd to dye too: yea, at that very moment,
Consideration like an Angell came,
And whipt the offending Adam out of him;
Leauing his body as a Paradise,
T'inuelop and contayne Celestiall Spirits.
Never was such a sodaine Scholler made:
Never came Reformation in a Flood,
With such a heady currance, scowring faults:
Nor never Hydra headed Wilfulnesse
So soone did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this King.
Bish. Ely. We are blessed in the Change.
Bish. Cant. Hear him but reason in Diuinitie,
And all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the King were made a Prelate.
Hear him debate of Common-wealth Affaires;
You would say, it hath been all in all his study:
List his discourse of Warre, and you shall heare
A fearefull Battle rendred you in Musique.

Enter two Bishops.

GOd save your Majesty, and blis Angels guard your sacred Throne
And make you long deserve it.
Amen. Sweet Bishop, you read it right,
My learned Lord, we pray you to proceed,
And justly and religiously unfold,
Why the Law Salique, that they have in France,
Or should or should not bar us in our Clayme:
And God forbid, my dearest gracious Lord,
That you should fashion, wrest or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your understanding Soule,
With opening Titles miscreate, whose right
Suites not in native colours with the truth,
For God doth know how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake our sleeping sword of War,
We charge you in the name of God take heed
For never two such Kingdomes did contend
Without much fall of blood, whose guiltlesse drops
Are every one a Woe, a sore complaint
Gainst him whose wrongs gives edge unto the swords,
That makes such waste in briefe mortality.
Under this conjuration speake my Lord,
For we will heare, note and believe in heart,
That what you speake is in your conscience washt
As pure as sinne with Baptisme.
Then heare me gracious Soveraign, and you Peers,
That owe your selves, your lives and services
To this Imperiall Throne. There is no barre
To make against your Highnesse Clayme to France,
But this which they produce from Pharamond,
In terram Salicam Mulieres ne succedant,
No Woman shall succeed in Salique Land,
Which Salique Land the people somewhile hold
Beyond the Flood of Sala in Germany,
Between the flood of Sala and the Elbe,
Where Charles the Great having subdu'd the Saxons,
There left behinde and setled certaine French,
Who holding in disdaine the German Women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Established then this Law, to wit no Female
Should be inheritrix in Salique Land,
Which Salique as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany call'd Meisen.
Then doth it well appeare the Salique Law
Was not devised for the Realme of France:
Nor did the French possesse the Salique Land
Until foure hundred one and twenty yeeres
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly supposed the founder of this Law,
Who died within the yeere of our redemption,
Foure hundred twenty six: and Charles the Great
Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seate the French
Beyond the Flood of Sala in the yeere
Eight hundred five. Besides their Writers say,
King Pepin which deposed Childerike
Did as Heire generall, being descended
On Blithild which was Daughter to King Clothair,
Make claime and title to the Crowne of France.
Hugh Capet also, who usurped the Crowne

Of Charles the Duke of Loraine, sole Heire male
Of the true Line and Stock of Charles the Great:
To find his Title with some shewes of truth,
Though in pure truth it was corrupt and naught,
Conuey'd himselfe as th'Heire to th' Lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemaine, who was the Sonne
To Lewes the Emperour, and Lewes the Sonne
Of Charles the Great: also King Lewes the Tenth,
Who was sole Heire to the Vsurper Capet,
Could not keepe quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the Crowne of France, 'till satisfied,
That faire Queene Iaquet, his Grandmother,
Was Lineall of the Lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Loraine:
By the which Marriage, the Lyne of Charles the Great
Was re vnited to the Crowne of France.
So, that as cleare as is the Summers Sunne,
King Pepins Title, and Hugh Capets Clayme,
King Lewes his satisfaction, all appeare
To hold in Right and Title of the Female:
So doe the Kings of France vnto this day.
Howbeit, they would hold vp this Salique Law,
To barre your Highnesse clayming from the Female,
And rather chuse to hide them in a Net,
Then amply to imbarre their crooked Titles,
Vsurpt from you and your Progenitors.
King. May I with right and conscience make this claim?
Bish. Cant. The sinne vpon my head, dread Soueraigne:
For in the Booke of Numbers is it writ,
When the man dyes, let the Inheritance
Descend vnto the Daughter. Gracious Lord,
Stand for your owne, vnwind your bloody Flagge,
Looke back into your mighty Ancestors:
Goe my dread Lord, to your great Grandsires Tombe,
From whom you clayme, inuoke his Warlike Spirit,
And your Great Vnckles, Edward the Black Prince,
Who on the French ground play'd a Tragedie,
Making defeat on the full Power of France:
Whiles his most mighty Father on a Hill
Stood smiling, to behold his Lyons Whelpe
Forrage in blood of French Nobilitie.
O Noble English, that could entertaine
With halfe their Forces, the full pride of France,
And let another halfe stand laughing by,
All out of worke, and cold for action.
Bish. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with your puissant Arme renew their Feats;
You are their Heire, you sit vpon their Throne:
The Blood and Courage that renowned them,
Runs in your Veines: and my thrice-puissant Liege
Is in the very May-Morne of his Youth,
Ripe for Exploits and mighty Enterprises.
Exe. Your Brother Kings and Monarchs of the Earth
Do all expect, that you should rowze your selfe,
As did the former Lyons of your Blood.
West. They know your Grace hath cause, and means, and might;
So hath your Highnesse: neuer King of England
Had Nobles richer, and more loyall Subiects,
Whose hearts haue left their bodyes here in England,
And lye pauillion'd in the fields of France.
Bish Can. O let their bodyes follow my deare Liege
With Bloods, and Sword and Fire, to win your Right:
In ayde whereof, we of the Spiritualtie
Will rayse your Highnesse such a mightie Summe,
As neuer did the Clergie at one time
Bring in to any of your Ancestors.
King. We must not onely arme t'inuade the French,
But lay downe our proportions, to defend
Against the Scot, who will make roade vpon vs,
With all aduantages.
Bish. Can. They of those Marches, gracious Soueraigne,
Shall be a Wall sufficient to defend
Our in-land from the pilfering Borderers.
King. We do not meane the coursing snatchers onely,
But feare the maine intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to vs
For you shall reade, that my great Grandfather
Neuer went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot, on his vnfurnisht Kingdome,
Came pouring like the Tyde into a breach,
With ample and brim fulnesse of his force,
Galling the gleaned Land with hot Assayes,
Girding with grieuous siege, Castles and Townes:
That England being empty of defence,
Hath shooke and trembled at th'ill neighbourhood.
Exe. She hath in the more fear'd and harm'd, my Liege
For heare her but exampl'd by her selfe,
When all her Cheualrie hath been in France,
And she a mourning Widdow of her Nobles,
She hath her selfe not onely well defended,
But taken and impounded as a Stray,
The King of Scots: whom she did send to France,
To fill King Edwards fame with prisoner Kings,
And make their Chronicle as rich with prayse,
As the Ouze and bottome of the Sea
With sunken Wrack, and sum-lesse Treasuries.
Bish. Ely. But there's a saying very old and true.
If that you will France win, then with Scotland first begin.
For once the Eagle (England) being in prey,
To her vnguarded Nest, the Weazell (Scot)
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her Princely Egges,
Playing the Mouse in absence of the Cat,
To tame and hauocke more then she can eate.
Exet. It followes then, the Cat must stay at home,
Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,
Since we haue lockes to safegard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty theeues.
While that the Armed hand doth fight abroad,
Th'aduised head defends it selfe at home:
For Gouernment, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keepe in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close,
Like Musicke.
Cant. Therefore doth heauen diuide
The state of man in diuers functions,
Setting endeuour in continual motion:
To which is fixed as an ayme or butt,
Obedience: for so worke the Hony Bees,
Creatures that by a rule in Nature teach
The Act of Order to a peopled Kingdome.
They haue a King, and Officers of sorts,
Where some like Magistrates correct at home:
Others, like Merchants venter Trade abroad:
Others, like Souldiers armed in their stings,
Make boote vpon the Summers Veluet buddes:
Which pillage, they with merry march bring home
To the Tent-royall of their Emperor:
Who busied in his Maiesties surueyes
The singing Masons building roofes of Gold,
The ciuil Citizens kneading vp the hony:
The poore Mechanicke Porters, crowding in
Their heauy burthens at his narrow gate:

The sad-ey'd Iustice with his surly hamme,
Delivering ore to Executors pale
The lazie yawning Drone: I this inferre,
That many things having full reference
To one consent, may worke contrariously,
As many Arrowes loos'd several wayes
Come to one marke: as many wayes meet in one towne,
As many fresh streames meet in one salt sea,
As many lines close in the Dials center.
So may a thousand actions once a foote,
And in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defect. Therefore to France, my Liege,
Divide your happy England into foure,
Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
And you withall shall make all Gaul a stake.
If we with these that powre heere at home,
Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
Let vs be worried, and our Nation lose
The name of hardinesse and policie.

King. Call in the Messengers sent from the Dolphin.
Now are we well resolv'd, and by Gods helpe
And yours, the noble sinewes of our power,
France being ours, wee'l bend it to our Awe,
Or breake it all to peeces. Or there we'l sit,
(Ruling in large and ample Empire)
Ore France, and all her (almost) Kingly Dukedomes)
Or lay these bones in an vnworthy Vrne,
Tombelesse, with no remembrance ouer them.
Either our History shall with full mouth
Speake freely of our Acts, or else our grave
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongue in vaine,
Not worshipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our feare sixth Dolphin, for we heare your greeting is from him, not from the King.

Amb. May't please your Maiestie to give vs leave
Freely to render what we have in charge,
Or shall we pant, and shew you are not fit
For the Dolphins mocking, and our Embassie.

King. We are no Tyrant, but a Christian King,
Vnto whose grace our passion is as subiect
As is our wretches fettred in our prisons,
Therefore with frank and with vnstained plainnesse,
Tell vs the Dolphins mind.

Amb. Thus then in briefe:
Your highnesse lately sending into France,
Did claime some certaine Dukedomes, in the right
Of your great Predecessor, King Edward the third.
In answer of which claime, the Prince our Master
Sayes, that you tax him too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd: There's nought in France,
That can be with a nimble Galliard wonne:
You cannot revell into Dukedomes there.
He therefore sends you meeter for your spirit
This Tunne of Treasure, and in lieu of this,
Desires you let the dukedomes that you claime
Heare no more of: you are too shallow (Harry)
For such a Treasure. Thus saith the Dolphin, speakes

King. What Treasure Vncle?

Exe. Tennis balles my Liege.

Amb. We are glad the Dolphin is so pleasant with vs,
His present, and your pains we thanke you for:
When we have match'd our Rackets to these Balles,
We will in France (by Gods grace) play a set,
Shall strike his Father's Crowne into the hazard.
Tell him he hath made a match with such a Wrangler,
That all the Courts of France will be disturb'd
With Chaces. And we understand him well,
How he comes o're vs with our wilder dayes,
Not measuring what vse we made of them.
We never valew'd this poore Iland of England,
And therefore going hence, did give our selfe
To barbarous license: As 'tis ever common,
That men are merriest, when they are from home.
But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
Be like a King, and shew my sayle of Greatnesse,
When I do rowse me in my Throne of France,
For that I have layd by my Maiestie,
And plodded like a man for working dayes:
But I will rise there with so full a glorie,
That I will dazle all the eyes of France,
Yea strike the Dolphin blinde to looke on vs,
And tell the pleasant Prince, this Mocke of his
Hath turn'd his balles to Gun-stones, and his soule
Shall stand sore charged, for the wasteful vengeance
That shall flye with them: for many a thousand widowes
Shall this his Mocke, mocke out of their dear husbands;
Mocke mothers from their sonnes, mock Castles downe;
And some are yet vngotten and vnborne,
That shall have cause to curse the Dolphins scorne.
But this lyes all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeale, and in whose name
Tell you the Dolphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightfull hand in a well-hallow'd cause.
So get you hence in peace: And tell the Dolphin,
His Iest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep more then did laugh at it.
Convey them with safe conduct. Fare you well.

Exeunt Ambassadors.

Exe. This was a merry Message.

King. We hope to make the Sender blush at it.
Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy howre,
That may give furth'rance to our Expedition:
For we have now no thought in vs but France,
Save those to God, that runne before our businesse.
Therefore let our proportions for these Warres
Be soone collected, and all things thought vpon,
That may with reasonable swiftnesse adde
More Feathers to our Wings: for God before,
We'le chide this Dolphin at his fathers doore.
Therefore let every man now task his thought,
That this fayre Action may on foot be brought. Exeunt

Flourish. Enter Chorus.

Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
And silken Dalliance in the Wardrobe lyes:
Now thrive the Armorers, and Honors thought
Reignes solely in the breast of every man
They sell the Pasture now, to buy the Horse;
Following the Mirror of all Christian Kings,
With winged heeles, as English Mercuries.
For now sits Expectation in the Ayre,
And hides a Sword, from Hilts vnto the Point,
With Crownes Imperiall, Crownes and Coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French advis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadfull preparation,
Shake in their feare, and with pale Policy
Seeke to divert the English purposes
O England: Model to thy inward Greatnesse,
Like little Body with a mighty Heart:

What

What might'ſt thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kinde and naturall
But ſee, thy fault France hath in thee found out,
A neſt of hollow boſomes, which he fills
With treacherous Crownes, and three corrupted men:
One, Richard Earle of Cambridge, and the ſecond
Henry Lord Scroope of Maſham, and the third
Sir Thomas Grey knight of Northumberland,
Have for the Gilt of France (O guilt indeed!)
Confirm'd Conſpiracy with fearefull France,
And by their hands this grace of Kings muſt dye.
If Hell and Treaſon hold their promiſes,
Ere he take ſhip for France, and in Southampton
Lincoln your Highneſſe on, and weele digeſt
The feare of his abſence; for he may
Fleet-ſtreet in ſtyde, for France are agreed,
Her Kings ſer from London, and the Scene
Is now tranſported (Gracious) to Southampton:
There is the Play-houſe now, there muſt you ſit,
And thence to France ſhall we convey you ſafe,
And bring you backe: Charge them with reſolution
To vſe your gentle Pallat for a while,
Wee'le not offend one ſtomach with our Play
But till the King come forth, and not till then,
Vnto Southampton do we ſhift our Scene. Exit

Enter Corporall Nym and Lieutenant Bardolfe.

Bar. Well met Corporall Nym.

Nym. Good morrow Lieutenant Bardolfe.

Bar. What, are Ancient Piſtoll and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I ſay little: but when time ſhall ſerve, there ſhall be ſmiles, but that ſhall be as it may: I dare not fight, but I will winke and hold out mine iron: it is a ſimple one, but what though? it will toaſt Cheeſe, and it will endure cold, as another mans ſword will: and there's an end.

Bar. I will bidde you a breakfaſt to make you friendes, and wee'le be all three ſworne brothers to France: Let it be ſo good Corporall Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live ſo long as I may, that is the certaine of it: and when I cannot live any longer, I will doe as I may: That is my reſt, that is the reſolution of it.

Bar. Well, it is certaine Corporall, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and certainly ſhe did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell. Things muſt be as they may: men may ſleepe, and they may have their throats about them at that time, and ſome ſay, knives have edges. It muſt be as it may, though patience be a tyred name, yet ſhee will plodde, there muſt be Conclusions, well, I cannot tell.

Enter Piſtoll, & Quickly

Bar. Heere comes Ancient Piſtoll and his wife: good Corporall be patient heere. How now mine Hoſte Piſtoll?

Piſt. Baſe Tyke, call'ſt thou me Hoſte, now by this hand I ſweare I ſcorne the terme: nor ſhall my Nell keep Lodgers.

Hoſt. No by my troth, not long. For we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteene Gentlewomen that live honeſtly by the pricke of their Needles, but it will be thought we keepe a Bawdy-houſe ſtraight. O well-a-day Lady, if he be not drawne now, we ſhall ſee wilfull adultery and murther committed.

Bar. Good Lieutenant good Corporall offer nothing heere. Nym. Puſh

Piſt. Puſh for thee, Iſland dogge: thou prickeard cur of Iſland.

Hoſt. Good Corporall Nym ſhew thy valor, and put vp your ſword.

Nym. Will you ſhogge off? I would have you ſolus.

Piſt. Solus, egregious dog? O Viper vile; The ſolus in thy moſt mervailous face, the ſolus in thy teeth, and in thy throate, and in thy hatefull Lungs, yea in thy Maw perdy; and which is worſe, within thy naſtie mouth. I do retort the ſolus in thy bowels, for I can take, and Piſtols cocke is vp, and flaſhing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbaſon, you cannot conjure mee: I have an humor to knocke you indifferently well. If you grow fowle with me Piſtoll, I will ſcoure you with my Rapier, as I may, in fayre termes. If you would walke off, I would prick your guts a little in good termes, as I may, and that's the humor of it.

Piſt. O braggard vile, and damned furious wight,
The grave doth gape, and doting death is neere,
Therefore exhale.

Bar. Heare me, heare me what I ſay: He that ſtrikes the firſt ſtroke, I'le run him up to the hilts, as I am a ſoldier.

Piſt. An earle of iron-metall, and fury ſhall abate.
Give me thy hand, thy fore-hand to me give: Thy ſpirits are moſt tall.

Nym. I will cutte thy throate one time or other in fayre termes, that is the humor of it.

Piſtoll. Couple a gorge, that is the word. I defie thee again. O hound of Creet, think'ſt thou my ſpouſe to get? No, to the ſpittle goe, and from the Powdring-tub of infamy, fetch forth the lazar Kite of Creſſida's kinde, Doll Tearſheete ſhe by name, and her eſpouſe I have, and I [illegible] who, I the Quantum Quare for the onely ſhee: and Pauca, there's enough to goe to.

Enter the Boy

Bar. Mine Hoſt Piſtoll, you muſt come to my Maſter, and your Hoſteſſe: he is very ſicke, & would to bed. Good Bardolfe, put thy face betweene his ſheets, and do the Office of a Warming-pan: faith he's very ill.

Boy. Away you rogue.

Hoſt. By my troth he'l yeeld the Crow a pudding one of theſe dayes: the King has kill'd his heart. Good Huſband come home preſently. Exit

Bar. Come, ſhall I make you two friends. Wee muſt to France together: why the devil ſhould we keepe knives to cut one another throats?

Piſt. Let floods o're-ſwell, and fiends for food howle on.

Nym. You'l pay me the eight ſhillings I won of you at Betting?

Piſt. Base is the Slave that payes.

Nym. That now I will have: that's the humor of it.

Piſt. As manhood ſhall compound: puſh home. Draw.

Bard. By this ſword, he that makes the firſt thruſt, I'le kill him. By this ſword, I will.

Piſt. Sword is an Oath, & Oathes muſt have their courſe.

Bar. Corporall Nym & thou wilt be friends be friends, and thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too: prethee put vp.

Piſt. A Noble ſhalt thou have, and preſent pay, and Liquor likewiſe will I give to thee, and friendſhippe ſhall combine, and brotherhood. Ile live by Nymme, & Nymme ſhall live by me, is not this juſt? For I ſhall Sutler be vnto the Campe, and profits will accrue. Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my Noble?
Pist. In cash, most justly payd
Nym Well, then that the humor of it
Enter Hostesse.
Host. As ever you come of a woman, come in quickly to Sir Iohn. A poore heart, she is sicke of a burning quotidian Tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold Sweet men, come to him
Nym The King hath run bad humors on the Knight, that's the even of it.
Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right, his heart is fracted and corroborate.
Nym. The King is a good King: but it must be as it may he passes some humors and careers
Pist. Let us condole the knight, for lambkins we will liue.
Enter Exeter, Duke of Yorke, and Westmerland
Bed. Fore God his Grace is bold to trust these traitors
Exe. They shall haue no sway to the contrary
West. How smooth and even they do bear themselues,
As if allegeance in their bosomes sate
Crowned with faith and constant loyalty
Bed. The King hath note of all that they intend,
By interception, which they dreame not of
Exe. Nay, but his dainty sleepe was in the mercy,
Whom he at Dover shipt for Scotland,
Trust the soule of a treason
His Soueraigne's life to Enter the Lord Scroope, Cambridge, Gray
King. Now sits the winde fayre, and we will aboord
My Lord of Cambridge, and my kinde Lord of Masham,
And you my gentle Knight, giue me your thoughts
Thinke you not that the powres we march will draw
Well on their pallyes and their power
Doing the execution, and the
For which we haue
Scro. No doubt my Liege, if each man
King. I doubt not that, since we
We carry
That growes not
Nor
Successe and Conquest
Cam. Neuer was Monarch better
Then is your Maiesty: there's not
That feares

And
Scro. Touching
Let
King. O
Cam. So may your Highnesse, and yet punish too.
Grey Sir, you shew great mercy if you giue him life,
After the taste of much correction
King Alas, your too much loue and care of me,
Are heauy Orions 'gainst this poore wretch
If little faults proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be winkt at, how shall we stretch our eye
When capitall crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appeare before vs? We'll yet inlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroope, and Gray, in their deere care
And tender preseruation of our person
Would haue him punish'd And now to our French causes,
Who are the late Commissioners?
Cam I one my Lord,
Your Highnesse bad me aske for it to day
Scro. So did you me my Liege.
Grey And I my Royall Soueraigne.
King. Then Richard Earle of Cambridge, there is yours
There yours Lord Scroope of Masham, and Sir knight
Gray of Northumberland, this same is yours
Read them, and know I know your worthinesse.
My Lord of Westmerland and Vncle Exeter,
We will aboord to night. Why how now Gentlemen?
What see you in those papers, that you lose
So much complexion? Looke ye how they change
Their cheekes are paper. Why, what read you there,
That haue so cowarded and chac'd your blood
Out of appearance
Cam. I do confesse my fault,
And do submit me to your Highnesse mercy.
Grey, Scro. To which we all appeale.
King. The mercy that was quick in vs but late,
By your own counsailes is suppressed and kill'd:
You must not dare (for shame) to talke of mercy,
For your own reasons turne into your bosomes,
As dogges vpon their maisters, worrying you
See you my Princes and my Noble Peeres,
These English monsters? My Lord of Cambridge here,
You know how apt our loue was, to accord
To furnish him with all appertinents
Belonging his Honour, and this man,
Hath for a few light Crownes, lightly conspir'd
And sworne vnto the practises of France
To kill vs heere in Hampton. To the which,
This knight no lesse for bountie bound to Vs
Then Cambridge is, hath likewise sworne. But O,
What shall I say to thee Lord Scroope, thou cruell,
Ingratefull, sauage, and inhumane Creature?
Thou that didst beare the key of all my counsailes,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soule,
That almost might'st haue coyn'd me into Golde,
Would'st haue vsed my prediction 'gainst my selfe?
May it be possible that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one sparke of euill
That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange,
That though the truth of it stands off as grosse
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason and murther ever kept together,
As two yoake diuels sworne to either's purpose,
Working so grossely in a naturall cause,
That admiration did not hoope at them
But thou 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in
Wonder to waite on treason, and on murther:
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was
That wrought vpon thee so prepostorously,
Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence.

And

And other diuels that ſuggeſt by treaſons,
Do botch and bungle vp damnation,
With patches, colours, and with formes being fetcht
From glift'ring ſemblances of piety.
But he that temper'd thee, bad thee ſtand vp,
Gaue thee no inſtance why thou ſhouldſt do treaſon,
Vnleſſe to dub thee with the name of Traitor.
If that ſame Daemon that hath gull'd thee thus,
Should with his Lyon gate walke the whole world,
Hemg ſtretcht to and fro in Tartar bounds,
And ſeeke how many he might make his prey,
Yet euill ne'er could finde agent to his purpoſe,
Vnleſſe he wrought vpon ſome crooked nature.
Why did not Treaſon feede vpon weake wils?
Why all not Treaſon? Come, ſtay at Noble taſkes?
Why ſoare it? Seeke out Rebels in Rebels?
Why ſo dull thou? Or are they ſpare in diet,
Free from grofſe paſſions, and of mirth ſo full,
Conſtant in ſpirit, not ſwai'd with euery light wind,
Garniſh'd and deck't in modeſt complement,
Not working with the eye, without the knee,
And but in purged iudgement trebly gracious,
Sure thou would'ſt haue found all this in mee:
A fellow of no hope in thy graue obſeruer,
Finding no ſtrength, if fraught with man, and beſt indeed
Without man, I with weene for thee.
For behold, how finely me thinkes ſhe
Attires old Mars, His tables are ope,
And all to draw in Gueſts that come preparde,
Nay rather plotting how the can entice
Such gueſts into her lodging: there's the queſtion,
And happily the ſome of her beſt traines
Are now in motion to the Prince of Wales,
For that the Court of all the World is there,
And he the King of Good Companions.
Therefore moſt likely it is with ſuch a Vice
Shee will moſt buſie be: but how may'ſt auoyd,
Which cannot be, vnleſſe thou make reſort
To the moſt vicious, and moſt wicked ſtand,
Which for the firſt vnleſſe thou call'd on firſt,
Through heapes of Leaſings, Periuries, and Lyes,
Through dangers, toyles, and ſtormes, and ſtarting holes,
Thou neuer could'ſt approach me. Therefore firſt
As yeelding cauſe, be my ſelected gueſt.
Come, for thou ſhalt thruſt thy hand as deepe
Into the purſe of Rich Reward, as that
Alps-high Ambition cannot meaſure profit
Deepe enough for her followers: and with her
Marſhall vs to the vnexperienc'd Warres
Of new-borne Warre. Thou ſhalt haue charge giuen thee,
To ſome ſtrong Piſtoll Cocke-a-hoope ſhall ſoone
Bring downe the pride of dreadleſſe Fortune quite,
And ſo ſhall ſit in Fortunes Sphere and mocke
At thoſe that were enraged againſt his ſmile.
Shall we not meet, Yoke-fellow to our Knaueries,
Before his Maieſty has done with his?

Piſtoll. Conſtant as Mars, I will abide by thee.

Hoſteſſe. Do I not know you, Sir? Will you behaue like a Cuckold? Go home with me, and repoſe your ſelfe.

Piſtoll. Let Vultures vile ſeize on my lungs and liuer,
If this wrong paſſe vnpuniſht. Pay for all:
One with all, as we ride all hands and hearts
To Hampton, there ſhall we be merry all.
Why, Boy, will thou go with me?

Hoſteſſe. Nay, you ſhall go with me now.

Piſtoll. Go to a Stewes, and hang your ſelfe all three.

Exit.

Hoſteſſe. Well, I cannot chuſe but weepe, to thinke of him good ſoule.

Bard. And I muſt after him, to ſee the performance of his Will.

Hoſteſſe. Well, that's better then to ſee him hang'd. Alas, poore Gentleman, well, God haue mercy on him, if he haue a graine of Grace, hee's ſure of forgiuenes.

Bard. I hope he is in Hell already, for if there be any hell here in this world, he liues in it, and then he muſt needs be there.

Boy. Would I were with him, wherſoeuer he is, either in Heauen or Hell.

Hoſteſſe. Nay ſure he's not in Hell: he's in Arthurs boſome, if euer man went to Arthurs boſome. A made a finer end, and went away an it had been any Chriſtome Child; a parted euen iuſt betweene twelue and one, euen at the turning o'th Tyde: for after I ſaw him fumble with the Sheets, and play with flowers, and ſmile vpon his fingers ends, I knew there was but one way: for his Noſe was as ſharpe as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields. How now Sir Iohn, quoth I, what man be good cheare: ſo a cryed out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a ſhould not thinke of God; I hop'd there was no need to trouble himſelfe with any ſuch thoughts yet: ſo a bad me lay more Cloathes on his feet: I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any ſtone: then I felt to his knees, and ſo vp-peard, and vpward, and all was as cold as any ſtone.

Nim. They ſay he cryed out of Sack.

Hoſteſſe. So a did indeed.

Bard. And of Women.

Hoſteſſe. Nay that a did not.

Boy. Yes that a did, and ſaid they were Deuils incarnate.

Hoſteſſe. A could neuer abide Carnation, 'twas a Colour he neuer lik'd.

Boy. And a cride, the Deuile would haue him about Women.

Hoſteſſe. A did in ſome ſort (indeed) handle Women: but then he was rumatique, and talk'd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember a ſaw a Flea ſticke vpon Bardolphs Noſe, and a ſaid it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard. Well, the fuell is gone that maintain'd that fire: that's all the Riches I got in his ſeruice.

Nim. Shall we ſhogg? the King will be gone from Southampton.

Piſt. Come, let's away. My Loue, giue me thy Lippes: Looke to my Chattels, and my Moueables: Let Sences rule: The world is, Pitch and pay: truſt none: for Oathes are Strawes, mens Faiths are Wafer-Cakes, and hold-faſt is the onely Dogge: My Ducke, therefore Caueto be thy Counſailor. Goe, cleare thy Chryſtalls. Yoke-fellowes in Armes, let vs to France, like Horſe-leeches

King. For vs, we will conſider of this further:
To morrow ſhall you beare our full intent
Back to our Brother of England.
Dolph. For the Dolphin,
I ſtand here for him: what to him from England?
Exe. Scorne and defiance, ſlight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not miſ-become
The mightie Sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus ſayes my King: and if your Fathers Highneſſe
Doe not, in graunt of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter Mock you ſent his Maieſtie;
Hee'le call you to ſo hot an Anſwer of it,
That Cannes and Womble Vaulcages of France
Shall chide your Treſpas, and returne your Mock
In ſecond Accent of his Ordinance.
Dolph. Say: if my Father render faire returne,
It is againſt my will: for I deſire
Nothing but Oddes with England.
To that end, as matching to his Youth and Vanitie,
I did preſent him with the Paris-Balls.
Exe. Hee'le make your Paris Louer ſhake for it,
Were it the Miſtreſſe Court of mightie Europe
And be aſſur'd, you'le find a diff'rence,
As we his Subiects haue in wonder found,
Betweene the promiſe of his greener dayes,
And theſe he maſters now: now he weighes Time
Euen to the vtmoſt Graine: that you ſhall reade
In your owne Loſſes, if he ſtay in France.
King To morrow ſhall you know our mind at full.
Flourish.
Exe. Diſpatch vs with all ſpeed, leaſt that our King
Come here himſelfe to queſtion our delay;
For he is footed in this Land already.
King. You ſhalbe ſoone diſpatcht, with faire conditions.
A Night is but ſmall breathe, and little pawſe,
To anſwer matters of this conſequence. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Flourish. Enter Chorus.
Thus with imagin'd wing our ſwift Scene flies,
In motion of no leſſe celeritie then that of Thought.
Suppoſe, that you haue ſeene
The well-appointed King at Douer Peer,
Embarke his Royalties: and his braue Fleet,
With ſilken Streamers, the young Phebus fayning;
Play with your Fancies: and in them behold.
Vpon the Hempen Tackle, Ship-boyes climbing;
Heare the ſhrill Whiſtle, which doth order giue
To ſounds confus'd: behold the threaden Sayles,
Borne with th'inuiſible and creeping Wind,
Draw the huge Bottomes through the furrowed Sea,
Breſting the lofties Surge. O, doe but thinke
You ſtand vpon the Riuage, and behold
A Citie on th'inconſtant Billowes dauncing.
For ſo appeares this Fleet Maieſticall,
Holding due courſe to Harflew. Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to ſternage of this Name,
And leaue your England as dead Mid-night, ſtill,
Guarded with Grandſires, Babyes, and old Women,
Either paſt, or not arriu'd to pyth and puiſſance.
For who is he, whoſe Chin is but enricht
With one appearing Hayre, that will not follow
Theſe cull'd and choyſe-drawne Caualiers to France?
Worke, worke your Thoughts, and therein ſee a Siege:
Behold the Ordenance on their Carriages,
With fatall mouthes gaping on girded Harflew.
Suppoſe th'Embaſſador from the French comes back:
Tells Harry, That the King doth offer him
Katherine his Daughter, and with her to Dowrie,
Some petty and vnprofitable Dukedomes.
The Action likes not: and the nimble Gunner
With Lyntſtock now the diuelliſh Cannon touches,
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.
And downe goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eech out our performance with your mind. Exit.

Enter the King, Exeter, Bedford, and Glouceſter.
Alarum Scaling Ladders at Harflew.
King. Once more vnto the Breach,
Deare friends, once more;
Or cloſe the Wall vp with our Engliſh dead
In Peace, there's nothing ſo becomes a man,
As modeſt ſtillneſſe and humilitie:
But when the blaſt of Warre blowes in our eares,
Then imitate the action of the Tyger:
Stiffen the ſinewes, commune vp the blood,
Diſguiſe faire Nature with hard-fauour'd Rage:
Then lend the Eye a terrible aſpect:
Let it pry through the portage of the Head,
Like the Braſſe Cannon: let the Brow o'rewhelme it,
As fearefully, as doth a galled Rocke
O're-hang and iutty his confounded Baſe,
Swill'd with the wild and waſtfull Ocean.
Now ſet the Teeth, and ſtretch the Noſthrill wide,
Hold hard the Breath, and bend vp euery Spirit
To his full height. On, on you Noble Engliſh,
Whoſe blood is fet from Fathers of Warre-proofe:
Fathers, that like ſo many Alexanders,
Haue in theſe parts from Morne till Euen fought,
And ſheath'd their Swords, for lack of argument.
Diſhonour not your Mothers: now attеſt,
That thoſe whom you call'd Fathers, did beget you.
Be Copy now to me of groſſer blood,
And teach them how to Warre. And you good Yeomen,
Whoſe Lyms were made in England; ſhew vs here
The mettell of your Paſture: let vs ſweare,
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not:
For there is none of you ſo meane and baſe,
That hath not Noble luſter in your eyes
I ſee you ſtand like Grey-hounds in the ſlips,
Straying vpon the Start. The Game's afoot:
Follow your Spirit; and vpon this Charge,
Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George.
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.

Enter Nim, Bardolph, Piſtoll, and Boy.
Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach
Nim. 'Pray thee Corporall ſtay, the Knocks are too hot: and for mine owne part, I haue not a Caſe of Liues: the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine-Song of it.
Piſt. The plaine-Song is moſt iuſt: for humors doe abound: Knocks goe and come: Gods Vaſſals drop and dye: and Sword and Shield, in bloody Field, doth winne immortall fame.
Boy. Would I were in an Ale-houſe in London, I would giue all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and ſafetie.
Piſt. And

Pist. And I: If wishes would prevaile with me, my purpose should not fayle with me; but thither would I hie.

Boy. As any, but not as truly, as Bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Flueller.

Flu. Vp to the breach, you Dogges; avaunt you Cullions.

Pist. Be merciful great Duke to men of Mould. Abate thy Rage, abate thy Rage, abate thy Rage, great Duke. Good Bawcock bate thy Rage. Vse lenitie sweet Chuck.

Nim. These be good humors, your Honor wins bad humors. Exit.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three Swashers. I am Boy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serue me, could not be Man to me, for indeed three such Antiques do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-liuer'd and red-fac'd: what his meanes whereof, a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistoll, he hath a killing Tongue, and a quiet Sword; by the meanes whereof a breakes words, and keepes whole Weapons. For Nym, he hath heard, that men of few words are the best men, and therefore he scornes to say his prayers, lest he should be thought a Coward: but his few bad words are matcht with as few good Deeds, for a never broke any mans head but his owne, and that was against a post when he was drunke. They will steale any thing, and call it Purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelue leagues, and sold it for three-farthings. Nym and Bardolph are sworne Brothers in filching, and in Calais they will steale any thing, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a fire-shouel. I knew by that peece of Seruice, a would haue made Nouices buy Shouels. They would haue me as familiar with mens Pockets, as their gloues or their handkerchers: which makes much against my Manhood, if I should take from another's Pocket, to put into mine, for it is plaine pocketing vp of Wrongs. I must leaue them, and seeke some better Seruice: their Villany goes against my weake Conscience, and to ebolster me withall, I will not say, pertly and somewhat confidently, but to my selfe. Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gower. Captaine Macmorrice doth come presently to the Mynes: the Duke of Gloucester would speake with you.

Irish. To the Mynes? Tell you the Duke, it is not so good to come to the Mynes: for looke you, the Mynes is not according to the disciplines of the Warre: the concauities of it is not sufficient: for looke you, th'aduantage and the hold-fast of your Enemy: and the Sinister and the Direct lyes of the Warres, looke you, is directly to the Duke, looke you, as the fingers and the Thumbe, I looke you, vpon the Palme of the hand, looke you. Now I will be bold to say to the Duke, looke you, that the Mynes is not according to the disciplines of the Warre, the Concauities of it is not sufficient,

Therefore to our best mercy [illegible]
Or like to men proud of destruction,
Defy vs to our worst: for as I am a Souldier,
A Name that in my thoughts best becomes me best,
If [illegible]
[illegible]
The Gates of Mercy shall be all shut vp,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

To bry a floobry and a quartie Forme
I feare cooke-shotten Ile of Albion.
Conte Dawphin, were haue they this mettell?
Is not their Clymate foggie? raw and dull
On whom, as in despight the Sunne looks pale,
Killing their Fruit with frowning Cruddaken Water,
A Drench for sur-reyned Iades, their Barly broth,
Decott to cold blood to such a valiant heate
And shall our quick blood spirited with Wine,
Seeme frosted? O for honor of our Land,
Let vs not hang like roping Icicles
Vpon our Houses Thatch, whiles a more frosty People
Sweat drops of gallant Youth in our rich fields
Poore we call them in their Natiue Lords.
Dolphin by Iesu and Heire,
Our Madame mocks vs, and plainly say,
Our Mettle is bred out, and they will giue
Their bodies to the Lust of English Youth,
To new-store France with Bastard Warriors.
Fra. They bid vs to the English Dancing-Schooles,
And teach Lauolta's high, and swift Corantoes,
Saying, our Grace is only in our Heeles,
And that we are most lofty Runne-awayes.
Kath. Where is Mountioy the Herald? speed him hence,
Let him greet England with our sharpe defiance.
Vp Princes, and with spirit of Honour edged,
More sharper then your Swords hie to the field:
Charles Delabreth High Constable of France,
You Dukes of Orleance, Burbon, and Berry,
Alanson, Bar and Brabant,
Bonne, Estrotte and Rambures, Vandemont,
Beaumont, Grand Pre, Roussi, and Fauconbridge,
Loys, Lestrake, Bouciqualt, and Charaloys,
High Dukes of great Princes, Barons Lords, and Knights;
For your great Seats, now quit you of great Shames.
Barre Harry England that sweepes through our Land
With Pennons painted in the blood of Harflew
Rushes his lasty iawes, bids the ranke corne Sow
Vpon the Valley, ouer-swell low Hills with Sea
The Apes of idle flight, shall dare to come vpon
Goe downe, expect no other Entertainment,
And tell the Constable of France,
Bring forth more Horses.
Con. Dolphins regardes the Great
Sorry our Embassie was so,
His Souldiers tall, strong, and full of their March
Lowe in stature, yet shall all see our Army,
Hee bad vs tell our Master to shake off care,
And send his Ransome.
Kath. The great Lord Constable, hast on Mountioy,
And tell the King, that we send,
Ere long we will visit him in person he will giue
Their bodies to the Lust of English Wolues in Roan.
Exe. Now, as you meet a gracious Maiestie,
Fit for your selues, and fit for your new wayes,
Now Lord Constable, and Princes all,
Each your mighty warlike Bands shall call Exeunt.

Enter Gower, Captaine Fluellen and Soldiers

Gow. How now Captaine Fluellen, come you from the Bridge?
Flu. I assure you there is very excellent Seruices committed at the Bridge.
Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?
Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon, and a man that I loue and honour with my soule and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my liuing, and my vttermost power. He is not (God be praysed and plessed) any hurt in the World, but keepes the Bridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an auncient Lieutenant there at the Pridge, I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Marke Antony, and he is a man of no estimation in the World, but I did see him do as gallant seruice.
Gower. What do you call him?
Flu. He is call'd Auncient Pistoll.
Gower. I know him not.
Enter Pistoll.
Flu. Here is the man.
Pist. Captaine, I thee beseech to do me fauours: the Duke of Exeter doth loue thee well.
Flu. I, I praise God, and I haue merited some loue at his hands.
Pist. Bardolph, a Souldier firme and sound of heart, and of buxome valour, hath by cruell fate, and giddie fortunes furious fickle Wheele, that Goddesse blinde, that stands vpon the rolling restlesse Stone,
Flu. By your patience, auncient Pistoll. Fortune is painted blinde, with a muffler before her eyes, to signifie to you that Fortune is blinde; and she is painted also with a Wheele, to signifie to you, which is the Moral of it, that she is turning and inconstant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, speake you, is fixed vpon a Spherical Stone, which rowles, and rowles, and rowles: in good truth, the Poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent Morall.
Pist. Fortune is Bardolphs foe, and frowns vpon him; for he hath stolne a Pax, and hanged must for it, and furthermore he hath giuen me this same day to be drawne and quartered at Harflew, and I would desire the Pax might be restored, and hanging then subscribed for an Eagle to me. Speake, captaine, for his life, and I will thee requite.
Flu. Auncient Pistoll, I do partly vnderstand your meaning.
Pist. Why then rescue him now or neuer.
Flu. Auncient Pistoll, you scuruie lowsie knaue, I do loue you well, and I would be glad to do you any seruice, for your brother, I would desire the Duke to vse his good pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be vs'd.
Pist. Die and be damn'd, and figo for thy friendship.
Flu. It is well.
Pist. The Figge of Spaine. Exit.
Flu. Very good.
Gower. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit Rascall, I remember him now a Bawd, a Cut-purse.
Flu. Ile assure you, a vttered as praue words at the Pridge, as you shall see in a Summers day: but it is very well what he has spoke to me, that is well I warrant you, when time is seruice.
Gower. Why 'tis a Gull, a Foole, a Rogue, that now and then goes to the Warres, to grace himselfe at his returne into London, vnder the forme of a Souldier. And such fellowes are perfect in the great Commanders Names, and they will learne you by rote where Seruices were done; at such and such a Sconce, at such a Breach, at such a Conuoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what termes the Enemy stood on; and this they conne perfectly in the phrase of Warre, which they ioyne vp with new-tuned Oathes: and what a Beard of the Generalls Cut, and a horride Suite of the Campe, will doe among foming Bottles, and Ale-washt Wits, is wonderful to be thought on: but you must learne to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistooke.

Flu. I tell you what, Captaine Gower: I doe perceive hee is not the man that hee would gladly make shew to the World hee is: if I finde a hole in his Coat, I will tell him my mind: harke you the King is coming, and I must speake with him from the Pridge.

Drum and Colours. Enter the King and his poore Souldiers.

Flu. God pleese your Maiestie.

King. How now Fluellen, cam'st thou from the Bridge?

Flu. I, so please your Maiestie: The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintain'd the Pridge; the French is gone off, looke you, and there is gallant and most prave passages: marry, th'athversary was have possession of the Pridge, but he is enforced to retyre, and the Duke of Exeter is Maister of the Pridge. I assure your Maiestie, the Duke is a prave man.

King. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th'athversary hath been very great, reasonable great: marry for my part, I thinke the Duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a Church, one Bardolph, if your Maiestie know the man: his face is all bubukles and whelkes, and knobs, and flames of fire, and his lippes blowes at his nose, and it is like a coale of fire, sometimes blew, and sometimes red, but his nose is executed, and his fires out.

King. Wee would haue all such offendors so cut off: and we give expresse charge, that in our Marches through the Countrey, there be nothing compell'd from the Villages; nothing taken, but paid for: none of the French vpbrayded or abused in disdainefull Language; for when Lenity and Cruelty play for a Kingdome, the gentler Gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Mountioy.

Mountioy. You know me by my habit.

King. Well then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mountioy. My Masters mind.

King. Vnfold it.

Mountioy. Thus sayes my King: Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seem'd dead, we did but sleepe: Advantage is a better Souldier then rashnesse. Tell him, wee could haue rebuk'd him at Harflewe, but that wee thought not good to bruise an injurie, till it were full ripe. Now wee speake vpon our Q, and our voyce is imperiall. England shall repent his folly, see his weaknesse, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransome, which must proportion the losses we haue borne, the subiects we haue lost, the disgrace we haue offered, which in weight to re-answer, his pettinesse would bow vnder. For our losses, his Exchequer is too poore; for th'effusion of our blood, the Muster of his Kingdome too faint a number, and for our disgrace, his owne person kneeling at our feet but a weake and worthlesse satisfaction. To this addde Defiance: and tell him for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounc't. So farre my King and Master; so much my Office.

King. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mount. Mountioy.

King. Thou dost thy Office fairely. Turne thee back, And tell thy King, I doe not seeke him now, But could be willing to march on to Calice, Without impeachment: for to say the sooth, Though 'tis no wisdome to confesse so much Vnto an enemie of Craft and Vantage, My people are with sicknesse much enfeebled, My numbers lessen'd: and those few I have, Almost no better then so many French; Who when they were in health, I tell thee Herald, I thought, vpon one payre of English Legges Did march three Frenchmen. Yet (God be thanked God) That I doe brag thus; this your ayre of France Hath blowne that vice in me. I must repent. Goe therefore tell thy Master here I am; My Ransome, is this frayle and worthlesse Trunke; My Army, but a weake and sickly Guard: Yet God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himselfe, and such another Neighbor Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Mountioy. Goe bid thy Master well advise himselfe: If we may passe, we will: if we be hindred, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discolour: and so Montioy fare you well. The summ of all our Answer is but this. We would not seeke a Battaile as we are, Nor as we are, we say we will not shunne it. So tell your Master.

Mount. I shall deliver so: Thankes to your Highnesse.

Glou. I hope they will not come vpon vs now.

King. We are in Gods hand, Brother, not in theirs. March to th'Bridge, it now drawes toward night, Beyond the River wee'll encamp our selves, And on to morrow bid them march away. Exeunt

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures, Orleance, Dolphin, with others.

Const. Tut, I have the best Armour of the World, would it were day.

Orleance. You have an excellent Armour: but let my Horse have his due.

Const. It is the best Horse of Europe.

Orleance. Will it never be Morning?

Dolph. My Lord of Orleance, and my Lord High Constable, you talke of Horse and Armour?

Orleance. You are as well prouided of both, as any Prince in the World.

Dolph. What a long Night is this? I will not change my Horse with any that treades but on foure pasternes: Ca ha: he bounds from the Earth, as if his entrayles were hayres: Le Cheual volante, the Pegasus, chez les narines de feu. When I bestryde him, I soare, I am a Hawke: he trots the ayre: the Earth sings, when he touches it: the basest horne of his hoofe, is more Musicall then the Pipe of Hermes.

Orleance. Hee's of the colour of the Nutmeg.

Dolph. And of the heat of the Ginger. It is a Beast for Perseus: hee is pure Ayre and Fire, and the dull Elements of Earth and Water never appeare in him, but only in patient stillnesse while his Rider mounts him: hee is indeede a Horse, and all other Iades you may call Beasts.

Con. Indeed my Lord, it is a most absolute and excellent Horse.

Dolph. It is the Prince of Palfreyes, his Neighing is like the bidding of a Monarch, and his countenance enforces Homage.

Orleance. No more Cousin.

Dolph. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot from the ranging of the Horse to the lodging of the Lambe, vary deserued praise on my Palfrey: It is a Theame as fluent as the Sea: Turne the Sands into eloquent tongues, and my Horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subiect for a Soueraigne to reason on, and for a Soueraignes Soueraigne to ride on: And for the World, familiar to vs, and vnknowne, to lay apart their particular Functions, and wonder at him, I once writ a Sonnet in his praise, and began thus, Wonder of Nature.

Orleance. I haue heard a Sonnet begin so to ones Mistresse.

Dolph. Then did they imitate that which I compos'd to my Courser, for my Horse is my Mistresse.

Orleance. Your Mistresse bestes well.

Dolph. Me well, which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular Mistresse.

Const. Nay, for me thought yesterday your Mistresse shrewdly shooke your backe.

Dolph. So perhaps did yours.

Const. Mine was not bridled.

Dolph. O then belike she was old and gentle and you rode like a Kerne of Ireland, your French Hose off, and in your strait Strossers.

Const. You haue good iudgement in Horsemanship.

Dolph. Be warn'd by me then: they that ride so and ride not warily, fall into foule Boggs: I had rather haue my Horse to my Mistresse.

Const. I had as liefe haue my Mistresse a Iade.

Dolph. I tell thee Constable, my Mistresse weares his owne hayre.

Const. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a Sow to my Mistresse.

Dolph. Le chien est retourné a son propre vomissement est la Truie lauée au bourbier: thou makest vse of anything.

Const. Yet do I not vse my Horse for my Mistresse, or any such Prouerbe, so little kin to the purpose.

Ramb. My Lord Constable, the Armour that I saw in your Tent to night, are those Starres or Sunnes vpon it?

Const. Starres my Lord.

Dolph. Some of them will fall to morrow, I hope.

Const. And yet my Sky shall not want.

Dolph. That may'st thou, else thou beare a many superfluous Carkasses peece them out: Would me were away.

Const. Then is there one beares your prayses, who would trot as soone, if you and your braggers dismounted.

Dolph. Would I were able to loade him with his desert: Will it neuer be day? I will trot to morrow a mile, and my way shall be paued with English Faces.

Const. I will not say so, for feare I should be fac't out of my way: but I would it were morning, for I would faine be eares of the English.

Ramb. Who will go to hazard with me for twentie Prisoners?

Const. You must first go your selfe to hazard, ere you haue them.

Dolph. 'Tis midnight, Ile go arme my selfe. Exit.

Orleance. The Dolphin longs for morning.

Ramb. He longs to eate the English.

Const. I thinke he will eate all he kills.

Orleance. By the white Hand of my Lady, hee's a gallant Prince.

Const. Sweare by her Foot, that she may tread out the Oath.

Orleance. He is simply the most actiue Gentleman of France.

Const. Doing is actiuitie, and he will still be doing.

Orleance. He neuer did harme, that I heard of.

Const. Nor will doe none to morrow: hee will keepe that good name still.

Orleance. I know him to be valiant.

Const. I was told that, by one that knowes him better then you.

Orleance. What's hee?

Const. Marry hee told me so himselfe, and hee sayd hee car'd not who knew it.

Orleance. Hee needes not, it is no hidden vertue in him.

Const. By my faith Sir, but it is: never any body saw it, but his Lacquey: 'tis a hooded valour, and when it appeares, it will bate.

Orleance. Ill will never sayd well.

Const. I will cap that Prouerbe with, There is flattery in friendship.

Orleance. And I will take vp that with, Giue the Deuill his due.

Const. Well plac't: there stands your friend for the Deuill: haue at the very eye of that Prouerbe with, A Fox o' the Deuill.

Orleance. You are the better at Prouerbs, by how much a Fooles Bolt is soone shot.

Const. You haue shot ouer.

Orleance. 'Tis not the first time you were ouer-shot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord high Constable, the English lye within fifteene hundred paces of your Tents.

Const. Who hath measur'd the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpree.

Const. A valiant and most expert Gentleman. Would it were day? Alas poore Harry of England! he longs not for the Dawning as we doe.

Orleance. What a wretched and peeuish fellow is this King of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers so farre out of his knowledge.

Const. If the English had any apprehension, they would runne away.

Orleance. That they lack: for if their heads had any intellectuall Armour, they could neuer weare such beaute Head-pieces.

Ramb. That Iland of England breedes very valiant Creatures; their Mastiffes are of vnmatchable courage.

Orleance. Foolish Curres, that runne winking into the mouth of a Russian Beare, and haue their heads crusht like rotten Apples: you may as well say, that's a valiant Flea, that dare eate his breakefast on the Lippe of a Lyon.

Const. Iust, iust: and the men doe sympathize with the Mastiffes, in robustious and rough coming on, leauing their Wits with their Wiues: and then giue them great Meales of Beefe, and Iron and Steele; they will eate like Wolues, and fight like Deuils.

Orleance. I,

Orleance. I, but these English are shrowdly out of Beefe.

Conft Then shall we finde to morrow, they haue only stomackes to eate, and none to fight. Now is it time to arme: come, shall we about it?

Orleance It is now two a Clocke: but let me see: by ten We shall haue each a hundred English men. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Chorus

Now entertake conception of our scene,
With rendring Confines of Warre and Peace,
Admits the view of Warlike Mars to come,
From Camp to Camp through the foule Wombe of Night,
The Hum of either Armies stilly sounds,
That the fixt Centinels almost receiue
The secret Whispers of each others Watch.
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each Battaile sees the other's vmbered face:
Steed threatens Steed, in high and boastfull Neighs
Pierces the Night's dull Eare: and from the Tents,
The Armourers accomplishing the Knights,
With busie Hammers closing Riuets vp,
Giue dreadfull note of preparation.
The Country Cocks doe crow, the Clocks doe towle
And the third howre of drowsie Morning nam'd,
Proud of their Numbers, and secure in Soule,
The confident and ouer-lustie French,
Doe the low-rated English play at Dice;
And chide the cripple-tardy-gated Night,
Who like a foule and ougly Witch doth limpe
So tediously away. The poore condemned English,
Like Sacrifices, by their watchfull fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The Morning's danger: and their gesture sad,
Inuesting lanke-leane Cheekes, and Warre-worne Coates,
Presented them vnto the gazing Moone
So many horride Ghosts. O now, who will behold
The Royall Captaine of this ruin'd Band
Walking from Watch to Watch, from Tent to Tent,
Let him cry, Prayse and Glory on his head
For forth he goes, and visits all his Hoast,
Bids them good morrow with a modest Smyle,
And calls them Brothers, Friends, and Countreymen.
Vpon his Royall Face there is no note,
How dread an Army hath enrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one iot of Colour
Vnto the weary and all-watched Night:
But freshly lookes, and ouer-beares Attaint,
With cheerefull semblance, and sweet Maiestie:
That euery Wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his Lookes.
A Largesse vniuersall, like the Sunne,
His liberall Eye doth giue to euery one,
Thawing cold feare, that meane and gentle all
Behold, as may vnworthinesse define.
A little touch of Harry in the Night,
And so our Scene must to the Battaile flye:
Where O for pity, we shall much disgrace,
With foure or fiue most vile and ragged foyles,
(Right ill dispos'd, in braule ridiculous)
The Name of Agincourt: Yet sit and see,
Minding true things, by what their Mockeries bee.
Exit.

Enter the King, Bedford, and Gloucester.

King Glofter, 'tis true that we are in great danger,
The greater therefore should our Courage be.
God morrow Brother Bedford: God Almighty,
There is some soule of goodnesse in things euill,
Would men obserue it, but a due consideration,
For our bad Neighbour makes vs early Risers,
Which is both healthfull, and good Husbandry,
Besides they are our outward Consciences,
And Preachers to vs all, admonishing,
That we should dresse vs fairely for our end
Thus may we gather Honey from the Weed,
And make a Morall of the Deuill himselfe.

Enter Exploram

Good morrow old Sir Thomas Erpingham
A good soft Pillow for that good white Head,
Were better than a churlish turfe of France.
Exping. Not so my Liege, this Lodging likes me better,
Since I may say, now lye I like a King.
King. 'Tis good for men to loue their present paines,
Vpon example so the Spirit is eased,
And when the Mind is quickened, out of doubt
The Organs, though defunct and dead before,
Breake vp their drowsie Graues and newly moue
With casted slough and fresh Legerity.
Lend me thy Cloake Sir Thomas. Brothers both,
Commend me to the Princes in our Campe,
Do my good morrow to them, and anon
Desire them all to my Pauilion.
Glofter. We shall, my Liege.
Exping. Shall I attend your Grace?
King. No, my good Knight,
Go with my Brothers to my Lords of England.
I and my Bosome must debate awhile,
And then I would no other Company.
Exping. The Lord in Heauen bleſſe thee, Noble Harry. Exeunt
King. God a mercy old Heart, thou speak'ſt cheerefully. Enter Piſtoll
Piſt Qui vous la?
King. A friend.
Piſt Discouer thee, art thou Officer, or art thou base, common, and popular?
King. I am a Gentleman of a Company.
Piſt. Trayl'ſt thou the puiſſant Pyke?
King. Euen so: what are you?
Piſt As good a Gentleman as the Emperor.
King. Then you are a better than the King.
Piſt The King's a Bawcock, and a Heart of Gold, a Lad of Life, an Impe of Fame, of Parents good, of Fiſt most valiant: I kiſſe his dirtie shooe, and from heart-ſtring I loue the louely Bully. What is thy Name?
King. Harry le Roy.
Piſt. Le Roy? a Cornish Name: art thou of Cornish Crew?
King. No, I am a Welchman.
Piſt. Know'ſt thou Fluellen?
King Yes.
Piſt. Tell him Ile knock his Leeke about his Pate vpon S. Dauies day.
King Doe not you weare your Dagger in your Cappe that day, leaſt he knocke that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?
Nym. And his Kinsman too.
Pist. The Fiend giue them ioy.
King. I thanke you God be with you.
Pist. My name is Pistoll cald. Exit
King. It sorts well with your fiercenesse.

Manet King

Enter Captaine Fluellen and Gower

Gower. Captaine Fluellen.
Flu. So, Captaine? What lack you? Stand off, I charge you in the Name of Iustice.
Gower. Why this is the Ancient, and my friend, and my Countryman.
Flu. Ancient? What Ancient? I haue not seene him know the Raskall.
Gower. Will you speake to him, and not strike him, vpon my friendship? Ancient Pistoll, I say you cannot vse these light words here.
Flu. If I finde him but three minutes, I will proue those words vpon his Pate, before they be foure, downe his throat, by this Leeke, I will: I pray you follow.

Exit King

Gower. Captaine Fluellen, you must come presently to the Mines, the Duke of Gloster would speake with you.
Flu. To the Mines? Tell you the Duke, it is not conuenient I come to the Mines: I tell you the Worke ith' day is lost, and there is an end. But I would fain know the Raskall againe, for to beate him soundly, according to the Lawes of Warres.
Gower. Will you follow?
Flu. Follow? I, I will follow him first, tell him so: and I will peradoe my Dignitie vpon his Coxcombe.

Will. I'st certaine, every man that dyes ill, the ill upon his owne head, the King is not to answer it.

Bates. I doe not desire he should answer for me, and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

King. I my selfe heard the King say he would not be ransom'd.

Will. I, 'tis true, therefore he shall stand for himselfe: and for mine owne part, I do not desire he should be ransom'd.

King. By Iue to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then: that's a perillous shot out of an olde Dores, a poore and a private displeasure can doe against a Monarch: you may as well goe about to turne the Sunne to yce with fanning in his face with a Peacocks feather. You'le never trust his word after, come, 'tis a foolish saying.

King. Your reproofe is something too round, I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a Quarrell betweene us, if you liue.

King. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thy good will?

King. Give me any Gage of thine, and I will weare it in my bonnet: Then if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my Quarrell.

Will. Heere's my Gloue: Give me another of thine.

King. There.

Will. This will I weare in my Cap: If ever thou come to me and say, after to morrow, This is my Gloue, by this Hand I will take thee a boxe on the eare.

King. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hanged.

King. Well, I will doe it, though I take thee in the Kings company.

Will. Keepe thy word: farewell.

Bates. I would faine see thee once more, my friends, wee shall be few Quarters slaine, if we thinke how to escape.

Exit Souldiers.

King. Let me see the Provisions may breake the French Campes to morrow, for they say bad beatens will beare Souldiers: but it is no matter, if I eate no Oates to eat Lords Cowes, and to morrow the King himselfe will be a Clipper.

Upon the King: let vs our Liues, our Soules,
Our Debts, our careful Wiues,
Our Children, and our Sinnes, lay on the King:
We must beare all.
O hard Condition, Twin-borne with Greatnesse,
Subiect to the breath of every fooles whose tongue
No more can feele, then voice the wrong.
What infinite heart-ease must Kings neglect,
That private men enioy?
And what have Kings, that Privates have not too,
Save Ceremonie, saue generall Ceremonie?
And what art thou, thou Idoll Ceremonie?
What are you not, that you doe not feare more
Then falling Creatures, wretched weary slaues,
With scarce-holdfast what are they Commings in?
O Ceremonie, shew me but thy worth.
What is thy Soule of Odouration?
Art thou aught else but Place, Degree, and Forme,
Creating awe and feare in other men?
Wherein thou art lesse happy, being feard,
Then they in fearing.
What drink'st thou oft, in stead of Homage sweet,
But poysond flatterie? O be sick great Greatnesse,
And bid thy Ceremonie, give thee cure.
Think'st thou the fiery Feuer will goe out
With Titles blowne from Adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Can'st thou, when thou command'st the beggers knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud Dreame,
That play'st so subtilly with a Kings repose:
I am a King that find thee, and I know,
'Tis not the Balme, the Scepter, and the Ball,
The Sword, the Mace, the Crowne Imperiall,
The enter-tissued Robe of Gold and Pearle,
The farre-heard Title on a Monarches Name,
Doth feast it selfe with this distressed Fooles feare:
Not all these ioyntly to the brow of Rest
Can beare the sweet and lowly sleepe
That the poore labourer doth with ease,
Nor can thou purchase with thy Gorgeous Ceremonies;
Not all these, wrapt in thy dull Mothy Pall,
Can creepe so soundly, as the carelesse Slaue
Who with a hungry fill'd, and vacant mind,
Great Labour and long day, in his Graue hath bound,
Neglectes to morrow. Neglectes all his Debts,
Forgets his Labours, Sorrowes, Sicknesse, Age,
Doth not indeed know all things are but Dreames,
Vntill his Eyes are open'd with his Feares.
Sleepe, gentle Sleepe, how hast thou left the Earth,
And all the Regions neere it, seeke the North
Whose populous Confines, and the dawne
Doth steepe in Lethe? Hast thou left the Sea,
And Billowes, whose rough Beds are rockt with Feare
With prouidable Boreas, and the Clouds
And left the Tempest, and the Waues,
Wrapping up Dayes worke in their Nurses wash sleepe,
Hast left to make a Watch-man of a King.
To Sleepe a Monarch, whose Eyes neuer peace,
Euen, but with gentle breathes of Warre,
What watch the King keepes, to maintaine the peace;
Whose Armes, the Peace, and Aduantages.

Enter Exp.

Exp. My Lord, your Nobles iealous of your absence,
Seeke through your Campe to find you.

King. Good old Knight, collect them all together
At my Tent: I'le be there ere long.

Exp. I'll doe it my Lord. Exit.

King. O God of Battailes, steele my Souldiers hearts,
Possesse them not with feare: Take from them now
The sense of reckoning of th'opposed numbers:
Plucke their hearts from them. Not to day, O Lord,
Not to day, think not vpon the fault
My Father made, in compassing the Crowne.
Richard I slew him not, but to my kinsmans death
Something did pleade for him: Though I requested new,
And vrg'd it twice by gaping Prayer,
Euen with my Teares, and sighes, and loud deepe groanes,
Nothing but Heauen, and satisfaction would serue it.
Therefore I powre these Teares, these Obsequies of Eyes,
And these inward-fetcht Groanes, Sighes, and Teares,
Vnto the Throne of Heauen, calling remission
For my Fathers Faults, and mine.
Two Chantries,
Where dayly Masse, and dayly Dirges shall be sung,
For Richards Soule. More will I doe:
Though all that I can doe, is nothing worth;
Since that my Penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glouc. My Liege.

King. My Brother Gloucesters voyce? I:
I know thy errand, I will go with thee:
The day, my friend, and all things stay for me.

Exeunt.

Enter the Dolphin, Orleance, Rambures, and Beaumont

Orleance. The Sunne doth gild our Armour vp, my Lords.

Dolph. Monte Cheual. My Horſe, Verlot Lacquay Ha,

Orleance Oh braue Spirit.

Dolph Vaux-es-rien [illegible]

Orleance Rien puis-ce-arme-rien

Dolph Ces, Ces Orleance Enter Conſtable.

Now my Lord C[illegible]

Conſt Hearke Lowe out Steeds, for preſent Seruice neighs.

Dolph. Mount them, and make incision in their Hides,

That their hot blood may ſpin in English eyes,

And doubt them with your excrementall outrage.

Ram What, will you haue them weep our Horſes blood?

How ſhall we then behold the natiue mirth of their Steeds?

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſſeng The Englishmen are enbattailed, you French Peeres.

Conſt. To Horſe you gallant Princes, ſtraight to Horſe.

Do but behold yon poore and ſtarued Band,

And your faire ſhewe ſhall ſuck away their Soules,

Leauing but the ſhells and huskes of men.

There is not worke enough for all our hands,

Scarce blood enough in all their ſickly Veines,

To giue each naked Curtleaxe a ſtayne

That our French Gallants ſhall to day draw out,

And ſheath for lack of ſport. Let vs but blow on them,

The vapour of our Valour will o're-turne them.

'Tis poſitiue againſt all exceptions Lords,

That our ſuperfluous Lackeys and our Peaſants,

Who in vnconuenient ſeruice for their Country

Haue but ſmall skill to handle their poore Peeces,

Which will the ſooner ſquat the naked Englishmen,

Inſtead of our braue Horſe-men, be our Foot.

Our Mercers Sonnes, and Clarkes not knowne by Name,

Shall ioyne themſelues in firſt Conflict together.

To ſmother vp the Englishmen with our Troopes,

And in vnpriſoning them, do driue vs home

With Rouſomes more than euer Warre did know.

Now for our Honours lay we by our Helmets,

And put the fatting Horſe-men to the Sword.

Then will we ſeat vs quietly in our Saddles,

And make our Steeds to tread ſtrong meaſures,

Path as a meaſure full of State and Pride,

Vpon the Dead and Dying bodies of the English.

Rambures. Now is it time to arme: Come, ſhall we about it?

Dolph. It is now full three of the Clocke already,

And Chineſe night comes faſt vpon the day.

Exeunt.

Enter Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham with all his Host: Salisbury, and Westmerland.

Glouc. Where is the King?

Bedf The King himſelfe is rode to view their Battaile.

West. Of fighting men they haue full threeſcore thouſand.

Exe. There's fiue to one, beſides they all are freſh.

Salisb Gods Arme ſtrike with vs, 'tis a fearefull odds.

God b'y you Princes all; Ile to my Charge:

If we no more meet, till we meet in Heauen,

Then ioyfully, my Noble Lord of Bedford,

My deare Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter,

And my kinde Kinſman, Warriors all adieu.

Bedf Farwell good Salisbury, & good luck go with thee

And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,

For thou art fram'd of the firme truth of valour.

Exe. Farwell kind Lord, fight valiantly to day.

Bedf He is as full of Valour as of Kindneſſe,

Princely in both.

Enter the King.

West O that we now had here

But one ten thouſand of thoſe men in England,

That do no worke to day.

King. What's he that wiſhes ſo?

My Couſin Westmerland? No, my faire Couſin:

If we are markt to dye, we are enow

To do our Country loſſe: and if to liue,

The fewer men, the greater ſhare of Honour.

Gods will, I pray thee wiſh not one man more.

By Ioue, I am not couetous for Gold,

Nor care I who doth feed vpon my coſt:

It yernes me not, if men my Garments weare,

Such outward things dwell not in my deſires.

But if it be a ſinne to couet Honor,

I am the moſt offending Soule aliue.

No faith, my Couze, wiſh not a man from England

Gods peace, I would not looſe ſo great an Honor,

As one man more me thinkes would ſhare from me,

For the beſt hope I haue. O do not wiſh one more:

Rather proclaime it (Westmerland) through my Hoaſt,

That he which hath no ſtomack to this fight,

Let him depart, his Paſport ſhall be made,

And Crownes for Conuoy put into his Purſe:

We would not dye in that mans company,

That feares his fellowſhip, to dye with vs

This day is call'd the Feaſt of Criſpian:

He that outliues this day, and comes ſafe home,

Will ſtand a tip-toe when this day is named,

And rouſe him at the Name of Criſpian.

He that ſhall ſee this day, and liue old age,

Will yeerely on the Vigill feaſt his neighbours,

And ſay, to morrow is Saint Criſpian.

Then will he ſtrip his ſleeue, and ſhew his skarres:

Old men forget, yet all ſhall be forgot:

But hee'le remember, with aduantages,

What feats he did that day. Then ſhall our Names,

Familiar in his mouth as houſehold words,

Harry

Harry the King, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester,
Be in their flowing Cups freshly remembred.
This story shall the good man teach his sonne:
And Crispine Crispian shall ne're goe by,
From this day to the ending of the World,
But we in it shall be remembred;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers:
For he to day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother: be he ne're so vile,
This day shall gentle his Condition.
And Gentlemen in England, now a bed,
Shall thinke themselues accurst they were not here:
And hold their Manhoods cheape, whiles any speakes,
That fought with vs vpon Saint Crispines day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My Soueraign Lord, bestow your selfe with speed:
The French are bravely in their battailes set,
And will with all expedience charge on vs.
King. All things are ready, if our minds be so.
West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now.
King. Thou do'st not wish more helpe from England, Couze?
West. God's will, my Liege, would you and I alone,
Without more helpe, could fight this Royall battaile.
King. Why now thou hast vnwisht fiue thousand men:
Which likes me better, then to wish vs one.
You know your places: God be with you all.

Tucket. Enter Montioy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee King Harry,
If for thy Ransome thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured Ouerthrow:
For certainly, thou art so neere the Gulfe,
Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy
The Constable desires thee, thou wilt mind
Thy followers of Repentance; that their Soules
May make a peacefull and a sweet retyre
From off these fields: where (wretches) their poore bodies
Must lye and fester.
King. Who hath sent thee now?
Mont. The Constable of France.
King. I pray thee beare my former Answer back:
Bid them atchieue me, and then sell my bones.
Good God, why should they mock poore fellowes thus?
The man that once did sell the Lyons skin
While the beast liu'd, was kill'd with hunting him.
A many of our bodyes shall no doubt
Find Natiue Graues: vpon the which, I trust
Shall witnesse liue in Brasse of this dayes worke.
And those that leaue their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buryed in your Dunghills,
They shall be fam'd: for there the Sun shall greet them,
And draw their honors reeking vp to Heauen.
Leauing their earthly parts to choake your Clyme,
The smell whereof shall breed a Plague in France.
Marke then abounding valour in our English.
That being dead, like to the bullets crasing,
Breake out into a second course of mischiefe,
Killing in relapse of Mortalitie.
Let me speake proudly: Tell the Constable,
We are but Warriors for the working day:
Our Gayneſſe and our Gilt are all besmyrcht
With raynie Marching in the painefull field.
There's not a piece of feather in our Hoast:
Good argument (I hope) we will not flye:
And time hath worne vs into slouenrie.
But by the Masse, our hearts are in the trim:
And my poore Souldiers tell me, yet ere Night,
They'le be in fresher Robes, or they will plack
The gay new Coats o're the French Souldiers heads,
And turne them out of seruice. If they doe this,
As if God please, they shall; my Ransome then
Will soone be leuyed.
Herauld, saue thou thy labour:
Come thou no more for Ransome, gentle Herauld,
They shall haue none, I sweare, but those my Ioynes:
Which if they haue, as I will leaue 'em them,
Shall yeeld them little, tell the Constable.
Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well:
Thou neuer shalt heare Herauld any more. Exit.
King. I feare thou wilt once more come againe for a Ransome.

Enter Yorke.

Yorke. My Lord, most humbly on my knee I begge
The leading of the Vaward.
King. Take it, braue Yorke.
Now Souldiers march away,
And how thou pleasest God, dispose the day. Exeunt

Alarum. Excursions.
Enter Pistoll, French Souldier, Boy.

Pist. Yeeld Curre.
French. Le pense que vous estes le Gentilhome de bon qualitee.
Pist. Qualitie calmie custure me. Art thou a Gentleman? What is thy Name? discusse.
French. O Seigneur Dieu.
Pist. O Signieur Dewe should be a Gentleman: perpend my words O Signieur Dewe, and marke: O Signieur Dewe, thou dyest on point of Fox, except O Signieur thou doe giue to me egregious Ransome.
French. O prennes misericordie aye pitee de moy.
Pist. Moy shall not serue, I will haue forte Moyes for I will fetch thy rym [illegible] thy Throat, in droppes of Crimson blood.
French. Est il impossible d'eschapper le force de ton bras.
Pist. Brasse Curre thou damned and luxurious Mountaine Goat, offer'st me Brasse?
French. O perdonne moy.
Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a Toone of Moyes? Come hither boy, aske me this slaue in French what is his Name.
Boy. Escoute comment estes vous appelle?
French. Monsieur le Fer.
Boy. He sayes his Name is M. Fer.
Pist. M. Fer: Ile fer him, and firke him, and ferret him: discusse the same in French vnto him.
Boy. I doe not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firke.
Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.
French. Que dis il Monsieur?
Boy. Il me commande a vous dire que vous faite vous prest, car ce soldat icy est disposee tout asture de couppes vostre gorge.
Pist. Owy, cuppele gorge permafoy pesant, vnlesse thou giue me Crownes, braue Crownes; or mangled shalt thou be by this my Sword.
French. O Ie vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu: me pardonner, Ie suis le Gentilhome de bon maison, garde ma vie, & Ie vous donneray deux cent escus.
Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He

Exe. He prayes you to send to the Campe, to know the Leamar
[illegible] and for his Ransome, proffers you two [illegible] Crownes.

[illegible] my God I doare, and I the Crowne es
[illegible]

[illegible] Monsieur the Herald?

Exe. I come from the French Herald, he prayes you to [illegible] to take some remorse upon them,
[illegible] to take some pitie upon their Nobles,
[illegible] to take some compassion upon their [illegible] against
[illegible]

Fift. I know his meaning.

[illegible] Ransomes, and tell him so. Heare him
[illegible] take mine Ease, that I may take [illegible] Ransome, and free my Souldiers.

Exe. So shall I tell him, my Liege.

Fift. I know it well enough. Tell him so then.

Exe. Shall I set downe your Answer so?

Fift. I pray thee good Herald doe so. Now are we [illegible] Lord, how the French is fallen downe before us,
[illegible] Nay, in which Army there is but one good man, that [illegible] may not be knocked downe by one man. My [illegible] with fasting, if the Lord doe not helpe them
[illegible] Lord, how I have beene
[illegible] Exit

Enter Constable, Orleance, Bourbon, Dolphin, and Rambures.

Con. O Diable

Orl. O [illegible]

Dol. [illegible] Mort de ma vie, all is Repeated, and [illegible] is come
[illegible] Alarum
Orleance [illegible]

Con. [illegible]

Dol. [illegible] Shames
[illegible]
[illegible] Shame, nothing but Shame,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Shame,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Orl. We are [illegible] field,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] to the throng,
Let life be short, else shame will be too long. Exit

Alarum. Enter the King and his Traine, with Prisoners.

[illegible] the day is yours, valiant Countrymen,
[illegible] the bloody House with hearts of Steele
[illegible] Yorke commends him to your Majesty.

King. Lives he good Yorke, then was the House
I saw him downe, thrice up againe, and fighting,
From Helmet to the spur, all blood he was
Exe. In which array (brave Soldier) doth he lye,
Larding the plaine: and by his bloody side,
(Yoake-fellow to his honour-owing-wounds)
The Noble Earle of Suffolke also lyes.
Suffolke first dyed, and Yorke all haggled over
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteeped,
And takes him by the Beard, kisses the gashes
That bloodily did yawne upon his face.
He cryes aloud; Tarry my Cosin Suffolke,
My soule shall thine keepe company to heaven:
Tarry (sweet soule) for mine, then flye a brest:
As in this glorious and well foughten field
We kept together in our Chivalrie.
Upon these words I came, and cheer'd him up,
He smil'd me in the face, raught me his hand,
And with a feeble gripe, sayes Dear my Lord,
Commend my service to my Soveraigne,
So did he turne, and over Suffolkes neck
He threw his wounded arme, and kist his lippes,
And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd
A Testament of Noble-ending love.
The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of Man in me,
And all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to teares.

King. I blame you not,
For hearing this, I must perforce compound
With mixt-eyes, as we do [illegible] Alarum
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Exit

Actus Quartus.

Enter Gower and Fluellen.

Flu. Kill the poyes and the luggage, 'Tis expressely against the Law of Armes, 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery (mark you now) as can be offered, in your Conscience now is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certaine, there's not a boy left alive, and the Cowardly Rascals that ranne from the battaile ha' done this slaughter: besides they have burned and carried away all that was in the Kings Tent, wherefore the King most worthily hath caus'd every soldier to cut his prisoners throat. O 'tis a gallant King.

Flu. I was prosent at the Monmouth Captaine Gower. What call you the Townes name where Alexander the pig was borne?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why I pray you is not pig great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the Great was borne in Macedon, his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon where Alexander is porne.

porne. I tell you Captaine, if you looke in the Maps of the Orld, I warrant you ſhall finde in the compariſons betweene Macedon & Monmouth, that the ſituations looke you, is both alike. There is a Riuer in Macedon & there is alſo moreouer a Riuer at Monmouth, it is call'd Wye at Monmouth but it is out of my prains, what is the name of the other Riuer: but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is Salmons in both. If you marke Alexanders life well, Harry of Monmouthes life is come after it indifferent well, for there is figures in all things. Alexander (God knowes, and you know) in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moodes, and his cholers, and in his displeaſures, and his indignations, and alſo being a little intoxicates in his prauer, and kild his friend Clytus.

Gow. Our King is not like him in that, he neuer kild any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done (marke you now) to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finiſhed. I ſpeake but in the figures and comparations of it: as Alexander kild his friend Clytus, being in his Ales and his Cuppes, ſo alſo Harry Monmouth being in his right wittes, and his good iudgements, turn'd away the fat Knight with the great belly doublet: he was full of ieſts, and gipes, and knaueries, and mockes, I haue forgot his name.

Gow. Sir Iohn Falſtaffe.

Flu. That is he: I'le tell you, there is good men porne at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his Maieſty.

Alarum. Enter King Harry and Burbon with prisoners. Flourish.

King. I was not angry ſince I came to France,
Vntill this inſtant. Take a Trumpet Herald,
Ride thou vnto the Horſemen on yond hill:
If they will fight with vs, bid them come downe,
Or voyde the field: they do offend our ſight.
If they do this, then will we come to them,
And make them ſkirre away, as ſwift as ſtones
Enforced from the old Aſſyrian ſlings:
Beſides, wee'l cut the throats of thoſe we haue,
And not a man of them that we ſhall take,
Shall taſte our mercy. Go and tell them ſo.

Enter Montioy.

Exe. Here comes the Herald of the French my Liege.
Glou. His eyes are humbler then they vs'd to be.
King. How now, what meanes this Herald? Knowſt thou not,
That I haue fin'd theſe bones of mine for ranſome?
Com'ſt thou againe for ranſome?
Her. No great King:
I come to thee for charitable Licenſe,
That we may wander ore this bloody field,
To booke our dead, and then to bury them,
To ſort our Nobles from our common men.
For many of our Princes (woe the while)
Lye drown'd and ſoak'd in mercenary blood:
So do our vulgar drench their peaſant limbes
In blood of Princes, and with wounded ſteeds
Fret fetlock deepe in gore, and with wilde rage
Yerke out their armed heeles at their dead maſters,
Killing their maſters twice. O giue vs leaue great King,
To view the field in ſafety, and diſpoſe
Of their dead bodies.

King. I tell thee truly Herald,
I know not if the day be ours or no,
For yet a many of your horſemen peere,
And gallop ore the field.
Her. The day is yours.
King. Prais'd be God, and not our ſtrength for it:
What is this Caſtle call'd that ſtands hard by.
Her. They call it Agincourt.
King. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,
Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.
Flu. Your Grandfather of famous memory (an't please your Maieſty) and your great Vncle Edward the Placke Prince of Wales, as I haue read in the Chronicles, fought a most prane battle here in France.
King. They did Fluellen.
Flu. Your Maieſty ſayes very true. If your Maieſties is remembred of it, the Welſh-men did good ſeruice in a Garden where Leekes did grow, wearing Leekes in their Monmouth caps, which your Maieſty know to this houre is an honourable badge of the ſeruice: And I do beleeue your Maieſty takes no ſcorne to weare the Leeke vpon S. Tayes day.
King. I weare it for a memorable honour:
For I am Welſh you know good Countryman.
Flu. All the water in Wye, cannot waſh your Maieſties Welſh bloud out of you, God keepe it, and preſerue it, as long as it pleaſes his Grace, and his Maieſty too.
King. Thankes good my Countryman.
Flu. By Ieſu, I am your Maieſties Countreyman, I care not who know it: I will confeſſe it to all the Orld, I need not to be aſham'd of your Maieſty, praiſed be God ſo long as your Maieſty is an honeſt man.
King. Good keepe me ſo.

Enter Williams.

Our Heralds go with him,
Bring me iuſt notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts. Call yond fellow hither.
Exe. Souldier, you muſt come to the King.
King. Souldier, why wear'ſt thou this of Gloſter by Cappe?
Will. And please your Maieſty, 'tis the gage of one that I ſhould fight with, if he be aliue.
King. An Engliſhman?
Will. An't please your Maieſty, a Raſcall that ſwag-ger'd with me laſt night: who if aliue, and euer dare to challenge this Glouc, I haue ſworne to take him a boxe a'th'eare: or if I can ſee my Glouc in his cappe which he ſwore as he was a Souldier he would weare (if aliue) I will ſtrike it out ſoundly.
King. What think'ſt thou Captaine Fluellen, is it fit this ſouldier keepe his oath?
Flu. He is a Crauen and a Vilaine elſe, and't please your Maieſty in my conſcience.
King. It may be that his enemy is a Gentleman of great ſort quite from the anſwer of his degree.
Flu. Though he be as good a Gentleman as the Deuill is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himſelfe, it is neceſſary (looke your Grace) that he keepe his vow and his oath: If he be periur'd (ſee you now) his reputation is as arrant a villaine and a Iacke ſawce, as euer his blacke ſhoo trod vpon Gods ground, and his earth, in my conſcience law.
King. Then keepe thy vow ſirrah, when thou meet'ſt the fellow.
Will. So, I will my Liege, as I liue.
King. Who ſeru'ſt thou vnder?

Will.

Will. Vnder Captaine Gower, my Liege.

Flu. Gower is a good Captaine, and is good knowledge and literature in the Warres.

King. Call him hither to me Souldier.

Will. I will my Liege. Exit

King. Here Fluellen, wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy Cappe: when Alanson and my selfe were downe together, I pluck'd this Gloue from his Helme: If any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alanson, and an enemy to our Person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, and thou dost me Loue.

Flu. Your Grandfather of famous memorie, an't please your Majestie, and your great Vncle Edward the Plack Prince of Wales, as well as I can remember, hath in the battels of Warres, and in your Countrey of France, done a great deale of Honourable seruice, in point of Warre, and of Hardinesse as well.

King. Know'st thou Gower?

Flu. He is my deare friend, and please you.

King. Pray thee go seeke him, and bring him to my Tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. Exit

King. My Lord of Warwick, and my Brother Gloster, Follow Fluellen closely at the heeles.
The Gloue which I haue giuen him for a fauour,
May haply purchase him a box o'th' eare,
It is the Soldiers Deuice that he weares
Vpon his Helme: Therefore I charge you,
That my Gloue coming for my sake, he may
Be well beaten. After the Battell bring him to our Tent,
And bring vpon the instant Captaine Fluellen
Where I am gone, and there residing tell him
I do desire to see him.

Warw. And shall doe it with a willing heart.

King. I doe obserue these Welchmen deepely,
And wisely will I make my people vse them,
For they haue got the voyce in Heauen, and here
Some to vnpeople their owne Countrey.
I loue and doe reuerence them for this,
Their humorous boldnesse, their resolute spirits,
Their eager hearts, their Country zeale, their Vertues
Shall be enrolled in my Chronicles,
And I will fasten Honour on their Names
In euery Warre wherein they shall be seene
Together with the Day and Feast of Crispine Crispian:
Come you with me, Vncle of Exeter. Exeunt

Enter Captaine Gower.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, Captaine.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. God's vilikins, where is the Duke, Captaine, I beseech you now, come apace to the King: there is more good toward you peradventure, than is in your knowledge to dreame of.

Will. Sir, know you this Gloue?

Flu. Know the Gloue? I know the Gloue is a Gloue.

Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblud an arrant Traytor as any is in the Vniuersall World, or in France, or in England.

Gower. How now Sir? you Villaine.

Will. Do you think Ile be forsworne?

Flu. Stand away, Captaine Gower, I will giue Treason his payment into plowes, I warrant you.

Will. I am no Traytor.

Flu. That's a lye in thy Throat. I charge you in his Maiesties Name apprehend him, he's a friend of the Duke Alansons.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester.

Warw. How now, how now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, heere is, praised be God for it, a most contagious Treason come to light, looke you, as you shall desire in a Summers day. Heere is his Maiesty.

Enter King and Exeter.

King. How now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Liege, heere is a Villaine, and a Traytor, that (looke your Grace) has strooke the Gloue which your Maiestie is take out of the Helmet of Alanson.

Will. My Liege, this was my Gloue, heere is the fellow of it: and he that I gaue it to in change promis'd to weare it in his Cappe: I promis'd to strike him if he did: I met this man with my Gloue in his Cappe, and I haue beene as good as my word.

Flu. Your Maiestie heare now, sauing your Maiesties Manhood, what an arrant rascally, beggerly, lowsie Knaue it is: I hope your Maiestie is peare me testimonie and witnesse, and will auouchment, that this is the Gloue of Alanson, that your Maiestie is giue me, in your Conference now.

King. Giue me thy Gloue Souldier:
Looke heere is the fellow of it.
'Twas I indeed thou promis'dst to strike,
And thou hast giuen me most bitter termes.

Flu. And please your Maiestie, let his Neck answere for it, if there is any Marshall Law in the World.

King. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my Lord, come from the heart: neuer came any from mine, that might offend your Maiestie.

King. It was our selfe thou did'st abuse.

Will. Your Maiestie came not like your selfe: you appear'd to me but as a common man: witnesse the Night, your Garments, your Lowlinesse: and what your Highnesse suffered vnder that shape, I beseech you take it for your owne fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence, therefore I beseech your Highnesse pardon me.

King. Here Vncle Exeter, fill this Gloue with Crownes,
And giue it to this fellow. Keepe it fellow,
And wear it for an Honour in thy Cappe
Till I doe challenge it. Giue him Crownes:
And Captaine you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his belly. Hold there is twelue-pence for you, and I pray you to serue God, and keepe you out of prawles, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissentions, and I warrant it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your Money.

Flu. It is with a good will: I can tell you it will serue you to mend your shoes: come wherefore should you be so pashfull, your shoes is not so good: 'tis a good silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter Herauld.

King. Now Herauld, are the dead numbred?

Herauld. Heere is the number of the slaughtred French.

King. What Prisoners of good sort are taken Vncle?

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleance, Nephew to the King
Iohn Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouchiqualt:
Of other Lords and Barons Knights and Squires,
Full fifteene hundred, besides common men.

King. This Note doth tell me of ten thousand French
That in the field lye slaine: of Princes in this number,
And Nobles bearing Banners, there lye dead
One hundred twenty six: added to these,
Of Knights, Esquires, and gallant Gentlemen,
Eight thousand and foure hundred: of the which,
Fiue hundred were but yesterday dubbed Knights.
So that in these ten thousand they haue lost,
There are but sixteene hundred Mercenaries:
The rest are Princes, Barons, Lords, Knights, Squires,

And

And Gentlemen of bloud and qualitie.
The Names of those their Nobles that lye dead:
Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France,
Iaques of Chatillon, Admirall of France,
The Master of the Crosse-bowes, Lord Rambures,
Great Master of France, the braue Sir Guichard Dolphin,
John Duke of Alanson Anthonie Duke of Brabant,
The Brother to the Duke of Burgundie,
And Edward Duke of Barr: of lustie Earles,
Grandpree and Roussie, Fauconbridge and Foyes,
Beaumont and Marle, Vandemont and Lestrale
Here was a Royall fellowship of death.
Where is the number of our English dead?
Edward the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke,
Sir Richard Ketly, Dauy Gam Esquire;
None else of name: and of all other men,
But fiue and twentie.
O God, thy Arme was here:
And not to vs, but to thy Arme alone,
Ascribe we all: when, without stratagem,
But in plaine shock, and euen play of Battaile,
Was euer known so great and little loste?
On one part and on th'other, take it God,
For it is none but thine.
Exet. 'Tis wonderfull.
King. Come, goe we in procession to the Village:
And be it death proclaymed through our Hoast,
To boast of this, or take that prayse from God,
Which is his only.
Flu. Is it not lawfull and please your Maiestie, to tell how many is kill'd?
King. Yes Captaine: but with this acknowledgement,
That God fought for vs.
Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did vs great good.
King. Doe we all holy Rites:
Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum,
The dead with charitie enclos'd in Clay:
And then to Callice, and to England then,
Where ne're from France arriu'd more happy men.
Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Chorus

Vouchsafe to those that haue not read the Story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as haue,
I humbly pray them to admit th'excuse
Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life,
Be here presented. Now we beare the King
Toward Callice: Graunt him there; there seene,
Heaue him away vpon your winged thoughts,
Athwart the Sea: Behold the English beech
Pales in the flood; with Men, Wiues, and Boyes,
Whose shouts & claps out-voyce the deep-mouth'd Sea,
Which like a mightie Whiffler 'fore the King,
Seemes to prepare his way: So let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath Thought, that euen now
You may imagine him vpon Black-Heath:
Where, that his Lords desire him, to haue borne
His bruised Helmet, and his bended Sword
Before him, through the Citie: he forbids it,
Being free from vainenesse, and selfe-glorious pride;
Giuing full Trophee, Signall and Ostent,
Quite from himselfe, to God. But now behold,
In the quick Forge and working-house of Thought,
How London doth powre out her Citizens,
The Maior and all his Brethren in best sort,
Like to the Senatours of th'antique Rome,
With the Plebeians swarming at their heeles,
Goe forth and fetch their Conquering Cæsar in.
As by a lower, but by loue-kindnesse,
Were now the Generall of our gracious Empresse,
As in good time he may, from Ire and comming,
Bringing Rebellion broached on his Sword;
How many would the peacefull Citie quit,
To welcome him? much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him,
As yet the lamentation of the French
Inuites the King of England's stay at home
The Emperour's comming in behalfe of France,
To order peace betweene them: and omit
All the occurrences, whatsoeuer chanc'd,
Till Harries backe-returne againe to France:
There must we bring him, and our selues must pul'd
The interim, by remembring you 'tha part
Time-beaten abridgement: and your eyes aduance,
After your thoughts, straight backe-againe to France.
Exit.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Nay, that's right: but why weare you your Leeke to day? S. Dauies day is past.
Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you asse my friend, Captaine Gower: the rascally, scauld, beggerly, lowsie, pragging Knaue Pistoll, which you and your selfe, and all the World, know to be no petter then a fellow, looke you now, of no merits: he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, looke you, and bid me eate my Leeke: it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him; but I will be so bold as to weare it in my Cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistoll

Gower. Why heere he comes, swelling like a Turky-cock.
Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his Turky-cocks. God pleese you auncient Pistoll: you scurule lowsie knaue, God pleese you.
Pist. Ha, art thou bedlam? doest thou thirst, base Troian, to haue me fold vp Parcas fatall Web? Hence; I am qualmish at the smell of Leeke.
Flu. I peseech you heartily, scurule lowsie Knaue, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eate, looke you, this Leeke; because, looke you, you doe not loue it, nor your affections, and your appetites and your digestions doo's not agree with it, I would desire you [illegible]
Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his Goats
Flu. There is one Goat for you. Strikes him. Will you be so good, scauld Knaue, as eate it?
Pist. Base Troian, thou shalt dye.
Flu. You say very true, scauld Knaue, when Gods will is: I will desire you to liue in the meane time, and eate your Victuals: come, there is sawce for it. You call'd me yesterday Mountaine-Squier, but I will make our roadie ware of low degree. I pray you tall roo, if you can mocke a Leeke you can eate a Leeke

Gow. Enough Captaine, you have admonished him.

Flu. I say I will make him eate some part of my Leeke, or I will peate his pate foure dayes: pray you, it is good for your greene wounds, and your ploodie Coxe-comoe.

Pist. Must I?

Flu. Yes certainly, and out of question too, and ambodden too.

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt dye.

Flu. Then I pray you eate a Leeke: for it is also good for a greene wound: and your ploodie Coxe-comoe.

Pist. Must I eate all three?

Flu. Yes certainly, and sauce them with fidelity.

Pist. Base Phrygian, I shall not eate but dye by thy hand.

Flu. Eate I pray you, will you have some more sauce to your Leeke? there is not enough Leeke to weare you

Pist. Quiet thy cudgell, thou dost see I eate.

Flu. Much good may it doe you, I desire you to eate. Nay, pray you throw none away, the skinne is good for your broken Coxe-comoe; when you take occasions to see Leekes hereafter, I pray you mocke at 'em, that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, Leekes is good: hold you, there is a groat to heale your pate.

Pist. Me a groat?

Flu. Yes verily, and more: for if I have another Leeke in my pocket, which you have strooke, I will make you eate it.

Pist. I eate not Gifts by Villaines.

Flu. Well I have left you verie honestly: I was of Pistols and Nims worst Corporall by my Gods will, I was bid by them to take you, but I will bee so bold as to tell you I know the disposition of that Lecherous Theefe, and therefore looke you keepe his counsell: if you heare him once more call me Welchman, or Leeke, I will assure you a broken pate to buy you a Salve: doe you meddle or make, make you your selfe, bid you farewell. Exit

Pist. Doth fortune play the huswife with me now?
News have I that my Nell is dead i'th Spittle of a malady of France, and there my rendezvous is quite cut off. Old I do wax, and from my weary limbes honour is cudgelled. Well, bawd will I turne, and use my sword and pistoll no more. And good will I beare, and use my skill in Cut-purse: and I am determined to forsake the warres. Never more will I own Mars for my Captaine, but tread the path of a quiet life, and interchange my profits with each honest Trader in the world. Exit

Enter Alanson, Bedford, Exeter, Warwicke, Westmerland, Gower, Fluellen, Burgoyne, and other Lords.

King. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met,
Unto our Brother France, and to our Sister
Health and faire time of day: Joy and good wishes
To our most faire and Princely Cousin Katherine
And as a branch and member of this Royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contriv'd,
We do salute you Duke of Burgoyne,
And Princes French and Peeres, health to you all.

Fra. Right joyous are we to behold your face,
Most worthy brother England, fairely met,
So are you Princes English, every one.

Qu. So happy be the issue brother Ireland
Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes,
Your eyes which hitherto have borne
In them against the French that met them in their bent,
The fatall balls of murthering Basiliskes:
The venome of such Lookes we fairely hope
Have lost their quality, and that this day
Shall change all griefes and quarrels into love.

Eng. To every Amen to that, thus we appeare.

Qu. You English Princes all, I doe salute you.

Burg. My duetie to you both, on equall love,
Great Kings of France and England, that I have labour'd
With all my wits, my paines, and strong endeavors,
To bring your most Imperiall Majesties
Unto this Barre, and Royall enterview;
Your Majesties now children too, my Liege,
Since then my Office hath so farre prevayl'd,
That face to face, and Royall eye to eye,
You have congreeted: let it not disgrace me,
If I demand, before this Royall view,
What rub or what impediment there is,
Why that the naked, poore, and mangled Peace,
Deare Nurse of Arts, Plentyes and joyfull Births,
Should not in this best Garden of the World,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely Visage?
Alas, she hath from France too long been chas'd,
And all her Husbandry doth lye on heapes,
Corrupting in it owne fertilitie.
Her Vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned, dyes: her Hedges even-pleach'd,
Like Prisoners wildly overgrowne with hayre,
Put forth disorder'd twigs: her fallow Leas,
The Darnell, Hemlock, and rancke Fumitary,
Doth root upon, while that the Coulter rusts,
That should deracinate such Savagery:
The even Meade, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled Cowslip, Burnet, and green Clover,
Wanting the Scythe, all uncorrected, rancke
Conceives by idlenesse, and nothing teemes,
But hateful Docks, rough Thistles, Kexes, Burres,
Losing both beauty and utilitie.
And all our Vineyards, Fallowes, Meades, and Hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildnesse.
Even so our Houses, and our selves, and Children,
Have lost, or doe not learne, for want of time,
The Sciences that should become our Country,
But grow like Savages, as Soone as wild,
That nothing doe, but meditate on blood,
To Swearing, and sterne Lookes, diffus'd Attyre,
And every thing that seemes unnaturall.
Which to reduce into our former favour,
You are assembled: and my speech entreats,
That I may know the let, why gentle Peace
Should not expell these inconveniences,
And blesse us with her former qualities.

Eng. If Duke of Burgonie, you would the Peace,
Whose want gives growth to th'imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that Peace
With full accord to all our ofte demands,
Whose Tenures and particular effects
You have enschedul'd briefely in your hands.

Burg. The King hath heard them: to the which, as yet
There is no Answer made.

Eng. Well then the Peace which you before so urg'd,
Lyes in his Answer.

France. I haue but with a curſelarie eye
O're-glanc't the Articles: Pleaſeth your Grace
To appoint ſome of your Councell preſently
To ſit with vs once more, with better heed
To re-ſurvey them; we will ſuddenly
Paſſe our accept and peremptorie Anſwer

England. Brother we ſhall. Goe Vncle Exeter,
And Brother Clarence and you Brother Gloucester,
Warwick and Huntington, goe with the King,
And take with you free power to ratifie,
Augment, or alter as your Wiſdomes beſt
Shall ſee aduantageable for our Dignitie,
Any thing in or out of our Demands,
And we'le conſigne thereto. Will you faire Siſter,
Goe with the Princes or ſtay here with vs?

Qu. Our gracious Brother, I will goe with them
Haply a Womans Voyce may do ſome good,
When Articles too nicely vrg'd, be ſtood on.

England. Yet leaue our Couſin Katherine here with vs,
She is our capitall Demand compriſ'd
Within the fore-rank of our Articles

Qu. She hath good leaue. Exeunt omnes

Manet King and Katherine

King. Faire Katherine, and moſt faire,
Will you vouchſafe to teach a Souldier tearmes,
Such as will enter at a Ladyes eare,
And plead his Loue-ſuit to her gentle heart.

Kath. Your Maieſtie ſhall mock at me, I cannot ſpeake your Engliſh.

King. O faire Katherine, if you will loue me ſoundly with your French heart, I will be glad to heare you confeſſe it brokenly with your Engliſh Tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonne moy, I cannot tell vat is like me.

King. An Angel is like you Kate, and you are like an Angel.

Kath. Que dit il que Ie ſuis ſemblable a les Anges?

Lady. Ouy vrayment, ſauf voſtre Grace, ainſi dit il.

King. I ſaid ſo, deare Katherine, and I muſt not bluſh to affirme it.

Kath. O bon Dieu, les langues des hommes ſont pleins de tromperies.

King. What ſayes ſhe, faire one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Lady. Ouy, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits, dat is de Princeſſe.

King. The Princeſſe is the better Engliſh-woman. Yfaith Kate, my wooing is fit for thy vnderſtanding: I am glad thou canſt ſpeake no better Engliſh, for if thou could'ſt, thou would'ſt finde me ſuch a plaine King, that thou would'ſt thinke, I had ſold my Farme to buy my Crowne. I know no wayes to mince it in loue, but directly to ſay, I loue you, then if you vrge me further, then to ſay, Doe you in faith? I weare out my ſuit. Giue me your anſwer, y'faith doe, and ſo clap hands and a bargaine; how ſay you, Lady?

Kath. Sauf voſtre honneur, me vnderſtand well.

King. Marry, if you would put me to Verſes, or to Dance for your ſake, Kate, why you vndid me: for the one I haue neither words nor meaſure; and for the other, I haue no ſtrength in meaſure, yet a reaſonable meaſure in ſtrength. If I could win a Lady at Leape-frogge, or by vawting into my Saddle, with my Armour on my backe, vnder the correction of bragging be it ſpoken, I ſhould quickly leape into a Wife. Or if I might buffet for my Loue, or bound my Horſe for her fauours, I could lay on like a Bateman and ſit like a iack an Apes, neuer off. But before God Kate, I cannot looke greenely, nor gaſpe out my eloquence, nor I haue no cunning in proteſtation; only downe-right Oathes, which I neuer vſe till vrg'd, nor neuer breake for vrging. If thou canſt loue a fellow of this temper, Kate, whoſe face is not worth Sunne-burning, that neuer looks in his Glaſſe, for loue of any thing he ſees there? Let thine eye be thy Cooke. I ſpeake to thee plaine Soldier. If thou canſt loue me for this, take me if not, to ſay to thee that I ſhall dye, is true, but for thy loue, by the Lord, No: yet I loue thee too. And while thou liu'ſt, deare Kate, take a fellow of plaine and vncoyned Conſtancie, for he perforce muſt do thee right, becauſe he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for theſe fellowes of infinite tongue, that can rime themſelues into Ladies fauours, they do alwayes reaſon themſelues out againe. What? a Speaker is but a Prater; a Rime is but a Ballad, a good Leg will fall, a ſtraight Backe will ſtoope, a Blacke beard will turne white, a curl'd Pate will grow bald, a faire Face will wither, a full Eye will waxe hollow, but a good Heart Kate, is the Sunne and the Moone, or rather the Sunne, and not the Moone; for it ſhines bright, and neuer changes, but keepes his courſe truly. If thou would haue ſuch a one, take me: and take me, take a Soldier: take a Soldier; take a King. And what ſay'ſt thou then to my Loue? ſpeake my faire, and fairely, I pray thee.

Kate. Is it poſſible dat I ſould loue de enemie of France?

King. No, it is not poſſible you ſhould loue the Enemie of France, Kate, but in louing me you ſhould loue the Friend of France: for I loue France ſo well, that I will not part with a Village of it; I will haue it all mine: and Kate when France is mine, and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat dat.

King. No Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am ſure will hang vpon my tongue like a new-married Wife about her Husbands Neck, hardly to be ſhooke off. Ie quand ſur le poſſeſſion de France, & quand vous eſtes poſſeſſion de moy. Let me ſee what then? Saint Denis be my ſpeed! Donc ſera enfin ma France, & vous eſtes mienne. It is as eaſie as lying: hauing but the grace, Kate, to conſider, that lying is but a baſe vice, and that a Souldier is better accommodated than with a French vice. But Kate doſt thou vnderſtand thus much Engliſh? Canſt thou loue me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

King. Can any of your Neighbours tell, Kate? Ile aſke them. Come, I know thou loueſt me: and at night, when you come into your Cloſet, you'le queſtion this Gentlewoman vpon me, and I know Kate, you will to her diſpraiſe, thoſe parts in me, that you loue with your heart: but good Kate, mocke me mercifully, the rather gentle Princeſſe, becauſe I loue thee cruelly. If euer thou beeſt mine, Kate, as I haue a ſaucy Fellow, with me, this me thinkes is the matter. I get thee with ſcambling, and thou muſt therefore needes proue a good Souldier-breeder. Shall not thou and I, betweene Saint Denis and Saint George, compound a Boy, halfe French, halfe Engliſh, that, hauing a cleere Conſcience, ſayling vpon a faire Tide by the Leaue of Starres, my faire louely Lord, my Lord.

Kate [illegible]

King. [illegible] Courtesy, and ſweeting me a Kiſſe (therefore partly Policie, and partly Loue) you haue Witch-craft in your Lippes Kate: there is more eloquence in a Sugar touch of them, then in the Tongues of the French Counſell: and they ſhould onerpower the Harry of England, were a Generall Petition of Monſters. Heere comes your Father.

Enter the French Power, and the Engliſh Lords

Burg. God ſaue your Maieſtie, my Royall Couſin, teach you our Princeſſe Engliſh?

King. I would haue her learne my faire Couſin, how perfectly I loue her, and that is good Engliſh.

Burg. Is ſhe not apt?

King. Our Tongue is rough, Coze: and my Condition is not ſmooth: ſo that hauing neyther the Voyce nor the Heart of Flattery about me, I cannot ſo conieure vp the Spirit of Loue in her, that he will appeare in his true forme.

Burg. Pardon the frankneſſe of my Mirth, if I anſwer you for that. If you would conſider, or rather (which I had ſaid) perchance that I am growne to points with Loue: that the very Naked-neſſe, and Vnadorned Maieſtie of it, is the moſt pertinent to it: that Perſpectiues (which you well know) are painted vnperfect Shapes, which no ſooner looke right, but with the Full and Natural Obiect they are diſtorted, euen ſo or much more the Glaſſe of Mans Face, vpon the firſt view, and at the firſt ſight, with Ladies, falſifies for the Time, by the falſe Receiuing of it.

King. Yet they do wincke, and vnder-ſee, and looke vpon one another.

Burg. Your Highneſſe ſhould exchange Oathes with her, my Lord: When maids know the Voyces.

King. Do not call them Lords, faire Lady, your Countrey-men.

Burg. Then my Dearest, your Countrey-men.

King. Perchance they haue corrupted you.

Burg. I am ſworne my Loue, and his Pure Soule doth know how I loue him: and maugre all the Deuils that ſtand in the way of my Faith, with my Heart to the Skies, I will ſuddenly ſweare my Loue to my Deere.

King. Nay, my Deere, your Highneſſe is come from thence, and he needs not ſweare, that he doth not truſt you vpon your Oath. Your Certificate muſt be the Teares and Eyes of the Ladies: in truth I am glad they can flow: good Lord, how ſweet a thing it is to wiue: if my Rhetoricke could do any thing, I would perſuade them to it preſently.

Burg. Doe your Maieſtie, and we will coy it no longer.

King. Doe it Princeſſe, by your Leaue.

Burg. Hard-hearted Men, that can perſuade their Eyes againſt their Hearts, their Hearts againſt their Tongues (bloody Warre) their Tongues againſt their Vowes: I ſee your Reaſons, but they are not ſeene: for I will not ſay, I will not ſee the Reaſons you haue to perſuade me, becauſe I will not ſee you haue any. Nor will I ſay, any thing I affect, ſhall reaſonably be denyed me: but ſpeake Kate, ſpeake my Lord, for England: do any thing, figure any thing, promiſe any thing, ſo it be preſented to my Tongue, as the Beſt Gift of a Good Angell.

King. Now by this white Hand, by this Rose, by this Kiſſe, by my Crowne, by my Ioy, by my Hope, and by my Heart, and by that that I feare, and by that that I loue, and by any thing that I will, and by no thing that I will not, I will neuer haue you vnleſſe you loue me: for the firſt houre that I did ſee you, faire Kate, I had a Miſtie Apprehenſion in my Eye, my Head, my Heart: but the firſt houre that I did ſee you faire, and vnderſtand you braue and Vertuous, I can not ſee, vnderſtand, loue, or feele any thing: I am glad that you haue Voyces, for now the Wonder is, leſt Beauty that muſt loſe it ſelfe, and Intellect that muſt looſe his Merit, ſhould be beleeued, where both determine confidences. Is not this well ſaid, my Deere? Will you haue me? Anſwer me directly.

Burg. For mine owne part, it breakes downe all the Fences in my Power, but the Conſent of your Father.

King. Doe you anſwer me?

Burg. Let your Father anſwer you, and a little Aſſiſtance.

King. Then I will ſweare I am yours, and you are mine, and I am glad of it, and I will eate no more Cakes and Carowayes, but goe to Dinner with you, Kate, and faſt for an Appetite.

Burg. Now fye vpon my falſe Englyſh, that euer it ſhould proue ſo much to my Loue, as to ſuſpect me in my Proteſtation: Let me intreat you to ſpeake the Truth of it.

King. It ſhall pleaſe me Kate to ſay, I loue you: with my Soule.

Burg. Nay, good my Lord, ſpeake ſo mine Eare is full of you already: I cannot anſwer that Logically, that is, with Scholler-like Reaſons. Doe you loue me, Kate?

Burg. Nay, my Lord, that I muſt not ſay, where I will not that my Fact ſhall falſifie my Word: for I loue thee by Proportion, and by Proportion I loue thee, till there remaine a Portion in me beyond Proportion: and in reaſon take beſt Order, and beſt Meaſure, I can only anſwer my Deere, your good Will, and Princeſſe Kate, if Gentlemen can compaſſe you, I know your Wiſedome, in forme and order will informe you to the beſt.

King. Is it not to your Diſgrace, and tell you, you Dye in the Aire, this Leſſon Kate, ſitting on a Princeſſes Lappe: yet they muſt do't, leſt they be Fooles.

Burg. Giue your Anſwer, 'tis for me to do, and for you to let good, it ſhall be to you, as it appeares to our Fortune, and to the Iudgement of your Father.

King. Come, your Anſwer in Broken Muſicke: for thy Voyce is Muſicke, and thy Englyſh broken: therefore Queene of all, Kate, breake Meaſure with vs, and accord no Meaſure in the Meaſure of Meaſure.

Burg. Is not this your Clowne, Kate?

King. Now fye vpon your ſtayed Dainty Nice, your Dancing Independent, (as if we gaue you Meaſure to meaſure our Meaſure) do not call vs Clownes, for you make vs Rude, euen as Apes, with your Sweet Obſeruation: Anſwer Clowniſhly.

Burg. In Loue I hope the Sinne is not ſo great, but that I may compendiouſly dance in it. Will you haue me, or no?

King. One word, Kate: Sweet Kate, one word more: I haue ſeene a Lady wrong'd.

Burg. Then well, one more Dance first: The firſt Article, that I will make my Lord, is, that you ſhall learne no more to loue Mathematically: after you haue poſſeſſed me with your Perſon, make me Priuy to your Thoughts: I charge you, that you ſhall loue me (vpon your Loue) moſt groſſely: for your Reaſon, by my troth, will not be worth a Sutter, when it comes to the Ounce: Then, if you can woe me in three Houres, I will be your Wife, if not, not: for the Beſt Aſſurance that I ſhall giue you of a Maid, is the firſt Proofe of a Wife.

King. Yeelde, yeelde, the Caſtle, or we will win it by Aſſault.

Burg. Doe not vrge your Aſſault: for my Breſt, like a Cittie, would receiue you, but with Reſiſtance: and that ſhall make you think, you haue but gotten a Breſt of Honour.

King. Come, your Reaſons, Kate.

Burg. Are you ſo Vnreaſonable, as in the Middeſt of Loue, to require Reaſons of Loue?

King. Much more, to be ſo Vnreaſonable, as to woe in other Language then your owne.

Burg. Your Reaſons at dinner, my Lord.

King. Your Anſwer in the Morning, my Lord: Kate, it ſhall goe hard, but I will better the Inſtruction: Now Kate, I am a Father to many Children, but neuer woo'd Wife: Now all the Princes and Kings of Chriſtendome, looke on this Hand, and ſweare that I am King of Graſſe: Behold what a ſilken Skin, what a Hand of Butter? Is not a Lip of Lady ſuger'd? Is not a Cheeke of Beauty, and a Hand of Snow, Colour, and Temperance, in Eſtate to call it Daughter? Do but obſerue the Tenderneſſe of my Limbes, the Reuenue whereof ſhall be your Dower, till you are Indow'd with your Deſerts: for euery Halfe part of a Quarter, till the Reſidue of the Whole be Adorned with my Seuerall Kingdomes. Your Compliment is to haue a Husband: No Kate, I will not Gage my Kingdome againſt your Cockle, till I haue aſſured of your Courage: for your Faire Endowments, my Heart is ſworne too, and nothing can ſeparate it from you, but the Will of God: Will you haue me? Put off your Maiden Bluſhes, auouch the Thoughts of your Heart with the Lookes of an Empreſſe, take me by the Hand, and ſay, Harry of England, I am thine: which Word thou ſhalt not part ſo ſlightly, but the Harry of England ſhall replye againe, Kate of France, I am thine: it is as eaſie for me, Kate, to conquer the Kingdome, as to ſpeake ſo much more French: I ſhall neuer proue ſo braue to a Fayre Lady, that I grow not more Gentle to her: Firſt, for your ſake, in Marrying your Yongeſt Siſter, Violenta: for my Friends, they ſhall be my Friends, and for my Foes, they ſhall be drawne with your Teeth into my Seruice: Shall not you and I, when Heauen haue made vs Out of the Fayreſt, and the Beſt compounded Clay that was yet Mingled, get a Boy for France, and a Girle for England? How anſwer you, la plus belle Katherine du Monde, mon tres chere & diuine Deeſſe?

Burg. Your Maieſtie ha's fayre Learning in Loue, Mounſeur English: If I could anſwer you how I would, I would anſwer you in the Tongue which I neuer learn'd, and therefore let me not diſcouer the Way how I would, for feare I ſhould be taxed with the Vice of my Country.

King. Doe you like me, Kate?

Burg. Pardonnez moy, I cannot tell wat is like me.

King. An if you cannot, ſpeake to your Cozen, and tell her: for I haue neyther Words nor Meaſure, and for Speech, for Proſe, I cannot: but directly to ſay, I loue you: then if you vrge me further than to ſay, Do you in Faith? I wear out my Suit: Giue me your Anſwer, i'faith do: and ſo Clappe hands and a Bargaine: How ſay you, Lady?

Burg. Sauf voſtre Honneur, me vnderſtand well.

King. Marry if you would put me to Verſes, or to Dance for your ſake, Kate, why you vndid me: for the one, I haue neyther Words nor Meaſure: and for the other, I am not a Iot more Light, then a Plaine Bargaine Man is: Therefore, if I be not more Light for your Loue, I ſhall become it more Heauy: Vow that I am not a Iacke, if I would not haue you, and I will eate no Cake and Carraway for it.

Burg. I cannot anſwer you, but in the Language that I am Vowed to: Your Maieſtie ha's my Lord, gaine, and ſhall not be my Maſter: for Maſters feele their Paſſage: but I am glad, though you do not woe me, yet you woe my Maiſter: for now you fall into the Fire: Yet to the Purpoſe of Woing me: They that ſtand high, haue many Blaſts to ſhake them: and if they fall, they daſh themſelues to Pieces.

French Lord. Yes my Lord, you ſee them perſpectiuely the Cities turned into a Maid: for they are all girded with Maiden Walls, that War hath neuer ruin'd.

England. Shall Kate be my Wife?

France. So please you.

England. I am content, ſo the Maiden Cities you talke of, may wait on her: ſo the Maid that ſtood in the way for my Wiſh, ſhall ſhow me the way to my Will.

France. We haue conſented to all termes of reaſon.

England. Is't ſo, my Lords of England?

Weſt. The King hath graunted euery Article:
His Daughter firſt, and then ſucceſſiue all,
Accordingly to their ſeuerall preheminences.

Exet. Only

Exet. Onely he hath not yet subscribed this:
Where your Maiestie demands, That the King of France
hauing any occasion to write for matter of Grauntt, shall name your Highnesse in this forme, and with this addi-
on, in French *Nostre tres cher filz Henry Roy d'Angleterre
Heretere de France*: and thus in Latine, Præclarissimus filius noster Henricus Rex Angliæ & Hæres Franciæ.

France. Nor this I haue not Brother so denyed,
But your request shall make me let it passe.

King. I pray you then, in loue and deare allyance,
Let that one Article rancke with the rest,
And thereupon giue me your Daughter.

France. Take her faire Sonne and vex not me and my poore
Realme, nor the wretched Maid her selfe.
Yet take her and English, with all thy faults I loue,
And say to her she is a faire and louely French.

Exet. As faire and as good a Kneele as euer Eue did sit downe to, take her faire Prince.

King. Now welcome Kate: and bear me witnesse all,
That here I kisse her as my Souereigne Queene.

Queene. God the best maker of all Marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your Realmes in one:
As Man and Wife being two are one in loue:
So be there twixt your Kingdomes such a Spousall,
That neuer may Ire, nor Fell sealousie,
Which troubles oft the Bed of blessed Marriage,
Thrust in betweene the Paction of these Kingdomes,
To make diuorce of their incorporate League:
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receiue each other. God speake this Amen.

All. Amen.

King. Prepare we for our Marriage: on which day,
My Lord of Burgundie we'le take your Oath,
And all the Peeres, for suretie of our Leagues.
Then shall I sweare to Kate, and you to me,
And may our Oathes well kept and prosperous be.

Exeunt. Flourish.

Enter Chorus.

Thus farre with rough and all vnable Pen,
Our bending Author hath pursued the Story,
In little roome confining mightie men,
Mangling by Starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but in that small most greatly liued
This Starre of England: Fortune made his Sword,
By which the World's best Garden he achieued,
And of it left his Sonne Imperiall Lord.
Henry the Sixt in infant Bands crown'd King
Of both the Realmes, both too, shall quake and quake,
As did the Wretched Sire their Parent before,
Now these his Prayses are his Subiects Feare,
And on his Face Warre, Famine, and Effusion lye,
Whose State so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and made his England bleed:
Which oft our Stage hath shewn; and for their sake,
In your faire minds let this acceptance take.

FINIS.

The first Part of Henry the Sixt.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Dead March.

Enter the Funerall of King Henry the Fifth, attended on by the Duke of Bedford Regent of France, the Duke of Gloucester Protector, the Duke of Exeter, the Earle of Warwicke, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Duke of Somerset.

Bed.

Hung be the Heavens with black, yield day to Night,
Comets importing change of Times and States
Brandish your crystall Tresses in the Sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting Stars
That have consented vnto Henries death!
King Henry the Fift, too famous to liue long,
England ne're lost a King of so much worth.
Glost. England ne're had a King vntill his time.
Vertue he had, deseruing to command,
His brandish'd Sword did blinde men with his beames,
His Armes spred wider than a Dragons Wings,
His sparkling Eyes, repleat with wrathfull fire,
More dazzled and drove backe his Enemies,
Than mid-day Sunne fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? His deeds exceed all Speech
He ne're lift vp his Hand, but conquered.
Exe. We mourne in black: why mourn we not in blood?
Henry is dead and never shall reuiue.
Vpon a Wooden Coffin we attend,
And Death's dishonourable Victory,
We with our stately presence glorifie,
Like Captiues bound to a triumphant Carre.
What? shall we curse the Planets of Mishap,
That plotted thus our Glories ouerthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French,
Conjurers and Sorcerers, that afraid of him,
By Magick Verses haue contriu'd his end.
Winch. He was a King blest of the King of Kings.
Vnto the French the dreadfull Iudgement-Day
So dreadfull will not be, as was his sight.
The Battailes of the Lord of Hosts he fought
The Church's Prayers made him so prosperous.
Glost. The Church! where is it?
Had not Churchmen prayd,
His thread of life had not so soone decayd.
None doe you like but an effeminate Prince,
Whom like a Schoolboy you may ouer-awe.
Winch. Gloster, whatere we like, thou art Protector,
And lookest to command the Prince and Realme.
Thy Wife is proud, she holdeth thee in awe,
More than God or Religious Churchmen may.
Glost. Name not Religion, for thou lou'st the Flesh,
And ne're throughout the yeere to Church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.
Bed. Cease, cease these iarres & rest your minds in peace:
Let's to the Altar: Heralds wayt on vs,
Instead of Gold, we'll offer vp our Armes,
Since Armes auayle not, now that Henry's dead,
Posterity await for wretched yeeres,
When at their Mothers moyst eyes, Babes shall suck,
Our Ile made a Nurse of salt Teares,
And none but Women left to wayle the dead.
Henry the Fift, thy Ghost I inuocate:
Prosper this Realme, keepe it from Ciuill Broyles,
Combat with adverse Planets in the Heauens;
A farre more glorious Starre thy Soule will make,
Than Iulius Cæsar, or bright—

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Honourable Lords, ready am I to your will:
Sad tydings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guyenne, Champaigne, Rheimes, Orleance,
Paris, Guysors, Poictiers are all quite lost.
Bed. What say'st thou man, before dead Henry's Corse?
Speake softly, or the loud'st of these great Townes
Will hearing it, shrill out Iesu mercy,
Is Henry dead, and Paris lost, his Royall Crowne yeelded vp?
If Henry were recalled to life againe,
These newes would cause him once more yeeld the Ghost.
Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was vs'd?
Mess. No treachery, but want of Men and Money.
Amongst the Souldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintaine seuerall Factions,
And whilst a Field should be dispatcht and fought,
You are disputing of your Generals.
One would haue ling'ring Warres, with little cost;
Another would flye swift, but wanteth Wings.
A third thinkes, without expence at all,
By guilefull faire words, Peace may be obtayn'd.
Awake, awake, English Nobility,
Let not sloth dim your Honors, new begot;
Cropt are the Flower-de-Luces in your Armes
Of England's Coat, one halfe is cut away.
Exe. Were our Teares wanting to this Funerall,
These Tidings would call forth their flowing Tides.
Bed. Me they concerne, Regent am I of France.
Giue me my steeled Coat, Ile fight for France.
Away with these disgracefull wayling Robes;
Wounds will I giue the French, in stead of Eyes,
To weepe their intermissiue Miseries.

Enter

Enter to them another Messenger

Mess. Lords view these Letters, full of bad mischance
France is revolted from the English quite,
Except some petty Townes of no import.
The Dolphin Charles is crowned King in Rheimes;
The Bastard of Orleance with him is joyn'd
Reignold, Duke of Anjou, doth take his part,
The Duke of Alanson flyeth to his side. Exit.

Exe. The Dolphin crowned King! all fly to him!
O whether are we falne from this reproach?

Glost. We will not flye, but to our enemies throats.
Bedford, if thou be slack, I'le fight it out.

Exe. Gloster, why doubt'st thou of my forwardnesse?
An Army have I mustred in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is overrun.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. My gracious Lords, to add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew King Henries hearse,
I must inforce the sad-tongu'd Crier,
Pale Death to speak of that which I relate.

Reg. What say'st thou man, before dread Pendants spread?

Mes. Then thus it doth import.
The Regent Lord Talbot was reposed,
The sturdy Earle of Arundell advanc'd,
Even to the Center of the French Dominions,
When scarce 6000 valiant Souldiers,
By drad and two more thousand of the French
Were round incompassed, and set upon.
No succour had the noble Duke Alanson,
He wanted Pikes to set before his Archers,
Instead whereof, sharpe Stakes pitcht in the ground
They pitcht in the ground confusedly,
To keepe the Horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three houres the fight continued
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his Sword and Lance.
Hundreds he sent to Hell, and none durst stand him
Here, there and every where enraged he slew
The French exclaym'd, the Devill was in Armes,
All the whole Army stood agaz'd on him.
His Souldiers spying his undaunted Spirit,
A Talbot, a Talbot cry'd out amaine,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the Conquest fully been seal'd up,
If Sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the Coward
He being in the Vaward, plac'd behinde,
With purpose to relieve and follow them,
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroake.
Hence grew the generall wrack and massacre.
Enclosed were they with their Enemies.
A base Walloon, to win the Dolphins grace,
Thrust Talbot with a Speare into the back,
Whom all France with their chief assembled strength,
Durst not presume to looke once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain then I will slay my selfe,
For living idly here in pompe and ease,
Whilst such a worthy Leader, wanting ayd,
Unto his dastard foemen is betrayd.

3. Mess. O no, he lives, but's tooke Prisoner,
And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford.
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or tooke likewise.

Bed. His Ransome there is none but I shall pay,
I'le hale the Dolphin headlong from his Throne,
His Crowne shall be the Ransome of my friend
Foure of their Lords Ile change for one of ours.
Farewell my Master, to my Task will I,
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keepe our great Saint George Feast withall.
Ten thousand Souldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3. Mess. So you had need, for Orleance is besieg'd,
The English Army is grown weake and faint,
The Earle of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keepes his men from mutinie,
Since they so few watch such multitude.

Exe. Remember Lords your Oathes to Henry sworne
Either to quell the Dolphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoake.

Bed. I doe remember it, and there take my leave,
To make abroad my preparation. Exit Bedford.

Glost. Lord Exeter, I know your minde to the bald Cardinall,
You and I will not be enemies, but friends:
And labour jointly to procure the yong Henry King.

Exit Gloster.

Exe. To Eltam will I where the young King is,
Being ordained his special Governour,
And for his safetie there I'le best devise. Exit.

Enter Governour, and Master Gunner, whose Sonne is with the Countesse.

Gunner. Master, if now the Master Gunner of Orleance, and my Sonne had but plaid the Gunner for them as well, as when they both were within Burdeaux, the Peece could not have been charged with more dexterity.

Gov. But what remedie? we were inforced, as the best Souldiers that ever fought.

Gunner. Certaine Sir, to my Master, and his Heire.

Gov. Nay, to him that overcame him by Fortune.

Gunner. Marry Sir, so I meant, his Valour in the field.

Gov. Well, I will go salute his Lordship with a friendly visit.

Gunner. Sir, I thank God I have his Ransome now, and am able to dispend the worth of forty Crownes.

Gov. Not a penny under a hundred pounds.

Gunner. I thank your Honour, he is as tall a Gentleman as any is in England, and hath as likely Friends to make his Ransome.

Gov. Come, Sir, leave your talke, and attend your Office.

Gunner. I am your Honours to command.

Gov. Sirrah, see the Ordnance be well look'd unto, and when the Marriage is solemnized, we will have a Peale for the Dolphin.

Gunner. I warrant your Honour, I'le fit them.

Gov. Well, Sir, about your businesse.

Gunner. I will Sir, I will.

Gov. Now Sirrah, call the Rest of the Souldiers, and let them stand in Battalia, for I hear the Earle of Salisbury is hard at hand.

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reignier, marching with Drum and Souldiers.

Charles. Mars his true moving, even as in the Heavens,
So in the Earth, to this day is not known,
Late did he shine upon the English side:
Now we are Victors, upon us he smiles.
What Towne of any moment, but we have?
At pleasure here we lye, except some few,
That for the Earle of Salisbury's sake, pale Cowards,
Durst not abide our sweet embracements.

Alan. They want their Porredge, and their fat Bucke-Pease.
Either they must be dieted like Mules,
And have their Provender tide to their mouthes,
Or piteous they will looke, like drowned Mice.

Reig. Let me have the Siege of Rouen, how we may give't?

Alan. Such a piece, whom we wont to feare
Is now no more of manly valorous Spirit,
And he may well in fearfull sort expect
Not men but Monsters sent to make Warre
Charles. Saint Denis, fought for Araram, new transformed.
Now for the rest of the forlorne French.
Him I regard my dearest, that's to come,
Were he here me the back one foot, or five. Exeunt

Here Araram they are beaten back, by the English with great noise.

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reignier.

Charles. Where ever are we that we want the chase?
Dogges, Cowards, Dastards! I would ne're have fled,
But that they left me 'midst my Enemies.

Reignier. Salisbury is a desperate Homicide,
He fighteth as one weary of his life.
The other Lords, like Lyons wanting foode,
Doe rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alanson. Fran'ced, a Countreyman of ours, records,
England all Olliuers and Kentish creed,
During the time Edward the third did raigne:
More truly now may this be verified,
For none but Samsons and Gobbets
If we should stand to parley any more?
Least all our bonefires should be made e're suppose,
They have such courage and audacitie.
Charles. Let's stay no more vpon,
For they are hauy, vnbrauen Slaues,
And every we'll encreet can to be in greater
Of our Knowledge, rather we should flee
The Warres they teare downe, then take the Seege.
Reignier. I thinke by some odde Gimmors or Deuice
Their Armes are set, like Clocks, still to fight on,
Else ne're could they hold out so as they doe
By my consent, we'le euen let them alone.
Alanson. Be it so

Enter the Bastard of Orleance.

Bastard. Where's the Prince Dolphin? I haue newes for him
Dolph. Bastard of Orleance, thrice welcome to vs.
Bast. Me thinkes your lookes are sad, your cheere appall'd.
Hath the late ouerthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismayd, for succour is at hand:
A holy Maid I hither haue procured,
Warn'd by a Vision and her Heauenly Dreame,
Ordained is to raise this tedious Siege,
And driue the English forth the bounds of France.
The Spirit of deepe Prophesie she hath,
Exceeding the nine Sibils of old Rome
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speake shall I call her in? beleeue my words,
For they are certaine, and vnfallible.
Dolph. Goe call her in: but first to try her skill,
Reignier stand thou as Dolphin in his place.
Question her proudly let thy Lookes be stearne,
By this meanes shall we found what skill she hath.

Enter Ioane Pucel.

Reignier. Faire Maid is't thou wilt doe these wondrous feats?
Pucel. Reignier, is't thou that thinkst to begull me?
Where is the Dolphin? Come, come from behinde,
I know thee well, though neuer seene before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me;
In priuate will I talke with thee apart:
Stand back you Lords, and giue vs leaue a while
Reignier. She takes vpon her bravely at first dash.
Pucel. Dolphin, I am by birth a Shepheards Daughter,
My wit vntrain'd in any kind of Art.
Heauen and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemptible estate:
Loe, whilst I waited on my tender Lambes,
And to Gods pleasing, sweat dropt from my browes,
God's Mother deigned to appeare to me,
And in a Vision full of Maiestie,
Will'd me to leaue my base Vocation,
And free my Countrey from Calamitie:
Her aide she promis'd, and assur'd successe.
In complete Glory she reueal'd herselfe:
And whereas I was black and swart before,
With those sweet Rayes she did infuse on me,
That beauteous am I blest with, which you may see.
Aske me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer vnpremeditated:
My Courage try by Combat, if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt finde that I exceed my Sex.
Resolue on this, thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receiue me for thy Warlike Mate.
Dolph. Thou hast astonished me with thy high termes.
Only this proofe I'le of thy Valour make,
In single Combat thou shalt buckle with me,
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true,
Otherwise I renounce all confidence.
Pucel. I am prepar'd: here is my keene edg'd Sword,
Deckt with fiue Flower-de-Luces on each side,
The which at Touraine, in S. Katherines Church-yard,
Out of a great deale of old Iron, I chose forth.
Dolph. Then come a Gods name, I feare no woman.
Pucel. And while I liue, I'le ne're flye for man.
Here they fight, and Ioane de Pucel ouercomes.
Dolph. Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the Sword of Deborah
Pucel. Christs Mother helpes me, else I were too weake.
Dolph. Whoe're helps thee, 'tis thou that must helpe me:
Impatiently I burne with thy desire
My heart and hand thou hast at once subdu'd.
Excellent Pucel, if thy name be so,
Let me thy Seruant and not Soueraigne be:
'Tis the French Dolphin sueth to thee thus.
Puc. I must not yeeld to any rites of Loue,
For my Profession's sacred from aboue:
When I haue chased all thy Foes from hence,
Then will I thinke vpon a recompence.
Dolph. Meane time, looke gracious on thy prostrate Thrall.
Reignier. My Lord me thinkes is very long in talke.
Alan. Doubtlesse he shriues this woman to her smock,
Else ne're could he so long protract his speech.
Reignier. Shall we disturbe him, since he keepes no meane?
Alan. He may meane more then we poore men do know,
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.
Reignier. My Lord where are your wits become of?
Shall we giue ore our Seige, and no?
Pucel. Why no, I say distrustfull Recreants,
Fight till the last gaspe: I'le be your Guard.
Dolph. What she says, I'le confirme: we are resolu'd to fight it out.
Pucel. Assigned am I to be the English Scourge.
This night the Siege assuredly I'le raise
Expect Saint Martins Summer, Halcyons dayes,
Since I haue entred into these Warres.
Glory is like a Circle in the Water,
Which neuer ceaseth to enlarge it selfe,
Till by broad spreading, it disperse to naught.
With Henries death, the English Circle ends,
Dispersed are the glories it included.
Now am I like that proud insulting Ship,
Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.
Dolph. Was Mahomet inspired with a Doue?
Thou with an Eagle art inspired then.
Helen, the Mother of Great Constantine,
Nor yet S. Philips daughters were like thee.
Bright Starre of Venus fall'n downe on the Earth,
How may I reuerently worship thee enough?
Alanson. Leaue off delayes, and let vs raise the Siege.

Reignier. Wo-

Reignier. Woman, do what thou canst to saue our honors,
Driue them from Orleance, and be immortaliz'd.
Dolph. Presently we'll try: come, let's away about it,
No Prophet will I trust, if shee proue false. Exeunt.

Enter Gloster, with his Seruingmen.

Glost. I am come to Sutley the Tower, and the days
Since Henries death, I feare there is Conueyance.
Where be these Warders that they waite not here?
Open the Gates, I say: Gloster wils in.
1 Warder. Who's there, that knocks so imperiously?
Glost. 1 Man. It is the Noble Duke of Gloster.
2 Warder. Whosoere he be, you may not be let in.
1 Man. Villaines answer you so the Lord Protector?
1 Warder. The Lord protect him, so we answer him,
We do no otherwise than we are will'd.
Glost. Who willed you? or whose will stands but mine?
There's none Protector of the Realme but I.
Break vp the Gates, I'le be your warrantize.
Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill Grooms?
Gloster makes shew to vp the Gates, and enters the Tower.
The Lieutenant speaks within.
Lieutenant. What noise is this? what Traitors haue an entrance?
Glost. Lieutenant, is it you whose voice I heare?
Open the Gates, here's Gloster that would enter.
Lieutenant. Haue patience Noble Duke, I may not open,
The Cardinall of Winchester forbids
From him I haue expresse commandement,
That thou nor none of thine shall be let in.
Glost. Faint-hearted Woodville prizest him 'fore me?
Arrogant Winchester, that haughtie Prelate,
Whom Henry our late Soueraigne ne're could brooke?
Thou art no friend to God or to the King:
Open the Gates, or I'le shut thee out shortly.
Seruingmen. Open the Gates vnto the Lord Protector,
Or we'll burst them open if that you come not quickly.

Enter to the Protector at the Tower Gates Winchester and his men in Tawney Coates.

Winchest. How now ambitious Humphry, what means this?
Glost. Piel'd Priest, dost thou command me to be shut out?
Winch. I do, thou most vsurping Proditor,
And not Protector of the King or Realme.
Glost. Stand back thou manifest Conspirator,
Thou that contriued'st to murther our dead Lord,
Thou that giu'st Whores Indulgences to sinne,
I'le canuas thee in thy broad Cardinalls Hat,
If thou proceed in this thy insolence.
Winch. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a foot:
This be Damascus, be thou curst Cain,
To slay thy Brother Abel if thou wilt.
Glost. I will not slay thee, but I'le driue thee back:
Thy Scarlet Robes, as a Childs bearing Cloth,
I'le vse, to carry thee out of this place.
Winch. Do what thou dar'st, I beard thee to thy face.
Glost. What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?
Draw men, for all this priuiledged place,
Blew Coats to Tawny Coats. Priest, beware your Beard,
I meane to tug it, and to cuffe you soundly.
Vnder my feet I stampe thy Cardinals Hat.
In spight of Pope, or dignities of Church,
Here by the Cheekes I'le drag thee vp and downe.
Winch. Gloster, thou wilt answer this before the Pope.
Glost. Winchester Goose, I cry a Rope, a Rope.
Now beat them hence, why do you let them stay?
Thee I'le throw hence, your Blew Coates to their Priest.
Out Tawny Coates, out scarlet Hypocrite.

Here they fall to blowes, and the Cardinall men, and driue in the Maior of London, and his Officers.

Maior. Fie Lords, that you being supreme Magistrates,
Thus contumeliously should breake the Peace.
Glost. Peace Mayor, thou know'st little of my wrongs:
Here's Beauford that regards nor God nor King,
Hath here distrayn'd the Tower to his vse.
Winch. Here's Gloster, a foe to Citizens,
One that still moues Warre and neuer Peace,
Ordering his warres with bills of Parliament.
I tell thee Catiue, now I haue got holde,
Back shall thou neuer come into the Tower,
And now I'le attorney thee and his Grace,
For standing in the Prince his noble name.
Glost. Come on thou Scarlet Hypocrite, do your worst.
Here they fall to blowes again.
Maior. Nay, stay, and I command the Kings Peace,
All vp in armes, and with the Kings name I charge you,
Depart the place, and not to assemble in seditious troupes.
All manner of men depart the place in diuers sides, against their wills, and the Maior and Officers stay them.
Glost. Cardinall, I'le be no breaker of the Law:
But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.
Winch. Gloster, we'll meet to your cost I feare.
Thy sister hath had conference for murder with the Duke.
Maior. I beseech your Graces both to pacifie you,
I my selfe will hie me to the Crowne,
And tell the King, and his Councell of your discord.
Glost. Maior, farewell: thou do'st but what thou may'st.
Winch. Abominable Gloster, guard thy Head,
For I intend to haue it ere long.
Maior. See the Coast clear, and then we will depart.
Good God, that Nobles should such hatred beare,
I my selfe fight not once in forty yeere. Exeunt.

Enter the Master Gunner of Orleance, and his Boy.

M. Gunner. Sirha, thou know'st how Orleance is besieged,
And how that we haue planted our Culuerin
On the Church Steeple, and from thence doe play
Into the French Court, and cause much hauocke.
Boy. Yes father, I know, and oftentimes haue shot at them,
How fortunate I am I know not, I thanke my Fortune.
M. Gunner. But now thou shalt not, be thou rul'd by me,
Chiefe Master Gunner am I of this Towne,
Something I must do to procure me grace:
The Princes espials haue informed me,
How the Englishmen in the Suburbs close entrenched,
Went through a secret Grate of Iron Barres,
In yonder Tower, to ouer-peere the Citie,
And thence discouer how with most aduantage
They may vex vs with Shot or with Assault.
To intercept this inconuenience,
A Piece of Ordnance 'gainst it haue plac'd,

And

And euen these three dayes haue I watcht,
If I could see them. Now doe thou watch,
For I can stay no longer.
If any passe thou hast any mone and bring me word,
And thou shalt finde me at the Gouernors Exit.
Bor. Father, I warrant you, take you no care,
Ile neuer trouble you, if I may spye them. Exit

Enter Salisbury and Talbot on the Turrets, with others

Salisb. Talbot, my life, my ioy, again return'd?
How were you hous'd within this hollow Vault?
Or how crept from the Graue of those fierce Lyons
Downe from the Window were I sitting downe?
Talbot. Vpon the grate I sate, as now I doe,
Calling the drowsie Lord [illegible],
For now was I exceeding pensiue grown,
Whether a Watermans Art or else my care,
[illegible] they would be better borne:
Which I was musing, comes a winged death,
Rather then I would be so pil'd redeem'd
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desired.
But O, the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart,
Whom with my bare fists I would haue supplide,
If I now had him brought into my power.
Salisb. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou were entertain'd.
Tal. With scoffes and scornes, and contumelious taunts,
In open Market place produc'd they me,
To be a publique spectacle to all:
Here, say they, is the Terror of the French,
The Scar-Crow that affrights our Children so.
Then broke I from the Officers that led me,
And with my nayles digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurle at the beholders of my shame
My grisly countenance made others flye,
None dar'st come neere, for feare of present death
In Iron Walls they deem'd me not secure,
So great feare of my Name 'mongst them were spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend Barres of Steele,
And spurne in pieces Posts of Adamant.
Wherefore a guard of chosen Shot I had,
That walkt about me euery Minute while:
And if I did but stirre out of my Bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Enter the Bastard of Orleance with a Ladder.

Salisb. I grieue to heare what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reuenged sufficiently.
Now it is Supper time in Orleance:
Here, through this Grate, I count each one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortifie:
Let vs looke in, the sight will much delight thee:
Sir Thomas Gargrane, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me haue your expresse opinions,
Where is best place to make our Batt'ry next?
Gargrane. I thinke at the North Gate, for there stands Lords.
Glansdale. And I heere, at the Bulwarke of the Bridge.
Talb. For ought I see, this Citie must be famisht,
Or with light Skirmishes enfeebled. Here they shoot, and Salisbury falls downe.
Salisb. O Lord haue mercy on vs, wretched sinners!
Gargrane. O Lord haue mercy on me, woefull man.
Talb. What chance is this, that suddenly hath crost vs?
Speake Salisbury; at least, if thou canst, speake:
How farst thou, Mirror of all Martiall men?
One of thy Eyes, and thy Cheekes side struck off?
Accursed Tower, accursed fatall Hand,
That hath contriu'd this woefull Tragedie.
In thirteene Battailes, Salisbury o'recome:
Henry the Fift he first trayn'd to the Warres.
Whil'st any Trumpe did sound, or Drum struck vp,
His Sword did neere leaue striking in the field.
Yet liu'st thou Salisbury? though thy speech doth fayle,
One Eye thou hast to looke to Heauen for grace.
The Sunne with one Eye vieweth all the World.
Heauen be thou gracious to none alyue,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands
Beare hence his Body, I will helpe to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrane, hast thou any life?
Speake vnto Talbot, nay, looke vp to him.
Salisbury cheare thy Spirit with this comfort,
Thou shalt not dye whiles----
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me
As who should say, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to auenge me on the French.
Plantagenet I will, and like thee,
Play on the Lute, beholding the Townes burne:
Wretched shall France be onely in my Name.
Here an Alarum, and it Thunders and Lightens.
What stirre is this? what tumult's in the Heauens?
Whence commeth this Alarum, and the noyse?
Enter a Messenger
Mess. My Lord, my Lord, the French haue gather'd head.
The Dolphin, with one Ioane de Pucell ioyn'd,
A holy Prophetesse, new risen vp,
Is come with a great Power, to raysе the Siege.
Here Salisbury lifteth himselfe vp, and groanes.
Talb. Heare, heare, how dying Salisbury doth groane,
It irkes his heart he cannot be reuenged.
Frenchmen, Ile be a Salisbury to you.
Pucelle or Iuysel, Dolphin or Dogfish,
Your hearts Ile stampe out with my Horses heeles,
And make a Quagmire of your mingled braines.
Conuey me Salisbury into his Tent,
And then wee'le try what these dastard Frenchmen dare.
Alarum. Exeunt.

Here an Alarum againe, and Talbot pursueth the Dolphin, and driueth him: Then enter Ioane de Puzel, driuing Englishmen before her.
Then enter Talbot.
Talb. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?
Our Englishe Troupes retyre, I cannot stay them,
A Woman clad in Armour chaseth them.
Enter Puzel.
Here, here shee comes. Ile haue a bowt with thee:
Deuill, or Deuils Dam, Ile coniure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a Witch,
And straightway giue thy Soule to him thou seru'st.
Puzel. Come, come, 'tis onely I that must disgrace thee. Here they fight.
Talb. Heauens, can you suffer Hell so to preuayle?
My breast Ile burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my Armes asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded Strumpet.
They fight againe.
Puzel. Talbot farwell, my houre is not yet come,
I must goe Victuall Orleance forthwith.
A short Alarum: then enter the Towne with Souldiers.

O're-

O re-take me if thou canst, I scorne thy strength.
Goe, goe cheare vp thy hungry-starued men,
Helpe Salsbury to make his Testament,
This Day is ours, as many more shall be. Exit.
Tal. My nought es are wnir ed like a Potters Wheele,
I know not where I am, nor what I doe:
A Witch by feare, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troupes and conquers as she lists:
So Bees with smoake, and Doues with noysome stench,
Are from their Hyues and Houses driven away.
They call'd vs, for our fierce ne sse Enemies Dogges,
Now like to Whelpes, we crying runne away.
A short Alarum.
Hearke Countrymen, either renew the fight,
Or tearne the Lyons out of England Coast;
Renounce your Soyle, gyue sheepe in Lyons stead:
Sheepe run not hotter to the Wolues in sight, then
Or Horse or Oxen from the Leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaues.
Alarum. Here another Skirmish.
It will not be, retire into your Trenches:
You all consented vnto Salsbury, death,
For none now will strike a stroake in his reuenge.
Pucell is entred into Orleance,
In spight of vs, or ought that we could doe.
O would I were to dye with Salsbury,
The shame hereof, will make me hide my head.
Exit Talbot

Enter on the Walls, Pucell, Dolphin, a Generall, Alanson, and Souldiers.

Pucel. Aduance our waning Colours on the Walls,
Rescu'd is Orleance from the English,
Thus Ioane de Pucell hath perform'd her word.
Dolph. Diuinest Creature, Astrea's Daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this successe?
Thy promises are like Adonis Gardens,
That one day bloom'd and fruitfull were the next.
France, triumph in thy glorious Prophetesse,
Recouer'd is the Towne of Orleance,
More blessed hap did neu'r befall our State.
Reignier. Why ring not out the Bells aloud,
Throughout the Towne?
Dolphin command the Citizens make Bonfires,
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the ioy that God hath giuen vs.
Alan. All France will be replete with mirth and ioy,
When they shall heare how we haue play'd the men.
Dolph. 'Tis Ioane, not we, by whom the day is wonne.
For which, I will diuide my Crowne with her,
And all the Priests and Fryers in my Realme,
Shall in procession sing her endlesse prayse.
A stately Pyramis to her I'le reare,
Than Rhodophe's or Memphis euer was.
In memorie of her, when she is dead,
Her Ashes, in an Vrne more pretious
Then the rich-iewel'd Coffer of Darius,
Transported, shall be at high Festiuals
Before the Kings and Queenes of France.
No longer on Saint Denis will we cry,
But Ioane de Pucell shall be France's Saint.
Come in, and let vs banquet Royally,
After this Golden Day of Victorie.
Flourish. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Sergeant of a Band, with two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant:
If any noyse or Soudier you perceiue
Neere to the walles, by some apparant signe
Let vs haue knowledge at the Court of Guard.
Sent. Sergeant, you shall. Thus are poore Seruitors
(When others Eyes are closed in quiet beds)
Constrained to watch in Armes, harme, and cold.

Enter Duke Bedford, and Burgundy, marching. Lauatory. Then Drummer brings in a Dead Marche.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy,
By whose approach, the Regions of Artois
Walloone and Picardy are friends to vs,
This happy night the Frenchmen are carowsing.
Impatient of our sad exploits of late,
And glutted all, carowsing deed banquetted,
Imbrace we this aduantage while we may,
As fitting best to quittance their deceite,
Contriued by Art and baleful Sorcerie.
Bed. Coward of France, how much he wrongs his fame,
Dispairing of his owne arme's fortitude
To ioyne with Witches and the helpe of Hell.
Bur. Traitors haue euer ioyn'd in like coniunction.
But what's he that Burgundy can tearme so pure?
Tal. A Maid they say.
Bed. A Maid? And be so martial?
Bur. Pray God she proue not masculine ere long,
If vnderneath the Standard of the French
She carry Armour, as she hath begun.
Tal. Well, let them practise and conuerse with spirits.
God is our fortresse, in whose conquering name
Let vs resolue to scale their flinty bulwarkes.
Bed. Ascend braue Talbot, we will follow thee.
Tal. Not all together: better farre I geasse,
That we do make our entrance seuerall wayes.
That if it chance the one of vs do faile,
The other yet may rise against their force.
Bed. Agreed: Ile to yond corner.
Bur. And I to this.
Tal. And heere will Talbot mount, or make his graue
Now Salsbury, for thee and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appeare
How much in duty, I am bound to both.
Sent. Arme, arme, the enemy doth make assault.
Cry, S. George, A Talbot.

The French leape ore the walles in their shirts. Enter seuerall wayes, Bastard Alanson Reignier, halfe ready, and halfe vnready.

Alan. How now my Lords? what all vnready so?
Bast. Vnready? I and glad we scap'd so well.
Reig. 'Twas time (I trow) to wake and leaue our beds,
Hearing Alarums at our Chamber doores.
Alan. Of all exploits since first I followed Armes,
Ne're heard I of a warlike enterprize

More

More venturous or desperate than this.
Bast. I think this Salisbury is a Guest of Hell.
Reg. If so, our Friends shall meet him there.
Alanson Here comes the Countess: may it please your Highness to retire.

Enter Countess.

Tal. Tut, this is Countess, be not affrighted.
Countess. Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the Mothers still their Babes?
I see report is fabulous and false.
Make us partakers of a little gain,
I know our safety is to follow you,
Some Witch hath conjured thy overthrow.
Are you so wise, you dare not stir a foot?
Sleeps or wakes the Fiend of Hell?
Or will you not, for fear of Nightly Guile?
Countess. Base Dukes of Armes, whose resolution,
Bast. Make us slow pace in this concerning Action.
Countess. Are you so resolute?
Countess. Are you so resolute?
Countess. Are you so resolute?

I thought I should haue seene some Heroes,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong knit Limbes.
Alas, this is a Child, a very Dwarfe
It cannot be, this weake and writhled shrimpe
Should stand in feare for such a Warriour.
Tal. Mars, we were bad to trouble you.
But since you liue, we will not trouble you.
Onely to see if that report be true,
I came to see if it be true with you.
Count. Where is the Messenger that came to you?
Goe aske him if these be the men.
Mes. Yes my Lord, These are the Englishmen,
To whom I carried your Commission.
Tal. Must for a stranger, without ceremony,
I greet thee first? That I will not.
Exeunt Part of the English.
Sirrah, Thou speak'st to me,
Tal. Pardon me Sir,
Count. Long time haue I desired to see the man
Whose onely name hath strooke a terror to my foes,
Within the limits of the Realme of France,
And with his puissant Armes haue ploughed it round,
Beating downe Gardens, Villages, Townes, and Towers,
Whole Armies haue I seene flie from his Sword,
And at the noyse of his victorious Name,
Whole Troopes of men haue throwne away their Armes,
Tal. I
Count. I cannot blame them for it
I my selfe would, Lord Talbot, haue done so too
Tal. No, I thank thee for it,
You are deceiued, your Sonne is not my foe;
Or if he were, I would not wish him hence,
And on purpose I brought him
To see, (or Master, we were now of Comparison,
Rather a Captaine than a Plaything,
Your foote were set on mine, to coniure
Count. I see a Merchant ouer-boldned with successe,
He whom we scorn'd, yet is not here
How can these contrary Actions agree?
Tal. I tell you plainly,
Enter a Messenger, and whispers Talbot in the ear.
of Orleance Enterprise
How say you Madam? are you now perswaded,
That Talbot is but a shadow of himselfe?
These are his substance, sinewes, armes and strength,
With which he yoakes your rebellious Necks,
Razeth your Cities, and subuerts your Powers,
And in a moment makes them desolate
Count. Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuse,
I finde thou art no other than the Fame
And more than may be gathered by thy shape.
Let my presumption not prouoke thy wrath,
For I am sorry that with reuerence
I did not entertaine thee as thou art.
Tal. Be not dismayed faire Lady, nor misconster
The mood of Talbot, as you did mine
The outward composition of his body.
What you haue done, hath not offended me
Nor other satisfaction doe I craue,
But onely with your patience, that we may
Taste of your Wine, and see what Cates you haue,
For Souldiers Stomacks alwayes serue them well.
Count. With all my heart, and think me honoured,
To feast so great a Warriour in my House. Exeunt.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, Somerset, Poole, and others.

Plan. Great Lords and Gentlemen,
What meanes this silence?
Dare no man answer in a case of Truth?
Suf. Within the Temple Hall we were too loud,
The Garden here is more conuenient.
Plan. Then say at once, if I maintaine the Truth,
Or else was wrangling Somerset in the error?
Suf. Faith I haue been a truant in the Law,
And neuer yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the Law vnto my will.
Som. Judge you, my Lord of Warwick, then between vs.
War. Between two Hawkes, which flies the higher pitch,
Between two Dogges, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two Blades, which beares the better temper,
Between two Horses, which doth beare him best,
Between two Girles, which hath the merriest eye,
I haue perhaps some shallow spirit of Iudgement:
But in these nice sharpe Quillets of the Law,
Good faith I am no wiser than a Daw.
Plan. Tut, tut, here is no milde intreating here,
By this I know their hearts will claime it long.
And that I will haue, or I will loose my head,
Apt wits, or dull, and that the obscurest Brother,
Plucke a red Rose from off this Thorne with me.
Som. I scorne to plucke a Flower for feare,
Who scarce himselfe dares pull a Sword about.
Plan. Faint-hearted Somerset, what say'st thou then?
Som. I say as I haue said before,
My heart is as great as yours,
Be assured to the death, I haue the right.
Ver. And keepe it, Sir, as long as I haue power to weild it.
Som. Saucy Lawyer, I will not stoope for all your Law,
Till you resolue me this one Question,
Tell me if you will, whose Rose you will weare
Scorne to be awed with your Authority,
If you will not, hereafter say no more
Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well objected.
If I haue fewest, I shall soonest be sped.
Plan. And I.
Ver. Then for the truth and plainnesse of the Case
I pluck this pale and maiden Blossome here,
Giuing my Verdict on the White Rose side.
Som. Prick not your finger as you plucke it off,
Least bleeding, you do paint the White Rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.
Ver. If I, my Lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall surueye to my Graue.
And keepe me on the side where still I am.
Som. Well, well, come on, who next?
Lawyer. Vn-

Lawyer. Vnclean waiter Strahe and my Bookes be falne,
The [illegible] was Wrong in you;
[illegible] Plucke a white Rose too.
Yorke. Now Somerset, where is your argument?
Som. Here in my Scabberd meditating that [illegible] red.
Yorke. Meane time, in signe of my loue to thee,
Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,
Will I vpon thy partie weare this Rose.
And here I prophesie: this brawle to day,
Grow to this faction in the Temple Garden,
Shall send betweene the Red-Rose and the White,
A thousand Soules to Death and deadly Night.
Yorke. Good Master Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalfe would plucke a Flower.
Ver. In your behalfe still will I weare the same.
Lawyer. And to mine.
Yorke. I thankes gentle.
Come, come, vnto this Quarter will drinke Blood another day.
Exeunt.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a Chayre, and Iaylors

Mort. Kind Keepers of my weake decaying Age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himselfe
Euen like a man new haled from the Wrack,
So fare my Limbes with long Imprisonment
And these grey Locks, the Pursuiuants of death,
Nestor-like aged, in an Age of Care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.
These eyes like Lampes, whose wasting Oyle is spent,
Waxe dimme as drawing to their Exigent.
Weake shoulders, ouer-borne with burthening Griefe,
And pithlesse Armes, like to a withered Vine,
That [illegible] Steeres or Grape,
Are [illegible] and [illegible]
But [illegible] come, will my Nephew come?
Iaylor. Richard Plantagenet my Lord, will come.
We sent vnto the Temple vnto his Chamber,
And answere was return'd that he will come.
Mort. Enough, my Soule shall then be satisfied.
Poore Gentleman, his wrong doth equall mine.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reigne,
Before whose glory I was great in Armes,
This loathsome sequestration haue I had;
And euen since then hath Richard been obscur'd,
Depriu'd of Honor and Inheritance.
But now the Arbitrator of Despaires,
Iust Death kinde Vmpire of mens miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismisse me hence.
I would his troubles likewise were expir'd,
That he might recouer what was lost.

Enter Richard

Keeper. My Lord, your loving Nephew now is come.
Mort. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?
Rich. I Noble Vncle, thus ignobly vs'd,
Your Nephew late despised Richard, comes.
Mort. Direct mine Armes, I may embrace his Neck,
And in his Bosome spend my latter gaspe.
O tell me when my lippes doe touch his Cheekes,
That I may kindly giue one fainting Kisse.
And now declare sweet Stem from Yorkes great Stock,
Why didst thou say of late thou were despis'd?
Rich. First

Rich. First, cane thine aged Back against mine Arme,
And in that ease, I'le tell thee my Disease.
This day in argument vpon a Case,
Some words there grew twixt Somerset and me:
Among which termes, he vs'd his skoffing tongue,
And did vpbraid me with my Fathers death,
Which obloquie set barbes before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him.
Therefore good Vncle, for my Fathers sake,
In honor of a true Plantagenet,
And for Alliance take, defend me (coz)
My Head, Embattail'd Complaints, and Heavy Heart.
Mort. That cause (faire Nephew) that imprisoned me,
And hath detayn'd me all my flowring Youth,
Within a loathsome Dungeon there to pine,
Was cursed Instrument of his decease.
Rich. Discover more at large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant, and do desire it.
Mort. I will, if that my fading breath permit,
And Death approach not ere my Tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, (sirnam'd Bolingbroke,
Deposed Nephew to Richard, Edward's Sonne,
The first begotten, and the lawfull Heire
Of Edward King, the third of that Decree
During whose Reign, the Percies of the North,
Finding his Vsurpation most vniust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the Throne.
The reasons they alledged, the quarrel was,
Wrong for that (viz.) (as they did terme the same)
Lean'd good Edward's Sonne (the first begot
In Wedlock) is the next by Birthright Heire.
But George, the Marshall, Edward's youngest Son
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, third Sonne
To King Edward the Third, whereas he,
From John of Gaunt, doth bring his Pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroick Line.
But mark, as in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to plant the rightfull Heire,
I lost my Liberty, and they their Lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fift
Succeeding his Father Bolingbroke, did reigne,
Thy Father, Earle of Cambridge, was derived
From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of Yorke,
Marrying my Sister, that thy Mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distresse,
Levied an Army, weening to redeeme
And have installed me in the Diadem:
But as the rest, so fell that Noble Earle,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the Title rested, were suppressed.
Rich. Of which, my Lord, your Honor is the last.
Mort. True, and thou seest that I no Issue have,
And that my fainting words do warrant death:
Thou art my Heire, the rest, I wish thee gather.
But yet be wary in thy studious care.
Rich. Thy grave admonishments prevayle with me:
But yet me thinkes, my Father's execution
Was nothing lesse, then bloody Tyranny.
Mort. With silence (Nephew) be thou politicke,
Strong-fixed is the House of Lancaster,
And like a Mountaine, not to be remov'd.
But now thy Vncle is removing hence,
As Princes do their Courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a setled place.
Rich. O Vncle, would some part of my young yeeres
Might but redeeme the passage of your Age.

Mort. Thou do'st then wrong me, as a Slaughterer doth,
Which giues a many Wounds, when one will kill.
Mourne not, except thou sorrow for my good,
Only giue order for my Funerall.
And so farewell, and faire be all thy hopes,
And prosperous be all thy Passages
In warre. Dies.
Rich. And peace, no warre, befall thy parting Soule.
In Prison hast thou spent a Pilgrimage,
And like a Hermite ouer-pass'd thy dayes.
Well, I will locke his Counsell in my Breast,
And what I do imagine, let that rest.
Keepers conuey him hence, and I myselfe
Will see his Burial better than his Life. Exit
Here dyes the dusky Torch of Mortimer,
Choakt vp and smothered with Sepulchers dust.
And this the Regall Sea-tree of Sea-mores,
Whose Braunches reach'd vnto the Crowne of Rome,
Is dimm'd with Age, and this the Noble Stocke
Of Lionell Duke of Clarence is extinct.
Thus (Edmund) lye, in expectation that Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter, [illegible] Somerset, Suffolke, Cardinall Beaufort, Plantagenet, Warwicke, and Gardiner.

Henry Comes Somerset, with new Promotion coasting hot vpon his Lips?
Henry Commends his Grace to my Soueraigne,
Or tells me he enioyes the Peoples hearts,
Or that the Pettie Rebels in the North,
Do offer Combat to his Princely Person?
Somer. Neither (my Lord) but tells me, and him too,
Hath vnaduisedly attempted and effected
Both the one and the other, to the Deed of Insolent Mutiny,
In Private Braules, damag'd and disturb'd the Publique Peace,
And in Contempt of Vs, our Crowne, and Dignity,
Proceeds in this Licentious Course.
Warw. And if your Grace incline not to my Censure,
Or make not present Head against these Rebels,
I do foresee and fear a greater Storme,
Then that which late blew ouer Yorke and Me.
Glost. Ambitious Warwicke, let thy Betters speake:
The Duke hath lost Normandy.
Warw. But not the Dukes of Somerset and Suffolke.
Cardi. Tis not his Grace that Normandy is lost,
Nor Somerset, nor Suffolke, nor my Selfe,
But Glosters Peace-full Gouernment at home,
Where Dukes haue Wiues to keepe, and Children may be got.
Glost. Why Cardinall, is it you that bids me Peace?
Warwicke and Yorke, I do applaud your Spleenes:
Had not your Plots come timely to my Eares,
And Henry Master of the Commons Harts,
Your Pollicies had practis'd long ere this.
But now my Sword shall plead in open Field.
Cardi. Ambitious Protector, dar'st thou bend thy Browes
Against the Duke of Somerset, but heere?
Glost. And Cardinall of Winchester, forget
Thy late Ambition, and Malicious Loue,
Not all thy Polish Drugges, nor Romish Art,
Can smooth thy Hatred from my Gouernment.
Somer. Ambition, Loue, or Hatred, neither sits
In him, that scornes a Kingdome for his Birth.
Suffolke. Somerset hath forgot my Princely Vow,
And I forget not what I ought to Suffolke.
Warw. Well hath Somerset deseru'd his Prince,
Suffolke his Queene, and Beauforts Malice
Gratifies his Brother, whereat I laugh,
And smile to see these Puny Enemies
Brauing a Warre, which they will neuer fight.
Glost. Ambitious Warwicke, dost thou prouoke me?
Now by the Lord that purchas'd Heauen with Blood,
No Prelate, such is my Religious Loue,
Thy Pietie shall neuer keepe thee safe,
Till vnder me thou stoope, and bend thy Knee,
As vnto him that beares a greater Sway.
Thou art no Father for a Gouernour,
Thy Sword is for a Peacefull Empire fit,
And thy Profession blemish'd with Reuenge,
Impatient as the Hungry Lyon's Rage,
Against the Life of him, whose Harmelesse Death
Prophanes the Name of Protector, and the Dignity.
And for a Crowne, how can it sit your Head,
Vnlesse you first vsurp the Royall Throne?
Imagine you, that I will yeeld my Life,
And leaue the Helme vnto a Haughtie Prelate?
Or that the Commons, whose Affections are
Bent on the Loue of Gloster, will change
Their Liking, for the Pride of Cardinall Beaufort?
Or Somerset, whose Veines do pant the Blood
Which he hath lost by Lingring Sicknesse,
And would as willingly bestow the same
In Honor of his King, whose false Aspect
Doth threaten Warre with Guyenne and the Dukedome?
And Suffolke, as he smiles, and weares his Blood
In Hope to captiuate my Soueraigne,
Marry his Grace vnto a Wife, and Peace,
Shall all but fauour and aduance his Run.
I, I, these weake Armes are rebellious when they rise,
Which else are powerfull to embrace this Neck,
And force these Treacherous Suitors to their Graues.
Now, my good Lords of Yorke and Warwicke,
For I see our Cankred Peace conuerts to Warre,
Your Souldiers Valour, and not Words,
Whose Worth shall be rewarded with the Spoyle
Of these Reuolting Lords.
Warw. Ile canuase thee, and thy Complices,
Amidst your Troupes, presumptuous Protector,
Despight of all that shall withstand you.
Glost. Why then Sirs, forward.
Cardi. Lords, take your Places:
And Master Maior, see the Gates be kept,
Lest Gloster's Partakers enter in the City.

Enter Vaux.

Glost. Now Vaux, what Newes?
Vaux. Such as my Heart is sorry to vnfold.
The Duke of Yorke is entred in the Realme,
And hath vp-reared his Banner in Wales.
Warw. Ha, Vaux, thou speak'st it well, by my Salvation,
That Traytor knew, how deare I bare his Blood,
And therefore sent me Word, to stay his Fury.
Vaux. True, Noble Earle, but when my Lord beheld
How Glosters Wrongs were smother'd in his Wrongs,
Scorning Delayes, and smiling at Aduice,
The Vulgar sort, like Children in the Snow,
Pestring before the Faces of their Guides,
Muffled in Ignorance, and mad with Rage,
Clapt vp Proclamations in Euery Market-Towne,
Till they had throng'd a mighty Host together,
Which now they leade, as Tydes do multiply,
Vnto the Ocean, that deuours them all.
Glost. Villaine, thou know'st the Law of Armes is such,
That whosoeuer drawes a Sword 'gainst Right,
And hath not Warrant from his Soueraigne,
Nor Proclaimed Traytor for his Treason,
Himselfe and all his Followers to the Field,
Accurst in Power, and Excommunicate,
Shall for the Fact be sure to lose his Head,
And that with Speed more than with Desire
A wretched Banckrout hastens to his Graue.
And you braue Peeres, this Cursie vnto you,
Before the Wicked Enemy of your Peace,
Command his Conduct to the Sacred Throne:
Neglect no Power to intercept the Duke.
Warw. Your Grace shall vnderstand that Warwicke is
No Babe, nor can be dandled from his Purpose:
Nor stay I longer Parley with your Words,
Then serues to giue my Souldiers Hearts
Time to encounter with their Enemies.
Haue at thee, Yorke.
Cardi. Thus striues the Lyon, whilst the Foxe lookes on.
Vaux. Whom shall I certifie vnto the Duke,
Is coming with Full Power to claime the Crowne?
Glost. Villaine, his Grace shall think that Gloster stands
Vpon the Aduantage of the Field,
And not a Thought of him, that fights for Right,
Can harbour Feare, or Cowardize.
Vaux. Then Fame, with Speed, intelligence of Warre,
And euery Minute make it Actuall.
Glost. Good Vaux, thou speak'st it well in Termes of Warre.
Sirs, take your Places, and be vigilant:
If any Rebels or Malignants stir,
Straight giue Alarum, and vnto Armes,
Though it be Night, or Winter Frosts or Snowes,
Or the Eye of Heauen burne.
Cardi. Lords, to the Field: Saint George and Victorie.
Exeunt.

Alarum, and Warwicke is vanquished.

Warw. How now my Lord of Salisbury?
Sal. Ah Warwicke, Salisbury hath breathed his last,
That neuer Sword did hurt, but in Defence,
That neuer Word did Wrong, but Truth to right,
Had not the Traytor Duke inuiron'd me
With Millions of his Hatefull Enemies.
What are the Fortunes waiting on the Day?
Tell me, that I may dye with Data on my Lips.
Warw. Ah Salisbury, the Day frowns on our Plaints,
Edward is Victor, Yorke is Conqueror,
And all is lost, except our Honors Heauen.
Sal. Shall Warwicke say himselfe not ouermatch'd,
But by the Force of Edward and his Friends?
Warw. Edward hath Friends, that power as they list,
And so hath Warwicke: I am powerfull found,
More than my Wish can make me but to see.
Ah Montague, if I had fed as long
On Honors Sweet-meate, as on Earths Dish,
This Hand had temper'd other Things than Death,
Ere thus Vnreuerently it had bereft
Thee of Life, before the Life of Warwicke.
Now Summon vp the Remnant of my Spirits,
Since first I call'd my Brother's Glory vp,
And that great Minde, which hath no Thought but Life,
Did I commend my Blessed Mother's Prayers,
And with his Latest Breath bad me Reuenge
His Death, which neuer hopes more Heauen than Warre.
Sal. Then let vs dye with Honor, if not Liue,
Expecting Death, but not inuiting it.
Our Mindes (Dame Fortune) thou shalt not command:
Proud Scorner, Do not Vaunt how quickly thou
Canst ouerturne the Mightie, for the Weake:
Thy Fickle Gifts thou shalt not count vpon,
So dearely will we sell our Liues to Thee.
Warw. Come Montague, we'le fall with Fame, and Earth
Stoopes not to Heauen more proudly than we will.

Alarum, Excursions, Warwicke and Salisbury are beaten out.

Enter Yorke, Edward, Richard, and Soldiers.

Yorke. Of Warwicke, and of Montague,
Past all Recouery, and as I could wish,
Neere to the King in Blessed Majesty.
Edward. Thus farre our Fortune keepes an Vpward Course,
And we are Grac'd with Wreathes of Victory.
But in the Midst of this braue Flush of Mirth,
His Duke of Somerset, whose Sullen Pride
Met thy Approach, as Gloster's Fatall Hand
Met his, by Vertue of thy Noble Father,
Now is the Time to proue our Fathers Loue,
If euer he will threaten Enemies,
Then let him neither Speake, nor Looke, nor Thinke,
But Arme to Answer Iniuries and Wrongs.
Richard. And that he will, and shall, if Edward Liue.
Yorke. Thanks gentle Sonne: so shalt thou reape the Fruite
Of thy first Fathers Toyle, and his Renowne,
Whose Name in Pulpits you haue often prais'd,
When bleeding Warre, and Dire Confusion
Was in his Mouth, the Scourge of Wicked Men,
And Antichrist, that Plotted Seas and Lands,
And this the Day wherein we needs must prooue
Either a Fatall or a Victorious Father.
My Mind presageth Happy Gaine and Conquest,
My Soule suggests, but I shall stretch my Power.

Enter Somerset.

Say Somerset, what Tydings with our Cousin Prize?
Somer. The Tydings as I hope to giue Reuiuing,
Doth leade me with more Warlike Followers
Than I brought forth, to meet with Yorke and Warwicke.
Richard. Why Somerset, the Power we haue in Field,
Will serue against the Quantity you name,
Incorporate with Warwicke and the Rest.
Somer. Ah Richard, with the Eyes of Heauy Mind,
I say Farewell vnto that Gallant Troupe.
Edward and Richard, like a brace of Greyhounds
Hauing the Fearefull Flying Hare in Sight,
With fiery Eyes, sparkling for Hope of Prey,
Do bend their Speed to Horsham, where their Foes
Are Resting after Warwicke's Ouerthrow.
Edward. Then Nothing lets but that we follow them.
Somer. Noble my Lord, I dare not for my Head,
Lest Edward's Death make Warwicke's Friends more Fell,
And Reconcile the Bloody Wrongs of Yorke
Vnto the Golden Fauour of the King.
*Yorke

And make him noted these Accusations forth
But he shall know I am as good.
Glost. As good?
Thou bastard of my Grandfather.
Winch. Ill Lord Sir to whom are you, I pray,
But one imperious in his Lordes Diocesse?
Glost. Am not Protector, saucie Priest?
Winch. And am not I Prelate of the Church?
Glost. Yes as an Outlaw in a Castle keepes,
And useth it to patronage his Theft.
Winch. Vnreuerent Gloster.
Glost. Thou art reuerent
Touching thy Spirituall function, pettie Life.
Winch. Presumptuous Dissembler.
Glost. Presumptuous Priest.
My Lord, ere I will indure to be forborne.
Sum. I to the Bishop be not ouer-borne.
Member, my Lord, you are but Lord of Hunsdon,
And know your Place and calling better farre.
Warw. My Lords, what meanes this, shame be humbler,
It freeth not Treason are you all.
Sum. Yes when base Peasants to their betters threate.
Warw. Shall Subiects grow to be so insolent?
In presence of their Prince and Soueraigne?
Richa. Prince and Soueraigne, I am glad you are one
Least you should take Occasion to be so.
Mort. Warwick, you are too malapert my Lords?
I wonder that you are not ashamed.
King. Vncles of Gloster and of Winchester,
The special Watchmen of our Royall Peace,
I would pray ye, Peers of my Realme,
To ouer-see their Actions and their Words.
O, what Scandals and Dishonors come,
That two such Noble Peeres as ye should Iarre?
Be ruled me Lords, or else I weep mine eyes,
Can lose me Crowne and Realme with Woe.
Our Vnion is the happie Tree of Peace,
That giues encrease to Plenty, Wealth.
All. Amen, Downe with the Tawny Coates.
King. What meanes this?
Warw. Alas, my Liege, mine eyes are wrapt,
Began to droppe Teares at the sight of Blood.
All. Amen, Downe with Stones Stones

Enter Maior.

Maior. O my good Lord, and vertuous Henry,
Pray to the Queene to calme downe her Wrath.
For Lord Protector and his Dukes Townesmen,
Enter the Streets with Weapon,
Hurle all downe Pikes Stones and Clubbes,
And beat downe all before them in their parts,
Doe pell mell as if Enemies to the Citie.
Their Maces beaten Officers knockt out:
Our Wiues and Children flye from Street to Street,
And we, for feare, compell'd to shut our Shops.

Enter in a Skirmish with bloody Pates.

King. We charge you, on Allegeance to our selfe,
To hold your slaughtring hands, and keepe the Peace:
Pray Vncle Gloster mitigate this strife.
1. Seruing. Nay if we be forbidden Stones, we le fall to it with our Teeth.
2. Seruing. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.
Skirmish again
Glost. You of my Houshold, leaue this peeuish broyle,
And set this vnaccustom'd fight aside.
3. Seru. My Lord, we know your Grace to be a man
Iust, and vpright; and for your Royall Birth,
Inferior to none but to his Maiestie.
And ere that we will suffer such a Prince,
So kinde a Father of the Common-weale,
To be disgraced by an Inkehorne Mate,
We and our Wiues and Children all will fight,
And haue our bodyes slaughtred by thy foes.
1 Seru. I, and the very parings of our Nayles
Shall pitch a Field when we are dead.
Begin againe.
Glost. Stay, stay, I say:
And if you loue me, as you say you doe,
Let me perswade you to forbeare awhile.
King. O, how this discord doth afflict my Soule.
Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold
My sighes and teares, and will not once relent?
Who should be pittifull, if you be not?
Or who should study to preferre a Peace,
If holy Churchmen take delight in broyles?
Warw. Yes, my Lord Protector, yet will not Winchester,
Except you meane with obstinate repulse
To slay your Soueraigne, and destroy the Realme.
You see what Mischiefe, and what Murther too,
Hath been enacted through your enmitie:
Then be at peace except ye thirst for blood.
Winch. He shall submit, or I will neuer yeeld.
Glost. Compassion on the King commands mine hoope
Or I would see his heart out ere the Priest
Should euer get that priuiledge of me.
Warw. Behold my Lord of Winchester the Duke
Hath banded his followers all and all,
As by his weapons may appeare:
Were looke you all of one Livery, as it were?
Glost. Here Winchester, I beare no hand,
King. For Vncle Humfrey, I see nothing you preach,
That Malice was a great and grieuous sinne:
And what not, but the greater workes you teach?
But pride which is the worst of all the rest
Humf. Sweet brother, I do hope they may ashamed be
For shaming me in matter of Deuotion.
Were this a Time to answer wrong with wrong?
Winch. Well Duke of Gloster I will yeeld to thee
Loue for thy Loue and Hand for Hand, etc.
Glost. I, but I feare me with a hollow Heart.
See here my Friends and louing Countreymen,
This token serueth for a Flagge of Truce,
Betwixt our selues and all our followers
So helpe me God, as I dissemble not.
Winch. So helpe me God as I intend it not.
King. O louing Vncle, kinde Duke of Gloster,
How ioyfull am I made by this Contract.
Away my Masters, trouble vs no more,
But ioyne in friendship as your Lords haue done.
1 Seru. Content, Ile to the Surgeon.
2 Seru. And so will I.
3. Seru. And I will see what Physick the Tauerne affords. Exeunt.
Warw. Accept this Scrowle, most gracious Soueraigne,
Which in the Right of Richard Plantagenet,
We doe exhibite to your Maiestie.
Glo. Well vrg'd my Lord of Warwick for sweet Prince,
And if your Grace marke euery circumstance,
You haue great reason to doe Richard right,
Especially for those occasions
At Eltham Place I told your Maiestie.
King. And

King. And those occasions, Vncle, were of force.
Therefore my loving Lords, our pleasure is,
That Richard be restored to his Blood.
Warw. Let Richard be restored to his Blood,
So shall his fathers wrongs be recompenst.
Winch. As will the rest, so willeth Winchester
King. If Richard will be true, not that alone,
But all the whole Inheritance I give,
That doth belong vnto the House of Yorke
From whence you spring, by lineall Descent.
Rich. Thy humble new-made vowes obedience,
And humble seruice, till the point of death.
King. Stoop then, and set your Knee against my Foot,
And in reguerdon of that duteous deed,
I giue thee with the valiant Sword of Yorke
Rise Richard, like a true Plantagenet,
And at the creation Prince y Duke of Yorke
Rich. And to the noble Richard, as my loues may fall,
And as my duteous spirits, so perfit may,
That grudge one thought against your Maiesty
All. Welcome high Prince, the mighty Duke of Yorke
Som. Perish base Prince, ignoble Duke of Yorke
Clif. Now will it best auaile your Maiestie,
To cosset the Seas, and to be Crown'd in France
The presence of a King engenders loue
Amongst his Subiects and his loyall Friends,
As it disanimates his Enemies.
King. When Conquer'd I am crown'd, King Henry goes,
For then my countenance with my stay, Foes
Exit from Oration to Peace, and Peace to Warre.
Sonet. Flourish. Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

Exet. I, wee may march in England, or in France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue.
This late dissention growne betwixt the Peeres,
Burnes vnder-hand the Ashes of forepast Warre,
And will at last breake out into a flame,
As fester'd members rot but by degree,
Till bones and flesh and sinewes fall away,
So will this base and enuious discord breed
And now I feare me (sage Exeter) Prophesie,
When first this Crowne on Henry was set,
Whose wombe enclosed the worthies of his Name,
That Henry borne at Monmouth, should win all,
And Henry borne at Windsor, should lose all:
Which is but heard, that Exeter doth wish,
His dayes may finish, ere that hapless time. Exit

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Pucell disguised with foure Souldiers with Sacks vpon their backs.

Pucell. These are the Citie Gates, the Gates of Roan,
Through which our Policy must make a breach.
Take heed, be wary how you place your words,
Talke like the vulgar sort of Market men,
That come to gather Money for their Corne.
If we haue entrance, as I hope we shall,
And that we finde the slouthfull Watch but weake,
I doubt not but with our nimble iaunts
That Charles the Dolphin may encounter them.

Souldier. Our Sacks shall be a meane to sacke the City
And we be Lords and Rulers ouer Roan,
Therefore we'le knock.
Knock.
Watch (within) Qui la
Pucell. Paisans, pauures gens de France,
Poore Market folkes that come to sell their Corne.
Watch (within) Enter, goe in, the Market bell is rung.
Pucell. Now Roan, we shake thy Bulwarkes to the ground.
Exeunt.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanson.

Charles. Saint Denis bless this happy Stratagem,
And once againe we'le sleepe secure in Roan.
Bastard. Here entred Pucell and her Practisants:
Now she is there, how will she specifie
Here is the best and safest passage in?
Alan. By thrusting out Torches from yonder Tower,
Which once discerned, shewes that her meaning is,
No way to that, for weakenesse which she entred.
Enter Pucell on the top, thrusting out a Torch burning.
Pucell. Behold this is the happy wedding Torch,
That ioynes Roan vnto her Countrymen,
But burning after to the Tallbot.
Tallbot. See where the Nymph of Hell sits crowned,
The Tallbot lies within her curssed hands
Charles. Now Dame, how doth the Prisoner?
A Prayer to the Fiends your Friends.
Bast. Defend that prayer should haue dangerous ends,
I feare the Enchantresse, the Diuell speed her.
And now the Watch is entred. Alarum.

An Alarum. Excursions. Enter Fastolfe brought in a Coarse.

Enter Tallbot and his Company without, within Pucell, Charles, Bastard and Reignier on the Walls.

Pucell. Come sorrow Cowards, wanting Corne for Bread:
I trust the Duke of Bedford will not come,
Before these be bestowed to their Turne.
'Twas not for Damsels thus to keepe the Walls?
Bast. Scoffe on vile Fiend, and shamelesse Curtezan,
I trust ere long to choake thee with thine owne,
And make thee curse the Harue-hot that Corne.
Charles. Your Grace may starue perhaps before that time.
Bast. Oh let no words, but deedes, reuenge this Treason.
Pucell. What will you do good grey-beard?
Breake a Launce, and runne a-tilt at Death,
Within a Chayre
Talb. Foule Fiend of France and Hag of all despight,
Incompast with thy lasciuious Paramours,
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant Age,
And twit with Cowardize a man halfe dead?
Damsel, Ile haue a bowt with you againe,
Or else let Tallbot perish with this shame.
Pucell. Are ye so hot, Sir? yet Pucell hold thy peace,
If Tallbot doe but Thunder Rayne will follow.
They whisper together in counsell.
God speed the Parliament, who shall be the Speaker?

Tal. Dare vee come forth, and meet vs in the field?
Pucel. Belike your Lordship takes vs then for fooles,
To try if that our owne be ours, or no.
Tal. I speake not to that rayling Hecate,
But vnto thee Alanson, and thee.
Will ye like Souldiors, come and fight it out?
Alan. Seigneur no.
Tal. Seigneur hang: base Muleters of France,
Like Peasant foote-Boyes do they keepe the Walls,
And dare not take vp Armes, like Gentlemen.
Pucell. Away Captaines, scorne to answer them from the Walls,
For Talbot meanes no good, like one of vs.
Good Master Lord, we came but to tell you
That we are here. Exeunt from the Walls.
Tal. And there we will be too, ere it be long,
Or else reproach be Talbots greatest fame.
Vow Burgonie, by honor of his Name,
That Lucifer with all his Wizards, late raisd on France,
Cannot get out of these monstrous Guirdes,
And (as for you that hold Dishonorable minds)
Assure your selves to worke Confusion;
As I am Christian, every foot I leave this Towne,
Comes home again, and drops that stayes behind,
Some two, some three, some foure, but not aboue,
(Brave Warriors, by the worke assigned vnto thee)
Vowes.
Tal. But ere we part, intreat the gallant Pucell,
The valiant Duke of Yorke, and my good Lord,
How best we may vnite to helpe each other,
Either for safety of your single state,
Bed. Lord Talbot, I do know you for a man:
Herewith I take the part of Guyen Roan,
And will be partner of your weale or woe.
Burg. Courageous Bedford, let vs now perswade you.
Bedf. Not to be gone from hence: for once I read,
That stout Pendragon in his Litter sick,
Came to the field, and vanquished his foes:
Me thinkes I should renew the former resolutes,
Because I ever found them as my friends.
Tal. Victorious Prince, and valiant gentle Duke,
Then do not so: Heauens keepe our enterprise,
And now no more adoe, braue Commanders,
But gather we our Forces out of hand,
And set vpon our boasting Enemie. Exit.

An Alarum. Excursions. Enter Sir Iohn Fastolfe and a Captaine.

Capt. Whither away, Sir Iohn Fastolfe in such haste?
Fast. Whither away? to saue my life by flight,
We are like to haue the ouerthrow againe.
Capt. What? will you fly, and leaue Lord Talbot?
Fast. I, all the Talbots in the World, to saue my life. Exit.
Capt. Cowardly Knight, ill fortune follow thee. Exit.

Retreat. Excursions. Pucell, Alanson, and Charles flie.

Tal. Now quiet Soule depart when Heauen please,
For I haue seene our Enemies ouerthrow
What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They that of late were daring with their scoffes,
Are glad and faine by flight to saue themselues.
Shoote off, and is carryed in by two in his Chaire.

An Alarum. Enter Talbot, Burgonie, and the rest.

Tal. Lost, and recouered in a day againe,
This is a double Honor, Burgonie
Yet Heauens haue glory for all Victorie.
Burg. Warlike and Martiall Talbot, Burgonie
Inshrines thee in his heart, and there erects
Thy noble Deeds, as Valors Monuments.
Tal. Thanks gentle Duke. but where is Pucel now?
I thinke her old Familiar is asleepe.
Now where's the Bastards braues, and Charles his gleekes?
What all amort? Roan hangs her head for griefe,
That such a valiant Company are fled.
Now will we take some order in the Towne,
Placing therein some expert Officers,
And then depart to Paris, to the King,
For there young Henry with his Nobles lye.
Burg. What wills Lord Talbot pleaseth Burgonie
Tal. But ere we go, let's not forget
The Noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
But see his Exequies fulfill'd in Roan.
A braver Souldier neuer couched Launce,
A gentler Heart did neuer sway in Court.
But Kings and mightiest Potentates must die,
For that's the end of humane misery. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Charles, Baitard, Alanson, Pucell.
Pucell. Dismay not Princes, at this accident,
Nor grieue that Roan is so recouered:
Care is a cure, but rather corrosive,
For things that are not to be remedy'd.
Let frantike Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a Peacock sweepe along his tayle,
We'll pull his Plumes, and take away his Trayne,
If Dolphin and the rest will be but ruled.
Charles. We haue been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy Cunning had no diffidence.
One sudden Foyle shall neuer breed mistrust.
Baitard. Search out thy wit for secret pollicies,
And we will make thee famous through the World.
Alanson. We'll set thy Statue in some holy place,
And haue thee reuerenc'd like a blessed Saint.
Employ thee then, sweet Virgin, for our good.
Pucell. Then thus it must be, this doth Ioane deuise:
By faire perswasions, mixt with sugred words,
We will entice the Duke of Burgonie
To leaue the Talbot, and to follow vs.
Charles. I marry Sweeting, if we could doe that,
France were no place for Henryes Warriors,
Nor should that Nation boast it so with vs,
But be extirped from our Prouinces.
Alanson. For euer should they be expulsed from France,
And not haue Title of an Earledome here.
Pucell. Your Honors shall perceiue how I will worke,
To bring this matter to the wished end.
Hearke, by the sound of Drumme you may perceiue
Their Powers are marching vnto Paris-ward.
Here sounds an English March.
There goes the Talbot with his Colours spred,
And all the Troupes of English after him.

French

French March.

Now in the Reteward comes the Duke and his
Fortune in favor makes him prouder yet.
Summons a Parley, we will talke with him.

Trumpets, and a Parley

Charles. A Parley with the Duke of Bedford?

Burg. Who craves a Parley with the Burgonie?

Pucell. The Prince, Charles of France, thou Countrey-man

Burg. What's that Pucell? for his marching hence.

Charles. Speake Pucell, and enchant him with thy words.

Pucell. Braue Burgonian, bold Duke of Bedford, peace,
Stay, let thy humble Handmaid speake to thee.

Burg. Speake on, but be not ouer-tedious.

Pucell. Looke on thy Country, looke on fertile France,
And see the Cities and the Townes defac'd,
By wasteful Warres of cruell Enemies,
As lookes the Mother on her louely Babe,
When Death doth close his tender dying eyes,
See, see the pining Malady of France,
Behold the Wounds, the most vnnatural wounds,
Which thou thy selfe hast giuen her woefull breast.
O turne thy edged Sword another way,
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that helpe,
One drop of Bloud drawne from thy Countries bosome,
Should grieue thee more than streames of foraine gore.
Recure those griefes with these that caus'd them first,
Virtuously bent to vertuous obsequies.
Within the Limits of thy Lawfull Warres,
Abate the edge of Traitors, Gracelesse Vice,
Which like a Canker in the fragrant Rose,
Doth spoile the beauty of the goodly Land,
With Famine, Plague, and intestine broyles.
Charles. Beauteous and learned Virgin, to expostulate
Do not thy Glory, and thy Time exceed reason,
Whose Vertues more than Heroicall Nature,
Do well approue thee, worthy Prophetesse,
Were we assured of those happie dayes,
As by thy wordes thou seem'st to vs full bent,
Would by the Dukes of Orleance thy Deere
And we the Princes of the Bloud of France,
Make our hearts Adamant against all feare,
Resigne our Interest in the Realme of France,
Vnto the Crowne of Henry our Soueraigne,
Confirme the Articles of Peace,
And with eternall League, both Nations,
Liue in Amity, as Members of one Head,
Come, come resume, resolue on some faire end,
Charles, and these two Princes heere on Knees.
Burg. I am vanquished
These heauenly words of hers
Haue darted me like roaring Cannon shot,
And made me almost yeeld vpon my knees
To giue my Country, and sweet Countreymen.
All Lords accord to heare what she doth say.
My Forces and my Power at Mens commands.
So farewell Talbot I no longer trust thee,

Pucell. Done like a Frenchman: turne and turne again.

Charles. Welcome braue Duke, thy friendship makes vs fresh.

Bastard. And doth beget new Courage in our Breasts.

Alanf. Pucell hath bravely play'd her part in this,
And doth deserue a Coronet of Gold.

Charles. Now let vs on, my Lords,
And ioyne our Powers,
And seeke how we may prejudice the Foe. Exeunt

Scæna Quarta.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Winchester, Yorke, Suffolke, Somerset, with the Master Gunner of Orleance, and his Boy.

Tal. Mars his true Moode, braue Princes, and Honorable Peeres,
Hee ioyn'd with starres, like Enuious Rebell,
Iupiter in Iuno's Angry Wrathes,
Leades my Soule to Battaile.
Now we are Orleance, this Auncient reclaimed
Two Bulwarkes, and their Towres,
Two Forts, and new built Townes of strength,
Sixe Fortresses, and Pallizadoes;
Leaue Sconces, Courts, and Rampiers vnassaulted.
As yet there's nothing got,
All rests in doubt of this Conquest,
Let vs then Captaines, Valiant Warlike Peeres,
Assault the Towne, plant Ordnance, Loose no time,
Least Fortune, and the Countries Fauour,
Now Wee conducted, Caesar and his Lord
(Now I haue yours, and leaue mine owne.)
Loose remembrance of our Fauours,
And greet Charles, and his Princes,
Like Fearefull Enemies, and flye the Towne.
Now Wee command, Charles and his Princes Lord

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter King, Gouernor Warwicke Yorke, Suffolke, Somerset prisoners, Talbot and others of Orleyance.

Gou. Lord Bishop set the Crowne vpon his head.
Wa. God saue King Henry of that name the sixt.
Gou. Now Gouernour of Paris take your oath,
That you elect no other King but him,
Esteeme none Friends but such as shall pretend
Malicious practises against his State:
This shall ye do, or else you neuer see God.
Enter Exeter.
Fal. My gracious Soueraigne, as I rode from Calice,
To hasten vnto your Coronation:
A Letter was deliuer'd me by hands,
Writ to your Grace from the Duke of Burgundy.
Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy and thee.
I vow'd base Knight when I did meet thee next,
To teare the Garter from thy Cowards knee,
Who I thought was ere this (for all thy blood)
Too true a Subiect and too braue a Peere.
Pardon me Princely Henry and the rest:
This Dastard at the battell of Patay,
When but in all I was sixe thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met, or that a stroke was giuen,
Like to a trustie Squire, did run away
In which assault we lost twelue hundred men.
My selfe, and diuers Gentlemen beside,
Were there surpriz'd, and taken prisoners.
Then iudge great Lords if I haue done amisse:
Or whether that such Cowards ought to weare
This Ornament of Knighthood, yea or no?
Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill beseeming any common man,
Much more a Knight, a Captaine, and a Leader.
Tal. When first this Order was ordained my Lords,
Knights of the Garter were of Noble birth:
Valiant and Vertuous, full of high Courage,
Such as were growne to credit by the warres
Not fearing Death, nor shrinking for Distresse,
But alwayes resolute, in most extremes.
He then that is not furnished in this sort,
Doth but vsurpe the Sacred name of Knight,
Profaning this most Honourable Order,
And should (if I were worthy to be Iudge)
Be quite degraded, like a Hedge-borne Swaine,
That doth presume to boast of Gentle blood.
K. Hen. Stain to thy Countrymen, thou hear'st thy doome:
Be packing therefore thou that wast a Knight:
Henceforth we banish thee on paine of death.
And now my Lord of Exeter, view the Letter
Sent from our Vncle Duke of Burgundy.
Glo. What means his Grace, that he hath chaung'd his Style?
No more but plaine and blunt? (To the King.)
Hath he forgot he is his Soueraigne?
Or doth this churlish Superscription
Pretend some alteration in good will?
What's here? I haue entred into Armes,
Moou'd with compassion of my Countries wracke,
Together with the pitifull complaints
Of such as your oppression feedes vpon,
Forsaken your pernicious Faction,
And ioyned with Charles, the rightfull King of France.
O monstrous Treachery! Can this be so?
That in a Nation, where there is no bands,
There should be found such false dissembling guile?
King. What doth my Vncle Burgundy reuolt?
Glo. He doth my Lord, and is become your foe.
King. Is that the worst this Letter doth contain?
Glo. It is the worst, and all (my Lord) he writes.
King. Why then Lord Talbot there shall talk with him,
And giue him chastisement for this abuse.
How say you (my Lord) are you not content?
Tal. Content, my Liege? Yes: But I am preuented,
I thought I had begg'd my knighthood before this day.
King. Then gather strength, and march vnto him straight:
Let him perceiue how ill we brooke his Treason,
And what offence it is to flout his Friends.
Tal. I go my Lord, in haste, excuse me that I
You may behold confusion of your foes.
Enter Vernon and Basse.
Ver. Grant me the Combate, gracious Soueraigne.
Bas. And me (my Lord) grant me the Combate too
Yorke. This is my Seruant, heare him Noble Prince.
Som. And this is mine (sweet Henry) fauour him.
King. Be patient Lords, and giue them leaue to speak.
Say Gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaime,
And wherefore craue you Combate? Of with whom?
Ver. With him (my Lord) for he hath done me wrong.
Bas. And I with him, for he hath done me wrong.
King. What is that wrong, whereof you both complain?
First let me know, and then Ile answer you.
Bas. Crossing the Sea, from England into France,
This Fellow here with enuious carping tongue,
Vpbraided me about the Rose I weare,
Saying, that the ground of the colour of the Leaues
Did represent my Masters blushing cheekes.
When stubbornly he did repugne the truth,
About a certaine question in the Law
Argued betwixt the Duke of Yorke and him.
With other vile and ignominious termes:
In confutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my Lords worthinesse,
I craue the benefit of Law of Armes.
Ver. And that is my petition Noble Lord:
For though he seeme with forged quaint conceite
To set a glosse vpon his bold intent,
Yet know my Lord, I was prouok'd by him,
And he first tooke exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing that the paleness of this Flower,
Bewrayed the faintnesse of my Masters heart.
Yorke. Will not this malice Somerset be left?
Som. Your priuate grudge my Lord of York, will out,
Though ne're so cunningly you smother it.
King. Good Lord, what madnesse rules in braine-sicke men,
When for so slight and friuolous a cause,
Such factious emulations shall arise?
Good Cousins both of Yorke and Somerset,
Quiet your selues I pray, and be at peace.
Yorke. Let this dissension first be tride by fight,
And then your Highnesse shall command a Peace.
Som. The quarrell toucheth none but vs alone,
Betwixt our selues let vs decide it then.
Yorke. There is my pledge, accept it Somerset.
Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas.

Buff. Confirme it so, mine honourable Lord.
Glo. Confirme it so? Confounded be your strife,
And perish ye with your audacious prate,
Presumptuous vassals, are you not asham'd
With this immodest clamorous outrage,
To trouble and disturbe the King, and Vs?
And you my Lords, me thinkes you do not well
To beare with their perverse Objections
Much lesse to take occasion from their mouthes,
To raise a mutiny betwixt your selves.
Let me perswade you take a better course.
Exet. It greeues his Highnesse,
Good my Lords, be Friends.
King. Come hither you that would be Combatants
Henceforth I charge you, as you love our fauour,
Quite to forget this Quarrel, and the cause.
And you my Lords: Remember where we are,
In France, amongst a fickle wauering Nation,
If they perceiue dissention in our Lookes,
And that within our selues we disagree;
How will their grudging stomackes be prouoked
To wilful disobedience, and Rebellion?
Beside, what infamy will there arise
When Foreign Princes shall be certified,
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henries Peeres, and chiefe Nobility,
Destroy'd the Conquest of the Orleance?
Ob think vpon the Conquest of my Father,
My tender yeares, and let vs not forgoe
That for a fact, so iust and holy wrought,
Let me be Vnpartiall in this your doubt.
Then reason will our hearts should be as good
That any one should lose the good he hath,
Into the hands of Somerset than Yorke:
Both are my Kinsmen, and I loue them both
As well they may vpon their sides of my Crowne,
Because (forsooth) the King of Scots is Crowned.
But your discretions better can perswade,
Then I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore, as we found it best before,
So let vs still continue peace, and loue.
Cosin of Yorke, we institute your Grace
To be our Regent in these parts of France:
And good my Lord of Somerset, vnite
Your Troopes of horsemen, with his Bands of foote,
And like true Subiects, sonnes of your Progenitors,
Go cheerefully together and digest
Your angry Choller on your Enemies.
Our Selfe, my Lord Protector and the rest,
After some respite will returne to Calice;
From thence to England, where I hope ere long
To be presented by your Victories,
With Charles Alanson, and that Traiterous rout.
Exeunt {Manet Yorke, Warwick, Exeter, Vernon
War. My Lord of Yorke, I promise you the King
Prettily (me thought) did play the Orator.
Yorke. And so he did, but yet I like it not,
In that he weares the badge of Somerset.
War. Tush, that was but his fancie, blame him not,
I dare presume (sweet Prince) he thought no harme.
Yorke. And if I wish he did. But let it rest,
Other affayres must now be managed. Exeunt.

Flourish. Manet Exeter.

Exet. Well didst thou Richard to suppresse thy voice
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I feare we should haue seene deciphered there
More rancorous spight, more furious raging broyles,
Then yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.
But howsoere, no simple man that sees
This iarring discord of Nobilitie,
This shouldering of each other in the Court,
This factious bandying of their Fauourites,
But that it doth presage some ill euent.
'Tis much, when Scepters are in Childrens hands.
But more, when Enuy breeds vnkind deuision,
There comes ruine, there begins confusion. Exit.

Enter Talbot with Trumpe and Drumme, before Bourdeaux.

Tal. Go to the Gates of Bordeaux Trumpeter, Summon their Generall vnto the Wall. Sounds.

Enter Generall &c.

English Iohn Talbot (for that's thy name) I call you forth,
Seruant in Armes to Harry King of England,
And thus he would: Open your Citie Gates,
Be humble to vs, call my Souereigne yours,
And do him homage as obedient Subiects,
And I'le withdraw me and my bloudy power.
But if you frowne vpon this proffered Peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Leane Famine, quartering Steele, and climbing Fire,
Who in a moment euen with the earth,
Shall lay your stately and air-braving Towers,
If you forsake the offer of their loue.
Cap. Thou ominous and fearefull Owle of death,
Our Nations terror, and their bloudy scourge,
The period of thy Tyranny approacheth,
On vs thou canst not enter but by death.
For I protest we are well fortified,
And strongly incampt to dare you to the fight.
Do what you can, the Dolphin we are appointed,
Sent with our Orders hence to worke thee downe,
Once more I warne thee, there are Gates and Walles
To wall thee from the liberty of flight,
And no way can'st thou turne thee for redresse,
But death doth front thee with apparant spoyle,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French haue ta'ne the Sacrament,
To rent and race thy ling'ring Anatomie.
Bethink thee (Monster) ere thou hedlong dare
The iudgement of reuengefull Warre,
Resolue thee Talbot, once more bid thee yield,
For see the Coward hath a breathing valiant man
Of an inuincible vnconquered spirit.
This is the latest Glory of thy praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withall:
For ere the Glasse that now begins to runne,
Finish the processe of his sandy hower,
These eyes that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd bloody, pale and dead.
Drum a farre off.
Harke, harke, the Dolphins drumme, a warning bell,
Sings heauy Musicke to thy timorous soule,
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out. Exit.
Tal. He fables not, I heare the enemie:
Out some light Horsemen, and peruse their Wings.
O negligent and heedlesse Discipline,
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale?
A little Herd of Englands timorous Deere,
Mazed with a yelping kennell of French Curres.
If we be English Deere, be then in blood,
Not Rascall-like to fall downe with a pinch,
But rather moodie mad: And desperate Stagges,

Turne

Turne on the [illegible] Heads of Steele,
And make the Cowards stand aloofe at bay:
Sell every man his life as dearely as mine,
And they shall finde Dearer then my Friends.
God, and Saint George, Talbot and right,
Prosper our Colours in this dismall day.

Enter a [illegible] hastily, and after Talbot and [illegible].

Yorke. Are Talbots colours all are fled so soone,
True to their word he made vs of the Dolphin
Mes. True Lords, they are, and Talbot is taken prisoner,
Talbot my Lord is taken prisoner,
Lord Talbot with [illegible] is taken,
Fly graue Lords, or else you are surprized,
Hasting after [illegible] Dolphin,
[illegible]

Yorke. A plague vpon that Villaine Somerset,
That thus delayes my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were leuied to this end,
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aide,
And I am lingring here with cowards:
God comfort him in this necessity:
If he miscarry, farewell Warre in France.

[illegible]

Mes. Thy [illegible] strong,
Neuer [illegible]
[illegible] Talbot,
[illegible]
And [illegible]
[illegible]
Yorke. [illegible]
Dishonorable [illegible] Talbot,
Sir [illegible]
By [illegible]
Mounts, and [illegible]
That [illegible]
Mes. [illegible]
Yorke. Hee [illegible] weake supply?
We marcht [illegible] Ascoote, [illegible],
And long of you we left Lord Somerset.
Mes. This [illegible] two houres since,
I met the [illegible]
This [illegible]
And [illegible]
Yorke. Ah [illegible] Talbot dies,
That [illegible]
Away, [illegible]
I [illegible]
I [illegible]
[illegible] are woone away,
[illegible] Exit
Mes. [illegible]
Fearing [illegible] great Commanders,
[illegible]
The Conquering [illegible] Conqueror,
That [illegible] Mamore,
Fremish [illegible]
Lakes, [illegible], [illegible], and all, nurse to losse.

Enter Somerset with his Armie.

Som. It is too late, I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by Yorke and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted. All our generall force,
Might [illegible] for every Towne
Be [illegible] with the ouer-daring Talbot
[illegible] glosse of former Honor
[illegible] desperate wilde aduenture:
[illegible] to light, and ouer-shame,
That Talbot dead, great Yorke might beare the name.
Cap. Heere is Sir William Lucie who with me
Set from our o're-matcht forces forth for aide.
Som. How now Sir William, whether were you sent?
Lu. Whether my Lord from bought and sold L. Talbot,
Who ring'd about with bold aduersitie,
Cries out for noble Yorke and Somerset,
To [illegible] beaten from his weake Legions,
And whiles the honourable Captaine there
Drops bloody sweat from his warre-wearied limbes,
And [illegible] rage and force to force,
You [illegible] thus [illegible] honor,
[illegible]
Let his [illegible] sleepe away
[illegible] course to the lowe-thatcht mayne,
[illegible]
You [illegible] to a vow'd reproches
[illegible]
Som. [illegible] you, Yorke should have fetcht him
ouer
Lu. Ay, my Lord Somerset, what you should
Are not [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] have sent, and make Hotte
[illegible] Dispatch, this doe I [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] to [illegible] Clarke,
[illegible] the Nemean [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] to offend by your [illegible].
[illegible] Come on, I warrant ye the Gentlemen that
[illegible] they will beat us ayde
Lu. Then [illegible] extraordinary flame, [illegible] world, the world quite
And [illegible] Talbot praises can be [illegible].
Som. [illegible] braue Talbot [illegible]
Lu. His Fame lives in the world, His Shame in you.
Exeunt.

Enter Talbot and his Sonne.

Tal. O young John Talbot, I did send for thee
To [illegible] thee first to Warre,
That Talbots name might be in thee reuiu'd,
When sapleste Age, and weake vnable limbes
Should [illegible] my Father to his drooping Graue.
But (O malignant and ill-boading Starres)
Now thou art come vnto a Feast of death,
A terrible and vnauoided danger.
Therefore deere Boy, mount on my swiftest horse,
And [illegible] thou shalt escape
By [illegible] flight. Come, dally not, be gone.
Iohn. Is my name Talbot? and am I your Sonne?

Shall

And shall I flye? O, if you loue my Mother,
Dishonor not her Honorable Name,
To make a Bastard and a Slaue of me:
The World will say, he is not Talbots blood,
That basely fled, when Noble Talbot stood.
Talb. Flye, to reuenge my death, if I be slaine.
Iohn. He that flyes so, will neuer returne againe.
Talb. If we both stay, we both are sure to dye.
Iohn. Then let me stay, and, Father doe you flye:
Your losse is great, so your regard should be;
My worth vnknowne, no losse is known in me.
Vpon my death, the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stayne the Honor you haue won,
But mine it will, that no Exploit haue done.
You fled for Vantage, euery one will swear;
But if I bow, they'le say it was for feare.
There is no hope that euer I will stay,
If the first houre I shrink and run away.
Here on my knee I beg Mortality
Rather than life, preserued with infamy.
Talb. Shall all thy Mothers hopes lye in one Tombe?
Iohn. Inclose not them, but shame alone my wombe.
Talb. Vpon my blessing I command thee goe.
Iohn. To fight I will, but not to flye thee foe.
Talb. Part of thy Father may be sau'd in thee.
Iohn. No part of him, but will be sham'd in mee.
Talb. Thou neuer had'st renowne, nor canst not lose.
Iohn. Yes your renowned Name: Shall flight abuse it?
Talb. Thy Father charge thee do not flye.
Iohn. Your Sonne will pardon me, if I flye.
If Death be so apparant, then both flye.
Talb. And leaue my Valiant Harry to affright the foe?
My Age was neuer tainted with such shame.
Iohn. And shall my Youth be guilty of such blame?
No more can I be seuered from your side,
Than can your selfe, your selfe in twaine deuide:
Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I;
For liue I will not, if my Father die.
Talb. Then heere I take my leaue of thee faire Sonne,
Borne to eclipse, and die with after-one.
Come, side by side together liue and dye,
And soule with soule from France to Heauen flye. Exit.

Alarum: Excursions wherein Talbot Sonne is hemm'd about, and Talbot rescues him.

Talb. Saint George and Victory: fight Soldiers, fight:
The Regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left vs to the rage of France his Sword.
Where is Iohn Talbot? pause, and take thy breath,
I gaue thee Life and rescu'd thee from Death.
Iohn. O twice my Father, twice am I thy Sonne:
The Life thou gau'st me first, was lost and done,
Till with thy Warlike Sword, despight of Fate,
To my determin'd time thou gau'st new date.
Talb. When from the Dolphins Crest thy Sword struck fire,
It warm'd thy Fathers heart with proud desire
Of bold-faced Victorie. Then Leaden Age,
Quicken'd with Youthful Spleene, and Warlike Rage,
Beat downe Alanson, Orleance, Burgundie,
And from the Pride of Gallia rescued thee.
The vgly Bastard Orleance, that drew blood
From thee my Boy, and had the Maidenhood
Of thy first fight, I soone encountered,
And interchanging blowes, I quickly shed
Some of his Bastard blood, and in disgrace
Bespoke him thus: Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine,
Meane and right poore, for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou hast force from Talbot, my braue Boy:
Here purposing the Bastard to destroy,
Came in strong rescue. Speake thy Fathers care,
Art thou not weary Iohn? How dost thou fare?
Wilt thou not vse the Bastard, boy, and me,
Now thou art calld the Sonne of Conquest?
Liue to reuenge thy Father's wrongful Death,
Preserue the Honor of thy Noble Kin.
Ah, too much, by much thou art the Boy,
To stay with me, renowned Slaue and Boy.
To-morrow I shall expect newes of thee.
But now is not the time to thinke of that:
For Nobly thou hast gotten leaue to go.
Resume that Spirit, when you were so chid,
Remember what my Corpulent Name,
My Noble Father Talbot is, and what my Fame:
Attempt some high exploit, and take it ere to-day.
But go not headlong on thy Enemies,
Aduance and be not forward, but away.
Iohn. I go to Sword and Fire Reuenge on Death,
That hath depriu'd me of your Company,
Cries Talbot, Talbot, through the whole Campe shall ring,
Talbot the Feare, the Followers Spoyle and King.
And this the Regions where I meete with Fame,
To tame a Prince, I leape into the Flame,
Renowned Talbot doth expect my speed,
And with a Puissant and Victorious Deed.
Inferiour to no future Danger see,
And to Eternize me, or flye or die. Exit.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter old Talbot and

Tal. Where is my other Life, mine owne is gone.
O where's young Talbot? where is valiant Iohn?
Triumphant Death, smear'd with Captiuitie,
Young Talbot's Valour makes me smile at thee.
When he perceiu'd me first, he call'd my name,
And with a speechless Action, comming
Rouz'd with the sight of me, his Eye-balls glar'd,
And bending forward strooke his armed Heele
Vpon the subiect Ground, and learn'd Reuenge
Of me, effecting more than humane Powre.
Then I my angry Genius flattering,
Threw in more compasse, and like a Sooth-sayer,
Dazzled with Eyes, and great rage of Heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clustring Battaile of the French:
And in the vastie Field my Sword did drench
His Fauchion in the flood of their Bloods,
My Sword, that lucky Fortune in his pride.

Enter with Iohn Talbot borne.

Seru. O my deare Lord, lo where your Sonne is borne.
Tal. Thou antique Death, which laugh'st vs here to scorne,
Anon, from thy insulting Tyrannie,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuitie,
Two Talbots winged through the lither Skie,
In thy despight shall scape Mortalitie.

O thou whose wounds become hard-fauoured death,
Speake to thy Father ere thou yeeld thy breath,
Braue death by speaking, whether he will or no.
Imagine him a French-man, and thy foe.
Poore boy, he weepes, and takes, as who should say,
Had Death been French, then Death had dyed to day.
Come, come, and lay him in his Fathers armes,
My spirit can no longer beare these harmes.
Soldiers adieu: I haue what I would haue,
Now my old armes are yong Iohn Talbots graue. Dyes

Enter Charles, Alanson, Burgundie, Bastard, and Pucell.

Char. Had Yorke and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should haue found a bloody day of this.
Bast. How the young whelpe of Talbots raging wood,
Did flesh his puny sword in French-mens blood.
Puc. Once I encountred him, and thus I said:
Thou Maiden youth, be vanquisht by a Maide.
But with a proud Maiestical high scorne
He answer'd me: Young Talbot was not borne
To be the pillage of a Giglot Wench.
So rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as vnworthy fight.
Bur. Doubtlesse he would haue made a noble Knight:
See where he lyes inhearsed in the armes
Of the most bloody Nurser of his harmes.
Puc. Hew them to peeces, hack their bones asunder,
Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.
Char. O no forbeare: For that which we haue fled
During the life, let vs not wrong it dead.

Enter Lucie.

Lu. Herald, conduct me to the Dolphins Tent,
To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.
Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?
Lucy. Submission Dolphin? 'tis a meere French word.
We English warriors wot not what it means.
I come to know what Prisoners thou hast taken,
And to survey the bodies of the dead.
Char. For prisoners aske'st thou? Hell our prison is.
But tell me whom thou seek'st.
Lucy. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury?
Created for his rare successes,
Great Earle of Washford, Waterford and Valence,
Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Vrchinfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmere Lord Verdon of Alton,
Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnivall of Sumerled,
The thrice victorious Lord of Falconbridge,
Knight of the Noble Order of Saint George,
Worthies of Michael and the Golden Fleece,
Great Marshall to Henry the sixt,
Of all his Warres within the Realme of France.
Puc. Heere's a silly stately stile indeede.
The Turke that two and fifty Kingdomes hath,
Writes not so tedious a Stile as this.
Him that thou magnifiest with all these Titles,
Stinking and fly-blowne lies here at our feete.
Lucy. Is Talbot slaine, the Frenchmens only Scourge,
Your Kingdomes terror, and their direfull Nemesis?
Then where is mine eye-balles to roule withall,
Lest beames of wrath shoot it not out from hence.
Old Salisbury shake his graue head to day,
Ere I haue ayde to bury the Realme of France
Were but his picture left amongst you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Giue me their Bodyes, that I may beare them hence,
And giue them Buriall, as beseemes their worth.
Puc. I thinke this vpstart is old Talbots Ghost,
He speakes with such a proud commanding spirit.
For Gods sake let him haue him, to keepe them here,
Lest they would but stinke, and putrifie the ayre.
Char. Go take their bodyes hence.
Lucy. Ile beare them hence: but from their ashes shall be reard
A Phœnix that shall make all France affeard.
Char. So we be rid of them, do with em what ye will.
And now to Paris in this conquering vaine,
All will be ours, now bloody Talbots slaine. Exit

Scena secunda.

SENNET

Enter King, Glocester, and Exeter.

King. Haue you perus'd the Letters from the Pope,
The Emperor, and the Earle of Armenack?
Glo. I haue my Lord, and their intent is this,
They come in person vnto your Excellence,
And craue a generall peace, or cessation,
Betweene the Realmes of England, and of France.
King. How doth your Grace affect their motion?
Glo. Well my good Lord, and as the only meanes
To stop effusion of Christian blood,
And stablish quietnesse on every side.
King. I marry Vncle, for I alwayes thought
It vnaduisable, and vnnaturall,
To nourish any discord or diuision,
Specially betweene Christians.
But marry Vncle, what ambassadors
Are those, that craue a personall conference?
Glo. They are my Lord, Ambassadors from Charles,
Great Duke of Aniou, and the Countie Maine,
Proffers his onely daughter to your Grace,
In marriage, with a large and plentifull Dowrie.
King. Marriage Vncle? Alas my yeares are young
And fitter is my studie, and my bookes,
Than warlike dalliance with a Paramour.
Yet call th'Ambassadors, and as you please,
So shall they haue the motion: euery one,
I shall be well content with any choyce
Tends to Gods glory, and my Countries weale.

Enter Winchester, and three Ambassadors.

Exet. What, is my Lord of Winchester installed,
And call'd vnto a Cardinalls degree?
Then I perceiue, that will be verified
Henry the fifth did sometime prophesie.
If once he come to be a Cardinall,
Hee'le make his cappe coequall with the Crowne.
King. My Lords Ambassadors, your seuerall suites
Haue been consider'd and debated on,
Your purpose is both good and reasonable:
And therefore are we certainly resolu'd,
To draw conditions of a friendly peace,

Which

Which by my Lord of Winchester we meane
Shall be transported presently to France.
Glo. And for the proffer of my Lord your Master,
I have informed his Highnesse at large,
As liking of the Ladies vertuous gifts,
Her Beauty, and the value of her Dower,
He doth intend she shall be Englands Queene.
King. In argument and proofe of which contract,
Beare her this Jewell, pledge of my affection.
And so my Lord Protector see them guarded,
And safely brought to Dover, where inshipt
Commit them to the fortune of the sea. Exeunt.
Win. Stay my Lord Legate, you shall first receive
The summe of money which I promised
Should be delivered to his Holinesse,
For clothing me in these grave Ornaments.
Legat. I will attend upon your Lordships leysure.
Win. Now Winchester will not submit, I trow,
Or be inferiour to the proudest Peere;
Humfrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That neither in birth, or for authority,
The Bishop will be overborne by thee:
Ile either make thee stoope and bend thy knee,
Or sacke this Country with a mutiny. Exeunt

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alanson, Bastard, Reignier, and Lone.

Char. These newes (my Lords) may cheere our drooping spirits
'Tis said, the stout Parisians do revolt,
And turne again unto the warlike French.
Alan. Then goe in hast to Paris Royall Charles of France,
And keepe not backe your powers in dalliance.
Pucel. Peace be amongst them if they turne to vs,
Else ruine combate with their Palaces.
Enter Scout.
Scout. Successe unto our valiant Generall,
And happinesse to his accomplices.
Char. What tydings send our Scouts? I prethee speak.
Scout. The English Army that divided was
Into two parties, is now conjoyn'd in one,
And meanes to give you battell presently.
Char. Somewhat too sodaine Sirs, the warning is,
But we will presently provide for them.
Bur. I trust the Ghost of Talbot is not there?
Now he is gone my Lord, you need not feare.
Pucel. Of all base passions, feare is most accurst.
Command the Conquest Charles, it shall be thine.
Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.
Char. Then on my Lords, and France be fortunate.
Exeunt. Alarum. Excursions.

Enter Ione de Pucell.

Puc. The Regent conquers, and the Frenchmen flye.
Now helpe ye charming Spells and Periapts,
And ye choice Spirits that admonish me,
And give me signes of future accidents. Thunder.
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes
Under the lordly Monarch of the North,
Appeare, and ayde me in this enterprize.
Enter Fiends.
This speedy and quicke appearance argues proofe
Of your accustom'd diligence to me.
Now ye familiar Spirits, that are cull'd
Out of the powerfull Regions under earth,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.
They walke, and speake not.
O hold me not with silence over long
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
I'le lop a member off and give it you,
In earnest of a further benefit
So you do condescend to helpe me now.
They hang their heads.
No hope to have redresse? My body shall
Pay recompence, if you will grant my suite.
They shake their heads.
Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Intreate you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my soule, my body, soule, and all,
Before that England give the French the foyle.
They depart.
See, they forsake me. Now the time is come,
That France must vaile her lofty-plumed Crest,
And let her head fall into England's lappe.
My ancient incantations are too weake,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with.
Now France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. Exit

Excursions. Pucelle and York fight hand to hand. Pucelle yeelds.

York. Damsell of France, I think I have you fast,
Unchaine your spirits now with spelling Charmes,
And try if they can gaine your liberty.
A goodly prize, fit for the devils grace.
See how the ugly Witch doth bend her browes,
As if with Circe she would change my shape.
Puc. Chang'd to a worser shape thou canst not be.
York. Out, devilish Maid, how dar'st thou so contemne
No shape but his can please your dainty eye.
Puc. A plaguing mischeife light on Charles, and thee,
And may ye both be suddenly surpriz'd
By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds.
York. Fell banning Hagge, inchantresse hold thy tongue.
Puc. I prethee give me leave to curse awhile.
York. Curse Miscreant, when thou comst to the stake.
Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Suffolke with Margaret in a hand.

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.
Gazes on her.
O fairest Beauty, do not feare, nor flye:
For I will touch thee but with reverend hands,
I kisse these fingers for eternall peace,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
Who art thou say? that I may honor thee.
Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a King,
The King of Naples, whosoere thou art.
Suff. An Earle I am, and Suffolke am I call'd.
Be not offended Nature miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'ne by me.
So doth the Swan her downie Signets save,

Oh stay

Keeping them prisoner vnderneath his wings:
Yet if this seruice vsage once offend,
Go, and be free againe as Suffolke's friend. She is going
O stay: I haue no power to let her passe,
My hand would free her, but my heart sayes no.
As plaies the Sunne vpon the glassie streames,
Twinkling another counterfeited beame,
So seemes this Merchant-like asking skill.
Fayne would I woo her, yet I dare not speake:
Ile call her Picture: Oh faire on me vnkinde:
Fye De la Pole, disable not thy sence,
Hath not a Table many names set downe
Of Barbarous Peeres as thou hast heere?
And canst thou be deceiu'd in a Womans sight?
Beautie hath Angels Maiesty about,
Conditions sheeter, and when shee list to frowne,
Car. Suffolke, what remedy,
I am a Souldier, and vnapt to weepe,
For perswading, my power.
Suf. How canst thou woe her?
Beseech thee what's the matter my Lord?
Reig. Why faire Lord Suffolke, Henry woos Margaret.
Suf. Many faire Ladies haue I sworne to loue,
Car. What, haue you met her?
Suf. Euen by Proxie, am I not so?
The Earle of Armenacke knowes my meaning.
Mar. Your Highnesse sent me to discouer his drift.
Suf. And euen with like faith my Letter did.
Mar. But when you saw my beauty, I suppose
Suf. Yes Madam, I was then to blame to like.
Would Queene Margaret were called Queene of England.
Mar. Why should you wish for her before the rest?
Suf. Because no doubt a Queene would loue her Lord.
And peace established betweene these Realmes
But soft, here comes the King.
Mar. Forsooth, and Yorke, and Somerset, and Buckingham,
Dumaine, and the Lord Scales, and all the Nobles.
Suf. Will you not stay to be confirmed?
Mar. Henry, Duke of Yorke, I first salute you.
Humbly vpon my knee I beg your Graces
Madam, I am glad to see your Highnesse.
Mar. Why, Reignier, doth my Cousin deale with me?
And welcome faire Queene of England.
Suf. Let me embrace thee by the name of Queene.
Mar. Duke of Alanson, this is the King of France,
Alanson and Reignier compassing for you,
Buckler him from perill of the English.
Suf. Inough of this: the Duke of Orleance,
Mar. Yes, my good Lord, and thereby am I claim'd
Vnto my Father-in-law, Charles the Dolphin,
And may not any vnto that Title passe.
Suf. Then Reignier doth well to claime her Dowry,
Because the King of France is not able to pay it.
Reig. Yes, there is one, and I will see it paid,
Suf. Where is it man?
Reig. In Anjou and Maine.
Suf. Your Highnesse, memorable for gift,
Gaue bond of late vnto the King of France.
Car. What, haue you met her?
Suf. Before the King? Deliuer vp your Crowne.
Resigne to me, for I haue made them know it.
Reig. Is this the Fee, must I go keepe my France,
Am I become a Iester for a King?
Suf. Yea, leaue your braines, and keepe your selfe in minde,
Or else my Sword shall shorten them for you.
Reig. Lords, giue me leaue to speake but for my selfe,
Suf. Your Lordship doth obiect vnto vs all,
Reig. Why, then delay not my request, and so farewell,
Suf. Farewell my Lord, and Lord, I wish you well.
Reig. Vncle of Somerset, I will commend
Car. Vncle of Suffolke, I do not like their sudden loue.
Reig. Vncle of Buckingham, I take my leaue.
Mar. Vncle of Yorke, I thank you for your Oxen.
Suf. Now Margaret, see I haue graced thee,
Mar. Suffolke, I thank thee for the Regions gotten,
Suf. Then let the Earles be angry for my pains.
Mar. And grieue not I may say with the rest,
Suf. Why not with me, faire Lady?
Mar. Why not with me, faire Lord?
Suf. Then for my selfe, I say I am not sorry.
Mar. Why not for all the Land?
Suf. Yes, for that I am sorry.
Mar. Yet heauen forbid.
Suf. Yet heauen forbid.
Mar. Why then I will not say.
Suf. Yet I will say.
Mar. Why then I will not say.
Suf. Yet I will say.
Mar. Why then I will not say.
Suf. Haue done.
Mar. I am vnworthy to be Henries wife.
Suf. No gentle Madam, I vnworthy am
To woe so faire a Dame to be his wife,
And haue no portion in the choice my selfe.
How say you Madam, are ye so content?
Mar. And if my Father please, I am content.
Suf. Then call our Captaines and our Colours forth,
And Madam, at your Fathers Castle walles,
We'll craue a parley, to conferre with him.
Sound. Enter Reignier on the Walles.
See Reignier see, thy daughter prisoner.
Reig. To whom?
Suf. To me
Reig. Suffolke, what remedy?
I am a Souldier, and vnapt to weepe,
Or to exclaime on Fortunes ficklenesse.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough my Lord,
Consent, and for thy Honour giue consent,
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my King,
Whom I with payne haue wooed and won thereto:
And this her easie-held imprisonment,
Hath gayned thy daughter Princely liberty.
Reig. Speake Suffolke, dost thou like this?
Suf. Fayre Margaret knowes
That Suffolke doth not flatter, face or faine
Reig. Vpon thy Princely warrant, I descend,
To giue my answer, and thy will enuoy
Suf. And this is answer worthy thy confessing.

Trumpets sound. Enter Reignier.

Reig. Welcome braue Earle into our Territories,
Command in Anjou what your Honour pleases.
Suf. Thankes Reignier happy for so sweet a Child,
Fit to be made companion with a King:
What answer makes your Grace vnto my suite?
Reig. Since you are dutifull to your louing Father,
Yet haue no more but can befit your fortune,
Vnderstand, braue Earle of Suffolke,
In Anjou and my Earldome Maine and Anion,
Poore is the Reuenue, barren is the Soyle,
More full of Theeues, disorder, but of people,
Not able to maintaine the port we beare:
And so am come to leaue that Countrey and that People,
Vnto a mightier Soueraigne than my selfe,
Our Princely Lord King Henry.
Suf. Reignier, is this thy resolution?
Then Madam, look for no lesse Entertainment
Than doth befit the Bride of such a Lord:
Next vnder God, we sit high in his Grace,
Whose Hand is large and spacious in Desires,
And his Affection towards you so great,
That we doubt not of the full obtaining
Of your request, in Marriage vnto his Grace.
Therefore in all our Lord the King his Name,
Accept of these Demaunds which we propound.
Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian Prince King Henry were he heere.
Mar. Farewell my Lord, good wishes, praise & prayers,
Shall Suffolke euer haue of Margaret. She is going
Suf. Farewell sweet Madam: but hearke you Margaret,
No Princely commendations to my King?
Mar. Such commendations as becomes a Maide,
A Virgin, and his Seruant say to him.
Suf. Words sweetly placed, and modestie directed,

But

But Madame, I must trouble you againe,
No louing Token to his Maiestie?
Mar. Yes, my good Lord, a pure vnspotted heart,
Neuer yet taint with loue, I send the King.
Suf. And this withall Kisseher.
Mar. That for thy selfe, I will not so presume,
To send such peeuish tokens to a King.
Suf. Oh wert thou for my selfe! but Suffolke stay,
Thou mayest not wander in that Labyrinth,
There Minotaurs and ugly Treasons lurke,
Solicite Henry with her wonderous praise
Bethinke thee on her Vertues that surmount,
Mad natural Graces that extinguish Art,
Repeate their semblance often on the Seas,
That when thou com'st to kneele at Henries feete,
Thou mayest bereaue him of his wits with wonder. Exit

Enter Yorke, with Warwicke, Shepheard, Pucell.
Yor. Bring forth that Sorceresse condemned to burne.
Shep. Ah Ione, this kills thy Fathers heart outright,
Haue I sought euery Country farre and neere,
And now it is my chance to finde thee out,
Must I behold thy timelesse cruell death
Ah Ione sweet daughter Ione, I could haue ruth
Pucel. Decrepit Miser! base ignoble Wretch,
I am descended of a gentler blood,
Thou art no Father, nor no friend of mine.
Shep. Out, out. My Lords, and please you, 'tis not so
I did beget her, all the world can witnesse:
Her Mother liues yet, can testifie
She was the first that ere I was a Batchelor.
War. Graceless, wilt thou deny thy Parentage?
Yorke. This argues what her kinde of life hath beene,
Wicked and vile, and to deface report
Shep. Fye Ione, that thou wilt be so obstacle
God knowes, thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake haue I shed many a teare
Deny me not, prymer, gentle Ione
Pucell. Peasant auant! You haue suborn'd this man
Of purpose to obscure my Noble birth.
Shep. 'Tis true, I gaue a Noble to the Priest,
The morne that I was wedded to her Mother.
Kneele downe and take my blessing, good my Girle.
Wilt thou not stoope? Now cursed be the time
Of thy nativity! I feare the Miseries
That mother gaue thee when thou hast'ring wombe,
Hath brought forth to disgrace thy Parentage.
Or else, when thou didst keepe my Lambes a field,
I wish some ravenous Wolfe had eaten thee.
Doest thou deny thy Father, cursed Drab?
O burne her, burne her, hanging is too good. Exit.
Yorke. Take her away, for she hath liu'd too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.
Pucell. First let me tell you whom you haue condemn'd;
Not me, begotten of a Shepherd Swaine,
But issued from the Progeny of Kings.
Vertuous and Holy, chosen from aboue,
By inspiration of Celestiall Grace,
To worke exceeding miracles on earth.
I neuer had to do with wicked Spirits.
But you that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain'd with the guiltie bloud of Innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand Vices:
Because you want the grace that others haue,
You iudge it straight a thing impossible
To compasse Wonders, but by helpe of diuels.
No misconceiued, Ione of Arc hath beene
A Virgin from her tender infancie,
Chaste, and immaculate in very thought,
Whose Maiden blood thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for Vengeance, at the Gates of Heauen.
Yorke. Ay, away with her to execution.
War. And harke ye sirs; because she is a Maide,
Spare for no Faggots, let there be enow
Place barrells of pitch vpon the fatall stake,
That so her torture may be shortned.
Pucell. Will nothing came your vnrelenting hearts?
Then Ione discouer thine infamy,
That warranteth by Law, to be thy priuiledge.
I am with child ye bloody Homicides
Murther not then the fruite within my Wombe,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.
Yor. Now heauen forfend, the holy Maid with child?
War. The greatest miracle that ere ye wrought,
Is all your strict preciseness come to this?
Yorke. She and the Dolphin are a bringing vp,
I doubt me: see what woman-kind can do.
War. Will go to worke in this case no Bastards liue,
For feare of after Charles will attempt
Pucell. You are deceiued, my child is none of his,
It was Alanson that enioy'd my loue
Yorke. Alanson that notorious Machiuile?
It dies, and if it had a thousand liues.
Pucell. Oh giue me leaue, I haue deluded you,
'Twas neyther Charles nor yet the Duke I named,
But Reignier King of Naples that preuayl'd
War. A married man, that's most intolerable.
Yor. Why here's a Girle: I think she knowes not well
(There were so many whom she may accuse)
War. It's sign she hath been liberall and free
Yor. Ay, and yet is not she a Harlot too.
Strumpet, thy words condemne thy Brat, and thee.
Vse no more treason, for thy selfe nor thine
Pu. Then this for me, I here pronounce my curse
Vpon the Progeny of this faire Troope.
May neuer glorious Sunne reflex his beames
Vpon the Country where you make abode:
But darkenesse and the gloomy Shade of death
Inuiron you, till Mischiefe and Dispaire,
Driue you to breake your necks, or hang your selues Exit
Enter Cardinall.
Yorke. Breake thy neck,
I wish thy soule were mounted with the rest.
Car. Lord Regent, I coniecture your Excellence
With Letters of Commission from the King
For know my Lords, the States of Christendome,
Mou'd with remorse of these outrageous broyles,
Haue earnestly implor'd a generall peace,
Betwixt our Nation, and the aspiring French;
And here at hand, the Dolphin and his Traine
Approacheth, to conferre about some matter.
Yorke. Is all our trauell turn'd to this effect?
After the slaughter of so many Peeres,
So many Captaines, Gentlemen and Soldiers,
That in this quarrell haue beene ouerthrowne,
And sold their bodyes for their Countryes benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Haue we not lost most part of all the Townes,
By Treason, Falshood, and by Treachery,
Our great Progenitors had conquered?
Oh Warwicke, Warwicke, I foretell with greefe
The vtter losse of all the Realme of France.
War. Be patient Yorke, if we conclude a Peace

It shal be with such strict and seuere Couenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gaine thereby

Enter Charles, Alanson, Bastard, Reignier.

Char. Since Lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful Truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by your selues,
What the conditions of that league must be
Yorke. Speake Winchester, for boyling choller chokes
The hollow passage of my poysoned voyce,
By sudden qualms of bateful enuie:
Winch. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus.
That in regard King Henry giues consent,
Of meere compassion, and lenity,
To ease your Country of distressful Warre,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitfull peace,
You shall become true Liegemen to his Crowne.
And Charles, vpon condition thou wilt sweare
To pay him tribute, and submit thy selfe,
Thou shalt be plac'd as Viceroy vnder him,
And still enioy thy Regall dignity.
Alan. Must he be then as shadow of himselfe?
Adorne his Temples with a Coronet,
And yet in substance, and authority,
Retaine but priuiledge of a priuate man?
This, proffer is absurd, and reasonlesse.
Char. 'Tis known already that I am possest
With more than halfe the Gallian Territories,
And therein reuerenc'd for their lawfull King.
Shall I for lucre of the rest vn-vanquisht,
Detract so much from that prerogatiue,
As to be call'd but Viceroy of the whole?
No Lord Ambassador, I'le rather keepe
That which I haue, than coueting for more
Be cast from possibility of all
Yorke. Insulting Charles, hast thou by secret meanes
Vsed intercession to obtaine a league,
And now the matter growes to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloofe vpon Comparison
Either accept the Title thou vsurpest,
Or else this strife will grow to bloody warres,
And not a graine of any share we yeeld,
Or we will plant the Title with a sword.
Reig. My Lord, you do not well obserue this cause,
To call vniust and partiall Controuersie
Vnto the sword, seemes to one
We shall not finde like opportunity.
Alan. To say the truth, it is your policie,
To saue your Subiects from such massacre
And ruthlesse slaughters as are daily seene
By our proceeding in hostility,
And therefore take this compact of a Truce,
Although you breake it when your pleasure serues.
War. How sayst thou Charles?
Shall our Condition stand?
Char. It shall
Only reserued you claime no interest
In any of our Townes of Garrison.
Yor. Then sweare Allegeance to his Maiesty,
As thou art Knight, neuer to disobey
Nor be Rebellious to the Crowne of England,
Thou nor thy Nobles, to the Crowne of England.
So, now dismisse your Army when ye please:
Hang vp your Ensignes, let your Drummes be still,
For heere we entertaine a solemne peace. Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Suffolke in conference with the King, Gloucester, and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare description (noble Earle)
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her vertues graced with externall gifts,
Do breed Loues settled passions in my heart,
And like as rigor of tempestuous gustes
Prouokes the mightiest Hulke against the tide,
So am I driuen by breath of her renowne,
Either to suffer Shipwracke, or arriue
Where I may haue fruition of her Loue
Suf. Tush my good Lord, this superficiall tale,
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chiefe perfections of that louely Dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to vtter them)
Would make a volume of inticing lines,
Able to rauish any dull conceit
And which is more, she is not so Diuine,
So full repleate with choice of all delights,
But with as humble semblance of mind,
She is content to beare your Command,
Command I meane, of Virtuous chaste intents,
To Loue and honour Henry as her Lord.
King. And otherwise, will Henry ne're presume:
Therefore my Lord Protector giue consent,
That Margaret may be England's Royall Queene
Glo. So should I giue consent to flatter sinne.
You know (my Lord) your Highnesse is betroathed
Vnto another Lady of esteeme,
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your Honor with reproach?
Suf. As doth a Ruler with vnlawfull Oathes,
Or one that at Incounter hath recanted
To saue his life, or else to slay his foe
By treason, or hospitable murthers:
A poore Earles daughter is vnequall oddes,
And therefore may be broke without offence.
Glo. Why what (I pray) is Margaret more than that?
Her Father is no better than an Earle,
Although in glorious Titles he excell.
Suf. Yes my Lord, her Father is a King.
The King of Naples, and Ierusalem,
And of such great Authority in France,
As his alliance will confirme our peace,
And keepe the Frenchmen in Allegeance.
Glo. And so the Earle of Armenacke may doe,
Because he is neere kinsman vnto Charles
Exet. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberall dower,
Where Reignier sooner will receyue, than giue.
Suf. A Dowre my Lords? Disgrace not so your King,
That he should be so abiect, base, and poore,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect Loue.
Henry is able to enrich his Queene,
And not to seeke a Queene to make him rich?
So worthlesse Peazants bargaine for their Wiues,
As Market men for Oxen, Sheepe, or Horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Then to be dealt in by Attorney-ship:
Not whom we will, but whom his Grace affects,

Must

Muſt be companion of his Nuptiall bed.
And therefore Lords, ſince he affects her moſt,
Moſt of all theſe reaſons bindeth vs,
In our opinions ſhe ſhould be preferr'd.
For what is wedlocke forced but a Hell,
An Age of diſcord and continuall ſtrife,
Whereas the contrarie bringeth bliſſe,
And is a patterne of Celeſtiall peace.
Whom ſhould we match with Henry being a King,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a King
Her peereleſſe feature, joyned with her birth,
Approues her fit for none, but for a King
Her valiant courage, and vndaunted ſpirit,
(More then in women commonly is ſeene)
Will anſwer our hope in iſſue of a King.
For Henry, ſonne vnto a Conqueror,
Is likely to beget more Conquerors,
If with a Lady of ſo high reſolue,
(As is faire Margaret) he be link'd in loue.
Then yeeld my Lords, and heere conclude with mee,
That Margaret ſhall be Queene, and none but ſhee.

King. Whether it be through force of your report,
My Noble Lord of Suffolke: Or for that
My tender youth was neuer yet attaint
With any paſſion of inflaming loue,
I cannot tell: but this I am aſſur'd,
I feele ſuch ſharpe diſſention in my breaſt,
Such fierce alarums both of Hope and Feare,
As I am ſicke with working of my thoughts.
Take therefore ſhipping, poſte my Lord to France,
Agree to any couenants, and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchſafe to come
To croſſe the Seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henries faithfull and annointed Queene
For your expences and ſufficient charge,
Among the people gather vp a tenth.
Be gone I ſay, for till you do returne,
I reſt perplexed with a thouſand Cares.
And you (good Vncle) baniſh all offence:
If you do cenſure me, by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuſe
This ſodaine execution of my will
And ſo conduct me, where from company,
I may reuolue and runminate my greefe. Exit.

Glo. Ascends I feare me, both at firſt and laſt.
Exit Glocester.

Suf. Thus Suffolke hath preuail'd, and thus he goes
As did the youthfull Paris once to Greece,
With hope to finde the like euent in loue,
But prosper better than the Troian did:
Margaret ſhall now be Queene, and rule the King:
But I will rule both her, the King, and Realme. Exit

FINIS.

The second Part of Henry the Sixt,
with the death of the Good Duke HVMFREY.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Flourish of Trumpets: Then Hoboyes.

Enter King, Duke Humfrey, Salisbury, Warwicke and Beaufort on the one side.
The Queene, Suffolke, Yorke, Somerset, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suffolke.
As by your high imperiall Maiesty,
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As Procurator to your Excellence,
To marry Princes Margaret for your Grace;
So in the Famous Ancient City, Tovres,
In presence of the Kings of France and Sicill
The Dukes of Orleance, Calaber, Britaigne, and Alanson,
Seuen Earles, twelue Barons, & twenty reuerend Bishops
I haue perform'd my Taske, and was espous'd,
And humbly now vpon my bended knee,
In sight of England and her Lordly Peeres,
Deliuer vp my Title in the Queene
To your most gracious hands, that are the Substance
Of that great Shadow I did represent.
The happiest Gift, that euer Marquesse gaue,
The fairest Queene, that euer King receiu'd.
King. Suffolke arise. Welcome Queene Margaret,
I can expresse no kinder signe of Loue
Then this kinde kisse. O Lord, that lends me life,
Lend me a heart repleate with thankefulnesse
For thou hast giuen me in this beauteous face
A world of earthly blessings to my soule,
If Sympathizing Loue vnite our thoughts.
Queene. Great King of England, & my gracious Lord,
The mutuall conference that my mind hath had,
By day, by night, waking, and in my dreames,
In Courtly company, or at my Beades,
With you mine Alderliest Soueraigne,
Makes me the bolder to salute my King,
With ruder termes, such as my wit affoords,
And ouer-ioy'd with couetous desire
King. Heere ends my second, neither gracious Speech,
But greedily doe stay the answere to it,
Make me (com Wooing Lord) to Weeping Ioyes,
Sith I am sure my griefe can haue no end.
Lords, with one cheerefull voice, Welcome my Loue.
All. Long liue Queene Margaret, Englands happines.
Queene. We thanke you all. Florish

Suf. My Lord Protector, so it please your Grace,
Heere are the Articles of contracted peace,
Betweene our Soueraigne, and the French King Charles,
For fourteene moneths concluded by consent.
Gloc. Reads. Imprimis, It is agreed betweene the French K. Charles and William de la Pole Marquesse of Suffolke, Ambassador for Henry King of England, That the said Henry shall espouse the Lady Margaret daughter vnto Reignier King of Naples, Sicilia, and Ierusalem, and Crowne her Queene of England, ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.
Item, That the Duchy of Anion, and the County of Maine, shall be released and deliuered to the King her Father.
King. Vncle, how now?
Glo. Pardon me gracious Lord,
Some sodaine qualme hath strucke me at the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.
King. Vncle of Winchester, I pray read on.
Win. Item, It is further agreed betweene them That the Dutchies of Anion and Maine shall be resigned ouer to the King her Father, and she sent ouer of the King of Englands owne proper Cost and Charges, without hauing any Dowry.
King. They please vs well. Lord Marquesse kneele downe.
We heere create thee first Duke of Suffolke,
And girt thee with the Sword. Cousin of Yorke,
We heere discharge your Grace from being Regent
I'th parts of France, till terme of eighteene Moneths
Be full expir'd. Thankes Vncle Winchester,
Gloster, Yorke, Buckingham, Somerset,
Salisburie and Warwicke.
We thanke you all for this great fauour done,
In entertainment to my Princely Queene.
Come, let vs in, and with all speede prouide
To see her Coronation be perform'd.
Exeunt King, Queene, and Suffolke.

Manet the rest.
Glo. Braue Peeres of England, Pillars of the State,
To you Duke Humfrey must I vnload his greefe:
Your greefe, the common greefe of all the Land.
What did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coyne, and people in the warres?
Did he so often lodge in open field:
In Winters cold, and Summers parching heate,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toyle his wits,

To

To keepe by policy what Henrie got:
Haue you your selues, Somerset Buckingham,
Braue Yorke, Salsbury, and victorious Warwicke,
Receiued deepe scarres in France and Normandie?
Or hath mine Vncle Beauford, and my selfe,
With all the learned Counsell of the Realme,
Studied so long, sate in the Councell house,
Early and late, debating too and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe,
And hath his Highnesse in seuen yeares space
Crowned his Royall stile with glorious gift of foes,
And shall these labours, and these honours die?
Shall Henries Conquest, Bedfords vigilance,
Your Deeds of Warre, and all our Counsell die?
O Peeres of England, shamefull is this League,
Fatall this Marriage, cancelling your fame,
Blotting your names from Bookes of memory
Razing the Characters of your Renowne,
Defacing Monuments of Conquer'd France,
Vndoing all as all had neuer been.
Car. Nephew, what meanes this passionate discourse
This prophesie against the Duke of Suffolke,
This imputation of his late intent
For France, to worke with Warwicke from the place
Glo. Vncle, we will keepe it well.
Car. Who knowes it?
But now it stands him well to keepe it so.
Suffolke, the new made Duke that rules the roast,
Hath giuen the Duke of Anion Maine,
Vnto the poore King Reignier, whose large stile
Agrees not with the leanenesse of his purse.
Sal. Now by the death of Him that dyed for all,
These Counties were the keyes of Normandie.
But wherefore weepes Warwicke, my valiant sonne?
War. For greefe that they are past recouerie.
For were there hope to conquer them againe,
My sworne should shew how well I can fight,
And not the Cowards that lye whining here.
Anion and Maine? My selfe haue writ them embers
Vnto the Prouinces, gaue Armes to some and conquer,
And to the Coasts that lye with Seas enuirond,
Deliuer'd vp againe with peaceful words?
Mort Dieu.
Yorke. For Suffolkes Duke, may he be suffocate,
That dims the Honor of this Warlicke Isle:
France should haue torne and rent my very heart,
Before I would haue yeelded to this League.
I neuer read but Princes Kings haue had
Large summes of Gold, and Dowries with their wiues,
And our King Henry gaues away his owne,
To match with her that brings no vantages.
Hum. A proper iest, and neuer heard before,
That Suffolke should demand a whole Fifteenth,
For Costs and Charges in transporting her:
She should haue staid in France, and starued in France
Before——
Car. My Lord of Gloster, now ye grow too hot,
It was the pleasure of my Lord the King.
Hum. My Lord of Winchester, I know your minde.
'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike,
But 'tis my presence that doth trouble ye,
Rancour will out, proud Prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury: If I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings.
Lordings farewell, and say when I am gone,
I prophesied, France will be lost ere long. Exit Humfrey.
Car. So, there goes our Protector in a rage.
'Tis known to you he is mine enemy:
Nay more, an enemy vnto you all,
And no great friend, I feare me to the King.
Consider Lords, he is the next of blood,
And heyre apparant to the English Crowne.
Had Henrie got an Empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy Kingdomes of the West,
There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.
Looke to it Lords, let not his smoothing words
Bewitch your hearts, be wise and circumspect.
What though the common people fauour him,
Calling him, Humfrey the good Duke of Gloster,
Clapping their chaps, and crying with one voyce,
Iesu maintaine your Royall Excellence
With God preserue the good Duke Humfrey.
I feare me Lords, for all this flattering gloze,
He will be found a dangerous Protector.
Buc. Why should he then protect our Soueraigne?
He being of age to gouerne of himselfe.
Cousin of Somerset, ioyne you with me,
And altogether with the Duke of Suffolke,
We'll quickly hoise Duke Humfrey from his seat.
Car. This weighty businesse will not brooke delay,
Ile to the Duke of Suffolke presently. Exit Cardinall.
Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humfries pride
And greatnesse of his place be greeue vs,
Yet retire we the rather for the present.
Me thinkes the power of his Gallantry
Is little, specially the Cardinall,
If Gloster be displac't, he'll be Protector.
Buc. Or Somerset, or I, or he will be,
You know his minde, and therefore looke to it.
Som. Or he, or I, or Somerset will be Protector, Despite Duke Humfrey, or the Cardinall. Exeunt Buckingham and Somerset.
Sal. Pride went before, Ambition followes him.
While these do labour for their owne preferment,
Behooues it vs to labour for the Realme.
I neuer saw but Humfrey Duke of Gloster,
Did beare him like a Noble Gentleman:
Oft haue I seene the haughty Cardinall,
More like a Souldier, then a man o'th Church,
As stout and proud as he were Lord of all,
Swear like a Ruffian, and demeane himselfe
Vnlike the Ruler of a Common-weale.
Warwicke my sonne, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy plainedealing, and thy house-keeping,
Hath won the greatest fauour of the Commons,
Excepting none but good Duke Humfrey.
And brother Yorke, thy Acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to ciuill Discipline,
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wert Regent for our Soueraigne,
Haue made thee feared and honour'd of the people.
Ioyne we together for the publike good,
In what we can, to bridle and suppresse
The pride of Suffolke and the Cardinall,
With Somersets and Buckinghams Ambition,
And as we may, cherish Duke Humfries deeds,
While they do tend the profit of the Land.
War. So God helpe Warwicke as he loues the Land,
And common profit of his Country.
Yor. And so saies Yorke,
For he hath greatest cause.
Salsbury. Then let's make hast away,
And looke vnto the maine.
Warwicke. Vnto the maine?
O Father, Maine is lost,
That Maine, which by maine force Warwicke did winne,
And would haue kept, so long as breath did last.

Ma[illegible]ne'r ce fatner vou meant, but I meane Maine,
A[illegible]n I was from thence, or ere be ſtaine.
Exeter. Orleance and Southfolke. Marq. Yorke
true. Anou[illegible]
Par[illegible]t, the ſtate of Normandie
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

That shall make answere to such Questions,
As by your Grace shall be propounded him.
Queene. It is enough, Ile thinke vpon the Questions
When from Saint Albones we do make returne,
We'le see these things effected to the full.
Here Hume, take this reward; make merry man
With thy Confederates in this weighty cause.
Exit Eleanor.
Hume. Hume must make merry with the Duchesse Gold:
Marry and shall. But how now, Sir Iohn Hume
Sale vp your Lady, we must post to Saint Alls,
The business asketh silent secrecie.
Dame Eleanor gives Gold, to bring the Witch:
Gold cannot come amisse, were she a Deuill.
Yet have I Gold flies from another Coast,
I dare not say, from the rich Cardinall,
And from the great and new made Duke of Suffolke,
Yet I do finde it so: for to be plaine,
(To them that feare it) Crookebacke Dukes Humfrey,
I know their eye doth homage other-where,
Or else my Sheeld was falsely painted on,
Let them aspire, they loose their high disdaine,
For sitting high, do'st wisely long to stand,
Humes Knowledge is but faire, if not aduanc'd,
And her Ascanter may be worne as well,
Sort well my Fortune, Dame Gold for me. Exit.

Enter three or foure Petitioners, Peter the Armorers Man being one.

1 Pet. My Masters, let's stand close, my Lord Protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our Supplications in the Quill.

2 Pet. Marry the Lord protect him, for he's a good man, Iesu bless him.

Enter Suffolke and Queene.

Peter. Here a comes me thinkes, and the Queene with him: Ile be the first sure.

2 Pet. Come back fool, this is the Duke of Suffolke and not my Lord Protector.

Suff. How now fellow, would any speak with me?

1 Pet. I pray my Lord pardon me, I tooke ye for my Lord Protector.

Queene. To my Lord Protector? Are your Supplications to his Lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

1 Pet. Mine is and please your Grace, against Iohn Goodman, my Lord Cardinals Man, for keeping my House, and Lands and Wife and all, from me.

Suff. Thy Wife too? that is some Wrong indeed. What's yours? What's here? Against the Duke of Suffolke, for enclosing the Commons of Melford. How now, Sir knaue?

2 Pet. Alas Sir, I am but a poore Petitioner of our whole Towneship.

Peter. Against my Master Thomas Horner, for saying, That the Duke of Yorke was rightfull Heire to the Crowne.

Queene. What say'st thou? Did the Duke of Yorke say, he was rightfull Heire to the Crowne?

Peter. That my Mistresse was? No forsooth: my Master said, That he was, and that the King was an Vsurper.

Suff. Who is there?

Enter Seruant.

Take this fellow in, and send for his Master with a Purseuant presently: we'll heare more of your matter before the King.

Exit.

Queene. And as for you that loue to be protected
Vnder the Wings of our Protectors Grace,
Begin your Suites anew, and sue to him.
Teares the Supplication.
Away base Cullions: Suffolke let them goe.

1 Pet. Come, let's are vndone. Exit.

Queene. My Lord of Suffolke, say is this the guise?
Is this the fashions of the Court of England?
Is this the Gouernment of Britaine Ile
And you (my Lord) Protector of the same?
Have I not been the pleasant Albone Queene,
When as the King Henry the Prudent,
Vouchsafed to come to me whether I would,
And I a Queene, and liued as a Queene?
Then all my Seruants were aspiring Lords,
Then all the Court obey'd my Lookes,
And all the World did shake at my Frowne.
Then was I serued like a Queene indeed,
Not like a Dutchesse: O 'tis hard to speake,
Remembring my sweet Honour's ouerthrow,
When I was Feared as the Dreadfull Warre,
Am scarce beleeued to be a Woman now,
As one vnworthy all the former State,
I freeze for Feare, and hope for all but Woe,
Ah cruell Death! how thou lou'st to play,
That dost prolong the Sorrowes of Mankinde?
You Duke of Suffolke, and my Lord Protector,
Know I do come in Person to you both,
Vouchsafe to giue me gentle audience,
And plead my Passions in the milde aspect
Of your Propitious Eyes, while I complaine
Of those iniurious Wrongs I haue receiued.
And first, my Lord Protector, welcome you
Are like to be the Foster-Nurse of Griefe:
For I am bolted with Complaints euen here,
Complaints that touch your Honour neerely.
You know your Office in the Regiment,
You know the Vertues of the Woman too,
Whose Life is slander, and whose Honour Ruine,
Are set before the Commons of the Land.
Your Wife, Sir Law, from her Graces Pitch,
Is mounted to the Cope of Princely State:
And in the Morning early shall my Lord
Walke on the Staires of Alablaster Hall,
Your Lady next vnto the Princely Queene:
Anon Ile giue this Cloake vnto the Queene,
And Madame, by and by, this Troope to me:
Sometime my Lord will fortune his Foote to slip,
Mine Enemies forsooth, and my Sworne Friends,
Make Holy-day to see our Ouerthrow.
Why do I speake of that which I do feare?
Better I were depriued of Speech and Sight,
Than haue cause to vse the one or the other:
In your Dominions Princely Regiment,
Happy this Land, if not vnder your Gouernment.
First, for my Person, though I be the Queene,
And Consort to the King anointed Lord,
This Land admits not one Prerogatiue
More than the Subiect of the poorest Name.
Last Morning early came the Duke of Yorke,
And with a troupe of Lords and Ladies,
More like a Seruant than a Prince of Blood,
Sues to the Groomes of the Chamber to be first
Admitted to the Presence of the King.
But I, base Dame, preuail not, I am not Queene,
Not halfe so much as any Subiect Maid
That hath the Grace of Fauour with the King.
Now, Duke of Suffolke, and Lord Protector,
Vouchsafe to teach the Duke of Yorke his Duty,
And Sawcie Seruants their Attendance to,
Or know, my Lord Protector, how to serue me,
Lest, if you passe me not the Reuerence
Due to my Place and Person, I proceed
To put the Statutes in Execution
Against the Transgressors in each Degree
Of Grace and Duty, now I do command.
You Madame Lawyer, thus then I begin,
Vncouer, Dogges, and lay your Duties downe.
Suff. Madame, my Queene, your louing Vnckle beares
Sealed in his Heart, Obedience to your Grace:
I know the Office that I haue to beare,
I am not ignorant of Supreme Command,
Nor how to claime Subiection to the Crowne:
And therefore am I bold and resolute.
Queene. Why now is Seale'd the Statute of the Queene,
And Dutchesse of Glocester in this Land:
Ah Pitty-pleasing Shadow of Duke Humfrey!
Now shall I see my Hawking in the Parke,
When as the Walke is full with Troopes of Horse?
Or pace along with Iades a thousand Mile?
Or passe from thence to Fetter Lane in Barges,
And heare the Seruile Cockneys bow and cringe,
With Early Tenants to the Shrieue of Middlesex?
Now thus it shall become high-minded Dames,
That beare the Port of Princes in their Lookes.
For my part, it were better to be eyed
Of Babions, than of such Groomes as they.
Suff. Madame, your Highnesse may depart when you please.
Your Hawking Humour I dare neuer crosse.
For I am bold to counsell you in more,
Although we like not much of your Company.

As

As for the Duke of Yorke, this late Complaint
Will make but little for his benefit.
So one by one we'le weed them all at last,
And you your selfe shall steere the happy Helme. Exit.

Sound a Sonnet

Enter the King, Duke Humfrey, Cardinall Buckingham, Yorke Salisbury, Warwicke, and the Duchesse.

King. For my part, Noble Lords, I care not which,
Or Somerset, or Yorke, all's one to me.
Yorke. If Yorke have ill demean'd himselfe in France,
Then let him be denay'd the Regent-ship.
Som. If Somerset be vnworthy of the Place,
Let Yorke be Regent, I will yeeld to him.
Warw. Whether your Grace be worthy, yea or no,
Dispute not that Yorke is the worthier.
Card. Ambitious Warwicke, let thy betters speake.
Warw. The Cardinall's not my better in the field.
Buck. All in this presence are thy betters Warwicke.
Warw. Warwicke may liue to be the best of all.
Salisb. Peace Sonne, and show some reason Buckingham
Why Somerset should be preferr'd in this?
Queene. Because the King, forsooth, will haue it so.
Humf. Madame, the King is old enough himself
To giue his Censure. These are no Women matters.
Queene. If he be old enough, what needs your Grace
To be Protector of his Excellence?
Humf. Madame, I am Protector of the Realme,
And at his pleasure will resigne my Place.
Suff. Resigne it then, and leane vnto his Highnesse.
Sith thou wert King, as who is King but thou?
The Common-wealth hath daily run to wrack,
The Dolphin hath preuayl'd beyond the Seas,
And all the Peeres and Nobles of the Realme
Haue beene as Bondmen to the Sword of France.
Card. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted them,
Art lame and leane with thine Exactions.
Som. Thy sumptuous Buildings, and thy Wiues Attyre
Haue cost a masse of publique Treasure.
Buck. Thy cruell Iniury vpon
Vpon the Inhabitors hath exceeded Law,
And left thee to the mercy of the Law.
Queene. Thou ledst the Citizes and Towres in France,
If they were known as the suspect is great,
Would make thee quickly hop without thy Head.
Exit Humfrey.
Giue me my Fanne: what, Minion, can ye not?
She giues the Duchesse a box on the eare.
I cry you mercy, Madame was it you?
Duch. Was't I? yea, I it was proud French-woman
Could I come neere your Beauties with my Nayles,
I could set my ten Commandements in your face.
King. Sweet Aunt be quiet, 'twas against her will.
Duch. Against her will, good King? look to't in time,
She'le hamper thee and dandle thee like a Baby
Though in this place most Master weare no Breeches,
She shall not strike Dame Eleanor vnreueng'd.
Exit Eleanor.
Buck. Lord Cardinall, I will follow Eleanor,
And watch Humfrey, how he proceedes.
She's tickle, 'ere she ouer-thow her Fome needs no spurres,
She'le gallop fast enough to her destruction
Exit Buckingham.

Enter Humfrey.

Humf. Now Lords, my Choller being ouer-blowne,
With walking once about the Quadrangle,
I come to talke of Common-wealth Affayres.
As for your spitefull false Obiections,
Proue them, and I liue open to the Law:
But God in mercie so deale with my Soule,
As I in duty loue my King and Country.
But to the matter that we haue in hand.
I say, my Soueraigne, Yorke is meetest man
To be your Regent in the Realme of France.
Suff. Before we make election, giue me leaue
To shew some reason, of no little force,
That Yorke is most vnmeet of any man.
Yorke. Ile tell thee, Suffolke, why I am vnmeet.
First, for I cannot flatter thee in Pride.
Next, if I be appointed for the Place,
My Lord of Somerset will keepe me here,
Without Discharge, Money, and Furniture,
Till France be won into the Dolphins hands.
Last time I dane't attendance on his will,
Till Paris was besieg'd, famisht, and lost.
Warw. That can I witnesse, and a fouler fact
Did neuer Traytor in the Land commit.
Suff. Peace head-strong Warwicke.
Warw. Image of Pride, why should I hold my peace?

Enter Armorer and his Man.

Suff. Because here is a man accused of Treason,
Pray God the Duke of Yorke excuse himselfe.
Yorke. Doth any one accuse Yorke for a Traytor?
King. What mean'st thou Suffolke? tell me, what are these?
Suff. Please it your Maiestie, this is the man
That doth accuse his Master of High Treason,
His words were these: That Richard Duke of Yorke,
Was rightful Heire vnto the English Crowne,
And that your Maiestie was an Vsurper.
King. Say man, were these thy words?
Armorer. And't shall please your Maiestie, I neuer said nor thought any such matter. God is my witnesse, I am falsely accused by the Villaine.
Peter. By these ten bones, my Lords, he did speake them to me in the Garret one Night, as we were scowring my Lord of Yorkes Armor.
Yorke. Base Dunghill Villaine, and Mechanicall,
Ile haue thy Head for this thy Traytors speech:
I do beseech your Royall Maiestie,
Let him haue all the extremest of the Law.
Armorer. Alas, my Lord, hang me if euer I spake the words. my accuser is my Prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow vpon his knees he would be euen with me: I haue good witnesse of this; therefore I beseech your Maiestie, doe not cast away an honest man for a Villaines accusation.
King. Vnckle, what shall we say to this in law?
Humf. This doome, my Lord if I may iudge:
Let Somerset be Regent o're the French,
Because in Yorke this breedes suspition;
And let these haue a day appointed them
For single Combat, in conuenient place,
For he hath witnesse of his seruants malice:
This is the Law, and this Duke Humfreyes doome.

Som. I

Som. I humbly thanke your Royall Maieſtie.
Armorer. And I accept the Combat willingly.
Peter. Alas, my Lord, I cannot fight; for Gods ſake pitty my caſe: the ſpight of man prevayleth againſt me. O Lord haue mercy vpon me, I ſhall neuer be able to fight a blow: O Lord my heart.
Hume. Sirtha, or you muſt fight, or elſe be hang'd.
King. Away with them to Priſon: and the day of Combat, ſhall be the laſt of the next moneth. Come Somerſet, wee'le ſee thee ſafe away.
Exeunt.

Enter the Witch, the two Priests, and Bullingbrooke.

Hume. Come maſters, the Dutcheſſe I tell you expects performance of your promiſes.
Bulling. Maſter Hume, we are therefore prouided: will her Ladyſhip behold and heare our Exorciſmes?
Hume. I, what elſe? feare you not her courage.
Bulling. I haue heard her reported to be a Woman of an inuincible ſpirit: but it ſhall be conſented, Maſter Hume, that you be by her a-lofte, while wee coniure below, and after, I pray you goe in Gods Name and leaue vs.
Exit Hume.
Mother Iordan, be you proſtrate, and grouell on the earth; Iohn Southwell reade you, and let vs to our worke.

Enter Eleanor aboue.

Elean. Well ſaid my Maſters, and welcome all. To this geere the ſooner the better.
Iordan. Patience good Lady, Wizards know their times. Deepe Night, darke Night, the ſilent of the Night, The time of Night when Troy was ſet on fire, The time wherein Sheeche-owles crye, and Bandogs howle, And Spirits walke, and Ghoſts breake vp their Graues; That time beſt fits the worke we haue in hand. Madame, are you, no more to ſay, but ſo, Accept we thanke you: when we haue done, Wee will maske all within a hallow'd Verge.

Here doe the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle, Bullingbrooke or the Southwell reader, Coniuring, &c. It Thunders and Lightens terribly: then the Spirit ariſeth.

Spirit. Adeſum.
Witch. Aſmath, by the eternall God,
Whoſe name and power thou trembleſt at,
Anſwere that I ſhall aske: for till thou ſpeake,
Thou ſhalt not paſſe from hence.
Spirit. Aske what thou wilt; that I had ſayd, and done.
Bulling. First of the King: What ſhall of him become?
Spirit. The Duke yet liues, that Henry ſhall depoſe
But him ſelfe liue and dye a violent death.
Bulling. What tides awaite the Duke of Suffolke?
Spirit. By Water ſhall he dye, and take his end.
Bulling. What ſhall befall the Duke of Somerſet?
Spirit. Let him ſhun Caſtles,
Safer ſhall he be vpon the ſandie Plaines,
Then where Caſtles mounted ſtand.
Haue done, for more I hardly can endure.
Bulling. Deſcend to Darkneſſe, and the burning Lake:
False Fiend auoide.
Thunder and Lightning. Exit Spirit.

Enter the Duke of Yorke and the Duke of Buckingham with their Guard, and breake in.

Yorke. Lay hands vpon theſe Traytors, and their traſh.
Beldam I thinke we watcht you at an inch.
What Madame, are you there? the King & Commonweale
Are deepely indebted for this peece of paines,
My Lord Protector will, I doubt it not,
See you well guerdon'd for theſe good deſerts.
Eleanor. Not halfe ſo bad as thine to Englands King,
Iniurious Duke, that threateſt where's no cauſe.
Buck. True Madame none at all: what can you this?
Away with them, let them be clapt vp cloſe,
And kept aſunder: you Madame ſhall with vs.
Stafford take her to thee.
Wee'le ſee your Trinkets here all forth-coming.
All away. Exit.
Yorke. Lord Buckingham me thinks you watcht her well:
A pretty Plot, well choſen to build vpon.
Now pray my Lord, let's ſee the Deuils Writ.
What haue we here? Reades
The Duke yet liues that Henry ſhall depoſe
But him ſelfe liue and dye a violent death.
Why this is euen Aio te Æacida Romanos vincere poſſe.
Well to the reſt.
Tell me what ſaid the Duke of Suffolke?
By Water ſhall he dye and take his end.
What ſhall betide the Duke of Somerſet?
Let him ſhunne Caſtles,
Safer ſhall he be vpon the ſandie Plaines,
Then where Caſtle mounted ſtand.
Come, come, my Lords,
Theſe Oracles are hardly attain'd,
And hardly vnderſtood.
The King is now in progreſſe towards Saint Albons,
With him, the Husband of this lowſie Lady.
Thither goes theſe Newes,
As faſt as Horſe can carry them:
A ſorry Breakfaſt for my Lord Protector.
Buck. Your Grace ſhall giue me leaue, my Lord of York,
To be the Poſte, in hope of his reward.
Yorke. At your pleaſure, my good Lord.
Who's within there, hoe?
Enter a Seruingman.
Inuite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick
To ſup with me to morrow Night. Away.
Exeunt.

Enter the King, Queene, Protector, Cardinall, and Suffolke, with Falconers hallowing.

Queene. Beleeue me Lords, for flying at the Brooke,
I ſaw not better ſport theſe ſeuen yeeres day.
Yet by your leaue, the Winde was very high,
And ten to one, old Ioane had not gone out.
King. But what a point, my Lord, your Faulcon made,
And what a pytch ſhe flew aboue the reſt:
To ſee how God in all his Creatures workes,
Yea Man and Birds are fayne of climbing high.
Suff. No marueile, and it like your Maieſtie.
My Lord Protectors Hawkes doe towre ſo well,
They know their Maſter loues to be aloft,
And beares his thoughts aboue his Faulcons Pitch.
Glost. My Lord, 'tis but a baſe ignoble minde,
That mounts no higher then a Bird can ſoare.

Card.

Card. I thought as much, hee would be aboue the Clouds.

Glost. I my Lord Cardinall, how thinke you by that? Were it not good your Grace could flye to Heauen?

King. The Treasurie of euerlasting Ioy.

Card. Thy Heauen is on Earth, thine Eyes & Thoughts Beat on a Crowne, the Treasure of thy Heart,
Pernitious Protector, dangerous Peere,
That smooth'st it so with King and Common weale.

Glost. What, Cardinall?
Is your Priest-hood growne peremptorie?
Tantæne animis Cœlestibus iræ, Churchmen so hot?
Good Vncle hide such malice:
With such Holinesse can you doe it?

Suff. No man thinkes him any more than well becomes
So good a Quarrell, and so bad a Peere.

Glost. As who my Lord?

Suff. Why, as you, my Lord,
An't like your Lordly Lords Protectorship?

Glost. Why Suffolke, England knowes thine insolence.

Queene. And thy Ambition, Glofter.

King. I prythee peace, good Queene,
And whet not on these furious Peeres,
For blessed are the Peace-makers on Earth.

Card. Let me be blessed for the Peace I make Against this proud Protector with my Sword.

Glost. Faith holy Vncle, would't were come to that.

Card. Marry, when thou dar'st.

Glost. Make vp no factious numbers for the matter,
In thine owne person answere thy abuse.

Card. I, where thou dar'st not peepe:
And if thou dar'st, this Euening,
On the East side of the Groue.

King. How now, my Lords?

Card. Beleeue me, Cousin Gloster,
Had not your man put vp the Fowle so suddenly,
We had had more sport.
Come with thy two-hand Sword.

Glost. True Vncle, are ye aduis'd?
The East side of the Groue.
Cardinall, I am with you.

King. Why how now, Vncle Gloster?

Glost. Talking of Hawking; nothing else, my Lord.
Now by Gods Mother, I rieft,
Ile shaue your Crowne for this,
Or all my Fence shall fayle.

Card. Medice teipsum, Protector see to't well, protect your selfe.

King. The Winds grow high,
So doe your Stomacks, Lords.
How irksome is this Musick to my heart?
When such Strings iarre, what hope of Harmony?
I pray my Lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter one crying a Miracle.

Glost. What meanes this noyse?
Fellow, what Miracle do'st thou proclayme?

One. A Miracle, a Miracle.

Suffolke. Come to the King, and tell him what Miracle.

One. Forsooth, a blinde man at Saint Albones Shrine,
Within this halfe houre hath receiu'd his sight,
A man that ne're saw in his life before.

King. Now God be prays'd, that to beleeuing Soules
Giues Light in Darknesse, Comfort in Despaire.

Enter the Maior of Saint Albones, and his Brethren, bearing the man betweene two in a Chayre.

Card. Here comes the Townesmen, on Procession,
To present your Highnesse with the man.

King. Great is his comfort in this Earthly Vale,
Although by his sight his sinne be multiplyed.

Glost. Stand by, my Masters, bring him neere the King,
His Highnesse pleasure is to talke with him.

King. Good-fellow, tell vs here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorifie the Lord.
What, hast thou beene long blinde, and now restor'd?

Simp. Borne blinde, and't please your Grace.

Wife. Indeede was he.

Suff. What Woman is this?

Wife. His Wife, and't like your Worship.

Glost. Hadst thou been his Mother, thou could'st haue better told.

King. Where wert thou borne?

Simp. At Barwick in the North, and't like your Grace.

King. Poore Soule,
Gods goodnesse hath beene great to thee:
Let neuer Day nor Night vnhallowed passe,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Queene. Tell me, good-fellow,
Cam'st thou here by Chance, or of Deuotion,
To this holy Shrine?

Simp. God knowes of pure Deuotion,
Being call'd a hundred times, and oftner,
In my sleepe, by good Saint Albon.
Who said; Simon, come, come offer at my Shrine,
And I will helpe thee.

Wife. Most true, forsooth:
And many time and oft my selfe haue heard a Voyce,
To call him so.

Card. What, art thou lame?

Simp. I, God Almighty helpe me.

Suff. How cam'st thou so?

Simp. A fall off of a Tree.

Wife. A Plum-tree, Master.

Glost. How long hast thou beene blinde?

Simp. O borne so, Master.

Glost. What, and would'st climbe a Tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true, and bought his climbing very deare.

Glost. 'Masse, thou lou'dst Plummes well, that would'st venture so.

Simp. Alas, good Master, my Wife desired some Damsons, and made me climbe, with danger of my Life.

Glost. A subtill Knaue, but yet it shall not serue:
Let me see thine Eyes; winck now, now open them,
In my opinion, yet thou seest not well.

Simp. Yes Master, cleare as day, I thanke God and Saint Albones.

Glost. Say'st thou me so? what Colour is this Cloake of?

Simp. Red Master, Red as Blood.

Glost. Why that's well said: What Colour is my Gowne of?

Simp. Black forsooth, Coale-Black, as Iet.

King. Why then, thou know'st what Colour Iet is of?

Suff. And yet I thinke, Iet did he neuer see.

Glost. But

Glost. But Cloakes and Gownes, before this day, a many.

Wife. Neuer before this day, in all his life.

Glost. Tell me Sirrha, what's my Name?

Simpc. Alas Master, I know not.

Glost. What's his Name?

Simpc. I know not.

Glost. Nor his?

Simpc No indeede, Master.

Glost. What's thine owne Name?

Simpc. Saunder Simpcox, and if it please you, Master.

Glost. Then Saunder, sit there,
The lying'st Knaue in Christendome.
If thou hadst beene borne blinde,
Thou might'st as well haue knowne all our Names,
As thus to name the seuerall Colours we doe weare.
Sight may distinguish of Colours:
But how did'st thou nominate them all,
It is impossible.
My Lords, Saint Albons here hath done a Miracle:
And would ye not thinke it, Cunning to be great,
That could restore this Cripple to his Legges againe.

Simpc. O Master, that you could?

Glost. My Masters of Saint Albones,
Haue you not Beadles in your Towne,
And Things call'd Whippes?

Maior. Yes, my Lord, if it please your Grace.

Glost. Then send for one presently.

Maior. Sirrha, goe fetch the Beadle hither straight.
Exit.

Glost. Now fetch me a Stoole hither by and by.
Now Sirrha, if you meane to saue your selfe from Whipping leape me ouer this Stoole and runne away.

Simpc Alas Master, I am not able to stand alone:
You goe about to torture me in vaine.

Enter a Beadle with a Whippe.

Glost. Well Sir, we must haue you finde your Legges.
Sirrha Beadle, whippe him till he leape ouer that same Stoole.

Beadle. I will, my Lord.
Come on Sirrha, off with your Doublet quickly.

Simpc. Alas Master, what shall I doe? I am not able to stand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once ouer, he leapes ouer the Stoole, and runnes away: and they follow, and cry, A Miracle.

King. O God, seest thou this, and beare so long?

Queene. It made me laugh, to see the Villaine runne.

Glost Follow the Knaue, and take this Drab away.

Wife. Alas Sir, we did it for pure need.

Glost. Let them be whipt through euery Market Towne,
Till they come to Barwick, from whence they came.
Exit.

Card Duke Humfrey has done a Miracle to day.

Suff. True: made the Lame to leape and flye away.

Glost But you haue done more Miracles then I:
You made in a day, my Lord, whole Townes to flye.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What Tidings with our Cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to vnfold.
A sort of naughtie persons, lewdly bent,
Vnder the Countenance and Confederacie
Of Lady Eleanor, the Protectors Wife,
The Ring-leader and Head of all this Rout,
Haue practis'd dangerously against your State.
Dealing with Witches and with Coniurers,
Whom we haue apprehended in the Fact,
Raysing vp wicked Spirits from vnder ground,
Demanding of King Henries Life and Death,
And other of your Highnesse Priuie Councell,
As more at large your Grace shall vnderstand.

Card. And so my Lord Protector, by this meanes
Your Lady is forth-comming, yet at London.
This Newes I thinke hath turn'd your Weapons edge;
'Tis like, my Lord, you will not keepe your houre.

Glost Ambitious Churchman leaue to afflict my heart
Sorrow and griefe haue vanquisht all my powers;
And vanquisht as I am, I yeeld to thee,
Or to the meanest Groome.

King. O God, what mischiefes work the wicked ones?
Heaping confusion on their owne heads thereby.

Queene. Glester, see here the Infancie of my Neece,
And looke thy selfe be faultlesse, thou wert best.

Glost Madame, for my selfe, to Heauen I do appeale,
How I haue lou'd my King, and Commonweale:
And for my Wife, I know not how it stands,
Sorry I am to heare what I haue heard
Noble shee is: but if shee haue forgot
Honor and Vertue, and conuers't with such
As like to Pytch, defile Nobilitie;
I banish her my Bed, and Companie,
And giue her as a Prey to Law and Shame,
That hath dis-honored Glosters honest Name.

King. Well, for this Night we will repose vs here:
To morrow toward London, back againe,
To looke into this Businesse thoroughly,
And call these foule Offendors to their Answeres;
And poyse the Cause in Iustice equall Scales,
Whose Beame stands sure, whose right-hand Cause preuailes.
Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter Yorke, Salisbury, and Warwick.

Yorke. Now my good Lords of Salisbury & Warwick,
Our simple Supper ended, giue me leaue,
In this close Walke, to satisfie my selfe,
In crauing your opinion of my Title,
Which is infallible, to Englands Crowne.

Sals. My Lord, I long to heare it at full.

War. Sweet Yorke begin: and if thy Clayme be good,
The Neuils are thy Subiects to command.

Yorke. Then thus:
Edward the third, my Lords, had seuen Sonnes:
The first, Edward the Black-Prince, Prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield, and the third,
Lionel Duke of Clarence: next to whom,
Was Iohn of Gaunt the Duke of Lancaster;
The fift was Edmund Langley, Duke of Yorke;
The sixt, was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Glester,
William of Windsor was the seuenth and last.
Edward the Black-Prince died before his Father,
And left behinde him Richard, his only Sonne,
Who after Edward the third's death, raign'd as King,
Till Henry Bullingbrooke Duke of Lancaster,
The eldest Sonne and Heire of Iohn of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the Name of Henry the fourth,
Seiz'd on the Realme, depos'd the rightfull King,
Sent his poore Queene to France, from whence she came,

And

And hem to Pomfret; where, as all you know,
Harmelesse Richard was murthered traiterously.
Warw. Father, the Duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the House of Lancaster the Crowne.
Yorke. Which now they hold by force, and not by right.
For Richard, the first Sonnes Heire, being dead,
The Issue of the next Sonne should have reign'd.
Salisb. But William of Hatfield dyed without an Heire.
Yorke. The third Sonne Duke of Clarence,
From whose Line I claime the Crowne
Had Issue Phillippe, a Daughter,
Who married Edmund Mortimer, Earle of March.
Edmund had Issue Roger, Earle of March;
Roger had Issue, Edmund, Anne and Eleanor.
Salisb. Tut! Edmund the first Borne of Bullingbrooke,
As I have read, layd claime vnto the Crowne,
And but for Owen Glendour, had been King;
Who kept him in Captiuitie, till he dyed.
But to the rest.
Yorke. His eldest Sister, Anne
My Mother, being heire vnto the Crowne,
Married Richard Earle of Cambridge,
Who was to Edmund Langley,
Edward the third his fifth Sonne.
By her I clayme the Kingdome:
She was Heire to Roger, Earle of March,
Who was the Sonne of Edmund Mortimer,
Who married (Phillip, sole Daughter)
Vnto Edmund Duke of Clarence.
So, if the Issue of the elder Sonne
Succeed before the younger, I am King.
Warw. What plaine proceedings is more plaine than this?
Henry doth claime the Crowne from John of Gaunt,
The fourth Sonne, Yorke claimes it from the third.
Till Lionels Issue fayles, his should not reigne.
It fayles not yet, but flourishes in thee,
And in thy Sonnes, faire Slippes of the same Stock.
Therefore (Valiant Lords) see you to day,
And in this priuate Plot be we the first,
That shall salute our rightfull Soueraigne
With honor of his birth-right to the Crowne.
Both. Long liue our Soueraigne Richard, Englands King.
Yorke. We thank you Lords.
But I am not your King, till I be Crowned,
And that my Sword be stayned
With heart-blood of the House of Lancaster:
And that's not suddenly to be performed,
But with aduice and silent secrecie.
Do you as I do in these dangerous dayes,
Winke at the Duke of Suffolkes insolence,
At Beauforts Pride, at Somerset Ambition,
At Buckingham and all the Crew of them,
Till they haue snar'd the Shepheard of the Flock,
That vertuous Prince, the good Duke Humfrey:
'Tis that they seeke, and they in seeking that,
Shall finde their deaths, if Yorke can prophesie.
Salisb. My Lord, breake we off, we know your minde at full.
Warw. My heart assures me, but the Earle of Warwick
Shall one day make the Duke of Yorke a King.
Yorke. And Neuils, this I doe assure my selfe,
Richard shall liue to make the Earle of Warwick
The greatest man in England, but the King.
Exeunt

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King and State, with Guard, to banish the Duchesse.

King. Stand forth Dame Eleanor Cobham,
Gloster's Wife.
In sight of God, and vs, your guilt is great,
Receiue the Sentence of the Law for sinne,
Such as by Gods Booke are adiudg'd to death.
You four from hence to Prison, back againe;
From thence, vnto the place of Execution.
The Witch in Smithfield shall be burnt to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the Gallowes.
You Madame, for you are more Nobly borne,
Depriued of your Honor in your Life,
Shall, after three dayes open Penance done,
Liue in your Country here, in Banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Ile of Man.
Elean. Welcome is Banishment, welcome were my Death.
Glost. Eleanor, the Law thou seest hath iudged thee,
I cannot iustifie whom the Law condemnes:
Mine eyes are full of teares, my heart of griefe.
Ah Humfrey, this dishonor in thine age,
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.
I beseech your Maiestie, giue me leaue to go;
Sorrow would solace, and mine Age would ease.
King. Stay Humfrey, Duke of Gloster,
Ere thou go, giue vp thy Staffe,
Henry will to himselfe protector be,
And God shall be my hope, my stay, my guide,
And Lanthorne to my feete.
And go in peace, Humfrey, no lesse beloued,
Then when thou wert Protector to thy King.
Queene. I see no reason why a King of yeeres
Should be to be protected like a Child.
God and King Henry gouerne England's Peace:
Giue vp your Staffe Sir, and the King his Realme.
Glost. My Staffe? here, Noble Henry, is my staffe:
As willingly, do I the same resigne,
As ere thy Father Henry made it mine,
And euen as willingly at thy feete I leaue it,
As others would ambitiously receiue it.
Farewell good King: when I am dead and gone,
May honourable Peace attend thy Throne.
Exit Gloster.
Queene. Why now is Henry King, and Margaret Queen,
And Humfrey, Duke of Gloster, scarce himselfe,
That beares so shrewd a maime: two Pulls at once;
His Lady banish'd, and a limbe lopt off.
This staffe of Honor raught, there let it stand,
Where it best fits to be, in Henries hand.
Suff. Thus droopes this lofty Pine, & hangs his sprayes,
Thus Eleanors Pride dyes in her youngest dayes.
Yorke. Lords, at this gap. Please it your Maiestie,
This is the day appointed for the Combat,
And ready are the Appellant and Defendant,
The Armorer and his Man, to enter the Lists,
So please your Highnesse to behold the fight.
Queene. I good my Lord, for purposely therefore Left I the Court, to see this Quarrell tryde.
King. A Gods Name see the Lyets and all things fit,
Here let them end it, and God defend the right.
Yorke. I neuer saw a fellow worse bestead,
Or more afraid to fight, then is the Appellant,
The seruant of this Armorer, my Lords.

Enter

Enter at one Doore the Armorer and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much, that he is drunke; and he enters with a Drumme before him, and his Staffe, with a Sand-bagge fastened to it: and at the other Doore his Man, with a Drumme and Sand-bagge, and Prentices drinking to him.

1. Neighbor. Here Neighbour Horner, I drinke to you in a Cup of Sack; and feare not Neighbor, you shall doe well enough.

2 Neighb. And here Neighbour, here's a Cuppe of Charneco.

3. Neighbor And here's a Pot of good Double-Beere Neighbor, drinke, and feare not your Man.

Armorer. Let it come yfaith, and I'le pledge you all, and a figge for Peter

1. Prent. Here Peter, I drinke to thee, and be not afraid.

2. Prent. Be merry Peter, and feare not thy Master, Fight for credit of the Prentices

Peter. I thanke you all: drinke, and pray for me, I pray you, for I thinke I haue taken my last Draught in this World. Here Robin, and if I dye, I giue thee my Apron; and Will, thou shalt haue my Hammer: and here Tom, take all the Money that I haue. O Lord blesse me, I pray God, for I am neuer able to deale with my Master, hee hath learnt so much fence already.

Salub. Come, leaue your drinking, and fall to blowes. Sirrha, what's thy Name?

Peter. Peter forsooth.

Salub. Peter! what more?

Peter. Thumpe.

Salub. Thumpe! Then see thou thumpe thy Master well.

Armorer. Masters, I am come hither as it were vpon my Mans instigation, to proue him a Knaue, and my selfe an honest man: and touching the Duke of Yorke, I will take my death, I neuer meant him any ill, nor the King, nor the Queene: and therefore Peter haue at thee with a downe-right blow.

Yorke. Dispatch, this Knaues tongue begins to double. Sound Trumpets, Alarum to the Combattants.

They fight and Peter strikes him downe.

Armorer. Hold Peter, hold, I confesse, I confesse Treason.

Yorke. Take away his Weapon: Fellow thanke God, and the good Wine in thy Masters way.

Peter. O God, haue I ouercome mine Enemies in this presence? O Peter, thou hast preuayl'd in right.

King. Goe, take hence that Traytor from our sight, For by his death we doe perceiue his guilt, And God in Iustice hath reueal'd to vs The truth and innocence of this poore fellow, Which he had thought to haue murther'd wrongfully. Come fellow, follow vs for thy Reward.

Sound a flourish. Exeunt.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his Men in Mourning Cloakes.

Glost. Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a Cloud: And after Summer, euermore succeedes Barren Winter, with his wrathfull nipping Cold; So Cares and Ioyes abound, as Seasons fleet. Sirs, what's a Clock?

Serv. Tenne, my Lord.

Glost. Tenne is the houre that was appointed me, To watch the comming of my punisht Duchesse: Vneath may shee endure the flintie Streets, To tread them with her tender-feeling feet. Sweet Nell, ill can thy Noble Mind abrooke The abiect People, gazing on thy face, With enuious Lookes laughing at thy shame, That erst did follow thy prowd Chariot-Wheeles, When thou didst ride in triumph through the Streets. But soft, I thinke she comes, and I'le prepare My teare-stayn'd eyes, to see her Miseries

Enter the Duchesse in a white Sheet, and a Taper burning in her hand, with the Sheriffe and Officers.

Serv. So please your Grace, we'le take her from the Sheriffe.

Gloster. No, sirre not for your liues, let her passe by.

Eleanor. Come you, my Lord, to see my open shame? Now thou do'st Penance too. Looke how they gaze, See how the giddy multitude doe point, And nodde their heads, and throw their eyes on thee. Ah Gloster, hide thee from their hatefull lookes, And in thy Closet pent vp, rue my shame, And ban thine Enemies, both thine and mine

Glost. Be patient, gentle Nell, forget this griefe.

Eleanor. Ah Glosster, teach me to forget my selfe: For whilest I thinke I am thy married Wife, And thou a Prince Protector of this Land, Me thinkes I should not thus be led along, Mayl'd vp in shame, with Papers on my back, And follow'd with a Rabble, that reioyce To see my teares, and heare my deepe-fet groanes. The ruthlesse Flint doth cut my tender feet, And when I start the enuious people laugh, And bid me be aduised how I treade Ah Humfrey, can I beare this shamefull yoake? Trowest thou, that ere Ile looke vpon the World, Or count them happy, that enioyes the Sunne? No: Darke shall be my Light, and Night my Day. To thinke vpon my Pompe, shall be my Hell Sometime Ile say, I am Duke Humfreyes Wife, And he a Prince, and Ruler of the Land: Yet so he rul'd, and such a Prince he was, As he stood by, whilest I, his forlorne Duchesse, Was made a wonder, and a pointing stock To euery idle Rascall follower. But be thou milde, and blush not at my shame, Nor stirre at nothing, till the Axe of Death Hang ouer thee, as sure it shortly will. For Suffolke, he that can doe all in all With her, that hateth thee and hates vs all, And Yorke, and impious Beauford, that false Priest, Haue all lym'd Bushes to betray thy Wings, And fly thou how thou canst, they'le tangle thee. But feare not thou, vntill thy foot be snar'd, Nor neuer seeke preuention of thy foes.

Glost. Ah Nell forbeare: thou aymest all awry. I must offend, before I be attainted: And had I twentie times so many foes, And each of them had twentie times their power, All these could not procure me any scathe, So long as I am loyall, true, and crimelesse. Would'st haue me rescue thee from this reproach?

Why yet thy scandall were not wipt away,
But I in danger for the breach of Law.
Thy greatest helpe is quiet, gentle Nell.
I pray thee sort thy heart to patience,
These few dayes wonder will be quickly worne.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I Summon your Grace to his Majesties Parliament,
Holden at Bury the first of this next Moneth.
Glost. And my consent ne're ask'd herein before?
This is to dealing. Well, I will be there.
My Noble Lord Cardinall, and Master Secretary,
Know the Office and Commission
Sf. And please your Grace here my Commission stayes
And Sir Iohn Stanley is appointed now,
To take her with him to the Isle of Man.
Glost. Must you, Sir Iohn protect my Lady here?
Stanly. So am I given in charge, may't please your Grace.
Glost. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You vse her well. The World may laugh againe,
And I may live to doe you kindnesse, if you deserve it.
And so Sir Iohn farewell.
Eleanor. What, goes my Lord, and bid me not farewell?
Glost. Witnesse my teares. I cannot stay to speake.

Exit Glocester.

Eleanor. Art thou gone too? All comfort go with thee,
For none abides with me: my Joy is Death;
Death, at whose Name I oft haue been affeard,
Because I wish'd this World were eternall.
Stanley, I prethee goe, and take me hence,
I care not whether, for I beg no fauour;
Onely conuey me where thou art commanded.
Stanley. Why, Madame, that is to the Isle of Man,
There to be vs'd according to your State.
Eleanor. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
And shall I then be vs'd reproachfully?
Stanley. Like to a Duchesse, and Duke Humfreys Lady,
According to that State you shall be vs'd.
Eleanor. Sheriffe farewell, and better then I fare,
Although thou hast been Conduct of my shame.
Sheriffe. It is my Office, and Madame pardon me.
Eleanor. I, I, farewell, thy Office is discharg'd:
Come Stanley, shall we goe?
Stanley. Madame your Penance doone,
Throw off this Sheet
And goe we to attire you for our Iourney.
Eleanor. My shame will not be shadowed with my Sheet:
No it will hang vpon my richest Robes,
And shew it selfe, attire me how I can
Goe, leade the way, I long to see my Prison. Exeunt

Sound a Sennet. Enter King, Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Yorke, Buckingham, Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Parliament.

King. I muse my Lord of Glocester is not come:
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
What ere occasion keepes him from vs now.
Queene. Can you not see, or will ye not obserue
The strangenesse of his alter'd Countenance?
With what a Maiesty he beares himselfe,
How insolent of late he is become,
How proud, how peremptory, and vnlike himselfe.
We know the time since he was milde and affable,
And if we did but glance a farre-off Looke,
Immediately he was vpon his Knee,
That all the Court admir'd him for submission.
But meet him now, and be it in the Morne,
When every one will giue the time of day,
He knits his Brow, and shewes an angry Eye,
And passeth by with stiffe vnbowed Knee,
Disdaining duetie that to vs belongs.
Small Curres are not regarded when they grynne,
But great men tremble when the Lyon rores,
And Humfrey is no little Man in England.
First note, that he is neere you in discent,
And should you fall, he is the next will mount.
Me seemeth then, it is no Policie,
Respecting what a rancorous minde he beares,
And his aduantage following your decease,
That he should come about your Royall Person,
Or be admitted to your Highnesse Councell.
By flatterie hath he wonne the Commons hearts:
And when he please to make Commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the Spring, and Weeds are shallow-rooted,
Suffer them now, and they'le o're-grow the Garden,
And choake the Herbes for want of Husbandry.
The reuerent care I beare vnto my Lord,
Made me collect these dangers in the Duke.
If it be fond, call it a Womans feare.
Which feare, if better Reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say I wrong'd the Duke.
My Lord of Suffolke, Buckingham, and Yorke,
Reprooue my allegation, if you can,
Or else conclude my words effectuall.
Suf. Well hath your Highnesse seene into this Duke:
And had I first been put to speake my minde,
I think I should haue told your Graces Tale.
The Duchesse, by his subornation,
Vpon my Life began her deuilish practises:
Or if he were not priuie to those faults,
Yet by reputing of his high descent,
As next the King, he was successiue Heire,
And such high vaunts of his Nobilitie,
Did instigate the Bedlam braine-sick Duchesse,
By wicked meanes to frame our Soueraigne fall.
Smooth runnes the Water, where the Brooke is deepe,
And in his simple shew he harbours Treason.
The Fox barkes not, when he would steale the Lambe.
No, noble Soueraigne, Glocester is a man
Vnsounded yet, and full of deepe deceit.
Card. Did he not, contrary to forme of Law,
Deuise strange deaths, for small offences done?
Yorke. And did he not, in his Protectorship,
Leuie great summes of Money through the Realme,
For Souldiers pay in France, and neuer sent it?
By meanes whereof, the Townes each day reuolted.
Buck. Tut, these are petty faults to faults vnknowne,
Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humfrey.
King. My Lords at once, the care you haue of vs,
To mowe downe Thornes that would annoy our Foot,
Is worthy prayse: but shall I speake my conscience,
Our Kinsman Glocester is as innocent,
From meaning Treason to our Royall Person,
As is the sucking Lambe, or harmelesse Doue:
The Duke is vertuous, milde, and too well giuen,
To dreame on euill, or to worke my downefall.
Qu. Ah what's more dangerous, than this fond affiance?
Seemes he a Doue? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's disposed as the hatefull Rauen.
Is he a Lambe? his Skinne is surely lent him,

For

For hee's enclin'd as is the rauenous Wolues.
Who cannot steale a shape, that meanes deceit?
Take heed, my Lord, the welfare of vs all,
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudful man.

Enter Somerset

Som. All health vnto my gracious Soueraigne.
King. Welcome Lord Somerset. What Newes from France?
Som. That all your interest in those Territories,
Is vtterly bereft you: all is lost.
King. Cold Newes, Lord Somerset: but Gods will be done.
Yorke. Cold Newes for me: for I had hope of France,
As firmely as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my Blossomes blasted in the Bud,
And Caterpillers eate my Leaues away:
But I will remedie this gere ere long,
Or sell my Title for a glorious Graue.

Enter Gloster.

Glost. All happinesse vnto my Lord the King:
Pardon my Liege, that I haue staid so long.
Suff. Nay Gloster, know that thou art come too soone,
Vnlesse thou were more loyall than thou art:
I do arrest thee of High Treason here.
Glost. Well Suffolke, thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my Countenance for thy Arrest.
A Heart vnspotted is not easily daunted.
The purest Spring is not so free from mudde
As I am clear from Treason to my Soueraigne.
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guiltie?
Yorke. 'Tis thought my Lord,
That you tooke Bribes of France,
And being Protector, stay'd the Souldiers pay,
By meanes whereof, his Highnesse hath lost France.
Glost. Is it but thought so?
What are they that think it?
I neuer robb'd the Souldiers of their pay,
Nor euer had one penny Bribe from France.
So helpe me God, as I haue watch'd the Night,
I, Night by Night, but in no matters of Treason.
Thrice haue I dis-parkt the Deere out of Season,
Once vp in Anger, as I well remember,
Did beat the Bishop of Chichester,
But I shall neuer draw my Sword in vaine,
Nor euer say that I haue beene corrupted.
Haue I not in your wightiest affayres,
Aduis'd my Liege for his Honour?
And for his Glorie, euer labour'd?
Haue I not mooued mine Enemies,
That enuie my great Deseruings,
And bought Reproofe, to Requite this Loue?
Yorke. Well hath your Highnesse seene into this Duke:
And had I first been put to speake my Mind,
I think I should haue told your Grace's Tale.
The Duchesse by his subornation,
Vpon my life, began her diuellish Practises:
Or if he were not priuie to those faults,
Yet by reputing all his Kindred,
They made their way vnto the Crowne of England,
Murdering Humfrey, and the Cardinall.
Suff. Humfrey is dead, and I am one of them:
His Fathers Blood hath bought me to the Block.
Vntimely Violence did expulse his Life,
And vntimely Violence shall expell mine.
Which in the time of Death he gaue our Father.
Card. If Treason be not haled out of hence,
Long will it be ere England see it Calme.
My Lord of Gloster, in those busie dayes
Which here you vrge to proue vs Traitors all,
Within the Bowels of these Diuisions,
Let him be chosen by Exchequer day,
Or Christmas day, or with the next Terme,
And if he fight not with Infamie,
God strike me dead, and neuer hope to thriue.
Yorke. Why 'tis well said, that he and the Cardinall,
Whose Priuie Counsell gouern'd our whole Land,
According to his Death and Sharpe Reuenge,
Should by the Commons of the Realme be spoyl'd,
And on the Ladder of Imperiall Loue,
With their Light Skirts their Ouer-weening Heads,
Tumble downe headlong, and the Crowne of England
Rest in the Lap of Edmund Duke of Somerset,
Whose Father bore the Diadem in France,
And was both Lou'd and Fear'd of all the French.
Suff. Base Dunghill Yorke,
Thou dar'st not for thy Heart speake out the Treason,
Which euery Looke of thine bewrayes thee in.
I do arrest you in his Highnesse Name,
And here commit you to my Lord Cardinall
To keepe vntill your further time of Tryall.
King. My Lord of Gloster, 'tis my speciall hope,
That you will cleare your selfe from all suspence,
My Conscience tells me you are innocent.
Glost. Ah gracious Lord, these dayes are dangerous:
Vertue is choakt with foule Ambition,
And Charitie chas'd hence by Rancours hand,
Foule Subornation is predominant,
And Equitie exil'd your Highnesse Land.
I know their Complot is to haue my Life,
And if my death might make this Land happy,
And prouue the Period of their Tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingnesse.
But mine is made the Prologue to their Play:
For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will not conclude their plotted Tragedie.
Beaufords red Hat, my Lord of Winchesters late,
Anger at once cleane from my heart,
I here throw downe, and scorne vnjustly to take
All deadly wounds to doe me happie.
Had I but said an hower before this chance,
I could haue made my head make Paris hoope,
And kept the Anjou Mariage to my mind:
But now it is impossible we should.
Suffolke, the new-made Duke that rules the roast,
Hath bought the Conquest of her Marriage,
Nor all your Liberties, nor priuiledges,
Can hinder him but he will haue his will,
For he is gracious if perswaded to it,
Vnfortunate in making his Attempts,
And for his Wisedome, as in resolute
As Winters Tempests, shaken by the Winde.
Nay more, of late, hearing their Assistance threatned,
He hath by Proclamation gathered head,
Who but a Fortnight since would scorne to stoope,
Or bend the Knee to any in the Land,
Now they doe feare, and cringe, and crouch to him.
But to conclude with Silence, with Care,
Leaning vpon the Staffe of Griefe and Blame,
Graue me by Death, and hearing nothing sung
But Dolor.
The Owle shriekt at my Birth, I am sworne Brother
To sullen Sorrow, and my Children are Nothing but Discords: I am sworne to make
Their Mothers mourne, and haue no more to say,
But when my Teares haue wept me almost dead,
And my Life-blood diuinish'd with the fast
Of keeping wretched Watch, then Graue me straight.
For liuing idly here, in Pompe and Ease,
Whilst my poore Countrie feeles a world of Woe,
Is like blind Samson, poasting on the Pillars,
Or a shrewd Ruine, readie to fall downe,
Only for company of Misery.
Falles Gloster, as the direfull Pine and Taxe
Falles on the Aspine and the Mirtle tree,
And as the Moore, visiting all the Hilles
Breathes out a Plague for Heauen to rot withall,
So I, against the Height of this Mishap,
Breathe out Dishonor, Death, and Malice still,
Against my Lord the King, and all his Friends.
Ah Beauford, thou and I new Vowes haue tane,
And with our Oathes and Woes confirm'd the same:
And now my Death must make thy Partie mourne,
For Suffolke, he can helpe me to no turne.
Suff. Were it not best we tooke sir Humfrey hence,
And laid him safe vpon his Couch in bed?
Card. My Liege, your Vncle is to vehement.
If he be found to practise Gloster's death,
It will not quench the Fire of Enuie
In the Peoples Hearts, which he hath kindled
Against the Duke of Suffolke and himselfe:
For greater hate cannot reside in Man,
Than betwixt Gloster and the Cardinall.
I therefore counsell, that with speed we send
To Bury, where the Parliament is met,
And that we all goe softly after him,
That may preuent the Mischiefe Enuie meanes.
King. My Lords, what to your wisedomes seemeth best,
Do or vndo, as if our selfe were here.
Queene. What, will your Highnesse leaue the Parliament?
King. Margaret my Queene, my heart is drown'd with griefe,
Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes;
My Body round engyrt with miserie.

For what's more miserable then Discontent?
Ah Vncle Humfrey, in thy face I see
The Map of Honor, Truth and Loyaltie
And yet, good Humfrey, is the hower to come,
That ere I prou'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
What lowring Starre now enuies thy estate?
That these great Lords, and Margaret our Queene,
Doe seeke subuersion of thy harmelesse Life.
Thou neuer didst them wrong, nor no man wrong
And as the Butcher takes away the Calfe,
And binds the Wretch, and beats it when it strayes,
Bearing it to the bloody Slaughter-house,
Euen to remorselesse head-strong harmelessenesse
And as the Damme runnes lowing vp and downe,
Looking the way her harmelesse young one went,
And can doe nought but wayle her Darlings losse;
Euen to my selfe-like selfe-will'd harmelessenesse
With fad-vnhelpefull teares, and with dim'd eyes;
Looke after him, and cannot doe him good
So mightst thou wish'd, vow'd, and sworne my ruine.
His fortunes I will weepe, and 'twixt each groane,
Say, who's a Traytor; Gloster he is none. Exit
Queene. Free Lords
Cold snow-mets with the Sunnes hot Beames
Henry, my Lord, is cold in great Affaires,
Too full of foolish pitty: and Gloster's show
Beguiles him, as the mournfull Crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers;
Or as the Snake, rol'd in a flowring Banke,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a Child,
That for the beauty thinkes it excellent.
Beleeue me Lords, were none more wise then I,
And yet herein I iudge mine owne Wit good;
This Gloster should be quickly rid the World,
To rid vs from the feare we haue of him.
Card. That he should dye, is worthie policie,
But yet we want a Colour for his death.
'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of Law.
Suff. But in my minde, that were no policie.
The King will labour still to saue his Life,
The Commons haply rise, to saue his Life;
And yet we haue but trifling Prooffe enough,
More then may serue that shewes him worthy death.
Yorke. So that by this you would not haue him dye.
Suff. Ah Yorke, no man aliue, so faine as I
Yorke. I, Yorke, then hast more reason for his death.
But my Lord Cardinall, and you my Lord of Suffolke,
Say as you thinke, and speake it from your Soules
Were't not all one, an empty Eagle were set,
To guard the Chicken from a hungry Kyte,
As place Duke Humfrey for the Kings Protector?
Queene. So the poore Chicken should be sure of death
Suff. Madame 'tis true: and were't not madnesse then,
To make the Fox surueyor of the Fold?
Who being accused a crafty Murtherer,
His guilt should be but idly posted ouer,
Because his purpose is not executed.
No: let him dye, in hope thus many fall
More of his doings worthy of effect,
Then can his yet imperfect deeds winne head.
Thus like the formall Vice, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word.
Yorke. That Humfrey prou'd by Reasons to my Liege.
And doe not stand on Quillets how to slay him:
Be it by Gyns, or Subtilty, or Sleight,
Sworne or Vnsworne, what is't to my Rough Wit,
So the deed, for that is good deceit,
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit.

Queene. Thrice Noble Suffolke, 'tis resolutely spoke
Suff. Not resolute, except so much were done.
For things are often spoke, and seldome meant,
But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserue my Soueraigne from his Foe,
Say but the word, and I will be his Priest.
Card. But I would haue him dead, my Lord of Suffolke,
Ere you can take due Orders for a Priest.
Say you consent, and censure well the deed,
And I'le prouide his Executioner,
I tender to the safetie of my Liege.
Suff. Here is my Hand, the deed is worthy doing.
Queene. And so say I
Yorke. And I: and now we three haue spoke it,
It skils not greatly who impugnes our doome.

Enter a Poste.

Poste. Great Lords, from Ireland am I come amaine,
To signifie, that Rebels there are vp,
And put the Englishmen vnto the Sword.
Send Succours (Lords) and stop the Rage betime,
Before the Wound doe grow vncurable;
For being greene, there is great hope of helpe.
Card. A Breach that craues a quick expedient stoppe.
What counsaile giue you in this weightie cause?
Yorke. That Somerset be sent as Regent thither
'Tis meet that lucklesse Ruler be employ'd,
Whose fortune he hath had in France
Som. If Yorke, with all his farre-fet policie,
Had been the Regent there, in stead of me,
He neuer would haue staid in France so long.
Yorke. No, not to loose it all, as thou hast done.
I rather would haue lost my Life betimes,
Then bring a burthen of dishonour home,
By staying there so long, till all were lost.
Shew me one skarre, charactred on thy skinne,
Mens flesh preserued so whole, doe seldome winne
Cla. Nay then, this spark will proue a raging fire,
If Wood and Base I be brought, to feed it with.
No more good Yorke; sweet Somerset be still.
Thy fortune Yorke, hadst thou been Regent there,
Might happily haue proud farre worse then his.
Yorke. What, worse then naught? nay, then a shame take all.
Somerset. And in the number, thee, that wishest shame.
Card. My Lord of Yorke, trie what your fortune is:
Th'vnciuill Kernes of Ireland are in Armes,
And temper Clay with blood of Englishmen.
To Ire and will you leade a Band of men,
Collected choycely from each Countie some,
And trie your hap against the Irishmen?
Yorke. I will my Lord, so please his Maiestie.
Suff. Why, our Authoritie is his consent,
And what we doe establish, he confirmes
Then, Noble Yorke, take thou this Taske in hand.
Yorke. I am content: Prouide me Souldiers, Lords,
Whiles I take order for mine owne affaires.
Suff. A charge, Lord Yorke, that I will see perform'd.
But now returne we to the false Duke Humfrey.
Card. No more of him; for I will deale with him,
That henceforth he shall trouble vs no more:
And so breake off, the day is almost spent,
Lord Suffolke, you and I must talke of that euent.

Yorke. My

Yorke. My Lord of Suffolke, within fourteene dayes
At Bristow I expect my Souldiers,
For there Ile shippe them all for Ireland.
Suff. Ile see it truly done, my Lord of Yorke. Exeunt
Manet Yorke.
Yorke. Now Yorke, or neuer steele thy fearefull thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution,
Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art;
Resigne to death, it is not worth thy enioy
Let pale-fac't feare keepe with the meane-borne man,
And finde no harbor in a Royall heart.
Faster then Spring-time showres comes thought on thought,
And not a thought, but thinkes on Dignitie.
My Brayne, more busie then the labouring Spider,
Weanes tedious Snares to trap mine Enemies.
Well Nobles, well 'tis politikely done,
To feed mine packing with an Host of men:
I feare me, you but warme the starued Snake,
Who cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
'Twas men I lackt, and you will giue them me;
I take it kindly, yet be well assur'd,
You put sharpe Weapons in a mad-mans hands.
Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty Band,
I will stirre vp in England some black Storme,
Shall blow ten thousand Soules to Heauen, or Hell
And this fell Tempest shall not cease to rage,
Vntill the Golden Circuit on my Head
Like to the glorious Sunnes transparant Beames,
Do calme the furie of this mad-bred Flawe
And for a minister of my intent,
I haue seduc'd a head-strong Kentishman,
Iohn Cade of Ashford,
To make Commotion, as full well he can,
Vnder the Title of Iohn Mortimer
In Ireland haue I seene this stubborne Cade
Oppose himselfe against a Troupe of Kernes,
And fought so long, till that his thighes with Darts
Were almost like a sharpe-quill'd Porpentine:
And in the end being rescued, I haue seene
Him caper vp the like a wilde Morisco,
Shaking the bloody Darts as he his bells.
Full often like a shag-haird craftie Kerne,
Hath he conuersed with the Enemie,
And vndiscouered come to me againe,
And giuen me notice of their Villanies.
This Deuill here shall be my Substitute,
For that Iohn Mortimer which now is dead,
In face, in gate, in speech he doth resemble.
By this, I shall perceiue the Commons minde
How they affect the House and Clayme of Yorke
Say he be taken, rackt, and tortured;
I know, no paine they can inflict vpon him,
Will make him say, I mou'd him to those Armes.
Say that he thriue as 'tis great like he will,
Why then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reape the Harueit which that Rascall sow'd.
For Humfrey; being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart: the next for me. Exit.

Enter two or three running ouer the Stage, from the Murther of Duke Humfrey

1. Runne to my Lord of Suffolke: let him know
We haue dispatcht the Duke as he commanded.
2. O that it were to doe: what haue we done?
Didst euer heare a man so penitent? Enter Suffolke.
1. Here comes my Lord.
Suff. Now Sirs, haue you dispatcht this thing?
1. I, my good Lord, he's dead.
Suff. Why that's well said. Goe get you to my House,
I will reward you for this venturous deed.
The King and all the Peeres are here at hand.
Haue you laid fayre the Bed? Are all things well,
According as I gaue directions?
1. 'Tis, my good Lord.
Suff. Away, be gone. Exeunt

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King, the Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Somerset, with Attendants.

King. Goe call our Vncle to our presence straight:
Say, we intend to try his Grace to day,
If he be guiltie, as 'tis published.
Suff. I'le call him presently, my Noble Lord. Exit
King. Lords take your places: and I pray you all
Proceed no straiter 'gainst our Vncle Gloster,
Then from true euidence, of good esteeme,
He be approu'd in an honest measure and lawfull.
Queene. God forbid any Malice should preuaile,
That faultlesse may condemne a Nobleman.
Pray God he may acquit him of suspition.
King. I thanke thee Meg, these words content me much.

Enter Suffolke.

How now? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our Vncle? what's the matter, Suffolke?
Suff. Dead in his Bed, my Lord, Gloster is dead.
Queene. Marry God forfend.
Car. God's secret Iudgement: I did dreame to Night,
The Duke was dumbe, and could not speake a word.
King swounds
Qu. How fares my Lord? Helpe Lords, the King is dead.
Som. Rere vp his Head, vnrobe him by the Nose.
Qu. Run, call, crie, helpe. O Henry open thine eyes.
Suff. He doth reuiue againe. Madame be patient.
King. O Heauenly God.
Qu. How fares my gracious Lord?
Suff. Comfort my Soueraigne, gracious Henry comfort.
King. What doth my Lord of Suffolke comfort me?
Came he right now to sing a Rauens Note,
Whose Dismall tune bereft my Vitall powres,
And thinkes he that the chirping of a Wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceiued sound?
Hide not thy poyson with such sugred words,
Lay not thy hands on me, forbeare I say,
Their touch affrights me as a Serpents sting.
Thou baleful Messenger, out of my sight.
Vpon thy eye-balls murderous Tyrannie
Sits in grim Maiestie, to fright the World.
Looke not vpon me, for thine eyes are wounding;
Yet do not go away: come Basiliske,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight.
For in the shade of death, I shall finde ioy:
In life, but double death, now Gloster dead.
Queene. Why do you rate my Lord of Suffolke thus?
Although the Duke was enemie to him,
Yet he most Christian-like laments his death:
And for my selfe, Foe as he was to me
Might liquid teares or heart-offending groanes,
Or blood-consuming sighes recall his Life,

I would be bande with weeping, ſicke with grones,
Looke pale as Prim-role with blood-ſuckning nights,
And all to haue the Noble Duke alyue.
What know I how the world may deeme of me?
For it is knowne we were but hollow Friends,
It may be iudg'd I made the Duke away,
So ſhall my name with Slanders tongues be wounded,
And Princes Courts be fild with my reproach.
This get I by his death. Ay me vnhappie,
To be a Queene, and Crowned with ſhame.

King. Ah woe is me for Grief, wretched man

Queen. Be woe for me, more wretched then them both,
What, Doſt thou turne away, and hide thy face
I am no loathſome Leaper, looke on me.
What? Art thou like the Adder waxen deafe?
Be poyſonous too, and kill thy forlorne Queene.
Is all thy comfort ſhut in Glouſters Tombe?
Why then Dame Elianor was neere thy ioy.
Erect his Statue, and worſhip it,
And make my Image but an Alehouſe ſigne.
Was I for this nye wrack'd vpon the Sea,
And twice by awkward winde from England barke
Driue backe againe vnto my Natiue Clime?
What boded this? but well forewarning winde
Did ſeeme to ſay, ſeeke not a Scorpion's Neſt,
Nor ſet no footing on this vnkinde ſhore.
What did I then? But curſe the gentle gales,
And he that lou'd them forthis their harſh Leaue,
And bid them blow towards England's bleſſed ſhore,
Or turne our Stemme vpon a dreadfull Rocke.
Yet Aeolus would not be a murtherer,
But left that hatefull office vnto thee.
The pretty vaulting Sea refuſed to drowne me,
Knowing that thou would'ſt haue me drown'd on ſhore
With teares as ſalt as Sea, through thy vnkindneſſe.
The ſplitting Rockes cowr'd in the ſinking ſands,
And would not daſh me with their ragged ſides,
Because thy flinty heart more hard than they,
Might in thy Palace periſh Elianor.
As farre as I could ken thy Chalky Cliffes,
When from the Shore the Tempeſt beate vs backe,
I ſtood vpon the Hatches in the ſtorme,
And when the duſky ſky, began to rob
My earnest gaping ſight of thy Lands view,
I tooke a ceaſeleſſe Leaue of my hard hand,
A Heart it was bound in with Diamonds,
And threw it towards thy Land. The Sea receiu'd it,
And ſo I wiſh'd thy body might my Heart.
And euen with this, loſt faire England's view,
And bid mine eyes be packing with my Heart,
And call'd them blind and dull to all Spectacles,
For loſing ken of Albion's wiſhed Coaſt.
How often haue I tempted Suffolkes tongue
(The agent of thy foes, and mine alſo)
To call a Watchmen as Ariſe mad,
When to the madding Peeple would vntold
A Stratagem of Troy burnes in their Streets.
Am I not worſe than Prodigious Monſtrous like him?
Ay mee, I can no more. Die Elianor,
For Henry weepes, that thou doſt liue ſo long.

Noiſe within. Enter Warwicke, and many Commons.

War. It is reported mighty Soueraigne,
That good Duke Humfrey Traiterouſly is murdred
By Suffolke, and the Cardinall Beauſords meanes:
The Commons like an angry Hiue of Bees
That want their Leader, ſcatter vp and downe,
And care not who they ſting in his reuenge.
My ſelfe haue calm'd their ſpleenfull mutinie,
Vntill they heare the order of his death.

King. That he is dead good Warwick, 'tis too true,
But how he dyed, God knowes, not Henry
Enter his Chamber, view his breatheleſſe Corpes,
And comment then vpon his ſodaine death.

War. That ſhall I do my Liege: Stay Salsburie
With the rude multitude, till I returne.

King. O thou that iudgeſt all things, ſtay my thoughts:
My thoughts, that labour to perſwade my ſoule,
Some violent hands were laid on Humfries life:
If my ſuſpect be falſe, forgiue me God,
For iudgement only doth belong to thee.
Fain would I go to chafe his paliſh lips,
And twenty thouſand kiſſes, and to draine
Vpon his face an Ocean of ſalt teares,
To tell my loue vnto his dumbe deafe trunke,
And with my fingers feele his hand vnfeeling.
But all in vaine are theſe meane Obſequies,
Shee puts forth.
And to ſurueye his dead and earthy Image,
What were it but to make my ſorrow greater?

Warw. Come hither gracious Soueraigne, view this body.

King. That is to ſee how deepe my graue is made,
For with his ſoule fled all my worldly ſolace
For ſeeing him I ſee my life in death.

War. As ſurely as my ſoule intends to liue
With that dread King that tooke our ſtate vpon him,
To free vs from his Fathers wrathfull curſe,
I do beleeue that violent hands were laid
Vpon the life of this thrice-famed Duke.

Suf. A dreadfull Oath, ſworne with a ſolemne tongue
What inſtance gues Lord Warwicke for his vow.

War. See how the blood is ſettled in his face
Oft haue I ſeene a timely-parted Ghoſt,
Of aſhie ſemblance, meager, pale, and bloodleſſe,
Being all deſcended to the labouring heart,
Who in the Conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the ſame for aydance gainſt the enemy,
Which with the heart there cooles, and ne're returneth,
To bluſh and beautifie the Cheeke againe.
But ſee, his face is blacke, and full of blood:
His eye-balles further out, than when he liued,
Staring full gaſtly, like a ſtrangled man:
His hayre vpreard, his noſtrils ſtretcht with ſtruggling:
His hands abroad diſplayd, as one that graſpt
And tugg'd for life, and was by ſtrength ſubdude.
Looke on the ſheets his haire (you ſee) is ſticking,
His well proportion'd Beard, made rude and rugged,
Like to the Summers Corne by Tempeſt lodged:
It cannot be but he was murdred heere,
The leaſt of all theſe ſigns were probable.

Suf. Why Warwicke, who ſhould do the Duke death?
My ſelfe and Beauford had him in protection,
And we I hope ſir, are no murtherers.

War. But both of you were vowed D. Humfries foes,
And you (forſooth) had the good Duke to keepe:
'Tis like you would not feaſt him like a friend,
And 'tis well ſeene, he found an enemy.

Queen. Then you belike ſuſpect theſe Noblemen,
As guilty of Duke Humfries vnthelefſe death.

War.

Warw. Who finds the Heyfer dead, and bleeding freſh,
And ſees faſt-by, a Butcher with an Axe,
But will ſuſpect, 'twas he that made the ſlaughter?
Who finds the Partridge in the Puttocks Neſt,
But may imagine how the Bird was dead,
Although the Kyte ſoare with vnbloudied Beake?
Even ſo ſuſpicious is this Tragedie.

Qu. Are you the Butcher, Suffolk? where's your Knife?
Is Beaufords tearm'd Protector, where are his Talons?

Suff. I weare no Knife, to ſlaughter ſleeping men,
But here's a vengefull Sword, ruſted with eaſe,
That ſhall be ſcowred in his rancorous heart,
That ſlanders me with Murthers Crimſon Badge:
Say, if thou dar'ſt proud Lord of Warwickſhire,
That I am faulty in Duke Humfreyes death.

Warw. What dares not Warwick, if falſe Suffolke dare him?

Qu. He dares not calme his contumelious Spirit,
Nor ceaſe to be an arrogant Controuler,
Though Suffolke dare him twenty thouſand times.

Warw. Madame be ſtill: with reuerence may I ſay,
For euery word you ſpeake in his behalfe,
Is ſlander to your Royall Dignitie.

Suff. Blunt-witted Lord, ignoble in demeanor,
If euer Lady wrong'd her Lord ſo much,
Thy Mother tooke into her Blameleſſ Bed
Some ſterne vntutur'd Churle, and Noble Stock
Was grafted with Crab-tree ſlippe, whoſe Fruit thou art,
And neuer of the Neuils Noble Race.

Warw. But that the guilt of Murther bucklers thee,
And I ſhould rob the Deaths-man of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ſhame and ſtanding ſhames,
For that my Soueraignes preſence makes me mild,
I would ſtraight make thee packe, thou falſe reuiler,
And buy a ſtaffe of Horſe-baſe in Smithfield:
Come thee to Heaven, and chide high-minded Sinners,
Packe, packe, I ſay, hence with thy Scale to Hell,
Perfidious bloud-ſucker of ſleeping men.

Suff. Thou ſhalt be waking while I ſhed thy blood,
If from this preſence thou dar'ſt goe with me.

Warw. Away euen now, or I will drag thee hence:
Vnworthy though thou art, Ile cope with thee,
And do it, ere the Clocke ſtrike two for Duke Humfreyes Ghoſt.

Exeunt.

King. What ſtronger Breſt-plate than a heart vntainted?
Three times is he arm'd that hath his Quarrell iuſt,
And he but naked, though lockt vp in Steele,
Whoſe Conſcience with Iniuſtice is corrupted.

A noiſe within.

Queene. What noyſe is this?

Enter Suffolke and Warwicke, with their Weapons drawne.

King. Why how now Lords?
Your wrathfull Weapons drawne,
Here in our preſence? Dare you be ſo bold?
Why what tumultuous clamor haue we here?

Suff. The trayterous Warwick, with the men of Bury,
Set all vpon me, mighty Soueraigne.

Enter Salisbury.

Sarish. Sirs ſtand apart, the King ſhall know your minde.
Dread Lord, the Commons ſend you word by me,
Vnleſſe Lord Suffolke ſtraight be done to death,
Or banniſhed faire England's Territories,
They will by violence teare him from your Pallace,
And torture him with grieuous lingring death.
They ſay, by him the good Duke Humfrey dy'de
They ſay, in him they feare your Highneſſe death;
And meere inſtinct of Loue and Loyaltie,
Free from a ſtubborne oppoſite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his Baniſhment.
They ſay, in care of your moſt Royall Perſon,
That if your Highneſſe ſhould intend to ſleepe,
And charge, that no man ſhould diſturbe your reſt,
In paine of your diſpleaſure or of death;
Yet notwithſtanding ſuch a ſtrait edict,
Were there a Serpent ſeene, with forked Tongue,
That ſlily glided towards your Maieſtie,
It were but neceſſarie you were waked,
Leaſt being ouer-laid in that hatefull ſlumber,
The mortall Worme might make the ſleepe eternall.
And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, whether you will, or no,
From ſuch fell Serpents as falſe Suffolke is;
With whoſe enuenomed and fatall ſting,
Your louing Vncle, twenty times his worth,
They ſay is ſhamefully bereft of life.

Commons within. An anſwer from the King, my Lord of Salisbury.

Suff. 'Tis like the Commons rude vnpolliſht Hindes,
Could ſend ſuch Meſſage to their Soueraigne:
But you, my Lord, were glad to be imployd,
To ſhew how quaint an Orator you are:
But all the Honor Salisbury hath wonne,
Is, that he was the Lord Ambaſſador,
Sent from a ſort of Tinkers to the King.

Within. An anſwer from the King, or wee will all breake in.

King. Go Salisbury and tell them all from me,
I thanke them for their tender-louing care;
And had I not beene cited ſo by them,
Yet did I purpoſe as they doe entreat:
For ſure my thoughts doe hourely prophecie,
Miſchance vnto my State by Suffolkes meanes.
And therefore by his Maieſtie I ſweare,
Whom'ſt'are-vnworthie Deputie I am,
He ſhall not breathe infection in this aire,
But three dayes longer, on the paine of death.

Qu. Oh Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolke.

King. Vngentle Queene, to call him gentle Suffolke.
No more I ſay: if thou do'ſt plead for him,
Thou wilt but adde increaſe vnto my Wrath.
Had I but ſayd, I would haue kept my Word;
But when I ſweare, it is irreuocable.
If after three dayes ſpace thou here be'ſt found,
On any ground that I am Ruler of,
The World ſhall not be Ranſome for thy Life.
Come Warwicke, come good Warwicke, goe with me,
I haue great matters to impart to thee. Exeunt.

Qu. Miſchance and Sorrow goe along with you,
Heart's Diſcontent, and ſowre Affliction,
Be playfellowes to keepe you companie:
There's two of you, the Deu'll make a third,
And three-fold Vengeance tend vpon your ſteps.

Suff. Ceaſe gentle Queene, theſe Execrations,
And let thy Suffolke take his heauie leaue.

Queene. Fye

Queen. Eye Coward woman, and soft hearted wretch,
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy.
Suf. A plague vpon them: wherefore should I curse them?
Would I curses kill, as doth the Mandrakes grone,
I would inuent as bitter searching termes,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to heare,
Deliuer'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signes of deadly hate,
As leane-fac'd enuy in her loathsome cane.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words,
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten Flint,
Mine hayre be fixt an end, as one distract:
Ay, euery ioynt should seeme to curse and ban,
And euen now my burthen'd heart would breake
Should I not curse them. Poyson be their drinke
Gall, worse then Gall, the daintiest that they taste:
Their sweetest shade, a groue of Cypresse Trees:
Their cheerefull Prospect, murthring Basiliskes:
Their softest Touch, as smart as Lyzards stings:
Their Musicke, frightfull as the Serpents hisse,
And boading Screech-Owles, make the Consort full
All the foule terrors in darke seated hell——
Qu. Enough sweet Suffolke, thou torment'st thy soule,
And these dire Curses like the Sunne 'gainst glasse,
Or like an ouer-charged Gun, recoile,
And turnes the force of them vpon thy selfe.
Suf. You bad me ban, and will you bid me leaue?
Now by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a Winters night,
Though standing naked on a Mountaine top,
Where byting cold would neuer let grasse grow,
And thinke it but a minute spent in sport.
Qu. Oh, let me entreat thee cease, giue me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournfull teares:
Nor let the raine of heauen wet this place,
To wash away my woefull Monuments.
Oh, could this kisse be printed in thy hand,
That euery kisse might print my heart vpon there by the Seale,
Through whom a thousand sighes are breath'd for thee.
So get thee gone, that I may know my greefe,
'Tis but surmis'd, whiles thou art standing by,
As one that surfets, thinking on a want.
I will repeale thee, or be well assur'd,
Adiudge me to be banished my selfe:
And banished I am, if but from thee.
Go, speake not to me; euen now be gone.
Oh go not yet. Euen thus, two Friends condemn'd,
Imbrace, and kisse, and take ten thousand leaues,
Loather a hundred times to part then dye:
Yet now farewell, and farewell Life with thee.
Suf. Thus is poore Suffolke ten times banished,
Once by the King, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the land I care for, were't thou thence,
A Wilderneſſe is populous enough,
So Suffolke had thy heauenly company:
For where thou art, there is the World it selfe,
With euery seuerall pleasure in the World:
And where thou art not, Desolation.
I cannot more: Haue thou to stay thy life,
My selfe no ioy in nought, but that thou liu'st.

Enter Vaux.

Queene. Whether goes Vaux so fast? What newes I prethee?

Vaux. To signifie vnto his Maiesty,
That Cardinall Beauford is at point of death
For sodainly a greeuous sickneſſe tooke him,
That makes him gaspe, and stare, and catch the aire,
Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talkes, as if Duke Humfries Ghost
Were by his side: Sometime, he calles the King,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his ouer-charged soule,
And I am sent to tell his Maieſtie,
That euen now he cries alowd for him.
Qu. Go tell this heauy Message to the King. Exit
Aye me! What is this World? What newes are these?
But wherefore greeue I at an houres poore loſſe,
Omitting Suffolkes exile, my soules Treasure?
Why only Suffolke mourne I not for thee?
And with the Southerne clouds, contend in teares?
Theirs for the earths encrease, mine for my sorrowes.
Now get thee hence, the King thou know'st is comming,
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.
Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot liue,
And in thy sight to do it: what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Heere could I breath my soule into the ayre,
As milde and gentle as the Cradle-babe,
Dying with mothers dugge betweene it's lips.
Where from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close vp mine eyes:
To haue thee with thy lippes to stop my mouth:
So should'st thou either turne my flying soule,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liu'd in sweete Elizium.
To dye by thee, were but to dye in iest,
From thee to dye, were torture more then death.
Oh let me stay, befall what may befall.
Queen. Away! Though parting be a fretfull corasiue,
It is applyed to a deathfull woorke.
To France sweet Suffolke: Let me heare from thee.
For wheresoere thou art in this worlds Globe,
I'le haue an Iris that shall finde thee out.
Suf. I go.
Qu. And take my heart with thee.
Suf. A iewell lockt into the woefull'st Caske,
That euer did containe a thing of worth,
Euen as a splitted Barke, so sunder we:
This way fall I to death.
Qu. This way for me, Exeunt

Enter the King, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Cardinal in bed.

King. How fare's my Lord? Speake Beauford to thy Soueraigne.
Ca. If thou beest death, Ile giue thee Englands Treasure,
Enough to purchase such another Iland,
So thou wilt let me liue, and feele no paine.
King. Ah, what a signe it is of euill life,
Where death's approach is seene so terrible.
War. Beauford, it is thy Soueraigne speakes to thee.
Beau. Bring me vnto my Triall when you will.
Di'de he not in his bed? Where should he dye?
Can I make men liue, whether they will or no?
Oh torture me no more, I will confesse.
Alriue againe? Then shew me where he is,
Ile giue a thousand pound to looke vpon him.
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.

Comb

Combe downe his haire; looke looke, it ſtands vpright,
Like Lime-twigs ſet to catch my winged ſoule:
Giue me ſome drinke, and bid the Apothecarie
Bring the ſtrong poyſon that I bought of him.
King. O thou eternall mouer of the heauens,
Looke with a gentle eye vpon this Wretch,
O beate away the buſie meddling Fiend,
That layes ſtrong ſiege vnto this wretches ſoule,
And from his boſome purge this blacke diſpaire.
War. See how the pangs of death do make him grim.
Sal. Diſhonor him not, for now is pale beſeeming
King. Peace to his ſoule, if God's good pleaſure be
Lord Cardinall if thou think'ſt on Heauens bleſſe,
Hold vp thy hand, make ſignall of thy hope.
He dies, and makes no ſigne: O God forgiue him.
War. So bad a death argues a monſtrous life.
King. Forbeare to iudge, for we are ſinners all.
Cloſe vp his eyes, and draw the Curtaine cloſe,
And let vs all to Meditation. Exeunt.

Enter Lieutenant, Suffolke, &c.

Lieu. The gallies bankt with Barbarian Mariners,
Is crept into the boſome of the Sea
And now are boording Weſtons ſea-faring Barkes
They drag the Lag, the reſt apply the ſpight
Who with their arrowes, hookes, and ſtarting ſpeares
Creape and climbe their ſides, and driue the owners hence.
Breathleſſe for mere conſuming deſire of the ayre
Here are they come, and ſtand to ſeaſe vs as their prize.
Vnleſſe our Pinnace Anchors in the Downes
Heere ſhall they make the tranſom of the land,
Or with their blood ſtaine this diſcoloured ſhore.
Maiſter, this Priſoner freely giue I thee,
And thou that art his Maſter, yeeld him vp.
Thou ſtalke of Fortunes Mate, vnſafe I pray.
Suf. Stay Whitmore, for thy Priſoner is a Prince,
The Duke of Suffolke, William de la Pole.
Whit. The Duke of Suffolke, muffled vp in ragges?
Suf. I, but theſe raggs are no part of the Duke.
Lieu. But Ioue was neuer ſlaine as thou ſhalt be,
Obſcure and lowſie Swaine, King Henries blood.
Suf. The honourable blood of Lancaſter
Muſt not be ſhed by ſuch a peaſant Groome.
Haſt thou not kiſt my hand, and held my ſtirrop?
Bare-headed plodded by my footcloth Mule,
And thought thee happy when I ſhook my head.
How often haſt thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my Trencher, kneel'd downe at the boord,
When I haue feaſted with Queene Margaret
Remember it, and let it make thee Creſt-fallne,
Ile, and abaſe thy aboritiue Pride.
How in our voyding Lobby haſt thou ſtood,
And duly waited for my comming forth?
This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalfe,
And therefore ſhall it charme thy riotous tongue.
Whit. Speak Captaine, ſhall I ſtab the forlorne Swaine.
Lieu. First let my words ſtab him, as he hath me.
Suf. Baſe Iaue, thou reſt my words ſtab not, nor tell not,
Stroke thee but with a looke, and do our loue boates ſide,
Strike off his head. Suf. I thou dar'ſt not for thy owne.
Lieu. Poole? Sir Poole? Lord
Ile call this Poole to make a Subiect bow,
Kneele ſeruile Suffolke, giue my Poole thy hand,
Vnleſſe thou be a Popinjay, and ſeeme the ground
And ſtay dumbe at my gracious Duke Humfries death.
Againſt the emptie windes do I diſcharge my words,
Vaſt tracts of Land and Seas deuide thee and me,
Both Coaſts, and Seas ſhall ring at thee againe
And we do be mocke the Hagges of Fate,
For this great ſcorne, to our Lord
Vnto the mercie of our iuſt offended King.
Hauing the Subiect of our wrath the King.
Baſe Dunghill Villaine, and mercileſſe Tyrant,
Before I draw this gallant head of mine,
Whoſe duteous thoughts did neuer ſtaine my Pen,
But euer ſtood vnſpotted to the King,
Ere this ſword, hot with blood of thine,
Diſdaine to call thee Lord, and Pirate
Haue ſtuck three of your Countreymen to our Ports,
And two and twenty Sailors wounded home.
Their ſhooting Warre like and the Nemus all,
Were dreadfull Swords were neuer drawne in vaine,
And now the Horſe of Yorke thou ſtrip'ſt from the Crowne,
By ſhame adiudged a gaſtly fearfull King,
And Hotſpur proud in mocking vanity,
Burſes wanton ſeeming gate, whoſe hopefull colours
Aduance our halfe-faded Roſe, his thought is Iune,
Vnder the which is writ, Inuitis nubibus
The Commons here in Kent are vp in armes,
And to conclude, Reproach and Beggerie,
Is crept into the Palace of our King,
And all by thee: away, conuey him hence.
Suf. O that I were a God, to ſhoot forth Thunder
Vpon the paltry, ſeruile, abiect Drudges
Small things make baſe men proud. This Villaine heere,
Being Captaine of a Pinnace, threatens more
Then Bargulus the ſtrong Illyrian Pirate.
Drones ſucke not Eagles blood, but rob Bee-hiues.
It is impoſſible that I ſhould dye

By

E[n]ch a lowly Vassal as thy selfe
Thy words moue Rage, and not remorse in me
I go of Message from the Queene to France
I charge thee waft me safely crosse the Channell.
Lieu. Walter Whitmore, Come Suffolke, I must waft thee to thy death
Suf. Paine of death more weighty, then my life, is thee I feare.
Hen. I am that haue committed nought, but that I haue done before I heare thee.
What, are ye daunted now? Now will ye stoope.
1 Gent. My gracious Lord intreat him, speak him fair
Suf. Suffolkes Imperiall tongue is sterne and rough
Vs'd to command, vntaught to plead for fauour.
Farre be it, we should honor such as these
With humble suite: no, rather let my head
Stoope to the Block, then these knees bow to any,
Saue to the God of heauen and to my King
And sooner dance vpon a bloody pole,
Then stand vncouer'd to the Vulgar Groome.
True Nobility, is exempt from feare
More can I beare, then you dare execute.
Lieu. Hale him away, and let him talke no more:
Come Souldiers, shew what cruelty ye can
Suf. That this my death may neuer be forgot.
Great men oft dye by vile Bezonians.
A Romane Sworder, and Banditto slaue
Murder'd sweet Tully. Brutus bastard hand
Stabb'd Iulius Cæsar. Sauage Islanders
Pompey the Great, and Suffolke dyes by Pyrats.
Exit Walter, and the rest.
Lieu. And as for these whose ransome we haue set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart
Therefore come you with vs, and let him go.
Exeunt Lieutenant, and the rest.
Manet the first Gent. Enter Walter with the body
Wal. There let his head, and liberally bestow
Vpon the Queene: is Master ready? Exit Walter.
1 Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle,
His body will I beare vnto the King:
If he reuenge not, yet will his friends,
So will the Queene, that living, held him deere.

Enter Iack Cade, and the rest.

Iack. Come and get these weapons, and weare them, for from hence they haue been vp these two dayes.
Hol. They haue the more need to sleepe now then.
Iack. I tell thee Iacke Cade the Clothier, it cannes to drene the Common-wealth and turne it, and let a new nap vpon it.
Hol. So he had need, for 'tis thred-bare. Well, I say, it was neuer merrie world in England, since Gentlemen came vp.
Iack. O miserable Age! Vertue is not regarded in Handy-crafts-men.
Hol. The Nobility thinke scorne to go in Leather Aprons.
Iack. Nay more, the Kings Councell are no good workmen.
Hol. True: and yet it is said, Labour in thy Vocation: which is the reason why some of vs loue not to be a-dooing. For (as the olde Saying is) the Labourer can neuer be a Gentleman.
Iack. Thou hast spoken for us, gentle Mate, for we will haue but three Pence a day. Is not this a braue thing, Smith?
Hol. Excellent, I like them. There's Bees Sonne, the Taylor of Wingham.
Iack. He shall haue the skinnes of our enemies, to make Dogges-Leather of.
Hol. And Dicke the Butcher.
Iack. Then is sin stricken downe like an Oxe, and iniquities throate cut like a Calfe.
Hol. And Smith the Weauer.
Iack. Argo, their thred of life is spun.
Hol. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drumme. Enter Cade, Dicke Butcher, Smith the Weauer, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. We John Cade, so tearm'd of our supposed Father.
Dick. Or rather of stealing a Cade of Herrings.
Cade. For our enemies shall fall before vs, inspired with the spirit of putting down Kings and Princes. Command silence.
Dick. Silence.
Cade. My father was a Mortimer.
Dick. He was an honest man, and a good Bricklayer.
Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.
Butch. I knew her well, she was a Midwife.
Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies.
Dick. She was indeed a Pedlers daughter, & sold many Laces.
Weauer. But now of late, not able to trauell with her furr'd Packe, she washes buckes here at home.
Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable house.
Dick. I by my faith, the field is honorable: and there was he borne, vnder a hedge. for his father had neuer a house but the Cage.
Cade. Valiant I am.
Weauer. A must needs, for beggery is valiant.
Cade. I am able to endure much.
Dick. No question of that, for I haue seene him whipt three Market dayes together.
Cade. I feare neither sword, nor fire.
Weau. He needs not feare the sword, for his Coate is of proofe.
Dick. But me thinkes he should stand in feare of fire, being burnt i'th hand for stealing of Sheepe.
Cade. Be brane then, for your liuery is verie Base, and Venues Reuenewes. Therefore be a Lord: and Lone-mate pony Loades sold for a penny: the three hoop'd pot, shall haue ten hoopes, and I will make it Felony to drinke small Beere. All the Realme shall be in Common, and in Cheapside shall my Palfrey go to grasse: and when I am King, as King I will be.
All. God saue your Maiesty.
Cade. I thanke you good people. There shall be no money, all shall eate and drinke on my score, and I will apparell them all in one Liuery, that they may agree like Brothers, and worship me their Lord.
Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the Lawyers.
Cade. Nay, that I meane to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent Lambe should be made Parchment? that Parchment being scribbled ore, should vndoe a man? Some say the Bee stings, but I say, 'tis the Bees wax: for I did but seale once to a thing, and I was neuer mine owne man since. How now? Who's there?

Enter a Clarke.

Weauer. The Clarke of Chartam: he can write and reade and cast accompt.
Cade. O monstrous.
Wea. We tooke him setting of boyes Copies.

Cade.

Cade. Here's a Villaine.

Wea. Has a Booke in his pocket with red Letters in't

Cade. Nay then he is a Conjurer.

But. Nay, he can make Obligations, and write Court hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't. The man is a proper man of mine Honour: unlesse I finde him guilty, he shall not die. Come hither sirrah, I must examine thee: What is thy name?

Clarke. Emanuell.

Dut. They use to write it on the top of Letters. 'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone. Dost thou use to write thy name? Or hast thou a marke to thy name, like an honest plaine dealing man?

Clarke. Sir, I thanke God, I have been so well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confest: away with him, he's a Villaine and a Traitor.

Cade. Away with him I say: Hang him with his Pen and Inke-horne about his neck.

Exit one with the Clarke.

Enter Michael.

Mich. Where's our Generall?

Cade. Heere I am thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly Sir Humfrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the Kings Forces.

Cade. Stand my companions: I charge you in the Kings name, and thereby charge you, as you love me, and the rising of our enterprise, that you stirre not a foote from me: yonder I say is Sir Humfrey Stafford and his brother. The gallant is valiant, I dare assure you, and therefore if he come, let him welcome: I warrant you he shall not come so neere you, as to offend you. Fight for your lives.

Mich. No.

Cade. To equall me in honour, I make my selfe a knight presently, Rise up Sir John Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter Sir Humfrey Stafford, and his Brother, with Drum and Soldiers.

Staf. Rebellious Hinds, the filth and scum of Kent,
Marked for the Gallowes: lay your weapons downe,
Home to your Cottages forsake this Groome.
The King, mou'd with pitty of your revolt,
Bro. But angry, wrathfull, and inclin'd to blood,
If you go forward: therefore yeeld, or dye.

Cade. As for these silken-coated Slaves, I passe not.
It is to you good people, that I speake,
Over whom (in time to come) I hope to raigne.
For I am rightly, holden by the Crowne.

Staf. Villaine, thy Father was a Plaisterer,
And thou thy selfe a Shearman, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a Gardiner.

Bro. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this: Edmund Mortimer Earle of March, married the Duke of Clarence daughter, did he not?

Staf. I sir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

Bro. That's false.

Cade. I, there's the question, But I say, 'tis true:
The elder of them being put to nurse,
Was by a beggar woman stolne away,
And ignorant of his birth and parentage,
Became a Bricklayer, when he came to age,
His sonne am I, deny it if you can.

But. Nay, 'tis too true, therefore he shall be King.

Wea. Sir he made a Chimney in my Fathers house, & the bricks are alive at this day to testifie it: therefore deny it not.

Staf. And will you credit this base Drudges Words, that speakes he knowes not what.

All. I marry will we: therefore get ye gone.

Bro. Jacke Cade, the Duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade. He lyes, for I invented it my selfe. Go to Sirrah, tell the King from me, that for his Fathers take Henry the fift, (in whose time, boyes went to Span-counter for French Crownes, I am content he shall raigne, but I'le be Protector over him.

Butcher. And furthermore, wee'l have the Lord Say's head for selling the Dukedome of Maine.

Cade. And good reason: for thereby is England maim'd, and fain to go with a staffe, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow Kings, I tell you that that Lord Say hath gelded the Commonwealth, and made it an Eunuch: & more than that, he can speake French, and therefore he is a Traitor.

Staf. O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay answer if you can. The French-men are our enemies: go to then, I aske but this: Can he that speaks with the tongue of an enemy, be a good Counsellour, or no?

All. No: no: and therefore we pronounce him dead.

Bro. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevayle,
Assemble them with all the Army of the King.

Staf. Herald away: and throughout every Towne,
Proclaime them Traitors that are up with Cade,
That those which flye before the battell ends,
May even in their Wives and Children sight,
Be hang'd up for example at their doores:
And you that be the Kings friends, follow me.

Exit.

Cade. And you that love the Commons, follow me.
Now shew your selves men, 'tis for liberty.
We will not leave one Lord, one Gentleman:
Spare none, but such as go in clouted shoone,
For they are thrifty honest men, and such
As would (but that they cannot) take our parts.

But. They are all confederate against us.

Cade. But Cade will be too hard for them, when we are most out of danger. Come, march forward.

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Staffords are slaine. Enter Cade and the rest.

Cade. Where's Dicke, the Butcher of Ashford?

Dut. Heere sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like Sheepe and Oxen, & thou behavedst thy selfe, as if thou hadst been in thine owne Slaughter-house: therefore thus will I reward thee, the Lent shall be as long again as it is, and thou shalt have a License to kill for a hundred lacking one.

Dut. I desire no more.

Cade. And to speake truth, thou deservest no lesse.
This Monument of the victory will I beare, and the bodies shall be dragg'd at my horse heeles, till I do come to London, where we will have the Maiors sword borne before us.

Dut. If we mean to thrive, and do good, breake open the Gaoles, and let out the Prisoners.

Cade. Feare not that I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London.

Exeunt.

Enter the King with a Supplication, and the Queene with Suffolkes head, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Say.

Queene. Oft have I heard that grief softens the mind,
And

And makes it fearefull and degenerate,
Think therefore on reuenge, and ceaſe to weepe.
But who can ceaſe to weepe, and looke on this.
Heere may his head lye on my throbbing breſt:
But where's the body that I ſhould imbrace?

Buc. What anſwer makes your Grace to the Rebells Supplication?

King. Ile ſend ſome holy Biſhop to intreat:
For God forbid, ſo many ſimple ſoules
Should periſh by the Sword. And I my ſelfe,
Rather then bloody Warre ſhall cut them ſhort,
Will parley with Iacke Cade their Generall.
But ſtay, Ile read it ouer once againe.

Qu. Ah barbarous villaines: Hath this louely face,
Ruld like a wanton, ouer me,
And could it not inforce them to relent,
That were vnworthy to behold the ſame.

King. Lord Say, Iacke Cade hath ſworne to haue thy head.

Say. I but I hope your Highneſſe ſhall haue his.

King. How now Madame
Still Lamenting and mourning for Suffolkes death?
I feare me (Loue) if that I had beene dead,
Thou would'ſt not haue mourn'd ſo much for me.

Qu. No my Loue, I ſhould not mourne, but dye for thee.

Enter a Meſſenger.

King. How now? What newes? Why com'ſt thou in ſuch haſte?

Meſ. The Rebels are in Southwarke: Fly my Lord:
Iacke Cade proclaimes himſelfe Lord Mortimer,
Deſcended from the Duke of Clarence houſe,
And calles your Grace Vſurper, openly.
And vowes to Crowne himſelfe in Weſtminſter.
His Army is a ragged multitude
Of Hindes and Peazants, rude and mercileſſe:
Sir Humfrey Stafford, and his Brothers death,
Hath giuen them heart and courage to proceede:
All Schollers, Lawyers, Courtiers, Gentlemen,
They call falſe Caterpillers, and intend their death.

King. Oh graceleſſe men: they know not what they do.

Buck. My gracious Lord, retire to Killingworth,
Vntill a power be raiſ'd to put them downe.

Qu. Ah were the Duke of Suffolke now aliue,
Theſe Kentiſh Rebels wou'd be ſoone appeaſ'd.

King. Lord Say, the Traitors hateth thee,
Therefore away with vs to Killingworth.

Say. So might your Graces perſon be in danger:
The ſight of me is odious in their eyes:
And therefore in this Citty will I ſtay,
And liue alone as ſecret as I may.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſ. Iacke Cade hath gotten London-bridge.
The Citizens flye and forſake their houſes:
The Rafcall people, thirſting after prey,
Ioyne with the Traitor, and they ioynily ſweare
To ſpoyle the Citty, and your Royall Court.

Buc. Then linger not my Lord, away, take horſe.

King. Come Margaret. God our hope will ſuccor vs.

Qu. My hope is gone, now Suffolke is deceaſt.

King. Farewell my Lord, truſt not the Kentiſh Rebels

Buc. Truſt no body for feare you betrayd.

Say. The truſt I haue, is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and reſolute. Exeunt

Enter Lord Scales vpon the Tower walking. Then enters two or three Citizens below.

Scales. How now? Is Iacke Cade ſlaine?

1. Cit. No my Lord, nor likely to be ſlaine.
For they haue wonne the Bridge,
Killing all thoſe that withſtand them
The L. Maior craues ayd of your Honor from the Tower
To defend the City from the Rebels

Scales. Such ayd as I can ſpare you ſhall command,
But I am troubled heere with them my ſelfe,
The Rebels haue aſſay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither I will ſend you Matthew Goffe.
Fight for your King, your Country, and your Liues,
And ſo farwell, for I muſt hence againe. Exeunt

Enter Iacke Cade and the reſt, and ſtrikes his ſtaffe on London ſtone

Cade. Now is Mortimer Lord of this City,
And heere ſitting vpon London Stone,
I charge and command, that of the Cities coſt
The piſſing Conduit run nothing but Claret Wine
This firſt yeare of our raigne
And now henceforward it ſhall be Treaſon for any,
That calles me other then Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier running

Sould. Iacke Cade, Iacke Cade.

Cade. Knocke him downe there. They kill him

But If this Fellow be wiſe, he'l neuer call ye Iacke Cade more, I thinke he hath a very faire warning.

Dicke. My Lord, there's an Army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade Come, then let's go fight with them:
But firſt, go and ſet London Bridge on fire,
And if you can, burne downe the Tower too.
Come, let's away. Exeunt omnes.

Alarums. Matthew Goffe is ſlain, and all the reſt. Then enter Iacke Cade, with his Company.

Cade. So ſirs: now go ſome and pull downe the Sauoy:
Others to'th Innes of Court, downe with them all.

But. I haue a ſuite vnto your Lordſhip.

Cade. Bee it a Lordſhippe, thou ſhalt haue it for that word.

But. Only that the Lawes of England may come out of your mouth

John. Maſſe 'twill be ſore Law then, for he was thruſt in the mouth with a Speare, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith. Nay John, it will be ſtinking Law, for his breath ſtinkes with eating toaſted cheeſe.

Cade. I haue thought vpon it, It ſhall bee ſo. Away, burne all the Records of the Realme, my mouth ſhall be the Parliament of England.

John. Then we are like to haue biting Statutes
Vnleſſe his teeth be pull'd out.

Cade. And hence-forward all things ſhall be in Common Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Lord, a prize, a prize, heeres the Lord Say, which ſold the Townes in France. He that made vs pay one and twenty Fifteenes, and one ſhilling to the pound, the laſt Subſidie.

Enter

Enter George, with the Lord Say.

Cade. Well, hee shall be beheaded for it ten times: Ah thou Say, thou Serge, nay thou Buckram Lord, now art thou within point-blanke of our Jurisdiction Regall. What canst thou answer to my Maiesty, for giuing vp of Normandie vnto Mounsieur Basimecu, the Dolphine of France? Be it knowne vnto thee by these presence, euen the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the Beesome that must sweepe the Court cleane of such filth as thou art: Thou hast most traiterously corrupted the youth of the Realme, erecting a Grammar Schoole: and whereas before, our Fore-fathers had no other Bookes but the Score and the Tally, thou hast caused printing to be vs'd, and contrary to the King, his Crowne, and Dignity, thou hast built a Paper-Mill. It's true I haue prouided for thy better, that thou hast men about thee, that vsually talke of a Nowne and a Verbe, and such abhominable wordes, as no Christian eare can endure to heare. Thou hast appointed Iustices of Peace, to call poore men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Moreouer, thou hast put them in prison, and because they could not reade, thou hast hang'd them, when (indeede) only for that cause they haue beene most worthy to liue. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry thou ought'st not to let thy horse weare a Cloake, when honester men then thou go in their Hose and Doublets.

Dicke. And worke in their shirt too, as my selfe for example, that am a Butcher.

Say. You men of Kent

Kent. What say you of Kent.

Say. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him, away with him, he speaks Latine.

Say. Heare me but speake and beare mee where you will.

Kent, in the Commentaries Cæsar writ,
Is term'd the ciuell'st place of all this Isle:
Sweet is the Country, because full of Riches,
The People Liberall, Valiant, Active, Wealthy,
Which makes me hope you are not void of pitty.
I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandie,
Yet to recouer them would loose my life:
Iustice with fauour haue I alwayes done,
Prayres and Teares haue mou'd me, Gifts could neuer.
When haue I ought exacted at your hands?
Kent to maintaine me, the King, the Realme and you,
Large gifts haue I bestow'd on learned Clearkes,
Because my Booke preferr'd me to the King.
And seeing Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the Wing wherewith we flye to heauen.
Vnlesse you be possest with deuilish spirits,
You cannot but forbeare to murther me:
This Tongue hath parlied vnto Forraigne Kings
For your behoofe.

Cade. Tut, when struck'st thou one blow in the field?

Say. Great men haue reaching hands: oft haue I struck
Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.

Geo. O monstrous Coward! What, to come behinde Folkes?

Say. These cheekes are pale for watching for your good

Cade. Giue him a box o'th'eare, and that will make 'em red againe

Say. Long sitting to determine poore mens causes,
Hath made me full of sicknesse and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall haue a hempen Caudle then, & the help of hatchet.

Dicke. Why dost thou quiuer man?

Say. The Palsie, and not feare prouokes me.

Cade. Nay, he nodds at vs, as we stood by a Gallowes, and we'll helpe him to a halter. Come, haue at you with a downe right blow.

Dicke. Hold me the sword: and do you edge it well enough.

Cade. Dispatch: Away with him, away with him, he speakes Latine.

Say. Ah Countrymen: If when you make your pray'rs,
God should be so obdurate as yours are:
How would it fare with your departed soules,
And therefore yet relent, and saue my life.

Cade. Away with him, away with him: he speakes Latine. The Queene hath best'd me Captaine of London: Where I am Lodged, there shall you be visited dayly: who (I hope) shall be of no litle account: Some of you shall be Prisoners, some Fellons, some Knights: but I'le haue you all ransomed, and quickly too. Where they haue it: Men shall hold of mee in Capite. And we charge and command, that their wiues be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can aske.

Dicke. My Lord,
When shall we go to Cheapside, and take vp commodities vpon our bils?

Cade. Marry presently.

All. O braue.

Enter one with the heads.

Cade. But is not this braue?
Let them kisse one another: For they lou'd well
When they were aliue. Now part them againe,
Least they consult about the giuing vp
Of some more Townes in France. Soldiers,
Defer the spoile of the Citie vntill night:
For with these borne before vs, in stead of Maces,
Will we ride through the streets, & at euery Corner
Haue them kisse. Away. Exit

Alarum, and Retreat. Enter againe Cade, and all his rabblement.

Cade. Vp Fish-street, downe Saint Magnes corner, kill and knocke downe, throw them into Thames.

Sound a parley.

What noise is this I heare?
Dare any be so bold to sound Retreat or Parley
When I command them kill?

Enter

Enter Buckingham, and old Clifford.

Buc. Iheere they be, that dare and will disturb thee:
Know Cade, we come Ambassadors from the King
Vnto the Commons, whom thou hast misled,
And heere pronounce free pardon to them all,
That will forsake thee and go home in peace.
Clif. What say ye Countrymen, will ye relent
And yeeld to mercy, whil'st 'tis offred you,
Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths?
Who goes the King, and 'gainst the Crowne rebels,
For France is come and at the doores of Yorke.
Will not the Coward abide a Conquerour?
Who flyes not are no hinderers, but prickes
Their Fellowes courage that should fight with him:
Alarum, retreat, which power augments and kills.
All. A Clifford, a Clifford, we follow the King, and Clifford.
Cade. Was ever Feather so lightly blowne too & fro, as this multitude? the name of Henry the fift, hales them to an hundred mens hearts, and makes them leaue me desolate. I see them lay their heades together to surprize me. My sword make way for me, for heere is no staying: in despight of the diuels and hell, haue through the verie middest of you: and heauens and honor be witnesse, that no want of resolution in mee, but only my Followers base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake mee to my heeles. Exit
Buck. What, is he fled? Go some and follow him,
And he that brings his head vnto the King,
Shall haue a thousand Crownes for his reward.
Exeunt some of them.
Follow me souldiers, wee'l deuise a meane,
To reconcile you all vnto the King. Exeunt omnes.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King, Queene, and Somerset on the Tarrace.

King. Was euer King that ioy'd an earthly Throne,
And could command no more content then I?
No sooner was I crept out of my Cradle,
But I was made a King, at nine months olde
Was neuer Subiect long'd to be a King,
As I do long and wish to be a Subiect.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buc. Health and glad tydings to your Maiesty.
King. Why Buckingham, is the Traitor Cade surpris'd?
Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter Multitudes with Halters about their Necks.

Clif. He is fled my Lord, and all his powers do yeeld,
And humbly thus with halters on their neckes,
Expect your Highnesse doome of life, or death.
King. Then heauen set ope thy euerlasting gates,
To entertaine my vowes of thankes and praise.
Souldiers, this day haue you redeem'd your liues,
And shew'd how well you loue your Prince & Country:
Continue still in this so good a minde,
And Henry though he be infortunate,
Assure your selues will neuer be vnkinde:
And to your thankes, and pardon to you all,
I do dismisse you to your seuerall Countries.
All. God saue the King, God saue the King.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Please it your Grace to be aduertised,
The Duke of Yorke is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puissant and a mighty power
Of Gallowglasses and stout Kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array,
And still proclaimeth as he comes along,
His Armes are only to remoue from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he tearmes a Traitor.
King. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and Yorke distrest,
Like to a Ship, that hauing scap'd a Tempest,
Is straight way calme, and boorded with a Pyrate.
But now is Cade driuen backe, his men dispierc'd,
And now is Yorke in Armes, to second him.
I pray thee Buckingham go and meete him,
And aske him what's the reason of these Armes:
Tell him, Ile send Duke Edmund to the Tower,
And Somerset we will commit thee thither,
Vntill his Army be dismist from him.
Somerset. My Lord,
Ile yeelde my selfe to prison willingly,
Or vnto death, to do my Country good.
King. In any case, be not too rough in termes,
For he is fierce, and cannot brooke hard Language.
Buc. I will my Lord, and doubt not so to deale,
As all things shall redound vnto your good.
King. Come wife, let's in, and learne to gouern better,
For yet may England curse my wretched raigne.
Flourish. Exeunt.
Enter

Enter Cade

Cade. Fye on Ambition: fie on my selfe, that haue a sword, and yet am readie to famish. These fiue dayes haue I hid me in these Woods, and durst not peepe out, for all the Country is laid for me: but now am I so hungry, that if I might haue a lease of my life for a thousand yeares, I could stay no longer. Wherefore on a Brickewall haue I climb'd into this Garden: to see if I can eate Grasse, or picke a Sallet another while, which is not a little straunge to a man of my qualitie: and I thinke I shall neuer proue a Iacke Sallet againe. But soft, who's this? Blew Coate? Blew Coate, I say: and many at the least that shall be dead, & wounded, before I stirre, it hath entred into the Quarrell of the Duke of Yorke, and we will haue Sallets all of one sute.

Enter Iden

Iden. Lord, who would liue turmoyled in the Court,
And may enioy such quiet walkes as these?
This small inheritance my Father left me,
Contents me, and worth a Monarchy.
I seeke not to wax great by others waning,
Or gather wealth I care not with what enuy:
Sufficeth, that I haue maintaines my state,
And sends the poore well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here's the Lord of the soyle come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leaue. Ah Villaine, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand Crownes of the King by carrying my head to him, but Ile make thee eate iron like an Ostridge, and swallow my Sword like a great pinne, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why rude Companion, whatsoere thou be,
I know thee not, why then should I betray thee?
Is't not enough to breake into my Garden
And like a Theefe to come to rob my grounds
Climbing my walles in spight of me the Owner,
But thou wilt braue me with these saucie taunts?

Cade. Braue thee? I by the best blood that euer was broach'd, and beard thee too. Looke on mee well: I haue eate no meate these fiue dayes, yet come thou and thy fiue men, and if I do not leaue you all as dead as a doore nayle, I pray God I may neuer eate grasse more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne're be said, while England stands,
That Alexander Iden an Esquire of Kent,
Tooke odds to combate a poore famish'd man.
Oppose thy stedfast gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou can'st out-face me with thy looke:
Set limbe to limbe, and thou art farre the lesser:
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist,
Thy legge a stocke compared with this Truncheon,
My foote shall fight with all the strength thou hast,
And if mine arme be heaued in the Aire,
Thy graue is digg'd already in the earth.
As for words, whose greatnesse answers words,
Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

Cade. By my Valour: the most complete Champion that euer I heard. Steele, if thou turne the edge, or cut not out the burly boned Clowne in chines of Beefe, ere thou sleepe in thy Sheath, I beseech Ioue on my knees thou mayst be turn'd to Hobnailes.

Here they fight.

O I am slaine, Famine and no other hath slaine me, let ten thousand diuels come against me, and giue me but ten meates I haue lost, and I'de defie them all. Wither Garden, and be henceforth a burying place to all that do dwell in this house, because the vnconquered soule of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I haue slaine, that monstrous Traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this deede,
And hang thee o're my Tombe, when I am dead.
Ne're shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt weare it as a heroicke Armes,
Emblazed with the Honours of my Master:
Strike Alarum Drum: let the Traytor see
The Reason why his fall made vs so glorious.
Now will I hence to Eltham, to the King,
And claime the thankes due vnto such a deede:
With which I doubt not but to get a knighthood.
But who comes here? the Lord Scales all in Armes?
Now Humfrey Duke of Buckingham is dead,
And Somerset is gone to Callice,
Vpon his face I will bestow my foote.

Enter Scales vpon the Tarras, with Drum and Soldiers.

Scales. From Ireland thus comes Yorke to claime his right,
And pluckes the Crowne from feeble Henries head.
Ring bell aloud, burne bonefires clear and bright
To entertaine great Englands lawfull King.
Ah Sancta Maiestas, who would not buy thee deere?
Let them obey that knowes not how to rule:
This hand was made to handle nought but Gold.
I cannot giue due action to my words,
Except a Sword or Scepter balance it.
A Scepter shall it haue, haue I a soule,
On which Ile toste the Flowre de Luce of France.

Enter Buckingham

Whom haue we here? Buckingham to disturbe me?
The King hath sent him, sure I must dissemble.
Buck. Yorke, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well.
Yor. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.
Art thou a Messenger, or come of pleasure?
Buck. A Messenger from Henry, our dread Liege,
To know the reason of these Armes in peace.
Or why thou being a Subiect, as I am,
Against thy Oath, and true Allegiance sworne,
Should raise so great a power without his leaue?
Or dare to bring thy Force so neere the Court?
Yor. Scarse can I speake, my Choler is so great.
Oh I could hew vp Rocks, and fight with Flint,
I am so angry at the abiect state of things.
As I thus am: but what thy Brother is
Aske Lord Say. Buckingham, I prethee pardon me,
That I haue giuen no answere all this while:
My minde was troubled with deepe Melancholly.
The cause why I haue brought this Armie hither,

Is to remoue proud Somerset from the King,
Seditious to his Grace, and to the State.
Buc. That is too much presumption on thy part:
But if thy Armes be to no other end,
The King hath yeelded vnto thy demand:
The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower
Yorke. Vpon thine Honor is he Prisoner.
Buck. Vpon mine Honor he is Prisoner.
Yorke. Then Buckingham I do dismisse my Powres.
Souldiers, I thanke you all: disperse your selues:
Meet me to morrow in S. Georges Feild,
You shall haue pay, and euery thing you wish.
And let my Soueraigne, vertuous Henry,
Command my eldest sonne nay all my sonnes,
As pledges of my Fealtie and Loue,
Ile send them all as willing as I liue:
Lands, Goods, Horse Armor, anything I haue
Is his to vse, so Somerset may die.
Buc. Yorke, I commend this kinde submission,
We twaine will go into his Highnesse Tent.

Enter King and Attendants.

King. Buckingham doth Yorke intend no harme to vs
That thus he marcheth with thee arme in arme?
Yorke. In all submission and humility
Yorke doth present himself vnto your Highnesse.
K. Then what intends these Forces thou dost bring?
Yor. To heare the Traitor speake, and purge him selfe,
And fight against that monstrous Rebell Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden with Cades head.

Iden. If one so rude and of so meane condition
May passe into the presence of a King
Lo, I present your Grace a Traitors head,
The head of Cade whom I in combat slew.
King. The head of Cade? Great God, how iust art thou?
Oh let me view his Visage being dead,
That hath with-held my wronged sense such exceeding trouble.
Tell me my Friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, an't like your Maiesty.
King. How art thou called? And what is thy degree?
Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name,
A poore Esquire of Kent, that loues his King.
Buc. So please it you my Lord, 'twere not amisse
He were created Knight for his good seruice.
King. Iden, kneele downe, rise vp a Knight.
We giue thee for reward a thousand Markes,
And will, that thou henceforth attend on vs.
Iden. May Iden liue to merit such a bountie,
And neuer liue but true vnto his Liege.

Enter Queene and Somerset.

K. See Buckingham, Somerset comes with th'Queene,
Go bid her hide him quickly from the Duke.
Qu. For thousand Yorkes he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand and front him to his face.
York. How now is Somerset at liberty?
Then Yorke, vnbridle all thy poysoned thoughts,
And with the same consider him thy heart.
What I am not good enough to speake?
False King, why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brooke abuse?
King did I call thee? No thou art not King:
Not fit to gouerne and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no nor canst not rule a Traitor.
That Head of thine doth not become a Crowne
Thy Hand is made to grasp a Palmers staffe,
And not to grace an awefull Princely Sceptre
That Gold, must round engirt these browes of mine,
Whose Smile and Frowne, like to Achilles Speare
Is able with the change, to kill and cure
Heere is a hand to hold a Scepter vp,
And with the same to acte controlling Lawes:
Giue place: by heauen thou shalt rule no more
O're him, whom heauen created for thy Ruler.
Som. O monstrous Traitor! I arrest thee Yorke
Of Capitall Treason 'gainst the King and Crowne:
Obey audacious Traitor, kneele for Grace.
York. Would'st haue me kneele? First let me ask of thee,
If they can brooke I bow a knee to man:
Sirrah, call in my sonne to be my bale
I know ere they will haue me go to Ward,
They'l pawne their Swords on my enfranchisement.
Qu. Call hither Clifford, bid him come amaine,
To say, if that the Bastard boyes of Yorke
Shall be the Surety for their Traitor Father.
Yorke. O blood-bespotted Neopolitan,
Out-cast of Naples, Englands bloody Scourge,
The sonnes of Yorke, thy betters in their birth,
Shall be their Fathers baile, and bane to those
That for my Surety will refuse the Boyes.

Enter Edward and Richard.

See where they come, Ile warrant they'l make it good.

Enter Clifford.

Qu. And here comes Clifford to deny their baile
Cl. Health and happinesse to my Lord the King.
Yor. I thanke thee Clifford. Say, what newes with thee?
Nay do not fright vs with an angry looke:
We are his Soueraigne Clifford, kneele againe;
For our mistaking: so we pardon thee.
Cli. This is my King Yorke, I do not mistake,
But thou mistakes me much to thinke I do,
To Bedlem with him, is the man growne mad.
King. I Clifford, a Bedlem and ambitious humor
Makes him oppose himselfe against his king.
Clif. He is a Traitor, let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his
Qu. He is arrested, but will not obey:
His sonnes (he saies) shall giue their words for him.
Yor. Will you not Sonnes?
Edw. I Noble Father, if our words will serue.
Rich. And if words will not, then our Weapons shall.
Clif. Why what a brood of Traitors haue we heere?
Yorke. Looke in a Glasse, and call thy Image so.
I am thy King, and thou a false-heart Traitor.
Call hither to the stake my two braue Beares,
That with the very shaking of their Chaines,
They may astonish these fell-lacking Curres,
Bid Salsbury and Warwicke come to me.

Enter the Earles of Warwicke, and Salsbury.

Clif. Are these thy Beares? We'l bate thy Beare to death,
And manacle the Berard in their Chaines,
If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting place.
Rich. Oft haue I seene a hot ore-weening Cur,
Run backe and bite, because he was withheld,
Who being suffer'd with the Beares fell paw,
Hath clapt his taile, betweene his legges and cride,
And such a peece of seruice will you do,

If

If you oppose your selues to match Lord Warwicke
Clif. Hence heape of wrath, foule indigested lumpe,
As crooked in thy manners, as thy shape
Yor. Nay we shall heate you thorowly anon.
Clif. Take heede least by your heate you burne your selues.
King. Why Warwicke, hath thy knee forgot to bow?
Old Salsbury, shame to thy siluer haire,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sicke sonne,
What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the Ruffian?
And seeke for sorrow with thy Spectacles?
Oh where is Faith? Oh, where is Loyalty?
If it be banisht from the frostie head,
Where shall it finde a harbour in the earth?
Wilt thou go digge a graue to finde out Warre,
And shame thine honourable Age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame in duetie bend thy knee to me,
That bowes vnto the graue with mickle age
Sal. My Lord, I haue considered with my selfe
The Title of this most renowned Duke,
And in my conscience, do repute his grace
The rightfull heyre to Englands Royal seate
King. Hast thou not sworne Allegeance vnto me?
Sal. I haue.
King. Canst thou dispense with heauen for such an oath?
Sal. It is great sinne, to sweare vnto a sinne
But greater sinne to keepe a sinfull oath:
Who can be bound by any solemne Vow
To do a murderous deede, to rob a man,
To force a spotlesse Virgins Chastitie,
To reaue the Orphan of his Patrimonie,
To wring the Widdow from her custom'd right,
And haue no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemne Oath?
Qu. A subtile Traitor needs no Sophister.
King. Call Buckingham, and bid him arme himselfe.
Yorke. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,
I am resolu'd for death and dominion.
Old Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreames proue true
War. You were best to go to bed and dreame againe,
To keepe thee from the Tempest of the field
Old Clif. I am resolu'd to beare a greater storme,
Then any thou canst coniure vp to day
And that Ile write vpon thy Burgonet,
Might I but know thee by thy house Badge.
War. Now by my Fathers badge, old Neuils Crest,
The rampant Beare chain'd to the ragged staffe,
This day Ile weare aloft my Burgonet,
As on a Mountaine top, the Cedar shewes,
That keepes his leaues in spight of any storme,
Euen to affright thee with the view thereof
Old Clif. And from thy Burgonet Ile rend thy Beare,
And tread it vnder foot with all contempt,
Despight the Bearard that protects the Beare
Yo. Clif. And so to Armes victorious Father,
To quell the Rebels, and their Complices.
Rich. Fie, Charitie for shame, speake not in spight,
For you shall sup with Iesu Christ to night
Yo. Clif. Foule Stygmaticke that's more then thou canst tell.
Ric. If not in heauen, you'l surely sup in hell. Exeunt

Enter Warwicke.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwicke calles:
And if thou dost not hide thee from the Beare,
Now when the angrie Trumpet sounds alarum,
And dead mens cries do fill the empty aire,
Clifford I say, come forth and fight with me,
Proud Northerne Lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwicke is hoarse with calling thee to armes.

Enter Yorke.

War. How now my Noble Lord? What all a-foot.
Yor. The deadly handed Clifford slew my Steed
But match to match I haue encountred him,
And made a prey for Carrion Kytes and Crowes
Euen of the bonnie beast he loued so well.

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of vs the time is come
Yor. Hold Warwick seek thee out some other chace
For I my selfe must hunt this Deere to death.
War. Then nobly Yorke, 'tis for a Crown thou fightest
As I intend Clifford to thriue to day,
It greeues my soule to leaue thee vnassaild. Exit War.
Clif. What seest thou in me Yorke?
Why dost thou pause?
Yorke. With thy braue bearing should I be in loue,
But that thou art so fast mine enemie
Clif. Nor should thy prowesse want praise & esteeme,
But that 'tis shewne ignobly, and in Treason.
Yorke. So let it helpe me now against thy sword,
As I in iustice, and true right expresse it.
Clif. My soule and bodie on the action both.
Yor. A dreadfull lay, addresse thee instantly.
Clif. La fin Corronne les ennemies
Yor. Thus Warre hath giuen thee peace, for thou art still,
Peace with his soule, heauen if it be thy will.

Enter young Clifford

Clif. Shame and Confusion all is on the rout,
Feare frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O Warre, thou sonne of hell,
Whom angry heauens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosomes of our part,
Hot Coales of Vengeance. Let no Souldier flye.
He that is truly dedicate to Warre,
Hath no self-loue, nor feele no humane mercie,
That hath not wholly, and in solemne sort
Deuoted Warre. Ostentation of the world,
And the prem[illegible] paines of the Day,
Kind earth, and heauen to meet.
Now on Legions Horror on your swifter hast,
Part Curtesie, and part Reuenge.
To Sea. Wast thou ordain'd deare Father
To loose thy youth in peace, and to atchieue
The Siluer Liuery of aduised Age,
And in thy Reuerence, and thy Chaire-dayes, thus
To die in Ruffian battell? Euen at this sight,
My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. Yorke, not our old men spares:
No more will I their Babes, Teares Virginals,
Shall be to me, euen as the Dew to Fire,
And Beautie, that the Tyrant oft reclaimes,
Shall to my flaming wrath, be Oyle and Flax
Henceforth, I will not haue to do with pitty.
Meet I an infant of the house of Yorke
Into as many gobbits will I cut it
As wilde Medea young Absirtus did.
In cruelty, will I seeke out my Fame.
Come thou new ruine of olde Priams house
As did Æneas old Anchyses beare,
So beare I thee vpon my manly shoulders.
But then, Æneas bare a liuing loade;

Nothing so heauy as these woes of mine.

Enter Richard, and Somerset to fight

Rich. So lye thou there:
For vnderneath an Alehouse paltry signe,
The Castle in S. Albons Somerset
Hath made the Wizard famous in his death.
Sword, hold thy temper; Heart, be wrathful still:
Priests pray for enemies, but Princes kill.
Fight. Exeunt.

Enter King, Queene and others.

Qu. Away my Lord, you are slow, for shame away.
King. Can we outrun the Heauens? Good Margaret stay
Qu. What are you made of? You'l not fight nor fly
Now is it manhood, wisedome, and defence,
To giue the enemy way, and to secure vs
By what we can, which can no more but flye.
Alarum a farre off.
If you be tane, we then should see the bottome
Of all our Fortunes: but if we haply escape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get, where you are lou'd,
And where this breach now in our Fortunes made
May readily be stopt.

Enter Clifford.

Clif. But that my heart's on future mischeefe set,
I would speake blasphemy ere bid you flye:
But flye you must: Vncureable discomfite
Reignes in the hearts of all our present parts
Away for your releefe, and we will liue
To see their day, and them our Fortune giue.
Away my Lord, away.
Exeunt

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Yorke, Richard, Warwicke, and Soldiers, with Drum & Colours

Yorke. Of Salsbury, who can report of him,
That Winter Lyon, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions, and all brush of Time:
And like a Gallant, in the brow of youth,
Repaires him with Occasion. This happy day
Is not it so, that we have wonne one foot,
If Salsbury be lost.
Rich. My Noble Father:
Three times to day I holpe him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him: Thrice I led him off,
Perswaded him from any further act:
But still where danger was, still there I met him,
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his Will, in his old feeble body,
But Noble as he is, looke where he comes.
Enter Salsbury.
Sal. Now by my Sword, well hast thou fought to day.
By th' Masse so did we all. I thanke you Richard
God knowes how long it is I have to liue
And it hath pleas'd him that three times to day
You have defended me from immanent death.
Well Lords, we have not got that which we have,
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repayring Nature
Yorke. I know our safety is to follow them,
For (as I heare) the King is fled to London,
To call a present Court of Parliament.
Let vs pursue him ere the Writs go forth.
What saies Lord Warwicke, shall we after them?
War. After them: nay before them if we can:
Now by my hand Lords, 'twas a glorious day.
Saint Albons battell wonne by famous Yorke,
Shall be eternized in all Age to come.
Sound Drum and Trumpets, and to London all,
And more such dayes as these, to vs befall.
Exeunt.

FINIS.

The third Part of Henry the Sixt,
with the death of the Duke of YORKE.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Alarum
Enter Plantagenet Edward Richard, Norfolke, Mountague, Warwicke, and Souldiers.

Warwicke.

Wonder how the King escaped our hands?

Plant. While we pursued the Horsemen by North,
He slyly stole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,
Whose Warlike eares could never brooke retreat,
Chear'd up the drooping Army and himselfe,
Lord Clifford and Lord Stafford all abreast
Charg'd our maine Battalion front and breast,
Were by the Swords of common Souldiers slaine.
Edw. Lord Stafford Father, Duke of Buckingham,
Is either slaine or wounded dangerous.
I cleft his Beaver with a downe-right blow:
That this is true, Father, behold his blood.
Mount. And Brother, here's the Earle of Wiltshires
Whom I encountred as the Battels joyn'd. (blood.
Rich. Speake thou for me, and tell them what I did.
Plant. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my Sonnes.
But is your Grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?
Norf. Such hope have all the line of Iohn of Gaunt.
Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henries head.
Warw. And so do I, victorious Prince of Yorke.
Before I see thee seated in that Throne,
Which now the House of Lancaster vsurpes,
I vow by Heaven, these eyes shall never close.
This is the Palace of the fearefull King,
And this the Regall Seat: possesse it Yorke,
For this is thine, and not King Henries Heires.
Plant. Assist me then, sweet Warwicke, and I will,
For hither we have broken in by force.
Norf. We'le all assist you: he that flyes shall die.
Plant. Thankes gentle Norfolke, stay by me my Lords,
And Souldiers stay and lodge by me this Night.
They goe vp.
Warw. And when the King comes offer him no violence,
Vnlesse he seeke to thrust you out perforce.
Plant. The Queene is valiant, and full of Courage,
But shortly we shall be of her counsaile,
By words or blowes here let vs winne our right.
Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this House.
Warw. The bloody Parliament shall this be call'd,
Vnlesse Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, be King,
And bashful Henry depos'd, whose Cowardize
Hath made vs by-words to our enemies.
Plant. Then leave me not, my Lords, be resolute,
I meane to take possession of my Right.
Warw. Neither the King, or he that loves him best,
The proudest hearted he that stands up gainst him,
Dares stirre a wing, if Warwicke shake his Bells.
I le plant Plantagenet, root him out who dares,
Resolve thee noble Richard, shall'st be King.
Henry. Exeter, Northumberland, and the rest.

Henry. My Lords, looke where the sturdie Rebells sits,
Euen in the Chayre of State: belike he meanes,
Backt by the power of Warwicke, that false Peere,
To aspire vnto the Crowne, and reigne as King.
Earle of Northumberland, he slew thy Father,
And thine, Lord Clifford, and you both have vow'd Reuenge
On him, his Sonnes, his Fauorites, and his Friends.
Northumb. If I be not, Heauens be reuenged on me.
Clifford. The hope thereof, makes Clifford mourne in Steele.
Exeter. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him downe,
My heart for anger burnes: I cannot brooke it.
Henry. Be patient, gentle Earle of Westmerland.
Clifford. Patience is for Poltroones, such as he.
He durst not sit there, had your Father liu'd.
My gracious Lord, here is the Parliament
Let vs assaile the family of Yorke.
North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin: be it so.
Henry. Ah, know you not the City fauours them,
And they have troopes of Souldiers at their beck?
Exeter. But when the Duke is slaine, they'le quickly flye.
Henry. Farre be the thought of this from Henries heart,
To make a Shambles of the Parliament House.
Cousin of Exeter, frownes, words, and threats,
Shall be the Warre that Henry meanes to vse.
Thou factious Duke of Yorke descend my Throne,
And kneele for grace and mercie at my feet,
I am thy Soueraigne.
Yorke. I am thine.
Exet. For shame come downe, he made thee Duke of Yorke.
Yorke. It was my Inheritance, as the Earledome was.
Exet. Thy

Exet. Thy Father was a Traytor to the Crowne
Warw. Exeter thou art a Traytor to the Crowne,
In following this vsurping Henry.
Clifford. Whom should hee follow, but his naturall King?
Warw. True Clifford, that's Richard Duke of Yorke.
Henry. And shall I stand, and loose it in my Throne?
Yorke. It must and shall be so, content thy selfe.
Warw. Be Duke of Lancaster, let him be King
Westm. He is both King, and Duke of Lancaster,
And that the Lord of Westmerland shall maintaine.
Warw. And Warwick shall disproue it. You forget,
That we are those which chas'd you from the field,
And slew your Fathers, and with Colours spread
Marcht through the Citie to the Palace Gates.
Northumb. Yes Warwicke I remember it to my griefe
And by his Soule, thou and thy Horse shall rue it.
Westm. Plantagenet, of thee and these thy Sonnes,
Thy Kinsmen and thy Friends, I'le haue more liues
Then drops of bloud were in my Fathers Veines.
Clif. Vrge it no more, lest that in stead of words,
I send thee Warwicke, such a Messenger,
As shall reuenge his death before I stirre
Warw. Poore Clifford, how I scorne his worthlesse Threats
Plant. Will you we shew our Title to the Crowne?
If not our Swords shall plead it in the field.
Henry. What Title hast thou Traytor to the Crowne?
My Father was as thou art, Duke of Yorke,
Thy Grandfather Roger Mortimer, Earle of March.
I am the Sonne of Henry the Fift,
Who made the Dolphin and the French to stoupe,
And seiz'd vpon their Townes and Prouinces.
Warw. Talke not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.
Henry. The Lord Protector lost it, and not I
When I was crown'd I was but nine moneths old.
Rich. You are old enough now,
And yet me thinkes you lose
Father tearing the Crowne from the Vsurpers Head.
Edward. Sweet Father do so, set it on your Head.
Mont. Good Brother,
As you loue and honour Armes,
Let's fight it out, and not stand cauelling thus.
Richard. Sound Drummes and Trumpets, and the King will fly.
Plant. Sonnes peace.
Henry. Peace thou, and giue King Henry leaue to speake.
Warw. Plantagenet shall speake first Heare him Lords,
And be you silent and attentiue too,
For he that interrupts him, shall not liue.
Hen. Think'st thou that I will leaue my Kingly Throne,
Wherein my Grandsire and my Father sat?
No first shall Warre vnpeople this my Realme:
I am [illegible]
[illegible] sorrow,
Shall [illegible] you Lords?
My Title's good, and better farre then his.
Warw. Proue it Henry, and thou shalt be King.
Hen. Henry the Fourth by Conquest got the Crowne.
Plant. 'Twas by Rebellion against his King
Henry. I know not what to say, my Title's weake
Tell me, may not a King adopt an Heire?
Plant. What then?
Henry. And if he may, then am I lawfull King:
For Richard, in the view of many Lords,
Resign'd the Crowne to Henry the Fourth,
Whose Heire my Father was, and I am his.
Plant. He rose against him, being his Soueraigne,
And made him to resigne his Crowne perforce.
Warw. Suppose, my Lords, he did it vnconstrayn'd,
Thinke you 'twere prejudiciall to his Crowne?
Exet. No, for he could not so resigne his Crowne,
But that the next Heire should succeed and reigne,
Henry Art thou against vs, Duke of Exeter?
Exet His is the right, and therefore pardon me
Plant Why whisper you, my Lords, and answer not?
Exet My Conscience tells me he is lawfull King.
Henry. All will reuolt from me, and turne to him.
Northumb. Plantagenet, for all the Clayme thou lay'st,
Thinke not, that Henry shall be so depos'd
Warw. Depos'd he shall be, in despight of all.
Northumb. Thou art deceiu'd
'Tis not thy Southerne power
Of Essex, Norfolke, Suffolke, nor of Kent,
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,
Can set the Duke vp in despight of me.
Clifford. King Henry be thy Title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vowes to fight in thy defence.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneele to him that slew my Father
Henry O Clifford, how thy words reuiue my heart.
Plant. Henry of Lancaster, resigne thy Crowne.
What matter you, or what do feare you Lords?
Warw Doe get you to this Princely Duke of Yorke,
Or I will fill the House with armed men,
And ouer the Chayre of State, where now he sits,
Write vp his Title with vsurping blood
He stampes with his foot, and the Souldiers shew themselues.
Henry My Lord of Warwick, sate but one word,
Let me for this my life time reigne as King
Plant. Confirme the Crowne to me and to mine Heires,
And thou shalt reigne in quiet while thou liu'st.
Henry I am content: Richard Plantagenet
Enioy the Kingdome after my decease.
Clifford What wrong is this vnto the Prince your Sonne?
Warw What good is this to England and himselfe
Westm. Base, fearefull, and despayring Henry
Clifford. How hast thou iniur'd both thy selfe and vs
Westm. I cannot stay to speake to him. Adieu
Northumb. Nor I.
Clifford. Come Cousin, let vs tell the Queene this Newes.
Westm. Farewell faint-hearted and degenerate King,
In whose cold blood no sparke of Honor bides.
Northumb Be thou a prey vnto the House of Yorke,
And dye in Bands, for this vnmanly deed.
Clif. In dreadful Warre may'st thou be ouercome,
Or liue in peace abandon'd and despis'd.
Warw. Turne this way Henry, and regard them not.
Exeter. They seeke reuenge, and therefore will not yeeld
Henry. Ah Exeter
Warw. Why should you sigh, my Lord?
Henry. Not for my selfe Lord Warwick, but my Sonne,
Whom I vnnaturally shall dis-inherite.
But be it as it may: I here entayle
The Crowne to thee and to thine Heires for euer,
Conditionally, that here thou take an Oath,
To cease this Ciuill Warre: and whil'st I liue,

To

To honor me as thy King, and Soueraigne:
And neyther by Treason nor Hostilitie,
To seeke to put me downe, and reigne thy selfe.
Plant. This Oath I willingly take, and will performe.
Warw. Long liue King Henry. Plantagenet embrace him.
Henry. And long liue thou, and these thy forward Sonnes.
Plant. Now Yorke and Lancaster are reconcil'd.
Exet. Accurst be he that seekes to make them foes.
Sonet. Here they come downe.
Plant. Farewell my gracious Lord, Ile to my Castle.
Warw. And Ile keepe London with my Souldiers.
Norf. And I to Norfolke with my followers.
Mount. And I vnto the Sea from whence I came.
Henry. And I with griefe and sorrow to the Court.

Enter the Queene.

Exeter. Heere comes the Queene,
Whose Lookes bewray her anger
Ile steale away.
Henry Exeter so will I.
Queene Nay, goe not from me, I will follow thee.
Henry. Be patient gentle Queene, and I will stay.
Queene. Who can be patient in such extreames?
Ah wretched man, would I had dy'de a Maid?
And neuer seene thee, neuer borne thee Sonne,
Seeing thou hast prou'd so vnnaturall a Father.
Hath he deserued to loose his Birthright thus?
Hadst thou but lou'd him halfe so well as I,
Or felt that paine which I did for him once,
Or nourisht him, as I did with my blood,
Thou would'st haue left thy dearest heart-blood there,
Rather then haue made that sauage Duke thine Heire,
And dis-inherited thine onely Sonne.
Prince Father, you cannot dis-inherite me.
If you be King, why should not I succeede?
Henry. Pardon me Margaret, pardon me sweet Sonne,
The Earle of Warwick and the Duke enforc'd me.
Queene. Enforc'd thee? Art thou King, and wilt be forc'd?
I shame to heare thee speake: ah timorous Wretch,
Thou hast vndone thy selfe, thy Sonne, and me,
And giu'n vnto the House of Yorke such head,
As thou shalt reigne but by their sufferance.
To entayle him and his Heires vnto the Crowne,
What is it, but to make thy Sepulcher,
And creepe into it farre before thy time?
Warwick is Chancelor, and the Lord of Callice,
Sterne Falconbridge commands the Narrow Seas,
The Duke is made Protector of the Realme,
And yet shalt thou be safe? Such safetie findes
The trembling Lambe, inuironned with Wolues.
Had I beene there, which am a silly Woman,
The Souldiers should haue tos'd me on their Pikes,
Before I would haue granted to that Act.
But thou prefer'st thy Life, before thine Honor.
And seeing thou do'st, I here diuorce my selfe,
Both from thy Table Henry, and thy Bed,
Vntill that Act of Parliament be repeal'd,
Whereby my Sonne is dis-inherited.
The Northerne Lords, that haue forsworne thy Colours,
Will follow mine, if once they see them spread:
And spread they shall be, to thy foule disgrace,
And vtter ruine of the House of Yorke.
Thus do I leaue thee: Come Sonne, let's away,
Our Army is ready; come, we'le after them.
Henry. Stay gentle Margaret, and heare me speake.
Queene. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.
Henry. Gentle Sonne Edward, thou wilt stay me.
Queene I, to be murther'd by his Enemies.
Prince. When I returne with victorie to the field,
Ile see your Grace: till then, Ile follow her.
Queene. Come Sonne away, we may not linger thus.
Henry. Poore Queene
How loue to me, and to her Sonne,
Hath made her breake out into termes of Rage.
Reuenged may she be on that hatefull Duke,
Whose haughtie spirit, wingd with desire,
Will cost my Crowne, and like an empty Eagle,
Tire on the flesh of me, and of my Sonne.
The loss of those three Lords torments my heart:
Ile write vnto them, and entreat them faire;
Come Cousin, you shall be the Messenger.
Exet. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter Richard, Edward, and Mountague.

Richard. Brother, though I bee youngest, giue mee leaue.
Edward. No, I can better play the Orator.
Mount. But I haue reasons strong and forceable.

Enter the Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. Why how now Sonnes and Brother, at a strife?
What is your Quarrell? how began it first?
Edward. No Quarrell, but a slight Contention.
Yorke. About what?
Rich. About that which concernes your Grace and vs,
The Crowne of England, Father, which is yours.
Yorke. Mine Boy? not till King Henry be dead.
Richard. Your Right depends not on his life, or death.
Edward. Now you are Heire, therefore enioy it now.
By giuing the House of Lancaster leaue to breathe,
It will out-runne you, Father, in the end.
Yorke. I tooke an Oath, that hee should quietly reigne.
Edward. But for a Kingdome any Oath may be broken:
I would breake a thousand Oathes, to reigne one yeere.
Richard. No. God forbid your Grace should be forsworne.
Yorke. I shall be, if I clayme by open Warre.
Richard. Ile proue the contrary, if you'le heare mee speake.
Yorke. Thou canst not, Sonne: it is impossible.
Richard. An Oath is of no moment, being not tooke
Before a true and lawfull Magistrate,
That hath authoritie ouer him that sweares.
Henry had none, but did vsurpe the place.
Then seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,
Your Oath, my Lord, is vaine and friuolous.
Therefore to Armes: and Father doe but thinke,
How sweet a thing it is to weare a Crowne,
Within whose Circuit is Elizium,
And all that Poets faine of Blisse and Ioy.
Why doe we linger thus? I cannot rest,
Vntill the White Rose that I weare, be dy'de
Euen in the luke-warme blood of Henries heart.
Yorke. Richard enough: I will be King, or dye.
Brother, thou shalt to London presently,
And whet on Warwick to this Enterprise.

Thou

Thou Richard shalt to the Duke of Norfolke, [illegible]
And tell him privily of our intent.
You Edward shall vnto my Lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise.
In them I trust, for they are Soldiors,
Witty, courteous, liberall, all of spirit.
While you are thus imployd, what resteth more?
But that I seeke occasion how to rise,
And yet the King not privie to my Drift,
Nor any of the House of Lancaster.

Enter Gabriel.

But stay, what Newes? Why comm'st thou in such poste?

Gabriel. The Queene,
With all the Northerne Earles and Lords
Intend here to besiege you in your Castle:
She is hard by, with twenty thousand men.
And therefore fortifie your Hold, my Lord.

York. I, with my Sword.
What? think'st thou, that we feare them?
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me.
My brother Montague shall post to London.
Let Noble Warwick, Cobham and the rest,
Whom we have left Protectors of the King,
With powerfull Policie strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his Oathes.

Mount. Brother, we will go raise an host of men,
And thus most humbly I do take my leave.

Exit Montague.

Enter Sir John Mortimer, and his Brother.

York. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine Vnckles,
You are come to Sandall in a happy houre.
The Armie of the Queene meanes to besiege vs.

John. She shall not need, we'll meete her in the field.

York. What, with five thousand men?

Richard. I with five hundred, father, for a needle.
A Woman's generall; what should we feare?

A March afarre off.

Edward. I heare their Drummes:
Let's set our men in order,
And issue forth, and bid them Battaile straight.

York. Five men to twenty: though the odds be great,
I doubt not, Vnckles, of our Victorie.
Many a Battaile have I won in France,
When as the Enemie hath been tenne to one:
Why should I not now have the like successe?

Alarum. Exit.

Enter Rutland and his Tutor.

Rutland. Ah, whither shall I flye to scape their hands?
Ah Tutor, look where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter Clifford.

Clifford. Chaplaine, away: thy Priesthood saues thy life.
As for the Brat of this accursed Duke,
Whose Father slew my Father, he shall dye.

Tutor. And I, my Lord, will beare him company.

Clifford. Soldiers, away with him.

Tutor. Ah Clifford, murther not this innocent Child,
Least thou be hated both of God and Man. Exit.

Clifford. How now is he dead already?
Or is it fear, that makes him close his eyes?
Ile open them.

Rutland. So looks the pent-vp Lyon o're the Wretch,
That trembles vnder his deuouring Pawes:
And so he walkes, insulting o're his Prey,
And so he comes, to rend his Limbes asunder.
Ah gentle Clifford, kill me with thy Sword,
And not with such a cruell threatning Looke.
Sweet Clifford heare me speake, before I dye.
I am too meane a subiect for thy Wrath,
Be thou reuenged on men, and let me liue.

Clifford. In vaine thou speak'st, poore Boy:
My Fathers blood hath stopt the passage
Where thy words should enter.

Rutland. Then let my Fathers blood open it againe,
He is a man, and Clifford cope with him.

Clifford. Had I thy Brethren here, their lives and thine
Were not reuenge sufficient for me.
No, if I digg'd vp thy fore-fathers Graues,
And hung their rotten Coffins vp in Chaynes,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the House of Yorke,
Is as a fury to torment my Soule:
And till I root out their accursed Line,
And leaue not one aliue, I liue in Hell.
Therefore—

Rutland. O let me pray, before I take my death:
To thee I pray; sweet Clifford pitty me.

Clifford. Such pitty as my Rapiers point affords.

Rutland. I neuer did thee harme: why wilt thou slay me?

Clifford. Thy Father hath.

Rutland. But 'twas ere I was borne.
Thou hast one Sonne, for his sake pitty me,
Least in reuenge thereof (sith God is iust)
He be as desperately slaine as I.
Ah, let me liue in Prison all my dayes:
And when I giue occasion of offence,
Then let me dye, for now thou hast no cause.

Clifford. No cause? thy Father slew my Father: therefore dye.

Rutland. Dij faciant laudis summa sit ista tuæ.

Clifford. Plantagenet, I come Plantagenet:
And this thy Sonnes blood cleauing to my Blade,
Shall rust vpon my Weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this, do make me wipe off both. Exit

Alarum. Enter Richard, Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. The Army of the Queene hath got the Field:
My Vnckles both are slaine, in rescuing me,
And all my followers to the eager foe
Turne backe, and flye, like Ships before the Winde,
Or Lambes pursued by hunger-starued Wolues.
My Sonnes, God knowes what hath bechanced them:
But this I know, they haue demean'd themselues
Like men borne to Renowne, by Life or Death.
Three times did Richard make a Lane to me,
And thrice cry'de, Courage Father, fight it out:
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With Purple Faulchion painted to the Hilt,
In blood of those that had encountred him:
And when the hardyest Warriors did retyre,
Richard cry'de, Charge, and giue no foot of ground,
And cry'de, A Crowne, or else a glorious Tombe,

A Scepter, or an Earthly Sepulchre
With this we charg'd againe: but out alas,
We bodg'd againe, as I haue seene a Swan
With bootlesse labour swimme against the Tyde,
And spend her strength with ouer-matching Waues.
A short Alarum within.
Ah hearke, the fatall followers doe pursue,
And I am faint, and cannot flye their fury.
And were I strong, I would not shunne their fury.
The Sands are numbred, that makes vp my life,
Here must I stay, and here my Life must end.

Enter the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland, the young Prince, and Souldiers.

Come bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchlesse fury to more rage
I am your Butt, and I abide your Shot.
Northumb. Yeelds to our mercy proud Plantagenet.
Clifford. I, to such mercy as his ruthlesse Arme
With downe-right payment shew'd vnto my Father.
Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his Carre,
And made an Euening at the Noone-tide Prick.
Yorke. My Ashes, as the Phoenix, may bring forth
A Bird, that will reuenge vpon you all:
And in that hope, I throw mine eyes to Heauen,
Scorning what ere you can afflict me with.
Why come you not? what, multitudes, and feare?
Clif. So Cowards fight when they can flye no further:
So Doues doe peck the Falcons piercing Talons,
So desperate Theeues all hopelesse of their Liues,
Breathe out inuectiues 'gainst the Officers.
Yorke. Oh Clifford, but bethinke thee once againe,
And in thy thought ore-run my former time:
And if thou canst, for blushing, view this face,
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with Cowardice,
Whose frowne hath made thee faint and flye ere this.
Clifford. I will not bandy with thee word for word,
But buckler with thee blowes twice two for one.
Queene. Hold valiant Clifford, for a thousand causes
I would prolong a while the Traytors Life:
Wrath makes him deafe, speake thou Northumberland.
Northumb. Hold Clifford, doe not honour him so much,
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart.
What valour were it, when a Curre doth grinne,
For one to thrust his Hand betweene his Teeth,
When he might spurne him with his Foot away?
It is Warres prize, to take all Vantages,
And ten to one, is no impeach of Valour.
Clifford. I, I, so striues the Woodcocke with the Gynne.
Northumb. So doth the Conney struggle in the Net.
Yorke. So triumph Theeues vpon their conquer'd Booty,
So True men yeeld with Robbers, so o're-matcht.
Northumb. What would your Grace haue done vnto him now?
Queene. Braue Warriors Clifford and Northumberland,
Come make him stand vpon this Mole-hill here,
That raught at Mountaines with outstretched Armes,
Yet parted but the shadow with his Hand.
What, was it you that would be Englands King?
Was't you that reuell'd in our Parliament,
And made a Preachment of your high Descent?
Where are your Messe of Sonnes, to back you now,
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
And where's that valiant Crook-back Prodigie,
Dickie, your Boy, that with his grumbling voyce
Was wont to cheare his Dad in Mutinies?
Or with the rest, where is your Darling Rutland?
Looke Yorke, I stayn'd this Napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his Rapiers point,
Made issue from the Bosome of the Boy:
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I giue thee this to drie thy Cheekes withall.
Alas poore Yorke, but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.
I prythee grieue, to make me merry Yorke.
What, hath thy fiery heart so parcht thine entrayles,
That not a Teare can fall, for Rutlands death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad.
And I to make thee mad, doe mock thee thus.
Stamp, raue, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou would'st be fee'd, I see, to make me sport.
Yorke cannot speake, vnlesse he weare a Crowne.
A Crowne for Yorke, and Lords, bow low to him:
Hold you his hands, whilst I doe set it on.
I marry Sir, now lookes he like a King:
I, this is he that tooke King Henries Chaire,
And this is he was his adopted Heire.
But how is't, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soone, and broke his solemne Oath?
As I bethink me, you should not be King
Till our King Henry had shooke hands with Death.
And will you pale your head in Henries Glory,
And rob his Temples of the Diademe,
Now in his Life, against your holy Oath?
O 'tis a fault too too vnpardonable.
Off with the Crowne, and with the Crowne, his Head,
And whilest we breathe take time to doe him dead.
Clifford. That is my Office, for my Father's sake.
Queene. Nay stay, let's heare the Orizons he makes.
Yorke. Shee-Wolfe of France,
But worse than Wolues of France,
Whose Tongue more poysons than the Adders Tooth.
How ill-beseeming is it in thy Sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian Trull,
Vpon their Woes, whom Fortune captiues?
But that thy Face is Visard-like, vnchanging,
Made impudent with vse of euill deedes,
I would assay, proud Queene, to make thee blush.
To tell thee whence thou camst, of whom deriu'd,
Were shame enough, to shame thee,
Were thou not shamelesse.
Thy Father beares the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils and Ierusalem,
Yet not so wealthy as an English Yeoman.
Hath that poore Monarch taught thee to insult?
It needes not, nor it bootes thee not, proud Queene,
Vnlesse the Adage must be verified,
That Beggers mounted, runne their Horse to death.
'Tis Beauty that doth oft make Women proud,
But God he knowes thy share thereof is small.
'Tis Vertue, that doth make them most admir'd,
The contrary, doth make thee wondred at.
'Tis Gouernment that makes them seeme Diuine,
The want thereof, makes thee abominable.
Thou art as opposite to euery good,
As the Antipodes are vnto vs,
Or as the South to the Septentrion.
Oh Tygres Heart, wrapt in a Womans Hide,

How

How could'st thou drayne the Life-blood of the Child,
To bid the Father wipe his eyes withall,
And yet be seene to beare a Woman's face?
Women are soft-mylde pittifull, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate flynt, rough, remorselesse.
Bid'st thou me rage? why now thou hast thy wish.
Wouldst have me weepe? why now thou hast thy will.
For raging Wind blowes vp incessant showers,
And when the Rage allayes, the Rayne begins.
These Teares are my sweet Rutland's Obsequies,
And every drop cryes vengeance for his death,
'Gainst thee fell Clifford, and thee false French-woman.
Northumb. Beshrew me, but his passions moues me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from Teares.
Yorke. That Face of his,
The hungry Cannibals would not haue touch'd,
Would not haue staine with blood:
But you are more inhumane, more inexorable,
O ten times more then Tygers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthfull Queene, a pleasing fable hath
This Cloth beene wet with the blood of my sweet Boy,
And I with Teares doe wash the blood away.
Keepe thou the Napkin, and go boast of this,
And if thou tell'st the heauie story right,
Vpon my Soule the hearers will shed Teares.
Yea, cursse my Eyes when they shall fall to weepe Teares,
And say Alas it was a pitteous deed.
There take the Crowne, and with the Crowne, my Curse,
And in my need, such comfort come to thee,
As now I reape at thy too cruell hand.
Hard-hearted Clifford take me from the World,
My Soule to Heauen, my Blood vpon your Heads.
Northumb. Had he been Butcher to the Desires in my Kinne,
It shall not for my Life but weepe with him,
To see how my Sorrow gripes his Soule.
Queen. What, weeping ripe, my Lord Northumberland?
Think but vpon the wrong he did vs all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting Teares.
Clifford. Here's for my Oath, heere's for my Fathers Death.
Queene. And heere's to right our gentle hearted King.
Yorke. Open thy Gate of Mercy, gracious God,
My Soule flyes through these wounds to seeke out thee.
Queene. Off with the Traytors Head and send it on Yorke Gates,
So Yorke may ouer-looke the Towne of Yorke.
Flourish. Exit

A March. Enter Edward, Richard, and their power.

Edward. I wonder how our Princely Father scap'd,
Or whether he be scap'd away or no,
From Clifford and Northumberlands pursuit?
Had he been ta'ne, we should haue heard the newes,
Had he been slaine, we should haue heard the newes,
Or had we cast me thinkes we should haue heard
The happy tydings of his good escape.
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?
Richard. I cannot joy, vntill I be resolued
Where our right valiant Father is become.
I saw him in the Battaile range about,
And watcht him how he singled Clifford forth.
Me thought he bore him in the thickest troupe,
As doth a Lyon in a Heard of Neat,
Or as a Beare encompass'd round with Dogges:
Who hauing pincht a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloofe, and barke at him.
So far'd our Father with his Enemies,
So fled his Enemies my Warlike Father:
Me thinkes 'tis prize enough to be his Sonne.
See how the Morning opes her golden Gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious Sunne.
How well resembles it the prime of Youth,
Trimm'd like a Yonker, prauncing to his Loue?
Ed. Dazle mine eyes, or doe I see three Sunnes?
Rich. Three glorious Sunnes, each one a perfect Sunne,
Not separated with the racking Clouds,
But seuer'd in a pale cleare-shining Skye.
See, see, they ioyne, embrace, and seeme to kisse,
As if they vow'd some League inuiolable.
Now are they but one Lampe, one Light, one Sunne.
In this, the Heauen figures some event.
Edward. 'Tis wondrous strange,
The like yet neuer heard of.
I think it cites vs (Brother) to the field,
That we, the Sonnes of braue Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meedes,
Should notwithstanding ioyne our Lights together,
And ouer-shine the Earth as this the World.
Whate're it bodes, henceforward will I beare
Vpon my Target three fare-shining Suns.
Richard. Nay beare three Daughters.
By your leaue, I speake it,
You loue the Breeder better then the Male.

Enter one blowing.

But what art thou, whose heauie Lookes fore-tell
Some dreadfull story hanging on thy Tongue?
Mess. Ah one that was a woful looker on,
When as the Noble Duke of Yorke was slaine,
Your Princely Father, and my louing Lord.
Edward. O speake no more, for I haue heard too much.
Richard. Say how he dy'de, for I will heare it all.
Mess. Enuironed he was with many foes,
And stood against them, as the Hope of Troy
Against the Greekes, that would haue entred Troy.
But Hercules himselfe must yeeld to odds:
And many strokes, though with a little Axe,
Hewes downe and fells the hardest-timber'd Oake.
By many hands your Father was subdu'd,
But only slaughtered by the ireful Arme
Of vnrelenting Clifford, and the Queene.
Who crown'd the gracious Duke in high despight,
Laugh'd in his face: and when with griefe he wept,
The ruthfull Queene gaue him, to dry his Cheekes,
A Napkin, steeped in the harmelesse blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slaine:
And after many scornes, many foule taunts,
They tooke his Head, and on the Gates of Yorke
They set the same, and there it doth remaine,
The saddest sight that euer I beheld.
Edward. Sweet Duke of Yorke, our Prop to leane vpon,
Now thou art gone we haue no Staffe nor Stay.
O Clifford, boyst'rous Clifford thou hast slaine
The flowre of Europe for his Chiualrie,
And treacherously hast thou vanquisht him,
For hand to hand he would haue vanquisht thee.
Now my Soules Palace is become a Prison:
Ah, would she breake from hence, that this my body

Enter a Messenger.

King. How now? what newes?

Mes. The Duke of Norfolke sent vs word by me,
The Queene is coming with a puissant Host,
And craues your company, for speedy counsell.

War. Why then it sorts, braue Warriors let's away.

Exeunt Omnes

Flourish. Enter the King, the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland, the Prince, with Drumme and Trumpetes

King. Welcome my Lord, to this braue towne of Yorke,
Yonder's the head of that Arch-enemy,
That sought to be incompast with your Crowne.
Doth not the obiect cheere your heart my Lord?

Queene. I, as the rocke cheeres them that feare their wracke,
To see this sight, this day in Iustice done
Vpon the wicked deedes of your Foes:
No more can I be seuered from your side,
Then can your selfe, your selfe in twaine deuide:
Stay, go, depart, I am still attendant on you.
Lords, force the Duke to some darke place hard by,
Deepe scarre his head in honour of his birth.

Rich. I will, my Lord, so please his Maiesty.

Queene. Why ought he lesse then that my Husband was?
I, and the proudest of you all shall finde.
Full dearely shall you pay for your displeasure:
You shall haue time enough to waile your wrongs,
The Wheele is turn'd, and you shall proue the Mutes,
Whose words may sinke deepe downe into your hearts.
Away with him, and make his Boast full soone.

Come Sirrah, now let me see thy Mothers blood,
Thy Father lost some drops, thou hast more,
Deriu'd from her: this Boy perhaps anon
Will grace his Sire, and tickle vs with his Sword,
Vnlesse we preuent him, and doe cut him short.

Rich. How like a Dragon armed and not hatcht,
Should'st thou begin to rage and take thy flight?
And like a Dragon, full of fire and rage,
Thou doo'st deuour up all that comes in place.
First Henry with sad wrongs doth make his graue,
Then him I iustled, and tumbled with the ground,
Now thee I meet, the third shall make thee foure,
And so detaine you, till we come our selues.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Braue Lords, Commanders be prepar'd betimes,
For with a band of thirty thousand men,
Comes Warwicke, backing of the Duke of Yorke,
And in the Towres, as they do march along,
Proclaimes him King, and many flye to him,
Darraigne your battell, for they are at hand.

Clif. I would your Highnesse would depart the field,
The Queene hath best successe when you are absent.

Qu. I good my Lord, and leaue vs to our fortune.

King. Why that's my fortune too, therefore Ile stay.

North. Be it with resolution then to fight.

Prince. My Royall Father, cheere these Noble Lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence:
Vnsheath your Sword good Father: Cry S. George.

March. Enter Edward, Warwicke, Richard, Clarence, Norfolke, Montague, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now periur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace?
And set thy Diadem vpon my head?
Or bide the mortall fortune of the field.

Qu. Go rate thy Minions proud insulting Boy,
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in termes,
Before thy Soueraigne, and thy lawfull King?

Edw. I am his King, and he should bow his knee:
I was adopted Heire by his consent.

Clif. Since when his oath is broke: for as I heare,
You that are King, though he do weare the Crowne,
Haue caused him by new Act of Parliament,
To blot out me, and put his owne Sonne in.

Clif. And reason too,
Who should succeed the Father but the Sonne.

Rich. Are you there Butcher? O, I cannot speake.

Clif. I Crookeback, here I stand to answer thee,
Or any he the proudest of thy sort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd young Rutland was it not?

Clif. I, and old Yorke, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For God-sake Lords giue signall to the fight.

War. What say'st thou Henry,
Wilt thou yeeld the Crowne? (you speake

Edw. Why how now long-tongu'd Warwicke, dare
You speake of warre as Seasoning for your tongue?

War. I thought ere this thine eyes would haue taught them manners.

Edw. Now by my Father, and my Mothers name,
I'le plucke thee downe ere I come to thee.

Rich. Nay, hearken Brother, you shall goe with me.

Edw. Not I:
My foot shall rest, till stronger hand then mine
Doe helpe to roote me from my dearest Soyle.

Rich. Then this for me,
And helpe to deale the like to you both.

Edw. Now periur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace?
And set thy Diadem vpon my head?
Or bide the mortall fortune of the field.

Qu. Go rate thy Minions proud insulting Boy,
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in termes,
Before thy Soueraigne, and thy lawfull King?

Edw. I am his King, and he should bow his knee:
I was adopted Heire by his consent.

Clif. Since when his oath is broke: for as I heare,
You that are King, though he do weare the Crowne,
Haue caused him by new Act of Parliament,
To blot out me, and put his owne Sonne in.

Clif. And reason too,
Who should succeed the Father but the Sonne.

Rich. Are you there Butcher? O, I cannot speake.

Clif. I Crookeback, here I stand to answer thee,
Or any he the proudest of thy sort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd young Rutland was it not?

Clif. I, and old Yorke, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For God-sake Lords giue signall to the fight.

War. What say'st thou Henry,
Wilt thou yeeld the Crowne? (you speake

Edw. Why how now long-tongu'd Warwicke, dare
You speake of warre as Seasoning for your tongue?

War. I thought ere this thine eyes would haue taught them manners.

Edw. Now by my Father, and my Mothers name,
I'le plucke thee downe ere I come to thee.

Rich. Nay, hearken Brother, you shall goe with me.

Edw. Not I:
My foot shall rest, till stronger hand then mine
Doe helpe to roote me from my dearest Soyle.

Rich. Then this for me,
And helpe to deale the like to you both.

Exit.

Rich. I like a Dastard and a treacherous Coward,
As thou didst kill our tender Brother Rutland,
But ere Sunset, Ile make thee curse the deed.
King. Have done with words (my Lords) and heare me speake.
Qu. Defie them then, or else hold close thy lips.
King. I prythee giue no limits to my Tongue,
I am a King, and priuiledg'd to speake.
Clif. My Liege, the wound that bred this meeting here,
Cannot be cur'd by Words, therefore be still.
Rich. Then Executioner vnsheath thy sword.
By him that made vs all, I am resolu'd,
That Cæsar and Mannood, was vpon a tongue.
Ed. Say Henry, shalt I haue my right, or no.
A thousand men haue broke their Fasts to day,
That ne're shall dine, vnlesse thou yeeld the Crowne.
War. If thou denie their blood vpon thy head,
For Yorke in iustice puts his Armour on.
Prin. If that be right which Warwick says is right,
There is no wrong, but euery thing is right.
War. Whoeuer got thee, there thy Mother stands,
For well I wot, thou hast thy Mother tongue.
Qu. But thou art neyther like thy Sire nor Damme,
But like a foule mishapen Stygmatick,
Mark'd by the Destinies to be auoided,
As venome Toades, or Lizards dreadfull stings.
Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English guilt,
Whom Enuer beares the Title of a King,
As a Colmen-flower (by sufferance of the Sea)
Shamst thy Step-Dame, for lyes so apparant,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-borne heart.
Ed. A wisp of straw were worth a thousand Crowns
To make this shamelesse Callet know herselfe.
Hen. of Greece was lyer as are thou, and no more,
Altho in thy Hose thou may'st be Menelaus;
And ne're was Agamemnon Brother wronged
By that false Woman, as we men are wee.
Vnsheath your Swords, good Fathers, Cousins, Lords,
And tell false Edward, thy supposed King,
That this is Iuno's Torch to fire her Bed;
And thou in this shalt follow in her hast.
But valiant Lords, take heed how you begin,
Note you but how you meet a Bloody day,
For I can cope the Mirth of the first Man,
That sounds the Alarum to the Battell.
Cla. And I the next, and this my hand I seale,
That neuer shall say Die, vntill I lie with it.
Oxf. In dreadfull Armes I hide my valiant Heart,
And neuer shall retire, while it can beat.
Rich. Then sit we down, poore Warwick, when so many
Haue ventur'd their Liues for Edwards right,
Before they fall, learne how to Iest in Armes.
Norf. Now by my Faith, a braue Resolute Troope,
And proper Stripling, Noble Gentleman.
Qu. Ah that my Feare were false, my Hope were true!
For ere this day is spent, Incertaine Warre
Shall haue depopulate the Neighbor Plaines,
And in the Conquest, threaten both the Conquerors.
For I haue seene the Lambe of Warwick kill
Their Fathers, Sonnes, and Brothers in the Fight,
And I haue seene the Sonne of Warwick kill
Their Sonnes, their Fathers, Brothers in the Fight.
And both haue vow'd this day shall end the Warre,
Or Lives or Deaths shall be the Period.
Prin. Then Lords, your Fortune yet vouchsafe a Prayer.
Qu. Yet Gentle Warwick, let the Tyrant build
Vpon the Sandie Foundation of Deceit.
Prin. This day shall determine whether Loue or Feare
Will worke most in these double-hearted Men.
Oxf. Inferiors to your Noble Thoughts in Valour,
Though not in Birth, yet Princes to be scar'd.
Warw. A Warning Woman, we esteem not much,
Alarum. Excursions. Enter Warwicke.
War. Forespent with Toile, as Runners with a Race,
I lay me downe a little while to breath:
For strokes receiued, and many blowes repaid,
Haue robb'd my strong-knit Sinewes of their strength,
And force perforce, needs must I rest a while.
Enter Edward running.
Ed. Smile gentle Heauen, or strike ungentle death,
For this world frownes, and Edwards Sunne is clowded.
War. How now my Lord, what happe? what hope of good?
Enter Clarence.
Cla. Our hap is losse, our hope but sad dispaire,
Our ranks are broke, and ruine followes vs.
What counsaile giue you? whether shall we flye?
Ed. Bootlesse is flight, they follow vs with Wings,
And weake we are, and cannot shun pursuite.
Enter Richard.
Rich. Ah Warwicke, why hast thou withdrawne thy selfe?
Thy Brothers blood the Purple sweat hath drunk,
And in the very pangs of death he cryes,
Like to a dismall Clangor heard from farre,
Warwicke reuenge my death, reuenge our deaths,
So vnderneath the false and hollow Enemy,
I lay'd on case a stocke of Norway blood,
To whom my Heart-blood deadly hate hath sworne,
Short'ning my Days one Moment to preuent
His Nephews reaping of my Age-graine.
War. Trust not in Time, the Graues conspire with our blood
Expect your Hower, and many houres repaire,
Who drop their blood in Reuenge on your foes,
Whose Hearts are Gentle, milde, and full of ruth,
At our extreames in these extremities.
Weepe Warwicke, weepe for Clarence, Richard, Warwicke,
Heere on my knees, I vow to God aboue,
I neuer more will cease to pursue,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or Fortune giuen me measure of Reuenge.
Ed. O Warwicke, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chaine my soule to thine.
And ere my knee rise from the Earths cold face,
I throw my Hands, mine Eyes, my Heart to thee,
Thou setter vp and plucker downe of Kings,
Beseeching thee (if with thy will it stands)
That to my Foes this body must be prey,
Yet that by bloody Hands their Liues may ope,
And haue no more of thee, but what they haue,
Now Lords take leaue vntill we meete againe,
Where ere it be, in Heauen, or in Earth.
Rich. Brother,
Giue me thy hand, and gentle Warwicke,
Let me imbrace thee in my weary Armes.
I that did neuer weepe, now melt with woe,
That Winter should cut off our Spring-time so.
War. Away, away
Once more, sweet Lords farewell.
Cla. Yet let vs altogether to our Troopes,
And giue the King cause to fight, this very day.
Oxf. Accursed be the Hand that forces vs
And we in pitty of the Gentle King,
Had slipt our Claime, vntill another Age.
Cla. But when we saw, our Sunne-shine made thy Spring
And that thy Summer bred vs no increase,
We set the Axe to thy vsurping Roote:
And though the edge hath something hit our selues,
Yet know thou, since we haue begun to strike,
We'll neuer leaue, till we haue hewne thee downe,
Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.
Edw. And in this resolution, I defie you,
Not willing any longer Conference,
Since thus you will appeare to haue me fight.
Sound Trumpets, let our bloody Colours waue,
And either Victory, or else a Graue.
War. Stay Edward.
Ed. No wrangling Woman, we'll no longer stay,
These words will cost ten thousand Lives this day.
Exeunt omnes.

Forc[illegible] ...

Exeunt. Enter Richard and C[illegible]

Rich. Now [illegible] laugh'd a reason,
[illegible] for the Duke of Yorke,
[illegible] bath bound to revenge
[illegible]
[illegible] Now [illegible] three Sonnes of Edward,
[illegible] Father Yorke,
[illegible] that thou hast shewn thy brother Rutland,
[illegible] heart, to aime at me in the dearke,
And [illegible] hands that slew thy Sire and Brother,
To execute the like upon thy selfe,
[illegible]
[illegible] comes, Clifford and
[illegible] Now Warwicke take one out to some other Chace,
[illegible] Exeunt

Alarum. Enter King Henry alone

Hen. This battell fares like to the morning Warre,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Now [illegible] way, now Mine by Sea,
[illegible] Tide, to combat with the Waves:
[illegible] way, keepe even hand on the Sea,
[illegible] Wrecke
Some one, or [illegible] on the Wave
[illegible] Victors, or to breft
[illegible] opposite for foot encountred.
[illegible] Warre
Here [illegible] Mine by this the Warre,
[illegible] there be no Victor,
[illegible] too
[illegible] Sea, so
They [illegible] be, and I am here.
[illegible]
For [illegible] to Weepe.
[illegible]
[illegible] Mine,
[illegible] Swarme,
To [illegible]
To [illegible] by point,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
So many Houres, must I tend my Flocke,
So many Houres, must I view my Teame,
So many Houres, must I take my Rest,
So many Houres, must I contemplate,
So many Houres, must I sport my selfe,
So many Dayes, my Ewes have been with Lambe,
So many weeks ere the poore Fooles will Eane,
So many yeares ere I shall sheare the Fleece:
So Minutes, Houres, Dayes, Moneths and Yeares,
Past over to the end they were created,
Would bring white haires unto a Quiet grave.
Ah what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely?
Gives not the Hawthorne bush a sweeter shade
To Shepherds looking on their silly Sheepe,
Than doth a rich Imbroidered Canopie
To kings that feare their Subjects treacherie?
O yes, it doth a thousand times: first doth
And to conclude, the Shepherds homely Curds,
His cold thin Drinke out of his leather Bottle,
His wonted sleepe, under a fresh trees shade,
All which secure, and sweeter then the Rose,
Is farre beyond the pleasures Delicates
[illegible]
His Viands sparkling in a Golden Cup,
[illegible]
Were Care, Mistrust, and Treason waits on him.

Alarum. Enter a Sonne that hath kill'd his Father at one doore, and a Father that hath kill'd his Sonne at another doore.

Son. Ill blowen be every winde that profits nobody,
This man whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
May be possessed with some store of Crownes,
And I that haply take them from him now,
May yet (ere God will have it so) possesse them
[illegible]
Who's this? O God! it is my Father's face,
[illegible]
Confounded be the fortune of the Warres,
[illegible]
Me thinkes, the gentle Victor Warwicke man,
Cannot [illegible] but pretty his Master:
Ah, [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Me thinkes [illegible]
[illegible]
Were [illegible] Dinner,
[illegible]
Weepe [illegible] Teare for Teare,
[illegible]
[illegible]

Enter Father, bearing of his Sonne.

Fa. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
And [illegible]
Whose [illegible]
Thy [illegible]

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[

Murther like the King, and not be tatshed?
Son. Was euer sonne, so rewd a Fathers death?
Fath. Was euer Father to bemoan his Sonne?
Hen. Was euer King so greeu'd for Subiects woe?
Much is your sorrow; Mine ten times so much.
Son. Ile beare thee hence, where I may weepe my fill
Fath. These armes of mine shall be thy winding sheet
My heart (sweet Boy) shall be thy Sepulcher,
For from my heart, thine Image neuer shall go.
My sighing breast, shall be thy Funerall bell;
And so obsequious will thy Father be,
Men for the losse of thee, hauing no more,
As Priam was for all his Valiant Sonnes,
Ile beare thee hence, and let them fight that will,
For I haue murthered where I should not kill. Exit
Hen. Sad-hearted-men, much ouergone with Care,
Heere sits a King, more woful than you are.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the Queen, the Prince, and Exeter.

Prin. Fly Father, flye, for all your Friends are fled,
And Warwicke rages like a chafed Bull.
Away, for death doth hold vs in pursuite.
Qu. Mount you my Lord, towards Barwicke post amaine:
Edward and Richard like a brace of Grey-hounds,
Hauing the fearefull flying Hare in sight,
With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,
And bloody steele grasp'd in their yrefull hands
Are at our backes, and therefore hence amaine.
Exet. Away, for vengeance comes along with them.
Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed,
Or else come after, Ile away before.
Hen. Nay take me with thee good sweet Exeter:
Not that I feare to stay, but loue to go
Whether the Queene intends. Forward, away. Exeunt

A loud alarum. Enter Clifford Wounded.

Clif. Heere burnes my Candle out; I heere it dies,
Which while it lasted, gaue King Henry light.
O Lancaster! I feare thy ouerthrow,
More than my Body parting with my Soule
My Loue and Feare, glew'd many friends to thee,
And now I fall. Thorough Corruptures wounds,
Impaire Henry, strengthning misproud Yorke,
And whether flyes the Gnats but to the Sunne?
And who shines now, but Henries enemies?
O Phœbus! had'st thou neuer giuen consent,
That Phaeton should check thy fiery Steeds,
Thy burning Carre neuer had scorch'd the earth.
And Henry, had'st thou sway'd as Kings should do,
Or as thy Father, and his Father did,
Giuing no ground vnto the house of Yorke,
They neuer then had sprung like Summer Flyes:
I, and ten thousand in this luckelesse realme,
Had left no mourning Widdowes for our death,
And thou this day, hadst kept thy Chaire in peace.
For what doth cherish Weeds but gentle ayre?
And what makes Robbers bold but too much lenity?
Bootlesse are Plaints, and Cureless are my Wounds:
No way to flye, nor strength to hold out flight:
The Foe is merciless, and will not pity
For at their hands I haue deserued no pity.
The ayre hath got into my deadly Wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.
Come Yorke, and Richard, Warwicke and the rest,
I stabb'd your Fathers bosomes, Split my breast.

Alarum & Retreat. Enter Edward Warwicke Richard and Soldiers, Montague & Crosse.

Ed. Now breathe we Lords, good fortune bids vs pause
And smooth the frowns of War, with peaceful lookes.
Some Troopes pursue the bloody-minded Queene,
That led calme Henry though he were a King,
As doth a Sayle, fill'd with a fretting Gust
Command an Argosie to stem the Waues.
But think you Lords, that Clifford fled with them?
War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape
(For though before his face I speake the words)
Your Brother, Richard, markt him for the Graue.
And where an Eagle was wont to lye,
Richard alone hath reft the Regall Eagle
A deale vp close, like Death and deaths departing.
See who it is.
Ed. And now the Battailes ended,
If Friend or Foe, let him be gently vsed.
Rich. Reuoke that doome of mercy for this Clifford,
Who not contented that he lopp'd the Branch
In hewing Rutland, when his leaues put forth,
But left not till the Truncke, the Root, the Budde,
Concealed not the Fruite, and Blossome both,
I meane our Princely Father, Duke of Yorke.
War. From off the gates of Yorke, fetch down the head,
Your Father's head, which Clifford placed there:
Instead whereof, let this supply the roome,
Measure for measure, must be answered.
Ed. Bring forth that fatall Screech-owle to our house,
That nothing sung but death, to vs and ours:
Now death shall stop his dismall threatning sound,
And his ill-boading tongue no more shall speake.
War. I think his vnderstanding is bereft:
Speake Clifford, dost thou know who speakes to thee?
Darke cloudy death ouershades his beames of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears vs what we say.
Rich. O would he did! and so perhaps he doth,
'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
Because he would auoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gaue our Father.
Clif. If so thou think'st
Vex him with eager words.
Rich. Clifford, aske mercy and obtaine no grace.
Ed. Clifford repent in bootlesse penitence.
War. Clifford deuise excuses for thy faults.
Clif. While we deuised strife, we had not time
Rich. I would do it now: I like and loue to Yorke.
Ed. Thou pitied'st Rutland, I will pity thee.
Clif. Where's Captaine Margaret, to fence you now?
War. They mocke thee Clifford,
Sweare as thou was't wont.
Rich. What not an Oath? Nay then the world goes hard
When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath.
I know by that he's dead: and by my Soule
If this right hand would buy two houres life,
That I (in all despight) might rayle at him,
This hand should chop it off, and with the issuing Blood
Stifle the Villaine, whose vnstanched thirst
Yorke, and young Rutland could not satisfie.
War. I, but he's dead. Off with the Traitors head,
And reare it in the place your Fathers stands.
And now to London with Triumphant march,

I meet the crowned King and Royall King
From France (from Warwicke out the Sea to France,
And sue the Lady crowne forth, Queene
Shall fret the now both these Lands together,
And having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread
The scattred foe that hopes to rise againe.
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet looke to have them buz to offend thine eares.
First, will I see the Coronation,
And then to Britanny I crosse the Sea,
To effect this marriage, so it please my Lord
Sun. Even as thou wilt sweet Warwicke, let it bee
For on thy shoulder do I build my Seate,
And never will I undertake the thing
Without thy counsell and consent is wanting
Edward I will create thee Duke of Glocester,
And George of Clarence; Warwicke as our Selfe,
Shall do, and undo as him pleases best.
Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Glocester,
For Glocester Dukedome is too ominous.
War. Tut that's a foolish observation
Richard be Duke of Glocester. Now to London,
To see these Honors in possession. Exeunt

Enter Sinkler and Humfrey, with Crosse-bowes in their hands.

Sink. Under this thicke grownebrake, we'll shrowd
(our selves.
The Deere will come, and soon the Deere will come,
And in this covert will we take our Stand,
Couching close the path of all the Deere.
Hum. But this is about a Stone-cast shot by this.
Sink. That cannot be, the noise of my Crosse-bow
Will cause the Heard, and quite spoile the sport.
Here stand we both, and aym we at the best
And for the time shall not seeme tedious,
I'le tell thee what befell me on a day,
In this selfe place where now we mean to stand.
Sink. Heere comes a man, let's stay till he be past.
Enter King with a Prayer-booke.
Hen. From Scotland am I stolne even of pure love,
To see some owne Land with my wishing eyes.
No Harry Harry, 'tis no Land of thine,
Thy place is fill'd, thy Scepter wrung from thee,
Thy balme washt off, wherewith thou was Anointed
No bending knee will call thee Cæsar now,
No humble suters prease to speake for right,
No, not a man comes for redresse of thee
For how can I helpe them and not my selfe?
Sink. I, heere's a Deere, whose skinne is a Keepers Fee
This is the quondam King; Let's seize upon him.
Hen. Let me embrace these sowre Adversities,
For Wise men say, it is the wisest course.
Hum. Why linger we? Let us lay hands upon him.
Sink. Forbeare awhile, we'll heare a little more.
Hen. My Queene and Son are gone to France for aide,
And (as I heare) the great Commanding Warwicke
Is thither gone, to crave the French Kings Sister
To wife for Edward. If this newes be true,
Poore Queene, and Sonne your labour is but lost
For Warwicke is a subtle Orator
And Lewis a Prince soone won with moving words.
By this account then Margaret may winne him,
For she's a woman to be pitied much.
Her sighes will make a batt'ry in his breast,
Her teares will pierce into a Marble heart.
The Tyger will be milde whiles he doth mourne;
And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
To heare and see her plaints, her Brinish Teares.
I, but she's come to beg, Warwicke to give
She on her side will draw the heart of France
By vertue of her Beauty, and deepe oathes:
He on his side, for love of Edward
Shee weepes, and layes, her Henry is deposd
He smiles, and sayes, his Edward is installd,
That she, poore Wretch, for griefe can speake no more
Whiles Warwicke tells his Title, smoothes the Wrong,
Inferreth arguments of mighty strength,
And in conclusion wins the King from her,
With promise of his Sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support King Edwards place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be, and thou (poore soule)
Art then forsaken, as thou went'st forlorne
Hum. Say, what art thou talk'st of Kings & Queens?
King. More then I seeme, and lesse then I was borne to
A man at least, for lesse I should not be:
And men may talke of Kings, and why not I?
Hum. I but thou talk'st, as if thou were a King.
King. Why so I am (in Mind) and that's enough.
Hum. But if thou be a King, where is thy Crowne?
King. My Crowne is in my heart, not on my head:
Not deckt with Diamonds, and Indian Stones, &c.
Nor to be seene: my Crowne is call'd Content,
A Crowne it is, that hath donne Kings enjoy.
Hum. Well, if you be a King crown'd with Content,
Your Crowne Content, and you, must be contented
To go along with us. For (as we thinke)
You are the King King Edward hath deposd:
And we his Subjects sworne in our Allegeance,
Will apprehend you, as his Enemie.
King. But did you never sweare, and breake an Oath.
Hum. No never such an Oath, nor will not now.
King. Where did you dwell when I was King of England?
Hum. Here in this Country, where we now remaine.
King. I was anointed King at nine moneths old,
My Father, and my Grandfather were Kings:
And you were sworne true Subjects unto me:
And tell me then, have you not broke your Oathes?
Sink. No, for we were Subjects, but while you were King.
King. Why? Am I dead? Do I not breath a Man?
Ah simple men, you know not what you sweare.
Looke, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the Ayre blowes it to me againe,
Obeying with my winde when I do blow,
And yeelding to another, when it blowes,
Commanded always by the greater gust:
Such is the lightnesse of you, common men.
But do not breake your Oathes, for of that sinne,
My meane intreaties shall not make you guiltie.
Go where you will, the King shall be commanded,
And be you Kings, command, and crosse me shall.
Sink. We are true Subjects to the King,
King Edward.
King. So would you be againe to Henrie,
If he were seated as King Edward is.
Sink. We charge you in Gods name & the Kings,
To go with us unto the Officers.
King. In Gods name lead, your Kings name be obeyd,
And what God will, that let your King performe.
And what he will, I humbly yeeld unto Exeunt

Enter K. Edward, Glocester, Clarence, Lady Grey
King. Brother of Glocester, at S. Albons field

This

This Lady's Husband, Sir Richard Grey, was slaine,
His Land then seiz'd on by the Conqueror,
Her suit is now, to repossesse those Lands,
Which we in Iustice cannot well deny,
Because in Quarrell of the House of Yorke,
The worthy Gentleman did lose his Life.

Rich. Your Highnesse shall doe well to graunt her suit:
It were dishonor to deny it her.

King. It were no lesse, but yet Ile make a pawse.

Rich. Yea, sit to:
I see the Lady hath a thing to graunt,
Before the King will graunt her humble suit.

Clarence. Hee knowes the Game, how true hee keepes the winde?

Rich. Silence.

King. Widow, we will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our minde.

Wid. Right gracious Lord, I cannot brooke delay:
May it please your Highnesse to resolue me now,
And what your pleasure is, shall satisfie me.

Rich. I Widow, then Ile warrant you all your Lands,
And if what pleases him, shall pleasure you.
I feare me you shall goe more gladder,
Then you are glad for any thing you le get.

Clarence. I feare her not, vnlesse she chance to fall.

Rich. God forbid that, for hee le take aduantages.

And how many Children hast thou, Widow? tell me.

Clarence. I thinke he meanes to begge a Child of her.

Rich. Nay then whip me, hee'le rather giue her two.

Wid. Three, my most gracious Lord.

Rich. You shall haue foure, if you'le be ruled by him.

King. 'Twere pitie they should lose their Fathers Lands.

Wid. Be pitifull, dread Lord, and graunt it then.

King. Lords giue vs leaue, Ile trye this Widowes wit.

Rich. I, good leaue haue you, for you will haue leaue,
Till Youth take leaue, and leaue you to the Crutch.

King. Now tell me, Madame, doe you loue your Children?

Wid. I, full as dearely as I loue my selfe.

King. And would you not doe much to doe them good?

Wid. To doe them good, I would sustayne some harme.

King. Then get your Husbands Lands, to doe them good.

Wid. Therefore I came vnto your Maiestie.

King. Ile tell you how these Lands are to be got.

Wid. So shall you bind me to your Highnesse seruice.

King. What seruice wilt thou doe me, if I giue them?

Wid. What you command that rests in me to doe.

King. But you will take exceptions to my Boone.

Wid. No gracious Lord, except I cannot doe it.

King. I, but thou canst doe what I meane to aske.

Wid. Why then I will doe what your Grace commands.

Rich. Hee plyes her hard, and much Raine weares the Marble.

Clar. As red as fire? nay then, her Wax must melt.

Wid. Why stoppes my Lord? shall I not heare my Taske?

King. An easie Taske 'tis but to loue a King.

Wid. That's soone performd, because I am a Subiect.

King. Why then, thy Husbands Lands I freely giue thee.

Wid. I take my leaue with many thousand thankes.

Rich. The Match is made, she seales it with a Curtsie.

King. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of loue I meane.

Wid. The fruits of Loue, I meane, my louing Liege.

King. I, but I feare me in another sence.
What Loue, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?

Wid. My loue till death, my humble thankes, my prayers,
That loue which Vertue begges, and Virtue graunts.

King. No, by my troth, I did not meane such loue.

Wid. Why then you meane not, as I thought you did.

King. But now you partly may perceiue my minde.

Wid. My minde will neuer graunt what I perceiue
Your Highnesse aymes at, if I aime aright.

King. To tell thee plaine, I would haue thee to liue with thee.

Wid. To tell you plaine, I had rather liue in Prison.

King. Why then thou shalt not haue thy Husbands Lands.

Wid. Why then my Honestie shall be my Dower,
For by that losse I will not purchase them.

King. Therein thou wrong'st thy Children mightily.

Wid. Herein your Highnesse wrongs both them & me.
But mighty Lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadnesse of my suit.
Please you dismisse me, either with I, or no.

King. I, if thou wilt say I to my request:
No if thou dost say No to my demand.

Wid. Then No, my Lord, my suit is at an end.

Rich. The Widow likes him not, she knits her Browes.

Clarence. Hee is the bluntest Wooer in Christendome.

King. Her lookes doth argue her replete with Modestie,
Her Words doth shew her Wit incomparable,
All her perfections challenge Soueraignetie,
One way, or other shee is for a King,
And shee shall be my Loue, or else my Queene.
Say, that King Edward take thee for his Queene?

Wid. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious Lord.
I am a subiect fit to iest withall,
But vnfit to be a Soueraigne.

King. Sweet Widow, by my State I sweare to thee,
I speake no more than what my Soule intends,
And that is, to enioy thee for my Loue.

Wid. And that is more than I will yeeld vnto.
I know, I am too meane to be your Queene,
And yet too good to be your Concubine.

King. You cauill, Widow, I did meane my Queene.

Wid. 'Twill grieue your Grace, my Sonnes should call you Father.

King. No more, than when my Daughters call thee Mother.
Thou art a Widow, and hast some Children,
And by Gods Mother, I being but a Batchelor,
Haue other some. Why 'tis a happy thing,
To be the Father vnto many Sonnes.
Answere no more, for thou shalt be my Queene.

Rich. The Ghostly Father now hath done his Shrift.

Clarence. When hee was made a Shriuer, 'twas for shift.

King. Brothers, you muse what Chat we two haue had.

Rich. The Widow likes it not, for shee lookes very sad.

King. You'l thinke it strange, if I should marrie her.

Clarence. To whom, my Lord?

King. Why Clarence, to my selfe.

Rich. That

Edw. That you deceiue me, for I cannot liue.
Clarence. That's a day longer than a Wonderfull.
Rich. By this reckoning he is the Wonder in extremes
King. Were he twice as many Brothers I cannot yet be worn,
Her suit is granted for her Husbands Lands.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious Lord, Henry your Foe is taken,
And brought your Prisoner to your Palace Gate
King. See that he be conueyed vnto the Tower:
And go we Brothers to the man that tooke him,
To question of his apprehension.
Widow go you along. Lords vse her honourable.
Exeunt

Manet Edward.

Edw. I, Edward will vse women honourably:
Would all were wasted, Marrow, bones, and all,
That from his Loynes no hopefull Branch may spring,
To scratch the face of Gouernment I looke for
And yet betweene my Soules desire, and me,
The lustfull Edward Title buried,
Is Clarence, Henry, and his Son young Edward,
And all the vnlook'd-for Issue of their Bodies,
To take their Roomes, ere I can place my eye:
A cursed generation of my Progenie.
Why me thinkes I heare a Conqueror,
Like one in Armour thrusting Prisoners,
And yet the Ayre about him scarce he would tread,
Whilst Fortune serues him with a victorious eye,
And I am next at hand to waite his pleasure,
Saue heere and there to hasten his way
Vnder the Crowne, hoping to take off,
And all the cursed meanes that keepes me from it,
And (like a Lyon in the Toyles) still roare,
Expecting when the Game will come to me.
My Soule is full of Woe my Heart o'reweenes too much,
Vnlesse by this faire meanes I climbe apace
Vnto the Throne, and seate me on the Top
Of all my Hopes. Let Lapwings
And Ideots my Companions,
Attend on Lawes and my Will, and Lookes.
Dispatch I say, and finish quickly.
I am not secure whilst Crowne (Crowne I say)
Wants Compasse to receiue my Princely Worke.
And ere I end, I will so cut out Layers,
So deale corrupt, so alter New with Old,
That fearefull men shall wish their Necks vnder my Stroke,
Time shall not finish my Mountaine on the Back
Of Crookeback, before I have
Fashion'd new Lawes, and put vnacquainted,
Indifferent persons in every Office
Like Iackanapes, or Apish Imitators
Of Machiuell the Diuell.
And then, when I am sure of being so,
Then I vnmaske my Brother, and for Conscience sake,
I'le put the Murther of Poore Henry off,
As done in Zeale to his Religion,
For the Redemption of the Realme and People:
And I, like one lost in a Thornie Wood,
That rents the Thornes, and is rent with the Thornes,
Seeking a way, and straying from the way,
Not knowing how to finde the open Ayre,
But toyling desperately to finde it out,
Torment my Soule, to catch the English Crowne
And from that torment I will free my Ioate,
Or hew my way out with a bloody Axe.
Why I can smile, and murther whiles I smile,
And cry, Content, to that which grieues my Heart,
And wet my Cheekes with artificiall Teares,
And frame my Face to all occasions.
Ile drowne more Saylers then the Mermaid shall,
Ile slay more gazers then the Basiliske,
Ile play the Orator as well as Nestor,
Deceiue more slyly then Vlisses could,
And like a Sinon, take another Troy.
I can adde Colours to the Camelion,
Change shapes with Proteus, for aduantages,
And set the murderous Machiuell to Schoole.
Can I doe this, and cannot get a Crowne?
Tut, were it farther off, Ile plucke it downe. Exit.

Flourish.
Enter Lewis the French King, his Sister Bona, his Admirall, called Bourbon. Prince Edward, Queene Margaret, and the Earle of Oxford.
Lewis sits, and riseth vp againe.

Lewis. Faire Queene of England, worthy Margaret,
Sit downe with vs, it ill befits thy State,
And Birth, that thou should'st stand, while Lewis doth sit.
Marg. No mighty King of France: now Margaret
Must strike her sayle, and learne a while to serue,
Where Kings command. I was (I must confesse)
Great Albions Queene, in former Golden dayes
But now mischance hath trod my Title downe,
And with hot scalding-griefe hath wet my face,
Where I must take like Seat vnto my fortune,
And to my humble Seat conforme my selfe.
Lewis. Why say faire Queene, whence springs this deepe despaire?
Marg. From such a cause, as fills mine eyes with teares,
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.
Lewis. Whate're it be, be thou still like thy selfe,
And sit thee by our side. Seats her by him.
Yeeld not thy necke to Fortunes yoake,
But let thy dauntlesse minde still beare saile,
Cleere Maiestance
Be plaine Queene Margaret, and tell thy griefe,
It shall be eas'd, if France can yeeld reliefe.
Marg. Those gracious words
Reuiue my drooping thoughts,
And giue my tongue-tyed sorrowes leaue to speake.
Now therefore be it knowne to Noble Lewis,
That Henry late possessor of my Loue,
Is, of a King, become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to liue in Scotland a Forlorne;
While proud ambitious Edward Duke of Yorke,
Vsurpes the Regall Title, and the Seat
Of Englands true anointed lawfull King.
This is the cause that I, poore Margaret,
With this my Sonne, Prince Edward, Henries Heire,
Am come to craue thy iust and lawfull aide:
And if thou faile vs, all our hope is done.
Scotland hath will to helpe, but cannot helpe:

Our People, and our Peeres, are both misled,
Our Treasure seiz'd, our Soldiers put to flight,
And (as thou seest) our selues in heauy plight.
Lewis. Renowned Queene,
With patience calme the Storme,
While we bethinke a meanes to breake it off.
Marg. The more we stay, the stronger growes our Foe.
Lewis. The more I stay, the more I succour thee.
Marg. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow.
And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter Warwicke.

Lewis. What's hee approacheth boldly to our presence?
Marg. Our Earle of Warwicke, Edwards greatest Friend.
Lewis. Welcome braue Warwicke, what braues thee to France? They conferre apart.
Marg. I now beginne a second Storme to rise,
For this is hee that moues both Winde and Tide.
Warw. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,
My Lord and Soueraigne, and thy vowed Friend,
I come (in Kindnesse and vnfeigned Loue)
First, to doe greetings to thy Royall Person,
And then to craue a League of Amitie.
And lastly to confirme that Amitie
With Nuptiall Knot, if thereto thou vouchsafe to grant
That vertuous Lady Bona thy right Sister,
To England King, in lawfull Marriage.
Marg. If that goe forward Henries hopes is done.
Warw. And gracious Madame, Speaking to Bona.
In our Kings behalfe,
I am commanded with your leaue and fauor,
Humbly to kisse your Hand, and with my Tongue
To tell the passion of my Soueraignes Heart
Where fame, late entring at his heedfull Eares,
Hath plac'd thy Beauties Image and thy Vertues.
Marg. King Lewis and Lady Bona, heare me speake,
Before you answer Warwicke. His demand
Springs not from Edwards well-meant honest Loue,
But from Deceit, bred by Necessitie.
For how can Tyrants safely gouerne home,
Vnlesse abroad they purchase great Alliance?
To prooue him Tyrant this reason may suffice,
That Henry liues still: But were he dead,
Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henries Sonne.
Looke therefore Lewis that by this League and Marriage
Thou draw not on thy Danger and Dishonour.
For though Vsurpers sway the rule awhile,
Yet Heauens are iust, and Time suppresseth Wrongs.
Warw. Iniurious Marget.
Bona. And why not Queene?
Warw. Because thy Father Henry did vsurpe,
And thou no more art Princesse then the daughter of Duke.
Oxf. Then Warwicke disparages not the house of Gaunt,
Whilst it did dubbe the greatest part of Spaine;
And ancestor Iohn of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth
Whose Wisdome was a Mirror to the wisest:
And after that wise Prince Henry the Fift,
Who by his Prowesse conquered all France
From thence, your Henry lineally descends.
Warw. Oxford, how haps it in this smooth discourse,
You told not, how Henry the Sixt hath lost
All that, which Henry the Fift had gotten.
Methinkes these Peeres of France should smile at that.
But for the rest: you tell a Pedegree
Of three descents and twice three yeeres seruage
To make a King vnto a lawfull Throne.
Of all my Lords and mine Progenitors
Are valiant Warriors, expert Conquerors,
And shall it be recorded for their Fame,
Their Sonne is now their Peeres Companion?
Now cast off Pedegree, for Edward King
Come Crowned Kings, in spite of thy Disgrace
My elder brother Lord Iohn Mowbray here
Was not to dearest Friends more carefull Fauorer,
Then Nature, Crowne, and all the powers on Earth
Will be to Edward.
Iohn. And they shall be to Edward and Oxford,
Vnlesse the pleasure be the same
And cleane contrary to the pleasure of Warwicke.

Enter Edward, &c.

Marg. Heauens grant, that Warwickes words bewitch him not.
Lewis. Now Warwicke, thou art come euen vnexpectedly to hence
Edward our true King, and we to him
To thee we owe, and therefore welcome chosen,
Warw. Therein I prooue my Credit, and my Honor.
Lewis. But is your Grace dead to the Proffers offered?
Warw. I am sent at large with full Commission,
Lewis. Let it be seene, then, how the Articles
Tell me the true meaning of your Loue
Vnto our Sister Lona.
Warw. So it seemes,
As may beseeme Monarchs of your state
Most earnest Motions of a Princely Suite,
Most effectuall Orators of Loue and Peace,
Warrant the Kingly Warrant of Edwards Name,
Exempt from all dissembling from Deceit,
Vnder the Faith Lona may repose
Lewis. Now Sister, giue vs cause to cheere and reioyce.
Lona. Your grauest Counsailors, discerning deepe
Yet I conceale, that of mine owne accord,
When I shall heare your Kings sincere receiuing,
Mine eare attentiue to his amorous Motions
Lewis. Then Warwicke thus:
Our Sister shall be Edwards.
And now to know the full Articles be drawne
Touching the ioynture our Sister must make,
What Dower Queene Margaret and her selfe
Draw neere Queene Margaret and be a witnesse
That Lona shall be wife to the English King
Prince. To Edward but not to the English King
Marg. Deceitfull Father, and vnnaturall Sonne,
Before your eyes, Lewis of France, and
Lewis. And mine, braue Margaret.
Binde your Hearts to our Crowne and speake,
As may appeare to Edward and his Friends
That our Alliance will be safe and sure.
From all Ingratefull, and vnkinde Iniuries
Yet (if I may, or can be any way)
That your Heart-rooting Hates, and mine may yeeld
Warw. Henry our Lord is Scotland, and hath all,

Vnlesse

Where hauing nothing, nothing can be lost,
And (for why, you are (of our quondam Queene)
You are a Baite enough to make me yours,
And better 'twere, you troubled him, then France.
Mar. Peace impudent, and shamelesse Warwicke,
Proud setter vp and plucker downe of Kings,
I will not ene'e wrangle with thee, Tales and Teares
Not worthy Queenes, and Princes to regard:
But in compassion, weeping ouer them,
If you'le be compassionate, and my Lords all to boote,
To them, with the Queene.
For both of you are Birds of selfe-same feather.
Lewis. Warwicke this is some poste to vs, or Packet.
Enter a Post.
Post. My Lord Ambassador,
These Letters are for you. Speakes to Warwicke.
Sent from your Brother Marquesse Montague
These from our King, vnto your Maiesty. To Lewis
And Madam, these for you. To Margaret
From whom, I know not.
They reade their Letters
Oxf. I like it well, that our faire Queene, and Mistris
Smiles at her News, while their hard-hearted King
Prince. Nay mary see how Lewis stands as he were not pleased with that which he hath heard.
Lew. Warwicke, what are thy Newes?
And yours, faire Queene?
Mar. Mine such as fill my heart with vnhop'd ioyes.
War. Mine full of sorrow, and heart-discomfort.
Lew. What? has your King married the Lady Grey?
And now to sooth your Forces, hath he sent
Some Ambassador to perswade this Match?
And will the Pope make Warre against this Match?
Hath he preferred before your Sisters Loue?
Mar. No, Mighty King of France, her Edward will
Disprize the Brother of so meane a Wife,
As Lady Grey, in regard of her estate.
No, my Lord, hearing of your Princely Purpose,
To marry with the Sister to the French Queene,
Disdaining our vnworthy Sister's Loue,
Hath sent Ambassadors vnto the Lady Bona,
To craue the Marriage of the Royall Bona.
Bona. Is it euen so? why then I ioy at it,
Why this is Loue indeed, to scorne a Crowne
For his Beloued Mistris sake, whose Beauty
Doth farre exceed the Beauty of her Fortune.
Mar. Tush Bona, this is Policie, not Loue.
Or else, thinking that Warwicke is thy Friend,
Hath he preferred thy Sister to his Friend.
Bona. Be it for Loue, or Policie, or both,
I am right glad that he is not for me.
For this I am sure of, he is not for you.
Lew. Warwicke, this is some poste to vs, or Packet.
Enter the Post.
Post. My Lord Ambassador,
These Letters are for you. Speakes to Warwicke.
Sent from your Brother Marquesse Montague
These from our King, vnto your Maiesty. To Lewis
And Madam, these for you. To Margaret
From whom, I know not.
They reade their Letters
Oxf. I like it well, that our faire Queene, and Mistris
Smiles at her News, while their hard-hearted King
Prince. Nay marry see how Lewis stands as he were not pleased with that which he hath heard.
Lew. Warwicke, what are thy Newes?
And yours, faire Queene?
Mar. Mine such as fill my heart with vnhop'd ioyes.
War. Mine full of sorrow, and heart-discomfort.
Lew. What? has your King married the Lady Grey?
And now to sooth your Forces, hath he sent
Some Ambassador to perswade this Match?
And will the Pope make Warre against this Match?
Hath he preferred before your Sisters Loue?
Mar. No, Mighty King of France, her Edward will
Disprize the Brother of so meane a Wife,
As Lady Grey, in regard of her estate.
No, my Lord, hearing of your Princely Purpose,
To marry with the Sister to the French Queene,
Disdaining our vnworthy Sister's Loue,
Hath sent Ambassadors vnto the Lady Bona,
To craue the Marriage of the Royall Bona.
Bona. Is it euen so? why then I ioy at it,
Why this is Loue indeed, to scorne a Crowne
For his Beloued Mistris sake, whose Beauty
Doth farre exceed the Beauty of her Fortune.
Mar. Tush Bona, this is Policie, not Loue.
Or else, thinking that Warwicke is thy Friend,
Hath he preferred thy Sister to his Friend.
Bona. Be it for Loue, or Policie, or both,
I am right glad that he is not for me.
For this I am sure of, he is not for you.
And for the loue of, and safety of our Country
Bona. Deere brother, now shall Bona be reuenged,
But by thy helpe to this distressed Queene?
Mar. Renowned Prince, how shall Poore Henries liue,
Vnlesse thou rescue him from forreine bondage?
Bona. My quarrel, and this English Queens, are one.
War. And mine with hers, and thine, and Margarets.
Lew. Alreadie you are, and shall be, deere Margaret.
Therefore, at last, I firmely am resolued
You shall not part so.
Mar. Let me entreat you.
Lew. Then I say, as Messenger, seale vp your Packet,
And tell false Edward, thy supposed King,
That Lewis of France, is sending ouer Maskers
To reuell it with him, and his new Bride.
Thinke'st thou that we feare their hidden wiles?
Bona. Tell him, sweet Lord, what ere he be, I prouide a widowes sorrow,
I weare the Willow Garland for his sake.
Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are layde aside,
And I am ready to put Armor on.
War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore I'le vncrowne him, ere't be long.
There's thy reward, be gone. Exit Post.
Lew. But Warwicke,
Thou and Oxford, with fiue thousand men
Shall crosse the Seas, and I will straight follow with a puissant Army.
And as occasion serues, this Noble Queene
And Prince, shall follow with all speed.
Yet ere thou go, but answer me one doubt,
What pledge haue we of thy firme loyalties?
War. This shall assure my constant loyalty,
That if our Queene, and this young Prince agree,
I'le ioyne mine eldest daughter, and my Ioy,
To your forsaken Bed, and Marriage-Bands.
Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your Motion.
Sonne Edward she is fairer then Veriooke,
Therefore delay not, giue thy hand to Warwicke,
And with thy hand, thy faire Daughter shall conueigh
All these deere Lands Warwicke doth inioy.
Prince Ed. Yes, I accept her, for the Wealth she brings.
And here to pledge my Vow, I giue my hand.
He giues his hand to Warw.
Lew. Why stay we now? These Princes shall be wed,
And straight Lord Bourbon our High Admirall
Shall waft them ouer with our Royall Fleete.
I long till Edward fall by Warres mischance,
For mocking Marriage with a Dame of France.
Exeunt. Manet Warwicke.
War. I came from Edward as Ambassador,
But I return his sworne and mortall foe.
Matter of Marriage was the charge he gaue me,
But dreadfull Warre shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a stale but me?
Then none but I shall turne his Iest to Sorrow.
I was the Chiefe that rays'd him to the Crowne,
And I'le be Chiefe to bring him downe againe:
Not that I pitty Henries misery,
But seeke Reuenge on Edwards mockery. Exit.

Enter Richard, Clarence, Somerset, and Montague.

Rich. Now tell me brother Clarence, what thinke you
Of this new Marriage with the Lady Grey?
Hath not our Brother made a worthy Choice?
Cla. Alas, you know, 'tis farre from hence to France,
How

How can tune fit vs vnfortunate made returne?
Som. My Lords, forbeare this talke, heere comes the King.

Flourish.

Enter King Edward, Lady Grey, Penbrooke, Stafford, Hastings, Attendants.

Rich. And his well-chosen Bride.
Clarence. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.
King. Now Brother of Clarence,
How like you our Choyce,
That you stand pensiue, as halfe malecontent?
Clarence. As well as Lewis of France,
Or the Earle of Warwicke,
Which are so weake of courage, and in iudgement,
That they'le take no offence at our abuse.
King. Say you so, say you so? I intend no wrong.
They are but Lewis and Warwicke, I am Edward,
Your King and Warwicke, and must haue my will.
Rich. And shall you haue your will, because our King:
Yet hasty Marriage seldome proueth well.
King. Yea brother Richard, are you offended too?
Rich. Not I, no:
God forbid that I should wish them seuered,
Whom God hath ioyn'd together.
I, and 'twere pitie, to sunder them,
That yoke so well together.
King. Setting your scornes, and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the Lady Grey
Should not become my Wife, and England's Queene?
And you too, Somerset, and Montague,
Speake freely what you think.
Clarence. Then this is mine opinion.
That King Lewis becomes your Enemie,
For mocking him about the Marriage
Of the Lady Bona.
Rich. And Warwicke doing what you gaue in charge,
Is now dishonored by this new Marriage.
King. What, if both Lewis and Warwicke be appeas'd,
By such inuention as I can deuise?
Mount. Yet to haue ioyn'd with France in such alliance,
Would more haue strengthned this our Commonwealth
'Gainst forraine stormes, than any home-bred Marriage.
Hast. Why knows not Mountague that of it selfe,
England is safe, if true within it selfe?
Mount. But the safer, when 'tis back'd with France.
Hast. 'Tis better vsing France, than trusting France:
Let vs be back'd with God and with the Seas,
Which he hath giuen for fence impregnable,
And with their helpes, only defend our selues:
In them and in our selues our safetie lyes.
Clar. For this one speech, Lord Hastings well deserues
To haue the Heire of the Lord Hungerford.
King. I, what of that? it was my will, and graunt,
And for this once, my Will shall stand for Law.
Rich. And yet me thinks your Grace hath not done well,
To match our Sister to an Vncle so,
Who dotes as much as we do hate the match.
Clarence. Alas, your Highnesse knowes not Lady Grey
How much in duty I am bound to you,
And good my Lord of Gloster, marke my words:
Before the Duke of Somerset sayd he,
Required to haue his Daughter Queene of England,
He should haue had your Highnesse Loue for Edward:
Yea, and (as I heare) the Duke proffered,
Besides large sommes of Gold, and Dowries,
In Marriage of his Daughter, Princely gifts,
In value rich: but I, for all my kin,
Sought your high honor, and your benefit.
Rich. True, in deed, the worse thereby for you.
King. I, I, for I would rather haue her so,
How can I then haue her but by Marrying?
Sweet Sister, do not enuy your friends good hap.
Poore Clarence, leaue thy needlesse mone for me,
And fortune will ere long relent for thee.
Sirs, stand apart, the King must sue and kneele.
Duch. Now tell me, Brother Clarence, what think you
Of this new Marriage with the Lady Grey?
Hath not our Brother made a worthy choyce?
Clarence. Alas, you know, 'tis farre from hence to France,
How could he stay till Warwicke made returne?
Som. My Lords, forbeare this talke, heere comes the King.

Flourish.

Enter King Edward, Lady Grey, Penbrooke, Stafford, Hastings, Attendants.

Rich. And his well-chosen Bride.
Clarence. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.
King. Now Brother of Clarence,
How like you our Choyce,
That you stand pensiue, as halfe malecontent?
Clarence. As well as Lewis of France,
Or the Earle of Warwicke,
Which are so weake of courage, and in iudgement,
That they'le take no offence at our abuse.
King. Say you so, say you so? I intend no wrong.
They are but Lewis and Warwicke, I am Edward,
Your King and Warwicke, and must haue my will.
Rich. And shall you haue your will, because our King:
Yet hasty Marriage seldome proueth well.
King. Yea brother Richard, are you offended too?
Rich. Not I, no:
God forbid that I should wish them seuered,
Whom God hath ioyn'd together.
I, and 'twere pitie, to sunder them,
That yoke so well together.
King. Setting your scornes, and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the Lady Grey
Should not become my Wife, and England's Queene?
And you too, Somerset, and Mount

[illegible]

Enter the Duke of Yorke, and the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Clifford.

Yorke. Let me see the Tower guarded sure to night:
So are the Posternes of the Parke, and Gates;
There is directions for the Watch to night.
We must suppose the Duke will stand his friends,
Or he no doubt, this sodaine Parliament
Is call'd for nought but meere Policie.
We know each Freind, and each Opposite:
The Duke is Crafty, he is subtle,
And his pretences sugred Eloquence.
But I am arm'd and dare confront him now,
And yet I think Jack Cade was not deceiv'd.
Poore Soule, his head is fixed on London Bridge,
He usde no common meanes to breake our Power,
And dangerous in the Time of Insurrection.
Buck. Let us assemble when the Duke comes forth,
And if he braue vs, then vpon our Horse,
And bid him Battell in the Market-place.
Yorke. Not so, my Lords, lest he might charge vs thence,
But meete him in the Parke on Horsebacke.
Clif. Each Souldier stand in readinesse,
With Launce in Rest, and Staues vpon their Thighes,
The Morning is well vp, I looke he straight
Will send to know our Businesse in the Field.
Yorke. I wish it may not come to Fight.
For all the Followers that I haue in Armes,
Are Gentlemen well Spoken, feeling, wise,
Such as will strike home with Mildnesse.
Buck. Why, so are his: for Commons seldome fight.
And then his Men are Tenants to the Duke.
Yorke. Yet this is certaine, that the Duke is Head,
And brings along with him the Force of Kent.
Clif. Marry, and let him bring his Power of Kent,
Ere Sussex yeeld, this Hand shall burne in Hell.
Buck. Here comes the Duke.

Enter the Duke of Somerset, and the Duke of Suffolke.

Yorke. What, Somerset in Armes?
Buck. And Suffolke too?
Why, what a crew have you got together,
Of Wilfull Gentlemen, whose Valour
Is test by their Apparrell?
Yorke. Well met, Duke of Somerset,
I hope this Armie is not gathered
Against your Person, or against the Peace,
Whereof, no doubt, the Duke is Protector.
Buck. Well met, Duke of Yorke,
I thinke your Purpose is not hostile.
Suffolke. What is the Reason you are vp in Armes,
While your Soueraigne feeles no Fear at all,
See not a Weapon glitter in his Eye,
Nor hath his Heart the Feare to strike
His Subiects Bosomes, except Traitors,
Such as (I feare) are harbour'd neere his Person.
Yorke. How I am braued, and must perforce endure it?
Buck. This blot that they obiect against your Excellence,
Was well deseru'd too, that your Excellence
Vnder Pretence of Manning Normandy,
Dismantled of your Men the Fortresse
Of Roan, Yeelding (your selfe) vnto the French.
Yorke. Those Men are banish'd Traitors:
The Duke of Somerset (whose Cowardice
Hath made vs bleede our Treasure, and our Bloud)
Being our Generall, purposely to the Dolphin,
For Monyes.
Suffolke. Your Mutinies in Normandy
Haue made your Name so hateful in your Graue,
That when your Limmes were stiffe and cold with Death,
To laye his Enuie vnto your dead Honour,
And see his Noble Name arraigned in you.
Yorke. My Lord of Suffolke, within fourteene Yeeres
I haue not been Imployed beyond the Seas.
Buck. Since when, the Duke of Somerset hath reapt
A Harueste of Seuen Fifteenes in France:
And brought your Riches home with Extreame Wrong.
Yorke. Is this the Fashion in the Court of England?
Is this the Way to Lift vp Englands Peeres?
Why, Princely Buckingham, I'le make thee Loose
Both Land and Life for these Reproaches.
Buck. Why, Princely Yorke, I'le make thee aske againe
Both Land and Life, ere thou possesse them.
Yorke. Base Dukedome, vnworthy Buckingham,
Bought and sold Traytor, I will make thee shame
For these Reproaches, as deepe as Hell.
Buck. Nay, Yorke, this Braue shall not depart alive,
Vnlesse he kisse the Stirrop of the Duke.
Yorke. Dar'st thou (for feare) proclaime a Parliament?
But I forget, we are not Subiects now,
But Soueraigne as the Duke: and one Proud Yorke,
Will pluck a Crest-wing'd Hawke as low as Lure,
This Day shall make or marre many a Pesant.
And not vnlike to Bibbie Buckingham,
And Somerset, Dukedomes and Lordships both,
Will vanish like to Mistes before the Sunne.
Clif. Proud Yorke, vnpatient Boy,
What Lord wilt thou controule heere?
Yorke. Proud Clifford, such a Lord as Henry is,
Whose Hand is made to Giue, his Heart to Pitty,
Whose Tongue more Temper'd to perswade,
Than is the Conquering Fury of his Sword.
Clif. Whose Tongue is more Temper'd to Lye,
Than to perswade, or Sword more apt to Kill,
Than Pitty, or Giue Gifts?
Yorke. Why, Clifford, I do speake to Somerset,
Not to the Barking Bulldogge of Commixture,
To whose Surname Arthur Plantagenet
Added Scorne.
Buck. Why, what a Scorne glowes in the Face of Yorke?
Yorke. Not Scorne in Yorke, but Feare in those that feare him.
For if I would, each Part of me
Would prove a Sword for Somerset.
Buck. Why, what would you do?
Yorke. Marry, this, Take Vengeance
For all the Wrongs I speake of done to me.
Buck. Why, you speake but what all the Realme complaines of.
Yorke. Nay, whereto flowes this Apology?
I am no Traytor, as the Duke doth Slaunder,
But honest in the Part of Truth and Right,
That do inferre the Iust Vprearing of my Sword,
For Somerset and all his Complices,
A Day will come when Yorke shall claime his Owne,
And therefore I will take the Neuill Parts,
And make a Show of Hate to Buckingham.
I'le send some Packets to the Northward straight,
To know their Minds, whereto they stand affected:
And thus my Long-kept Hate may haply speed,
And thus I passe the Time with Hope and Feare.
Clif. Ile see your Grace: till then, I'le follow her
Into the Countrey, and there sleepe till Day.
Suffolke. Ile see your Grace: till then, I'le follow her
Into the Countrey, and there sleepe till Day.
Yorke. Well, Somerset, thou shalt not scape my Sword:
Vnlesse the Duke doth Murther me in Prison.
Base Dukedome, vnworthy Buckingham.
Buck. Well Somerset, thou shalt not scape my Sword:
Vnlesse the Duke doth Murther me in Prison.
Base Dukedome, vnworthy Buckingham.

Exeunt.

Enter a Troupe of Men to attend the King.

1. Come on my Masters, each man take his Stand,
The King by this is set him downe to sleepe.
2. What say you if he not to be the first
1. Marry, we were sent for to do that Vow
Ne'er to take rest vntill the same be acted,
Therefore stand to't.
2. No more will I, if I may come by my Fellowes.
3. Here comes the Lord Hastings, the Kings chiefest friend.
2. Why is he so more than any other Lord?
3. Because he loues his Pleasures as the King,
Whose Vertues leanes to Peace more than to Warre.
1. Stand close, he comes.
2. Marry, because more dangerous.
Hast. I but one hower more to Worship and Quietnesse,
I cannot tell me what a clocke it is.
It doubtfull Dreames it should not when I sleepe,
Thrice hath Edward bid me waken him.
1. Vnlesse our Halberds do shut vp his passage.
2. Ay, I wonder he is so fond to trust to Ruffians.
Hast. I would they were, that I might die at once,
For this shrewd World growes odious to my Soule.
Men feare the Enuie that vaine Greatnesse breeds,
And I feare none, and yet I feare me much,
Least suddaine Death doth catch me vnprouided.

The Drumme, Colours and Trumpet sounde.

Enter Richard Duke of Yorke, and the King.

Yorke. What is't your Highnesse Pleasure I shall do at my Birth-day?
I think my Lord Clarence shall be married to Warwicke Daughter.
But what's the matter, my Liege, for your Highnesse Cheeke doth coate and beate?
King. Ambitious Yorke did level at my Crowne.
Yorke. Why, my Liege, was I borne to any Crowne?
Were I at Libertie, I would not be
King of Ireland for the Riches of the Stone
Call'd Titan, that wise Poets faine doth ride
About the Gates of Morning and of Day.
Or need your Highnesse Feare the Ambition
Of Poore Plantagenet, who quietly
Seekes but to Serue your Royall Majestie?
King. Thy Wordes are Musicke, but thy Deedes are Gall.
Yorke. Then Heauen forbid my Deedes should be so vile,
Or that my Loue should not as well appeare
As my Obedience, though Enuie barke
Euen at the Heeles of in-most Innocence.
Could Caesar smile, and murther while he smil'd,
Cry Content to that which grieu'd his Heart,
And wet his Cheekes with Artificiall Teares,
As Iason Mirmidon, how iustly he dissembles.
King. Why, what couldst thou do, if I should do thee wrong?
Or any of my Brothers, or my Nobles?
That I may looke vpon thee as a Friend.
Yorke. Why, my Liege, if I should do you wrong,
Heauen shall punish me, and I will suffer it.
King. Then Yorke be still awhile, till Time do serue:
Watch thou, and wake when others be asleepe,
To pry into the secrets of the State,
Till Henry surfeiting in Ioyes of Loue,
With his new Bride, and Englands dear bought Queene,
And Humfrey with his Peeres be falne asleepe,
Shall not thy Wrongs in Heart, but Power speake,
And God forgiue them that so much haue sway'd
Your Princes Weake, and mighty Realme.
Yorke. Now God helpe Humfrey, for I feare me much
He shall not liue long: for I looke he shall

K.Eew. Yea,Brother of Clarence,
Art thou there too?
Nay then I see,that Edward needs must downe.
Yet Warwicke, in despight of all mischance,
Of thee thy selfe,and all thy Complices,
Edward will alwayes beare himselfe as King
Though Fortunes malice ouerthrow my State,
My minde exceedes the compasse of her Wheele.
Warw. Then for his minde, be Edward Englands King,

Takes off his Crowne

But Henry now shall weare the English Crowne,
And be true King indeede, thou but the shadow.
My Lord of Somerset, at my request,
See that forthwith Duke Edward be conuey'd
Vnto my Brother Arch-Bishop of Yorke
When I haue fought with Pembrooke,and his fellowes,
Ile follow you, and tell what answer
Lewis and the Lady Bona send to me.
Now to a-whole farewell good Duke of Yorke.

They leade him out forcibly

K.Ed What Fates impose,that men must needs abide,
It boots not to resist both winde and tide. Exeunt.
Oxf. What now remaines my Lords for vs to do,
But march to London with our Soldiers?
Warw. I,that's the first thing that we haue to do,
To free King Henry from imprisonment,
And see him seated in the Regall Throne. exit.

Enter Riuers,and Lady Gray.

Riu. Madam,what makes you in this sodaine change?
Gray. Why Brother Riuers are you yet to learne
What late mischance is befalne to King Edward?
Riu. What losse of some pitcht battell?
Againe Warwicke?
Gray. No,prettie losse of his owne Royall person.
Riu. Then is my Soueraigne slaine?
Gray. I,almost slaine,for he is taken prisoner,
Either betrayd by falshood of his Guard,
Or by his Foe surpriz'd at vnawares.
And as I further haue to vnderstand
Is new committed to the Bishop of Yorke,
Fell Warwickes Brother, and by that our Foe.
Riu. These Newes I must confesse are full of greefe,
Yet gracious Madam beare it as you may.
Warwicke may loose that now hath wonne the day
Gray. Till then,fayre hope must hinder life decay
And I the rather wean me from dispaire
For loue of Edward Off-spring in my wombe
This is it that makes me bridle passion,
And beare with Mildnesse my misfortunes crosse:
I,I, for this I draw in many a teare,
And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighes,
Least with my sighes or teares, I blast or drowne
King Edwards Fruite, true heyre to th'English Crowne.
Riu. But Madam,
Where is Warwicke then become?
Gray. I am informed that he comes towards London,
To set the Crowne once more on Henries head,
Guesse therefore what it portends what danger may befall to our houses,
If that the Queene should not be well supplied.
Riu. Then speedily conuey vs vnto the Queene,
Before the Prouidence of Warwicke can
Preuent the ill intended purposes:
Our Ships lie nere at hand,we will to Sea.

Enter Richard Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley.

Rich. Now my Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley
Leaue off to wonder why I drew you hither,
Into this chiefest Thicket of the Parke.
Thus stand the case: you know our King my Brother,
Is prisoner to the Bishop here at whose hands
He hath good vsage and great liberty,
And often but attended with weake guard,
Come hunting this way to disport himselfe.
I haue aduertised him by secret meanes,
That if about this houre he make this way,
Vnder the colour of his vsuall game,
He shall see safe gouernance but his Horse and Men,
To fight with Warwicke and his Confederates.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman with him.

Huntsman. This way my Lord,
For this way lies the Game.
King Edw. Nay this way man,
See where the Huntsmen stand.
Now Brother of Glocester, Lord Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close to steale the Bishops Deere?
Rich. Brother,the time and case requireth haste,
Your horse stands ready at the Parke corner.
King Ed. But whether shall we then?
Hast. To Lynne my Lord,
And ship from thence to Flanders.
Rich. Well guest beleeue me for that was my meaning
K.Ed. Stanley I will requite thy forwardnesse.
Rich. But wherefore stay we? 'tis not time to talke
K.Ed. Huntsman, what say'st thou?
Wilt thou go along?
Hunts. Better do so then tarry and be hang'd
Rich. Come then away,lets ha no more adoo.
K.Ed. Bishop farewell,
Shield thee from Warwicks frowne
And pray that I may repossesse the Crowne. exeunt

Flourish. Enter King Henry the 6rt Clarence Warwicke, Somerset, young Henry, Oxford, Montague, and Lieutenant

K.Hen. M.Lieutenant now that God and Friends
Haue shaken Edward from the Regall seate,
And turn'd my captiue state to libertie,
My feare to hope,my sorrowes vnto ioyes,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Lieu. Subiects may challenge nothing of their Soueraigne
But,if an humble prayer may preuaile,
I then craue pardon of your Maiestie.
K.Hen. For what, Lieutenant? For well vsing me?
Nay be thou sure,Ile well requite thy kindnesse.
For that it made my imprisonment,a pleasure
I, such a pleasure as incaged Birds
Conceiue when after many moody Thoughts,
At last, by Notes of Household harmonie,
They quite forget their losse of liberty.

But Warwicke after God thou set the tree,
And chiefly therefore, that I may God and thee,
He was the Author, thou the Instrument,
Therefore to ioyne with him, and conquer all my feare,
Is manly, wise, and thereof doe not bee me,
And that we peepe so farre into the future time,
May not be painfull to the present hower,
Warwicke although my head still weare the Crowne,
I here resigne my Gouernment to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deedes.
Warw. Your Grace hath still been fam'd for vertuous,
And now may seeme as wise as vertuous,
By spying and auoiding Fortunes malice,
For few men rightly temper with the starres:
Yet in this one, pardon me if I blame your Grace,
For choosing me, when Clarence is in place.
Clar. No brother, trust not me for to be King,
To reape the Harueste which that other sowes,
Vnlesse the Plant proue plausible and sweete.
Warw. Oxford, how haps it in this smooth discourse,
You told not how Henry the Sixt hath lost
All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten:
Me thinkes these peeres of France should smile at that.
But for the rest: you tell one halfe the Story.
Oxf. Sir, no man speakes more holy than he needs.
Warw. Tush, that was in his rage: speake it againe.
Oxf. I meane, my Lord, those powers that the Queene
Hath raised in Gallia, haue been ouerthrowne.
Warw. Not those that Somerset hath conducted thither:
Good Oxford, see not thou be brought to bay,
For they will take no ransome, I assure thee,
But offer service for to saue their liues.
Oxf. Nay, it fares well with Somerset and his troupe,
To scape the present danger of the warre:
And it is thought that Lady Margaret
Hath won the King to fauour Somerset:
And like a cunning Politician,
Hath got the Admirall into the Kings grace,
For Somerset his younger brother.
Warw. A good exchange of Men for Gold and Land:
'Tis like enough the Duke of Somerset
Will well requite his friendship with his head.
Oxf. And yet I know not how the Court affects,
For Riuers now begins to bear the sway,
And Woodeuile his sonne is in mine eye
And all the learned Counsell of the Realme,
Admire the wisedome of the Queene.
Warw. The Queene is wise in deede,
But what of that? Her father rules her all.
Oxf. Nay then I see that Edward needs must downe.
Yet Warwicke, in despight of all mishaps,
Of Armies fled, and Friends become our foes,
Hold not the Battell lost, but hope still
Duke Richard will be Victor as he was,
And Warwicke will be left the Matchlesse Peere.
Clar. Whatsoeuer fortune stay in store for me,
I meane to take the part my brother holds.
Warw. I speake resolue, brother you know my mind.
Your part I craue also, but for the rest,
You must your selfe deale for your safetie,
We haue offended both the King and Queene,
And they will seeke to be reuenged on vs both,
Before the flying Armie hath recouered Wales.
Oxf. Then I will take my leaue, for I am bound
To meete Lord Pembroke at the Castle,
And there we will attend your comming.
Warw. Farewell braue Oxford, braue indeed my Friend.
Clar. Farewell sweete Oxford, and braue Gentleman:
Yet am I glad the shame of flight and feare
Growes not in your bookes.
Somer. Be sure you be not stung with the Suspition,
For your departure, in these doubtfull broyles.
Oxf. Farewell faire Lords, and faire Authority
Weake Friendship, and vncertaine Amitie.
Clar. Farewell Oxford, and come againe as soone as you may.
Somer. Farewell Oxford, and come againe as soone as you may.
Warw. Farewell Oxford, and come againe as soone as you may.
Oxf. I leaue you all vncertaine
What fortune I shall make vpon the Seas.
Warw. Nay, let vs leaue the Brothers all to Sorrow,
Who parted last with teares and heauie cheere.
Sweete Oxford, thinke of vs, and speede the best you may.
Dispatch this Priuate Businesse with speede,
And with the Wind turne Sayles and make for France,
And rouze our Lord vnto his present Armes.
Clar. Each houre to vs seemes as a yeare,
Till we be ioyn'd with him that is our Hope.
Warw. Then take your leaue of vs, braue Duke of Clarence,
And beare our Hearts along with you,
And neuer droupe for any ouerthrow,
Till Warwicke call for aide to fetch you home.
Clar. Then Warwicke, thus I take my leaue of thee,
Kissing the Cheeke that I intend to kisse,
Vntill my Lips may make their peace with thine.
Commending this my Friend, my Foe, my All,
Vnto the Guide of Heauen and Earth and Seas,
Our Sea-mans Cynosure, and Load-star both.
Warw. Thus Princes that are knit in Friendships bands,
As if their Liues were tied vnto one Soule,
Must part sometimes for honours sake.
Hoyse vp the Sayle, Master, wind serues well.
Clar. Then once more farewell all my Friends at once.
Warw. Farewell sweete Brother, farewell Warwicke all.
Somer. Farewell braue Peere, and Warwicke glad am I
To see you in this louing Agreement.
Warw. Now sweete Somerset, my trust in thee
Is more than in the Nauie and the Fleete
That waites vpon the Coast of Normandie:
And thus I hope to make our Passage safe,
Our Foes subdued, and our Landing free.
Somer. Yet ere you goe, what shall become of Henry?
Warw. Sweete Somerset, take thou the Queene along,
And bring them both vnto her Highnesse at Angiers.
Clar. What shall become of Henry and his Wife,
I pray thee tell me, Warwicke, ere we goe?
Warw. Henry my Lord is cold in great Affaires,
Too full of foolish pitty, and Queene Margaret
Although her Lookes doe proue her Manly Mind,
Yet Womanish in Iudgement: I conclude,
They are not fit to rule, nor we to haue.
Therefore depart in Briefe, each to his Charge,
Least Aduantage feed vpon our Delayes.
Finally, I commend me vnto Edward our Soueraigne,
And to faire Margaret his Vertuous Wife,
And to their Vertuous Babe Prince Edward too:
Farewell my Lord, good Wind doth serue for me.

Enter a Poste

Warw. What newes, my friend?
Poste That Edward is escaped from your Brother,
And fled as hee heares since) to Burgundie
Warw. Vnlooked for newes. but how made he escape?
Poste. He was conuey'd by Richard, Duke of Gloster,
And the Lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush on the Forrest side,
And from the Bishops Huntsmen rescu'd him
For Hunting was his daily Exercise
Warw. My Brother was too carelesse of his charge.
But let vs hence, my Soueraigne, to prouide
A salue for any sore, that may betide Exeunt

Manet Somerset, Richmond, And Oxford.

Som My Lord, I like not of this flight of Edwards:
For doubtlesse Burgundie will yeeld him helpe,
And we shall haue more Warres before't be long
As Henries late presaging Prophecie
Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond
So doth my heart misgiue me, in these Conflicts,
What may befall him to his harme and ours.
Therefore Lord Oxford to preuent the worst,
Forthwith weele send him hence to Britaine,
Till stormes be past of Ciuill Enmitie
Oxf. I feare it Edward re-possesse the Crowne,
'Twixt that and Richmond watch each where shall downe.
Som It shall be our best shift to flie in time.
Come therefore, let's about it speedily. Exeunt.

Flourish Enter Edward Richard, Hastings, and Souldiers.

Edw Now Brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest,
Yet thus farre Fortune maketh vs amends,
And sayes, that once more I shall enterchange
My waned state, for Henries Regall Crowne.
Well haue we past, and now re-past the Seas,
And brought with vs more helpe from Burgundie,
Than that we left behind vs readie for vs.
What then remaines, we being thus arriu'd
From Ranspurre Hauen before the Gates of Yorke,
But that we enter, as into our Dukedome?
Rich. The Gates made fast?
Brother, I like not this.
For many men that stumble at the Threshold,
Are well fore-told that danger lurkes within.
Edw. Tush man, aboadments must not now affright vs
By fayre or foule meanes we must enter in,
For hither will our friends repaire to vs.
Hast. My Liege, Ile knocke once more, to summon them.

Enter on the Walls, the Maior of Yorke, and his Brethren.

Maior. My Lords,
We were fore-warned of your comming,
And shut the Gates, for safetie of our selues;
For now we owe allegeance vnto Henry
Edw. But, Master Maior if Henry be your King,
Yet Edward at the least, is Duke of Yorke
Maior. True, my good Lord, I know you for no lesse
Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my Dukedome,
As being well content with that alone.

Rich But

Rich. But when the Fox hath once got in his Note,
Hee'le soone finde meanes to make the Body to[o]w.
Hast. Why, Master Maior, why stand you in a doubt?
Open the Gates, we are King Henries friends.
Maior I, say you so? the Gates shall then be opened.
He descends
Rich A wise stout Captaine, and soone perswaded.
Hast The good old man would faine that all were well,
So 'twere not long of him: but being entred,
I doubt not I, but we shall soone perswade
Both him, and all his Brothers, vnto reason.

Enter the Maior and two Aldermen.
Edw. So, Master Maior, these Gates must not be shut,
But in the Night, or in the time of Warre.
What, feare not man, but yeeld me vp the Keyes,
Takes his Keyes
For Edward will defend the Towne and thee,
And all those friends, that deine to follow mee.

March. Enter Mountgomerie, with Drumme and Souldiers.
Rich. Brother, this is Sir Iohn Mountgomerie,
Our trustie friend, vnlesse I be deceiu'd.
Edw. Welcome Sir Iohn: but why come you in Armes?
Mount. To helpe King Edward in his time of storme,
As euery loyall Subiect ought to doe.
Edw. Thankes good Mountgomerie:
But we now forget our Title to the Crowne,
And onely claime our Dukedome,
Till God please to send the rest.
Mount Then fare you well, for I will hence againe,
I came to serue a King, and not a Duke:
Drummer strike vp, and we will march away.
The Drumme begins to march.
Edw Nay stay, Sir Iohn, a while, and wee'le debate
By what safe meanes the Crowne may be recouered.
Mount What talke you of debating? in few words,
If you'le not here proclaime your selfe our King,
Ile leaue you to your fortune, and be gone,
To keepe them backe that come to intercept you.
Warw. Why braue Warrior, wilt thou leaue vs thus?
Mount Who loues the King of Warwicke, and his friends.
Warw. Why then go by our Banner, braue Mountgomerie,
And thanke thy selfe for comming in such time.
Now for this Night, let's harbor in this Towne:
And when the Morning Sunne shall raise his Carre
Aboue the Border of this Horizon,
Wee'le forward towards Warwicke and his Mates;
For well I wot that Henry is no Souldier.
Ah froward Clarence! how euill it beseemes thee,
To flatter Henry, and to forsake thy Brother?
Yet as we may, wee'le meet both thee and thy marriage.
Come on braue Souldiors: doubt not of the Day,
And that once gotten, doubt not of large Pay. Exeunt

Flourish. Enter the King, Warwicke, Mountague, Clarence, Oxford, and Somerset.

War What counsaile, Lords? Edward from Belgia,
With hastie Germanes and blunt Hollanders,
Hath past in safetie through the Narrow Seas,
And with his troopes doth march amaine to London,
And many giddie people flock to him.
King Let's stand in Armes, and boldly beat him backe againe.
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which being suffer'd, Riuers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickshire I haue true hearted friends,
Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in Warre,
Those will I muster vp: and thou Sir Clarence
Shalt stuffe vp in Somersetshire, No lesse assured,
The Knights and Gentlemen, to come with thee.
Thou Brother Mountague, in Buckingham,
Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find
Men well inclin'd to heare what thou command'st.
And thou braue Oxford, wondrous well beloued,
In Oxfordshire shalt muster vp thy friends.
My Soueraigne, with the louing Citizens,
Like to his Island, girt in with the Ocean,
Or modest Dian circled with her Nymphes,
Shall rest in London, till we come to him:
Fare well my Lords: and harke you my Lord:
Fare well my Soueraigne.
King. Farewell my Hector and my Troyes true hope.
Clar. In sooth I thinke it is the right way.
King Well minded Clarence, be thou fortunate.
Mount Comfort, my Lord, and so I take my leaue.
Oxf. And thus I leaue my royall Soueraigne, adieu.
King. Sweet Oxford, and my louing Mountague,
And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, sweet Lords, wee'le meet at Couentry.
Exeunt
King. Here at the Palace will I rest a while.
Cousin Exeter, what thinkes your Lordship?
Me thinkes, the Powers that Edward hath in field,
Should not be able to encounter mine.
Exet. The doubt is, that he will seeme to flie.
King That's not my feare, my meed hath got me fame:
I haue not stopt mine eares to their demands,
Nor posted off their suites with slow delayes,
My pittie hath beene balme to their offences,
My mildnesse hath allay'd their swelling griefes,
My mercie dry'd their water-flowing teares.
I haue not been desirous of their wealth,
Nor much oppressed them with great Subsidies,
Nor forward of reuenge, though they much erred.
Then why should they loue Edward more than me?
No Exeter, these Graces challenge Grace:

And with the Lyon staines vpon the Lambe,
The Lambe will never cease to follow him.
Shout within, A Lancaster, A Lancaster.

Exet. Hearke, hearke, my Lord, what Shouts are these?

Enter Edward and his Souldiers.

Edw. Seize on the Shamelesse Henry, beare him hence,
And once againe proclaime vs King of England.
You are the fount that makes small Brookes to flow,
Now stops thy Spring, my Sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebbe.
Hence with him to the Tower, let him not speake.
Exeunt with King Henry.
And Lords towards Couentry bend we our course,
Where peremptorie Warwicke now remaines.
The Sunne shines hot, and if we vse delay
Cold biting Winter marres our hop'd-for Hay.
Rich. Away betimes before his forces ioyne,
And take the great-growne Traytor vnawares:
Braue Warriors, march amaine towards Couentry.
Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke, the Maior of Couentry, two Messengers, and others vpon the Walles.

War. Where is the Post that came from valiant Oxford?
How farre hence is your Lord, mine honest fellow?
Mes. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.
War. How farre off is our Brother Montague?
Where is the Post that came from Montague?
Mes. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troope.
Enter Somerset.
War. Say Somerset, what sayes my louing Sonne?
And by thy guesse how nigh is Clarence now?
Som. At Southam I did leaue him with his forces,
And doe expect him here some two howres hence
(Sound Drum.) Then Clarence is at hand, I heare his Drumme.
Som. It is not his my Lord, for here he comes.
Here comes my Lord of Somerset with his Powers,
And now his March is ended at the least.
War. I wish your Grace had taken Southam with you.
Why haue you lingred thus by Warwicke gate.

War. Thou art no Archer to command a Knight
And wanting, Warwicke takes his gift againe,
And Henry is my King, Warwicke his Subiect.
Edw. But Warwicke's King is Edward Prisoner
And gallant Warwicke doe but answer this,
What is the Body when the Head is off?
Rich. Alas that Warwicke had no more fore-cast,
But whiles he thought to steale the single Ten,
The King was slily finger'd from the Deck.
You left poore Henry at the Bishops Palace,
And ten to one you'll meet him in the Tower.
Edw. 'Tis even so, yet you are Warwicke still.
Rich. Come Warwicke,
Take the time, kneele downe, kneele downe.
Nay when? strike now, or else the Iron cools.
War. I had rather chop this Hand off at a blow,
And with the other fling it at thy face,
Then bear so low a sayle, to strike to thee.
Edw. Sayle how thou canst,
Haue Wind and Tide thy friend,
This Hand, fast wound about thy coale-black hayre,
Shall whilst thy Head is warme, and new cut off,
Write in the dust this Sentence with thy blood,
Wind-changing Warwicke now can change no more.

Enter Oxford with Drumme and Colours.

War. O cheerefull Colours, see where Oxford comes.
Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster.
Rich. The Gates are open, let vs enter too.
Edw. So other foes may set vpon our backs.
Stand we in good array, for they no doubt
Will issue out againe, and bid vs battaile;
If not, we'll in them, else no safetie vs.
We each one where to the Traitors in the same.
War. O welcome Oxford, for we want thy helpe.

Enter Montague, with Drumme and Colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster.
Rich. Now am I sure my Brother hath in hand this Treason
Euen with the deare blood of your bodies heare.
Edw. The harder match'd, the greater Victorie,
My mind presageth happy gaine, and Conquest.

Enter Somerset, with Drumme and Colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset for Lancaster.
Rich. Two of thy Name, both Dukes of Somerset,
Haue sold their Liues vnto the House of Yorke,
And thou that art the third, it this Sword hold.

Enter Clarence with Drumme and Colours.

War. And lo where George of Clarence sweepes along,
Of force enough to bid his Brother Battaile.
With whom an vpright zeale to right prefers
More than the nearenesse of a Brothers Loue.
Come Clarence, come thou wilt if Warwicke call.
Clar. Father of Warwicke know you what this meanes?
Looke here I throw my infamie at thee:
I will not ruinate my Fathers House,
Who gaue his blood to lyme the stones together,
And set vp Lancaster. Why trowest thou Warwicke,
That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, vnnatural,
To bend the fatall Instruments of Warre

Against

Against his Brother, and his lawfull King
Perhaps thou wilt obiect my holy Oath:
To keepe that Oath, were more impietie,
Then Iephah, when he sacrific'd his Daughter.
I am so sorry for my Trespas made,
That to deserue well at my Brothers hands,
I here proclayme my selfe key mortall foe.
With resolution, wheresoere I meet thee,
(As I will meet thee, if thou stirre abroad)
To plague thee, for thy foule mis-leading me.
And to, proud-hearted Warwicke I defie thee,
And to my Brother turne my blushing Cheekes.
Pardon me Edward, I will make amends:
And Richard, doe not frowne vpon my faults,
For I will henceforth be no more vnconstant.
Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belou'd,
Then if thou neuer hadst deseru'd our hate.
Rich. Welcome good Clarence, this is Brother-like.
Warw. O passing Traytor, periur'd and vniust.
Edw. What Warwicke,
Wilt thou leaue the Towne, and fight?
Or shall we beat the Stones about your Ears?
Warw. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence:
I will away towards Barnet presently,
And bid thee Battaile Edward, if thou dar'st.
Edw. Yes Warwicke, Edward dares, and leads the way.
Lords to the field: Saint George and Victorie. Exeunt.

March. Warwicke and his company follower.

Alarum, and Excursions. Enter Edward bringing forth Warwicke wounded.

Edw. So, lye thou there: die thou, and die our feare,
For Warwicke was a Bugge that fear'd vs all.
Now Mountague sit fast, I seeke for thee,
That Warwickes Bones may keepe thine company.
Exit.

Warw. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend, or foe,
And tell me who is Victor, Yorke or Warwicke?
Why aske I that? my mangled body shewes,
My blood, my want of strength, my sicke heart shewes,
That I must yeeld my body to the Earth,
And by my fall, the conquest to my foe.
Thus yeelds the Cedar to the Axes edge,
Whose Armes gaue shelter to the Princely Eagle,
Vnder whose shade the ramping Lyon slept.
Whose top-branch ouer-peer'd Ioues spreading Tree,
And kept low Shrubs from Winters powrefull Wrath.
These Eyes, that now are dim'd with Deaths black Veyle,
Haue been as piercing as the Mid-day Sunne,
To search the secret Treasons of the World:
The Wrinckles in my Browes now fill'd with blood,
Were liken'd oft to Kingly Sepulchers:
For who liu'd King, but I could dig his Grauie?
And who durst smile, when Warwicke bent his Brow?
Loe, now my Glory smear'd in dust and blood.
My Parkes, my Walkes, my Manors that I had,
Euen now forsake me; and of all my Lands,
Is nothing left me, but my bodies length.
Why, what is Pompe, Rule, Reigne, but Earth and Dust?
And liue we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.

Som. Ah Warwicke, Warwicke, wert thou as we are,
We might recouer all our Loss againe:
The Queene from France hath brought a puissant power,
Euen now we heard the newes: ah couldst thou fly.
Warw. Why then I would not fly. Ah Mountague,
If thou be there, sweet Brother, take my hand,
And with thy Lippes keepe in my Soule a while.
Thou art a Traitor: off with his head, Somerset,
Thy teares would wash this cold congealed blood,
That glues my Lippes, and will not let me speake.
Come quickly Mountague or I am dead.
Som. Ah Warwicke, Mountague hath breath'd his last,
And to the latest gaspe, cry'd out for Warwicke,
And charg'd me to commend me to my valiant Brother.
And more he would haue said, and more he spoke,
Which sounded like a Cannon in a Vault,
That mought not be distinguished: but at last
I well might heare deliuered with a groane,
Oh farewell Warwicke.
Warw. Sweet rest his Soule.
Flye Lords, and saue your selues,
For Warwicke bids you all farewell, to meet in Heauen.
Oxf. Away, away, to meet the Queenes great power.
Here they beare away his Body. Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph, with Richard, Clarence, and the rest.

King. Thus farre our fortune keepes an happy progresse,
And we are grac'd with wreathes of Victorie.
How many stand for this braue-Barons Day,
Say Montague, whose pleasant-streaming Crowne,
That neuer couldst see wrinckled Melancholy,
Ere set'st attaine the sacred Wealthy Bed
I meane, my Lords, those powers that the Queene
Hath rays'd in Gallia, haue arriued our Coast,
And as we came, marcht with such speed,
Clar. A little gale will soone disperse that Cloud,
And blow it to the Source from whence it came,
Thy very Beames will dry those Vapours vp,
For euer, Sunne-beames not a Storme.
King. The Queene was valiant, but not valiant, strong,
And Somerset and Oxford (so it seemes)
Haue fled her Hope, as we their Fortune haue,
But what is now to rest vs, but to fight?
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. A little gale will soone disperse that Cloud,
And blow it to the Source from whence it came,
Thy very Beames will dry those Vapours vp,
For euer, Sunne-beames not a Storme.
King. The Queene was valiant, but not valiant, strong,
And Somerset and Oxford (so it seemes)
Haue fled her Hope, as we their Fortune haue,
But what is now to rest vs, but to fight?
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. The Queene with all the Northern Earles and Lords,
Intend here after to incounter you with their powers,
Hasting this way.
King. We are incountred by our louing friends,
That they doe hold their course toward Tewksbury
We hauing now the best at Barnet field,
Will cheere her Traine, and we will follow them.
And as we march, our strength will be augmented:
In euery County as we go along.
Strike vp the Drumme, cry courage, and away. Exeunt.

Flourish. March. Enter the Queene, young Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Souldiers.

Qu. Great Lords, wise men ne'r sit and waile their losse,
But cheerely seeke how to redresse their harmes.
What though the Mast be now blowne ouer-board,
The Cable broke, the holding-Anchor lost,
And halfe our Saylors swallowed in the flood?
Yet liues our Pilot still. Is't meet that he Should leaue the Helme, and like a fearefull Lad,
With tearefull Eyes adde Water to the Sea,
And giue more strength to that which hath too much,
Whiles in his moane the Ship splits on the Rocke,
Which Industrie and Courage might haue sau'd?
Ah what a shame! ah what a fault were this.
Say Warwicke was our Anchor, what of that?

And Mountague our Top-Mast: what of him?
Weigh Anchor, and hale thence, or else we sinke.
Now Friends, or Foes, and Enemies alike:
And Somerset, and other gentle Mates,
Treasons, Ensnaring Tempests, and Mishaps?
And though we had fortune on our side,
For once allow'd our Edicts and our Lawes?
We will not now be troubled with Complaints,
But keepe our Course (though the rough Winde say no)
From Shelves and Rocks that threaten vs with Wrack.
As good to chide the Waues, as speake them faire.
And what is Countries, Subiects, Friends, but Waues?
Smile in mans face? smile in his hand? smile in his purse?
Smile, and murder while he smiles?
And Teares, to moysten Graues, but drops of Rayne?
And Wrongs, whose Edges are hidden in soft Words?
Who but a Maiden Mate, that meanes to liue?
Then Rancour will I beare within my Heart,
Be it neuer so deepe hid, that men perceiue it not.
Yet this I speake (my Lords) to let you vnderstand,
If Caesar fled, that fled for Feare of me,
That there's no hope, by flying Mercy will be shot at,
More than we will for Pitty Wales will Sands and Rocks.
Why then I would not flye, what can be auoyded,
Were it but Weakenesse to lament, or feare.
Prince. Me thinkes a Woman of this valiant Spirit,
Should (if a Coward heard her speake these words)
Infuse his Breast with Magnanimitie,
And make him, naked, foyle a Man at Armes.
I speake not this, as doubting any here:
For did I but suspect a fearefull man,
He should haue leaue to goe away betimes,
Least in our need he might infect another,
And make him of the like Spirit himselfe.
If any such be here, as God forbid,
Let him depart, before we need his helpe.
Oxf. Women and Children of so high a courage,
And Warriors faint? why 'twere perpetuall shame.
Oh brother, thrice worthy Duke of Somerset,
Is Westward Ho, there am I will'd to runne a Horse,
Vp to the Rough and rugged Welsh, I'le goe.
Som. And for my life, euen this day I hope,
To bid them welcome, that shall make vs merry.
Qu. I thanke gentle Somerset, sweet Oxford, and thanke.
Prince. And take his thankes, that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Prepare you Lords, for Edward is at hand,
Ready to fight: therefore be resolute.
Oxf. I thought no lesse: it is his Policie,
To haste thus fast, to finde vs vnprouided.
Som. But hee's deceiu'd, we are in readinesse.
Qu. This cheares my heart, to see your forwardnesse.
Oxf. Here pitch our Battaile, hence we will not budge.

Flourish and march. Enter Edward, Richard, Clarence, and Souldiers.

Edw. Braue followers, yonder stands the thornie Wood,
Which by the Heauens assistance, and your strength,
Must by the Roots be hewne vp yet ere Night.
I need not add more fuell to your fire,
For well I wot, ye blaze, to burne them out:
Giue signall to the fight, and to it Lords.

Qu. Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, what I should say,
My teares gaine-say: for euery word I speake,
Ye see I drinke the water of my eye.
Therefore no more but this: Henry your Soueraigne
Is Prisoner to the Foe, his State vsurpt,
His Realme a slaughter-house, his Subiects slaine,
His Statutes cancell'd, and his Treasure spent:
And yonder is the Wolfe, that makes this spoyle.
You fight in Iustice: then in Gods Name, Lords,
Be valiant, and giue signall to the fight.

Alarum, Retreat, Excursions. Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter Edward, Richard, Queene, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset.

Edw. Now here a period of tumultuous Broyles.
Away with Oxford to Hames Castle straight:
For Somerset, off with his guiltie Head.
Goe beare them hence, I will not heare them speake.
Oxf. For my part, Ile not trouble thee with words.
Som. Nor I, but stoope with patience to my fortune.

Exeunt

Qu. So part we sadly in this troublous World,
To meet with ioy in sweet Jerusalem.
Edw. Is Proclamation made, That who finds Edward,
Shall haue a high Reward, and he his Life?
Rich. It is, and loe where you shall Edward comes.

Enter the Prince.

Edw. Bring forth the Gallant, let vs heare him speake.
What can so young a Thorne begin to prick?
Edward, what satisfaction can'st thou make,
For bearing Armes, for stirring vp my Subiects,
And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?
Prince. Speake like a Subiect, proud ambitious Yorke.
Suppose that I am now my Fathers Mate,
Resembling Glory, and where I stand kneele thou,
Whilst I propose the selfe same words to thee,
Which traytor thou would'st haue me answer to.
Qu. Ah that thy Father had been so resolu'd.
Rich. That you might still haue worne the Petticoat,
And ne're haue stolne the Breech from Lancaster.
Prince. Let Aspe leaues tell a Writers Night,
His Coward Lims not within this place.
Rich. By Heauen, Brat, Ile plague ye for that word.
Qu. I thou wilt proue to be a plague to men.
Rich. For Gods sake take away this Captiue Scold.
Prince. Nay, take away this scolding Crooke-backe, rather.
Edw. Peace wilfull Boy or I will charme your tongue.
Clar. Vntutor'd Lad, thou art too malapert.
Prince. I know my duty: you are all vndutiful:
Lasciuious Edward, and thou periur'd George,
And thou mis-shapen Dicke I tell ye all,
I am your better, Traytors as ye are,
And thou vsurp'st my Fathers right and mine.
Edw. Take that, the likenesse of this Rayler here.

stabs him.

Rich. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agonie.

Rich stabs him.

Clar. And there's for twitting me with periurie.

Clar stabs him.

Qu. Oh, kill me too.
Rich. Marry and shall.

Offers to kill her.

Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we haue done too much.
Rich. Why

Rich. Why should thee live, to fill the World with words.

Edw. What? doth thee swowne? vse meanes for her recouerie.

Rich. Clarence excuse me to the King my Brother
Ile hence to London on a serious matter,
I ere ye come there, be sure to heare some newes.

Cla. What what?

Rich. Tower, the Tower. Exit

Qu. Oh Ned sweet Ned speake to thy Mother Boy.
Can'st thou not speake? O Traitors, Murtherers!
They that stabb'd Cæsar, shed no blood at all,
Did not offend, nor were not worthy Blame,
If this foule deed were by, to equall it.
He was a Man; this (in respect) a Childe,
And Men, ne're spend their fury on a Childe.
What's worse then Murtherer, that I may name it?
No, no, my heart will burst, and if I speake,
And I will speake, that so my heart may burst.
Butchers and Villaines, bloody Cannibales
How sweet a Plant haue you vntimely crept:
You haue no children (Butchers) if you had,
The thought of them would haue stirr'd vp remorse,
But if you euer chance to haue a Childe,
Looke in his youth to haue him so cut off
As deathsmen you haue rid this sweet young Prince.

King. Away with her, go beare her hence perforce.

Qu. Nay, neuer beare me hence, dispatch me heere:
Here sheath thy Sword, Ile pardon thee my death.
What? wilt thou not? Then Clarence do it thou.

Cla. By Heauen, I will not (do it) for a Realme.

Qu. Good Clarence do: sweet Clarence do thou do it.

Cla. Did'st thou not heare me sweare I would not do it?

Qu. I, but thou vsest to forsweare thy selfe.
'Twas Sin before, but now 'tis Charity.
What wilt not? Where is that diuels butcher Richard?
Hard fauour'd Richard? Richard where art thou?
Thou art not here: Murther is thy Almes-deed,
Petitioners for Blood, thou ne're put'st backe.

Ed. Away I say, I charge ye beare her hence.

Qu. So come to you, and yours, as to this Prince. Exit Queene

Ed. Where's Richard gone.

Cla. To London all in post, and as I guesse,
To make a bloody Supper in the Tower.

Ed. He's sodaine if a thing comes in his head.
Now march we hence, discharge the common sort
With Pay and Thankes, and let's away to London,
And see our gentle Queene how well shee fares,
By this (I hope) she hath a Sonne for me. Exit.

Enter Henry the Sixt, and Richard, with the Lieutenant on the Walles

Rich. Good day, my Lord, what at your Booke so hard?

Hen. I my good Lord: my Lord I should say rather,
'Tis sinne to flatter. Good was little better:
Good Gosler and good Deuill, were alike,
And both preposterous: therefore not Good Lord.

Rich. Sirra leaue vs to our selues, we must conferre.

Hen. So flies the reuerkelesse shepherd from the Wolfe
So first the harmelesse sheepe doth yeeld his Fleece,
And next his Throate, vnto the Butchers Knife.
What Scene of death hath Roscius now to Acte?

Rich. Suspition alwayes haunts the guilty minde,
The Theefe doth feare each bush an Officer.

Hen. The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth euery bush,
And I the hapelesse Male to one sweet bird,
Haue now the fatall Obiect in my eye,
Where my poore young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.

Rich. Why what a peeuish foole was that of Creet,
That taught his Sonne the office of a fowle,
And yet for all his wings, the Foole was drowned.

Hen. I Dedalus, my poore Boy Icarus
Thy Father Minos, that denide our course,
The Sunne that season'd the Waxe of my sweet Boy
Thy Brother Phaeton, and all the Sea
Which claim'd your Fathers Wanton vp to the Ayre,
Are arm'd and ready (my Weapons, no more weapons)
My breast can better brooke thy Daggers point,
Then can my eares that Tragicke History.
But wherefore dost thou come? Is't for my Life?

Rich. Think'st thou I am an Executioner?

Hen. A Persecutor I am sure thou art
If murthering Innocents be Executing,
Why then thou art an Executioner.

Rich. Thy Son I kill'd for his presumption.

Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd when first thou didst presume,
Thou had'st not liu'd to kill a Son of mine.
And thus I prophesie, that many a thousand,
Which now mistrust no parcell of my feare,
And many an Oke that feeles the wanton Ayre,
And many a Cub hanging the gossip eye,
Men for their Sonnes, Wiues for their Husbands,
Orphans, for their Parents timelesse death,
Shall rue the hower that euer thou was't borne.
The Owle shriek'd at thy birth, an euill signe,
The Night Crow cry'de, aboding luckelesse time,
Dogs howl'd and hideous Tempest shooke down Trees
The Rauen rook'd her on the Chymnies top,
And chattering Pies in dismall Discords sung.
Thy Mother felt more then a Mothers paine,
And yet brought forth lesse then a Mothers hope,
To wit, an vndigested and deformed Lumpe,
Not like the fruit of such a goodly Tree.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head, when thou was't borne,
To signifie, thou cam'st to bite the world:
And if the rest be true which I haue heard,
Thou cam'st——

Rich. Ile heare no more:
Die Prophet in thy speech, Stabbes him.
For this amongst the rest, was I ordain'd.

Hen. I, and for much more slaughter after this,
O God forgiue my sinnes, and pardon thee. Dies

Rich. What? will the aspiring blood of Lancaster
Sinke in the ground? I thought it would haue mounted.
See how my sword weepes for the poore Kings death.
O may such purple teares be alway shed
From those that wish the downe fall of our house.
If any sparke of life be yet remaining,
Downe, downe to hell, and say I sent thee thither.
Stabs him again.
I that haue neyther pitty, loue nor feare,
Indeed 'tis true that Henry told me of
For I haue often heard my Mother say,
I came into the world with my Legges forward.
Had I not reason (thinke ye) to make haste,
And seeke their Ruine, that vsurp'd our Right?
The Midwife wonder'd, and the Women cride
O Iesus blesse vs, he is borne with teeth,

And

And so 'twas writ by pleasy Scribes,
That I should curse, and blesse, and play the dogge
Then am I peaceable, I make flap'd my head so,
Let me but make crook'd my Minde to answer it
I have no brother, I am like no Brother
And this word Love, which Gray-beards call Divine,
Be resident, amongst these one another,
Vnnaturall Lamentable hollow sterne.
Clarence beware, thou keepst me from the Light,
But I will sort a pitchy day for thee
For I will buzze abroad such Prophecies,
That Edward shall be fearefull of his life,
And to purge his feare, Ile be the death
King Henry, and his Princely Sonne are gone,
Clarence thy turne is next, and then the rest,
Counting my selfe but bad, till I be best
I'le throw thy body in another roome,
And Triumph Henry, in the day of Doome. Exit

Flourish, &c. Enter King, Queene, Clarence, Richard, Hastings Nurse, and Attendants.

King. Once more we sit in England's Royall Throne,
Re-purchas'd with the blood of Enemies
What valiant Foemen like to Autumnes Corne,
Have we mow'd downe in tops of all our pride?
Three Dukes of Somerset, threefold Renowne,
For hardy and vndoubted Champions:
Two Cliffords, as the Father and the Sonne,
And two Northumberlands, two braver men,
Ne're spurr'd their Coursers at the Trumpets sound
With them, the two braue Beares, Warwick & Montague,
That in their Chaines fetter'd the kingly Lyon,
And made the Forrest tremble when they roar'd.
Thus have we swept Suspition from our Seate,
And made our Foot-Stoole of Security.
Come hither Bess, and set me kisse my Boy.
Yong Ned, for thee, thine Vncles, and my selfe,
Have in our Armors watcht the Winters night,
Went all afoote in Summers scalding heate,
That thou might'st repossesse the Crowne in peace,
And of our Labours thou shalt reape the gaine.
Rich. Ile blast his Harvest, if your head were laid,
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thicke, to heave,
And heave it shall some waight, or breake my backe,
Worke thou the way, and that shalt execute.
King. Clarence and Gloster, love my lovely Queene,
And kisse your Princely Nephew Brothers both.
Clar. The duty that I owe vnto your Majesty,
I seale vpon the lips of this sweet Babe.
Clar. I thanke Noble Clarence, worthy brother thanks
Rich. And that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st
Witnesse the louing kisse I give the Fruite,
To say the truth, so Iudas kist his master,
And cried all hayle, when as he meant all harme
King. Now am I seated as my soule delights,
Having my Country peace, and Brothers loues.
Clar. What will your Grace have done with Margaret
Reynard her Father, to the King of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Ierusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ransome
King. Away with her, and waft her hence to France:
And now what rests but that we spend the time
With stately Triumphes, mirthfull Comicke shewes,
Such as befits the pleasure of the Court.
Sound Drums and Trumpets, farewell sowre annoy,
For here I hope begins our lasting joy. Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

The Tragedy of Richard the Third:
with the Landing of Earle Richmond, and the Battell at Bosworth Field.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloster solus.

NOw is the Winter of our Discontent,
Made glorious Summer by this Sun of Yorke:
And all the clouds that lowr'd vpon our house
In the deepe bosome of the Ocean buried.
Now are our browes bound with Victorious Wreathes,
Our bruised armes hung vp for Monuments,
Our sterne Alarums chang'd to merry Meetings;
Our dreadfull Marches, to delightfull Measures.
Grim-visag'd Warre, hath smoothd his wrinkled Front
And now, in stead of mounting Barbed Steeds,
To fright the Soules of fearfull Adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a Ladies Chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a Lute
But I, that am not shap'd for sportive trickes,
Nor made to court an amorous Looking-glasse:
I, that am rudely stampt, and want loves Maiesty,
To strut before a wonton ambling Nymph:
I, that am curtail'd of this faire Proportion,
Cheated of Feature by dissembling Nature,
Deform'd, vnfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing World, scarce halfe made vp,
And that so lamely and vnfashionable,
That dogges barke at me, as I halt by them.
Why I, in this weake piping time of Peace,
Have no delight to passe away the time,
Vnlesse to see my Shadow in the Sunne,
And descant on mine owne Deformity:
And therefore, since I cannot prove a Lover,
To entertaine these faire well-spoken dayes,
I am determined to prove a Villaine,
And hate the idle pleasures of these dayes.
Plots have I laide, Inductions dangerous,
By drunken Prophesies, Libels, and Dreames,
To set my Brother Clarence and the King
In deadly hate, the one against the other:
And if King Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd vp:
About a Prophesie, which sayes that G
Of Edwards heires the murtherer shall be.
Dive thoughts downe to my soule: here Clarence comes.

Enter Clarence and Brakenbury guarded.

Brother, good day: what meanes this armed Guard

That waites vpon your Grace?
Cla. His Maiestie tendring my persons safety,
Hath appointed this Conduct, to conuey me to th'Tower
Rich. Vpon what cause?
Cla. Because my name is George
Rich. Alacke my Lord, that fault is none of yours
He should for that commit your Godfathers
O belike, his Maiesty hath some intent
That you should be new Christned in the Tower,
But what's the matter Clarence, may I know?
Cla. Yea Richard when I know, but I protest
As yet I do not: But as I can learne,
He harkens after Prophesies and Dreames,
And from the Crosse-row plucks the letter G.
And sayes, a Wizard told him, that by G,
His issue disinherited should be.
And for my name of George begins with G,
It followes in his thought, that I am he.
These (as I learne) and such like toyes as these,
Hath moou'd his Highnesse to commit me now.
Rich. Why this it is, when men are ruled by Women:
'Tis not the King that sends you to the Tower,
My Lady Grey his Wife, Clarence 'tis she,
That tempts him to this harsh extremity.
Was it not she, and that good man of Worth,
Anthony Woodeuile our Brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower?
From whence this present day he is deliuered?
We are not safe, Clarence, we are not safe.
Cla. By heauen, I think there is no man secure
But the Queenes Kindred and night-walking Heraulds,
That trudge betwixt the King, and Mistris Shore.
Heard you not what an humble suppliant
Lord Hastings was, for her deliuery?
Rich. Humbly complaining to her Deitie,
Got my Lord Chamberlaine his liberty.
I'le tell you what, I think it is our way,
If we will keepe in fauour with the King,
To be her men, and wear her Liuery.
The iealous o're-worne Widow and her selfe,
Since that our Brother dub'd them Gentlewomen,
Are mighty Gossips in our Monarchy.
Bra. I beseech your Graces both to pardon me,
His Maiestie hath straightly giuen in charge,
That no man shall haue priuate conference
(Of what degree soeuer) with your Brother.

Rich.

Enter Keeper, with a prayer booke.

Brak. Keeper, a prayer booke.
Kee. You must excuse me, Lord, my time is done.
Brak. Farewell good man, I pray God I may.
Kee. Now Lord, what wouldst thou?
Brak. Where is thy Lord, and his Noble Queene?
Kee. In the Tower, where you may not come.
Brak. Why, this it is, when men are ruled by Women.
'Tis not the King that sends for me to die,
But Edwards soft and pitifull Wife,
And all the Ovens her kindred are made gentle folkes.
Have at you now, say you are sent for this?
Kee. Why, my Lord, I hope I have not brought it to do.
Brak. Naught to do with Mistris Shore?
I tell thee Keeper, I have done nothing yet with her
Kee. Why, what one, my Lord?
Brak. Her Husband knaue: wouldst thou betray me?
Kee. I do beseech your Grace
To pardon me, and withall to beare
Your Commandement with the Noble Duke.
Brak. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey
Kee. We are the Queenes abiects, and must obey
Brother farewell, I will vnto the King,
And whatsoeuer you will employ me in,
Were it to call King Edwards Widdow, Sister,
I will perform it to enfranchise you.
Meane time, this deepe disgrace in Brotherhood,
Touches me deepely, you can imagine.
Brak. I know it pleaseth neither of vs well.
Kee. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long,
I will deliuer you, or else lye for you
Meane time, haue patience.
Brak. I must perforce, Farewell. Exit Cat.
Keep. Go tread the path to thy eternall home.
That I with shortly send my Soule to Heauen,
For euer we shake the preface at our hands.
But who comes heere? the new deliuered Hastings?

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day vnto my gracious Lord.
Brak. As much vnto my good Lord Chamberlaine.
Well are you welcome to this open Aire,
How hath your Lordship brook'd imprisonment?
Hast. With patience Noble Lord, as prisoners must.
But I shall liue (my Lord) to giue them thankes
That were the cause of my imprisonment.
Brak. No doubt, no doubt, and so shall Clarence too,
For they that were your Enemies are his,
And haue preuail'd as much on him, as you.
Hast. More pitty that the Eagles should be mew'd,
Whilst Kites and Buzzards play at liberty.
Brak. What news abroad?
Hast. No newer, and worse, than heere at home.
The King is sickly, weake, and melancholy,
And his Physicians fearefull of his life.
Brak. Now by Saint Paul that newes is bad indeed.
O he hath kept an euill diet long,
And ouer-much consum'd his Royall Person
'Tis very grieuous to be thought vpon.
Where is he, in his bed?
Hast. He is.
Brak. Go you before, and I will follow you.
Exit Hastings.
He cannot liue I hope, and must not die,
Till George be pack'd with post-horse vp to Heauen.
He also vrgeth his hatred more to Clarence,
With Eyes well season'd with wise Arguments,
And if I haue set my deepe meaning,
Concerne him in an other way to me
What done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leaue the world for me to burne in.
For then I'le marry Warwickes youngest daughter.
What though I kill'd her Husband, and her Father,
The readiest way to make the Wench amends,
Is to become her Husband, and her Father:
The which will I not all so much for loue,
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her, which I must reach vnto:
But yet I run before my horse to Market
Clarence still breathes, Edward still liues and raignes,
When they are gone, then must I count my gaines. Exit

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Corse of Henrie the sixt with Halberds to guard it, Lady Anne being the Mourner.

Anne. Set downe, set downe your honourable load,
If Honour may be shrowded in a Herse,
Whilst I a while obsequiously lament
Th'vntimely fall of vertuous Lancaster.
Poore key-cold figure of a holy King,
Pale Ashes of the House of Lancaster,
Thou bloodlesse remnant of that Royall Blood,
Be it lawfull that I inuocate thy Ghost,
To heare the lamentations of poore Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughtred Sonne,
Stab'd by the selfe-same hand that made these wounds.
Loe in these windowes that let forth thy life,
I powre the helpelesse balme of my poore eyes.
O curst be the hands that made these holes:
Curst the Heart, that had the heart to do it:
Curst the blood that let this blood from hence.
More direfull hap betide that hated Wretch
That makes vs wretched by the death of thee,
Than I can wish to Wolues, to Spiders, Toades,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that liues.
If euer he haue Wife, let her be made
More miserable by the death of him,
Than I am made by my young Lord, and thee.
Come now towards Chertsey with your holy Lode,
Taken from Paules, to be interred there
And still as you are weary of this waight,
Rest you, whiles I lament King Henries Coarse

Enter Richard Duke of Glocester.

Rich. Stay you that beare the Coarse, & set it down.
An. What black Magician coniures vp this Fiend,
To stop deuoted charitable deeds?
Rich. Villaines set down the Coarse or by S. Paul,
Ile make a Coarse of him that disobeyes.

Gen.

Gen. My Lord stand backe, and let the Coffin passe
Rich. Vnmannerd Dogge,
Stand'st thou when I command:
Advance thy Halbert higher than my brest,
Or by S. Paul I'le strike thee to my foote,
And packe thee vp thou Beggar for thy boldnesse
Anne. What do you tremble? are you all afraid?
Alas, I blame you not, for you are Mortall,
And Mortall eyes cannot endure the Deuill.
Auant thou dreadfull minister of Hell,
Thou hadst but power ouer his Mortall body,
His Soule thou canst not haue: Therefore be gone.
Rich. Sweet Saint, for Charity, be not so curst.
An. Foule Deuil,
For Gods sake hence, and trouble vs not,
For thou hast made the happy earth thy Hell
Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deepe exclaimes
If thou delight to view thy heynous deeds,
Behold this patterne of thy Butcheries
Oh Gentlemen, see, see dead Henries wounds,
Open their congeal'd mouthes, and bleed afresh.
Blush blush thou lumpe of foule Deformitie
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty Veines where no blood dwels.
Thy Deeds inhumane and vnnaturall,
Prouokes this Deluge most vnnatural.
O God: which this blood mad'st, reuenge his death.
O Earth: which this blood dr'nk'st, reuenge his death.
Either Heau'n with Lightning strike the murth'rer dead
Or Earth gape open wide, and eate him quicke,
As thou dost swallow vp this good Kings blood,
Which his Hell-gouerned Arme hath butchered.
Rich. Lady, you know no Rules of Charity,
Which render good for bad, blessings for curses
An. Villaine, thou know'st no Law of God nor Man,
No beast so fierce, but knowes some touch of pitie.
Rich. But I know none, and therefore am no Beast.
An. O wonderfull, when diuels tell the truth
Rich. More wonderfull, when Angels are so angry
Vouchsafe (diuine perfection of a Woman)
Of these supposed Crimes, to giue me leaue
By circumstance, but to acquit my selfe.
An. Vouchsafe (diffus'd infection of man)
Of these known euils, but to giue me leaue
By circumstance to curse thy cursed selfe.
Rich. Fairer then tongue can name thee, let me haue
Some patient leysure to excuse my selfe.
An. Fouler then heart can think thee,
Thou canst make no excuse current,
But to hang thy selfe.
Rich. By such despaire, I should accuse my selfe
An. And by despairing shalt thou stand excused,
For doing worthy vengeance on thy selfe,
Which didst vnworthy slaughter vpon others
Rich. Say that I slew them not.
An. Then say they were not slaine
But dead they are, and diuelish slaue by thee
Rich. I did not kill your Husband.
An. Why then he is aliue.
Rich. Nay, he is dead and slaine by Edwards hands.
An. In thy foule throat thou ly'st,
Queene Margaret saw
Thy murd'rous Falchion smoking in his blood
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,
But that my heart'es beare a quicker eye
Rich. I was prouoked by her slanderous tongue,
That laid their guilt vpon my guiltlesse shoulders.
An. Thou was prouoked by thy bloody mind,
That neu'r dreamt on ought but Butcheries:
Didst breake the rest before thou went'st to it,
Thy selfe hadst murthered ere thou kill'dst my Husband.
Rich. I grant it.
An. Dost grant me Hedgehog? Then God grant me too
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deede,
O he was gentle, mild, and vertuous
Rich. The better for the King of Heauen that hath him.
An. He is in Heauen, where thou shalt neuer come.
Rich. Let him thanke me that holpe to send him thither,
For he was fitter for that place than earth.
An. And thou vnfit for any place but hell.
Rich. Yes one place else, if you will heare me name it
An. Some dungeon.
Rich. Your Bed-chamber.
An. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou lyest.
Rich. So will it Madam, till I lye with you
An. I hope so.
Rich. I know so. But gentle Lady Anne,
To leaue this keene encounter of our wits,
And fall somewhat into a slower method,
Is not the Causer of the timelesse deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward,
As blamefull as the Executioner.
An. Thou was the cause and most accurst effect.
Rich. Your beauty was the cause of that effect.
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleepe,
To vndertake the death of all the world,
So I might liue one houre in your sweet bosome.
An. If I thought that, I tell thee Homicide
These Nayles should rent that beauty from my Cheekes
Rich. These eyes could not endure that beauties wracke
You should not blemish it, if I stood by,
As all the world is cheered by the Sunne,
So I by that, it is my day, my life
An. Blacker then darke be thy day & death thy life
Rich. Curse not thy selfe faire Creature,
Thou art both.
An. I would I were, to be reuenged on thee.
Rich. It is a quarrell most vnnaturall,
To be reuenged on him that loueth thee
An. It is a quarrell iust and reasonable,
To be reuenged on him that slew my Husband.
Rich. He that bereft thee Lady of thy Husband,
Did it to help thee to a better Husband.
An. His better doth not breath vpon the earth.
Rich. He liues, that loues thee better than he could.
An. Name him.
Rich. Plantagenet.
An. Why that was he.
Rich. The selfe same name, but one of better Nature.
An. Where is he?
Rich. Here Spits at him
Why dost thou spit at me.
An. Would it were mortall poyson, for thy sake
Rich. Neuer came poyson from so sweet a place.
An. Neuer hung poyson on so foule a toade.
Out of my sight, thou dost infect mine eyes.
Rich. Thine eyes (sweet Lady) haue infected mine.
An. Would they were Basiliskes, to strike thee dead
Rich. I would they were, that I might dye at once.
For now they kill me with a liuing death.
Those eyes of thine, from mine haue drawne salt Teares,

Shew'd me a Mother weeping tender drops
[illegible] creature,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Wet a sad tale [illegible] look, and cried at him
Nor [illegible] wear her [illegible],
To [illegible] sorrowes, nay [illegible] to have weepe
[illegible]
Like [illegible] at [illegible],
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] sweet [illegible]
[illegible] Beauty [illegible],
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

L. were dead, we shall not want another.
Grey. No other Armes, but to the ruine of your Lord.
Qu. The ruine of your Lord includes all Armes.
Grey. The Heavens have blest you with a goodly Son,
To be your Comforter, when he is gone.
Qu. Ah he is young, and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.
Riv. Is it concluded he shall be Protector.
Qu. It is determined, not concluded yet:
But so it must be, if the King miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Derby.

Buck. Here comes the Lord of Buckingham & Derby.
Buck. Good time of day unto your Royall Grace.
Der. God make your Majesty joyfull as you have
Qu. The Countesse Richmond, good my Lord Derby,
To your good prayer, will scarsely say Amen.
Yet Derby, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good Lord assured,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.
Der. I do beseech you either not believe
The envious slanders of her false Accusers.
Or if she be accus'd in true report,
Beare with the weaknesse, which her sex and state
From wayward sickelinesse and age doth lend her.
Qu. Saw you the King to day my Lord Derby?
Der. Not now, but so did I but an houre since.
And come to you from his Majesty.
Qu. What likelihood of his amendment Lords?
Buck. Madam good hope, his Grace speaks cheerfully.
Qu. God grant him health, did you confer with him?
Buck. Madam he does, he craves to make attonement
Between the Duke of Gloster, and your brothers,
And between them, and my Lord Chamberlaine,
And sent to warne them to his royall presence.
Qu. Would all were well, but that will never be,
I fear our happinesse is at the highest.

Enter Richard.

Rich. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it,
Who is it that complaines unto the King
That I (forsooth) am stern, and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his Grace but lightly,
That fill his eares with such dilatious rumors.
Because I cannot flatter, and looke faire,
Smile in mens faces, smooth, deceive and cogge,
Duck with French nods, and Apish courtesie,
I must be held a rancorous Enemy.
Cannot a plaine man live, and think no harme,
But thus his simple truth must be abus'd,
With silken sly, insinuating Jackes?
Grey. To who in all this presence speaks your Grace?
Rich. To thee, that hast nor Honesty nor Grace.
When have I injur'd thee? When done thee wrong?
Or thee? or thee? or any of your faction?
A plague upon you all. His Royall Grace
(Whom God preserve better than you would wish)
Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while,
But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.
Qu. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the matter:
The King on his owne Royall disposition,
(And not provok'd by any Suitor else)
Aiming (belike) at your interior hatred,

That in your outward action [illegible]
Against my Children, brothers, and myselfe,
Made him to send that heavy doomed Processe,
Rich. I cannot tell, the world growes strangely wrought
That Women make peace at men their Judges.
Since every Jacke became a Gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jacke.
Qu. Come, come, we know your meaning Brother Richard.
You envy my advancement, and my friends:
God grant we never may have need of you.
Rich. Meane time, God grants that I have need of you
Our brother is imprison'd by your meanes,
Myselfe disgrac'd, and the Nobility
Held in contempt, while great Promotions
Are daily given to ennoble those
That scarce some two dayes since were worth a Noble.
Qu. By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his Majesty
Against the Duke of Clarence, but have been
An earnest Advocate to plead for him.
My Lord, you do me shamefull injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.
Rich. You may deny that you were not the mean
Of my Lord Hastings late imprisonment.
Riv. She may my Lord, for——
Rich. She may Lord Rivers, why who knows not so?
She may do more sir than denying that:
She may help you to many faire preferments,
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high desert.
What may she not, she may, ay marry may she.
Riv. What marry may she?
Rich. What marry may she, for marrying a King,
A Widow and a Woman moderate
Endowed with Graces wondrous aboundantly.
Riv. My Lord of Gloster I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffes,
By heaven, I will acquaint his Majesty
Of those gross taunts, oft I have endur'd.
I hope already some are mad'e made
For that dear Queene and your well-deserving Consort,
In telling her, the sinfull dalliance
And hasty Marriage had before my Father,
Small joy have the Lord Hastings and Queene.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God I beseech him,
Thy honour, state, and seate is due to me.
Rich. What threat you me with telling of the King?
Tell him and spare not, look what I have said
I will avouch in presence of the King.
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.
'Tis time to speak, my paines are quite forgot.
Mar. Out Devil,
I do remember them too well:
Thou kill'dst my Husband Henry in the Tower
And Edward my poore Son, at Tewkesbury.
Rich. Ere you were Queene, yea or your Husband King,
I was a packhorse in his great affaires
A weeder out of his proud Adversaries,
A setter up of every idle Friend,
To your poore Husband's heavy Adversaries,
Or layd mine honest Neck under the Yoke
Of bondage, for your sake, and sought your love,
Yea, and your Son's, by writing oft and many,
Perhaps my heart went thereby all too soft,
And sent good Friends, and shall good Friends recompence me
With taunts and scorne, with hate and bitter words?
Mar. Worse than I have deserved at thy hand,
To your King Henry, and your Prince my Son,
Is not known much unto the Generation,
You and your Husband Edward were then Friends,
Consent (God knowes) to make the Meeke King Henry
Your Husband and your Son, was forc'd to flie the Land,
Your Husband he needs must be a Traitor,
And Prince your Son, was fain to fly the Land,
Since every Jacke became a Gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jacke.
Qu. Come, come, we know your meaning Brother Richard.
You envy my advancement, and my friends:
God grant we never may have need of you.
Rich. Meane time, God grants that I have need of you
Our brother is imprison'd by your meanes,
Myselfe disgrac'd, and the Nobility
Held in contempt, while great Promotions
Are daily given to ennoble those
That scarce some two dayes since were worth a Noble.
Qu. By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his Majesty
Against the Duke of Clarence, but have been
An earnest Advocate to plead for him.
My Lord, you do me shamefull injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.
Rich. You may deny that you were not the mean
Of my Lord Hastings late imprisonment.
Riv. She may my Lord, for——
Rich. She may Lord Rivers, why who knows not so?
She may do more sir than denying that:
She may help you to many faire preferments,
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high desert.
What may she not, she may, ay marry may she.
Riv. What marry may she?
Rich. What marry may she, for marrying a King,
A Widow and a Woman moderate
Endowed with Graces wondrous aboundantly.
Riv. My Lord of Gloster I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffes,
By heaven, I will acquaint his Majesty
Of those gross taunts, oft I have endur'd.
I hope already some are mad'e made
For that dear Queene and your well-deserving Consort,
In telling her, the sinfull dalliance
And hasty Marriage had before my Father,
Small joy have the Lord Hastings and Queene.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God I beseech him,
Thy honour, state, and seate is due to me.
Rich. What threat you me with telling of the King?
Tell him and spare not, look what I have said
I will avouch in presence of the King.
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.
'Tis time to speak, my paines are quite forgot.
Mar. Out Devil,
I do remember them too well:
Thou kill'dst my Husband Henry in the Tower
And Edward my poore Son, at Tewkesbury.
Rich. Ere you were Queene, yea or your Husband King,
I was a packhorse in his great affaires
A weeder out of his proud Adversaries,
A setter up of every idle Friend,
To your poore Husband's heavy Adversaries,
Or layd mine honest Neck under the Yoke
Of bondage, for your sake, and sought your love,
Yea, and your Son's, by writing oft and many,
Perhaps my heart went thereby all too soft,
And sent good Friends, and shall good Friends recompence me
With taunts and scorne, with hate and bitter words?
Mar. Worse than I have deserved at thy hand,
To your King Henry, and your Prince my Son,
Is not known much unto the Generation,
You and your Husband Edward were then Friends,
Consent (God knowes) to make the Meeke King Henry
Your Husband and your Son, was forc'd to flie the Land,
Your Husband he needs must be a Traitor,
And Prince your Son, was fain to fly the Land,

K. [illegible] Husband Grey
Were [illegible] Lancaster,
And K. [illegible] were you? Was not your Husband,
[illegible] Battaile at Saint Albons slaine?
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Hastings,
[illegible] (with leiu pardon.)
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Ouer your yong Nobility couetousnesse
What 'twere to owe it, and be miserable
Let that stand by vs, we haue many hearts to shake them,
And if they fall, they dash themselues to peeces.
Rich. Good counsaile marry, learnt it, learnt it Marquesse.
Dor. It touches you my Lord, as much as me.
Rich. I, and much more: but I was borne so high,
Our ayerie buildeth in the Cedars top,
And dallies with the winde, and scornes the Sunne.
Mar. And turnes the Sun to shade: alas, alas,
Witnesse my Sonne, now in the shade of death,
Whose bright out-shining beames, thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternall darkenesse fast inuolued.
Your ayerie buildeth in our ayeries Nest:
O God that seest it, do not suffer it,
As it is wonne with blood, lost be it so.
Buc. Peace, peace for shame if not, for Charity.
Mar. Vrge neither Charity, nor shame to me:
Vncharitably with me haue you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes (by you) are butcher'd.
My Charity is outrage, life my shame,
And in that shame still liue my sorrowes rage.
Buc. Haue done, haue done.
Mar. O Princely Buckingham, Ile kisse thy hand,
In sealing of my vow of Amitie.
Now fayre befall thee, and thy Noble house:
Thy Garment are not spotted with our blood:
Nor thou within the compasse of my curse.
Buc. Nor no one here: for curses neuer passe
The lips of those that breathe them in the ayre.
Mar. I will not think but they ascend the sky,
And there awake God's gentle sleeping peace.
Good Buckingham take heed of yonder dogge:
Looke when he fawnes, he bites: and when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death.
Haue not to do with him, beware of him,
Sin, death, and hell haue set their marks on him,
And all their Ministers attend on him.
Rich. What doth she say, my Lord of Buckingham.
Buc. Nothing that I respect my gracious Lord.
Mar. What dost thou scorne me
For my graue counsell?
All of you scorne that I warne you see from.
O but remember this another day
When you shall chance to call to mind my words,
And say (poore Margaret) was a prophetesse:
Liue each of you, loue each of you to Crosse. Exit.
Buc. My heart doth ake and bids me to call her backe.
Dor. And I do cut with her, by my good will.
Rich. I cannot blame her, by Gods holy mother,
She hath at least good reason for her woe.
My part therein that I haue done to her.
Mar. I neuer did her any to my knowledge.
Rich. Yet you haue all the vantage of her wrong:
I was too hot, to do somebody good,
That is too cold in thinking of it now:
Marry as for Clarence he is well repaid
He is franke now vp to attone for his offences,
God patron them, that are the cause thereof.
Dor. A verie timely and divine conclusion
To pray for them that haue done scath to vs.
Rich. So do I ever, being well aduis'd
Speakes to himselfe.
For had I curst now, I had curst my selfe.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madame, his Maiesty hath cal'd for you,
And for your Grace, and you my gracious Lord.
Queene. Come, bring me where he is.
Rich. We attend your Grace.
Exeunt omnes. Glocester.
Rich. I do the wrong and first begin to braue.
The secret Mischiefe that I set abroach
I lay vnto the grieuous charge of others.
Clarence, whom I indeede haue cast asleepe,
To be awoke to make vp peeces ours,
Rumour it abroad that Anne my wife
Is very grieuous sicke, and pine away.
Now that by her death which I will make
To be reputed as a needfull worke
Vnto the wrong of Richard Dorset Grace.
Before I haue shuffled and dealt my cards
Fell mischiefe, God shall haue no more to deale:
Nor shall I long be vnprouided for.
With Edward old, and sickly, and Queene Mary,
And Clarence dead, and I am neere vnto them,
Who stands so even in hope with me as you?
Not one that lookes for more than by my meanes.
Here comes the Mayor.

Enter two Aldermen.

Buc. Shall I here speake my minde?
How now my Lord Maior, Aldermen?
Are you prepar'd to proclaime the King?
Lon. We are my Lord, and haue the Warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.
Buc. Well then attend, and haue your eare to our mouth:
When you haue heard your Princes pleasure, marke,
Marke (I say) with diligence, with heede,
Marke, and digest his answeres to the full,
Before you vtter any word of his,
Or goe about his graue imployments.
Your eyes my Maiesties: when boules eyes
Are Leaues.
Leade you Lads, about your businesse straight.
Go, go, go.
Lon. We will my Noble Lord.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Clarence and Keeper.

Keep. Why looke you haue your Princes pleasure to day.
Cla. O I haue past a miserable night,
So full of fearefull Dreames, of vgly sights,
That as I am a Christian faithfull man,
I would not spend another such a night
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy daies.
So full of dismall terror was the time.
Keep. What was your dreame? I long to heare you tell me
Cla. Me thought I was set at liberty out of the Tower,
And was imbarqued to crosse the Maine,
And my Wife and Children came to see me,
And then was I asleepe (me thought) and fell
Into a hatefull Dreame: of which a dreame
Me thought I was imbarqued vpon the hatefull Maine,

[illegible]
[illegible]

Intercoupl[illegible]
O Lord [illegible] was to drowne,

[illegible]
[illegible]

1 'Tis true, now at my elbow perswading me not to kill the Duke.

2 Take him o'th' throat, and strangle him in the Bed-straw. He would confesse with ease, but to make restitution.

1 I am strong-framed, he cannot prevaile with me.

2 Spoke like a tall man, that respects thy reputation. Come shall we fall to worke?

1 Take him on the Crowne of the head with the hilts of thy Sword, and then throw him into the Malmsey-Butt in the next roome.

2 O excellent device, and make a sop of him.

1 Soft, he wakes.

2 Strike.

1 No, we'l reason with him.

Cla. Where art thou Keeper? Give me a cup of wine.

2 You shall have Wine enough my Lord anon.

Cla. In God's name, what art thou?

1 A man, as you are.

Cla. But not as I am Royall.

1 Nor you as we are, I loyall.

Cla. Thy voice is thunder, but thy lookes are humble.

1 My voice is now the Kings, my lookes mine owne.

Cla. How darkely and how deadly dost thou speake? Your eyes do menace me: why looke you pale? Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

2 To, to, to——

Cla. To murder me?

Both I, I.

Cla. You scarce have the hearts to tell me so, And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it. Wherein (my friends) have I offended you?

1 Offended us you have not, but the King.

Cla. I shall be reconcil'd to him againe.

2 Never my Lord, therefore prepare to die.

Cla. Are you drawn forth among a world of men To slay the innocent? What is my offence? Where is the evidence that doth accuse me? What lawfull Quest have given their Verdict up Unto the frowning Judge? Or who pronounc'd The bitter sentence of poore Clarence death, Before I be convicted by course of Law? To threaten me with death is most unlawfull. I charge you, as you hope to have any godnesse, That you depart, and lay no hands on me. The deed you undertake is damnable.

1 What we will do, we do upon command.

2 And he that hath commanded, is our King.

Cla. Erroneous Vassall! the great King of Kings Hath in the Tables of his Law commanded That thou shalt do no murder. Will you then Spurne at his Edict, and fulfill a Man's? Take heed, for he holds Vengeance in his hand, To hurle upon their heads that break his Law.

2 And that same Vengeance doth he hurle on thee, For false forswearing, and for murther too. Thou did'st receive the Sacrament, to fight In quarrell of the House of Lancaster.

1 And like a Traitor to break it.

2 Your eyes drop Monarchs teares, your breath laments, Your Bowels with compassion, Soone.

2 Whose condition is it to like of and defend The reasons of our helpless Soveraigne.

2 Who should succeed the Father but the Sonne.

Cla. Are you drawn forth among a world of men To plead the innocent? What is my offence? For Edward my Brother, for his sake. He bends you not to murther me for this:

For in that sort is not his suit preferred. If God's offence be not of so great quality To give you charge or power upon the same, To call me to account for mine, How can you then be urged by authority? Whereas you have no warrant from the King, And that the fact wherewith you charge me, Was thought by him just cause of Death, Who shall reward you better for this deed? Then Edward will look strange on you, Your Brother Gloster hates you.

Cla. O, he loves me, and holds me dear. Go you to him from me.

1 Ay so we will.

Cla. Tell him when that our Princely Father York, Bid us farewell upon the Sandy Coast of Holland, He little thought of this divided friendship. Bid Gloster think on this, and he will weep.

1 Ay Millions of Teares shall wet your cheeke.

Cla. O Orator! I fear thee more than Armes.

1 Remember our Reward when the deed's done.

Cla. Come you deceive your selves: 'Tis he that sends you, It cannot, cannot be the gentle hearted Edward, And plead so earnestly in Justice cause, And mercy all the while from his lips powred, As if pure pitty had been all his guide, But he's not he, these are not his sweet termes, These are the words of Richard Duke of Gloster. Speak gentle Sir, your gracious Lord hath pitty On my poore Soule, if I but name his pitty. Why you are hard of heart, and pitty me, As you would beasts, when they come to the slaughter.

1 Why so we do, when we do look on you.

Cla. If you do look on me, how can you then Forbear to weep? For I am one of those, Whose Reverend eyes, and silver-shedding teares, Would make a flint-breast Souldier streame like Conduits. Alas, you know not what you do. Call me home Unto my house again, where e're I live, And in the morning early will I come And prostrate fall before my Royall Brother, Intreat his Grace to view my Innocency, And that shall be my Ransome. Sirs, for God, Carry me thither to my gentle Brother, He will unto the Tower, sirs, for my coming.

2 Soft, soft, we must not trust you so.

1 Take that, and that, if all this will not do. Stabs him. He throws you in the Malmsey-Butt within. Exit

2 A bloody deed, and desperately dispatch'd. How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands Of this most grievous murder. Enter 1. Murtherer

1 How now, what mean'st thou that thou help'st me not? By heaven the Duke shall know how slack you have been.

2 Mur. I would he knew that I had saued his brother,
Take heed the Fee, and tell him what I say,
For I repent me that the Duke is slaine. Exit.
1 Mur. So do not I: go Coward as thou art.
Well I go hide the body in some hole,
Till that the Duke giue order for his burrall:
And when I haue my meede, I will away,
For this will out, and then I must not stay. Exit

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Flourish.

Enter the King, (sicke) the Queene, Lord Marquesse Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Catesby, Buckingham, Northumberland.

King. Why so: now haue I done a good dayes work.
You Peeres, continue this vnited League:
I euery day expect an Embassage
From my Redeemer to redeeme me hence.
And more to peace my soule shall part to heauen,
Since I haue made my friends at peace on earth.
Dorset and Rivers, take each others hand,
Dissemble not your hatred, Sweare your loue.
Riu. By heauen, my soule is purg'd from grudging hate
And I am ioyned with my foes in deerest loue.
Hast. So thriue I, as I truly sweare the like.
King. Take heed you dally not before your King,
Lest he that is the supreme King of Kings
Confound your hasty yathood, and send
Destruction on both of yours end.
Hast. So prosper I, as I sweare perfect loue.
Riu. And I, as I loue Hastings with my heart.
King. Madam your selfe is not exempt from this:
Nor you Sonne Dorset, Buckingham nor you;
You haue been factious one against the other.
Wife loue Lord Hastings, let him kisse your hand,
And what you do, do it vnfeignedly.
Qu. There Hastings, I will neuer more remember
Our former hatred, so thriue I and mine,
As I will euer beare a kinde remembrance.
King. Dorset, imbrace him.
Hastings, loue Lord Marquesse.
Dor. This interchange of loue, I heere protest
Vpon my part shall be inuiolable.
Hast. And so swere I.
King. Now Princely Buckingham seale this league
With thy endeauours to my wiues Allies
And make me happy in your vnity.
Buc. Whenever Buckingham doth turne his hate
Vpon your Grace, but with all duteous loue,
Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most loue,
When I haue most need to employ a Friend,
And most assured that he is a Friend,
Deepe, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he vnto me: This do I beg of heauen,
When I am cold in loue to you or yours. Embrace
King. A pleasing Cordiall Princely Buckingham
Is this thy vow, vnto my sicke, my heart:
Then welcome home our Brother Gloster heere,
To make this blessed period of this peace.
Buc. And in good time,
Heere comes Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and the Duke.

Enter Ratcliffe, and Gloster.

Rich. Good morrow to my Soueraigne King & Queen
And Princely Peeres, a happy time of day
King. Happily met, assoone as we haue spent the day:
Gloster we send to peace deeds of Charity,
Made peace of enmity, faire loue of mine,
Betweene these swelling wrong incensed Peeres.
Rich. A blessed labour my most Soueraigne Lord
Among this Princely heape, if any heere
By false intelligence, or wrong surmize
Hold me a Foe: If I vnwittingly, or in my rage,
Haue ought committed that is hardly borne,
To any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace.
'Tis death to me to be at enmitie
I hate it, and desire all good mens loue.
First Madam, I intreate true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutious seruice.
Of you my Noble Cosin Buckingham,
If euer any grudge were lodg'd betweene vs.
Of you and you, Lord Rivers and of Dorset,
That all without desert haue frown'd on me
Of you Lord Woodvile, and Lord Scales of you,
Dukes, Earles, Lords, Gentlemen, indeed of all.
I do not know that Englishman aliue,
With whom my soule is any iot at oddes,
More than the Infant that is borne to night.
I thank my God for my Humility.
Qu. A holy day shall this be kept hereafter.
I would to God all strifes were well compounded.
My Soueraigne Lord, I do beseech your Highnesse
To take our Brother Clarence to your Grace.
Rich. Why Madam, haue I offred loue for this,
To be so flowted in this Royall presence?
Who knowes not that the gentle Duke is dead? They all start.
You do him injury to scorne his Corse.
King. Who knowes not he is dead?
Who knowes he is?
Qu. All seeing heauen, what a world is this?
Buc. Looke I pale Lord Dorset, as the rest?
Dor. I my good Lord, a thousand times the pleasure,
But I haue cold colour at the heart to looke his Corse.
King. Is Clarence dead? The Order was reuerst.
Rich. But he, poore man, by your first order dyed,
And that a winged Mercurie did beare
Some tardie Cripple bare the Countermand,
That came too lagge to see him buried
God grant, that some lesse Noble and lesse Loyall,
Neerer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deserue not worse than wretched Clarence did,
And yet go currant from Suspition.

Enter Earle of Derby.

Der. A boone my Soueraigne for my seruice done.
King. I prethee peace, my soule is full of sorrow
Der. I will not rise, vnlesse your Highnesse heare me.
King. Then say at once, what is it thou requests
Der. The forfeit (Soueraigne) of my seruants life,
Who slew to day a Riotous Gentleman,
Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolke.
King. Haue I a tongue to doome my Brothers death?
And shall that tongue giue pardon to a slaue?
My Brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who

Who sued to me for him? Who (in my wrath)
Kneel'd at my feet, and bid me be aduis'd?
Who spoke of Brother-hood? who spoke of loue?
Who told me how the poore soule did forlorne
The mighty Warwicke, and did fight for me?
Who told me in the field at Tewkesbury,
When Oxford had me downe, he rescued me:
And said deare Brother liue, and be a King?
Who told me, when we both lay in the Field,
Frozen almost, to death, how he did lap me
Euen in his Garments, and did giue himselfe
(All thin and naked) to the numbe cold night?
All this from my Remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluckt, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my minde:
But when your Carters, or your waiting Vassalls
Haue done a drunken Slaughter and defac'd
The precious Image of our deere Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for Pardon, pardon,
And I (vnmou'd) must grant it you.
But for my Brother, not a man would speake,
Nor I (vngracious) speake vnto my selfe
For him poore Soule. The proudest of you all,
Haue bin beholding to him in his life,
Yet none of you, would once beg for his life.
O God! I feare thy iustice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours for this
Come Hastings helpe me to my Closset.
Ah poore Clarence. Exeunt some with K. & Queen.
Rich. This is the fruits of rashnes: Marke you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the Queene
Look'd pale when they did heare of Clarence death.
O they did vrge it still vnto the King,
God will reuenge it. Come Lords will you go,
To comfort Edward with our company.
Buc. We wait vpon your Grace. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the old Dutchesse of Yorke, with the two children of Clarence.

Edw. Good Grandam tell vs, is our Father dead?
Duch. No Boy.
Daugh. Why do you weepe so oft? And beate your Brest?
And cry O Clarence, my vnhappy Sonne
Boy. Why do you looke on vs, and shake your head,
And call vs Orphans, Wretches, Castawayes,
If that our Noble Father were aliue?
Duch. My pretty Cosins, you mistake me both,
I do lament the sicknesse of the King,
As loath to lose him, not your Fathers death
It were lost sorrow to waile one that's lost.
Boy. Then you conclude, my Grandam, he is dead.
The King mine Vncle is too blame for it.
God will reuenge it, whom I will importune
With earnest prayers, all to that effect.
Daugh. And so will I.
Duch. Peace children, peace, the King doth loue you well.
Incapable and shallow Innocents,
You cannot guesse who caus'd your Fathers death.
Boy. Grandam we can, for my good Vncle Gloster

Told me the King (prouoked to it by the Queene,
Deuis'd impeachments to imprison him,
And when I cried Vpon his Brother's Loue,
And pitied me, and kindly kist my cheeke,
Bad me rely on him, as on my Father,
And he would loue me dearely as a Child.
Duch. Ah that deceit should steale such gentle shape,
And with a vertuous Visard hide deepe vice.
He is my Sonne, I, and therein my shame,
Yet from my dugges he drew not this deceit.
Boy. Think you my Vncle did dissemble Grandam?
Duch. I boy.
Boy. I cannot thinke it. Hearke, what noise is this?

Enter the Queene with her haire about her eares, Riuers & Dorset after her.

Qu. Ah who shall hinder me to wayle and weepe?
To chide my fortune, and torment my Soule
I mayne with blacke dispaire against my Soule,
And to my selfe, become an enemie.
Duch. What meanes this Scene of rude impatience?
Qu. To make an Act of Tragicke violence:
Edward my Lord, thy Sonne, our King is dead.
Why grow the Branches, when the Roote is gone?
Why wither not the Leaues that want their sap?
If you will liue, Lament with me, poore Babes,
That our swift-winged Soules may catch the Kings,
Or like obedient Subiects follow him,
To his new Kingdome of ne're-changing night.
Duch. Ah so much interest haue I in thy sorrow,
As I had Title in thy Noble Husband
I haue bewept a worthy Husbands death,
And liu'd with looking on his Images:
But now two Mirrors of his Princely semblance,
Are crack'd in pieces, by malignant death,
And I for comfort, haue but one false Glasse,
That greeues me, when I see my shame in him.
Thou art a Widow, yet thou art a Mother,
And hast the comfort of thy Children left,
But death hath snatch'd my Husband from mine Armes,
And pluckt two Crutches from my feeble hands,
Clarence, and Edward. O, what am I,
(Thine being but a moity of my moane)
To ouer-go thy woes, and drowne my cries.
Boy. Ah Aunt, you weep not for our Fathers death
How can we aide you, with our Kindred teares?
Daugh. Our Fathers Chamber (poore Boy) was left vnmoan'd,
Your widowed Chamber, hath bewepte his wo.
Qu. Come mourne with me in Lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth complaints:
All Springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I being gouern'd by the watry Moone
May flood the World with teares: I hate the World
Ah for my Husband, for my deere Lord Edward
Chil. Ah for our Father, for our deere Lord Clarence.
Duch. Alas for both, both mine Edward and Clarence
Qu. What stay had I but Edward? and he's gone
Chil. What stay had we but Clarence? and he's gone
Duch. What stayes had I but they? and they are gone.
Qu. Was neuer Widow had so deere a losse.
Chil. Were neuer Orphans had so deere a losse.
Duch. Was neuer Mother had so deere a losse.
Alas I am the Mother of these Griefes,
Their woes are parcell'd, mine is generall.
She for an Edward weepes, and so do I:

[illegible]

Enter [illegible] Duke Hastings, and Lord.

Rich. Sister, we are hither come to visit you,
To see the Prince, your brother, and his Grace.
But where is your sweet selfe, and pretty Neeces,
Duch. Good Brother, as indeed you have just cause,
Do pardon me, for I was much displeased,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Made me forget my duty to your Grace,
Beseeching you to take it in good part,
And pardon my offence, if ought therein.
Rich. Sister, my Mother hath beseech'd me this,
Or else I would not have been seen abroad,
I know my duty to your Majesty,
Do with your pleasure, and your good will,
And for your faire proceeding in the cause,
Be patient, for your paines are passing great,
Where you shall have your full reward and more.
Hast. Madam, my Lord protector will needs have it so,
I shall not dare to leave you at this time,
Except I have your gracious leave.
Duch. Good Lord Hastings, and you deare Kinsman,
Welcome, sweet Prince, to London, to your chamber.
Rich. One word, good Sister, let us talke a little.
Now Madam, your son the Prince is come to London,
Now he is come, you do not know the day
Nor time appointed by my Lord Protector,
For the assembly of the Councell here,
Nor where they shall assemble, yet I do know,
Therefore, good Sister, be not ignorant
Of what is pleasing for your Highnesse good.
Duch. I humbly thank my gentle Brother deare,
For your kind care, and good remembrance of us all.
And for my Lord your son, we know not yet
The time of his intended coronation,
Such is the doubt my Lord Protector makes,
But we shall learne it shortly, I assure me.
Rich. Is not my Lord protector carefull and vigilant?
Duch. I, I, he is, and loves the Prince right well.
But shall I tell you Brother what is done?
Rich. What, I pray you?
Duch. Forsooth, the Duke of Yorke is with the Prince,
And both attended with a mighty traine.
Rich. Ah, that is well, my Lord doth nothing else.
Hast. Madam, we stay your leisure for a while,
Your Brother would confer with you in haste.
Duch. My Lord, I come.

Manet Buckingham and Richard.

Buc. My Lord, we were cut short in our discourse,
For you were call'd away by your Mother.
Rich. Buckingham, I do repent the offence,
And minde to satisfie you as you would,
Buc. My Lord, you promised me the Shrievalty,
But for the Office, and the Lands withall,
Unto the which you were not pleased to assent,
But left me gaping for a thing unknown.
Rich. Cousin, I was not then perhaps resolved,
But well considering of the present state,
Meaning to make some further use of you,
I am resolved to grant your former suit.
Buc. I hope your Highnesse remembers it is late,
Before the Prince shall go to bed.
Rich. Then resolve me now,
For Buckingham, I do not like to jest,
I pass not how I am beset with suits.
Buc. Then resolve me whether you will or no.
Rich. I tell thee, thou dost trouble me much,
Canst thou not stay a time to talke with me,
Unless I have it immediately?
Buc. I do beseech your Grace to pardon me,
Considering how I have deserved of you.
Rich. I know your manners are too great indeed,
Cousin, farewell, and leave me to my rest.
Buc. What is your Highnesse pleasure I should do
Concerning your Protectorship?
Rich. Sometime hereafter you shall know my mind,
Upon my better leisure you shall have
Your full desire.
Buc. May it please your Highnesse
To resolve me in my suit a word or two,
Lest I be gone, and think of it anon.
Rich. Nay then I see that you will trouble me,
Well, what's your suit?
Buc. I do not sue for ought,
But for the office and the lands withall,
Unto the which you were not pleased to assent,
But left me gaping for a thing unknown.
Rich. Well, call them what you will, I am disposed
To give them all, and what you will beside.
Buc. I humbly thank your royall Majesty.
Rich. But Buckingham, I do not like your manners,
You are my friend, well you know my mind,
Look to it when you will, say what you will,
And now I have no leisure to confer,
Farewell, good Buckingham, to London
Hasten apace, for there we will be straight.
Buc. And so will I.
Rich. Nay, stay a while,
Good Buckingham, a word before you go,
Have you not heard of any likely man
That doth frequent his house of late?
Buc. No my good Lord, not that I can hear of.
Rich. Inquire and seek him out where you can,
Speak with me soon about it, if you can,
And bring me word what you shall find in it.
Buc. I will, my Lord, with all the haste I may.
Rich. Shall we hear from you Catesby ere we sup?
Buc. It may please you, my Lord, I will.
Rich. Do so, but I pray you go no further than my house,
For I will not sup from home to day,
Let us part, and when you have done, repair unto me straight.
Buc. It may please your Highnesse,
I will.
Rich. Now all my joy go with thee whilst I live,
For in thee do I repose my trust,
Would all were well, but that will never be,
I feare our happinesse is at the highest.

Enter Maior, Catesby, Ratcliffe, Lovell, and others.

Mai. God bless your Grace with health and happy dayes.
Rich. I thank you all, and am right glad of it,
Have you your Porter at his Office now,
And is he well acquainted with the change?
Mai. He is, my Lord.
Rich. Know you not any of the Lords
That are so backward in coming to our Councell?
Mai. Such as your Grace hath named over unto me,
They are all at hand, I do assure your Grace.
Rich. Then be it as I speak it to you now,
Before the Prince shall go to bed to night,
I will have Counsell what he shall do this day.
Mai. I will, my Lord, with all the haste I may.
Rich. Many good morrowes to my Noble Lord.
Mai. Good morrow to your Majesty.
Cat. Good morrow to your Majesty.
Rich. Why, I am so indeed.
Mai. God make your Majesty joyfull as you have been.
Rich. The Queen your Mother and her Allies
Do not know that part I play,
But I will plague them all ere long,
Sirrah, what newes?
Ratc. None worse than what your Grace doth know
Already, my Lord.
Rich. Sirrah, what newes?
Lov. None good to your Grace,
Whereby to make you merry.
Rich. Now by Saint Paul this newes is bad indeed,
O he is old and wise, and full of deepe experience,
He hath bin Generall, and foughten battailes long,
And number well his dayes he is to live,
And writing downe my Title is in danger,
And you tell me there is no newes good to me,
Well, your Counsell is, I should prevent,
And suddenly withstand the Comming downe,
Where is the Duke my Father with his power?
No thought of peace, no thought to flatter us,
No dreame that we are Kings, call all to minde,
Such was the state the Duke Plantagenet my Father,
And Henry our dread Lord and Brother,
Did keepe with King Henry,
And suddenly shall we have warres I hope,
And suddenly do I meane to stirre,
Where is the Duke my Father with his power?
No mirth, no thought of peace, no dreame of rest,
For I am in a bloody dreadfull dreame,
Such was the state King Henry and my Father
Did keepe with King Henry,
Come, gentlemen, let us all embrace,
Now will I goe to take some pleasure of my Queene,
And to my Neeces I will visit straight,
For by the Duke my Father I have plotted
To marry one of them, doth not my wife
Deserve well to have some pleasure for my labour?
Cat. It were good to move your Majesty unto it.
Rich. Good Lovell, yonder goes your sad Lord,
Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,
That I might have but halfe these dangerous thoughts from me,
Noble Lord.
Buc. Vouchsafe, my gracious Lord, to grant me audience.
Rich. And shall have, Buckingham, stay thou by me,
Would all were well, but that will never be,
I doubt our happy dayes are past.
Buc. Shall I tell your Grace?
Rich. I prithee, gentle Buckingham, do.
Buc. My gracious Lord, I tender you my service,
Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young,
Which I do undertake to lay out bravely,
Even in the best blood I can command,
In your behalfe against your enemies,
Which do prepare apace to welcome you from Ireland.
Rich. Thanks, gentle Buckingham.
Buc. Humbly take my leave.
Rich. My kind Lord, and gentle Buckingham,
Such is the wild tumultuous youth of my Nephew,
And so unstaid, that scarcely will he learne
To know the Councell-house from the Tennis-court,
Scarce will he learne to reade a Scrivener's bill,
But we will plant some other in the throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of his house,
And in good time here comes the sweating Lord.
Buc. Will not your Highnesse please to sup with us?
Rich. Not this day, Buckingham, excuse me,
Why let it please you to be merry,
For I am merry, passing merry,
This day I have my purpose fully answered,
I have the heart of all the Counsell here,
The voice in Parliament already past,
And mine inheritance proclaimed,
Why, I am merry, passing merry.
Buc. Why, I am glad to see your Highnesse merry.
Rich. Why, I do thank you, gentle Buckingham,
And shall not you be merry too?
Buc. I shall, my Lord, when I shall know your Grace
Hath cause to be so merry.
Rich. Why, I have cause to be merry,
For I have got the heart of all the Realme.
Buc. Why, then no doubt but I shall be merry.
Rich. Why, then be merry, Buckingham,
For I am merry, passing merry.
Buc. Then I will be merry, my Lord

Put my daunger, as by praach we see
The Water swell before a boyst'rous storme
But leave it all to God. Come, cousin, away?
2 Marry we were sent for, and therefore will we go.
3 And so was I, I'le bear you company. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Archbishop, young Yorke, the Queene and the Duchesse.

Arch. Last night I heard they lay at Stony Stratford,
And at Northampton they do rest to night.
Tomorrow, or next day, they will be here.
Duch. I long with all my heart to see the Prince.
I hope he is much growne since last I saw him.
Qu. But I hear no, they say my Son of Yorke
Has almost overta'ne him in his growth.
York. I Mother, but I would not have it so.
Duch. Why my good Cosin, it is good to grow.
York. Grandam, one night as we did sit at Supper,
My Vncle Rivers talkt how I did grow
More than my Brother: I, quoth my Vncle Gloucester,
Small Herbes have grace, great Weeds do grow apace.
And since, me thought, I would not grow amain
Because sweet flowers are slow, and Weeds make haste.
Duch. Good faith, good faith, the saying did not hold
In him that did object the same to thee:
He was full sweet, and his Complexion
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That his last age was ripe and mellow.
York. Then Grandam, you conclude that he is dead.
Right so the Gentle-man thinke it best
He was not borne to live long, because he ripened so soone.
Duch. No boy.
Qu. Why doth the Duke
Keepe his Nativity so secret from me?
York. I Mother, but I would not have it so.
Duch. Why my good Cosin, it is good to grow.
York. Marry my Vncle Clarence' Angell said,
My Brother Edward should be crowned King,
And ere my Brother could get Children,
Ere I could play with my Vncle Gloucester,
Why then I should be he: Now do you see the reason?
Duch. Now by my troth, if this be all the cause,
I would thou were small still, and never grew.
Qu. Perhaps some other reason is in store.
Duch. Good Madam, be not angry with the Child.
Qu. Pitchers have eares.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a Messenger. What Newes?
Mes. Such newes as I expect, yong Lords sent me to report.
Qu. How doth the Prince?
Mes. Well Madam, and in health.
Duch. What is thy Newes?
Mes. Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey
Are sent to Pomfret, and with them,
Sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoner.
Duch. Who hath committed them?
Mes. The mighty Dukes, Gloucester and Buckingham.

Enter [illegible]

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

I [illegible] my Master, my Brother Yorke,
Wo[illegible] [illegible] meanes or [illegible] way.
I[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] comes or
To[illegible], [illegible], welcome, or no.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Buck. And in good time, heere comes the sweating Lord.

Prince. Welcome, my Lord: what, will our Mother come?

Hast. On what occasion God he knowes, not I,
The Queene your Mother and your Brother Yorke,
Hath tane Sanctuary: The tender Prince
Would fayne have come with me, to meet your Grace,
But by his Mother was perforce with-held.

Buck. Fie, what an indirect and peevish course
Is this of hers? Lord Cardinall, will your Grace
Perswade the Queene, to send the Duke of Yorke
Vnto his Princely Brother presently?
If she deny Lord Hastings, go with him,
And plucke him from his Mothers Sanctuarie.

Card. My Lord of Buckingham, and my selfe will see Queene
Continuate Mother will send the Duke of Yorke,
And mervell much, if she be obdurate
To[illegible] [illegible],
We[illegible]
Or[illegible] [illegible] Lord,
We[illegible]

Prince. You[illegible] [illegible], my Lord,
To[illegible]
We[illegible] Age,
Yet[illegible],
I[illegible]
I[illegible] place,
A[illegible]
I[illegible] de[illegible]dit,
A[illegible],
I[illegible],
Y[illegible],
[illegible],
Lo[illegible],

Card. My Lord, [illegible] my mind for once.
Come on Lord [illegible] with me?

Hast. [illegible] I will [illegible] Hastings.

Prince. Good Lord, make [illegible] speedie at your day
Sir, Vncle [illegible] to welcome.
Were [illegible] Coronation?

Card. [illegible] to your Royall elfe.
If [illegible]
Your [illegible] Tower:
I [illegible] not fit
For [illegible]

Prince. [illegible] Tower, of any place.
D[illegible]

Buck. How? my gracious Lord, in what place,
W[illegible]

Prince. Is [illegible] reported
So [illegible]?

Buck. [illegible] gracious Lord.

Prince. But [illegible] my Lord, I was not regarded,
Me thinkes [illegible] from age to age,
As [illegible] posterity,
Euen [illegible] day.

Card. So [illegible], they say doe neuer [illegible].

Prince. What say you, Vncle?

[illegible], without Characters, fame lives long.
Thus, like the formall Vice, Iniquitie,
I moralize two meanings in one word.

Prince. That Iniquitie [illegible] was a famous man,
With what [illegible] [illegible] with his Wit,
His Mind as great, his Wishes as high,
Disdaining [illegible] to make his Vsurpings good?
Deare makes no Conquest of his Conqueror,
For now he [illegible] fame though not in Life.
I [illegible] you, my Cousin Buckingham.

Buck. What, my gracious Lord?

Prince. And if I [illegible] Edward,
He will not [illegible] King of France againe,
Or die a Souldier, as I lived a King.

Glo. Short Summers lightly have a forward Spring.

Enter young Yorke, Hastings, and Cardinall.

Buck. Now in good time, heere comes the Duke of Yorke.

Prince. Richard of Yorke, how fares our Noble Brother?

Yorke. Well my deare Lord, can I call you now

Prince. I Brother, [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] kept [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]

Glo. How fares our Cousin, Noble Lord of Yorke?

Yorke. I [illegible] you gentle Vncle. Only Lord,
You see that [illegible] [illegible],
The Prince, my Brother, hath out-grown me farre.

Glo. He hath, my Lord.

Yorke. And therefore is he [illegible]?

Glo. Oh my deare Cousin, I am not so.

Yorke. Then [illegible] more becoming to you, then I.

Glo. He may command me as my Soueraigne,
But [illegible] power in me, as in a Kinsman.

Yorke. I pray you, Vncle, give me this Dagger.

Glo. My Dagger, little Cousin with all my heart.

Prince. A Begger, Brother?

Yorke. Of my kind Vncle, that I know will give,
And being but a Toy, which is no grace to give.

Glo. A greater gift than that, I'le give my Cousin.

Yorke. A greater gift? O that's the Sword to it.

Glo. I gentle Cousin, were it [illegible] enough.

Yorke. O then I see, you will part but with light gifts,
In weighty things you'le say a Beggar nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your Grace to weare.

Yorke. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glo. What would you have my Weapon, little Lord?

Yorke. I would that I might thanke you, as, as, you call me.

Glo. How?

Yorke. Little.

Prince. My Lord of Yorke will still be crosse in talke:
Vncle your Grace knowes how to beare with him.

Yorke. You meane to beare me, not to beare with me:
Vncle, my Brother mockes both you and me,
Because that I am little, like an Ape,
He thinkes, that you should beare me on your shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharpe provided wit he reasons:
To mitigate the scorne he gives his Vncle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himselfe:
So cunning and so young, is wonderfull.

Glo. My Lord, will't please you passe along?
Myself and my good Cousin Buckingham,
Will to your Mother, to entreat of her
To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

Yorke. What,

Yorke What, will you goe vnto the Tower, my Lord?
Prince. My Lord Protector will haue it so.
Yorke I shall not sleepe in quiet at the Tower.
Glo Why, what should you feare?
Yorke Marry, my Vncle Clarence angry Ghost.
My Grandam told me he was murther'd there.
Prince I feare no Vnckles dead.
Glo. Nor none that liue, I hope
Prince. And if they liue I hope I need not feare.
But come my Lord: and with a heauie heart,
Thinking on them, goe I vnto the Tower.
A Sennet. Exeunt Prince, Yorke, Hastings and Dorset

Manet Richard, Buckingham, and Catesby.

Buck. Thinke you, my Lord, this little prating Yorke
Was not incenced by his subtle Mother,
To taunt and scorne you thus opprobriously?
Glo. No doubt, no doubt: Oh 'tis a perillous Boy,
Bold, quicke, ingenious, forward, capable:
He is all the Mothers, from the top to toe
Buck. Well, let them rest. Come hither Catesby,
Thou art sworne as deepely to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceale what we impart:
Thou knowst our reasons vrg'd before this day,
What other pawne we haue to plant our right,
To make William Lord Hastings of our mind,
For the subuersion of this Newe-borne Duke
In the new Kingdome this attempt I loue
Cates. He for his father's sake so loues the Prince,
That he will not be won to ought against him.
Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? Will he not heare?
Cates. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.
Buck. Well then, no more but this:
Goe gentle Catesby, and as it were farre off,
Sound thou Lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose,
And summon him to morrow to the Tower,
To sit about the Coronation.
If thou do'st finde him tractable to vs,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reason:
If he be leaden, icie, cold, vnwilling,
Be thou so too, and so break off the talke,
And giue vs notice of his inclination:
For we to morrow hold diuers Councels,
Wherein, thy letter shall be duly vrg'd.
Rich. Commend me to Lord William: tell him Catesby,
His ancient knot of dangerous Aduersaries
To morrow are let blood at Pomfret Castle,
And bid my Lord, for ioy of this good newes,
Giue Mistresse Shore one gentle Kisse the more.
Buck. Good Catesby, goe effect this businesse soundly.
Cates. My good Lords both, with all the heed I can.
Rich. Shall we heare from you, Catesby, ere we sleepe?
Cates. You shall, my Lord
Rich. At Crosby House, there shall you find vs both.
Exit Catesby
Buck. Now, my Lord,
What shall we doe, if we perceiue
Lord Hastings will not yeeld to our Complots?
Rich. Chop off his head:
Something we will determine:
And looke when I am King, claime thou of me
The Earledome of Hereford and all the moueables
Whereof the King, my Brother, was possest.
Buck. Ile claime that promise at your Graces hand.
Rich. And looke to haue it yeelded with all kindnesse.
Come, let vs sup betimes, that afterwards
We may digest our complots in some forme.
Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter a Messenger to the Doore of Hastings.

Mess. My Lord, my Lord.
Hast. Who knocks?
Mess. One from my Lord Stanley.
Hast. What is't a Clocke?
Mess. Vpon the stroke of foure.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Cannot my Lord Stanley sleepe these tedious Nights?
Mess. So it appeares by that I haue to say.
I do beseech your Lordship pardon me,
For I come hither all vnlookt for.
Hast. Why, what's the matter?
Mess. I presume it hath not slept my Lord
Since midnight: for I haue hardly slept,
Related to me all the ominous Visions
Which may make your Lordship thinke vpon
The state of things to keepe your Lordships pleasure,
If you will presently take Horse with me,
And with all speed post with me toward the North,
To shun the danger that his Soule diuines.
Hast. Go fellow, go, returne vnto thy Lord,
Bid him not fearе these dreames and idle hopes:
His master and my selfe are at one time
As neere in loue, as any two that liue.
And that the Queene, and all her faction,
Were neuer in more deadly hate than now.
Yesterday, at Counsell, she mou'd for Rivers,
Whereat I shooke my head, and bad her know
That I no more esteem'd the Prince his safety
Than his that hates him most.
And for my Dreames, I would he knew that I
Do make account of trusting my Reputation
To the imperfect fancy of a Dreame.
To shun the Boare before he hurt the Beare,
Were to commit a shame worse than the Boare,
And make preuention where no cause of safe.
Go, bid thy Master ride and come to me,
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where, if it please the Boare will vse vs kindly
Mess. Ile go, my Lord, and tell him what you say.
Exit.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Many good morrowes to my Noble Lord.
Hast. Good morrow Catesby: you are early stirring.
What newes, what newes, in this our tottering State?
Cates. It is a reeling World indeed, my Lord.
And I beleeue will neuer stand vpright,
Till Richard weare the Garland of the Realme.
Hast. How weare the Garland?
Dost thou meane the Crowne?
Cates. I, my good Lord.
Hast. Ile haue this Crowne of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before Ile see the Crowne so foule mis-plac'd:
But canst thou guesse, that he doth ayme at it?
Cates. I,

Cate. I [illegible] you forwarde,

Scena Quinta.

Enter Buckingham, Derby, [illegible] Northumberland, Lovell [illegible], and Ratcliffe

Buck. Now Noble Peers the cause why we are met,
Is to determine of the coronation.
In God's Name speak, when is the Royall day?
Stan. Is the King crowned precious Cousin?
Buck. He is, but his Royall Stile is clean forgot.
Stan. Doth any one speak suit to his Majesty?
For your Grace well knows he's humorous.

Buck. Well, Peace be with him that hath made us heavy.

Stan. Peace be with him that hath made us sad.

Enter Catesby.

Buck. But stay, what news? why look'st thou sad?
Cat. My Lord, whole Realms the Peoples hearts were set,
When they might be spoke to.
Buck. Then be bold to tell us.
Cat. Then plainly to your Grace, without more circumstance,
The King is full of grief and melancholy,
Musing how to bestow his Nephews.
Which, to his doubting mind, are full of danger:
Some moody pause upon your Majesty.
Buck. Withdraw yourself a while, I'll go to him,
To feed his humour more: and Lords we'll leave us to our selves a while.
Cat. My Lord will't please you to fall to?
Stan. Taste to the Deer first, then fall to our Venison.
A sickly Stomach, slow digests the best.
Good Digestion waits on appetite,
And health on both.
Buck. Now for this Princely Boy, Lord Lovell,
Madam, your Mother plies him with Queen-like Policy,
And the old Trot with Jesting Courtship,
Have taught him pretty tricks to please the Ladies.
Now Lords, if the Duke of Gloucester were dispatcht,
How would he fleet with such a wanton Dame?
How long would it be ere she were won?
Hast. Not long, if I might advise.
Buck. Then your Lordship thinks it were a short piece of Ware?
Hast. Ay my good Lord.
Buck. Then your Lordship, and the rest of the Lords shall undertake this Business presently after Dinner, before you go out of this Room.
Hast. We shall my Lord.

Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter King Richard, and Traine.

K. Rich. Stand all apart. Cousin of Buckingham.
Buck. My gracious Sovereign.
K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high by the Throne thou sitst,
While in the Mildnesse of my Soule I make
Thee both my Arme, and Friend, and Companion.
Buck. Your Highnesse shall command no more but me,
To be his Servant that your Law hath power,
To punish in Life, and give in Love.
K. Rich. Now for a Peale-blow Gold to deck our Head.
Buck. Remember when I was last Suitor to your Grace,
Whatever I requested of your Grace,
Was granted.
K. Rich. Happily I was not at my Study,
Nor by my Will assured my Speech and Purpose,
Come, leave us, leave us all.
Buck. Some Attendants here.

Manet King and Buckingham.
Lords retire.

K. Rich. What says your Highnesse to my just Request?
Buck. I do remember me, Henry the Sixth
Did prophesie that Richmond should be King,
When Richmond was a little peevish Boy.
A King, perhaps, perhaps, my gracious Lord.
K. Rich. How chance the Prophet could not at that time
Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?
Buck. My Lord, your Promise for the Earldome.
K. Rich. Richmond, when last I was at Exeter,
The Major courteously inviting me
To a Breakfast, how because I was in Hast,
I left him so.
Buck. Still so my gracious Lord.
K. Rich. Sirrah, or I mistake, your Name is Tyrrel.
Tyr. Sir, you have not mistaken.
K. Rich. Are you as true and resolute as forward?
Darest thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
Tyr. Please you,
But I had rather kill two enemies.
K. Rich. Why then you have it, two deep enemies,
Foes to my Rest, and my Sweet Sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon.
Tyrrel, I mean those Bastards in the Tower.
Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.
K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet Musick. Hark, come hither Tyrrel,
Go by this token. Rise, and lend thine Ear.
Whispers.
There is no more but so: say it is done,
And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.
Tyr. I will dispatch it straight.

Exeunt.

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. My Lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late request that you did sound me in.
K. Rich. Well let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.
Buck. I hear the News my Lord.
K. Rich. Stanley he is your Wives Son, well look to it.
Buck. My Lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise,
For which your Honour and your Faith is pawned,
Th'Earldome of Hereford, and the Moveables
Which you have promised I shall possess.
K. Rich. Stanley, look to your Wife, if she convey
Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.
Buck. What says your Highnesse to my just Demand?
K. Rich. I do remember me, Henry the Sixth
Did prophesie that Richmond should be King,
When Richmond was a little peevish Boy.
A King, perhaps, perhaps.
Buck. My gracious Lord.
K. Rich. How chance the Prophet could not at that time
Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?
Buck. My Lord, your Promise for the Earldome.
K. Rich. Richmond, when last I was at Exeter,
The Major courteously inviting me
To a Breakfast, how because I was in Hast,
I left him so.
Buck. Still so my gracious Lord.
K. Rich. Sirrah, or I mistake, your Name is Tyrrel.
Tyr. Sir, you have not mistaken.

Enter Richard and Buckingham, in rotten Armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Rich. Come Cousin,
Canst thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murther thy breath in middle of a word,
And then begin again, and stop again,
As if thou were distraught and mad with terror?
Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep Tragedian,
Speak and look back, and pry on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a Straw,
Intending deep suspect, and gazed Looks
Quake in the colour of a Lover and Swain,
And all these grow to more advantages,
As I can add some Stratagems,
But what, is Catesby gone?
Rich. He is, and see he brings the Mayor along.

Enter the Mayor and Catesby.

Buck. Lord Mayor.
Rich. Look to the Drawbridge there.
Buck. Hearke, a Drumme.
Rich. Catesby, ore the walls, sweet Catesby.
Buck. Lord Mayor, the reason we have sent.
Rich. Look back, defend thee, here are Enemies.
Buck. God and our Innocence defend, and guard vs.

Enter Lovell and Ratcliffe with Hastings head.

Rich. Be patient, they are friends, Ratcliffe and Lovell.
Lovell. Here is the head of that ignoble Traytor,
The dangerous and suspected Hastings.
Rich. So dear I loved the man, that I must weep.
I took him for the plainest harted Gentleman,
And thought him vpright, and just, and true disposed,
And noble stretched vpon the dart of Vertue,
Did subtly and in secret practise,
Murther, as hatefull to the Nature, and the Worke.
Were he not all this season found himself,
Made me his Enemy, hasted not this Traytor
To speed as soone as I did purpose,
How cold my Custome call me to the Reckoning
Of not obserued Leasure, Brookes, Delay,
Answer no more, for that shall be the Newes,
Vile being, as they are, to the Traytors head,
Lovell and Ratcliffe, looke that it be done,
The Enemy is dead, that could haue slaine vs.
Catesby. The Princes both make high account of you,
For they account his head of high import.
Rich. It was well done, for then vnknowne to them,
Gaue you this head, I meane the Protector.
Catesby. And he redeem'd the Citizens with speed.
Rich. First for his Warrant to the Tower gate,
Where how he did abuse me with his Seale,
And vrg'd me in his Act: Proceed in that
Wherein he found me strongly limited,
You know not how to deale with him, but as the Prince,
That you might well haue signified the same
Vnto the Citizens, who haply may
Misconster vs in him, and wayte vs dearely.
Maior. But, my good Lord, your Graces words shall serue,
As well as I had seene, and heard him speake:
And doe not doubt, right Noble Princes both,
But Ile acquaint our duteous Citizens
With all your iust proceedings in this case.
Rich. And to that end we wish'd your Lordship here
T'auoid the Censures of the carping World.
Buck. Which since you come too late of our intent,
Yet witty enough what you are wed to intend.
And so, my good Lord Mayor, we bid farewell.
Exit Mayor.
Rich. Go after, after, Cousin Buckingham.
The Mayor towards Guild-Hall hyes him in all poste:
There at your meetest vantage of the time,
Infer the bastardie of Edward Children.
Tell them, how Edward put to death a Citizen,
Only for saying, he would make his Sonne
Heire to the Crowne, meaning (indeed) his Houle,
Whereof the Shoo thereof, was tearmed so.
Moreouer, vrge his hateful Luxurie,
And bestiall appetite in change of Lust,
Which stretcht vnto their Seruants Daughters, Wiues,
Euen where his raging eye, or sauage heart,
Without controll, lusted to make a prey.
Nay for a need, thus farre come neere my Person.
Tell them, when that my Mother went with Child
Of that insatiate Edward, Noble Yorke,
My Princely Father, then had warres in France,
And by true computation of the time,
Found that the Issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his Lineaments,
Being nothing like the Noble Duke, my Father:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere farre off,
Because, my Lord, you know my Mothers liues.
Buck. Doubt not my Lord, Ile play the Orator,
As if the golden fee, for which I pleade,
Were for my selfe: and so, my Lord adue.
If you will where I shall soone o'retake you,
Where you shall finde me well accompanied
With reuerend Fathers, and well learned Bishops.
Rich. I go, and towards three or foure a Clocke
Looke for the Newes that the Guild-Hall affoords.
Exit Buckingham.
Go Lovell with all speed to Doctor Shaw,
Go thou to Fryer Penker, bid them both
Meet me within this houre at Baynards Castle. Exit.
Now will I goe to take some priuate order,
To draw the Brats of Clarence out of sight,
And to giue order, that no man speake
Hath any time recourse vnto the Princes. Exeunt.

Enter a Scriuener.

Scr. Here's the Indictment of the good Lord Hastings
Which in a set Hand fairely is engrost,
That it may be to day read o're in Paules
And marke how well the sequell hangs together:
Eleuen houres I haue spent to write it ouer,
For yesterday-night by Catesby was it sent me,
The precedent was full as long a doing:
And yet within these fiue houres Hastings liu'd,
Vntainted vnexamin'd, free at liberty.
Heere's a good World the while.
Who is so grosse, that cannot see this palpable deuice?

Yet who to bold, but ſayes he ſees it not?
Bloud is the World, and all will come to nought,
When ſuch ill dealing muſt be ſeene in thought. Exit.

Enter Richard and Buckingham at ſeuerall Doores.

Rich. How now, how now, what ſay the Citizens?
Buck. Now by the holy Mother of our Lord,
The Citizens are mum, ſay not a word.
Rich. Touch'd you the Baſtardie of Edwards Children?
Buck. I did, with his Contract with Lady Lucy,
And his Contract by Deputie in France,
Th'vnſatiate greedineſſe of his deſire,
And his enforcement of the Citie Wiues,
His Tyrannie for Trifles, his owne Baſtardie,
As being got, your Father then in France,
And his reſemblance, being not like the Duke.
Withall, I did inferre your Lineaments,
Being the right Idea of your Father,
Both in your formе, and Noble ineſſe of Minde:
Layd open all your Victories in Scotland.
Your Diſcipline in Warre, Wiſdome in Peace,
Your Bountie, Vertue, faire Humilitie:
Indeed, left nothing fitting for your purpoſe,
Vntoucht, or ſlightly handled in diſcourſe.
And when my Oratorie drew toward end,
I bid them that did loue their Countries good,
Cry, God ſaue Richard, Englands Royall King
Rich. And did they ſo?
Buck. No, ſo God helpe me, they ſpake not a word,
But like dumbe Statues, or breathing Stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale.
Which when I ſaw, I reprehended them,
And ask'd the Maior, what meane this wilfull ſilence?
His anſwer was, the people were not vſed
To be ſpoke to, but by the Recorder.
Then he was vrg'd to tell my Tale againe:
Thus ſayth the Duke, thus hath the Duke inferr'd,
But nothing ſpoke, in warrant from himſelfe.
When he had done, ſome followers of mine owne,
At lower end of the Hall, hurld vp their Caps,
And ſome ten voyces cry'd, God ſaue King Richard:
And thus I tooke the vantage of thoſe few.
Thankes gentle Citizens, and friends, quoth I,
This generall applauſe, and chearefull ſhowt,
Argues your wiſdome, and your loue to Richard
And even here brake off, and came away.
Rich. What tongue-leſſe Blockes were they,
Would they not ſpeake?
Will not the Maior then, and his Brethren, come?
Buck. The Maior is here at hand: intend ſome feare,
Be not you ſpoke with, but by mightie ſuit
And looke you get a Prayer-Booke in your hand,
And ſtand betweene two Church-men, good my Lord,
For on that ground Ile make a holy Deſcant:
And be not eaſily wonne to our requeſts,
Play the Maids part, ſtill anſwer nay, and take it.
Rich. I goe: and if you plead as well for them,
As I can ſay nay to thee for my ſelfe,
No doubt we bring it to a happie iſſue.
Buck. Go, go vp to the Leads, the Lord Maior knocks.

Enter the Maior, and Citizens.

Welcome, my Lord, I dance attendance here,
I thinke the Duke will not be ſpoke withall.

Enter Catesby.

Buck. Now Catesby, what ſayes your Lord to my requeſt?
Catesby. He doth entreat your Grace, my Noble Lord,
To viſit him to morrow, or next day
He is within, with two right reuerend Fathers,
Diuinely bent to Meditation,
And in no Worldly ſuites would he be moued,
To draw him from his holy Exerciſe.
Buck. Returne, good Catesby, to the gracious Duke,
Tell him, my ſelfe, the Maior and Aldermen,
In deepe deſignes, in matter of great moment,
No leſſe importing then our generall good,
Are come to haue ſome conference with his Grace.
Catesby. Ile ſignifie ſo much vnto him ſtraight. Exit
Buck. Ah ha, my Lord, this Prince is not an Edward,
He is not lulling on a lewd Loue-Bed,
But on his Knees, at Meditation
Not dallying with a Brace of Curtizans,
But meditating with two deepe Diuines
Not ſleeping, to engroſſe his idle Body,
But praying, to enrich his watchfull Soule
Happie were England, would this vertuous Prince
Take on his Grace the Soueraignetie thereof.
But ſure I feare we ſhall not winne him to it.
Maior. Marry God defend his Grace ſhould ſay vs nay.
Buck. I feare he will: here Catesby comes againe

Enter Catesby

Now Catesby, what ſayes his Grace?
Catesby. He wonders to what end you haue aſſembled
Such troopes of Citizens, to come to him,
His Grace not being warn'd thereof before:
He feares, my Lord, you meane no good to him.
Buck. Sorry I am, my Noble Couſin ſhould
Suſpect me, that I meane no good to him.
By Heauen, we come to him in perfit loue,
And ſo once more returne and tell his Grace. Exit
When holy and deuout Religious men
Are at their Beades, 'tis much to draw them thence,
So ſweet is zealous Contemplation.

Enter Richard aloft, betweene two Biſhops.

Maior. See where his Grace ſtands, 'tweene two Clergie men.
Buck. Two Props of Vertue, for a Chriſtian Prince,
To ſtay him from the fall of Vanitie
And ſee a Booke of Prayer in his hand,
True Ornaments to know a holy man.
Famous Plantagenet, moſt gracious Prince,
Lend fauourable eare to our requeſts,
And pardon vs the interruption
Of thy Deuotion, and right Chriſtian Zeale.
Rich. My Lord, there needes no ſuch Apologie
I doe beſeech your Grace to pardon me,
Who earneſt in the ſeruice of my God,
Deferr'd the viſitation of my friends.
But leauing this, what is your Graces pleaſure?
Buck. Euen that (I hope) which pleaſeth God aboue,
And all good men, of this vngouerned Ile
Rich. I doe ſuſpect I haue done ſome offence,
That ſeemes vngracious in the Cityes eye,
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. Your haue,my Lord
Would it might please your Grace,
On our entreaties to amend your fault
Rich. Before I therefore breathe I was Guilty an Land.
Buck. I know then,it is your fault,that you resigne
The Supreme Seat,the Throne Maiesticall,
The Scepter'd Office of your Ancestors,
Your State of Fortune,and your Deaw of Birth,
The Lineall Glory of your Royall House,
To the corrupt and base lust Stocke;
Which heere we waite to our Coronation,
The Noble Isle doth want his proper Limmes
His Face defac'd with hands of forraine,
His Royall State,whereon the Barbarous Gothe
Or darke Forgetfulnesse,or deepe Oblivion,
Which to recure,we heartily solicite
Your gracious selfe to take on you the charge
And Kingly Gouernment of this your Land
Not as Protector,Steward,Substitute,
Or lowly Factor for another gaine,
But as successiue,Heire,and Seed to Bloud,
Your Right of Birth,your Empire,your owne Due,
Feare not,consented with the Citizens
Your worthy Worshipfull Companions,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just Cause come I to moue your Grace.
Rich. I cannot tell if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speake in your reproofe,
Best fitteth my Degree or your Condition,
If not to answer,you might haply think,
Tongue-tide ambition not replying yeelded
To beare the Golden Yoake of Soueraignes,
Which fondly you would here impose on me,
If to reproue you for but this,I do,
Softly,as doth become a mother to,
Intending deafe,I am to answer thus,
Apt I to stirre,as they are slow to mooue,
Drawne with the Hooke,or broken with the Whip,
Your louing Kindnesse,my Coldnesse,but my Feares
Vrge speedie purpose vnto speedie effects.
For Buttailes we can take away,
And what my Fortune were to the Crowne,
As vnexpected Guests,and vndeserued Birth,
Yet so much is my poore Heart of Spirit,
So much my Poorenesse doth detects,
That I would shrink into a Graue from my Greatnesse,
Knowing I lacke to bruize the noble Sea,
That doth my Graue be ouer it to bend,
And in the vapour of my Glory smother'd.
But God be thank'd,there is no need of me,
And much I need to hope you,were there need
The Royall Tree hath left vs Royall Fruit,
Which mellowed by the stealing houres of time,
Will well become the Seate of Maiestie,
And make,no doubt vs happy by his Reigne.
On him I lay that you would lay on me,
The right and Fortune of his happie Starres,
Which God defend that I should wring from him.
Buck. Your Brother is imbarqued,we entreat your Grace,
Immediately to take some resolute Course,
And come immediately to Guild-hall,
And there at Common Counsell,
You shall heare your Brothers Sonne,
Vnto that Earldome,your Brothers Sonne,
Vnto the Title,but not to the Loue of Lords.
For he is not contract to Lady Anne,
Your Mother lives a Witnesse to his Vowes;
And afterward by substitute betroth'd
To Bona Sister to the King of France
These both put off,a poore Petitioner,
A Care-crasd Mother to a many Sonnes,
A Beauty-waning,and distressed Widow,
Euen in the after-noone of her best dayes,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton Eye,
Seduc'd the pitch,and height of his degree,
To base declension,and loath'd Bigamie
By her,in his vnlawfull Bed,he got
This Edward whom our Manners call the Prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Saue that for reuerence to some alone,
I giue a sparing limit to my Tongue.
Then good my Lord,take to your Royall selfe
This proffer'd benefit of Dignitie:
Let not soft-harted Eyes and Teares withall,
Yet to draw on your Noble Ancestors
From the resolued point of their true Temes,
Vnto a crased queint crooked course.
Maior. Do good my Lord,your Citizens entreat you
Buck. Refuse not,mighty Lord,this proffered loue.
Card. O make them ioyfull,grant their lawfull suit.
Rich. Alas,why would you heape this Care on me?
I am vnfit for State and Maiestie.
I do beseech you,take it not amisse,
I cannot,nor I will not yeeld to you.
Buck. If you refuse it,as in loue and zeale,
Loth to depose the Child,your Brothers Sonne,
As we well know your tender-mind to be,
Not mou'd with glory,but smooth Iustice plea,
And nothing more then loue and zeale doth moue
Our Suit vnfeigned on your Royall House,
Your mercie-dallying Scruples shall not driue
The Scope of our Requests to your Remorse.
Rich. Since you will buckle Fortune on my back,
To beare her burthen,whereas I shall or no,
I must haue patience to endure the Load:
But if black Scandall,or foule-faced Reproach,
Attend the sequele of your Imposition,
Your meere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and staines thereof;
For God doth know,and you may partly see,
How farre I am from the desire of this.
Maior. God blesse your Grace,we see it,and will say it.
Rich. In saying so,you shall not say the truth.
Buck. Then I salute you with this Royall Title,
Long liue King Richard,England worthie King.
All. Amen.
Buck. To morrow may it please you to be Crowned.
Rich. Euen when you please,for you will haue it so.

To

Buck. To morrow then we will attend your Grace,
And so most joyfully we take our leave.
Rich. Come, let's to our holy Worke againe.
Farewell my Cousins, farewell gentle friends. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Queene Anne, Duchesse of Clarence, the Duchesse of Yorke, and Marquesse Dorset.

Duch. Yorke. Who meets us heere?
My Niece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind Aunt of Gloster?
Now, for my life, she's wandring to the Tower,
On pure heart-sorrow, to greet the new Queene.
Deere Cousin, welcome.
Anne. God give your Graces both a happy
And gracious day.
Q. Mar. As much to you, good Sister: whither away?
Anne. No farther then the Tower, and as I guesse,
Upon the like devotion as your selves,
To gratulate the gentle Princes there.
Q. Kind Sister thankes, we'll enter all together:

Enter the Lieutenant.

And in good time, heere the Lieutenant comes.
Master Lieutenant, pray you by your leave,
How doth the Prince, and my young Sonne of Yorke?
Lieu. Right well deare Madame: by your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them.
The King hath strictly charg'd the contrary.
Q. The King? who's that?
Lieu. I meane, the Lord Protector.
Q. The Lord protect him from that Kingly Title.
Hath he set bounds betweene their Love and me?
I am their Mother, who shall barre me from them?
Duch. Yorke. I am their Fathers Mother, I will see them.
Anne. Their Aunt I am in law, in loue to their Mother:
The bring me to their sports, it's not to stay.
And pardon us, Sweet Prince, that we have spoke.
Lieu. No Madame, no, I may not leave it so;
I am bound by Oath, and therefore pardon me.
Exit Lieutenant.

Enter Stanley.

Stanley. Let me but meet you Ladies one houre hence,
And I'le salute your Grace of Yorke as Mother,
And reverend looker on of two faire Queenes.
Come Madame, you must straight to Westminster,
There to be crowned Richard's Royall Queene.
Q. Ah, cut my Lace asunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoone with this dead-killing newes.
Anne. Despightful tidings: O unpleasing newes.
Dor. Be of good cheare: Mother, how fares your Grace?
Q. O Dorset, speake not to me, get thee gone,
Death and Destruction dogge thee at thy heeles,
Thy Mothers Name is ominous to Children.
If thou wilt out-strip Death, go crosse the Seas,
And live with Richmond, from the reach of hell:
Go hie thee, hie thee from this slaughter-house,
Least thou encrease the number of the dead,
And make me curse the houre thou wer't borne.
Nor Mother, Wife, nor England's Queene.
Stanley, but to the end that you shall know
Their Lives depend upon your carriage.
Take comfort with you, and stage your sorrow.
To this most gracious message do I come.
And for the same Lord Stanley sends to you,
I would be loth to greet you ouer-ewhere
Be warn'd and take my counsell when you will.
Dor. Farewell sad Mother: O unhappy Sonne of Marke,
O my accursed Womb, the bed of Death
A Cockatrice hast thou hatch't to the World,
Whose unavoided eye is murtherous.
Stan. Come Madame, come, I in all hast was sent.
Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.
O would to God that the inclusive Verge
Of Golden Metall, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot Steele, to sear me to the braine.
Anointed let me be with deadly Venome,
And dye ere men can say, God save the Queene.
Q. Go, go poore soule, I envy not thy glory,
To feed my humour, wish thee no advancement.
Anne. Nor none that live, I hope, except I will.
Now farewell Enemy, and I chuse to live,
Who scornes a gift that he did meane to give.
Well, bye-gones must be left, and hopes to come,
Have their full Mintage of true-current Joy.
Dor. Whither will you go?
Anne. Where nothing can befall me, but my loathed absence.
Dor. I go to Richmond, every houre more joyfull.
Anne. And I to Sanctuary, there to wish thee with me.
I fear me two such Houses of one Name,
Both Princes, and both Richard's, both my Friends,
Have caused this deepe exchange of thy remove.
Dor. Perceive you any harme in Richmond?
Anne. No more than I do feare in you my Lord.
Dor. Farewell, gentle Mother, comfort Queene Elizabeth.
Anne. And I will pray for thee, and wish thee well.
Dor. I go to make the second Act of our happy Peace.
Anne. And I unto the first Act of Warre and Blood.
Go to Sanctuary, there I'le visit you.
I to my grave, where peace and rest lye with me.
Poore Queene, how apt art thou to obtain Matches.
Thy Husband and his Brother hardly cold,
Whose bleeding Wounds did seeme to reproach
Unto the Murtherer, that thou wer't his Bride.
Thy Daughter Contracted to the Lord of Richmond,
Whose Father slaine unjustly by this Duke,
Scarce dry from Teares of thine, mixt with the Teares
Of many Widowes, every one with cause
Weeping thy Husbands untimely Fate:
All this divorc'd from Richmond, and contracted
To this Duke Murtherer, this false Duke of Gloster,
Hated of God, abhorred of his Angels,
Scorned of Nature, Warre, Law, and Humanity.
Can Peace be heard of? Can she be a Wife
And live in Reputation that is one?
I feare it will: Then I will not envy her,
For her good hap, till Gloster be unhorst,
And Richmond Crowned.

Scena Secunda.

Sound a Sonet. Enter Richard in pompe, Duc-
[illegible] as in progresse.

Rich. Stand by the state, Cousin of Buckingham.
Buck. My gracious Soueraigne.
Rich. Giue me your hand, Sound
Thus high by your assistance,
[illegible]
But shall we weare these honors for a day?
Or shall they last, and we rejoyce in them?
Buck. Still liue they, and for euer may they last.
Rich. Ah Buckingham, now do I play the Touch,
To try if thou be current Gold indeed:
Young Edward lines, hope say'st thou, hope he doth,
Buck. My Lord.
Rich. Why Buckingham, I say I would he did.
Buck. My gracious Soueraigne, I do beleeue you,
[illegible]
Rich. Come, cousin,
[illegible]
And I am made of stone
What say you now? what meanes that blush, now speake
Buck. Your Grace may stay me, my heart would burst
Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindnesse freezes:
[illegible]
Buck. Your Grace mistakes, but giue me leaue my Lord,
[illegible]
I will resolue you herein presently. Exit.
Cate. The King is angry, see he gnaws his lip.
Rich. [illegible]
And vnrespected by his enemies,
[illegible]
Is in the armes of ease, and of delight,
[illegible]
Then restlesse meditation hedged in,
Euen with the wilfull fatnesse of a Swine.
Cate. Fortune and Victory sit on thy helme.
Rich. All men are ransomed, once more I talke with Buckingham.
Exit.
Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done,
The most arch deed of piteous massacre
That euer yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborne
To do this peece of ruthfull butchery,
Albeit they were flesht vpon the deed,
Yet all their eyes were humbled in compassion,
And when they parted from the smothered babes,
They could not speake, and so departed sadly:
Oh thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes,
Thus, thus, quoth Forrest, girdling one another
Within their innocent alabaster armes:
Their lips were foure red roses on a stalke,
And in their summer beauty kist each other.
A booke of prayers on their pillow lay,
Which once, quoth Forrest, almost changed my mind,
But O the deuil, there the villaine stopt,
When Dighton thus told on, we smothered
The most replenished sweet worke of Nature,
That from the prime creation ere she framed.
Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse,
They could not speake, and so I left them both,
To bring this tidings to the bloody King.
And here he comes. All health my Soueraigne Lord.

Enter King.

King. Kinsman, vouchsafe to stand aside a while.
Stay I see my noble Lord the Marquesse Dorset
As I remember, he was lately
[illegible]
Rich. Come he or else I will not meddle with him.
King. My Lord of Ely.
Ely. My gracious Lord.
King. Let vpon your life
I will haue order for her keeping close.
Inquire me out some meane poore Gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence Daughter.
The boy is foolish, and I feare not him.
Looke how thou dreamst I say againe, giue out
That Anne, my Queene, is sicke, and like to dye.
About it, for it stands me much vpon
To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage me.
I must be married to my Brothers Daughter,
Or else my Kingdome stands on brittle Glasse
Murther her Brothers, and then marry her,
Vncertaine way of gaine. But I am in
So farre in blood, that sin will pluck on sin,
Tear-falling Pitty dwels not in this eye.

Enter Tyrrel.

Is thy Name Tyrrel?
Tyr. Iames Tyrrel, and your most obedient subiect.
Rich. Art thou indeed?
Tyr. Prooue me, my gracious Lord.
Rich. Dar'st thou resolue to kill a friend of mine?
Tyr. Please you
But I had rather kill two enemies.
Rich. Why then thou hast it: two deepe enemies,
Foes to my rest and my sweet sleeps disturbers,
Are they that I would haue thee deale vpon
Tyrrel, I meane those bastards in the Tower.
Tyr. Let me haue open meanes to come to them,
And soone I'll rid you from the feare of them.
Rich. Thou sing'st sweet Musicke.
Harke, come hither Tyrrel,
Go by this token: rise, and lend thine Eare. Whispers
There is no more but so: say it is done,
And I will loue thee, and prefer thee for it.
Tyr. I will dispatch it straight. Exit

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. My Lord I haue considered in my mind,
The late request that you did sound me in.
Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond
Buck. I hear the newes my Lord.
Rich. Stanley, he is your Wifes Sonne: well, looke vnto it.
Buck. My Lord I claime the gift my due by promise,
For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd;
Th' Earldome of Hereford, and the moueables,
Which you haue promis'd I shall possesse.
Rich. Stanley, looke to your Wife: if she conuey
Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.
Buck. What says your Highnesse to my just request?
Rich. I do remember me, Henry the Sixt
Did prophesie, that Richmond should be King,
When Richmond was a little peeuish Boy.
A King perhaps.
Buck. My gracious Soueraigne,
Rich. Tut, tut, thou troublest me, I am not in the vaine. Exit
Buck. And is it thus? repayes he my deepe seruice
With such contempt? made I him King for this?
O let me thinke on Hastings, and be gone
To Brecknock, while my fearefull head is on. Exit.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody Act is done,
The most arch deed of piteous massacre

That

That ever yet this Land was guilty of.
Dighton and Forrest who I wot were sent
To do this peece of ruthful Butchery,
Albeit they were flesht Villaines bloody Doggs,
Melted with tenderneste, and mild compassion,
Wept like to Children, in their deaths sad Story.
O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle Babes
Thus, thus (quoth Forrest) girdling one another
Within their Alabaster innocent Armes
Their lips were foure red Roses on a stalke,
And in their Summer beauty kist each other.
A Booke of Prayers on their pure hearts,
Which one (quoth Forrest) almost changes my minde
But oh the Divell, there the villaine stept
When Dighton thus told on, we wept and wept
The most relentlesse Tyrrans wanting Nature,
That from the prime Creation ere he framed,
Hewe'bor'ne gone with such remorse, Remorse,
They could not speake and I (true) could not weep,
To beare this yong generation dead by.

Enter Ratcliffe.

And heere he comes. All health my Soveraigne Lord
Rich. Kinde Catesby, thou art welcome, what's the newes?
Cat. Doubt not my Lord, but all goes as you wish.
I beget your happinesse, be't by right or wrong,
For rest is none.
Rich. But can'st thou see them dead.
Cat. I did my Lord.
Rich. And buried gentle Tyrrell.
Tyr. The Chaplaine of the Tower hath buried them,
But where (to say the truth) I do not know.
Rich. Come to me Tyrrell soone, and after supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death,
Meane time but thinke how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
Farewell till then.
Tyr. I humbly take my leave.
Rich. The Sonne of Clarence have I pent up close,
His daughter meanely have I matcht in marriage,
The Sonnes of Edward sleepe in Abrahams bosome,
And Anne my wife hath bid this world good night.
Now for I know the Brittaine Richmond aymes
At yong Elizabeth my brothers daughter
And by that knot lookes proudly on the Crowne,
To her goes I a hollow breaking wooer.

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Good or bad newes, that thou com'st in so bluntly?
Rat. Bad newes my Lord, Morton is fled to Richmond,
And the swift winged Northern Gentlemen
Have all forsook me, and their powers encreased
To serve in aide of Richmond.
Rich. By what guide lies he hither?
Rat. By the guide
The quicking Daunce of an unsetled Fancy
Come, I have learn'd, that fearefull commenting
Is leaden seruitor to dull delay.
Delay leades impotent and snaile-paced Beggery
Then heere expedient be my wings.
Ioues Mercury and Herald for a King.
Go muster men: My counsaile is my Sheild,
We must be breefe, when Traitors braue the Field.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. So now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Heere in these confines slily have I lurkt,
To watch the waning of mine enemies.
A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragicall.
Withdraw thee wretched Margaret, who comes heere?

Enter Duchesse and Queene.

Duch. Ah my poore Princes! ah my tender babes,
My unblowed flowers, new appearing sweets,
If yet your gentle soules flye in the Aire,
And be not fixt in doome perpetuall,
Hover about me with your ayery wings,
And heare your mothers lamentation.
Mar. Hover about her; say that right for right
Hath dimmed your infant morne to aged night.
Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voyce,
That my woe-wearied tongue is still and mute.
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Plantagenet, I see, and they, and I,
Are but shadowes of our wonted selves.
Thou monarch Richard, ill become a throne.
Queene. Ah that deep Hell which swallowed up these lambes,
And hot'ned not with this sad Mothers sighes,
Keepe me enclosed in some senselesse Tombe,
Where heedles of the dreadfull Trumpets sound,
Ye may be ready make a quick resurrection.
Oh Princely Richard, ornament of Honour,
Man for some other finger to weare upon,
By heaven I will not weep, nor speake with thee,
Nor curse the beauty of the hand that gave
The bitter wound that makes these eyes look dimme.
I had an Husband till a Richard took him,
A Child, till Richard murdered him;
I was Rutland too, till loving Richard slew him.
Mar. Thou had'st a Crowne too,
And Richard stole the[m]
From forth the kennell of thy wombe hath crept
A Hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death.
That Dogge, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To worry Lambes as gaping for the Lyon,
That foule defacer of Gods handy worke,
That reigns in gallant flesh, and rots by kind,
That excellent grand Tyrant of the earth,
Thy wombe let loose to chase us to our graves.
O upright, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee that this carnall Cur

Preys.

Praies on the ill of her Mother's body
And makes her Pue-fellow with others moane.
Dut. O Harris a teare to my woes
God w[illegible] me, [illegible]
Mar. [illegible] to revenge,
[illegible]
[illegible] Richard,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Rich. You speake too bitterly.
Dor. Heare me a word
For I shall never speake to thee againe.
Rich. So.
Dor. Either thou wilt die, by Gods just ordinance
Ere from this warre thou turne a Conqueror
Or I with greefe and extreame Age shall perish,
And never more behold thy face againe
Therefore take with thee my most greevous Curse,
Which in the day of battell tyre thee more
Than all the compleat Armour that thou wear'st
My Prayers on the adverse party light,
And there the milke of teares of Edwards Children,
Poure'd in the Spirits of thine Enemies,
And make them Weake and Vanquish:
Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end
Shame serves thy life, and doleful is thy end. Exit.
Qu. I had an Image cursed I would beseech
And bid me curse my selfe, and I will curse
And leave me, I may Am entoo thee.
Rich. Stay Madam I must talke a word with you.
Qu. I have no more sonnes of the Royall blood
For thee to slaughter, for my Daughters (Richard)
They shall be praying Nunnes, not weeping Queenes:
And therefore needs not moan for their harmes.
Rich. You have a daughter called Elizabeth,
Vertuous and Faire, Royall and Gracious?
Qu. And must the daughter of Edward live,
Whilst her poore mother, (like a banish'd Woman)
Make her Servant to her Table, her Subject to her Throne,
Tender my Selfe as farre to Edwards bed,
Throw off my Infancy, so she may live
So she may live a scarre of bleeding slaughter,
I will confesse she was not Edwards daughter
Rich. Wrong not her Birth, she is a Royall Princesse.
Qu. To save her life, I'le say she is not so.
Rich. Her life is never safe, but by her birth.
Qu. And only in that safety, died her Brothers.
Rich. Lo at their Birth good starres were opposite
Qu. No, to their lives, ill Friends were contrary.
Rich. All unavoided is the doome of Destiny.
Qu. True when avoyded grace makes Destiny.
My babes were destin'd to a fairer death,
If grace had blest thee with a fairer life
Rich. You speake as if that I had slaine my Cosins?
Qu. Cosins indeed, and by their Uncle cozened,
Of Comfort, Kingdome, kindred, Freedome, Life,
Whose hand soever lanc'd their tender hearts,
Thy head (all indirectly) gave direction
No doubt the murd'rous knife was dull and blunt,
Till it was whetted on thy stone hard heart,
To revell in the Intrailes of my Lambes.
But that thy life of greefe, makes mine greete tame,
My tongue should to thy eares not name my boyes,
Till that my Nayles were anchor'd in thine eyes
And I in such a desperate Bay of death,
Like a poore Barke, of sailes and tackling reft,
Rush all to peeces on thy Rocky bosome.
Rich. Madam, no ruth or pitty in my enterprize
And dangerous success of bloody warres,
As I intend more good to you and yours,
Than ever you and yours by me were harm'd
Qu. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,
To be discovered, that can do me good.
Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle Lady
Qu. Vp to some Scaffold there to lose their heads.
Rich. Vnto the dignity and height of Fortune,
Then Imperiall Type of this earths glory.
Qu. Flatter my sorrow with report of it
Tell me, what State, what Dignity, what Honor,
Canst thou demise to any child of mine.
Rich. Even all I have; yea, and my selfe and all,
Will I withall endow a child of thine
So in the Lethe of thy angry soule,
Thou drowne the sad remembrance of those wrongs,
Which thou supposest I have done to thee.
Qu. Be brief, lest that the processe of thy kindnesse
Last longer telling, then thy kindnesse date
Rich. Then know,
That from my Soule, I love thy Daughter.
Qu. My daughters Mother thinkes it with her soule
Rich. What do you think?
Qu. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soule
So from thy Soules love didst thou love her Brothers,
And from my heart-tree, I doe thanke thee for it
Rich. Be brief, it is too hard to confound my meaning:
I meane that with my Soule I love thy daughter,
And do intend to make her Queene of England
Qu. Well then, who shall be King but her King
Rich. Even he that makes her Queene
Who else should be?
Qu. What thou?
Rich. Even so: How think you of it?
Qu. How can it be so with her?
Rich. Even well inough, as case of you,
And she being her self inamored with her honour
Qu. And wilt thou learne of me?
Rich. Madam with all my heart
Qu. Send to her by the man that slew her Brothers,
A paire of bleeding hearts: thereon ingrave
Edward and Yorke, then haply will she weepe
Therefore present to her, as sometime Margaret
Did to thy Father, steept in Rutlands blood,
A handkercheefe, which say to her did drayne
The purple sappe from her sweet Brothers body,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withall
If this profer'd meane of peace not to love,
Send her a Letter of thy Noble deeds
Tell her thou mad'st away her Vncle Clarence,
Her Vncle Rivers (I and for her sake)
Mad'st quick conveyance with her good Aunt Anne
Dor. You mocke me Madam, this not the way
To win your daughter.
Qu. There is no other way,
Vnles thou could'st put on some other shape,
And not be Richard that hath done all this
Rich. Say that I did all this for love of her.
Qu. Nay then indeed she cannot choose but hate thee
Having bought love, with such a bloody spoyle.
Rich. Looke what is done, cannot be now amended.
Men shall deale unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours gives leysure to repent.
If I did take the Kingdome from your Sonnes,
To make amends, Ile give it to your daughter.
If I have kill'd the issue of your wombe,
To quicken your increase I will beget
Mine issue of your blood upon your Daughter
A Grandams name is little lesse in love,
Than is the doting Title of a Mother
They are as Children but one steppe below,
Even of your mettall, of your very blood
Of all one paine, save for a night of groanes
Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.
Your Children were vexation to your youth,

But

[illegible] shall be a comfort to your Age,
[illegible] Sonne, is made a Sonne and a King,
And by that [illegible] your Daughter is made Queene
[illegible] make you greater than I would,
[illegible] kept back this Counsaile as I can.
[illegible] Sonne, that was a fearefull foule
[illegible] consented Peppers in Fortune loue,
[illegible] Alliance, quickly shall I call home
[illegible] Promotion, and great Dignity
[illegible] that calles your beauteous Daughter Wife,
Familiarly shee calles [illegible] Darling Brother.
Againe shee must be Mother to a King:
And all these ioyes were dreadfull Tunes.
Repayre with these Robes of Content.
[illegible] many good dayes to see:
The liquid drops of teares that you haue shed,
Shall come againe, transformd to Orient Pearle,
Aduantaging their Loue, with interest
Ten-times double gaine of happinesse.
Goe then my Mother, to thy Daughter go,
Make bed her bashful yeares with your experience,
Prepare her eares to heare a Woers Tale,
Put in her tender heart, th'aspiring Flame
Of Golden Soueraignty: Acquaint the Princesse
With the sweet ioyes of Marriage-loyes:
And when this Arme of mine hath chastised
The [illegible] England, dear-bought Queene,
Bound with Triumphant Garlands will I come,
And leade thy daughter to a Conqueror's bed.
To whom I will retaile my Conquest wonne,
And she shall be sole Victoresse, Cæsars Cæsar.

Qu. What were I best to say, her Fathers Brother
Would be her Lord? Or shall I say her Vnkle?
Or he that slew her Brothers, and her Vnkles?
Vnder what Title shall I woo for thee,
That God, the Law, my Honor and her Loue,
Can make seeme pleasing to her tender yeares?

Rich. Infer faire England's peace by this Alliance.

Qu. Which she shall purchase with still lasting warre.

Rich. Tell her the King that may command, intreates

Qu. That at her hands which the kings King forbids.

Rich. Say that she shall be Queene, and Mighty Queene.

Qu. To waile the Title, as her Mother doth.

Rich. Say I will loue her euerlastingly.

Qu. But how long shall that title euer last?

Rich. Sweetly in force vnto her faire liues end.

Qu. But how long fairely shall her sweet life last?

Rich. As long as Heauen and Nature lengthens it.

Qu. As long as Hell and Richard likes of it.

Rich. Say I her Soueraigne, am her Subiect low.

Qu. But she your Subiect, abhorres such Soueraignty.

Rich. Be eloquent in my behalfe to her.

Qu. An honest tale, speeds best, being plainly told.

Rich. Then plainly to her, tell my louing tale.

Qu. Plaine and not honest, is too harsh a style.

Rich. Your reasons are too shallow, and too quicke.

Qu. O no, my Reasons are too deepe and dead,
Too deepe and dead (poore Infants) in their graues.

Rich. Harpe on it still shall I, till heart-strings breake.

Qu. Harpe not on that string Madam, that is past.

Rich. Now by my George, my Garter, and my Crowne.

Qu. Prophan'd, dishonor'd, and the third vsurpt.

Rich. I sweare.

Qu. By nothing, for this is no Oath.
Thy George prophan'd, hath lost his Lordly Honor;
Thy Garter blemish'd, pawn'd his Knightly Vertue;
Thy Crowne vsurp'd, disgrac'd his Kingly Glory.
If something thou would'st sweare to be beleeu'd,
Sweare then by something, that thou hast not wronged.

Rich. Then by my Selfe.

Qu. Thy Selfe, is selfe-misvs'd.

Rich. Now by the World.

Qu. 'Tis full of thy foule wrongs.

Rich. My Fathers death.

Qu. Thy life hath it dishonor'd.

Rich. Why then, by Heauen.

Qu. Heauens wrong is most of all:
If thou didst feare to breake an Oath with him,
The vnity the King my husband made,
Thou hadst not broken, nor my Brothers died.
If thou hadst fear'd to breake an oath by him,
Th'Imperiall mettall, circling now thy head,
Had grac'd the tender temples of my Child,
And both the Princes had bene breathing heere,
Which now two tender Bed-fellowes for dust,
Thy broken Faith hath made the prey for Wormes.
What can'st thou sweare by now.

Rich. The time to come.

Qu. That thou hast wronged in the time ore-past:
For I my selfe haue many teares to wash
Hereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.
The Children liue, whose Fathers thou hast slaughter'd,
Vngouern'd youth, to waile it with their age.
The Parents liue, whose Children thou hast butcher'd,
Old barren Plants, to waile it with their Age.
Sweare not by time to come, for that thou hast
Misvs'd ere vs'd, by times ill-vs'd repast.

Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent:
So thrive I in my dangerous Affayres
Of hostile Armes. My selfe, my selfe confound.
Heauen, and Fortune barre me happy houres:
Day yeeld me not thy light; nor Night, thy rest.
Be opposite all Planets of good lucke
To my proceeding, if with deere hearts loue,
Immaculate deuotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous Princely daughter.
In her, consists my Happinesse and thine:
Without her, followes to my selfe, and thee
Her selfe, the Land, and many a Christian soule,
Death, Desolation, Ruine, and Decay.
It cannot be auoyded but by this.
It will not be auoyded but by this.
Therefore deare Mother (I must call you so)
Be the Attorney of my loue to her.
Pleade what I will be, not what I haue beene;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserue.
Vrge the Necessity and state of times,
And be not peeuish found, in great Designes.

Qu. Shall I be tempted of the Diuel thus?

Rich. I, if the Diuell tempt you to do good.

Qu. Shall I forget my selfe, to be my selfe.

Rich. I, if your selfes remembrance wrong your selfe.

Qu. Yet thou didst kil my Children.

Rich. But in your daughters wombe I bury them.
Where in that Nest of Spicery they will breed
Selues of themselues, to your recomforture.

Qu. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

Rich. And be a happy Mother by the deed.

Qu. I go, write to me very shortly,
And you shal vnderstand from me her mind. Exit Q.

Rich. Beare her my true loues kisse, and so farewell.
Relenting Foole, and shallow-changing Woman.

How

How now, what newes?

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. Most mighty Soueraigne, on the Westerne Coast
Rideth a puissant Nauie: to our Shores
Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
Vnarm'd, and vnresolu'd to beat them backe:
'Tis thought that Richmond is their Admirall:
And there they hull, expecting but the aide
Of Buckingham to welcome them ashore.
Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the Duke of Norfolke:
Ratcliffe thy selfe, or Catesby where is he?
Cat. Here my good Lord.
Rich. Catesby, flye to the Duke.
Cat. I will, my Lord, with all conuenient haste.
Rich. Catesby come hither, post to Salisbury:
When thou com'st thither, (Dull vnmindfull Villaine,
Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the Duke?)
Cat. First, mighty Liege, tell me your Highnesse pleasure,
What from your Grace I shall deliuer to him.
Rich. O true, good Catesby: bid him leuie straight
The greatest strength and power that he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.
Cat. I goe. Exit.
Rat. What, may it please you, shall I doe at Salisbury?
Rich. Why what would'st thou doe there, before I goe?
Rat. Your Highnesse told me I should poste before.
Rich. My mind is chang'd.

Enter Lord Stanley.

Stanley, what newes with you?
Stan. None good my Liege to please you with the hearing,
Nor none so bad, but it well may be reported.
Rich. Hoy-day, a Riddle, neither good nor bad.
What need'st thou run so many miles about,
When thou may'st tell thy Tale the neerest way?
Once more, what newes?
Stan. Richmond is on the Seas.
Rich. There let him sinke, and be the Seas on him,
White-liuer'd Runnagate, what doth he there?
Stan. I know not, mighty Soueraigne, but by guesse.
Rich. Well, as you guesse.
Stan. Stirr'd vp by Dorset, Buckingham and Morton,
He makes for England, here to claime the Crowne.
Rich. Is the Chayre empty? is the Sword vnsway'd?
Is the King dead? the Empire vnpossest?
What Heire of York is there aliue, but we?
And who is England's King but great Yorkes Heire?
Then tell me what makes he vpon the Seas?
Stan. Vnlesse for that he comes to be your Liege,
You cannot guesse wherefore the Welchman comes.
Thinke you my Lord, this little Prating Bretaine
Can purchase such a Troope to come to shore,
Not indued with Visards, as I feare,
Stan. No mighty Liege, therefore mistrust me not.
Rich. Where is thy Power then, to beat him back?
Where be thy Tenants and thy followers?
Are they not now vpon the Westerne Shore,
Safe-conducting the Rebels from their Ships?
Stan. No, my good Lord, my Friends are in the North.
Rich. Cold friends to me: what do they in the North,
When they should serue their Soueraigne in the West?

Stan. They haue not been commanded, mighty King.
Pleaseth your Maiestie to giue me leaue,
Ile muster vp my friends, and meet your Grace,
Where, and what time your Maiestie shall please.
Rich. I thou wouldst rather be gone, to ioyne with Richmond
But Ile not trust thee.
Stan. Most mighty Soueraigne,
You haue no cause to hold my friendship doubtfull,
I euer was, and euer will be true.
Rich. Well, go muster men: but leaue behind
Your Sonne George Stanley. Looke your heart be firme,
Or else his Heads assurance is but fraile.
Stan. So deale with him, as I prooue true to you.
Exit Stanley.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My gracious Soueraigne, now in Deuonshire,
As I by friends am well aduertised,
Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughtie Prelate,
Bishop of Exeter his Brother,
With many more Confederates, are in Armes.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. In Kent my Liege the Guilfords are in Armes,
And euery houre more Competitors
Flocke to the Rebels, and their power growes strong.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. My Lord, the Armie of great Buckingham
Rich. Out on ye, Owles, nothing but songs of Death
He strikes him.
There take thou that, till thou bring better newes.
Mes. The newes I haue to tell your Maiestie,
Is, that by sudden Floods, and fall of Waters,
Buckingham's Armie is dispersed and scattered,
And he himselfe wandred away alone,
No man knowes where.
Rich. I cry thee mercie:
There is my Purse to cure that Blow of thine.
Hath any well-aduised friend proclaymed
Reward to him that brings the Traytor in?
Mes. Such Proclamation hath been made, my Lord.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. Sir Thomas Louell and Lord Marquesse Dorset,
'Tis said my Liege, in Yorkeshire are in Armes:
But this good comfort bring I to your Highnesse,
The Britaine Nauie is dispersed by Tempest.
Richmond in Dorsetshire sent out a Boat
Vnto the shore, to aske those on the Banks,
If they were his Assistants, yea or no?
Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham,
Vpon his partie: he mistrusting them,
Hoys'd sayle, and made his course againe for Britaine.
Rich. March on, march on, since we are vp in Armes,
If not to fight with forraine Enemies,
Yet to beat downe these Rebels here at home.

Enter Catesby.

Cat. My Liege the Duke of Buckingham is taken,
That is the best newes: that the Earle of Richmond

[illegible] Landed at Milford,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Earle
[illegible]

Hast thou my hand? Farewell my [illegible]
A drop of bloud drawne from thy countries bosome
Should driue Peace backe, and make the two contending
Powers equall, and ready to imbrace
That Mercy which true Penitence should haue
When I am gone vpon these Irish warres,
Haue me in minde, O commit no new fault.
Exeunt Buckingham and [illegible]

Scena Secunda.

Let's lacken Discipline, make no delay,
For Lords, to morrow is a bane day. Exeunt

Enter Richmond Sir William Brandon, Oxford and Dorset.

Richm. The weary Sunne, hath made a Golden set,
And by the bright Tract of his fiery Carre,
Giues token of a goodly day to morrow.
Sir William Brandon, you shall beare my Standard.
Giue me some Inke and Paper in my Tent.
Ile draw the Forme and Model of our Battaile
Limit each Leader to his seuerall Charge
And part in iust proportion our small Power.
My Lord of Oxford, you Sir William Brandon,
And you Sir Walter Herbert stay with me.
The Earle of Pembroke keepes his Regiment,
Good Captaine Blunt, beare my good night to him,
And by the second houre in the Morning,
Desire the Earle to see me in my Tent.
Yet one thing more (good Captaine) doe for me
Where is Lord Stanley quartered, doe you know?
Blunt. Vnder the Drumme, he lies with his Colours in view,
(Which well I am assur'd I haue not done)
His Regiment lies halfe a Mile at least
South, from the mighty Power of the King.
Richm. If without perill it be possible,
Sweet Blunt make some good meanes to speak with him
And giue him from me, this most needfull Note.
Blunt. Vpon my life, my Lord, Ile vndertake it,
And so God giue you quiet rest to night.
Richm. Good night good Captaine Blunt.
Come Gentlemen,
Let vs consult vpon to morrowes Businesse,
Into my Tent, the Dew is raw and cold.
They withdraw into the Tent.

Enter Richard, Ratcliffe, Norfolke & Catesby.

Rich. What is't a Clocke?
Cat. It is Supper time my Lord, it's nine a clocke.
King. I will not sup to night,
Giue me some Inke and Paper.
What, is my Beauer easier then it was?
And all my Armour laid into my Tent?
Cat. It is my Liege, and all things are in readinesse.
Rich. Good Norfolke, hye thee to thy charge,
Vse carefull Watch, choose trusty Centinels.
Nor. I go my Lord.
Rich. Stirre with the Larke to morrow, gentle Norfolke.
Nor. I warrant you my Lord. Exit
Rich. Ratcliffe.
Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Send out a Pursuiuant at Armes
To Stanleys Regiment, bid him bring his power
Before Sunne-rising, least his Sonne Georges fall
Into the blinde Cell of eternall night.
Fill me a Bowle of Wine. Giue me a Watch,
Saw ye my Page Sir Richard the night before?
Looke to my Armour.
Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Send to the melancholy Lord Northumberland?
Rat. Thomas the Earle of Surrey, and himselfe,
Much about Cock-shut time from Troope to Troope
Went through the Army, cheering vp the Souldiers.
King. So, I am satisfied. Giue me a Bowle of Wine,
I haue not that Alacrity of Spirit,
Nor cheere of Mind that I was wont to haue.
Set it downe. Is Ketchy carried to his Tent?
Rat. 'Tis my Lord.
Rich. Bid my Guard watch. Leaue me.
Ratcliffe, about the Mid of night come to my Tent
And helpe to arme me. Leaue me I say. Exit Ratcliffe.

Richard sleepes in his Tent.

Dar. Fortune, and Victory sit on thy Helme.
Rich. All comfort that the darke night can afford,
Be to thy Person, Noble Father-in-Law.
Tell me, how fares our Noble Mother?
Dar. By her attorney, blest Queene and mother,
Who prayes continually for Richmonds good.
So much for that. The silent houres steale on,
And flaky darkenesse breakes within the East.
In briefe (for so the season bids vs be)
Prepare thy Battle early in the Morning,
And put thy Fortune to th'Arbitrement
Of bloody strokes, and mortall staring Warre.
I (as I may) (that which I would I cannot)
With best aduantage will deceiue the time
And aide it no lesse then your honour calls for me.
Good Offices I may not proffer forward,
Least be preiudicate his Brothers, tender George
Be executed in his Fathers sight.
Farewell: the leysure, and the fearefull time
Cuts off the ceremonious Vowes of Loue,
And ample Interchange of sweet Discourse,
Which so long sundred Friends should dwell vpon.
God giue vs leysure for these Rites of Loue,
Once more, good night kind Lords and Gentlemen.
Exeunt. Manet Richmond.
O Thou, whose Captaine I account my selfe,
Looke on my Forces with a gracious eye.
Put in their hands thy bruising Irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heauy fall
Th'vsurping Helmets of our Aduersaries.
Make vs thy Ministers of Chastisement,
That we may praise thee in the victory.
To thee I do commend my watchfull soule,
Ere I let fall the windowes of mine eyes.
Sleepe with sad wakes, clad in destroying woe
Sleeps
Enter the Ghost of Prince Edward Sonne to Henry the Sixt.
Ghost to Ri. Let me sit heauy on thy Soule to morrow:
Thinke how thou stab'dst me in my prime of youth
At Tewkesbury. Dispaire therefore and dye.
Ghost to Richm. Be cheare thee Richmond,
For the wronged Soules
Of butcher'd Princes, fight in thy behalfe.
King Henries Issue, Richmond, comforts thee.
Enter the Ghost of Henry the Sixt.
Ghost. When I was mortall, my Anointed body
By thee was punched full of deadly holes,
Thinke on the Tower, and me. Dispaire, and dye,
Henry the Sixt, bids thee dispaire and dye.
To Richm. Vertuous and holy be thou Conqueror.
Henry that prophesied thou should'st be King,
Doth comfort thee in sleepe. Liue, and flourish.
Enter

Enter the Ghost of Clarence.

Ghost. Let me sit heauy on thy soule to morrow.
Thinke how thou stab'dst me in my prime of youth
Vpon the Pleasant Hatches of the Tower,
And calls on Iohn a Gaunt thy Vncle for me,
And all cry vengeance, vengeance on the murderer.
I. Rich. I shooke with terror of this dreadfull Accent
The weighed heauy on my eye-strings,
Cold fearefull drops stand on my trembling flesh.
Enter the Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan.
Riu. Let me sit heauy on thy soule to morrow,
Rivers poore soule, Grey and Vaughan pray for thee.
Grey. Let me sit heauy on thy soule to morrow,
Vaughan thinke on Queene Margaret that prayd for thee
Let fall thy blood, sinne not to come
Vpon our Issue.
All. Awake, awake.
Arme, arme, and conquer for the fearefull Enemie.
Enter the Ghosts of Hastings and Princes.
Ghost. Dreame on thy Cousins
Smothered in the Tower.
Let vs be heauy but on thy bed Lord,
And in the guiltie dungeons of thy heart,
Despaire and die, Hastings speakes to thee,
Enter the Ghosts of Queene Anne and Lady.
Ghost to Rich. Sleepe Richard,
That wretched Anne thy Wife,
That neuer slept a quiet houre with thee,
Now fills thy sleepe with perturbations.
Tomorrow in the battell thinke on me,
And fall thy Edgelesse Sword, despaire and die.
Ghost to Rich. Sleepe Richard,
Harry the sixts Sonne,
Vpon the Pillow let thy Cheeke be stayd,
And in that slumber dreame on Conscience,
Armes of Angels pitch the Curtaines round,
That deuils come not neere thee with blacke feares,
And spirits of good dreames cheere thee in thy sleepe.
Enter the Ghosts of Buckingham.
Ghost to Rich. Fourth of thy Houre,
That wretched Buckingham thy Friend,
Yet neuer slept a sound houre in this world,
Now fills thy Soule with perturbations.
Remember Henry the sixt his Prophesie,
Remember Edward thy Brothers Children,
Remember how the innocent prayd,
And prayer is powerfull, they did pray for Vengeance.
Ghosts. Liue and beget a happy Race of Kings,
Edward liues to scourge his Enemies
Vpon their Children and their Children Sonnes.
Enter the Ghosts of Henry the sixt, his Sonne, and Wife.
Ghost to Rich. Henry that prophesied thou should'st be King,
Doth comfort thee in sleepe, liue happy Richard,
Thy Wife that wisht to neuer see thee more,
Anne thy Queene that enuies thee from her heart,
And all for our vexations.
Ghost. I was a Pilgrime by the way to Heauen,
Thou Murdredst me, and for my sake
Thy Children liue not to inherit Ioy,
Despaire and die, thou Murdredst my Children.
Ghost. Wake not in hope, but despaire and die.
Ghost. Thy Friends suspect for Traytors while thou liu'st,
And take deepe traytors for thy dearest Friends,
No sleepe close vp that deadly eye of thine,
Vnlesse it be while some tormenting dreame
Affrights thee with a hell of ougly Deuils.
Ghosts. Fall not our Angry Curses, heauy on thee,
To presse downe to the Center of dispaire,
Thy Wife that is, thy Children in their Youth,
But neuer let the prayers of his Victims,
Accompanied with Teares, fall on thy head.
Ghosts. Thinke on the Tower and me, dispaire and die,
Harry the sixt bids thee dispaire and die.
Ghosts. Young Edward lies smothered in the Tower,
Dispaire and die, that Edward bids thee dispaire.
Ghosts. Wake Richard, wake, thy friends may hap to fall,
And fly the fall with dying in their Armes,
Die, Richard, die, thy helpe is none but hell.
Ghosts. We wait for thee.
Ghosts. Come Richard, come, thou art but one to vs.
Ghosts. Dreame on, dreame on, of bleeding Armes and Murders,
How these blacke deeds may fall on Richards head,
Despaire and die, dispaire and die Richard,
Edward thy Brothers Children, Rivers, Hastings,
Brackenbury, and gentle Anne thy Wife,
All murdred for thee, were all this Host of Murders
Charg'd on thy Soule, it were enough to turne
Honest mens hearts to Cowards.

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord
King. Who's there?
Rat. Ratcliffe my Lord, 'tis I the early Village Cocke
Hath twice done salutation to the Morne,
Your friends are vp, and buckle on their Armour.
King. O Ratcliffe, I feare, I feare.
Rat. Nay good my Lord be not afraid of Shadowes.
King. By the Apostle Paul shadowes vglier than the Darke Dungeons of the Graue, or the blacke wombe
Of Night hell-directed Faculties
Are not to be resisted and redeemed
Conscience is a word that Cowards vse,
Deuis'd at first to keepe the strong in awe,
Our strong Armes be our Conscience, Swords our Law,
Rouse vp thy Valour Richard, to the Throat,
Or else thy Foe lies heauy on thy Soule.
Enter Northumberland & Ratcliffe.

Enter the Lord to Richmond sitting in his Tent.

Richm. Good morrow Richmond.
Lord. Cry mercy Lord, and welcome Gentlemen,
How many of your Soueraigne Leaders thinke you
Lord. How many soeuer my Lord
Richm. I care not how many,
Yet I am valiant,
Numbers, of this I speake well, I know do not flatter.
My Conscience hath a thousand seuerall Tongues,
And every Tongue brings in a seuerall Tale,
And every Tale condemnes me for a Villaine;
Periurie, in the high'st Degree,
Murder, stearne murder, in the dyr'st degree,
All seuerall sinnes, all vs'd in each degree,
Throng all to the Barre, crying all Guilty, Guilty,
I shall dispaire, there is no Creature loues me;
And if I die, no soule shall pitie me.
Nay wherefore should they? since that I my Selfe,
Finde in my Selfe, no pitie to my Selfe.
Me thought the soules of all that I had murthered
Came to my Tent, and euery one did threat
Tomorrowes vengeance on the head of Richard

God, and our good cause, fight vpon our side,
The Prayers of holy Saints and wronged Soules,
Like high-reard Bulwarkes, stand before our Faces,
(Richard except:) those whom we fight against
Had rather haue vs win, then him they follow.
For what is he they follow? truly Gentlemen,
A bloudy Tyrant, and a mightie one:
One rais'd in bloud, and one in bloud establish'd,
One that made meanes to come by what he hath
And slaughtered those that were the meanes to help him:
A base foule Stone, made precious by the foyle
Of Englands Chaire, wherein he sits vnlineal,
One that hath euer been Gods Enemie.
Then if you fight against Gods Enemie
God will in iustice ward you as his Soldiers.
If you do sweare to put a Tyrant downe,
You sweare to warrant safety and true dutie:
You sweare against the Peace and Safety
Of your owne Soules, if you may be preuented,
You murther Innocents, if you be Conquerors:
If you do fight against your Countries foes,
Your Countries fat shall pay your paines the hire:
If you do fight in Safegard of your Wiues,
Your Wiues shall welcome home the Conquerors:
If you do free your Children from the Sword,
Your Children shall triumph in your Aid:
Then in the name of God and all these rights,
Aduance your Standards, draw your willing Swords.
For me, the ransome of my bold attempt,
Shall be this cold Carkasse to the earth and face
But if I thriue, gaine of my attempt,
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound Drummes and Trumpets boldly and cheerefully,
God, and Saint George, Richmond, and Victory.

Enter King Richard, Ratcliffe, and Catesby.

King. What said Northumberland as touching Richmond?
Rat. The Earle was comming with the Armes
King. Ghosts of the Tombes and wandring Starres therein?
Rat. He smil'd and said, the better for our purpose.
King. He was in the right, and so indeed it is.
Tell the Clocke there. Clocke strikes.
Giue me a Kalender. Who saw the Sunne to day?
Rat. Not I my Lord.
King. Then he disdaines to shine, for by the Booke
He should haue braued the East an houre agoe.
A blacke day will it be to somebody.
Rat. My Lord.
King. The Sunne will not be seene to day,
The skie doth frowne and lowre vpon our Army
I would these dewie teares were from the ground.
Not shine to day? why what is that to me
More then to Richmond? For the selfe same Heauen
That frownes on me, lookes sadly vpon him.

Enter Norfolke.

Nor. Arme, arme my Lord the foe vaunts in the field
King. Come bustle bustle, Caparison my horse.
Call vp Lord Stanley, bid him leuie straight
The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me presently at Salisbury.
Nor. I go my Lord.
King. Send out Commanders to the Lower Bridge,
Let high-sighted Towlers watch the Duke.
Daring-hearted Blunt is not behind
With Horse and Men at Glocester-Bridge.
Ratcliffe, and Sir William Brandon.
Both. We know our Duties, let vs know our Names.
King. I know our Valours, you shall know our Minds.
Richmond is on the Seas. There let him sinke and drowne,
With him, the Men do fight, and fight in vaine.
My Horse, my Horse. Drum afarre off.
Out on you Owles, nothing but Songs of death?
Come, come my Lord, these dreames of Shadowes,
Doe Affrights hearts of meere shallow Yeomen,
Draw Archers, draw your Arrowes to the head,
Spurre your proud Horses hard, and ride in blood,
Amaze the welkin with your broken staues.

Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley, will he bring his power?
Mes. My Lord he will not come.
King. Then Ile make my Heart the Graue of Stanley,
For dead men hold their promises but slightly.
Where is the Traitor Stanley, speak Man.
Mes. My Lord his Son George Stanley is with him,
King. Away towards Salisbury, while we reason here,
A Royall battell might be won and lost.
Some one take order Buckingham be brought
To Salisbury, while he is there, dispatch him.
Come bustle bustle, caparison my Horse,
Call vp Lord Standley, bid him bring his power,
I will lead forth my Soldiers to the Plaine,
And thus my Battell shall be ordered.
My Foreward shall be drawne out euenly,
Consisting equally of Horse and Foote.
Our Archers shall be placed in the midst.
Iohn Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Earle of Surrey,
Shall haue the leading of this Foote and Horse.
They thus directed, we will follow

Alarum. [illegible] Enter

FINIS.

The Famous History of the Life of King HENRY the Eight

THE PROLOGUE.

[illegible]

Dramatis Personæ. Scena Prima.

[illegible]

A thing inspir'd and not consulting, broke
Into a generall Prophecie, That this Tempest
Dashing the Garment of this Peace, aboded
The sodaine breach on't.
Nor. Which is well obserued,
For indeed it was begun in the League, and hath attach'd
Our Merchants goods at Bordeux.
Aber. Is't therefore,
Th'Ambassador is silenc'd?
Nor. Marry is't.
Aber. A parlous Leyle of a Peace, and purchas'd
At a superfluous rate.
Buc. Why all this Businesse
Our Reverend Cardinall carried.
Nor. Like it your Grace,
The State takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the Cardinall. I advise you
(And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plenteous safety) that you read
The Cardinalls Malice and his Potency
Together; To consider further that
What his high Hatred would effect wants not
A Minister in his Power. You know his Nature,
That he's revengefull, and I know, his Sword
Hath a sharp edge: It's long, and't may be said
It reaches farre, and where it will not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosome up my Counsell,
You'l find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that Rock
That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinall Wolsey, the Purse borne before him, certaine of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers. The Cardinall in his passage fixes his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Car. The Duke of Buckingham's Surveyor? Ha?
Where's his Examination?
Sec. Here so please you.
Car. Is he in person ready?
Sec. I please your Grace.
Car. Well, we shall then know more, & Buckingham
Shall lessen this big look.
Exeunt Cardinall and his Traine.
Buc. This Holy-fox,
Or Wolsey, is growne so subtle, so peruerse,
Humbled to all Confession, and of late
So much Familiar with his Majesty,
That no Conspiracie can be contriu'd
Nor any bud of Enterprize put forth,
But to the full grow'n end, it comes to him
Straight every day he is on Visitations,
Never before: Some cause, some trouble
Comes on this sodaine.
Aber. I doe not like their Comming, now I think on't.
They say in most Mens Mouths, still Hanging Lookes
They're sent before the Businesse.
Buc. Stay,
No matter why they come, we are prouided:
To day the Duke will Hunt, the Power I make
Consists of all my Friends, my Horse, my Armes.
Nor. Doe your Graces
Chide your Heart from sadnesse, and indure
The Cardinall in his passage. Fixe an eye
And buz Displeasure on him: let him goe,
Tis better we behold him look upon us,
Then we him passe us.
Buc. As you counsell me:
This Holy-fox, or Wolsey, is growne so subtle,
So peruerse, and so Holy, say you, Norfolke?
Nor. He's my Lord Cardinall, by his Place and Calling,
Deepe, and Diuine in shew, but in his Nature
As farre from Wolsey, and from Holinesse,
As Light from Darkenesse, Heauen from Earth, Warme Life
From Dull, and Deadly-cold Death.
Buc. Think you the King
Sees this apparantly?
Nor. We doubt not of it.
Aber. It cannot be denied but of late he hath
Much alter'd.
Buc. Ha's he not a Soule?
Aber. He seemes indu'd with all Graces, that are
Powr'd on a Royall Creature.
Buc. Say you so?
Then I say nothing more, but Farewell to the Honour
Truth, and Greatnesse of his Place the King
And Commonwealth are sicke of him: Our Reuenges
Are disorderly, though not seditious,
Pray God he prize them lesse then I dare make them,
Who (hauing more Man in me then my Part)
Can with a quiet Hand, and rounded Modesty
Looke on my Wrongs: Inough of this. Speake forth
My Lord Surveyor, how intend you practise?
Sur. Why (as you know) as I have got Instruction
From your Honour, touching the Holy Nun,
Who first inclin'd me to't, and spake the Businesse
To his Confessor, who fed from time to time
With Words, and Meanings of her Pleasure.
Buc. Well,
And what more?
Sur. The Nun being rul'd by him
Particularly, and indeed who else
Was the Lord Cardinall? Reuealed unto him
As a Spirit doth Trumpet, or Diuine
Of strange Events, the Loue betwixt the King
And Queene, whether they were Lawfull,
Or no proceeding: And who should succeed
The Queene in her Bed, with many more Inclusions
Of Priuate Consequence, even to the Basenesse
Of Sauing Conscience, which he vented with
Such Pompe, and Gravity, that in Truth a Man
Would sweare the Holy Spirit had put Words
Into his Mouth.
Buc. Of Priuate Consequence?
Sur. Yes, my Lord,
But you will aske, what all this while was done?
Buc. Doubtlesse the Parliament
Your Lawes for the Subsidie?
Sur. Like it your Grace,
The State takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the Cardinall. I advise you

Much alter'd.
Buc. Ha's he not a Soule?
Aber. He seemes indu'd with all Graces, that are
Powr'd on a Royall Creature.
Buc. Say you so?
Then I say nothing more, but Farewell to the Honour
Truth, and Greatnesse of his Place the King
And Commonwealth are sicke of him: Our Reuenges
Are disorderly, though not seditious,
Pray God he prize them lesse then I dare make them,
Who (hauing more Man in me then my Part)
Can with a quiet Hand, and rounded Modesty
Looke on my Wrongs: Inough of this. Speake forth
My Lord Surveyor, how intend you practise?
Sur. Why (as you know) as I have got Instruction
From your Honour, touching the Holy Nun,
Who first inclin'd me to't, and spake the Businesse
To his Confessor, who fed from time to time
With Words, and Meanings of her Pleasure.
Buc. Well,
And what more?
Sur. The Nun being rul'd by him
Particularly, and indeed who else
Was the Lord Cardinall? Reuealed unto him
As a Spirit doth Trumpet, or Diuine
Of strange Events, the Loue betwixt the King
And Queene, whether they were Lawfull,
Or no proceeding: And who should succeed
The Queene in her Bed, with many more Inclusions
Of Priuate Consequence, even to the Basenesse
Of Sauing Conscience, which he vented with
Such Pompe, and Gravity, that in Truth a Man
Would sweare the Holy Spirit had put Words
Into his Mouth.
Buc. Of Priuate Consequence?
Sur. Yes, my Lord,
But you will aske, what all this while was done?
Buc. Doubtlesse the Parliament
Your Lawes for the Subsidie?

This

This Ipswich fellowes insolence, or presumption,
There's a difference in no persons.
Norf. Be advis'd;
Heat not a Furnace for your foe so hot
That it do singe your selfe. We may outrun
By violent swiftnesse that which we runne at,
And lose by over-running. Know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor till't runne o're
In seeming to augment it, wastes it? Be'
Lay a gaine there's much matter stirr'd,
More stronger to direct, than you imagine.
With the eie of reason pause,
Or be assur'd you'l repent
Buck. Sir,
I am thankfull to you and I goe
By your prescription: but this top-proud fellow,
Whom (from the flow of gall I name not) but
From sincere motions, by intelligence,
And proofes as cleere as founts in July
We see each grave of danger, and of woe
To be corrupted traitor.
Norf. Say not treason.
Buck. Take heed you keep the peace, and make my zeale as strong
As faithfull loue doth bid me, I shall leave you,
Of whose, of any Forraigne state so ever
As are subtile, or apprehensive,
As able to perceive what most concernes them,
Detecting our intentions, yeares, enemy
Only to flow as mounting, as to fall
As deepe as broad, as finite, as infinite
To any lasting: this I say againe,
That what's amisse, and proper to reforme,
Dies breake our wealth
Norf. Nay, good my Lord,
Aber. Pray giue me leave to stay a little longer Cardinall.
The Axell-tree of the Commons shakes with fear
As I could perish all, ere we should shame
As he cries out to be the Author
As guilty Crutch to stand vpon. Forsooth Count Cardinall
Has done this and that, for we (forsooth)
(Who cannot erre) he does it: now this follower,

Scene III.

Enter Lord Chamberlain and Lord Sands.

Lord Chamberlain.

Sands.

Lord Chamberlain.

Sands.

Lord Chamberlain.

Sands.

L. Cham. What's the matter?

Lou. The reformation of our trauel'd Gallants,
That fill the Court with quarrels, talke and Taylors.

L. Cham. I am glad 'tis there,
Now I would pray our Monsieurs
To thinke an Englith Courtier may be wife,
And neuer see the Louure.

Lou. They must (cannot
(For so run the Conditions) leaue those remnants
Of fooleries heere, their mincing, dancing French,
Their ballets, Balladry, their single Rapier,
Their cloake, their hat, their yard of Shooe,
Their Time-pleasing Tooth-pickes, their Perfumes,
Their three-pild Ruffes, their Huffes and their Pufferies,
Their Sattin Cassocke, Velure Hangers,
And high-crown'd Bonnets, their soule Essences,
(The marrow of Dead Beasts) and aboue all these,
Their Lowsie Long-hair'd Locks, which they must bring
Vnto the Barbers Shop, and there be cropt,
And shauen like Monkes, ere they obtaine
Accesse to any Mistris.

L. Cham. Will they take it?

Lou. They must, or packe
To their Dancing Schooles againe, and relearne
How to tread Measures, and to Foote it
Like Gamesters at Primero.

L. Cham. Sir Henry Guilford.

Enter Sir Henry Guilford.

Guil. Now, my Lord,
Saw you the Cardinall?

L. Cham. My Lord, we haue
Stood here obseruing him: Some strange Commotion
Is in his braine: He bites his Lip, and starts,
Stops on a sodaine, looks vpon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple: straight
Springs out into fast gate, then stands as staid
Forget himselfe, his Motions to his State
Serue all at once, and in the last, it seemes
His Motions to his State serue all at once,
And in the last, it seemes his Motions
Forget himselfe, his Gate, his Countenance
Are all so different: In the midst he takes
Paper, and taking Pen, and biting Nayles,
Rages, and throwes out Periods to himselfe,
Not vttering what he meanes: Flyes from his Shadow,
And speakes vnto his Man-mistakes him, stares
Vpon the Standers by: Calls for more Paper,
Neglects to write, and so conceales from vs
What his Distemper is: You know his Grace
Forgets himselfe more than this.

Guil. I thinke I can
Tell his Disease of State: For it is State
Sickneſſe, that ayles him: Know you not my Lords
What late Commotions haue arose betweene
The two Kings of France and Arragon?

Cham. Yes, but that
Was reconcil'd, and both the Kings haue sworne
Eternall Amity.

Guil. Sir, it growes againe,
Each hath a seuerall Brother-in-Law
Mounted the Throne of Arragon, and both
Are marching on their Confines.

L. Cham. Then the Cardinall
Hath iust cause to be troubled: For 'tis he Aduis'd him for the entertainment of Faire Queene Katherine to Spaine.

Guil. Nay, more than this,
He dreames the Duke be stands vpon a hope
Of the Succeſſion, from the Indisposition
Of his Supposed Father, the Sicke King
Of Arragon.

L. Cham. Faith, my Lord, I heare of none.
But from my Soule I wish all well with the Prince:
There's some of his Complexion waiting heere,
That I should loue a bowle the better for.
Pray God he be not angry with me.

Guil. Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Sir Thomas Louell, and Sir Anthony Denny,
Waite vpon his Will: But the Words they bring
Are quite contrary.

L. Cham. That's their Fortune still.
Vse makes Complyers, not Opinions.
Which way goes the Cardinall?

Guil. Downe to his Chappell,
Where Deuotion waits on him, and leaues
His Palace Empty: Noble Buckingham
Made Roome for him before: There's Monkes attend him,
To pray and chaunt for Peace, as if Warre were
His Profeſſion.

L. Cham. Would we had such Prayers said!
Such Deuotion none of vs feele!
Is the Hall full?

Guil. Full of Disorder.
Yeomen, Groomes, Promiscuously doe pester
The Roome, and Ranke vs with Ambitious Hopes,
That they shall place vnto the Tables head.
There's Worshipfull Attendants, and one Squire
Of Gentlemanly Office, I could wish
Were out of Dores: For sure there will be Quarrels.

L. Cham. Let's in then, and obserue: Perhaps we may Finde Sport enough.

Guil. Beware then, you lose not
Your Temper.

L. Cham. Trust not me.

Enter Trumpets, Sennet.

Guil. The Duke of Buckingham is come from his Triall.

L. Cham. 'Tis very true: But that time offers Sorrow,
This generall Ioy.

Guil. 'Tis well: The Citizens
I am sure haue shewne at full their Royall minds,
As let 'em haue their Rights, they are euer forward
In Celebration of this Day with Shewes,
Pageants, and Sights of Honour.

L. Cham. Neuer greater,
Nor ought else worth the sight.

Guil. See, the Swannes come!
Free Pallage, and Attendance vnto them.

Enter Sir Nicholas Vaux, and Sir Thomas Lovell.

Vaux. My Lord,
The Cardinall, in his Deuotion, hath
Forgot your Loue, I feare: The Warder strikes
Already at the Presence doore, the Sixe Clockes.

Lou. Farewell, good Lord: Sir Thomas, 'tis a Warning
We may not slacke our Duties for our Ease.
The Cardinall's not my Friend, nor wants the Cause:
But you, I know, are honeſt.

Guil. Shall we to the Presence?

L. Cham. It growes late: Farewell Noble Buckingham.

Vaux. My Noble Lords.

Guil. For Heauen sake, stay.

Vaux. Your Honours
Shall passe through this Lobby, and command
My Office to his Grace.

Lou. We shall, Sir Nicholas.

Guil. Pray, Sir Thomas, whither were the Lords going?

Lou. To the Cardinall's.

Guil. Your Lordship is a guest too.

L. Cham. O, 'tis true:
This Night he makes a Supper, and a great one,
To many Lords and Ladies: There will be
The Beauty of this Kingdome, I'le assure you.

Lou. That Church is Blest, and Sanctified indeed
That couers such Deuotion as the Lord there needs,
His Deuotion fall euery where.

L. Cham. No doubt, Sir.

Lou. He had a blacke mouth that said other of him.

L. Sau. For my Lord,

Guil. Spight, Wrong, Envy, Malice, Detraction,
Neuer a way, Pleasure, Honour,
They are let beene
L. Sau. Leaue
Now to be Courtiers,
Sir Thomas, Come, Sir Thomas,
We shall be late else, which I would not be
For any Prince to, with Sir Henry Guilford
This night to be Comptrollers.

L. Sau. I am your Lordships, Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Hoboies. A small Table under a State for the Cardinall, a longer Table for the Guests. Then enter Anne Bullen, and many other Ladies, & Gentlemen as Guests, at one Doore; at an other Doore enter Sir Henry Guilford.

Sir Hen. Guil. Ladyes,
A generall welcome from his Grace
Salutes ye all: This Night he dedicates
To faire content, and you: None heere he hopes
In all this Noble Beuy, has brought with him
One care abroad: He would haue all as merry
As first, good Company, good Wine, good Welcome,
Can make good people.

Enter L. Chamberlaine, L. Sands and Lovell.

O my Lord, y'are tardy:
The very thought of this faire Company,
Clapt wings to me.

Cham. You're young Sir Harry Guilford.

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the Cardinall
But halfe my Lay-thoughts in him, some fooles
Should finde no Grace to day: for his Holinesse
Should dine with Angels.

Lou. Make vp the Table, and
Let me alone to entertaine them.

Sands. Ladies,
In faith your Grace is much beholding to you,
And so am I: For I ne're saw truer Beauties
In Ladies, that to day: I'le tell 'em by myne,
They are a sweet Society of faire ones.

Lou. O my Lord,
You are tardy:
The very thought of this faire Company,
Clapt wings to me.

Cham. You're young Sir Harry Guilford.

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the Cardinall

They are a sweet Society of faire ones.

Lou. O my Lord,
You are a Tardy one too: Can you thinke so
Of two such Eyes?

Sands. What Eyes?

Lou. Why, his that sits there,
And those that stand by him, your Lordship.

Sands. Who's that?

Lou. Why Mistris Anne Bullen.

Sands. Mistris Anne Bullen?
No more of her, my Lord, good or bad,
You may corrupt me entirely.

Lou. I would pray
Our Monsieurs
To thinke an Englith Courtier may be wife,
And neuer see the Louure.

Sands. They must (cannot
(For so run the Conditions) leaue those remnants
Of fooleries heere, their mincing, dancing French,
Their ballets, Balladry, their single Rapier,
Their cloake, their hat, their yard of Shooe,
Their Time-pleasing Tooth-pickes, their Perfumes,

Guil. Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Sir *Thomas Lov

I am bound to your cheere, and your company
Ladies you are not merry, Gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?
San. The red wine first must rise
In their faire cheekes my Lord, then we shall have 'em,
Talke vs to silence.
An. B. You are a merry Gamster
My Lord Sands
San. Yes, if I make my play
Heere's to your Ladyship: and to the gallants
For to vs to night.
An. B. You cannot shake me out
Drum & Trumpet. Chamber discharg'd
San. Let's see, Grace, and a full hand
Card. Whose best?
Cham. Lo it comes ever when I am in
Card. What wast they shoot
And to what end is this? Nay, then it is not
By all the lawes of Warre you are priz'd
Enter a Gentle
Cham. How now, what is't
Gent. A noble troupe of Strangers,
For so they seeme: th'are come in like Ambassadors
And to'hat make a great Embassadors
From forraigne Princes.
Card. Good Lord Chamberlaine,
Go giue 'em welcome, you can speake the French tongue
And pray receiue 'em Nobly, and conduct 'em
Into our presence, where this heauen of beauty
Shall shine at full upon them. Some attend him
All rise, and Tables remou
You haue now a broken Banket, but we'l mend it
A good digestion to you all, and once more
I shower a welcome on ye, welcome all
Hoboyes. Enter King and others as Maskers habited like Shepheards, usher'd by the Lord Chamberlaine. They pass directly before the Cardinall, and gracefully salute him
A noble Company! what are their pleasures?
Cham. Because they speake no English, thus they pray'd
To tell your Grace: That hauing heard by fame
Of this so Noble and Choice Assembly,
Thus left their owne Abodes, and dar'd their entertainments
(Trusting on your Highnesse boundeous Goodnesse)
Make bold to view the Ladies, and offer Dance
An vnpremeditated Gallantry
By these gentlemen hereabouts.
Card. Say, Lord Chamberlaine,
They haue done my poore house grace: for which I pay 'em
A thousand thankes, and pray 'em take their pleasures
They choose Ladies. King and An. Bullen.
King. The fairest hand I ever touch'd! O beauty,
Till now I never knew thee
Musicke, Dance.
Card. My Lord
Cham. Your Grace
Card. Pray tell 'em thus much from me:
There should be one amongst them, by his person
More worthy this place then my selfe, to whom
(If I but knew him) with my loue and duty
I would surrender it.
Cham. I will my Lord
Card. What say they?
Cham. Such a one they all confesse
There is indeed, which they would haue your Grace
Find out, and please with a Dance.
Card. I thinke I can
By any proofe of mine, and not disparage
My function in't
An. Ye cannot chuse but doe it
You are a fayre Assembly: whose are you?
You are a Churchman, or I am deceiu'd
I bid you (many) welcome
Card. I thank you
You're well encountered
An. My Lord Cardinall,
I were vnmannerly to take you out
And not to kisse you. A health Gentlemen
Let it goe round.
Card. Sir Thomas Lord Chamberlaine,
Keepe it by you?
Cham. Yes my Lord.
Card. Your Grace
Heere, with all my heart will pledge it,
King. Heere to you
Card. I thanke your Majesty
To the next Chamber
An. Lead in your Ladies euery one. Sweet Partner
I must not yet forsake you. Let's be merry
Good my Lord Cardinall, I haue halfe a dozen healths
To drinke to these faire Ladies, and a measure
Will make my boote to walke. I feare my Mask-hood,
Exeunt. Dance.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen at seuerall Doores
1. Whether away so fast?
2. O, God saue ye
Ere to the Hall, to see what Shall become
Of this great Day.
1. Let me speake sir
For I must bring my businesse from a Heauier Ceremony
2. Why well met then
1. Yes indeed I hope it
2. Pray speake what has happened.
1. You may guesse quickly what
2. Is he found guilty
1. Yes truely is he,
And condemn'd vpon't
2. I am sorry for't.
1. So are a number more
2. But pray how past it?
1. I'le tell you in a little. The great Duke
Came to the Barre; where to his Accusations
He pleaded still not Guilty, and alledged
Many sharpe reasons to defeate the Law.
The King's Attorney on the contrary
Vrg'd on the Examinations, Proofes, Confessions

O[illegible]ers witnesses, which chiefe Duke defir'd
T[illegible]n'brought [illegible]s to his face;
At w[illegible]h bad spoke against em: the Surveyor
[illegible] Robert Peckam, Confessor, Sir Iohn Maur,
Confessor to [illegible]s what chiefly Moou'd,
Hee[illegible]r, that made it seeme strange.
2 That was hee
That fed his Prophecies
1 The last,
All [illegible]s [illegible]d on Prophecy, which before
Would [illegible] but seem'd not cou'd not
And to [illegible]s purpose [illegible]s,
How [illegible]d [illegible] Treason Much
He spoke, and [illegible] but an
Wast[illegible] prediction, [illegible]porters,
2 After all this, how [illegible] he [illegible]?
1 Why the [illegible] strong Cause (Law to heare
His Accusation) was [illegible]d
With such an Agony, he sweat extreame,
And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty.
But he [illegible] to [illegible]s and [illegible]s,
In all the rest (shew'd a most Noble patience.
2 I do not think he [illegible]s death.
1 Sure he does not,
He never was a woman [illegible], for cause
He may a little grieue at 2 Certainly,
The [illegible] [illegible] deliuers
1. Is [illegible]key,
By all coniectures: First Kildares attendance,
The [illegible] part of Ireland, was [illegible]d
[illegible] Surrey, was to this end sent too,
Lest [illegible] [illegible] should [illegible]
2 I [illegible] [illegible] of Peace
Was a secret [illegible] to,
1. At [illegible]s [illegible]s.
No doubt he's [illegible] quite [illegible] [illegible] ignored
All Generals [illegible] wonder'd at this [illegible] fauours,
The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] employment,
And [illegible] [illegible] from Court too.
2 All [illegible] Commons
Hate [illegible] [illegible] to my Conscience
With [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] The Duke as much
They [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Bountious Buckingham.
The Mirror of all Courtesie.

Enter Buckingham [illegible] with his Commandment, Tipstaue before him, Sir Henry Guilford, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir [illegible] and [illegible] Monypeny, &c.

1 Stand from the fire,
And see the [illegible] and [illegible] payne [illegible] of 2 It [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to.
Enter Abergauenny,
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] come to pity me,
Heare what [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and to me,
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] moment,
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], yet [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] witnes,
And [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] me,
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] my [illegible],
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible]
Buckingham [illegible] [illegible], I and [illegible] [illegible] more Christians.
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
Yet let [illegible] [illegible] by God, not [illegible] malice,
Nor [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] graces of great men;
For then, my [illegible] [illegible] blood [illegible] cry against [illegible].
For further [illegible] [illegible] this world I [illegible] [illegible] scape.
Nor will [illegible], although the King haue mercies
More than I dare make faults.
You few [illegible] [illegible] me,
And dare be bold to weepe for Buckingham,
His Noble Friends and Fellowes, whom to leaue
Is only bitter to him, only dying
Goe with me like good Angels to my end,
And as the long diuorce of Steele falls on me,
Make of your Prayers one sweet Sacrifice,
And lift my Soule to Heauen.
Lead on a Gods name.
Louell I doe beleech your Grace, for charity
If euer any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now to forgiue me frankly.
Buck. Sir Thomas Louell, I as free forgiue you
As I would be forgiuen: I forgiue all
There cannot be those numberlesse offences
Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with
No black Enuy shall make my Graue.
Commend mee to his Grace
And if he speake of Buckingham, pray tell him,
You met him halfe in Heauen: my vowes and prayers
Yet are the Kings, and till my Soule forsake,
Shall cry for blessings on him. May he liue
Longer (the I haue time to tell his yeares)
Euer beloued and loning may his Rule be;
And when old Time shall lead him to his end,
Goodnesse and he fill vp one Monument.
Lou. To [illegible] [illegible] I must conduct your Grace;
Then giue my Charge vp to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who vndertakes you to your end.
Vaux Prepare there,
The Duke is coming: See the Barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture as suites
The Greatnesse of his Person.
Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone; my State now will but mocke me.
When I came hither, I was Lord High Constable,
And Duke of Buckingham; now poore Edward Bohun;
Yet I am richer than my base Accusers,
That never knew what truth meant: I now seale it;
And with that blood will make 'em one day groane for it.
My noble Father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first raised head against Vsurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his Seruant Banister,
Being distrest, was by that wretch betrayed,
And without Tryal, fell; Gods peace be with him.
Henry the Seauenth succeeding, truly pitying
My Fathers losse, like a most Royall Prince
Restored me to my Honours, and out of ruines
Made my Name once more Noble. Now his Sonne,
Henry the Eight, Life, Honour, Name and all
That made me happy, at one stroake has taken
For euer from the World. I had my Tryall,
And must needs say a Noble one, which makes me
A little happier than my wretched Father
Yet thus far we are one in Fortunes both
Fell by our Seruants, by those Men we lou'd most
A most vnnatural and faithlesse Seruice
Heauen has an end in all: yet, you that heare me,
This from a dying man receiue as certaine
Where you are liberall of your loues and Counsels,
Be sure you be not loose; for those you make friends,

And giue your hearts to; when they once perceiue
The leaſt rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, neuer found againe
But where they meane to make ye a good people
Pray for me, I muſt now forſake ye the laſt houre
Of my long weary life, is come vpon me.
Farewell, and when you would say ſomthing that is ſad,
Speake how I fell.
I haue done, and God forgiue me.
Exeunt vnder and Trayne.
1. O, this is full of pittie, Sir, it cals
I feare too many curſes on their heads
That were the Authors.
2. If the duke be guiltleſſe,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can giue you inkling
Of an enſuing euill, of a feare,
Greater than this.
1. Good Angels keepe it from vs.
What may it be? you doe not doubt my faith Sir?
2. This Secret is ſo weighty, 'twill require
A ſtrong faith to conceale it.
1. Let me haue it,
I do not take my oath on't.
2. Feare me not,
You ſhall Sir: Did you not of late dayes heare
A buzzing of a ſeparation
Betweene the King and Katherine?
1. Yes, but it held not,
For when the King once heard it, out of anger
He ſent command to the Lord Mayor ſtraight
To ſtop the rumors, and allay thoſe tongues
That ſpoke it, on paine
2. But that ſtands, Sir,
Is found a truth now: for it growes againe
Freſher than e're it was, and held for certaine
The King will venture at it. Either the Cardinall,
Or ſome about him neere, haue out of malice
To the good Queene, poſſeſſed him with a scruple
That will vndoe her: To confirme this too,
Cardinall Campeius is arriu'd and lately,
As all think for this buſineſſe.
1. 'Tis the Cardinall,
And merely to reuenge him on the Emperor,
For not beſtowing on him at his aſking,
The Arch-biſhoprick of Toledo, this is purpos'd.
2. I think
You haue hit the marke; but is't not cruell,
That ſhe ſhould feele the ſmart of this the Cardinall
Will make vs ſhew it, and the end is
1. 'Tis woth
Wee are too open here to argue this
Let's think in priuate more. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter a Gentleman and one reading this Letter.

My Lord, the Horſes your Lordſhip ſent for, with all the care I had, I ſaw well choſen, ridden, and furniſh'd. They were young and handſome, and of the beſt breed in the North. When they were ready to ſet out for London, a man of my Lord Cardinals, by Commiſſion, and more power than I have, came and tooke them from me, with this reaſon, his maſter would be ſeru'd before a Subiect, if not before the King, which ſtop'd our mouthes, Sir.

I feare he will indeed: Well, let him haue them; hee will haue all I think.

Enter to the Lord Chamberlaine, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke.

Norf. Well met my Lord Chamberlaine.
Cham. Good day to both your Graces.
Suff. How is the King imployd?
Cham. He's full impatient,
Full of high thoughts and cares.
Norf. What's the cauſe?
Cham. It ſeemes he's Marryed with his Brothers Wife
He's crept too neere his Conſcience.
Suff. No, his Conſcience
Has crept too neere another Ladie.
Norf. 'Tis ſo;
This is the Cardinals doing: The King Cardinall,
That blinde Prieſt, like eagle'd Scene of Flattery,
Turnes what he liſts. The King will know him one day.
Suff. Pray God he do,
He'le neuer know himſelfe elſe.
Norf. How holily he works in all his buſineſſe,
And with what zeale? For now he has crackt the League
Betweene vs and the Emperor, the Queenes great Nephew,
He dives into the King: Soules, and there ſcatters
Dangers to him, wounds of Conſcience,
Fears and doubts, and ſpares no hidden Crafts
And Practiſes to make this Marriage
Appeare moſt deſperate: ſtore of ſuch Arrowes
Which can ſticke deepe and ſmart
Like the Diſeaſe: and these ſtrokes
That like a Jewell, haue ſo long time
Worne like a Subiect, now ſeeme priuiledg'd
Deepe Sacriledge, this Starre of Conſcience,
Fatall to Cardinals, hath beene the onely
Wholeſome Hebrew Midwife that exiſtence
Euer brought forth, and is it for this Councell pour?
Not friendſhip, honeſty, and the courſe of ſouls
Conniuing with groſſe ſinne? and are Churches Councels
Sworne enemies to truth, where euery tongue ſpeakes them,
And euery true heart corſiues at it? Well,
The King muſt take his fortune, ſeeke his owne ends,
Looke to't, and ſtand the ſtorme: I heare him many
Will ſweare to his Marriage, and vſe arguments
Such as they are, though not worth anſwering,
Which yet muſt be allowed. Now the new Queene
Will one day open the King's eyes, and ſee
Within her, worth obſeruation, worth
Pitty and Loue.
Suff. Anon, for charitie,
Anon, for ſhame, forbeare.
Norf. I ſhall not need,
And yet I ſay, for once and all, beware;
Our ſpeeches muſt not meaſure vp to all
Euen Iuſtices and Magiſtrates, all mens honours
Lie like one Lambe before him, to be fleſh'd
Into what pitch he please.
Suff. For me, my Lords,
I loue him not, nor feare him, there's my Creede
As I am made without, ſo I'le ſtand.
The King pleaſe his Diuorce, and I haue done.
Tell me (for I muſt make my breath no better)
How euer I am taken, I know my Manſion
Is not yet made in Heauen, nor am I ſo leane in
The Conſcience wherein I am proud, yet full
Of Chriſtian pittie.
Norf. I feare it,
And we haue many other buſines, put the King
From these ad[illegible]ings, that work too much vpon him
My Lord, your leaue for our company?
Cham. Excuſe me,
The King has ſent me otherwiſe: Beſides
You'le find a moſt vnfit time to diſturbe him
Health to your Lordſhips

Nor

Norfolke. Thanke my good Lord Chamberlaine.
Exit Lord Chamberlaine, and the King draws the Curtaine and sits reading pensively.
Suf. How sad he lookes, sure he is much afflicted.
Kin. Who is there? ha?
Nor. Pray God he be not angry. (ſelues
Kin. Who's there I say? How dare you thrust your
Into my priuate Meditations?
Who am I? Ha?
Nor. A gracious King, that pardons all offences
Malice ne're meant. Our breach of Duty this way,
Is businesse of Estate, wherein we come
Commanded to your Highnesse pleasure.
Kin. Ye are too bold:
Go too; Ile make ye know your times of businesse:
Is't conuenient you should trouble vs? Ha?
Enter Wolsey and Campian with a Commission.
Who's else for vs? my Lord Cardinall? O my Wolsey,
The quiet of my wounded Conscience,
Thou art to me a la[illegible]ong, your welcome
Most learned Reuerend Sir into our Kingdome,
Vse vs, and it. My Lord, haue great care,
I be not found a Talker.
Wol. Sir, you cannot;
I would your Grace would giue vs but an houre
Of reasonable audience.
Kin. Ascend Sir.
Nor. Let's Peace, how the spleene doth swell!
Suf. Not to speake of.
I would not be so sicke though for his place:
But this cannot continue
Nor. If it do, Ile venture one, haue at him
Suf. I another.
Exeunt Norfolke and Suffolke.
Wol. Your Grace has giuen a learned hearing to the some
Aboue a hundred reasons alledg'd truely
Your right to the vexed Crowne of Castile.
Who can be angry now? What Enuy reach you?
The Subiect of all Watches, eye and tongue,
Mine haue trauail'd, and they haue made a good issue,
True Trust, iust and Noble. All the Clerkes,
I meane the learned ones in Christian Kingdomes)
Haue their free voyces. Rome the Nurse of Iudgement)
Inuited by your Noble selfe, hath sent
One generall Tongue vnto vs. This good man
This just and learned Priest, Cardinall Campeius,
Whom once more, I present vnto your Highnesse.
Kin. And once more in mine armes I bid him welcome,
And thanke the Holy Conclaue for their loues
They haue sent me, such a Man I long haue wisht for.
Camp. Your Grace must euer stand mistaken all strangers loues,
Now in their Masters Highnesse hand
Which your owne vertue, and the loue of some
Conspiring with your Grace do chuse their Seruant,
Worthy the Honour, and vnfained the Pleasure.
Kin. Cardinall Campeius,
Your hand my Lord. I receiue you gladly,
Some Friends of mine attend vs. For whose Company
I know you Master of Ceremonies will prouide.
Exit Gardiner.
Wol. Your Grace has giuen a learned hearing to the some
Aboue a hundred reasons alledg'd truely
Your right to the vexed Crowne of Castile.
Who can be angry now? What Enuy reach you?
The Subiect of all Watches, eye and tongue,
Mine haue trauail'd, and they haue made a good issue,
True Trust, iust and Noble. All the Clerkes,
I meane the learned ones in Christian Kingdomes)
Haue their free voyces. Rome the Nurse of Iudgement)
Inuited by your Noble selfe, hath sent
One generall Tongue vnto vs. This good man
This just and learned Priest, Cardinall Campeius,
Whom once more, I present vnto your Highnesse.
Kin. And once more in mine armes I bid him welcome,
And thanke the Holy Conclaue for their loues
They haue sent me, such a Man I long haue wisht for.
Camp. Your Grace must euer stand mistaken all strangers loues,
Now in their Masters Highnesse hand
Which your owne vertue, and the loue of some

Kin. Cardinall Campeius,
Your hand my Lord. I receiue you gladly,
Some Friends of mine attend vs. For whose Company
I know you Master of Ceremonies will prouide.
Exit Gardiner.
Wol. Giue me your hand: much ioy & fauour to you;
You are the Kings now.
Card. But to be commanded
For euer by your Grace, whose hand has rais'd me.
Kin. Come hither Gardiner.
Walkes and whispers.
Camp. My Lord of Yorke, was not one Doctor Pace
In this mans place before him?
Wol. Yes he was
Camp. Was he not held a learned man?
Wol. Yes surely.
Camp. Beleeue me there's an ill opinion spread then,
Euen of your selfe Lord Cardinall.
Wol. How? of me?
Camp. They will not sticke to say, you enuide him,
And fearing he would rise (he was so vertuous)
Kept him a forraigne man still, which so greeu'd him,
That he ran mad, and dide.
Wol. Heauns peace be with him!
That's Christian care enough: for liuing Murmurers,
There's places of rebuke. He was a Foole;
For he would needs be vertuous: that good Fellow,
If I command him follows my appointment,
I will haue none so neere else. Learne this Brother,
We're not to be great, by meaner persons.
Kin. Deliuer this with modesty to th' Queene.
Exit Gardiner.
The most conuenient place, that I can thinke of
For such receipt of Learning is Blackfriers
There ile binde, meete with you, mine owne Lord,
Where you shall haue ease and conuenience Confidence Confidence;
O 'tis a rare contriu'd, and most sweet one. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Anne Bullen, and an old Lady.

An. Not for that neither: here's the pang that pinches
His highnesse, hauing liu'd so long with her, and she
So good a Lady, that no Tongue could euer
Pronounce dishonour of her: by my life,
She never knew harme-doing: Oh, now after
So many courses of the Sunne enthroned,
Still growing in a Maiestie, and pompe, the which
To leaue, a thousand fold more bitter, than
'Tis sweet at first t'acquire. After this Processe,
To giue her the auaunt: it is a pitty
Would moue a Monster
Old La. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.
An. Oh Gods will, much better
She ne're had known pompe: though't be temporall,
Yet if that quarrell Fortune, do diuorce
It from the bearer, 'tis sufferance, panging
As soule and bodies seuering
Old L. Alas poore Lady,
She's a stranger now againe
An. So much the more
Must pity drop vpon her, verily
I sweare, 'tis better to be lowly borne,

And

And range with humble Liuers in Content,
Then to be perk'd vp in a glitt'ring griefe,
And wear a golden sorrow.
Old L. Our content
Is our best hauing.
Anne By my troth and Maidenhead,
I would not be a Queene.
Old L. Beshrew me I would,
And venture Maidenhead for't and so much more,
For a little peece of your Heritage
You that haue fairer parts of Woman vpon you
Haue (too) a Woman's heart as tender yet
Affection's residence, Women soone
Which, to say sooth, are blessings when we please
(Sauing your minding Lady) would receiue,
Of your late Chimeres Countesse, would receiue,
I vow, large proportion.
Anne Nay, good troth.
Old L. Yes troth, & troth you would haue a Queene?
Anne Not vnlesse for those respects you name me
Old L. 'Tis strange, a thrifty penny hath wonne me
Or has I am, to Queene it: but I pray you,
What make you of the Marchionesse of Dorset
To beare that port we see?
An. Not much.
Old L. Not much?
I would not haue old Dorset for my husband,
For more then halfe the Dowries of my Sexe
Cannot vouch alter is a very weake
Liuer to get a boy.
An. How you doe talke
I sweare againe, I would not be a Queene,
For all the world.
Old L. In faith, for little England
You'd venture an emballing: I my selfe
Would for Carnarnanshire although there long'd
No more to the Crowne but that. Lo, who comes here?

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

L. Cham. Good morrow Ladies: what were't worth to know
The secret of your conference?
An. My good Lord,
Not your demand, it values not your asking:
Our Mistris Sorrowes we were pitying.
Cham. It was a gentle businesse and becoming
The action of good women, there is hope
All will be well.
An. Now I pray God, Amen
Cham. You bear a gentle minde, & heauenly blessings
Follow such Creatures. That you may, faire Lady
Perceiue I speake sincerely, and high notes
Taken of your many vertues, the King's Maiesty
Commends his good opinion of you, to you, and
Does purpose honour to you no lesse flowing,
Then Marchionesse of Pembroke: to which Title,
A Thousand pound a yeare, Annuall Support,
Out of his Grace, he adds.
An. I do not know
What kinde of my obedience I should tender,
More then my All of Duty, I know
Are not words duely hallowed, nor my Wishes
More worth, then empty vanities: yet Prayers & Wishes
Are all I can returne. Beseech your Lordship,
Vouchsafe to take my thankes, and my obedience,
As from a blushing not Handmaid, to his Highnesse;
Whose health and Royalty I pray to

Cham. Lady;
I shall not fayle t'approue the faire conceit
The King hath of you. I haue perus'd her well:
Beauty and Honour in her are in one,
Now I see they haue couragt the King: and who knowes yet
But from this Lady may proceed a Gemme,
To lighten all this Ile. I'le to the King,
And say I spoke with you.

Exit Lord Chamberlaine

An. My honour'd Lord.
Old L. Why this it is: See, see,
I haue beene begging sixteene yeares in Court (Am yet a Courter be, saue, or could Come pat betwixt too, early and late) for nothing
But a poore thousand pound a yeare: for pure need
A meane it is called Mother, hath fed my poore
Selfe and daughter, till I were almost ashamed,
To thinke vpon't.
An. I doe not doubt your fortune
Old L. Because they haue beene my friends to come,
Then were I wretch'd indeed: there is no shame
But many faces must blush vpon this,
Which they will make their Common Almes-deed,
Still number me i'th' Common Cry of Curres.
An. Good Lady,
Make your selfe mirth with your particular fancy,
And leaue out these. Me thinkes you are sad,
Heauen comfort you.
Old L. Whether you will or no. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Trumpets, Sennet and Cornets.

Enter two Vergers, with short Siluer Wands; next them two Scribes in the habit of Doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops of Lincolne & Ely, Rochester and Saint Asaph: next them, with some small distance, followes a Gentleman bearing the Purse, with the great Seale, and a Cardinals Hat: Then two Priests, bearing each a Siluer Crosse: Then a Gentleman Vsher bare-headed, accompanied with a Sergeant at Armes, bearing a Siluer Mace: Then two Gentlemen bearing two great Siluer Pillers: After them, side by side, the two Chamberlaines: Then the Queene, in her Robe: In her hayre richly adorned with a Coronet: On her left hand, the Duke of Norfolke: On her right, the Duke of Suffolke: The two Cardinals two Noblemen with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place vnder the Cloth of State: The two Cardinals sit vnder him as Iudges. The Queene takes place some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselues on each side the Court in manner of a Consistory: Below them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in conuenient order about the Stage.

Car. Whil'st our Commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded
King. What is the need?
It hath already publiquely bene read,
And on all sides th'Auditory allowd,
You may then spare your time.
Car. Well, proceed.
Scribe. Say Henry King of England, come to the Court.
Crier. Henry King of England &c.
King. Heere
Scribe. Say Katherine Queene of England, come
Come to the Court.
Crier. Katherine Queene of England &c.
The Queene rises out of her Chaire, goes about the Court, comes to the King, and kneeles at his Feete. Then speakes.
Sir, I desire you doe me right and Justice,
And to bestow your pitty upon me:
For I am a most poore Woman, and a Stranger,
Borne out of your Dominions, having here
No Judge indeed, as no default in me doth speake,
Or Friend, then I profess my selfe to be:
Alas, Sir, In what have I offended you?
What cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good Grace from me? Heaven witnesse,
I have been to you a true and humble Wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in feare to kindle your Dislike,
Yea subject to your Countenance, glad, or sorry,
As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour
I ever contradicted your Desire,
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your Friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine Enemy? what Friend of mine,
That had to him deriv'd your Anger, did
Continue my Love? Not for that neither:
Here's the pang that pinches:
His Highnesse having liv'd with me full twenty three yeares,
That, and many more of which, no mention made,
Put me away from him, and hath married
Without more cause, and for my Issue sake,
Lay his Conscience bare to marriage:
Deny your part in me the name of Wife,
And throw the Name upon my Daughter.
Beseech you, Sir, by all the dues of Honour,
And Humane Kindnesse, boldly to resolve me,
In what you can accuse me?
Wol. Noble Lady,
I am sorry my integrity should breed,
And service to his Majesty and you,
So deepe suspition, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of Accusation,
To taint that honour every good Tongue blesses,
Nor to speake more of you, than you would Willingly heare your selfe. Our charge is only,
To heare by what good meanes you have made known
The intimation of the Queenes Grace to you,
Touching this Businesse now in question,
Which is, her scruple touching your long lying
With the late King her Brother, which she feares,
Was not a lawfull Marriage. Wherefore, humbly
Your pleasure in this point, and we shall
Be thereby satisfied, and depart from hence
In the due name of Justice.
Yet before that,
I must tell you,
That Reverend Fathers, men
Of singular Integrity and Learning,
Yea the elected Cardinals, who are assembled
To plead your Cause. It shall be therefore bootlesse,
That longer you desire the Court, as well
For your owne quiet, as to rectifie
What is unsetled in the King.
Cam. His Grace
Hath spoken well, and justly. Therefore Madam,
It's fit this Royall Session do proceed,
And that (without delay) their Arguments
Be now produc'd and heard.
Q. Lord Cardinall, to you I speake.
Wol. Your pleasure, Madam.
Q. Sir, I am about to weepe; but thinking that
We are a Queene (or long have dream'd so) certaine
The daughter of a King, my drops of teares,
Ile turne to sparkes of fire.
Wol. Be patient yet.
Q. I will, when you are humble; Nay before,
Or God will punish me. I do beleeve
(Induc'd by potent Circumstances) that
You are mine Enemy, and make my Challenge,
You shall not be my Judge: for it is you
Have blowne this Coale betwixt my Lord, and me,
Which God's dew quench: Therefore, I say again,
I utterly abhorre, yea from my Soule
Refuse you for my Judge, whom yet once more
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.
Wol. I do professe
You speake not like your selfe, who ever yet
Have stood to Charity, and displayd th'effects
Of Disposition gentle, and of Wisedome,
O'retopping womans powre. Madam you do me wrong
I have no Spleene against you, nor injustice
For you, or any: how farre I have proceeded,
Or how farre further shall be warranted
By a Commission from the Consistorie,
Yea the whole Consistorie of Rome. You charge me,
That I have blowne this Coale: I do deny it.
The King is present: If it be known to him,
That I gainsay my Deed, how may he wound,
And worthily my falsehood: yea as much
As you have done my truth. If he know
That I am free of your report, he knowes
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me, and the Cure is to Remove these Thoughts from you. The which before
His Highnesse shall speake in, I do beseech
You gracious Madam to unthinke your speaking,
And to say so no more.
Queen. My Lord, my Lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weake
T'oppose your cunning. Y'are meek & humble-mouth'd;
You sign your Place, and Calling, in full seeming,
With Meekenesse and Humilitie: but your Heart
Is cramm'd with Arrogancie, Spleene and Pride.
You have by Fortune and his Highnesse favors,
Gone slightly o're low steppes, and now are mounted
Where Powres are your Retainers, and your words
(Domesticks to you) serve your will, as't please
Your selfe pronounce their Office. I must tell you,
You tender more your persons Honor, than
Your high profession spirituall: That again
I do refuse you for my Judge, and here
Before you all, Appeale unto the Pope,
To bring my whole Cause 'fore his Holinesse,
And to be judg'd by him.
She Curtsies to the King, and offers to depart.

Camp.

Camp. The Queene is obstinate,
Stubborne to Iustice, apt to accuse it, and
Disdainfull to be tride by't, 'tis not well.
Shee's gone away
Kin. Call her again.
Crier. Katherine Q. of England, come into the Court.
Gent. Ush. Madam, you are cal'd back.
Que. What need you note it? pray you keep your way,
When you are cal'd return. Now the Lord helpe,
They vexe me past my patience: pray you passe on,
I will not tarry: no, nor euer more
Vpon this businesse my appearance make,
In any of their Courts.
Exit Queene and her Attendants.
Kin. Go thy wayes Kate,
That man i'th world, who shall report he has
A better Wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that: thou art alone
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentlenesse,
Thy meeknesse, Saint-like, wife-like Gouernment,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Soueraigne enough, Princesse (without this) speake thee out)
The Queene of earthly Queenes. She's Noble borne;
And like her true Nobility, she has
Carried her selfe towards me.
Wol. Most gracious Sir,
In humblest manner I require your Highnesse,
That it shall please you to declare in hearing
Of all these eares (for where I am robb'd and bound,
There must I be vnloos'd: although not there
At once and fully satisfied, whether euer I
Did broach this businesse to your Highnesse, or Laid any scruple in your way which might
Induce you to the question on't, or euer
Haue (to you, to any one) within my selfe
A doubt. Lady, I neuer knew any thought
Be to the preiudice of your pretious State,
Or touch of her good person.
Kin. My Lord Cardinall,
I doe excuse you; yea, vpon mine Honour,
I free you from't. You are not to be taught
That you haue many enemies that know not
Why they are so, but like to Village Curres,
Barke when their fellowes doe. By some of these
The Queene is put in anger. You are excus'd:
But will you be more iustified? You euer
Haue wish'd the sleeping of this businesse, neuer desir'd
It to be stirr'd, but oft haue hindred, oft
The passages made toward it: on my Honour,
I speake my good Lord Cardinall, to this point,
And thus farre cleare him.
Now, what mou'd me to't,
I will be bold with time and your attention: then (con't.
Tell me how came it? Briefly, and like a Scholler.
My Conscience first receiu'd a tendernesse,
Scruple, and prickt on certaine Speeches vttered
By the Bishop of Bayon, then French Embassador,
Who had been hither sent on the debating
A Marriage twixt the Duke of Orleance and
Our Daughter Mary. I' th' Progresse of this businesse,
Ere a determinate resolution, he
(I meane the Bishop) did require a respite,
Wherein he might the King his Lord aduertise,
Whether our Daughter were legitimate
Respecting this our Marriage with the Dowager,
Sometimes our Brothers Wife. This respite shooke
The bosome of my Conscience, entred me;
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast, which forc'd such way,
That many maz'd considerings did throng
And prest in with this Caution. First, me thought
I stood not in the state of Heauen, who had Commanded Nature, that my Ladies wombe
If it conceiu'd a male child by me, should
Do no more offices of life to't, than
The graue does to the dead: for her Male Issue,
Or di'de where they were made, or shortly after
This world had ayr'd them. Hence I tooke a thought,
This was a Iudgement on me, that my Kingdome
(Well worthy the best Heritage i' Christendome)
Should not
Be gouern'd by a Woman: Lastly, that
Feare of the sonnes of Queenes, Brothers soone
By this my Issue's end, was close at hand.
May it please your Grace, on this I built an Vneasie Scruple: and the more so still
Hauing before my eyes the euill example
Of our late Neighbour, his late Marriage
With his Brothers Wife, with whom he lyu'd
Some twenty yeares, and had yet no Children.
Compelled by these Motiues, and mine Error,
Wherein my Conscience, strucken deepely, stood
Vrging the same, I first mou'd you, my Lord,
And comming with a Learned Conscience,
Learned in this Age, was not afraid to breake
With any Prince that liu'd. Ah, my good Lord,
How did it grieue me, that the Royall Fame
Which I enioy'd, should thus be wounded, my Name
Which to this houre, euen my Aduersaries
Haue left vnblemish'd, should in this Point onely
Be soyl'd and stayn'd!
Wol. Sir, you cannot tell
How you were tempted.
Car. Speake your Highnesse,
The quicker your Confession,
Better for your Conscience.
Kin. Sir, I am
As glad to flow thus farre, assure you, as
You are to heare me: were my Words to end
Now, I should leaue well what I've vttered.
But (for my Conscience) know I am not yet
At Anchor, nor shall fall till I come where
I hope this Businesse can be toss'd: you, my Lord,
You that are growne so popular with your Tongue,
Could command Boldnesse elsewhere, and to all
Men but to Kings and Subiects, of your King
Where did you learne this Duty?
Cran. Stand vp, good Canterbury,
My learned and well-beloued Seruant Cranmer,
Prethee returne, with thy approued Iudgement
My Secret Councell: for I see her passion
Makes this Businesse ripe. Henry and Wolsey,
Rest your minds heere: our Councell we will Command to your remembrance: and what they doe
Command to vs, shall stand. Our Daughter
Shall neuer know the Doubt that I haue had
Where I am robb'd and bound.
And now to you, sweet Maid, you must be faine
To hold your Tongue, and let my Mercy worke
With the rude Motions of your People, till
Time and best Iudgements, on all hands, call backe
Your Mother to her Graue, and you to Reason.
Arme your Prudence with Patience, and make vse
Of what you haue spoke, for my Minde gaue you
Wise and Vertuous, and no Foule may staine
Faire Deeds, or make 'em base.
Cran. Amen, Amen.
Kin. My Lords, I trust you haue forgot the Place.
The Queene being absent, 'tis a shame to start
Thus late, we shall finish at Blackefriers.
Exeunt in manner as they entred.

Alas, ha's banish'd me his Bed already,
His Loue, too long ballanc'd in the Scales
Of dudling Conscience, hath given the Cause
A dangerous turne. Why might not he deny
To me all the sweet Cordialls of his Eyes,
To me that haue bestow'd Threescore faire Sommers
All the bright Seasons of my Life, on him,
Make me a Curse like this?

A Woman (I dare say without Vainglory)
Never yet branded with Suspition?
Haue I with all my full Affections

Limmes of the Deuill. How I did thinke

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Duke of [illegible] and Surrey,

Norf. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[

And came to th'eye o'th King, wherein was read
How that the Cardinall did entreat his Holinesse
To stay the Iudgement o'th Diuorce, for it
It did take place, [illegible] queenes presence
My Kings is tangled in [illegible] to
A Creature of the Queenes, Lady Anne Bullen.
Sur. Has the King this?
Sur. Beleeue it
Sur. Will this worke?
Cham. The King's [illegible] perceiues him, how he coasts
And hedges his owne way. But in this point,
All his indeauours founder, and he brings
After his Patients death, the King already
Hath married the faire Lady.
Sur. Would he had
Sur. May you be happy in your wish my Lord,
For I profeile you haue it.
Sur. Now all my ioy
Trace the Coronation.
Sur. My Amen too't.
Nor. All men's.
Sur. There's order giuen her Coronation
Marry this is yet but young, and may be left
To some ears vnrecounted. But my Lords
She is a gallant Creature, and complete
In mind and feature. I persuade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this Land, which shall
In it be memoriz'd.
Sur. But will the King
Digest this Letter of the Cardinals?
The Lord forbid.
Nor. Marry Amen.
Sur. No, no
There's nor Westphalia, but abuts against his Note,
With whom the memorize of this Contract
Is fresh outside his fancy, which is not
Subscribed to yet. I do assure you,
The King's [illegible] Ambassadors.
Cham. Now God incense him,
And encrease in them Holy zeale.
Nor. But my Lord
When returne the Ambassadors?
Sur. The Kings remoues [illegible] Oxenford, which Hath from the [illegible] King and Queene
Together with [illegible] Colledges
Almost [illegible] (I beleeue)
Their second Marriage shall be published, and
Her Coronation. [illegible] more
Stands Katherine Queene, but Princesse Dowager,
And Widow to [illegible]
Nor. This same [illegible]
A worke [illegible] paines
[illegible]
Of the Kings face, and we shall see him
For certainty.
Sur. You may then spare that time
Nor. Be't so.
Enter Chamberlain and Cromwell.
Cham. Now?
Nor. Yonder he is, obserue he is moody
Stay. The Packet Cromwell,
Gaue't you the King?
Crom. To his owne hand, in's Bed-chamber.
Card. Look the Ostentants of the Paper?
Crom. Presently
He did vnfolde them, and the first he viewed,
He did it with a Serious mind, a heede
Was in his countenance. You he bad
Attend him heere this Morning.
Card. Is he ready to come abroad?
Crom. I think by this he is.
Card. Leaue me a while. Exit Cromwell.
It shall be to the Duchesse of Alanson,
The French Kings Sister, He shall marry her.
Anne Bullen? No, he must Anne Bullen for him,
There's more in't than fayre Visage. Bullen?
No, we'll no Taffeties. Speedily I wish
To heare from Rome. The Marchionesse of Penbroke?
Nor. He's discontented
Sur. May be he hearest the King
Does whet his Anger to him.
Sur. Sharpe enough,
Lord for thy Iustice.
Car. The late Queenes Gentlewoman?
A Knights Daughter
To be her Mistris Mistris? The Queenes, Queene?
This Candle burnes not cleere, 'tis I must snuffe it,
Then out it goes. What though I know her vertuous
And well deseruing, yet I know her for
A spleeny Lutheran, and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lye i'th bosome of
Our hard-ruling King. Againe, there is sprung vp
An Heretique, an Arch one, Cranmer one
Hath crawl'd into the fauour of the King,
And is his Oracle.
Nor. He is vexed at something

Enter King reading of a Scedule.

Sur. I would it were something that would fret the string,
The Master-cord of's heart.
Sur. The King, the King.
King. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his owne portion? And what expence by th'houre
Seemes to flow from him? How, i'th name of Thrift
Does he rake this together? Now my Lords,
Saw you the Cardinall?
Nor. My Lord, we haue
Stood here obseruing him. Some strange Commotion
Is in his braine. He bites his lip, and starts,
Stops on a sodaine, looks vpon the ground,
Then layes his finger on his Temple straight
Springs out into faire gate, then stops againe,
Strikes his breast hard, and anon, he casts
His eye against the Moone. In most strange Postures
We haue seene him set himselfe.
King. It may well be,
There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning,
Papers of State he sent me to peruse
As I required, and wot you what I found
There (on my Conscience put vnwittingly)
Forth of an Inuentory, this demurring
The seuerall parcels of his Plate, his Treasure,
Rich Stuffes and Ornaments of Houshold, which
I find at such proud Rate, that it out-speakes
Possession of a Subiect.
Nor. It's Heauens will,
Some Spirit put this paper in the Packet,
To bleste your eye withall.
King. If we did thinke

His Contemplations were above the earth,
And fixt on Spirituall object, he should still
Dwell on his Musings, but I am afeard
His Thinkings are below the Moone, not worth
His serious consideration.

King takes his Seat neere the Cardinall, who goes to the Cardinals

Car. Heaven forgive me,
Ever God bleſſe your Highneſſe.
King. Good my Lord,
You are full of Heavenly ſtuffe, and beare the Inventory
Of your beſt Graces, in your mind, the which
You were [illegible]
[illegible]
To keep [illegible]
I deeme you [illegible]
To haue your Image [illegible]
Car. Sir,
For Holy Offices [illegible]
To ſtand [illegible]
I beare the State [illegible]
Hee [illegible]
Theſe frayle ſonne, [illegible]
Muſt giue my tendance [illegible]
King. You muſt [illegible]
Car. And [illegible] ſometimes we are ſeene together,
As I will lend you [illegible]
Vnto my weightyer [illegible]
King. 'Tis well ſaid againe,
And 'tis a kinde and [illegible]
And yet words are no deeds. My Father loued you,
He ſaid he did, and with his deeds did crowne
His word vpon you. Since I had my Office,
I haue kept you next my Heart, haue not alone
Imploy'd you where high Profit might come home,
But par'd my preſent Honours, to [illegible]
My Bounties vpon you.
Car. What ſhould this meane?
Sur. The Lord increaſe this Buſineſſe.
King. Haue I not made you
The prime man of the State? I pray you tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you haue found true?
And if you may confeſſe it, ſay it freely
If you are bound to vs, or no. What ſay you?
Car. My Soueraigne, I confeſſe your Royall graces
Showr'd on me daily, haue been more than could
My ſtudied purpoſes requite, which went
Beyond all Mans endeauors. My endeauors,
Haue euer come too ſhort of your Deſires,
Yet filed with my Abilities. Mine owne ends
Haue been mine ſo, that euermore they pointed
To th'good of your moſt Sacred Perſon, and
The profit of the State. For your great Graces
Heap'd vpon me poore Vndeſeruer I
Cannot but render but All againſt the ſtrokes,
My Prayres to heauen for you, my Loyaltie
Which euer has, and euer ſhall growe,
Tho' death (that Winter) kill it.
King. Faire anſwer'd.
A Loyall, and obedient Subiect is
Therein illuſtrated. The honour of it
Does pay the Act of it, as (i'th contrary)
The foulneſſe is the puniſhment. I preſume,
That as my hand has open'd Bounty to you,
My heart dropt Loue, my powre rain'd Honour, more
On you, then any. So your Hand, and Heart
Your Braine, and euery Function of your power,
Should, notwithſtanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in Loues particular, be more
To me your friend, then any.
Car. I do profeſſe,
That for your Highneſſe good, I euer labour'd
More then mine owne: that am, haue, and will be (Though all the world ſhould crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their Soule, though perils did
Abound, as thicke as thoughts could make 'em, and Appeare in formes more horrid) yet my Duty,
As doth a Rocke againſt the chiding Flood,
Should the approach of this wilde Riuer breake,
And ſtand vnſhaken yours.
King. 'Tis Nobly ſpoken.
Take notice Lords, he has a Loyall breſt,
For you haue ſeene him open it. Read o're this,
And after, this: and then to Breakfaſt with
What appetite you haue.

Exit King, frowning vpon Cardinall Wolſey. The Nobles throng after him, ſmiling, and whiſpering.

Car. What ſhould this meane?
What ſodaine Anger's this? How haue I reap'd it?
He parted frowning from me, as that Ruine
Leap'd from his Eyes. So looks the chafed Lyon
Vpon the daring Huntſman that has gall'd him
Then makes him nothing. I muſt read this paper;
I feare the Story of his Anger. 'Tis ſo;
This paper has vndone me: 'Tis th'Accompt
Of all that world of Wealth I haue drawne together
For mine owne ends, (indeed to gaine the Popedome,
And fee my friends in Rome.) O Negligence
Fit for a Foole to fall by: What croſſe Deuill
Made me put this maine Secret in the Packet
I ſent the King? Is there no way to cure this?
No new deuiſe to beate this from his Braines?
I know 'twill ſtirre him ſtrongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in ſpight of Fortune
Will bring me off againe. What's this? To the Pope?
The Letter (as I liue) with all the Buſineſſe
I writ to's Holineſſe. Nay then farewell!
I haue touch'd the higheſt point of all my Greatneſſe,
And from that full Meridian of my Glory,
I haſte now to my Setting. I ſhall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the Euening,
And no man ſee me more.

Enter to Wolſey the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke, the Earle of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlaine

Nor. Heare the Kings pleaſure Cardinall,
Who commands you
To render vp the Great Seale preſently
Into our hands, as to Conſtraine your ſelfe
To Attend our Leiſure, our Lord of Weſtcheſters,
If you feare to part from his Highneſſe
Car. Stay:
Where's your Commiſſion? Lords, words cannot carry
Authority ſo weighty.
Suf. Who dare croſſe 'em,
Bearing the Kings will from his mouth expreſſely?
Car. Till I finde more then will, or words to do it,
(I meane your malice, know Officious Lords,
I feare, and muſt deny it. Now I ſee
Of what coarſe Mettle ye are moulded, Enuy,
How eagerly ye follow my Diſgraces

As

As if fed ye, and how fleeke and wanton
Ye appeare in every thing may bring my ruine?
Follow your envious courses, men of Malice;
You have Commission, and I no doubt
For new-found-out Rewards. That Seale
You ask with such a Violence, the King
Mine, and your Master, with his owne hand, gave me:
Bad me enjoy it, with the Place, and Honors
During my will, and how I came by it,
Know to your sorrowes. Now, who'd take it?
Sur. The King that gave it.
Car. Well buckled.
Sur. I would it were fully so, I feare.
Car. Time, Time will try't.
Would some body would take mine, then I care not.
Sur. Comfort your selfe, my Lord, and pray.
Car. Pray,
O Noble Buckingham, my Father in Law,
The heads of all thy Brother Cardinals,
With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a hayre within the Ballance of your policie,
You sent me Deputie for Ireland
Farre from his succour, from the King, from all
That might have mercy on the fault, gave him
With your great Candlestick, out of mony pray.
Absolu'd me with an Axe.
Wol. This and all else
This talking Lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer is most false. The Duke by Law
Found his Treason, his Ambition was
Error in any private man to have,
But Noble in a Subject. Well, well Lord,
I have done no more then I should for you,
Your private Businesse, as a Subject,
Which you know I might do, and stand cleare
Both in his Law, and Grace. As for the Matter,
Duke must answer it, for Sure it can be,
And a great one he has to do with.
Sur. By my Life,
Your Lordship, were I not a Priest, perswades you,
To call this Treason
My Sword shall cut it off. Yet take heede. My Lords,
I cannot stay thus patiently. Was ever
And from this Fellow? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus Jaded by a piece of Scarlet,
Farewell Nobility: let his Grace go forward,
And dare us with his Cap, like Larkes.
Car. All goodnesse
Is poyson to thy Stomacke.
Sur. Yes, that goodnesse
Of gleaning all the Land
(The Common's hate 'tis true) to shew your selfe
Your Highnesse Friend, and Lover.
Pray for me, I fear
Yet I have not to strike at me, upon
This Revelation of the Duke's. Yet the King
Will know my Innocence from your Malice,
And dare your worst Objections: If I blush,
It is to see a Nobleman want manners.
Sur. I had rather want those, then my head.
Have at you
First, that without the Kings assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a Legate, by which power
You maim'd the Jurisdiction of all Bishops.
Nor. Then, That in all you writ to Rome, or else
To Forraigne Princes Ego & Rex meus
Was still inscribed: in which you brought the King
To be your Servant.
Sur. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of King or Councell, when you went
Ambassador to the Emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the Great Seale.
Sur. Item, You sent a large Commission
To Gregory de Cassado to conclude
Without the King's will, or the States allowance,
A League between his Highnesse and Ferrara.
Sur. That out of meere Ambition you have caus'd
Your holy Hat to be stampt on the Kings Coine.
Sur. Lord Cardinall, the Kings further pleasure is,
(By your late freedoms he will have forborne
And heereafter prayes rather for you then
Notwithstanding my Office sweepes to take
Subtle of so great a Seale.
Sur. I long to hear it
Sur. Lord Cardinall, the Kings further pleasure is,
Because all those things you have done of late
By your power Legatine within this Kingdome,
Fall into the compasse of a Premunire,
That therefore such a Writ be sued against you,
To forfeit all your Goods, Lands, Tenements,
Castles and whatsoever, and to be
Out of the Kings protection. This is my Charge.
Nor. And so we'll leave you to your Meditations
How to live better. For your stubborne answer
About the giving backe the Great Seale to us,
The King shall know it, and (no doubt) shall thanke you.
So fare you well, my little good Lord Cardinall.

Exeunt all but Wolsey.

Wol. So farewell, to the little good you bear me.
Farewell? A long farewell to all my Greatnesse.
This is the state of Man: to day he puts forth
The tender Leaves of hopes, to morrow Blossomes,
And beares his blushing Honors thicke upon him.
The third day, comes a Frost, a killing Frost,
And when he thinkes, good easie man, full surely

His

His Greatnesse is a ripening, nippes his roote,
And then he falls as I do. I have ventur'd
Like little wanton Boyes that swim on bladders:
This many Summers in a Sea of Glory,
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown Pride
At length broke under me, and now has left me
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude streame, that must for ever hide me.
Vaine pompe, and glory of this World, I hate ye:
I feele my heart new open'd. O how wretched
Is that poore man, that hangs on Princes favours!
There is betwixt that smile he would aspire to,
That sweet Aspect of Princes, and their ruine,
More pangs and feares than warres or women have:
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope againe.

Enter Cromwell, standing amazed.

Why how now, Cromwell?

Crom. I have no power to speake Sir.

Card. What, amaz'd
At my misfortunes? Can thy Spirit wonder
A great man should decline? Nay, and you weep
I am falne indeed.

Crom. How does your Grace.

Card. Why well:
Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
I know myselfe now, and I feele within me,
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet Conscience. The King has cur'd me,
I humbly thanke his Grace: and from these shoulders
These ruin'd Pillers, out of pitty taken
A load, would sinke a Navy, too much Honor:
O 'tis a burthen Cromwell, 'tis too heavy
For any Man, that hath but one to beare it,
And that must shortly too: these Eyes must seale,
And these grow dimme for ever to all Solace.
What is the houre?

Crom. Almost foure.

Card. Foure hours. Well, I shall live
Untill Eight, boy. Would I had given as many
Faire hours to my God, as I have spent minutes
Unto the World! Then I had angred Heaven
Scarce one poore houre. Give me some Water, Cromwell,
That my full heart may drowne the memory
Of my false dealing. Does it not? Speake.

Crom. Sir,
I am a sorrowfull Servant to your Grace.

Card. Would thou hadst been a Friend to me: and then
Thou might'st have known, how I have lov'd the King.
Had I but serv'd my God with halfe the Zeale
I serv'd my King, he would not in mine Age
Have left me naked to mine Enemies.

Crom. Good Sir, have patience.

Card. So I have. Farewell
The Hopes of Court, my Hopes in Heaven do dwell.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

1. Y'are well met once againe.

2. So are you.

1. You come to take your stand heere, and behold
The Lady Anne passe from her Coronation.

2. 'Tis

2 'Tis all my busines. At our last encounter,
The Duke of Buckingham came from his Triall.
1 'Tis very true: But that time offer'd sorrow,
This generall joy.
2 'Tis well: The Citizens
I am sure have shewne at full their Royall minds,
As (let 'em have their rights, they are ever forward
In Celebration of this day with Shewes,
Pageants, and Sights of Honour.
1 Never greater,
Nor (I'le assure you) better taken Sir.
2 May I be bold to aske what that containes,
That Paper in your hand?
1 Yes 'tis the List
Of those that claime their Offices this day,
By custome of the Coronation.
The Duke of Suffolke is the first, and claimes
To be High Steward; Next the Duke of Norfolke,
He to be Earle Marshall: you may reade the rest
1 I thanke you Sir: Had I not known those customes
I should have beene beholding to your Paper.
But I beseech you, what's become of Katherine
The Princesse Dowager? how goes her busines?
1 That I can tell you too. The Archbishop
Of Canterbury accompanied with other
Learned and Reverend Fathers of his Order,
Held a late Court at Dunstable, sixe miles off
From Ampthill, where the Princesse lay; to which
She was often cyted by them, but appeared not:
And to be short, for not Appearance and
The King's late Scruple, by the generall assent
Of all these Learned men she was divorced,
And the late Marriage made of none effect:
Since which she was removed to Kymbolton,
Where she remaines now sicke.
2 Alas good Lady.
The Trumpets sound: Stand close,
The Queene is comming. Hoboyes.

The Order of the Coronation.

1 A lively Flourish of Trumpets.
2 Then two Judges.
3 Lord Chancellor with Purse and Mace before him.
4 Quire singing. Musicke
5 Maior of London bearing the Mace. Then Garter, in his Coate of Armes, and on his head he wore a Cap of Maintenance.
6 Marquesse Dorset bearing a Scepter of Gold, on his head, a demy Coronall of Gold. With him the Earle of Surrey bearing the Rod of Silver with the Dove, Crowned with an Earles Coronall.
7 Duke of Suffolke, in his Robe of Estate, his Coronet on his head, bearing a long white Wand as High Steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolke, with the Rod of Marshalship, a Coronet on his head. Collars of Esses.
8 A canopy, borne by foure of the Cinque Ports, under it the Queene in her Robe. In her haire richly adorned with Pearle and Crosses. Over her head the Canopy of Lovers, and Pendants borne by the two Bishops.
9 The Olde Dutchesse of Norfolke, in a Coronall of Gold, wrought with Flowers bearing the Queenes Traine.
10 Certaine Ladies or Countesses, with plaine Circlets of Gold without Flowers.
Exeunt, first crossing over the Stage in Order and State, and then A great Flourish of Trumpets.

2 A Royall Traine beleeve me: These I know.
Who's that that beares the Scepter?
1 Marquesse Dorset,
And that the Earle of Surrey with the Rod.
2 A bo'e braue Gentleman. That should bee
The Duke of Suffolke.
1 'Tis the same: high Steward.
2 And that my Lord of Norfolke?
1 Yes.
2 Heauen blesse thee,
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
Sir as I have a Soule, she is an Angell,
Our King has all the Indies in his Armes,
And more, and richer, when he straines that Lady,
I cannot blame his Conscience.
1 They that beare
The Cloath of Honour ouer her are foure Barons
Of the Cinque Ports.
2 Those men are happy,
And so are all are neere her.
I take it, she that carries vp the Traine,
Is that old Noble Lady Dutchesse of Norfolke.
1 It is, and all the rest are Countesses.
2 Their Coronets say so. These are Starres indeed,
And sometimes falling ones.
2 No more of that.
Enter a third Gentleman.
1 God saue you Sir. Where haue you been broiling?
3 Among the crowd i'th Abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled
With the meere rankenesse of the ioy.
2 You saw the Ceremony?
3 That I did.
1 How was it?
3 Well worth the seeing.
2 Good Sir speake it to vs?
3 As well as I am able. The rich streame
Of Lords, and Ladies, hauing brought the Queene
Painefully to the Hall of State, from whence
She tooke her Chaire, long kneeling, and starre gazing
Then by a generall View the beholders
Offer'd to every part of her faire person
Sweet Countenance, which certainly shee bore
Like one that neuer more should take delight
In Pompe, and Feasting: Then a Lord of worth
And Saint-like temper led her to the Altar,
Where shee receiu'd the Crowne with such Deuotion,
As shee refus'd the Worlde. Many Teares
Fell from her, like deaw vpon a flower,
Then rose againe, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the Archbishop of Canterbury,
She had all the Royall makings of a Queene;
As holy Oyle, Edwards Confessors Crowne,
The Rod, and Bird of Peace, and all such Emblemes
Laid Nobly on her: which performed, the Quire

Scena Secunda.

her Gentlewomen, as being brought in a Chayre.

[illegible]

Cap. Noble Lady,
[illegible] owe service to your Grace, the next
the Kings request that [illegible]dy lyes
Who greeves much for your weakenesse, and by me
Sends you his Princely Commendations
And heartily prayers you take good comfort
Kath. O my good Lord that Comfort comes too late,
Tis like a Pardon after Execution.
That gentle Physicke given in time, had cur'd me
But now I am past all Comforts here, but Prayers
How does his Highnesse
Cap. Madam in good health.
Kath. So may he ever do, and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with Wormes, and my poore name
Banish'd the Kingdome. Patience is now
That suffer a Queene: yet I feele
Something I would, yet know not what to aske
Per. Nor Madam
Kath. Sir most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my Lord the King.
Cap. Most willing Madam.
Kath. In which I have commended to his goodnesse
The Model of our chaste Loves, his young Daughter,
The dews of heaven fall thicke in blessings on her,
Beseeching him to give her vertuous breeding
She is young, and of a Noble modest Nature,
I hope she will deserve well, and a little
To ease me in her Mother's sake, for I do know
I have not long to stay.
My last petition
Is that his Noble Grace would have some pitie
Upon my wretched Women that have
Fast and faithfully been to me,
Their Service I will justly boast of,
Whose truth deserves a Noble Recompence
I do believe, and am almost
At my last gasp, I can no more endure
Which I do feele fast upon me: pray my Lord,
Forget not these poore Women,
And now with all the peace of Heaven departed,
Such as is due to Saints, I give up my Soule
To gentle Sleep
Or some such Comfort, bear me hence.
Kath. I know your most Noble Lord. Remember me
In what you ever do to his Highnesse
Never grow cold in your Affection
Or all your Services will then be forfeit
For to a wife's most eyes grow more Farewell
My Lord Griffith, and Nay Patience
Vex not your Master ever yet I must be bold,
Come more Women. When I am dead good Wench,
Let me be used with Honour, strew me over
With Maiden flowers that all the world may know
I was a chaste Wife to my Grave. Embalme me,
Then lay me forth, although no Queene I have like
A Queene and Daughter to a King interre me.
I can no more.

Exeunt leading Katherine

THE EPILOGUE.

FINIS.

The Prologue.

IN Troy there lyes the Scene. From Iles of Greece
The Princes Orgillous, their high blood chaf'd
Have to the Port of Athens sent their Ships
Fraught with the ministers and implements
Of warre: and mock the Sixty and nine that wore
Their Crowns Regall, from th'Athenian bay
Launcht all with Princely Pompe, and there are made
Tenfold the Sea of Troy, with swelling ensignes
Display'd: Helen, Menelaus Queene,
With wanton Paris, sleeves, and skarfes the Quarrell.
To Troy soone they come,
Within the Hauens wide Bosome there to lodge
Their well-trimm'd vessels: so Troy Gates they pitch
Their brave Pauilions: Priams Pallace fills,
Double ranck'd Timbria, Helus, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenorides with massie staples
And correspondent force and fyled Barres
Stronge to the Sonnes of Troy
Now Expectation tickles skittish spirits,
On one and other syde, Troyan and Greeke,
Sets all on hazard: And hither am I come,
A Prologue arm'd, (but not in complete
Of Austere pen, or Actors voyce, but fitted
In like manner, as we do Armour,
To tell you faire Beholders, that our Play
Leapes o're the vaunt and firstlings of those broyles,
Ensuing these high and mightie quarrells,
And makes vast wast with ciphers to digest
The Writ of our Scene. Omission
Breeds not the lesse blame, when that which should accompany
And followes the worke remaines in supposall.
Now good or bad, 'tis with the selfe of Will

THE TRAGEDIE OF
Troylus and Cresida.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Pandarus and Troylus.

Troy. Call here my Varlet, I'le vnarme againe.
[illegible]
Let's make no stay.
Pan. Will this geare ne're be mended?
Troy. The Greekes are strong, & skilfull to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant,
but I am weaker then a womans teare:
Tamer then sleepe, fonder then ignorance,
Leſſe valiant then the Virgin in the night,
And skilleſſe as vnpractiſed infancie.
Pan. Well I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'le not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a Cake out o'the Wheate, muſt needes tarry the grinding.
Troy. Have I not tarried?
Pan. I the grinding: but you muſt tarry the boulting.
Troy. Have I not tarried?
Pan. I'the boulting: but you muſt tarry the leauening.
Troy. Still have I tarried.
Pan. I, to the leauening: but here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oaven, and the baking: nay you muſt ſtay the cooling too, or you may chance burne your lippes.
Troy. Patience her ſelfe, what goddeſſe ere ſhe be,
Doth leſſer blench at ſufferance then I doe.
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Is too starv'd a subiect for my Sword,
But Pandarus. O Gods! How do you plague me?
I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he's as teachy to be woo'd to woe,
As she is stubborne, chaste against all suite.
Tell me Apollo for thy Daphne Love
What Cressida, what Pandar, and what we
Her bed is India, there she lies a Pearle,
Between our Ilium, and where she resides
Let it be cald the wild and wandring flood,
Our selfe the Merchant, and this sayling Pandar,
Our doubtfull hope, our conduct and our Barke
Alarums. Enter Æneas.
Æne. How now Prince Troylus?
Wherefore not a field?
Troy. Because not there, this womans answer sorts,
For womanish it is to be from thence
What newes Æneas from the field to day?
Æne. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.
Troy. By whom Æneas?
Æne. Troylus by Menelaus
Troy. Let Paris bleed, 'tis but a scot to scorne,
Paris is gor'd with Menelaus horne. Alarum
Æne. Harke what good sport is out of Towne to day
Troy. Better at home if would I might were may
But to the sport abroad, are you bound thither?
Æne. In all swift haste.
Troy. Come go we then together. Exeunt.
Enter Cressid and her man.
Cre. Who were those went by?
Man. Queene Hecuba, and Helen.
Cre. And whether go they?
Man. Vp to the Eastern Tower,
Whose height commands as subiect all the vaile,
To see the battle. Hector whose patience,
Is a Vertue that to day was mou'd
He chides Andromache and strooke his Armorer, t
And like as there were husbandry in Warre
Before the Sunne rose, he was armed quite,
And to the field goes he, where every flower
Did as a Prophet weepe what it foresaw,
In Hectors wrath.
Cre. What was his cause of anger?
Man. The noise goes this,
There is among the Greekes
A Lord of Troian blood, Nephew to Hector,
They call him Ajax
Cre. Good, and what of him?
Man. They say he is a very man per se and stands alone
Cre. So do all men, vnlesse they are drunke, sicke, or haue no legges
Man. This man Lady, hath rob'd many beasts of their particular additions, he is as valiant as the Lyon, churlish as the Beare, slow as the Elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humors, that his valour is crusht into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a vertue, that he hath not a glimpse of. Nor any man an attaint, but he carries some stayne of it. He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hayre, he hath the ioynts of euery thing, but euery thing so out of ioynt, that he is a gowty Briareus many hands and no vse, or purblind Argus all eyes and no sight.
Cre. But how should this man that makes me smile, make Hector angry?
Man. They say he yesterday cop'd Hector in the battell and stroke him downe, the disdaine & shame where-of hath euer since kept Hector fasting and waking.
Enter Pandarus.
Cre. Who comes here?
Man. Madam your Vncle Pandarus.
Cre. Hectors a gallant man
Man. As may be in the world Lady
Pan. What's that? what's that?
Cre. Good morrow Vncle Pandarus
Pan. Good morrow Cozen Cressid: what do you talke of good morrow Alexander? how do you Cozen? when were you at Troian?
Cre. This morning Vncle
Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hector armed and gone ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not vp? was she?
Cre. Hector was gone but Helen was not vp?
Pan. E'ne now, Hector was stirring early
Cre. That were we talking of, and of his anger.
Pan. Was he angry?
Cre. So he saies here.
Pan. True he was so: I know the cause too, he'le lay about him to day I can tell them that: and there's Troylus will not come farre behind him, let them take heede of Troylus, I can tell them that too.
Cre. What is he angry too?
Pan. Who? Troylus? Troylus is the better man of the two.
Cre. O Iupiter; there's no comparison.
Pan. What not between Troylus and Hector? do you know a man if you see him?
Cre. I if I ever saw him before and knew him.
Pan. Well I say Troylus is Troylus.
Cre. Then you say as I say,
For I am sure he is not Hector
Pan. No not Hector in some degrees.
Cre. 'Tis just to each of them in his owne kinde.
Pan. Himselfe? alas poore Troylus I would he were
Cre. So he is.
Pan. Condition I had gone barefoote to India.
Cre. He is not Hector
Pan. Himselfe? no he's not himselfe would a were himselfe well, the Gods are above, time must friend or end: I doe Troylus well, I would my heart were in her body: no, Hector is not a better man then Troylus.
Cre. Excuse me.
Pan. He is elder
Cre. Pardon me, pardon me.
Pan. Th'other's not come too't; you shall tell me another tale when th'others come too't: Hector shall not carue his will this yeare
Cre. He shall not needs if he haue his owne.
Pan. Nor his qualities
Cre. No matter.
Pan. Nor his beautie.
Cre. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.
Pan. You haue no iudgement Neece, Helen her selfe swore th'other day, that Troylus for a browne fauour (for so 'tis I must confesse) not brown neither.
Cre. No, but browne.
Pan. Faith to say truth, browne and not browne
Cre. To say the truth, true and not true.
Pan. She prais'd his complexion aboue Paris.
Cre. Why Paris hath colour enough.
Pan. So he has
Cre. Then Troylus should haue too much if she prais'd him aboue, his complexion is higher then his, he haue

co'one enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion, I had as lieue Helen golden to goe a Caroch rayned Troylus for a copper nose.

Pan. I sweare to you,
I thinke Helen loues him better then Paris.

Cre. Then shee's a merry Greeke indeed.

Pan. Nay I assure you, shee came to my house the other day most compleant with Troylus, and no body knowes as yet but you and I, and one or two more besides.

Cre. I coold a Priuiledge Arbitrement we may leaue behinde vs, when we are dead and rotten.

Pan. Well looke you, you are very young, and yet will be wise when thou hast more yeares, I would faine know of thee

Cre. In a word, you may saue your labour.

Pan. Why you know I loue her.

I thinke nothing becomes a man better then a man should do so.

Cre. Good sooth so doe I.

Pan. Does she so?

Cre. Oh yes and sees a cheeke in Antenors.

Pan. Well go to, I say no more to you of Helen loues Troylus.

Cre. I care not if I say no more to thee
Prouided I neuer speake more to thee

Pan. I would my tongue could coole my cholericke blood, but you will not, you will not, well for mine ease let it be so, good Neece do so.

Cre. If you loue an addle egge as well as you loue an idle head, you would eate chickens i'the shell.

Pan. I cannot chuse but laugh, to see how the sicke headlesse Asse, would eate as a chicken, shell and all, that needes nothing.

Cre. Why uncle.

Pan. Are these your commendations, your prayses you bestow vpon me?

Cre. I praise your wisedome, which is a wise one indeed.

Pan. But I praise Queene Hecuba for a wise woman, and your father, I know not what he is.

Cre. Why Mistresse.

Pan. And Helen faire Helen, I would either of you were other men.

Cre. But would you were so too?

Pan. Why so I am.

Cre. And so were I, I were not my selfe?

Pan. Marry sir I would haue that Helen sped on Troylus.

Cre. And I had my desire, I should haue her.

Pan. Why you haue not so much at the hand, as at his pleasure.

Cre. What would you answere?

Pan. Why I would answere no, because I would not be out of the way.

Cre. I pray thee make no question of that, two and fifty horses in a yeare, what would they do in so many dayes, Queene Hecuba hath Sonnes Troylus and Paris, my father hath Sonnes Troylus and Paris, my brother Troylus hath Sonnes Troylus and Paris, and Helen hath Troylus and Paris to command, I thinke there is enough, hath patience.

Cre. So I doe know,
Troylus speech great will be going by

Pan. Well Cozen,
I told you a thing yesterday, think on't.

Cre. So I doe.

Pand. Be it worse then it will, he will weepe you an'it were a man borne in April. Sound a retreate

Cre. And I'le pray vpon his teares, as it were a Neece of great Mars.

Pan. Harke they are comming from the field, stand we here and see them, as they passe toward Troy, good Neece do so. Neece Cressida.

Cre. At your pleasure.

Pan. Heere, heere, heere is an excellent place, heere we may see most bountifully, I tell you true all your Graecians, as rich in pollicy, as braue as Mars, as fierce as Polixenes, and more chaste then Diana.

Enter Aneas.

Cre. Speake not so loud.

Pan. That's Aneas, is not that a braue man, he's one of the flowers of Troy I can tell you, but marke him Neece, I tell you, but marke him he is Troylus friend.

Cre. Well, what's that?

Enter Antenor.

Pan. That's Antenor, he has a wyle head, I can tell you, and he's a man good enough, he's one o'th soundest iudgements in Troy whosoeuer, and a proper man of person, when come Troylus? I tell you Troylus shall see come, you shall see anon.

Cre. What meane those trumpets?

Pan. Nay I know not, I know not.

Cre. I feare my father shall haue more

Enter Hector.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that looke you, that there's a fellow. Good day, good day Hector, there's a braue man Neece, O braue Hector! Looke how he looks, there's a countenance, is't not a braue man?

Cre. O braue man!

Pan. Is not it? It does a mans heart good, looke you what hacks are on his helmet, looke you yonder, do you see? looke you there, there's scarres for you, there's that, that lookes for the loue of Ladies, and that of worth and honour, looke you there, there's no iesting, there's laying on, take't off who will, as they say, there be hacks.

Cre. Be those with Swords?

Enter Paris.

Pan. Swords, anything he cares not, and the diuell come to him, it's all one by Gods lid it does one good. Looke you, looke you, there comes Paris, looke you that now, looke you yonder Neece, is it not a gallant man too, is it not? Why this is braue now, who stroke down that man that stands vpon his head now, why there was Hector now, that's Hector, why there was Hector now, marke him Neece, marke him, would I could see Troylus now, you shall see Troylus anon.

Cre. Who's that?

Enter Helenus.

Pan. That's Helenus, I marrell where Troylus is that's Helenus, I thinke he went not forth to day, that's Helenus.

Cre. Can Helenus fight Vncle?

Pan. Helenus is a good skeich not indifferent, well, but marke Troylus, harke, do you not heare the people cry Troylus? Helenus is a Priest.

Cre. What meane those trumpets now?

Enter Troylus.

Pan. Where? Yonder? That's Deiphobus. 'Tis Troylus! There's a man Neece, hem! Braue Troylus, the Prince of Courage.

Cre. Peace for shame peace.

Pand. Marke him, note him: O braue Troylus: Looke well vpon him Neece, looke you how his Sword is bloodied, and his Helme more hacked then Hectors, and how he looke lookes, and how he goes. O admirable youth! he ne're saw three and twenty. Go thy way Troylus, go thy way, had'st a sister were a Grace, or a daughter a Goddesse, hee should take his choice. O admirable man Paris! Paris is dirt to him, and I warrant, Helen to change, would give money to boot.

Enter common Souldiers.

Cres. Heere come more.

Pan. Asses, fooles, dolts, chaffe and bran, chaffe and bran; porredge after meat. I could haue an howre to talke with you, sodden wits as you, and you (sweet Queene) that make hot-headed Youths bite their lips. I will heare some of your loues praises, and they will seeme as the dialect of their Dames, that's the best of their wits.

Cres. Will you remember?

Pan. Remember? yes.

Cres. Nay, but tell me now, before all the Gods leaue, how shall I know thee againe?

Pan. Do not, for the reputation of your honour, for the contempt of your wit, for the losse of your beauty, feare my kindred, my comming, my dignity, my place, my degree, my estimation, my countrey, my complexion, or any thing that may make me worth your pursuit. And so good morrow Cressida, as faire as day, as sweet as Violets in March, as kinde as Turtles in May, as true as Steele, as firme as Diamonds, as constant as the Center, and as infinite as the Circumference, good morrow.

Cres. Will you not tell me how I shall know you againe?

Pan. Yes, a Masque.

Cres. Will you not tell me now?

Pan. No, no, no, no

Followes the choaking
And this neglection of Degree, it is
That by a pace goes backward in a purpose
It hath to climbe. The Generall's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next,
That next, by him beneath: so every step
Exampled by the first pace that is like
Offends the super-vise growes to a common Feaver
Of pale, and bloud-shot Emulation:
And 'tis this Feaver that keepes Troy on foote,
Not her owne sinewes. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weaknesse lives, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Vlisses heere discover'd
The Feaver whereof all our power is sicke.

Agam. The Nature of the sicknesse found (Vlisses)
What is the remedie?

Vlis. The great Achilles, whom Opinion crownes,
The sinew, and the fore-hand of our Hoste,
Having his eare full of his airy Fame,
Growes dainty of his worth, and holds his Tent
Euen in his Pocke-pridge. Within, Patroclus,
Vpon a lazie bed the liue-long day
Breakes scurrill iests
And with ridiculous and awkward action,
(Which slanderer, he imitation calls)
He pageants vs. Sometime great Agamemnon,
Thy topplie deputation he puts on,
And like a strutting Player, whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth thinke it rich
To heare the wodden Dialogue and sound
Twixt his stretcht footing, and the Scaffolage,
Such to be pittied and o'erwrested seeming
He acts thy greatnesse: and when he speakes,
'Tis like a Chime a mending: With termes vnsquar'd,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seeme hyperboles. At this fusty stuffe,
The large Achilles, on his prest-bed lolling,
From his deepe chest laughs out a loud applause,
Cries excellent! 'tis Agamemnon iust.
Now play me Nestor, hem, and stroke thy Beard
As he being drest to some Oration:
That's done, as neere as the extreamest ends
Of Parallels, as like Vulcan and his wife,
Yet good Achilles still cries excellent,
'Tis Nestor right. Now play him (me) Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night-Alarme,
And then (forsooth) the faint defects of Age
Must be the Scene of mirth, to cough and spit,
And with a palsie fumbling on his Gorget
Shake in and out the Rivet: and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries, O enough Patroclus,
Or give me ribs of Steele, I shall split all
In pleasure of my Spleene. And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures shapes,
Severall and generall, of grace exact,
Atchiuements, plots, orders, preuentions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Successe or losse, what is or is not, serues
As stuffe for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twaine,
Who (as Vlisses sayes) opinion crownes
With an imperious voyce, many are infect.
Ajax is growne selfe-will'd, and bears his head
In such a reare kind, out of reproofe and place.
As broad Achilles doates on Ceremonies;
Makes mockes at blood, and change, rots on our Rate of Warre

Nest. Well, and how?
Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
However it is spread in generall tearme,
Relates in purpose onely to Achilles

That we haue better men. But hit or misse,
Our projects are this shape of sence assured,
Ajax employ'd plucks downe Achilles Plumes
Nest. Now Vlysses, I begin to relish thy advice,
And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon, go we to him straight.
Two Curres shall tame each other. Pride alone
Must tarre the Mastiffes on, as 'twere their bone. Exeunt

Enter Ajax, and Thersites

Aja. Thersites?
Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had Biles (full) all ouer generally.
Aja. Thersites?
Ther. And those Byles did runne, say so, did not the General runne, were not that a botchy core?
Aja. Dogge.
Ther. Then there would come some matter from him. I see none now.
Aja. Thou Bitch-Wolfes-Sonne, canst thou not heare? Feele then. Strikes him.
Ther. The plague of Greece vpon thee thou Mongrel beefe-witted Lord.
Aja. Speake then you whinid'st leauen, speake, I will beate thee into handsomenesse.
Ther. I shall sooner raile thee into wit and holinesse: but I think thy Horse will sooner con an Oration, than thou learn a prayer without booke. Thou canst strike, canst thou? A red Murren o'th' thy Lades tuckes.
Aja. Toades-foote, leaue me the Proclamation.
Ther. Dost thou thinke I haue no sence thou strik'st me thus?
Aja. The Proclamation.
Ther. Thou art proclaim'd a foole I thinke.
Aja. Do not, Perseuere, deere sir, my fingers itch.
Ther. I would thou did'st itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsomst Scabbe in Greece.
Aja. Thy last Proclamation.
Ther. Thou gnawest and rangest euery houre on Achilles, and art as full of enuy at his greatnesse as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay that thou barkst at him.
Aja. Mistresse Thersites
Ther. Thou should'st strike him.
Aja. Cowlotte.
Ther. He would pun thee into shiuers with his fist, as a Sailor breakes a bisket.
Aja. You horson Curre. Ther. Do do
Aja. Thou stock-fisht Witch
Ther. Come, thou toden-witted Lord: thou hast no more braine then I haue in mine elbowes. An Asinico may tutor thee. Thou scurvy valiant Asse, thou art heere but to thresh Troyans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slaue. If thou vse to beate me, I will begin at thy heele and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels thou.
Aja. You dogge.
Ther. You scurvy Lord.
Aja. You Curre
Ther. Mars his Idiot do not tempt me do not, do not, do not

Enter Achilles and Patroclus

Achil. Why how now Ajax, wherefore do you this? How now Thersites, what's the matter man?
Ther. You see him there, do you?
Achil. I, what's the matter
Ther. Nay look vpon him.
Achil. So I do, what's the matter?

Ther.

Ther. Nay but regard him well.
Achil. Well, why so I do.
Ther. But yet you look not well upon him: for whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.
Ajax. I know that well enough.
Ther. Nay, I must tell you, you overlook him peremptorily.
Ajax. I pray thee, beware thee.
Ther. I pray, you, what thing is valour in the world, if it beat not down the valour of his adversary? If it support not it self against the deed of blood in a boy? I will tell you what you shall say of him.
Achil. What?
Ther. I say this Ajax——
Achil. Nay, prithee——
Ther. Hold your hand, I say.
Achil. Nay, prithee——
Ther. As you will, I say this Ajax, whose wit (were't not wrapt in morality) let me die stupid as a post, and have the scope of doom to do himself right, nay, and he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours, that his valour is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion. There is no man hath a virtue, that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attaint but he carries some stain of it: he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing, but everything so out of joint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use, or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.
Achil. But how should this man, that makes me smile make Hector angry?
Ther. They say he yesterday coped Hector in the battle and struck him down, the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.
Achil. Who comes here?
Ther. Hector's brother, were't not for him, and for the chivalry of his dexterity, his hideous fierceness when he answers, where he stands, such a combination of valour and fear, such opposite and diverse graces in one thing, as no man can distinguish, but he alone, were he as famoused for the huge kingdom he rules, as he is for those vices that make him fear'd and loved of Troy than by Priam and all his good children, he were the man of most unsecure mind, and deepest malice in the whole world.
Achil. Will he be angry too?
Ther. The best of him is, he is but angry with words, for else he is but vile and ridiculous without them.
Pan. Can you tell me any reason for this?
Ther. He's not himself, let him pass that rule.
Pan. What's he then?
Ther. Why then he is a man, only fit to drink himself drunk: he could have his brains in's belly instead of his head, but now he is a man.
Pan. Why do you say so of him that you do?
Ther. Because I would do no wrong to the gentleman, that I know not any ill by, unless it be by my self, or him self, when he shall make his own confession.
Pan. Who's that?
Ther. Why that is he that I say I would do no wrong to for my own part, though I might beat him while he kept behind us, but he's a theme for my purse, very large, very rich, very proper, and I am bound to him for no cause that I know of, but I'll see him hanged first, but I would somebody had him.
Achil. What's the matter?
Ther. Nay, I pray you now, ask me what thing you will, better not to be had than to be had of me: what's the matter?
Achil. Why this same Paris, and his vile reasoning.
Ther. O, but he loves you with admiration, admiration, nothing else, let your reasons flow therein.
Pan. Is he not valiant?
Ther. Yes, as the disease is valiant that is bred of an unclean body: he is valiant only in the bed of Venus, I mean for performance, or drawing a bow up to the head, and then shoot it off.
Pan. Will you not tell me what you said of him?
Ther. Not for the wealth of all the unbattered world, which I esteem very great, do I dare tell what I said of him.
Achil. What's the reason I should not know it?
Ther. Because he comes back to you again.
Achil. Nay, I'll watch you for that, and this day shall enclose thy breathless.
Ajax. Thersites!
Achil. And those two before me, this Troyan.
Ther. Good words, I pray you.
Pat. Methinks they grow angry.
Achil. I am glad on't, I have no peace in this soft war.
Ajax. Thersites!
Ther. And yet at the bull-baiting, a dog that he will not go for once.
Achil. Thersites!
Ther. And the cow will use the discretion of her heels, than those that much cannot do more than she with her head.
Ajax. Thersites!
Ther. And those things that are not to be had, where the tender horns of cuckolds may be in safety.
Ajax. Dog!
Ther. Hum!
Ajax. Thersites!
Achil. Fie, fie, Thersites!
Ther. Ajax answers Thersites!
Ajax. Do not you meddle, you Achilles.
Achil. A this to me, Agamemnon?
Ther. Well go to, go to.
Ajax. Dog!
Ther. In this sense?
Ajax. What's your affection in this sense, sirrah?
Achil. Omit the disdain of thy manners, and I will give you merited title of a deboist and ridiculous sir.
Ther. I serve thee not.
Ajax. Well go to, go to.
Ther. I serve here voluntary.
Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary, no man is beaten voluntary. Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.
Ther. E'en so, a great deal of your wit too lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch if he knock out either of your brains: 'a were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.
Achil. What with me too, Thersites?
Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor, whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes, yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.
Achil. What, what?
Ther. Yes, good sooth: to Achilles! to Ajax! to——
Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.
Ther. 'Tis no matter, I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.
Pat. No more words, Thersites, peace.
Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles brooch bids me, not till then.
Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.
Ther. I will see you hanged like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring and leave the faction of fools.
Pat. A good riddance.
Achil. Marry this, sir, proclaim'd through all our host,
That Hector by the fifth hour of the sun
Will with a trumpet 'twixt our tents and Troy
To-morrow morning call some knight to arms,
That hath a stomach, and such a one that dare
Maintain I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.
Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?
Achil. I know not, 'tis put to Lottery, otherwise

Hee knew his man.
Ajax. O meaning you? I will go learn more of it. Exit
Enter Priam, Hector, Troylus, Paris and Helenus.
Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
Thus once again says Nestor from the Grecians,
Deliver Helen, and all damage else
As honour, loss of time, travel, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what else is dear that is consumed
In hot digestion of this cormorant war,
Shall be struck off. Hector, what say you to't.
Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Grecians than I,
As far as touches my particular,
Yet dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spungy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out, who knows what follows
Than Hector is. The wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure: but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go.
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Every tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dismes
Hath been as dear as Helen: I mean of ours.
If we have lost so many tenths of ours
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us
Had it our name, the value of one ten,
What merit's in that reason which denies
The yielding of her up?
Troy. Fie, for godly shame.
Hel. No marvel though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them. Should not our father
Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none that tells him so?
Troy. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest,
You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons
You know not why they live, yet know that we Speak them for fools, gives you the reasons on't.
Troy. Why Troylus, I cannot choose but laugh,
To think how tickled the Grecians are,
When fortune can give them but such a cause,
To make us lose our wits. All the issue spouts
Of brazen pits and spleeny lungs be hot,
And purge themselves in fire. Sir, right or wrong,
Think on't but once, and determine by it,
Whether the keeping or deliv'ring her
Can join more honour to the present state.
Troy. Nay good my brother, look on our estate
And on our friends, ere this doubted time,
Our valiant kinsmen, Alexander and Paris,
Our father's brother Priam, and our cousins
Sons, nephews, sires, age, honour, all the heat
Of generous prime, done to this fatal hour
Put on by our pretences, and voice of right,
Now to divide them. Shall the effects of hard
Be like the authors? We are not wiser
Than Priam and his counsel, than my very brothers,
Than you yourself, or any deem'd of worth
Unto this main design. I'll spare my judgment,
How may be valued hereafter, whether
Upon our parts we placed not the blame
Of this wrong action: perchance both sides went on,
And skill and chance have mingled their dooms
Alike on both parts. But I say again,
There is no honour holds his seat but we
Do stake our regards upon it: all have hearts,
And even those hearts that most abhor in this,
Have a parts too of honour. Cowards and fools
Do oft walk in the line of the best men,
Nay often in the very plaudite
Of the wide host, my brother Troylus
Lives in the bottom of the worst in this,
And tells that when the brain of this foul deed
Shall drop into the abyss of forgetfulness,
With his contriving, then the finger will point
And nodding on him say, outstretched arm
Behold the proud mischief. Nay if we take stock of Reason
And pitch the lives that dote upon it forth
In the balance of great Hector and himself
Neither will cast a graine. Well spoken still.
Why keep we her? The Grecians keep our aunt.
Is she worth keeping? Why she is a pearl
Whose price hath launched above a thousand ships,
And turned crowned kings to merchants.
If you'll avouch 'twas wisdom Paris went,
As you must needs, for you all cried well done,
When he had her, though for her sake there died
A maiden-hood, all dear to the gods,
Yet let us type this deed with glorious act,
If not, say what a scar is worn into
Our reputation with her.
Hect. Brother she is not worth what she doth cost
The holding.
Troy. What's aught but as 'tis valued?
Hect. But value dwells not in particular will,
It holds his estimate and dignity
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself
As in the prizer. 'Tis mad idolatry
To make the service greater than the god
And the will dotes that is attributive
To what infectiously itself affects,
Without some image of the affected merit.
Troy. I take to day a wife, and my election

Is this in way of truth, yet neere enough
My sprightly brethren, I propose to you
In resolution to keepe Helen still,
For 'tis a cause that hardly will endure,
Vpon our ioynt and seuerall dignities
Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our designe:
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Then the performance of our heaving spleenes,
I would not wish a drop of Troian blood,
Spent more in her defence. But worthy Hector,
She is a theame of honour and renowne,
A spurre to valiant and magnanimous deeds,
Whose present courage may beate downe our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize vs.
For I presume braue Hector would not loose
So rich aduantage of a promised glory
As smiles vpon the forehead of this action
For the wide world of earthly fame to come
Hect. I am yours,
You valiant off-spring of great Priamus
I haue a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greekes,
Will strike amazement to their drowsie spirits,
I was aduertis'd their great generall slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept
This I presume will wake him. Exeunt.

Enter Thersites.

How now Thersites? what lost in the labyrinth of thy furie? Shall the Elephant Ajax carry it thorow the streights? shall a Bull beare it ouer the pales? shall a Horse be o're-boarne, and carry he-Asse? Come, what's the matter? Let me see some sleeue of thy valour, that I may beate it, with the head of some Stoore, he came to combate me, and raile at me. O worthy satisfaction, would it were otherwise that I could beate him, whil'st he rail'd at me.

Without apprehension or reply:
Now what alone we heare not, you alone
Expect, and what expect, forbeare not,
Pan And I shall finde you empty.
Ant Would I might:
But certain I am loaden with new feares,
That I should leave behinde thrice so much.
Pan Sweet, before you goe, I'll tell you certaine,
Ant Pray you speake not to me, I leave you suddenly,
Pan But shall you not heare all Troylus and Cressids newes?
Ant In haste, good Pandarus.
Pan Why then will I tell you the lamentable fall of Troylus.
Ant Out with it, and be hang'd.
Pan Shall I meet you at Prophets anon?
Ant Where you will.
Pan Even at Troylus Tent, or at Priams Court, betweene both.
Ant Well, to the Port then, farewell.
Pan Fare you well with all my heart.
Ant Why after broyles and battailes, had we rather
Seeke out sweet peace, and part each others foe,
Then fight and blood us shrinke behinde our shields?
Let Mars divide eternity in twaine,
And give him halfe: and for the second part,
Let it thicken still, let blood be spilt in bowles,
Let hearts and minds wax callous to remorse,
And let confusion liue: Polixenes, now for Troy.
Aen Fie, fie, my brother,
Weare you calling Nestor to the coyle?
Alcides shooke his Club, and spake not loud,
Supply'd with Cups hath yours since brawles bereft him,
His childish Arme, unexercis'd, muffles up
In vulnerable Beare-skin: prethee rest
Faire Nephew, and draw not up the Seas,
Wherein at once, as in a Bowle, thou wilt
Drench Natures lippes and eyes.
Nest Sweet Vncle,
What you speake of Troy
Filles all our mouthes with water: if it stirre,
It comes out like the tide.
Aen Commotion, Tides,
And Restlesse Arrowes bandied from the Lippes
Of Checkes and Scornes, a Sea-marke nothing safe,
Are for those Cockles that loade painefull Barkes
That shoot no Arrowes homeward.
Nest I am glad my Lord, you have the grace to feele
Your private kindnesse thus in dealing thus:
But deeper than the blood-colour'd Rubie lies
My blood below proud Priams Roofe, and these Desires, which you call vertuous, are in him
Even such effects of Loue and Charity,
Which redound to Troy and Priam, as they grow
From Troylus: Fortune play upon this head
According to the forme: but in reward,
Not all the Gods are just.
Aen Why, Cousin, why?
Nest Troylus is valiant: Fame (the honest Caterer
Of Peace and Warre) recounts his Worth at full,
But Hector he is better than a Lyon,
Both in the Active Doore, and Soveraignty
Of his Noble Carriage.
Aen Now you have gone quite off from Troylus,
Nest Troylus is the better man of you.
Aen Why then beware your tongue,
Lest such another Surfeit make you sicke.
Nest Let me feare you but as I ought
My Soveraigne, Honour, Father, Gods Lieutenant,
Aen You have the spirit to do more than fight,
To rule, and speake, and indge: Yet in the Warre
Me thinkes the Fortune of your Tongue
Should be as great and free in action,
As your discourse is now: your Opinion now
Should have as great a Voyce, as Hector Staffe
To settle the sale of Warre: for Troylus,
I cannot praise him, all my deedes proclaime
How he is worthy, and in what degree
I stand his friend, yet in an honest way.
Nest Why doe you not speake Troylus then?
Aen Time is my friend, my Opportunity
Hope, and my Meanes, to speed him, and command him.
Nest Time, Force, and Counsell, is at Agamemnons Tent,
I wish things were as he.
Aen But what's the Newes?
Why is the Councell assembled?
Nest Full of high Feasting, and great Expectation:
For this day entring, Hector craves full Scope
Of what he speakes, by any, or all the Greekes,
Against our Dignities: and not a man
Dare (for the Honour of the Name he beares
In the Worlds large Gazes) speake a Word
Against him: for he suddenly hath left
His Bulke of Proofe, gone single in his Waggon,
Courts all the Worlds Eyes with his Face: and takes
Such pride of his Deedes, as he doth leave
His Part a-foot: Crest downe his Fellowes Worth,
To stirre admiring Mirth, and like the Starre
Disastrous, whose Influence is Red
And Bloody: Lifts his Lookes, and points his Beames,
Where they fall, there they burne: So Hector fares,
The Blood he sheds, is temper'd with the Teares
Of Feminine Infants, that in Battell lose
Their Fathers, all this Hector doth commit,
And this is in the Fashion: and spirted well
In Hector, he deserves his Oxe-like Owner,
And the Gaze to dignifie his Tardinesse,
As Fops doe Toward, or Antick. But how now?
Stand by, my Wife, and Cousin Troylus,
Aen Nay, I must hide me.
Nest Happily you shall not see her yet, or she Take her new Woer now: into the which
She will sing calmer Welcomes backe to Troy,
Nay, bashfull? Come, Cousin Troylus, we will
Constrain them on, to call their Powres together.
Aen Will you stay no longer?
Nest To the Hall my Lord, good day.
Aen You must prepare to fight without Achilles
Nest Why 'tis this Naming of him doth him harme
Here is a Man, but 'tis before his face,
I will be silent.
Aen Wherefore should you so?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.
Hel. I know the what he would, he is valiant
Ant. A horse that will stand to, and eate with his master, were a Trojan
Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now——
Tro. He is very proud.
Dio. Or speaks such of Greeke as I understand
Tro. Or looks on things which he knowes not that's worse yet
Vly. Oh, giue you that disdaines his knowledge,
Hel. I am sorry for't, for the youth is proper bred.
Troylus, I would not haue you fall in loue,
But if you do, good my Lord chuse not Helen.
Remember your yeares, your honour, and your wisedome,
Let Menelaus keepe Helen, he can spare her well enough,
He never sees those eyes, nor feeles those sighes,
Nor those armes, that hang about his neck,
But leaues all to doe with them.
Tro. Will this Gentle man the Trumpet?
Vly. Sound Trumpets.
Dio. Sound Trumpets, brother Knight.
Vly. Trumpets sound Canons, and the Walls of Troy,
Kings, Princes, Lords, to visit Agamemnon,
The worthy Hector, woo'd of Greekes and Troians
So much renowned, the valiant, milde, wise,
Noble, and great in Hector.
Tro. Yet is Troylus greater then Hector,
Vly. Your reason.
Tro. My minde is troubled like a fountaine stird,
Dio. And I do stare like one that feares the Storme ere it come.
Vly. Feare not my Lord, we will not stirre one straw
Keepe, each his part, stand fast my noble Generall,
Troylus, together with the rest of worth,
Feast Kings are come to Troy, to morrow
We must with all our main of power stand fast.
And here is a Lord, come Knights from East to West,
And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.
Ant. Go we to Councell: Let Achilles sleepe,
Light Boates may saile swift, though greater bulkes draw deepe. Exeunt. Manet the formall Vlisses.

Enter Pandarus and a Seruant.

Pan. Friend, you, pray you a word. Do not you follow the young Lord Paris?
Ser. I sir, when he goes before me.
Pan. You depend upon him I meane?
Ser. Sir I depend upon my Lord.
Pan. You depend upon a noble Gentleman: I must needes commend him.
Ser. The Lord be praised.
Pan. You know me, do you not?
Ser. Faith sir, superficially.
Pan. Friend know me better, I am the Lord Pandarus.
Ser. I hope I shall know your honour better.
Pan. I do desire it.
Ser. You are in the state of Grace?
Pan. Grace, not so friend, honour and Lordship are my titles. What Musicke is this?
Ser. I do but partly know sir: it is Musicke in parts.
Pan. Know you the Musicians.
Ser. Wholly sir.
Pan. Who play they to?
Ser. To the hearers sir.
Pan. At whose pleasure friend?
Ser. At mine sir, and theirs that loue Musicke.
Pan. Command I meane friend.
Ser. Who shall I command sir?
Pan. Friend, we vnderstand not one another: I am too courtly and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play?
Ser. That's to't indeede sir. Marry sir, at the request of Paris my Lord, who's there in person: with him the mortall Venus, the heart blood of beauty, loue's visible Soule.
Pan. Who my Cousin Cressida.
Ser. No sir, Helen. Could you not finde out that by her attributes?
Pan. It should seeme fellow, that thou hast not seene the Lady Cressida. I come to speake with Paris from the Prince Troylus. I will make a complementall assault vpon him, for my businesse seethes.
Ser. Sodden businesse: there's a stewd phrase indeede.

Enter Paris and Helena.

Pan. Faire be to you my Lord, and to all this faire company: faire desires, in faire termes, and I thinke one of those faire Ladies is Helen, I take it?
Par. Faire Vncle Pandarus, how do you?
Pan. You speake your faire pleasure sweete Queene. Faire Prince, here is good broken Musicke.
Par. You haue broke it Cousin, and by my life you shall make it whole againe, you shall peece it out with a peece of your performance. Nell, he is full of harmony.
Pan. Truly, Lady no.
Hel. O sir.
Pan. Rude in sooth, in good sooth very rude.
Par. Well said my Lord: well you say so in fits.
Pan. I haue businesse my Lord, faire Queene my Cosin will tell you my businesse.
Par. Well I may make your Generall sing.
Hel. My Lord Pandarus, honey sweete Lord.
Pan. Go to sweete Queene, go to.
Commends himselfe most affectionately to you.
Hel. You shall bid me welcome before you command.
Pan. Sweete Queene, sweete Queene, that's a sweete Queene I'faith.
Hel. And to make a sweete Lady tarry, is a sower offence.
Pan. Nay, that shall not serue your turne, that shall it not in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words, no, no. And my Lord he desires you that if the King call for him at Supper, you will make his excuse.
Hel. My Lord Pandarus?
Pan. What sayes my sweete Queene, my very, very sweete Queene?
Par. What exploit's in hand, where sups he to night?
Pan. Nell, my Cosin will tell you. Commends himselfe, I will whisper.
Hel. Well, I know where he sups.
Par. Will he not, Lady?
Pan. Faith, Lady, not: for my life, not a word.
Hel. Will you remember?
Par. Remember? why beleeue me.
Pan. Nay, I care not for such words, not I. But my Lord is vnarmed, and meanes to sup with my Cosin Troylus.
Hel. Why this is kindly done.
Pan. My Niece is horribly in loue with a thing you haue, Prince Troylus. They say he is very wise, and very valiant. I will tell you what, he is indeede a proper man. Fie, fie, for my life, fie, certainly he is. He is the very man per se, and stands alone. O he is very desirous of the disease of loue, I'faith he is. He is troubled with a darke thing, say the truth on't. Well she looks on him, and he lookes on her: yet hee's more inclinable, for her part, the light foole thinkes no harme of all, but the malice of the people is, that he loues her, and she is subiect to a most blasted infection.
Par. Infection?
Pan. I, the infection is in the necke, in the necke, I could chuse you out a hundred Lads.
Hel. Well, and how?
Pan. Nay, I'le tell you, and you'le tell it againe, and say I told you of it, you'le tell it againe, and say I told you of it.
Hel. Is this the generall Theame, faire Lords, is this all your worlds businesse? We knit our browes, and the blacke hangs on our foreheads, we spit forth blasphemy, and sweare, pluck downe Crowned Piles, and scorne the Chaire of Maiesty, to doe't: and is all done in reproofe of this Specious Abuse?
Pan. Why, I say nothing.
Hel. Marry you begin right Artist.
Pan. Troth I think she would.
Hel. Well, and she is fairer then my praise.
Pan. In good truth she is, and the truth in her eye, and in her eare, and in her heart, and in her hand, and in her foote, and in the prettie print of her foote, and in the veine of her foote, and in the taking vp of her foote, and in the calling of her foote.
Hel. Now she is my Slander, he my Detractor, and they haue a sweete Lady.
Pan. Nay, that's not for nothing neither: I'le warrant she is proper.
Hel. Well, and wise.
Pan. I, and wise enough for those that haue to doe with her wisedome.
Hel. And gentle, and vertuous.
Pan. I, and gentle and vertuous: for those that practise her vertues.
Hel. And speaks well.
Pan. I, and speaks well enough for a Lady, after a certaine rate, where she would not haue her.
Hel. Well, I would somebody did fetch her backe.
Pan. Who, I beseech you?
Hel. Why one that will doe him good to heare.
Pan. Will you haue me fetch her?
Hel. Now I would pray you.
Par. Fie, fie vpon her,
There's a trouble in her tongue, what a pretty thing is this?
Well, I'le fetch her, it is pitie of her Lord.
Pan. Ah poore Capocchia, hast not slept to night? would he not (a naughty man) let it sleepe? a bug-beare take him.
Par. Did not I tell you? would he were knock'd i'th head.
Hel. Who's that at Chamber-doore?
Par. I'le make an excuse.
Pan. Ha? my Lord? I praise her answere: you are deepely sped my Lord, deepely sped.
Hel. What shall he come in?
Pan. Yes, make his excuse.
Par. Why simply the truth.
Pan. Say, my Lord is vnarmed, and meanes to sup with my Cosin Troylus.
Hel. Nay, I'le not meddle in't, let her come in.
Par. Sweete Queene, sweete Queene, that's a sweete Queene, I'faith.
Hel. And to make a sweete Lady sad, is a sower offence.
Pan. Nay, that shall not serue your turne, that shall it not in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words, no, no. And my Lord he desires you that if the King call for him at Supper, you will make his excuse.
Hel. My Lord Pandarus?
Pan. What sayes my sweete Queene, my very, very sweete Queene?
Par. What exploits in hand, where sups he to night?
Pan. Nell, my Cosin will tell you. Commends himselfe, I will whisper.
Hel. Well, I know where he sups.
Par. Will he not, Lady?
Pan. What sayes my sweete Queene? my cosin will tell vs all. You will tell vs.
Hel. You must know where he sups.
Par. Will you remember?
Pan. Nay, nay, sweete Queene, you are wide, come your ways, come your ways, you make an excuse.
Par. Why this is rare.
Pan. I praise her answere. I pray you my Lord will you say Cressida? so, you are deepely sped indeede.
Par. Fie, fie.

Pan. Vn

Enter Pandarus and Troylus Man.

Pan. How now, where's thy Master, at my Cousen Cressida's?

Man. No sir, he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troylus.

Pan. O here he comes: How now, how now?

Troy. Sirrah walk off.

Pan. Has not Ulisses been with my Cousen Cressida yet?

Troy. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door, Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks Staying for waftage. O be thou my Charon, And give me swift transportance to those fields, Where I may wallow in the Lilly beds Propos'd for the deserver. O gentle Pandarus, From Cupids shoulder pluck his painted wings, And fly with me to Cressid.

Pan. Walk here i'th' Orchard, I'll bring her straight.

Exit Pandarus.

Troy. I am giddy, expectation whirles me round, The imaginary relish is so sweet, That it enchants my sense: what will it be, When that the watry palats taste indeed Love's thrice repured Nectar? death I fear me, Sounding Destruction, or some joy too fine, Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness For the capacity of my ruder powers: I fear it much, and I do fear besides, That I shall lose distinction in my joyes, As doth a battel, when they charge on heaps The enemy flying.

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby: Here she is now, swear the oathes now to her, that you have sworne to me: what, are you gone again? you must be watcht ere you be made tame, must you? Come your wayes, come your wayes, and you draw backward, we'll put you i'th' fills. Why doe you not speak to her? Come draw this curtaine, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loth you are to offend day-light? and 'twere darke, you'd close sooner. So, so, rub on, and kiss the mistris. How now, a kisse in fee-farme? build there, carpenter, the ayre is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i'th' river: go to, go to.

Troy. You have bereft me of all words, Lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you o'th' deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What billing again? Here's in witnesse besides. Nay, I'll have my bill again else, I shall have no body to trust on: I'll have my bond again.

Troy. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember? yes.

Troy. Nay, but say so then: and I'll be satisfied.

Cres. I warrant you, for my part I can lay no bond upon my behaviour: my self may conclude thus much, that I have a good eye, can understand what I see, can speak as much as my heart thinks, may think as much as I list, have a reasonable good eare, can tell what belongs to honesty, and know my own minde as well as another Lady.

Pan. Would a man might have his will of you now.

Troy. Will you walk in my Lord?

Cres. What, blush again? there is more businesse in these cheeks, than in the hands of a hundred Lawyers, with their fees for pleading. Will you walk in my Lord?

Troy. Prophetick fear of what I seem, or am, Divides my present from my time to come: Wedg'd with both Horns, I naught at all divine, Through the gates of Horn and Ivory.

Cres. Will you walk in my Lord?

Troy. O Cressida, how often have I wisht me thus?

Cres. Wisht my Lord? the gentle Gods what should you wish?

Troy. What should I wish? why that I should thus faine: Wishing I might not wish what I do wish, That her loose ear with easie entrance won, Should not have fall'n at first reproof.

Cres. Why, but my Lord, what wish do you wish?

Troy. That there were no maine businesse in the world, Intending Orbes of Nations meeting powers, Mistaking Earth quakes and prodigious Tempests, And let all the Continent crack their seeds Into their ample wombes, the things that are, And that are not, the how, and the which, the what, All with in one confusion, ruine, sleep, Seeds and beginnings into Boreas hold, Times Antidote lockt up, that Fools may still Be Fools, and Time himself amaz'd at it: Oh that right should be lockt from wrong, and that Any dispute should trace him from his worke, Till he had measure to him, and his power To make him good? Or that the subtle bosome Of craft and falshood, should possesse the largest And swallowing gulfe of wonder: Or the hand Of valour serve his fury only to keep downe The Create Lyon, and the spider tricke Worke his owne broth-web, as if it were The perfect loome, the shuttle, meet and right To his owne ends, and none else? Why should this a desert be? For tis unpeopled? No: For there is more Than this loose place, more than these poore men, More than these poore walls, than these poore paths, More than the eye can reach, or thought may thinke, To make it full with wishing. Let us flye, Before we hear them speak.

Cres. Must you then flye so soone?

Troy. Nay, now you are too flexible, Leaning so easily: I feare my Cressid, Lest your own facile nature, those soft parts Conceiv'd to me for life, should lose their property, And fall into obedience: Even for this Let us be wise and flye.

Cres. Who could have thought it? You are wise enough, my Lord, To stay for ever.

Troy. Now all the joy of earth and heaven stay on this breast, And speech leave this mouth: after my flight Silence be sleepe to eares, darknesse my night, Stay my cessation: let my dayes and nights Time's flyes, all after note, all after rest, Be shard from this hour wherein we part: Injoy not you my Cressid, nor the breath Of parting friendships: sleepe, death, dulnesse, inactivity, and stupefaction Oppress the world and living motion lurke Within the center of this Embrace, That the conceited Grecian Monsters the Mirmidons, Dreadnought Ajax, Cressid's valiant Hector, Sacred Troylus, may not be awak'd With this dayes honour.

Cres. Will you then be gone?

Troy. Within my Tent but addressed to action, And you this night must steale to Diomed.

Cres. Ah me, and soone to be unkind as he, Unbind my heart?

Troy. Each Trojan that is Master of his heart, Let him to my Tent follow the unarm'd Troylus, And I will give safe conduct to his person Our Captaine Hector, stirr'd up with the sight, Will be as apt to answer the Occasion, As high in the Offer: Hence to rest, and sleepe, And dreame of each other Cressid.

Cres. Now heaven forbid such scarcenesse of my Love, As my simplicity may be surpriz'd By the next newes it receives.

Troy. Yea, let us part: the Greeks are strongly mingled With our chief Troyans, and our Army lies Close as the Bees upon a Summers day: Good night, good night.

Cres. Sweet Troylus, sweet Lord, you have a heavy heart.

Troy. Farewell, farewell.

Cres. What, will you go?

Troy. How have we spent this houre?

Cres. Why, my Lord, what have we talkt of?

Troy. Why, how now Cressid?

Cres. I'll tell you what you would not fain have heard, And scarce confesse that you have had the will To stay with me. Will you walk in my Lord?

Troy. What, blubber'd? by these pearles of mine, Bedasht with brine, I'll seale thy plaine truth, And they shall witnesse. Yet for my more hire, Because it is the badge I weare, Weare it my Cressid, and from thence Fairer than Cupids Wings.

Cres. Alas, poore simple Token!

Troy. Token? then I'll not have it.

Cres. Why, I pray you?

Troy. Not now, good Cressid: yet I will not keep What I desire not: and my gentle Cressid, These blubber'd Pearles Distill'd from Troylus eyes fall on thy face, And keep it from dryednesse: and say in Troy, A Lover guiltlesse of Cressids heart, Hath sworne thee to: see thou do not keep promise, Oh Heavens, be true.

Cres. Heare me, my Love, be thus a while alone.

Troy. Pandarus.

Cres. Not mine, my Lord, I will be thus and live.

Troy. Farewell, my Lord.

Cres. Will you forget?

Troy. Yea, I will not, sweet: if you'll remember My faith, from every meeting I will make My love to you more harsh.

Cres. Hearke, one more word.

Troy. What shall it be?

Cres. Whither shall I send to you?

Troy. Why, so I can, dear Love, But yet thou'lt not: and yet I'll tell thee, Lest thy unlikely hope should urge thee to't, To make excuse for thee, so holy Troy, And Troylus shall be baited by the Greeks, And thou shalt hear of this before I speak Againe to thee.

Cres. Why, I would know my Lord.

Troy. Not now, sweet Cressid: in faith I know not how.

Cres. Nay, this shall be known.

Troy. Well, by the way then.

Cres. Why, I could weep to think it, that you tell me You'll gaze upon Queene Helen: I must needs Wonder.

Troy. Come, kisse: and let us part.

Pan. Part? fie upon her: Looke you yonder, my Lord? Looke how the Captaines do environ and embrace Troylus, as if he were Gods Mother: See, how every joynt crowds upon other, as if it were borne for't.

Troy. Prophesie I shall live thus much longer, That my Cressid's true: that the end crowns the work: And like as one nation, proud with spoyle, Returnes with Conquest and with Victory To his wide Native Shores: So doth my Love Return with Conquest, and my Victory Is Cressids Love.

Enter Aeneas.

Aene. I have been seeking you this houre, my Lord: Hector by this is arming him in Troy, Ajax your guard stayes to conduct you home.

Troy. Have with you Prince: my courteous Lord adieu: Farewell revolted fayre: and Diomed Stand fast, and wear a Castle on your head.

Pan. And'it be not Diomed, be not a man: But Troylus should be such a man as he, And he no more than a man.

Troy. Come, to the Port: I'll tell thee Diomed, This Lady's Story. Here comes Diomed.

Enter Diomed.

Cres. Yea, the same Diomed.

Troy. O, be not moyst, faire Cressid: Let us have thine, when Diomed comes to you. Who frets my Horse upon the walls of Troy, Who nickers on your kisses, Port for port: By Love I will, and when I do not truly, Take all my Goddesse Love, and turne me out A Fool of Time, subjected to the howres: Faith, there's no more to be said, but better action than words.

Dio. Now, good my Lord, have done with Complements.

Troy. Come, come, my Horse: Ere the first Sacrificer, look to the Victime bleed, Thou shalt have Cressid: come to the Port I say.

Dio. Madam, my Lord will more with you than words, That these same Greeks confesse his face in Troy, Ere this be night, deliver them more Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Troy. Doth that grieve thee? O wither'd truth!

Dio. Why, how now, my Lord?

Troy. By Jove I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian? why Greek?

Dio. Fore God, adieu: you palter.

Cres. In faith I do not: come hither once again.

Troy. You shake, my Lord, at something: will you go? You will break out.

Cres. Why tell me prethee, what's that Diomed?

Troy. Looke, looke.

Cres. Prethee tell me, Diomed.

Dio. It is no matter.

Troy. Now by Apollo, thou art growne so bad, That thou art worthy now to be hang'd.

Cres. Prethee tell me.

Dio. Not now.

Cres. Now, prethee Diomed.

Dio. Looke, there she leanes.

Cres. Who's that?

Troy. Peace, I will not speak with her.

Dio. Even she.

Cres. How shall I meet you?

Troy. Wooe her, wooe her: you have undone a man.

Dio. Farewell, Lord: I will have such a night, As Troylus shall desire: my Lord will be mightily abusd: on my Love I will assure upon her, get her but tarry my Lords businesse, get her but stay all night with her, and expect any thing.

Troy. Let us make ready to night, our Army rages, and we shall employment enough to morrow morning for the love of each other.

Cres. It is great morning, and the houre prefixt Her Father Calchas sent for: all's but naught, And he's forsworne to have me in his Tent: Well, Uncle Pandarus, and Diomed Be your two instruments to bring me thither.

Dio. You shall command me Sir.

Troy. As gentle tasker as a Horse, as soft As Aeneas, as the brow of Hebe, Being Ganimed, as free as Phoebus Love, As any thing that's certain

Cres. More dregs then water, if my teares haue eyes

Troy. Feares make diuels of Cherubins, they neuer see truely.

Cres. Blind feare, that seeing reason leads, finder'st safe footing, but blind reason, stumbling without feare to feare the worst, oft cures the worse

Troy. Oh let my Lady apprehend no feare,
In faire Cupids wing I am sure there is plenty to murder

Cres. Nor nothing monsterous neither?

Troy. Nothing but our vndertakings, when we vow to weepe seas in a Cockle, eate fire in a Dotage, finde Tygers in Doues, conuert to gall, the trybute we owe to honey, and make the Moone our Law, our lust our Sun, constant onely in wauering, our faith hoopt like the barrell, and our vertue fadge to euery mans neede, that we come euer with smiles, and leaue with teares?

Cres. Then all Louers weare more performance then they vse to promise, and yet reserue an abilitie vnperformed, your Troyans are the perfection of truth, and all the rest parcell of it. Loue that comes euer on Lyons, and exact of teares, are they not Monsters?

Troy. And there is one vpon two false Troyans as we are tolde, all swore true, and kept not a iote, but got there neuer a true one to keepe them honest, vow breaking that none but Troyans are subiect to, and that Troyans shall be euer more famous Cressids in vowe breach then we can say we will drinke downe this liquor before you bid vs, and that shall be our commendation, and when truth can speake truelt, not truer then Troylus

Cres. Will you walke in my Lord?

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. What blushing fild? haue you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well Vncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thanke you for that: if my Lord get a fleyt of you, you let go no more me be true to my Lord, he is true, chide me out

Troy. You know now your offices your Vncles word and my firme faith.

Pan. Nay, I'le giue my word for her too our kindred though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being won: they are burres I can tell you, they'le sticke where they are throwne.

Cres. Boldnesse comes to mee now, and brings mee heart. Prince Troylus, I haue lou'd you a night, but if you hang breaking day, for many weary months

Troy. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to graunt, not to win: but I was won my Lord
With the first glance that euer pardon me,
If I confesse much, you will play the tyrant
I loue you now, but not till now so much
But I might master it, in faith I lye
My thoughts were like vnbridled children grow
Too head-strong for their mother: see we fooles,
Why haue we hearts? can one of vs tell why?
Haue we prophetique mindes that can foresee
How we will, and not haue power to do it?
But though I loue you well, I woe you not,
And yet good faith I wish my selfe a man;
Or that we women had mens priuiledge
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue,
For in this rash, surely fine I do espeake
That my I that repent me: see, see, your silence
Comming in dumbnesse, from my weakenesse drawes
My soule of counsell from me. Stop my mouth.

Troy. And shall, albeit sweete Musicke dwells in thee.

Pan. Pretty yfaith.

Cres. My Lord, I pray you heare me.

Troy. 'Tis not my purpose that may be throwne
I am all patience, [illegible]
For the world I take my Cressid my Lord.

Troy. Your leaue sweete Cressid.

Pan. Leaue and you take leaue till to morrow morning.

Cres. Pray you content you.

Troy. What offends you Lady?

Cres. [illegible]

Troy. [illegible]

Cres. [illegible]
I haue a kind [illegible] you
Let me goe, and craue me,
To be a mocker but I'le goe my way.
I would I could speake [illegible]
Troy. Why, you haue words, that may be heard, that speakes to me so.

Cres. Perchance my Lord? I shew more craft then loue,
And with [illegible] counsell [illegible]
To [illegible] you [illegible] your wife,
Or else you loue not: for to loue is wisedome,
Exceedes man's might, that dwells with gods aboue.

Troy. O that I thought it could be in a woman
As if it can, I will presume in you,
To feede for aye her lampe and flame of loue
To keepe her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliuing beauties outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter then blood decaies
Or that persuasion could but thus conuince me,
That my integritie and truth to you,
Might be affronted with the match and weight
Of such a winnowed purity in loue.
How were I then vp-lifted? but alas,
I am as true, as truth's simplicity,
[illegible]
Cres. In that I'le warre with you.

Troy. O vertuous fight
When right with right wars who shall be most right:
True swaines in loue, shall in the world to come
Approue their truth by Troylus, when their rimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare
Want similes, truth tyr'd with iteration,
As true as steele, as plantage to the Moone
As Sunne to day, as Turtle to her mate
As iron to Adamant, as earth to th' Center
Yet after all comparisons of things,
(As they are famed to abide) as constant as the Northern Starre,
As true as Troylus, shall crowne vp the Verse,
And sanctifie the numbers.

Cres. Prophet of euill, I be.
If I be false, or swerue a haire from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot it selfe,
When water drops haue worne the Stones of Troy,
And blind oblition swallowed Cities vp,
And mighty States characterlesse are grated
To dusty nothing, yet let memory
From false to false, among false Maides in loue,
Vpbraid my falsehood, when they'ue said as false,
As Aire, as Water, as Wind, as sandie is,
As I to you, be once false to Hectors Cause,
Bind to some tree, or Stepme to her Sonne,
Yea, let them say, to sticke the heart of falsehood,

A falle as Cress'd

Pan. Go to, a bargaine made: seale it, seale it: I'le be the witnesse: here I hold your hand: here my Cosins: if ever you proue false one to another, since I haue taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitifull goers betweene be cal'd to the worlds end after my name: call them all Pandars: let all constant men be Troyluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers betweene, Pandars: say, Amen.

Troy. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen.

Whereupon I will shew you a Chamber, which bed, because it shall not speake of your pretty encounters, presse to death: away.

And Cupid grant all tongue-tide Maidens here,
Bed, Chamber, and Pander, to prouide this geere. Exeunt.

Enter Vlisses, Diomed, Nestor, Agamemnon, Menelaus and Calchas.

Cal. Now Princes for the seruice I haue done you,
Th'aduantage of the time inuites the offer,
During all questionings of loue and amorous lust,
On both sides Troy and Greece hath kept the field,
Now the fierce Polaxion of the vnshrunke Hector,
Hath not so seuered Troy from Grecian sword,
Nor Greekish resolution, forc'd more
Twixt these two opposites, diuorcement now,
As may with safety now accost each part
Deare to the other: I haue (I say) the purchase
Made friendly, and full sure vnto my vowes,
I doe beseech you as in way of taste,
To giue me now a little benefit
Out of those many registred in promise
Which you say, liue to come in my behalfe.

Agam. What would'st thou of vs Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You haue a Troian prisoner, cal'd Antenor,
Yesterday tooke: Troy holds him very deere.
Oft haue you (often haue you thanks therefore)
Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange
Whom Troy hath still denide: but this Antenor,
I know is such a wrest in their affaires;
That their negotiations all must slacke,
Wanting his managing: and they will almost,
Giue vs a Prince of blood, a Sonne of Priam,
In change of him: Let him be sent great Princes,
And he shall buy my Daughter: and her presence,
Shall quite strike off all seruice I haue done,
In most accepted pace.

Agam. Let Diomedes beare him
And bring vs Cressid hither: Calchas shall haue
What he requests of vs: good Diomed
Furnish you fairely for this enterchange:
Withall bring word if Hector will tomorrow
Be answered in his challenge: Ancient Aiax is ready.

Dio. This shall I vndertake: and 'tis a burthen
Which I am proud to beare. Exit.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus before their Tent.

Vlis. Achilles stands i'th entrance of his Tent;
Please it our Generall to passe strangely by him,
As if were quite from his regard: and marke him;
I will come last: 'tis like he'le question me,
Why such vnplausiue eyes are bent, why turn'd on him?
If so, I haue deriu'd a neate cast in:
To sile betweene your strangenesse and his pride,
Which his owne will shall haue desire to drinke;
It may do good, pride hath no other glasse
To show it selfe, but pride: for supple knees,
Feede arrogance, and are the proud mans fees.

Agam. We'le execute your purpose, and put on
A forme of strangenesse as we passe along,
So doe each Lord, and either greete him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more,
Then if not look't on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What comes the Generall to speake with me?
You know my mind, I'le fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Aga. What saies Achilles, would he ought with vs?

Nest. Would you my Lord ought with the Generall?

Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing my Lord.

Aga. The better.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How doe you? how doe you?

Ajax. What, do's the Cuckold scorne me?

Pat. How now Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow Ajax?

Ajax. Ha.

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. I, and good next day too. Exeunt.

Achil. What meane these fellowes? know they not Achilles?

Pat. They passe by strangely: they were vs'd to bend
To send their smiles before them to Achilles:
To come as humbly as they vs'd to creepe to holy Altars.

Achil. What am I poore of late?
'Tis certaine, greatnesse once falne out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: what the declin'd is,
He shall as soone read in the eyes of others,
As feele in his owne fall: for men like butter-flies,
Shew not their mealie wings, but to the Summer:
And not a man for being simply man,
Hath any honour; but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, and fauour,
Prizes of accident, as oft as merit:
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The loue that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Doth one plucke downe another, and together
Dye in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends, I doe enioy
At ample point, all that I did possesse,
Saue these mens lookes: who doe me thinkes finde out
Something not worth in me such rich beholding,
As they haue often giuen. Here is Vlisses,
Ile interrupt his reading. How now Vlisses?

Vlis. Now great Thetis Sonne.

Achil. What are you reading?

Vlis. A strange fellow here
Writes me, that man, how dearely euer parted,
How much in hauing, or without, or in,
Cannot make boast to haue that which he hath;
Nor feeles not what he owes, but by reflection:
As when his vertues shining vpon others,
Heate them, and they retort that heate againe
To the first giuer.

Achil. This is not strange Vlisses.
The beauty that is borne here in the face,
The bearer knowes not, but commends it selfe,
Not going from it selfe, but eye to eye oppos'd,

Salutes

[illegible] to Aga. and the rest
[illegible] the Troian Lords at euen Combat
[illegible] euerie Combatant
Appeare to take his [illegible]
[illegible] Enter Thers.
[illegible]
[illegible]
Ther. Wher's Agamemnon?
Aga. Why
Ther. Menelaus stands vpon his feete, asking for himselfe
Aga. How?
Ther. He met a gentleman to no purpose with Hector, and is so [illegible] that [illegible]
Aga. How can that be?
Ther. Why he stalkes vp and downe like a Peacock, a stride and a stand: ruminates like a Hedge-Asse, and to [illegible] but his braine to set downe his leg: Some man goes forth to pisse, and hee walkes vp to him: I haue obserued the fellow these seuen yeares, and to this houre is he as ignorant of warre, as [illegible] when he first put his finger into the mouth: I am sure he dares not fight: I warrant him that: if he do, the next combat, I meete but a Lyon, I'le [illegible] not meet: I tell you so before hand. Good morrow Ajax, Agamemnon. What think you of this man, that takes vpon him the General? He is growne a very [illegible], I feare, a mingle [illegible], a meere [illegible], a very weasell of both natures [illegible]
Aga. I know them by their Ambassage: [illegible]
Ther. Why, I [illegible] and see [illegible] tell's how many, [illegible] and [illegible] I was to [illegible] Menelaus [illegible] to see, vnfold the Pageant of Ajax
Aga. I shall [illegible] him: [illegible] the valiant Ajax, to [illegible] Hector [illegible] warme [illegible] [illegible] or a [illegible], yet [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Par. There is no helpe
The bitter disposition of the time will haue it so.
Cal. or, we cease to loue vs
Æne. Good morrow all. Exit Æneas
Par. And tell me noble Diomed, faith tell me true,
Euen in the soule of sound good-fellowship,
Who in your thoughts merits fayre Helen most?
My selfe or Menelaus?
Dio. Both alike
He merits well to haue her, that doth seeke her,
Not making any scruple of her soilure
With such a hell of payne, and world of charge:
And you as well to keepe her, that defends her,
Not palating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly losse of wealth and friends.
He like a puling Cuckold would drinke vp
The lees and dregges of a flat tamed peece,
You like a theefe, of all your French cunnings,
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritor:
Both merits poyz'd, each weighs nor more nor lesse,
But he as he, which heauier for a whore.
Par. You are too bitter to your countrey-woman.
Dio. She's bitter to her countrey: hear me Paris,
For euery false drop in her bawdy veines,
A Grecian's life hath sunke for euery teare,
Her eyes (on fayre) haue sentenc'd and expell'd
A thousand valiant Hectors, and their liues,
And I will fight no more but for my glorie,
Then hold my part against the dignitie
Of all the Troyan Nation, but chiefly
Par. Fayre Diomed, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this vertue well,
We'le not commend, what we intend to sell.
Here lyes our way. Exeunt.

Enter Troylus and Cressida.

Tro. Call my Vncle to my Lord, bring me to him,
Cre. I know not where he is: but there my Lord,
Helen must needs be seene.
Tro. Prythee now sweet Lady, place thy browes
Tell me faire Gossip Venus, one faire word
Thy eyes, faire Queene, and thy cheekes Crimson,
As true as Troylus shall crowne vp the Verdict
Of this dayes fortune.
Cre. My Lord Troylus
Tro. I'le tell thee now sweet Creature what a matter
Too subtly potent, tender, soft and salt
Lookes in thine eye? those precious motiues,
Those manly touches, those strong bonds of heart,
Were in my hand I would not buy thee Virgin
For Riches and deepe Treasure, like as Hell
Thou art in appetite, and therein simply
Not worth the whistling.
Cre. Nay, you might
Take me if you would, I am not worth the keeping.
Tro. Why beleeue me Cressid, would I could boast
As true within thy loue, as plaine without
Thou hast in my wishes.
Cre. Prythee do not hold me to mine oath,
Bid me do any thing but that sweet Lord,
Tro. Deare one, why?
Cre. I am ashamed of my selfe for't.
I loue you now, but till now not so much
But I might master it: in faith I lye,
My thoughts were like vnbridled children grow
Too head-strong for their mother: see we fooles,
Why haue I blab'd? who shall be true to vs,
When we are so vnsecret to our selues?
But though I lou'd you well, I woo'd you not,
And yet good faith I wish'd my selfe a man,
Or that we women had men priuiledges
Of scarre and buffe, and could speake as commonly
As men proclaime their fancies.
Tro. Hark one word in your eare.
Cre. O plague and mischance.
Tro. Why heare you?
Cre. Most vnluckily I might,
And euer more too late for my comfort.
Tro. Sweet bid me hold mine oath.
Cre. Prythee do not hold me to mine oath,
Bid me do any thing but that sweet Lord.
Tro. Deare one, why?
Cre. That you will not now sweet Troylus, if you will
Compell me to it, I am forsworne.
Tro. Vpon my Sword I will:
Cre. You may not then.
Tro. Well, but why will you?
Cre. Because I ought not.
Tro. How now, new matter?
Cre. Nothing neither,
Yet it is mine.
Tro. If not mine owne desires,
Cre. But my honour.
Tro. What honour should
Restrain me more?
Cre. The louers losse.
Tro. Why this is not to be indeed denied.
Prythee expound, I feare my wits are dull.
Cre. Harke you are fond, you will not vnderstand.
Tro. Neither I will not, and therefore if it promise
Any complexion, blush in thy excuse:
Do but consent, and marry I will leaue you
Affection's greene in my complexion sweet,
And blushes euer fresh in my faire cheekes.
Please you depart, and I still with you.
Cre. Do you looke for me this houre?
Tro. Why then I must.
Cre. Harke you, I haue forsworne my selfe more
Then my offence can speake of. All's imputed
For the loose enemie Lechery of this place.
Do not come in my fathers, there he lies,
Tro. Then will I climbe the window.
Cre. Well, come when you will, but yet goe fetch
Some better note to approue this visit good,
For shrewd presages will preuaile among
Our wanton Ilyan gossips, you must be wittie
Vpon the Grecian Tents, you gay mocking Wittall

Cres. Good Vncle I beseech you, on my knees, I beseech you what's the matter?
Pan. Thou must be gone wench, thou must be gone to thy tarrier, thy Antenor the more mature in thy fashion, and possession of Troyes (we may see) will be [illegible] cannot beare it
[illegible] O you immortall gods! I will not goe
Pan. I know it.
Cres. I will goe meet with Diomedes, a Greeke that is now in some grace with Hector, he shall come in to me, and sweare. I will not be sham'd in his [illegible] I can
[illegible] cheeke,
[illegible] I will not sleepe
Pan. Do not
Cres. Teare my bodice, teare my haire, crye out I am chee
Cracke my voice, sunder my heart with sighes, burne my eyes
With griefe, growne hoarse with weeping.

Enter Pand. Troy. Cres. Diom. Vnt. Alex. and Seruants.

Troy. It is great morning, and the houre prefixt
Of her delivery to this valiant Greeke
Comes to him from Troy. Good my Vncle Pandar,
Tell you the Lady what she is to doe,
And haste her to the purpose.
Troy. Walke into her house.
Ile bring her to the Grecian presently.
And to his hand, when I deliver her,
Think it an Altar, and thy brother Troylus
A priest, there offring to it his heart.
Pan. I know what 'tis to love,
And would as I shall pitie, I could helpe.
Please you walke in, my Lords. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Be [illegible]
Cres. Why [illegible]
To [illegible] me, be patient, will you goe?
And [illegible] as long?
As [illegible] I must stay?
I [illegible]
[illegible] a heart as soft as peace,
To [illegible] Enter Troylus.
[illegible],
Pan. I [illegible] comes, sweet ducke.
Cres. O [illegible]
Troy. [illegible] let me em-
[illegible] O heare, as [illegible] where is [illegible] with
[illegible] Cressid, how
Cressid, how now? how now? Commands
[illegible] strange or bashfull,
[illegible] my face,
Maketh [illegible]
Cressid, how now?
Cres. Haue [illegible]

Pan. I, I, 'tis too plaine a case
Cres. And is it true, that I must goe from Troy?
Troy. A hateful truth.
Cres. What, and from Troylus too?
Troy. From Troy, and Troylus.
Cres. Is it possible?
Troy. And to day ere day, where mutuall of chance
Puts backe our leaue-taking, rudely scrambling by
A time of parle, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all the oyndure forcibly prevents
Our locked embraures, strangles our deare vowes,
Even in the birth of our owne labouring breath.
We two, that with so many thousand sighes
Do buy each other, must poorely sell our selves,
With the rude breuitie and discharge of our
Inforced tongue now with a robbers haste
Crams his rich theeuery vp, he knowes not how.
As many farwels as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath, and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles vp into a loose adew,
And scants vs with a single famisht kisse,
Distasting with the salt of broken teares. Enter Aene.
Aene. [illegible] My Lord, is the Lady ready?
Troy. Harke, you are call'd: some say the Genius so
Cries, come to him that instantly must die.
Bid them haue patience: she shall come anon.
Pan. Where are my teares? rude to lay this winde,
or my eyes will be blown out by the roote.
Cres. I must then to the Grecians?
Troy. No remedy.
Cres. A woefull Cressid 'mongst the merry Greekes
Troy. When shall we see againe?
Troy. Heare me my Loue: be but true of heart.
Cres. I true? how now? what wicked deeme is this?
Troy. Nay, we must vse expostulation kindely,
For it is parting from vs.
I speake not, be thou true, as fearing thee
For I will throw my Gloue to death himselfe,
That there's no maculation in my heart
Be you constant, and I not: then let them
My sequent toward thee be worse than true,
And I a very theefe.
Cres. O you shall be expos'd my Lord to dangers
As infinite as imminent: but Ile be true
Troy. And Ile grow friend with danger;
Wear this sleeue.
Cres. And you this Glone
When shall I see you?
Troy. I will corrupt the Grecian Centonels,
To giue thee nightly visitation.
But yet be true.
Cres. O heauens, be true againe?
Troy. Heare my true harts Loue.
The Grecian youths are full of qualitie
Their louing well compos'd with guift of nature,
Flowing and swelling o're with Arts and exercise.
How novelties may moue, and parts with person.
Alas a kinde of godly jealousie,
Which I beseech you call a vertuous sinne
Makes me afraid.
Cres. O heauens, you loue me not!
Troy. Die I a villaine then
In this I doe not call your faith in question
So mainely as my merit. I cannot sing
Nor heele the high Lauolt, nor sweeten talke
Nor play at subtle games, faire vertues all

To

To which we are no Promoter,
But I can tell you in each grace of these,
There are [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Presuming on their changefull potencie.
Æneas with him. Nay, good my Lord?
[illegible]
Troy. Good brother come you hither,
[illegible]
Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,
I, with great truth, catch meere simplicitie;
[illegible]
Fare
Impatient
We come to Troynet hear me my Lady
[illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible]

Cal. Neuer's my day, and then a kisse of you
Dio. Lady a word, Ile bring you to your Father
Nest. A woman of quicke sence.
Vly. Fie, fie, vpon her:
There's a language in her eye, her cheeke, her lip
Nay, her foote speakes, her wanton spirits look out
At euery ioynt, and motiue of her body
O these encounterers so glib of tongue,
That giue a coasting welcome ere it comes,
And wide vnclaspe the tables of their thoughts,
To euery ticklish reader, set them downe,
For sluttish spoyles of opportunitie,
And daughters of the game. Exeunt

Enter all of Troy, Hector, Paris, Æneas, Helenus and Attendants. Enter Diomed.

Agam. The Trojans Trumpet.
Aga. Yonder comes the troope.
Æne. Hayle all you state of Greece: what shall be done
To him that victory commander, or do you purpose,
A victor shall be knowne: will you the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other, or shall be crowned
By any voyce or order of the field: Hector bad aske.
Aga. Which way would Hector haue it?
Æne. He cares not, he'le obey conditions.
Aga. 'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deale disdayning
The Knight opposd.
Æne. If not Achilles, sir, what is your name?
Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.
Æne. Therefore Achilles: but whate're, know this,
In the extremity of great and little,
Valour and pride excell themselues in Hector,
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blanke as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that which looses there, growes heere in value,
Thinke Aiax is thy selfe to Hector blame
In loue whereof, halfe Hector stayes at home:
Halfe heart, halfe hand, halfe Hector, comes to seeke
This blended knight, halfe Troian, and halfe Greeke.
Achil. A maiden battaile then? O I perceiue you.
Aga. Here is sir, Diomed: go gentle knight,
Stand by our Ensigne, by vs Troy and Greece
Doe expect thee hence or euermore.
So be my sword, no yet a Helens heart.
Or else a breach, that hell it selfe would rore
Is left vnfill'd, or hot Apollo set
Vpon the Caspian tops his burning chariot
For day to scorch the Orbes below as deepe
As doth the lake of Styx. From Troy
Now expectation tickle skilnesse, and
Sooner inuention and facile swiftnesse
Thou blunt and vnleard Bastard, take heed
How you gage double with your proper ruine.
And you sir Trumpet, dare to strike alarum
Vpon the borders of the other host,
Begin thou instantly, and thou vile vaunter
Subscribe thy name in publique.
Hect. I pray thee Vncle giue this Trumpet leaue.
Aga. Who shall gage him?
Hect. Know you any here?
Aga. No sir, he stands vnmatcht.
Hect. Then good Troylus
Accept the Greekish challenge.
Troy. Good sir no,
Your last seruice was sufficient for example,
Nor for any valour. Scarre to scarre strooke,
Nature scarce knowes the workes of Art abused,
And bids the smiter turne his edge on's brother.
Now there's not blood inough in all Troy,
Nor Greece is not a quarrell much more precious
Then Priams Neece, to make this offring bloody.
Trust me sir, if I were appointed Knight,
I would decline the action,
Is not this Helen?
Hect. Fie, for godly shame.
Troy. I speake no more then truth.
Hect. Thou dost not speake so much.
Troy. A second blush approues me well assured
Ile fight with none but thee, as Hector.
You sir Æneas once at knowes the worth,
Burn to the straines: and with prize sword,

Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me. Alarum.
Aga. They are in action
Nest. Now Aiax hold thine owne
Troy. Hector thou sleep'st, awake thee.
Aga. His blowes are well disposd there Aiax. Trumpets cease.
Dio. You must no more
Æne. Princes enough to please you.
Aia. I am not warme yet, let vs fight againe
Dio. As Hector pleases
Hect. Why then will I no more:
Thou art great Lord, my Fathers sisters Sonne,
A cousen-german to great Priams seede.
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gorie emulation twixt vs twaine:
Were thy commixion, Greeke and Troian so,
That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Troian: the sinewes of this Legge,
All Greeke, and this all Troy: my Mothers blood
Runs on the dexter cheeke, and this sinister
Bounds in my Father: by Ioue multipotent,
Thou should'st not beare from me a Greekish member
Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our rancke feud: but the iust gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrowd'st from thy mother,
My sacred Aunt, should by my mortall Sword
Be drained. Let me embrace thee Aiax
By him that thunders, thou hast lustie Armes,
Hector would haue them fall vpon him thus.
Cozen, all honour to thee.
Aia. I thanke thee Hector.
Thou art too gentle and too free a man.
I came to kill thee Cozen, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.
Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable,
On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st Oyes
Cries, This is he, could promise to himselfe
A thought of deeds, to make our Hector
Æne. Princes enough to thinke of the sides,
Fall all the day I will not harbour more.
Hect. Speake not Cassandra
The dieter embracements: Aiax farewell.
Aia. If I by my death may gratifie this wrath,
Much is the chance, I will not feare
My fortunes. Consort with your Greeke Lords
Troy. I Agamemnon with his great Achilles
Do long to see vnarm the valiant Hector.
Hect. Æneas call my brother Troylus to me
And signifie this louing enterview
To the expecters of our Troian part
Desire them home. Come my deere deere Cosen
I will go eate with you, and see your knights.

Enter Agamemnon and the rest.

Aga. Great Agamemnon comes to meete vs here.
Hect. The worst of them, tell me each by name.
But for Achilles, mine owne searching eyes
Shall finde him by his large and portly size.
Aga. Worthy of Armes as welcome as to one,
That would be rid of such an enemie
But that's no welcome: vnderstand more cleere
What's past and what's to come, is strew'd with huskes,
And formelesse ruine of obseruation,
Authentike as in seale and morall truth,
Cut off from pure loue all bias drawing
Bias and theame of life, be welcome Hector.
From heart of very heart, great Hector welcome.
Hect. I thanke thee most imperious Agamemnon.

Aga. My

Aga. My wel-fam'd Lord of Troy welcome to you.
Men. Let me embrace thy Princely brothers greeting,
You brace of warlike Brothers welcome hither
Hect. Who must we answer?
Ane. The Noble Menelaus.
Hect. O, you my Lord, by Mars gauntlet thanks,
Mocke not, that I affect th'untraded Oath,
Your quondam wife sweares still by Venus Glove
She's well, but bad me not commend her to you
Men. Name her not now sir, shes a deadly Theame.
Hect. O pardon, I offend
Nest. I have (thou gallant Troyan) seene thee oft
Labouring for destruction, make cruell way
Through rankes of Greekish youth: and I have seene thee
As hot as Perseus, spurre thy Phrygian Steed,
And seene thee scorning forfeit Canon-bulwarkes,
Nor let thy drawne sword rest vpon the head
Of any Noble Greek: that could haue brookt
Long Iupiter as yonder, calme, and chaste
And I haue seene thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greekes haue hemm'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: This haue I seene
But this thy countenance (still locked in steele)
I never saw till now. I knew thy Grandsire,
And once fought with him: he was a Souldier good,
But by great Mars, the Captaine of vs all,
Never like thee. Let an old man imbrace thee
And worthy Warriour, welcome to our Tents.
Ane. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee good old Chronicle,
That hast so long walkt hand in hand with time
Most reuerend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee
Nest. I would my armes could match thee in contention
As they contend with thee in courtesie.
Hect. I would they could.
Nest. Ha! by this white beard I'd fight with thee to morrow. Well welcom, welcome. I haue seene the time
Ulyss. I wonder now, how yonder City stands,
When we haue here her base and pillar by vs.
Hect. I know your fauour Lord Ulysses, well
Ah sir, there's many a Greeke and Troyan dead,
Since first I saw yon felle, and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish Embassie.
Vlyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue,
My prophecie is but halfe his iourney yet;
For yonder walls that pertly front your Towne,
Yond Towers, whose wanton tops do buisse the clouds,
Must kisse their owne feet
Hect. I must not believe you.
There they stand yet vnshaken, and vnworried
(As bulwarkes by the sea) his frothy billowes
Do often beate: and many a keele ploughs vp
The sandy Channell with his thirsty bulke,
Since Troy and her allies did first set footing
In your low Harbor. Poore old Priams wish
In full accomplishment, except the life
Of faire Cassandra, and some few more
Whom the stale Greekish Enuie hath proclaim'd
Forfeit, this houre, to wrathfull Mars.
Vlyss. Faire Prince, here stands the man, whose Genius
Is crost with the brauest starre
Hect. Why then Vlysses
Is not more welcome to our Tent, than thou
Most reuerend Nestor, art to all our hopes
Gone forth, and fill'd with those that soonest bring
Assurance of their meanes, soonest performe
And euer speake more to the purpose than
Vlysses and Nestor.
Ane. Now Greekish Lords, why is this parle
Held in your Tents? Or in the market place?
Know you not, that the Table for the Feast
Is full prouided, and the Beds prepar'd
For those that can no more endure the Field?
Whose Tents are these? Will you go to them?
Hect. Will you redeeme your Pledges sir to me?
If not, I keepe them all.
Ane. 'Tis pitie Hector
If you come thus to beg your Prisoners,
We will not ransome them: Moe Greekes must die
Ere Troy shall fall, and moe shall fall ere Troy
Be sackt by Greekish force. Yet hence faire Lords,
Priam must ransome Helen, or Troy burne.
Go quickly Greekes, passe the dusky gates
Into the field, you haue not many dayes,
But I am growne red to match the woods,
And will not
Ane. Doe not chafe thee Cousin
And you Achilles, let these threats alone
Till accidents on both sides do proue you fooles.
Tomorrow (by your leaues) at Hector
If you haue not forgot the Generall state I feare,
Can frame a welcome to you for to day.
Hect. I pray you let vs see you in the field,
We haue had pelting Warres since you refusd
To see vs there
Ane. Do not think on't me Hector?
They will not visit you, nothing is here
But Rauens, Crowes, Diseases, and the Death.
Hect. Why then you will not eate.
Ane. Yes Prince of Troy, passe on, but this I tell you,
Assure your minde that we shall feast in your bowels ere
Come to you. Sup any where but in your Tents.
Hect. That's more than you can do.
Ane. If you be hungry then sup with Polixenes,
Now for these dainties which you scorne so much.
Hect. But thus shall we better digest the morning Larres,
And tell Achilles, when thou telst thy tale
Of Hector's valour, how thou look'dst on him.
Ane. Dog, stay.
Hect. Dogges, when the fierce beasts ravine
Doth lyon it to death, and makes his Mouth
Beare leggs of strength, starues their full mouthed Child,
Vpbraids their dispetion, and their proper prey,
As we do you. Mankind would be this Monster,
A mixture of the deadly Beare, and Lyon,
And then the Lyon, Beare, and Wolfe, liue still
Suckt by the Monster for their Pyramis.
Thus Madam, stands my Countries Foe and I,
Whose loue and leagues, as my affections, binde
In Noble termes: O Hector what a Foe
Art thou to Greece, what a Friend to Troy!
Why do I talke of Friendship, whilst thou art
In place to take the life of euery houre?
A Foe so vertuous, that for publique good
My hate to thee, drowns my particular loue,
As thine to me shall (in like peace) be dead.
Ane. Health to you valiant sir, during all warre,
A kinder enemie can no man finde.
Hect. I would they could be friends with honour.
Ane. Farewell Noble Troyan, one word more,
Shall Hector by the Gates come forth to day?
Hect. He shall not hide his face vntill that houre,
Ane. Then will I raise the siege this day.
Hect. Fie, fie, my brother
Weene you the Greekish proiect? I see now
You thinke Achilles may not be a Goose,
Time is our Bidder, as our Graue-mates are,
And the faire Act growes ripe as it is bought,
Expect my answer, for to day adieu,
Which (ere it ends) I'll make both sad and rue.
Exeunt.
Enter Achilles and Patroclus.
Achil. Ile heate his blood with Greekish wine to night,

W

Enter Achille

Enter Diomed

Dio. Good night.
Troy I bid patience once.
Cal How now Troian?
Cre. Diomed.
Dio No, no good night: Ile be your foe, no more.
Troy Thy better must
Cref. Harke one word in your eare.
Troy. O plague and madnesse
Vlif You are moued Prince, let vs depart I pray you,
Left your displeasure should enlarge it selfe
To wilfulnesse: this place is dangerous;
The time vrgent readily: I beseech you, goe
Troy Behold, I pray you.
Vlif Nay, good my Lord goe off:
You flow to great distraction come my Lord?
Troy I pray thee stay?
Vlif You haue not patience, come.
Troy I pray you stay? by hell and hell torments,
I will not speake a word
Dio. And so good night
Cref Nay, but you part in anger.
Troy Doth that grieue thee? O withered truth!
Vlif Why, how now Lord?
Troy By Ioue I will be patient
Cref Guard your selfe, good Cressed
Troy. I, good now, well.
Cref I tell you patience
Vlif Fie, fie, for shame
Troy Some euen by Ioue! I will not speake a word.
There is betweene my will, and all obiects,
A guard of patience: stay a little while
Ther How the deuill Luxury with his fat rumpe and potato finger, tickles these together: fry lechery, fry.
Dio But will you then?
Cref In faith I will, la: neuer trust me else
Dio Giue me some token for the surety of it.
Cref. Ile fetch you one. Exit.
Vlif You haue sworne patience.
Troy Fear me not sweete Lord.
I will not be my selfe, nor haue cognition
Of what I feele: I am all patience. Enter Cressid
Ther Now the pledge, now, now, now.
Cref. Here Diomed, keepe this Sleeue
Troy O beauty! where is thy Faith?
Vlif My Lord.
Troy I will be patient, outwardly I will
Cref You look vpon that Sleeue: behold it well:
He lou'd me: O false wench: giue't me againe.
Dio Whose was it?
Cref It is no matter now I haue't againe.
I will haue this of mine
If I could win it for your loue.
Troy Now the pledge, now, now, now.
Dio Will you?
Cref And will see you?
Dio But some token for my loue, where I may wear,
My Mistresse at your seruice Lady.
Or else a while farewell my faire Cressed.
As I shall find you.
Vlif Nay, come, come, come.
Cref. How now, what, what, take my heart with all.
Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.
Troy. I did not take it.
Cref You shall not haue it Diomed, faith you shall not:
Ile giue you something else
Dio I will haue this: whose was it?
Cref. It is no matter
Dio Come tell me whose it was?
Cref 'Twas one that lou'd me better then you will.
But now you haue it, take it.
Dio Whose was it?
Cref. By all Dianas waiting women yond.
And by her selfe, I will not tell you whose
Dio To morrow will you weare it on my Helme,
And grieue his spirit that dares not challenge it.
Troy Wert thou the Oake, and worest it on thy horne,
It should be challenged
Cref Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past; and yet it is not.
I will not keepe my word
Dio. Why then farewell,
Thou neuer shalt mock Diomed againe
Cref You shall not go: one cannot speake a word,
But it straight starts you.
Dio I do not like this fooling.
Ther Nor I by Pluto: but that that likes not me, pleases me best.
Dio. What shall I come the house.
Cref. I come: O Ioue, come: I shall be plagued.
Dio Farewell yet
Cref Good night: I pray you come
Troy Had I a sword were true enough to kill,
But with my heart the other eye doth see.
Ah poore our sex, this fault in vs I find
The error of our eye directs our mind:
What error leads, must err: O then conclude,
Minds swayed by eyes, are full of turpitude. Exit
Ther. A proper Storie of thought she could not publish more.
Vnlesse she said, my mind is now turn'd whore
Vlif All's done my Lord.
Troy It is.
Vlif Why stay we then?
Troy. To make a recordation to my soule
Of euery syllable that here was spoke:
But if I tell how these two did coact,
Shall I not lye, in publishing a truth?
Sith yes, there is a credence in my heart
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth inuert the attest of eyes and eares,
As if those organs had deceptious functions,
Created only to calumniate.
Was Cressid here?
Vlif I cannot conster it.
Troy. She was not sure
Vlif Most sure she was
Troy. Why my negation hath no taste of madnesse?
Vlif Not to me my Lord Cressid was here but now.
Troy. Let it not be beleeued for womanhood.
Think we had mothers, doe not giue aduantage
To stubborne Critickes apt without a theame
For deprauation, to square the generall sex
By Cressids rule: rather think this not Cressid.
Vlif What hath she done Prince, that can soyle our mothers?
Troy Nothing at all vnlesse that this were she
Ther Will he swagger himselfe out on's owne eye?
Troy. This she? no this is Diomeds Cressida.
If beauty haue a soule, this is not she:

If Ioues good vowes, if vowes are sanct motives;
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Fal an rogerner.

Priam. Come Hellen, come, goe backe:
Thy wife hath dreampt, her mother nacht bad visions,
Cassandra doth foresee, and I my selfe
Am like a Prophet suddenly enrapt,
to tell thee that this day is ominous
Therefore come away.

Hel. Enter [illegible]
And I do [illegible]
Ere in the fall of night, or [illegible]
To [illegible]

Priam. [illegible]

Hel. I [illegible]
You know me dutiful [illegible]
I cannot [illegible] but [illegible] leave
To take at once my [illegible]
Which you doe grant [illegible]

Cas. O Priam yeelde not [illegible]

And. Do not [illegible]

Hel. Andromache [illegible] you
Vpon the loue you owe me, [illegible]
Exit Andromache.

Troy. This [illegible] dreaming [illegible]
Makes [illegible]

Cas. O farewell, deere Hellen,
Looke how impatient [illegible]
Looke how by words [illegible]
Harke how I [illegible]
How poore an [illegible] the heard doth,
Beholde the [illegible]
Like wilfull [illegible]
And all cry Hector Hector dead O Hector!

Troy. Away, away.

Cas. Farewell yet, stay deere Hellen take my leaue,
Thou shalt my [illegible] deceiue. Exit.

Hel. You are amazd my Liege, at her exclaime:
Goe in and [illegible]
Doe [illegible]

Priam. Farewell [illegible] stand about thee. Alarum

Troy. I cry [illegible] harke [illegible] come, deere come to loose my armes, or [illegible]

Enter Pandar.

Pan. Doe you heare my Lord, do you heare?

Troy. What now?

Pand. Here's a Letter come from your poore [illegible]

Troy. Let me [illegible]

Pand. A [illegible] a [illegible] rascally [illegible] ocupies me; and [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] thing, what another, that I shall [illegible] you one [illegible] and I [illegible] the [illegible] eyes [illegible] and [illegible] my [illegible] they [illegible] were [illegible] I cannot tell what to [illegible] What [illegible] there?

Troy. Words [illegible] no [illegible] matter from [illegible]
[illegible]
The [illegible] operate another way
[illegible] together.
[illegible] words [illegible] shee [illegible]
[illegible] deede.

Pand. Any [illegible] you?

Troy. Hence [illegible] shame
Pandar [illegible] and thine aye with thy name.

Alarum. Exeunt.

Enter Thersites in excursion.

Ther. Now they [illegible] one another. I [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Exeunt

Enter Achilles and Patroclus before their Tent.

Achil. Why how now Patroclus? what art thou laughing?

Patr. Is this the Generall? is this Agamemnon?

Achil. Patroclus, I'le speake with nobody: come in with me Thersites.

Exit.

Ther. Here is such patching, such busying, and tugging, and heaving, and marshalling of wit, like the mangling of Proteus, that stands by and cannot helpe himselfe: a token from Achilles, and another from Agamemnon, and another from Ajax, and another from Hector, and another from Troylus, and another from Pandarus, and another from his Breeches, and another from his backe, whereof sundry sides drop downe after every action; and every action that he acts, takes up all the rest. A mungrell Beagle, that writes himselfe all Mouth, and cries before he hath a sent of the game, and is not regarded: and this is all the difference betweene him and a Curre: the one barkes not without winding the game, the other barkes without winding. Now could I drop into this dramaticke matter of my Masters wit.

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Ther. Thersites.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another; I'le goe looke on: that dissembling abominable varlet Diomedes, has the spirit of Caterpillers and yet that dry-brain'd foole sees not through the matter. How the Rogue laies the Line for his Craft, and his Hooke for Cressids comming to it! I would thinke now my Lady Penelope's Web could not ensnare him: he would unloose himselfe out of meere instinct, nay by his rotten Race, were it but for Troy sake.

Exit Patroclus.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. How now Thersites? what lost in the Labyrinth of thy fury? shall the Elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beates me Hector by the eares, calls me all over, to the worst of Fooles: now the whirligig of time, bring in his Revenge.

Ther. Yonder comes the Troope.

Enter Hector, Troylus, Ajax, Agamemnon, Vlisses, Nestor, Menelaus, and Diomedes, with Lights.

Hect. Good night faire Greekes.

Troy. Hector, will you goe?

Hect. It is the purpose that we stay'd for.

Troy. Till the next Night then, call early on me: Sweet Lord Aeneas, leave not till you visit me.

Aene. So, certainly.

Troy. Good night my Lord Hector.

Hect. Good night sweet Lord Troylus.

Troy. Good night, and welcome both at once, to those that go, or tarry.

Aene. Good night.

Exeunt Troylus and Hector.

Achil. Old Nestor tarries, and you too Diomed, keepe with him, till the last part of breach.

Diom. I cannot sir, I have important businesse, the tide whereof is now: good night great Agamemnon.

Agam. Good night worthy Diomedes.

Ther. What a Foole is this Revolted Diomed?

Exit.

Agam. Are you compos'd Noble Achilles, or Ajax?

Ajax. Who Thersites?

Agam. No, you shall hold no Counsell with Thersites.

Ajax. Troth Agamemnon, he is a Notable Argument.

Achil. Who, Thersites?

Ajax. He.

Achil. Then tell me Ajax.

Ajax. Cousin, what's the matter?

Achil. Tell me Ajax.

Ajax. Why the matter is, that every Foole shall have a Tongue in his head; and every man shall use it at once. Now Thersites is a Foole, and as much Foole as may be in the shell of a man: not a man for being simply man, hath any excellency in him, but having the excellency of many, waites upon that excellency, like the wagge by the Mule, that puts forth more labour upon his hunches, shifts more for his sides, then all his chine were worth. A Foole for Physicke, but a Foole for a Cooke, a Foole for Poesie, and a Foole for a Parasite: Scurvy to moove, and moonish to flout: he beares all things alike, indeed he has no place to bear any thing, but he beares it: he eyes Neither Acquaintance, Swords, Fire, Horse, Cart, Ladie, Foole, Sword, Dog, Cat, Little, Small, Great, Rich, Poore, Man, Beast, Still Wine, and Phlegme, all alike: he cares not what mettle you speake to him in, Bell, Horse, Trumpet, Drum, Vengeance, Crack Rush: and sometimes Father, Mother, and Sister, Dam and Daughter.

Agam. How now Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow Ajax.

Ajax. Good morrow.

Agam. Ha? good morrow.

Ajax. I, and good next day too.

Exeunt.

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. What ho, Achilles.

Achil. Why mine owne Patroclus.

Patr. I would speake with you.

Achil. Come in with me Patroclus.

Patr. Not now sweet Achilles, I must hence before the dawning of the morning, from Troylus.

Achil. Why? your offer'd nothing from him.

Patr. Not yet: but the effect is as good, for he will give me any thing I aske, when I aske: and he aske nothing, when there is nothing to be done.

Achil. O Patroclus, I stake my honour upon it, his unmatched Courage, should not have entertained Hector thus long: Ajax is growne selfe-will'd, and bides upon opportunities.

Patr. Good morrow then.

Achil. Prethee now Patroclus, I thanke thee: Ajax returned so coldly from me to day, that I shall take it ill, unless it be quickly amended: you know where to find me.

Patr. Good morrow.

Exit.

Achil. Good morrow old Lad.

Exit.

Ther. How now Patroclus?

Patr. How now Thersites?

Ther. Eh, good Patroclus.

Patr. Good Thersites.

Ther. Commend me to thy Lord Achilles.

Patr. Commend me to you by my Lord Thersites.

Ther. I will do it when he is a quiet: what Mistris Patroclus?

Patr. Now by my troth Thersites, my Lord is growne quiet enough, he bulles for the time we will shortly heare of it.

Ther. Hold there's for thee.

Patr. I need none, keepe it my Lord Thersites.

Ther. Why take it, I pray you.

Patr. Nay, I care not for such things.

Ther. Whom comes here?

Enter Diomedes.

Patr. What is he?

Ther. I know not, I.

Patr. Nay suffer him to passe now, lest his Horse be mad'd with your crossing him.

Ther. Do what he dare, I will waite on him.

Patr. I do not desire you to it.

Ther. Faire Diomedes, do you not know where you lodge to night?

Dio. Whom, Agamemnons Tent?

Ther. I, Agamemnons.

Dio. Is this Agamemnon?

Ther. I, Agamemnon.

Dio. Is this Achilles?

Ther. I, Achilles.

Dio. Is this Ajax?

Ther. I, Ajax.

Dio. I shall be then.

Ther. Troth Diomedes, he is unarmed.

Dio. I'le keepe you company.

Ther. Sweet Sir, you honour me.

Dio. And so he is yet

Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Tragedy of Coriolanus:

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Company of Mutinous Citizens, with Staues, Clubs, and other weapons

1. Citizen

Before we proceed any further, hear me speake.

All. Speake, speake.

1 Cit. You are all resolu'd rather to dy then to famish?

All. Resolu'd, resolu'd.

1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chiefe enemy to the people.

All. We know't, we know't.

1 Cit. Let vs kill him, and we'le haue Corne at our own price. Is't a Verdict?

All. No more talking on't; Let it be done, away, away.

2 Cit. One word, good Citizens.

1. Cit. We are accounted poore Citizens, the Patricians good: what Authority surfets on, would relieue vs: If they would yeelde vs but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guesse they relieued vs humanely. But they think we are too deere, the leanesse that afflicts vs, the obiect our misery is as an inuentory to particularize their abundance, our sufferance is a gaine to them. Let vs reuolt, ere with our Staues, ere we become Rakes. For the Gods know, I speake this in hunger for Bread, not in thirst for Reuenge.

2 Cit. Would you proceede especially against Caius Martius.

All. Against him first: He's a very dog to the Commonalty.

2 Cit. Consider you what Seruices he has done for his Country?

1. Cit. Very well, and could be content to giue him good report for't, but that he payes himselfe with being proud.

All. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 Cit. I say vnto you, what he hath done Famously, he did it to that end: though soft conscienced men can be content to say it was for his Country, he did it to please his Mother, and to be partly proud, which he is, euen to the altitude of his vertue.

2. Cit. What he cannot helpe in his Nature, you account a Vice in him. You must in no way say he is couetous.

1. Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of Accusations: he hath faults (with surplus) to tyre in repetition.

Shouts within.

What shouts are these? The other side a th' City is risen: why stay we prating heere? to th' Capitoll.

All. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath alway, come the precise.

1 Cit. He's one honest enough: would all the rest were so.

Men. What work's my Countrymen in hand? Where go you with Bats and Clubs? The matter? Speake I pray you.

2 Cit. Our Businesse is not vnknowne to the Senate, they haue had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we'le shew 'em in deeds. They say poore Suters haue strong breaths: they shall know we haue strong arms too.

Men. Why Masters, my good friends, mine honest Neighbours, will you vndoe your selues?

2 Cit. We cannot, Sir, we are vndone already.

Men. I tell you friends, most charitable care haue the Patricians of you. For your wants: Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the Heauen with your staues, as lift them Against the Roman State, whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand Curbes Of more strong link asunder, then can euer Appeare in your impediment. For the Dearth, The Gods, not the Patricians make it: and Your knees to them, not armes must helpe. Alacke, You are transported by Calamity Thither where more attends you, and you slander The Helmes o' th' State, who care for you like Fathers, When you curse them as Enemies.

2 Cit. Care for vs? True indeed, they ne're car'd for vs yet. Suffer vs to famish, and their Store-houses crammed with Graine. Make Edicts for Vsury, to support Vsurers: repeale daily any wholesome Act established against the rich, and prouide more piercing Statutes daily, to chaine vp and restraine the poore. If the Warres eate vs not vp, they will, and there's all the loue they beare vs.

Men. Either you must

Confesse your selues wondrous Malicious,

Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you

A pretty Tale, it may be you haue heard it:

But since it serues my purpose, I will venture

To scale't a little more.

2 Citizen. Well,

Ile heare it Sir: yet you must not thinke

To fobbe off our disgrace with a Tale:

But and't please you deliuer.

Men. There was a time, when all the bodies members

Rebell'd against the Belly, thus accus'd it:

That only like a Gulfe it did remaine

Thou Rascal, that art worst in blood to run,
Lead'st first to win some vantage.
But make you ready your stiffe Bats and clubs,
Rome and her Rats are at the point of battell,
The one side must have bale.

Enter Caius Marcius.

Hayle Noble Marcius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter you dissentious rogues
That rubbing the poore Itch of your Opinion,
Make your selves Scabs.

2. Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you have, you Curres
That like nor Peace, nor Warre? the one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you Lyons, finds you Hares:
Where Foxes, Geese: you are no surer, no,
Than is the coale of fire upon the Ice,
Or Hailestone in the Sunne. Your Voices sir,
Helpe you how you may, would influence
As much as for the Rome, or no. Untaught Beasts,
Deserves your Hate: and your Affections are
A sick mans Appetite, who desires most that
Which would increase his evill. He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of Lead,
And hewes down Oakes with rushes. Hang ye trust ye?
With every Minutes change? Thicke, skinne, Hate,
Hang ye: Trust ye?
With every Feather you wave, you change your minde?
When the sad-tun'd Trumpet must be cold and coward?
When the Drum beates, and the Market-bell rings
To Feare, and Flight? Make all your Trades your Enemy,
Except your Mechanicke Tooles? Out on ye,
Whose Wits (like Common Hackneys) every one
Doth sit and ride on? And you worthy Cockscombes,
Who having (by their wealth) more wit than ever
You need to know it, will not with the meere
Touch of their Friends, whet their dull Enemies.
Nay, where the Phrase of Warre, actively
Applies to your Disposes, there you are silent,
As if the Tyrant Warre, had with his Maile
Deadly benumm'd all Vertues.

2. Cit. Well, I know where to finde you.

Mar. Would you were so you can,
For I would not speake with you, till you have
Determin'd with your selves a course of life
Fit for your severall Vertues. Having found it,
And being Peace-full on your Bellies, whether Within that Limit of Obedience and Peace,
You have respect to your Free Voices, assemble
Me presently at the Capitoll.

Men. We will so: almost all
Repent in their Creations.

Mar. Common, you shall have
Your Tribunes with you presently. Good Belly,
Come I'le fill your Eares with our Victories,
Before we clip your Tongues, and partly Proclaime them so your selves. Which we shall Bring home with Drum and Trumpet. Follow me.

2. Cit. Content.

Men. No Voices, nor Suffrages: Mocke Senators,
When we stand bound to aske and grant, and enter
Our private Prayers in the Peoples Court,
For Nothing but his Love.

Mar. Well, I'le end.
Your Voices: for your Voices I have fought:
Watcht for your Voices: for your Voices, beare
Of Wounds two dozen odde: Battles thrice six
I have seene, and heard of: for your Voices, have Done many things, some more, some lesse: your Voices:
Indeed I would were the matter so
Against my Love, and Nature. Now who's for the Romes
Whose Love I dare to say sits in his Heart,
Or can, when he will, take leave to out live Love?

Men. Your Voices: for your Voices, we will not Sell, nor lose any: For the Price is deere.
Your Voices? Tell me,
Your Voices? Tell me, Your Voices? Tell me,
As I have pocket up the Consulship,
Before the Plebeian Commoners, for whose Voices
I have receiv'd a Gash, and sightes good Battery,
Upon my Brazen Dish. But had I
Your Tongues, a Hundred thousand, I should tell them
Your Voices: Sir, your Voices.

1. Cit. Tell us what hath done
You worthy Service.

Men. Your Voices: for your Voices,
I have receiv'd Scarres: Your Voices: for your Voices,
I have fought for Rome, with a Cut more and less,
Your Voices: for your Voices, I have bin
Familiar with my Dangers, and consequently
Your Voices: for your Voices, I have done
Many things, many things: Your Voices: Well,
Could I but have a Rod to drive this Asse
From out the Marketplace, I could together
Your Voices: for your Voices, I have fasted,
Your Voices: for your Voices, I have bin
Your Voices: for your Voices, I have bin
Your Voices: for your Voices, I have bin

The rabble should haue first vnroof'd the City
Ere so preuayl'd with me; it will in time
Win vpon power, and throw forth greater Themes
For Insurrections arguing.
Menen. This is strange
Mar. Go get you home you Fragments.
Enter a Messenger hastily.
Mes. Where's Caius Martius?
Mar. Heere: what's the matter?
Mes. The newes is (sir) the Volces are in Armes.
Mar. I am glad on't, then we shall haue a meanes to vent
Our musty superfluity. See our best Elders.

Enter Sicinius Velutus, Annius Brutus Commius, Titus Lartius, with other Senators.

1. Sen. Martius 'tis true, that you haue lately told vs,
The Volces are in Armes
Mar. They haue a Leader,
Tullus Auffidius that will put you to't
I sinne in enuying his Nobility
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me only he.
Com. You haue fought together?
Mar. Were halfe to halfe the world by th'eares, & he vpon my partie, I'de reuolt to make
Only my warres with him: He is a Lion
That I am proud to hunt.
1. Sen. Then worthy Martius,
Attend vpon Cominius to these Warres
Com. It is your former promise.
Mar. Sir it is,
And I am constant. Titus Lucius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus face
What art thou stiffe now Caius Martius?
Tit. No Caius Martius,
Ile leane vpon one Crutch, and fight with tother,
Ere stay behinde this businesse.
Men. Oh true-bred.
Sen. Your Company to'th Capitoll, where I know
Our greatest Friends attend vs.
Tit. Lead you on: I follow Cominius, we must followe
you, right worthy your Priority.
Com. Noble Martius.
Sen. Hence to your homes, be gone.
Mar. Nay let them follow,
The Volces haue much Corne: take these Rats thither,
To gnaw their Garners. Worshipfull Mutiners,
Your valour puts well forth: Pray follow. Exeunt.
Citizens steale away. Manet Sicin. & Brutus.
Sicin. Was euer man so proud as is this Martius?
Bru. He has no equall.
Sicin. When we were chosen Tribunes for the people.
Bru. Mark'd you his lip and eyes.
Sicin. Nay, but his taunts
Bru. Being mou'd, he will not spare to gird the Gods
Sicin. Bemock the modest Moone.
Bru. The present Warres deuoure him, he is growne
Too proud to be so valiant.
Sicin. Such a Nature, tickled with good successe disdaines the shadow which he treads on at noone: but I do wonder his insolence can brooke to be commanded vnder Cominius?
Bru. Fame, at the which he aymes,
In whom already he's well grac'd, cannot
Better be held, nor more attain'd then by
A place below the first: for what miscarries
Shall be the Generals fault, though he perform
To th'vtmost of a man, and giddy censure
Will then cry out of Martius: O if he
Had borne the businesse.
Sicin. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion that so sticks on Martius, shall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.
Bru. Come: half all Cominius Honors are to Martius,
Though Martius earn'd them not: and all his faults
To Martius shall be Honors, though indeed
In aught he merit not.
Sicin. Lets hence, and heare
How the dispatch is made, and in what fashion
More then his singularity, he goes
Vpon this present Action.
Bru. Lets along. Exeunt

Enter Tullus Auffidius, with Senators of Corioli

1. Sen. So your opinion is Auffidius,
That they of Rome are entred in our Counsailes,
And know how we proceede.
Auf. Is it not yours?
What euer haue been thought on in this state
That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
Had circumuention: 'tis not foure dayes gone
Since I heard thence, these are the words I thinke
I haue the Letter heere: yes, heere it is;
They haue prest a Power, but it is not known
Whether for East or West: the Dearth is great,
The people Mutinous. And it is mingled,
Cominius, Martius your old Enemy
(Who is of Rome worse hated then of you)
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three lead on this Preparation
Whether 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you:
Consider of it.
1. Sen. Our Armes in the Field
We neuer yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answere vs.
Auf. Nor did you think it folly,
To keepe your great pretences veyl'd, till when
They needs must shew themselues, which in the hatching
It seem'd appear'd to Rome: by the discouery,
We shall be shorten'd in our ayme, which was
To take in many Townes ere (almost) Rome
Should know we were a-foot.
2. Sen. Noble Auffidius,
Take your Commission, hye you to your Bands,
Leaue vs alone to guard Corioles
If they set downe before's: for the remoue
Bring vp your Army: but I thinke, you'l finde
Th'haue not prepar'd for vs.
Auf. O doubt not that,
I speake from Certainties. Nay more,
Some parcels of their Power are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leaue your Honors.
If we, and Caius Martius chance to meete,
'Tis sworne betweene vs, we shall euer strike
Till one can do no more.
All. The Gods assist you.
Auf. And keepe your Honors safe.
1. Sen. Farewell.
2. Sen. Farewell.
All. Farewell. Exeunt seuerally

[illegible]

[illegible] Hand, [illegible] wherein [illegible] Mother, [illegible] Oake [illegible]

Exeunt omnes.

[illegible] Master Deputie [illegible] Honour Dyes [illegible] Sweet [illegible] Sorrow [illegible] Oh [illegible] Husband. [illegible] Valeria [illegible]

Exit Gent.

[illegible] tell Martius. [illegible] below stayre.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and a Gentlewoman.

[illegible] to you, [illegible] Ladyship [illegible] Well good Madam, [illegible] and [illegible] Dum, [illegible] Heele weare [illegible] Heele vpon [illegible]

tenance. I saw him run after a gilded Butterfly, & when he came vp to it, turn'd tayle & fled: and after recouery againe, when he could put the tricke to take the Graffe-hopper: how he mammocked it!

Vol. One on's father's moods.

Val. Indeed la, 'tis a Noble child.

Virg. A Crack Madam.

Com. Come lay aside your stitchery, I must haue you play the idle Huswife with me this afternoone.

Virg. No good Madam, I will not out of doores.

Val. Not out of doores?

Volum. She shall, she shall.

Virg. Indeed no, by your patience, Ile not ouer the threshold, till my Lord returne from the Warres.

Val. Fye you confine your selfe most vnreasonably: Come, you must go visit the good Lady that lies in.

Virg. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers, but cannot go thither.

Volum. Why I pray you.

Virg. 'Tis not to saue labour, nor that I want loue.

Com. You would be another Penelope: yet they say all the yarne she spun in Vlysses absence, did but fill Ithaca full of Moths. Come, I would your Cambrick were sensible as your finger, that you might leaue pricking it for pity.

Mar. Say I as our Generall met the Enemy?
Mess. They lye in view, but haue not spoke as yet.
Lart. So, the good Horse is mine.
Mart. Ile buy him of you.
Lart. No, Ile nor sell, nor giue him: Lend you him I will
For halfe a hundred yeares. Summon the Towne.
Mar. How stands the choice of these Armies?
Mess. We haue the aduantage of the ground, the Lane,
And Protection of the Gods.
Mar. Then shall we heare their Larum, & they Ours.
Now Mars, I prythee make vs quicke in worke,
That we with smoaking Swords may march backe
To helpe our hardly-dealed Friends. Come, blow thy blast.

They Sound a Parley. Enter two Senators with others on the walles of Corioles.

Tullus Auffidius is he within your Walles?
1. Sen. No, nor a man that feares you leſſe then he,
That's leſſer then a little. Drum afarre off.
Hearke, our Drummes
Are bringing forth our youth. We'l breake our Walles
Rather then they shall pound vs vp: our Gates
Which yet seeme ſhut, we haue but pinn'd with Rushes,
They'le open of themſelues. Hearke you farre off
A ſhout afarre off.
There is Auffidious. Lift what worke he makes
Among your cloued Army.
Mar. Oh they are at it.
Lart. Their very Noyſe our warrant, and our ayde.

Enter the Army of the Volces.

Mar. They feare vs not, but ſticke vpon their Ranke.
Now put your Shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proofe then Shields. Aduance braue Titus,
They do ſhrinke from vs like beyond our Thoughts,
Which makes me ſweat with wrath. Come on my fellowes:
He that retires, Ile take him for a Foe,
And he ſhall feele mine edge.
Alarum. The Romanes are beat backe to their Trenches. Enter Martius Cursing.
Mar. All the Contagion of the South light on you,
You Shames of Rome, you Herds of Boyes and Beaſts,
Plaiſter you o're, that you may be abhorr'd
Farther then ſeene, and one infect another
Against the Wind a mile. You ſouldiers of Conſtancie,
That take vp you trades for feare, retire,
Like Boyes, that Apes would Coate, and Dogges would Heele,
And run from euery Bush and Bramble backe?
Which by the fires of Heauen, I haue a minde
With Hydds to driue backe home: and to report
You Cowards made a ſtand for Creame. Poore Rabble,
That liue like Lapwings, by another mans eyes,
Which leaue your Friends in the Lurch, euen when
You moſt need ſelues, and run to death, and run
From feare it ſelfe to ſtoutneſſe. What Fellowes this?
Another Alarum, and Martius followes them to the gates, and is shut in.
Now, now the gates are open: now proue good Seconds,
'Tis for the followers Fortune, widens them
Not for the fliers. Marke me, and do the like.
Enter the Gate.
1. Sol. Foole-hardineſſe: not I.
2. Sol. Nor I.
1. Sol. See they haue ſhut him in. Alarum continues.
All. To'th'pot I warrant him. Enter Titus Lartius.
Tit. What is become of Martius?
All. Slaine (Sir) doubtleſſe.
1. Sol. Following the Fyers at the very heeles,
With them he enters: who vpon the ſodaine
Clapt to their Gates: he is himſelfe alone,
To answer all the Cittie.
Lart. O Noble Fellow!
Who ſenſible, outdares his ſenſleſſe Sword,
And when it bowes, ſtand'ſt vp. Thou art left, Martius,
A Carbuncle entire, as big as all the reſt
Where not ſo much as one poore Iewell is
Comet to Corioles with patient feet,
Alone to Corioles with patient feet,
Shall winne the Towne or nothing: ſtarue braue ſtomacke,
The fyerie'ſt grapeſhot, and the threatning Cannons,
Hurl'd at their blunteſt Throats, ſhall not receiue
My entrance, but the more: the more they looke,
The more reſolue my rage. Goe you with me,
Then he ſhall ſtarue vs ſo. Come on braue Gentlemen,
Entitle your ſelues ſharpe.
Mar. Fye, thou ſhamſt thy Mother
Then the ſhall ſhame her ſelfe. So ſtarued,
Lart. I haue with all my heart,
Go to the Market-place, there ſound your Trumpet,
Call forth your Offices and Officers,
Where they ſhall know our minde. Away. Exeunt.
Enter certaine Romanes with ſpoiles.
1. Rom. This will carry to Rome.
2. Rom. And this to Latium.
3. Rom. A Murrion, or Helmet, or Sword, or Speare. exeunt.
A Trumpet ſounds within a Parley.
Enter Martius, Cominius as a Herauld.
Mar. See they haue Peace and Parley: know for cauſe
Againſt their Will. For Corioles, I feare, Spirites
Inuiſible to vs, haue left their Citie
Forſaken, and haue fled to Rome, to make
Faction there: and ſet all at ſtake. Our Throats
Preſent the Head, the Loſſe we haue within them
And force vs to our owne Gates. Tell them ſo.
Com. I ſhall, within these three houres, Martius.
Mar. If to fight with Corioles, and get all,
Be to do ſo, I will appeare
Lart. Now it's ſeuen houres ſure, and I come, (and ſtraight
Ere this I ſaw I ſweat, ſeuen ſeuerall Countries
My Lords, they haue not yet, but Gentlemen
Preſent your ſeuerall Wills, be't
Mar. I am ſhamed
Then the leſſe ſeeme to aske. So ſtarued,
Lart. I haue with all my heart,
Go to the Market-place, there ſound your Trumpet,
Call forth your Offices and Officers at Large,
Where they ſhall know our minde. Away. Exeunt.
Enter ſeuerall Romanes with ſpoiles.
Com. Dear Captaine, my Friends we thought we are come
Like Romanes, neither foolish in our ſtand
Nor cowardly in retire. Beleeue me Sirs
We ſhall be charg'd againe. Whiles we haue ſtroke
By interims and conueying guſts we haue heard
The Charges of our Friends. The Romane Gods,
Leade their ſucceſſes as we wiſh their owne,
That both our powers with ſmiling Fronts encountring,
May giue you thankfull Sacrifice. Thy Newes?
Enter a Meſſenger.
Meſ. The Citizens of Corioles haue iſſued,
And giuen to Lartius and to Martius Battaile.

I'th'your eares: to your Trenches driue me,
[illegible]
Come on you cowardly Rascals,
Men. [illegible] what's the matter?
1. Mes. A noble seruice, my Lord
Com. The slaues are beaten to their Drummes
[illegible] round about
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Enter Martius.

Com. Yonder comes newes,
I haue obserued the face of Martius Gest,
He was the last man. Marke him, and marke his
Before he speake to vs.
Mar. Come I too late?
Com. Ay if you come not in the blood of others,
More then in your owne.
Mar. O let me clippe ye
In Armes as sound, as when I wooed: in heart
As merry, as when our Nuptiall day was done,
And Tapers burnt to bedward.
Com. Flower of warre, how is't with Titus Lartius?
Mar. As with a man busied about Decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile,
Ransoming him or pitying, threatning th'other,
Holding Corioles in the name of Rome,
Euen like a Fawning Greyhound in the Leash,
To let him slippe at will.
Com. Where is that slaue
Which told me they had beate you to your Trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.
Mar. Let him alone,
He did inform the truth: but for our Gentlemen,
The common file (a plague! Tribunes for them!)
The Mouse eare dies before the Beare does, for
Their Armes, as actiue as their Heeles: as cheape
Can be bought thence.
Com. The Gods confound them all.
Mar. Yet now they are all confounded, and reduced
Were he more Angry at his return,
Your City, Sir, would be my prize.
Com. Ah, your sweet Nature!
Mar. Ha? What is Corioles?
Com. I know you can doe very little Alone?
Your Letters may informe vs of more Armies.
Mar. Very few Men,
Of those few, enforced from the reste which
Were not delicate Vessels, hearde that effect
Coriolus will finde
Not vnconquered: Leaue vnto his Discretion,
And with the rest returne to the inclosed Lords,
Or we no more will know her.
Com. Acceptable Hearing.
Your Actions already haue beene knowne.
Worthy Martius,
Before the Walles of Corioles, Titus Lartius,
Hearing of your Arriuall,
Mar. Sir, not yet written,
By Reason: we met elsewhere.
All. Who, I pray?
Mar. Why Volces, they all that are assembled
To fight vs at Corioles.
Com. Let me speake.
I heard from Rome of your loyall seruice,
Your Actions already haue beene knowne.
Before the Walles of Corioles, Titus Lartius,
Hearing of your Arriuall,
Mar. Sir, not yet written,
By Reason: we met elsewhere.
All. Who, I pray?
Mar. Why Volces, they all that are assembled
To fight vs at Corioles.
Com. Let me speake.
I heard from Rome of your loyall seruice,
Your Actions already haue beene knowne.
Your Summons to New Businesse, hath ouer-taken
Your Sword, and to seale your Knighthood, we
Vndertake you with the Dignity of your Paines,
And command you your Action.
Mar. Leaue vnto your Honor.
All. Worthy Martius.
Com. Say you chuse to leade them?
Mar. I will leade them,
And follow them to the Dores of the Citty,
Whether I know they command.
Com. Stay till the Newes be blowne:
How't is held at Rome?
Mar. Neuer speake more neither.
Com. Are you Manded, Martius?
All. Speake, you.
Mar. You haue holpe to ramme the good Newes in my Mouth.
Who cannot steppe ouer the head of the next
That interrupts his passe?
All. Then worthy Martius,
Attend vpon Cominius to these Warres.
Com. It is your former Promise.
Mar. Sir it is,
And I am constant. Titus Lartius thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus face.
What art thou stiffe? Stand'st out?
Tit. No Caius Martius,
I'le lean vpon one Crutch, and fight with t'other,
Ere stay behinde this Businesse.
Men. O true bred.
Com. Your Company to the Capitoll,
Where I know our best friends stay your leysure,
Vntill we with our Trumpets haue waked all
Fall to't: Martius hath done enough, the rest
Our Businesse for him: Bestirre you there,
And on the Market place, Martius, sleepe
This Morning: Ere the Euening Clocke haue told
Our Worke done with vs.
Tit. So shall it be.
Com. Martius: I'le send for thee: To his Extreamities shall Attend thee where he is: Deale with him Martius
As thou think'st meete: My Horse to yoke, and all
Our Purposes to do't. Before the Cities Gate
I take my leaue at once.
Mar. I will not see thee speake:
This Mantle blocks my Answer.
All. Let's along.

Exeunt.

Then Enter Tullus Auffidius, with Senators of Corioles, setting downe before their Citty Corioles: they haue Message that the other Army is approached, commanded by Cominius the Generall, and Caius Martius chiefe Leiutenant, other Businesses, and a Scout.

1. Sen. Yonder comes the Powre in hast, and seekes our Warre.
Auffidius got off with Horse more then
And fled the Fight. Good Horse-men throw away
Our Accommodation, and millions lost,
Our Spirits, and not a Nation neere redeemes
All bruis'd and beaten, but the Foe come on Cominius and Martius, your last Hope. Scout.
Sco. Of both the Generalls are the Volces in Armes,
Martius and Auffidius at their Heeles
Vowing reuengefull Warre against the Romanes,
Then euer they could stirre vp their Auncestors
Against the Faith and Honor of their Oathes.
1. Sen. I wish we had a Volume now to write him worthily,
Deseruing so his Name, and a Harty Praise.
2. Sen. Doubtlesse the Powre of Martius is most Infinite,
Normanded, Knowne, Beloued of the Supreame Gods.
I would not be a Roman of all Nations,
I had rather be their Horse, then their Mate.
1. Sen. Feare not our Care, sir.
Hold out your words, and not your Browes: our Blouds
Are not yet cold in him: his Powre is not
Yet growne grim in him: nor are we Data
For Beasts to see him by, his Ambitious Ghost
Walke after his Body. Come my Hearts,
As I could pluck Auffidius downe by th'Haire,
As he shakes Corioles by the Lockes: Doubt not
But Martius comes off an Honourable man,
Still to remember his Deserts: he hath
Fought Duels without number, hath before
Nayld Enemies vnto his Feete, to stirre vp
His Country to her Gates: his Nurse hath taught him
How to inforce the Warre, vnlike another
Not to be out-done by Enterprize and Feare
Till he hath throwne his Speare: his Sword, death, stroke
For euery Stride he did make forward, can
Giue Greeting to the Graue: Who leades his Muscle
Excercised on Heapes of Bodies.
Lart. Let's fetch him off, or make remaine alike.

Exeunt.

Then Enter Martius and Auffidius at seuerall Doores.

Mar. Ile fight with none but thee, for I do hate thee
Worse then a Promise-breaker.
Auf. We hate alike:
Not Affricke owns a Serpent I abhorre
More then thy fame and Enuy: fixe thy foote.
Mar. Let the first budger dye the others Slaue,
And the Gods doome him after.
Auf. If I flye Martius hollow me like a Hare.
Mar. Within these three houres Tullus
Alone I fought in your Corioles walles,
And made what worke I pleas'd. 'Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou seest me masked, for my Reuenge
Wherein the toyle of my sword, begins to swell
With scorne I spit vpon thee, which would doe
But that I would not lose another dramme of my fame.
Auf. Wert thou the Hector,
That was the whip of your bragg'd Progeny,
Thou should'st not scape me here.
Here they fight, and certaine Volces come in the aide of Auffidius. Martius fights till they be driuen in breathe.
Officious and not valiant, you haue sham'd me
In your condemned Seconds.

Exeunt

Flourish. Alarum. A Retreat is sounded. Enter at one Doore Cominius with the Romanes: At another Doore Martius with his Armes on a Target.

Com. If I should tell thee o're this thy dayes Worke,
Thou'lt not believe thy deeds: but I'le report it,
Where Senators shall mingle teares with smiles,
Where great Patricians shall attend, and bow
Things done in Action: where Lawes shall be put out
And Libertie plucke Caitiffe backe and thrall:
Where the ruin'd Tribunes,
Time with the time-pleasers hate cast off their Honors,
Shall say against their hearts, We thank the Gods
Our Rome hath such a Soldier.
Yet cam'st thou to a Morsel of this Feast
Having fully din'd before.

Enter Titus Lartius with his Power from the Pursuit.

Titus Lartius. O General,
Here is the Steed, we the Caparison:
Hadst thou (before we came)
Martius. I prethee, pardon me,
My Mother, who has a charter to extoll her Blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me.
I have done as you have done, that's what I can,
Induc'd as you have been, that's for my Country:
He that has but effected his good will,
Hath overta'ne mine Act.
Com. You shall not be
The Grave of your deserving;
Rome must know the value of her owne:
'Twere a Concealment worse than a Theft,
No leſſe than a Traducement,
To hide your doings, and to silence that,
Which to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modeſt: therefore I beseech you,
In sight of what you are now to reward
With what you have done before, and what you should,
Make your owne Trumpet.
Mart. I have some Wounds upon me, and they smart
To heare themselves remembred.
Com. Should they not,
Well might they fester 'gainſt ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the Horſes,
Whereof we have ta'ne good, and good store, of all
The Treasure in this field atchieved and city,
We render you the Tenth, to be ta'ne forth,
Before the common distribution,
At your only choyce.
Martius. I thanke you Generall:
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A Bribe, to pay my Sword: I doe refuſe it,
And stand upon my common part with those,
That have beheld the doing.

A long flourish. They all cry Martius, Martius, caſt up their Caps and Lances: Cominius and Lartius stand bare.

Mar. May these same Instruments, which you prophane,
Never sound more: when Drums and Trumpets shall
I'th' field prove flatterers, let Courts and Cities be
Made all of false-faced soothing.
When Steele growes ſoft, as the Parasites Silke,
Let him be made an Overture for the Wrongs.
My name, I say, unto it: I have not wash'd

Mar. No more of this, it does offend my heart,
Pray now no more.
Com. Look, Sir, your Mother.
Mar. You have, I know, petition'd all the Gods
For my Prosperity.
Vol. Nay, my good Soldier, up:
My gentle Martius, worthy Caius, and
By deed-atchieving Honor newly nam'd,
What is it? Coriolanus must I call thee?
But O, thy Wife.
Cor. My gracious Silence, hayle:
Would'ſt thou have laugh'd had I come Coffin'd home,
That weep'ſt to ſee me Triumph? Ah my Deare,
Such eyes the Widowes in Corioles weep,
And mine now waſh my Dew with Teares: they would
Have ſeem'd to have heard one of my Thoughts and Words,
That now lye round about Coriolus Walls.
Vir. Deare Sonne,
Thou ſhalt no longer take with mine Eares, than
Thou doſt with thine Indeed loſe all the Noyſe
Of wounded Citizens: whoſe Hurts and Plaints
Would (could it not be ſtopt) lodge there as in Graves,
And ſo ſtop mine Hearing againſt the Cries
Of thoſe that lose their Limbes.
Mar. Why this is Warres part,
Not for his Blood, but for his Honour.
Vir. Yes
Had I a Sword, and found my Sonne thus wounded,
I'd buckle on my Target, charge the Foe
Through Shame of Fortune, and either win or die.
Com. Come, let's see the Senate.
Lart. Martius, 'tis
Fit you should beare the Newes, he wish'd
He might be found in Corioles, where no Roman
Durſt enter but with fear and terror.
Com. Come,
What Lodging ſuits with you and yours, is yours.
Where is that Slave which told me they had beat you
To your Trenches? where is he? call him hither.
Mar. Let him alone,
He did inform the truth: but for our Gentlemen,
The common File (a plague! Tribunes for them!)
The mouſe ne'er ſhunn'd the Cat as they did budge
From Rascals worſe than they.
Com. But how prevail'd you?
Mar. Will the time ever
Have done to aske that question?
Com. Come, you muſt tell us.
Mar. Pray now your pardon.
Com. In troth I will not.
Your Wounds have ſpoke for you: Come, my Martius,
Let me deriue them from you.
Mar. Pray now, Sir,
Let me have your Voice.
Com. Come, I muſt not.
Your Voice is ſhortly grating to the Peoples Ears,
Who hearing of your Deeds to morrow, will Expect you ſhould (in Rogation) come
Before them.
Mar. Not I.
Com. Not how?
Mar. I will not.
Com. By the Gods you muſt:
Do not stubborne and froward with us.
Mar. I pray you,
Sir, in your Pavilion
Let me now owne my hard-ne'ſſe, which I muſt
Againſt the Peoples gather, mocke me into
A Cap and Knee: or ſuch pernicious Cringe,
Which I muſt do often, with my Friends,
And to ſome Soldiers Suit-warme: and by Heaven,
I'd rather be their Servant in my Way,
Than ſway with them in theirs.
Com. On, to the Market-place.
Lart. Then Coriolanus
Gently ſtand upon the Conſulſhip.
Com. Do not ſo.
Let them not ſuppoſe we feare them, leſt we flatter them.
Mar. The Honor-ſtaffe, fie,
Will not take root in Warre: in Peace
Proceeds all Wiſedome, Warre is Wilfulneſſe,
And Power unconſcionable: take away
Your Dignities, and with the Hat put on
The Napkin and the Coate, commixe with Dyers,
Or Tailors, with your Breath: and I will ever
Do ten times more, than will but aske a thanke.
How apt is he in Phraſe, ſo to diſſemble
What his Hart thinkes? Can he make Curtſies?
Lart. Then Coriolanus
Be not as common fooliſh, to make
Your ſelfe unpleaſant to the Common Eare,
For that your Minde will ſo.
Mar. I muſt them flatter.
Would the Peoples Throats were Throats of Geeſe, and I
Could quack like them. Please you that I may not
Be brought to ſhew my Wounds to them,
Or beg my Meate, I'll leave you.
Com. Well, no more.
Mar. I ſmell ſome Envy in this.
Com. Your Will, I pray you.
Mar. I muſt ſtill
Be truculent to my ſelfe, I learne it,
And it becomes me not.
Com. Come, go we to our Tent:
The blood upon your Viſage dries, 'tis time
It ſhould be look'd to: come. Exeunt

A Flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Auffidius bloudy, with two or three Soldiers.

Auf. The Towne is ta'ne.
Sold. 'Twill be deliver'd back on good Condition.
Auf. Condition?
I would I were a Roman, for I cannot,
Being a Volce, be that I am. Condition?
What good Condition can a Treaty finde
I'th' part that is at mercy? Five times, Martius,
I have fought with thee: ſo often haſt thou beat me:
And would'ſt doo ſo, I think, ſhould we encounter

Bru. We do it not alone, ſir.

Men. I know you can doe very little alone, for your helpes are many, or elſe your actions would growe wondrous ſingle: your abilities are too infant-like, for doating much alone. You talke of Pride. Oh, that you could turne your eyes toward the Napes of your neckes, and make but an Interiour ſurvey of your good ſelues. Oh, that you could!

Both. What then, ſir?

Men. Why then you ſhould diſcouer a brace of vnmeriting, proud voters, to the Magiſtrates (alias Fooles, as any in Rome.

Sicin. Menenius, you are known well enough too

Men. I am known well enough too to be a moſt gracious Patritian, and one that loues a cup of hot Wine, with not a drop of allaying Tyber in't: ſaid, to be ſomething imperfect, in fauouring the firſt complaint, haſtie and Tinder-like vpon too trifling an occaſion. Oh, I can counſell more with the Buttocke of the night, then with the forehead of the morning. What I think I vtter, and ſpend my malice in my breath. Meeting two ſuch Weale-men as you are (I cannot call you Lycurguſes) if the drinke you giue me, touches my Palate aduerſely, I make a crooked face at it. I can ſay, your Worſhippes haue deliuer'd the matter well, when I finde the Aſſe compound with the Maſter: yet I wiſh Gentlemen, you had the wit to part your eares a little ſooner after you haue heard them. But I am wide from my matter. Wherefore I craue your good patience: for my ſpeech ſtirres not in the Mouth of my Matter, vnleſſe it be to diſpoſe them with motion. What then can your Commiſſion effect with the Gentry of this Citie? If I haue ſpoken good ſenſe, you know what I would inferre: if not, I am but as a Cuſtomer, that comes into a Shop, and buyes nothing.

Bru. Come, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, your ſelues, nor any thing: you are ambitious, for poore knaues caps and legges: you weare out a good wholeſome forenoone, in hearing a cauſe betweene an Orenge-wife, and a Faucet-ſeller, and then rehearſe it in the Market-place. Nay, and moſt of your parts in iudgement are falſe, your chiefeſt part is, much iudgement in your ſtomacke. Yet you take not the Meaſures, to meaſure the Health of the Body by: you ſhake not out an ill Pennyworth in a Commodity of Corne, wiſh not all Tyber in the Belly of a Barge. What goddeſſes ſhould be hungry, when your Iawes (as Buſhels) rather ſtriue to inlarge your Mouthes, then leaue to be filled? Only fatte with fooles, and feede with flatterie, bones and all, is the Diet you liue by: and as the Phyſicke workes not, but ſtayes in and ſtifles the Body it ſhould purge, ſo you (that ſhould with your ſpeech wholeſome purge the Gall and Choller that marres the Politique Conſtitution of your Rotten Commonwealth) will flatter Pleaſure to doe it, and throw Inflammation on more Impoſtume, till it burſt. What further office belongs to your Function, I know not well enough.

1. Cit. Come, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, your ſelues, nor any thing. Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria.

How now (my as faire as Noble Ladies and the Moone were shee Earthly) no Nobler, whether do you follow your eyes so fixedly?

Volum. Honorable Menenius, my Boy Martius approaches: for the loue of Iuno lets goe.

Menen. Ha? Martius coming home?

Volum. I, worthy Menenius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Menen. Take my Cap Iupiter, and I thanke thee: hoo, Martius coming home?

Ladies. Nay 'tis true.

Volum. Looke, here's a Letter from him: the State hath another, his Wife another, and (I thinke) there's one at home for you.

Menen. I will make my very house reele to night: A Letter for me?

Virgil. Yes certain, there's a Letter for you, I see.

Menen. A Letter for me? it giues me an Eminence, I feare of: read it before my Eyes.

Virgil. Pardon me Madam, I doubt it speakes of warre.

Menen. So: what is he writes short sentences?

Virgil. I know not, but I am sure the Subscription is Victorie.

Menen. May it be more then Victorie? sing Victorie, Sonne Martius, thou art comming home.

Volum. O! 'tis true. Menen. Will not a Trumpet call your Gates, ere I can tell him what I would speake with him next?

Messen. Here comes the Lord.

Enter Martius.

Martius. What, art not thou proud Rome? a Name for my Sword? Ha? Martius returned?

Volum. I, worthy Menenius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Martius. Take my Cap Iupiter, and I thanke thee: hoo, Martius coming home?

Ladies. Nay 'tis true.

Volum. Looke, here's a Letter from him: the State hath another, his Wife another, and (I thinke) there's one at home for you.

Martius. I will make my very house reele to night: A Letter for me?

Virgil. Yes certain, there's a Letter for you, I see.

Martius. So: what is he writes short sentences?

Virgil. I know not, but I am sure the Subscription is Victorie.

Martius. May it be more then Victorie? sing Victorie, Sonne Martius, thou art comming home.

Volum. O! 'tis true. Martius. Will not a Trumpet call your Gates, ere I can tell him what I would speake with him next?

Messen. Here comes the Lord.

Enter Brutus and Sicinius

Bru. All tongues speake of him,and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling Nurse
Into a rapture lets her Baby cry
While she chats him: the Kitchin Malkin pinnes
Her richest Lockram 'bout her reechie neeke,
Clambring the Walls to eye him.
Stalls, Bulkes, Windowes are smother'd vp,
Leades fill'd, and Ridges horsed
With variable Complexions; all agreeing
In earnestnesse to see him: seld-shown Flamins
Doe preasse among the popular Throngs, and puffe
To winne a vulgar station: our veyl'd Dames
Commit the Warre of White and Damaske
In their nicely gawded Cheekes, to'th' wanton spoyle
Of Phœbus burning Kisses: such a pooring,
As if that whatsoeuer God, who leades him,
Were slyly crept into his humane powers,
And gaue him gracefull posture.
Sicin. On the sodaine, I warrant him Consull.
Brutus. Then our Office may, during his power, goe sleepe.
Sicin. He cannot temp'rately transport his Honors,
From where he should begin, and end, but will
Lose those he hath wonne.
Brutus. In that there's comfort
Sicin. Doubt not,
The Commoners, for whom we stand, but they
Vpon their ancient malice, will forget
With the least cause, these his new Honors,
Which that he will giue them, make I as little question,
As he is proud to doo't.
Brutus. I heard him sweare,
Were he to stand for Consull, neuer would he Appeare i'th' Market place, nor on him put
The Napes Vesture of Humilitie,
Nor showing (as the manner is) his Wounds
To the People, beggе their stinking Breaths.
Sicin. 'Tis right.
Brutus. It was his word:
Oh he would misse it, rather then carry it,
But by the suite of the Gentry to him,
And the desire of the Nobles
Sicin. I wish no better, then haue him hold that purpose, and to put it in execution.
Brutus. 'Tis most like he will.
Sicin. It shall be to him then, as our good wills; a sure destruction.
Brutus. So it must fall out
To him or our Authorities. For an end
We must suppose of the People: which gaine
He shall not haue: do them more harme than
Some, who hate him still more, than he can loue them,
Can say well of him.
Sicin. Happy Tribunes
Let vs keepe close, if the Median power be wilde,
Which we shall hearely feele: for his approach
To kindle their dry Stubble and their Blaze
Shall darken him for euer.

Enter a Messenger.

Brutus. What's the matter?
Mess. You are sent for to the Capitoll:
'Tis thought that Martius shall be Consull:
I haue seene the dumbe men throng to see him,
And the blind to heare him speak: Matrons flong Gloues,
Ladies and Maids their Scarfes, and Handkerchers,
Vpon him as he past: the Nobles bended
As to Ioues Statue, and the Commons made
A Shower, and Thunder, with their Caps, and Showts:
I neuer saw the like.
Brutus. Let's to the Capitoll,
And carry with vs Eares and Eyes for th' time,
But Hearts for the event.
Sicin. Haue with you. Exeunt.

Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions, as it were, in the Capitoll.

1 Off. Come, come, they are almost here: how many stand for Consulships?
2 Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of euery one, Coriolanus will carry it.
1 Off. That's a braue fellow: but hee's vengeance proud, and loues not the common people
2 Off. 'Faith, there hath beene many great men that haue flatter'd the people, who ne're loued them; and there be many that they haue loued, they know not wherefore: so that if they loue they know not why, they hate vpon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neyther to care whether they loue, or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and out of his Noble carelesnesse lets them plainly see't.
1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their loue, or no, he waued indifferently, 'twixt doing them neyther good, nor harme: but he seekes their hate with greater deuotion, than they can render it him, and leaues nothing vndone, that may fully discouer him their opposite. Now to seeme to affect the malice and displeasure of the People is as bad, as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their loue.
2 Off. Hee hath deserued worthily of his Country, and his ascent is not by such easie degrees as those, who hauing been supple and courteous to the People, Bonnetted, without any further deed, to haue them at all into their estimation, and report: but hee hath so planted his Honors in their Eyes and his actions in their Hearts, that forcing their Tongues to be silent, and not confesse so much, were a kinde of ingratefull Iniurie: to report otherwise, were a Malice, that giuing it selfe the Lye, would plucke reproofe and rebuke from euery Eare that heard it
1 Off. No more of him, hee's a worthy man: make way, they are comming.

A Sennet. Enter the Patricians, and the Tribunes of the People, Lictors before them: Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius the Consul: Scicinius and Brutus take their places by themselues: Coriolanus stands

Menen. Hauing determin'd of the Volces,
And to send for Titus Lartius: it remaines,
As the maine Point of this our after-meeting,

To

To gratulate [illegible] Nobe[illegible]ence that [illegible]
This too of[illegible]t of mine) Therefore please you,
Most reuerend and graue Elders to deale
The prefer[illegible]t, and last Cares[illegible],
In our well-found Successes to report
A little of that worthy Worke perform'd
By Martius Caius Coriolanus, whom
We met here, both to thanke and to remember,
With Honors [illegible]
1 Sen. Speake, good Cominius
Leaue nothing out for length, and make vs think
Rather our States defective for requitall,
Then we to stretch it out. Masters o' th' People,
We do request your kindest eares, and after
Your louing motion toward the common Body,
To yeeld what [illegible]es here
Sicin. We are conuented vpon a pleasing Treaty, and haue hearts inclinable to honor and aduance the Theame of our Assembly.
Bru. Which the rather we shall be blest to do, if he remember a kinder value of the People, then he hath hereto priz'd them at.
Menen. That's off, that's off;
I would you rather had been silent. Please you to heare Cominius speake?
Bru. Most willingly, but yet my caution was more pertinent than the rashnesse of your leaue.
Menen. Well, I say, speake. You know your Peoples loue is on the [illegible] Worth a common pause.
Cominius starts, and is led forth a way.
Sir, how comes it that
[illegible] you haue not found
Which you present [illegible]
Bru. Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not?
Coriol. No, no man saw 'em,
We heard not what was said.
You [illegible], they were shrewd ones, but your people
I loue them as they weigh.
Menen. Pray now, sit downe.
Coriol. I had rather haue one scratch my Head i' th' Sun
When the Alarum were strucke, than idly sit
To heare my Nothings monster'd. Exit Coriolanus
Menen. Masters o' th' People,
Your multitudinous Tongue let me not wonder
That you haue good cause to hate him: you wonder
That he respects himself: but he well shewes
That honor dwells with him. You know the Cause
Com. I shall, and more than I can learne and vtter
Since I can be ever'd by no Pitty,
I am not mou'd by Woman's Teares, nor Feares,
Are more than any thing the Warre knowes
Can be dreaded out of him. With full Oyes
Will Tarquin pitch his Tent, or with calme Feet
Shake off the dew-skirted Grasses, whose
Wanton Steps we haue prest, and with a Heart
As little apt to feare as to inuade
Consulted with the Lady of the Deed,
And know well the Shades, in which the Hobgoblin
Doth lodge. Then what I feare, I tell you
Appropriating to my Heart the Cause
And Power to doe't, will also set my Tongue
Against my Heart: Before I speake, not thinking
I feare to speake ill. If I hate him not,
But do it for our Fathers sake, whose Soule
Is not our Inheritor, and for the Loue
Of Partly he is mine, I say, I feare
His Greatnesse, weigh'd with his Vnkindnesse,
Will [illegible] to ouer-pinnace
Our Boat with him. Let us seeke out Voices
For his Worthinesse: If when they speake of him
They mixe Allay with Prayses, as I thinke
They will, when we shall finde it, while he stands
Before our Face, we shall not spare to show him
Our Scarres made in his Countries Seruice, stand
Naked and bare before him. Since his Minde
Can neuer speake to purpose: Soft, what Newes?
Menen. Pray now, your Newes?
You haue made faire hand of you, and we haue
Heard your Losse againe.
How faires the Report abroad?
Com. Badly, when Men and Horses fall to dying.
Come, I am dumbe, sir.
Menen. A Gods name, make no long matter.
Com. It is spoke freely out of many mouthes,
How probable I do not care to know,
Thinking anticipation.
Menen. Now the Gods crush 'em to a Iellie!
Com. Nay, let them follow:
The Volces haue much Corne: take these Rats thither
To gnaw their Garners. Worshipfull Mutiners,
Your valour puts well forth: pray follow.
Sicin. Was euer man so proud as is this Martius?
Bru. He has no equall.
Menen. When we could not haue him Friend, why
Foe?
Bru. Man that is borne of Woman might be proud
Hauing not power to do things meet as well
As to be proud of power: but he is one
Of the most horrible Pride, or Nature
Neuer created for mischiefe.
Menen. I know him well:
Giue you good morrow, I haue seene the time
When he would haue walk'd all this way sideling,
Deuided in himselfe: I would haue trusted him
To haue come to my Funerall: but since all is well
With him, and his Fellowes, I will to Dinner,
For the Gods know I speake this in hunger
For Bread, not Sedition.
Bru. Fare you well.
Menen. He had rather see the swords, and heare a Drum,
than looke vpon his Schoole-master.
Com. Well, well, no more of him:
He is a worthy Man: Make way, they are coming.

Enter Coriolanus

Menen. The Tribunes, Cominius, are well pleas'd to make it all.
Com. I neuer saw them so humble.
Menen. Let a Iest of their humbleness, that you shall make to the People
Com. I beseech you,
Let me alone to speake. For I cannot Flatter, nor bend to Hands and Knees, as some
Whose Wrists with Manacles haue been stiffe, to gaine
A Voice with them. But let my Tongue haue leaue
To speake my Minde, and I will vse it
In Bonnet, or without: Let me deale
Well or ill, I will not change my Habit,
Nor feede on Prayses, such as are not earn'd.
Is this done?
Sicin. Consul, the People are
What is the Matter,
That being pass'd for Consull with full Voice,
You are retir'd, as if you fear'd to graft
Honors in which you had rather haue
The Denyall of the Voyce? Now this is done,
Which was a Worke of labour, you haue found
Labour to haue 'em vndone. Pray go on,
And resume that Spirit with the which you bore
The Application of your selfe. But now
You are againe, as when before you came
A Thing of Custome: 'Tis to be lamented
If you haue saued a Tree, fruitfull at Top,
Whose Armes reach farre and wide, and not vouchsafe
Now to haue Leaues againe.
Bru. Well, no more.
Com. What then?
How then?
What then?
Returne againe to the Tribunes?
Sicin. Well, what then?
How then?
Com. In plaine termes, then,
My Minde is going my Tongue was fashion'd to
Purpose well, or not at all.
Bru. Would you proceed
Especially against Caius Martius?
Com. I will vtter it to my Enemy.
Bru. Do not then.
Sicin. Not to the Common People.
Com. Why not, Sir?
Bru. Because that now it lies you on to speake
To the People.
Com. I do hope so.
Bru. Then thinke you so your selfe?
Com. Yes, I do know some Nobler ends I had
Than to reserue the Nobility.
Bru. Mark you that?
Com. To Rome it selfe, to Rome.
Bru. Your Country, Sir.
Com. Country? Where's that?
Bru. Why, where I say?
Com. Where I say?
Bru. Your Country.
Com. Why, I say, where?
Menen. Pray now, no more.
Com. Let me deale
As I may answer.
Bru. You haue said you will
Seeke vpon Martius Coriolanus?
Com. I haue.
Bru. And that you will stand vp in his Behalfe,
Out of your owne Report.
Com. I will.
Bru. But what moues you to make
Open and Conspicuous Warre
Will shew your Honor better.

Sicin. To

Sent. To Coriolanus come all ioy and Honor.

Flourish Cornets.

Then Exeunt. Manet Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. You see how he intends to vse the people.

Scein May they perceiue's intent: he will require them
As if he did contemne what he requested,
Should be in them to giue.

Bru. Come, we'll informe them
Of our proceedings heere on th Market place,
I know they do attend vs.

Enter, men or eight Citizens.

1. Cit. Once if he do require our voyces, wee ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may Sir if we will

3 Cit. We haue power in our selues to do it, but it is a power that we haue no power to do For, if hee shew vs his wounds, and tell vs his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds and speake for them So if he tell vs his Noble deeds, we must also tell him our Noble acceptance of them Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingratefull were to make a Monster of the multitude, of the which we being members, should bring our selues to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make vs no better thought of a little helpe will serue: for once we stood vp about the Corne, he himselfe stucke not to call vs the many-headed Multitude.

3. Cit. We haue beene cal'd so of many, not that our heads are some browne, some blacke, some Abram, some bald; but that our wits are so diuersly Coulored; and truely I thinke, if all our wittes were to issue out of one Scull, they would flye East, West, North, South, and their consent of one direct way, should be at once to all the points a th Compasse

2. Cit. Thinke you so? Which way do you iudge my wit would fly.

3. Cit. Nay your wit will not so soone out as another mans will, 'tis strongly wedg'd vp in a blocke-head. but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure Southward.

2 Cit. Why, that way?

3 Cit. To loose it selfe in a Fogge, where being three parts melted away with rotten Dewes, the fourth would returne for Conscience sake, to helpe to get thee a Wife

2 Cit. You are neuer without your tricks, you may, you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolu'd to giue your voyces? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it, I say. If hee would incline to the people, there was neuer a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gowne of Humility with Menenius

Heere he comes, and in the Gowne of humility, marke his behauiour. we are not to stay altogether but to come by him where he stands by ones, by twoes & by threes He is to make his requests by particulars, wherein euerie one of vs has a single Honor, in giuing him our owne voyces with our owne tongues, therefore follow me, and I'le direct you how you shall go by him.

All Content, content

Men. O Sir you are not right: haue you not knowne The worthiest men haue done it?

Cor. What must I say, I pray Sir?
Plague vpon't, I cannot bring
My tongue to such a pace. Looke Sir, my wounds,
I got them in my Countries Seruice, when
Some certaine of your Brethren roar'd, and ranne
From th'noise of our owne Drummes.

Menen. Oh me the Gods, you must not speak of that,
You must desire them to thinke vpon you.

Coriol. Thinke vpon me? Hang em,
I would they would forget me, like the Vertues
Which our Diuines lose by em.

Men. You'l marre all,
Ile leaue you. Pray you speake to em, I pray you
In wholsome manner. Exit

Enter three of the Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their Faces,
And keepe their teeth cleane: So, heere comes a brace,
You know the cause (Sir) of my standing heere.

3 Cit. We do Sir, tell vs what hath brought you too't.

Cor. Mine owne desert.

2 Cit. Your owne desert.

Cor. I, but mine owne desire.

3 Cit. How not your owne desire?

Cor. No Sir, 'twas neuer my desire yet to trouble the poore with begging

3 Cit. You must thinke if we giue you any thing, we hope to gaine by you

Cor. Well then I pray, your price a th'Consulship

1 Cit. The price is, to aske it kindly

Cor. Kindly sir, I pray let me haue it: I haue wounds to shew you, which shall be yours in priuate & your good voice Sir, what say you?

2 Cit. You shall haue it worthy Sir.

Cor. A match Sir, there's in all two worthie voyces begg'd I haue your Almes, Adieu.

3 Cit. but this is something odde

2 Cit. And 'twere to giue againe: but 'tis no matter

Exeunt Enter two other Citizens.

Coriol Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be Consul, I haue heere the Customarie Gowne.

1. You haue deserued Nobly of your Country, and you haue not deserued Nobly.

Coriol. Your Ænigma.

1. You haue been a scourge to her enemies, you haue been a Rod to her Friends, you haue not indeede loued the Common people

Coriol You should account mee the more Vertuous, that I haue not been common in my Loue. I will sir flatter my worne Brother the people to earne a dearer estimation of them, 'tis a condition they account gentle & since the wisecome of their choice, is rather to haue my Hat, then my Heart, I will practice the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfetly, that is sir, I will counterfet the bewitchment of some popular man, and giue it bount full to the desires. Therefore beseech you, I may be Consull.

2. Wee hope to finde you our friend: and therefore giue you our voices heartily.

1. You haue receyued many wounds for your Country.

Coriol I will not Seale your knowledge with shewing them. I will make much of your voyces, and so trouble you no farther.

Both. The Gods giue you joy Sir heartily.

Coriol. Most sweet Voyces.
Better it is to dye, better to starue,
Then craue the hire, which first we do deserue.
Why in this Woolish tongue should I stand heere,
To begge of Hob and Dicke, that does appeere

Their

Their neede (the Voices) Custome calls me to't,
What Custome wils in things,should we doo't?
The Dead-time now (Time would ha've wept
And mounted in their Graues to see vs so gripe
For Trifles) to come-peece. Rather then fouler so,
Let the Dogge Office and the Honour go
To one that would doo't. In sum, I am a'te through,
The one part suffered the other will I doe.

Enter three Citizens more.

Here come more Voyces
Your Voyces? for your Voyces I haue fought
Watcht for your Voyces, for your Voyces beare
Of Wounds, two dozen odde Battailes I haue seene,
I haue heard (for your Voyces)
Haue done many things, some (like I haue more:
Your Voyces? Indeed I would be Consul.

1. Cit. Hee has done Nobly, and cannot goe without any honeſt mans Voyce.

2. Cit. Therefore let him be Consul. The Gods giue him ioy, and make him good to the Patricians and our Peace.

All. Amen, Amen. God saue thee, Noble Consul.

Corio. Worthy Voyces.

Enter Menenius, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Mene. You haue stood your Limitation,
And the Tribunes endue you with the Peoples Voyce,
Remaines that in th'Officiall Marke inuested,
You anon doe meet the Senate.

Corio. Is this done?

Sicin. The Custome of Request you haue discharg'd:
The People do admit you, and are summon'd
To meet anon, vpon your approbation.

Corio. Where? at the Senate-house?

Sicin. There, Coriolanus.

Corio. May I change these Garments?

Sicin. You may, Sir.

Corio. That I'le straight do, and knowing my ſelfe againe,
Repaire to th'Senate-house.

Mene. Ile keepe you company. Will you along?

Brut. We stay here for the People.

Sicin. Fare you well. Exeunt Corio. and Mene.
He has it now, and by his Looks me thinkes,
'Tis warme at's heart.

Brut. With a proud heart he wore his humble Weeds.
Will you dismisse the People?

Enter the Plebeians.

Sicin. How now, my Masters, haue you chose this man?

1. Cit. He has our Voyces, Sir.

Brut. We pray the Gods he may deserue your loues.

2. Cit. Amen Sir. To my poore vnworthy notice,
He mock'd vs, when he begg'd our Voyces.

3. Cit. Certainely, he flouted vs downe-right.

1. Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock vs.

2. Cit. Not one amongst vs, saue yond tatter'd, that beares
He's dyes coldly in it. He should not flout vs
His Marks (not Merit) were all seene in his Countrey.

Sicin. Well, I pray let's goe.

All. Now, if he may.

3. Cit. He had two Wounds,
Which he could shew in priuate
And with his Hat thus waying it in scorne,
I would be Consull, says he: aged Custome,
But by your Voyces will not so permit me.
Your Voyces therefore: when we granted that,
Here was, I thanke you for your Voyces, thanke you
Your most sweet Voyces: now you haue left your Voyces
I haue no further with you. Was not this mockery?

Sicin. Why either were you ignorant to see't?
Or seeing it, of such childish friendlineſſe
To yeeld your Voyces?

Enter Menenius.

Brut. Could you not haue told him,
As you were lesſon'd? When he had no Power,
But was a peece of that, into the which
The Voyces of the People made a Part?
Your Loues, (at whose command) like to a Shadow
Vanish'd at the Warre: and now returning
Appeare before the Eyes of the State,
Whose Breath creates and makes againe
His Honour, which that breath has giuen him: with
The breath of all the Voyces, which we heare
Will soone (as he is proud for them to please)
Well or vnwisely, passe: haue you not scores
Of Monuments, of things done long ago?
Or let a Note go with him, what poore Fellow
That dies i'th'Market-place, in your Report,
When he hath power to crosse you?

Mene. Good no more.

Sicin. Enough, with ouer-measure.

Brut. No, take more:
What may be sworne by, both Diuine and Humane,
Seale what I end withall. This double worship,
Where one part does disdaine with cause, the other
Insult without all reason: where Gentry, Title, Wisedome
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of generall Ignorance, it must omit
Real necessities, and giue way the while
To vnstable Slightneſſe. Purpose so barr'd, it followes
Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore beseech you,
You that will be lesse fearefull of this, then I,
That the Patricians meane to stirre vp Rage,
As pastime to the Multitude (whose Violent Fit
Turnes it selfe into what it begets
Collected from particulars)

Sicin. What then?
What then should we do? Tell vs.

Brut. Why say you chose him more proudly, more scornfully (if you can be scornfull) then when you gaue him his Offices: that is, would you haue him liue, or stay to be executed? Say his faults, in humane seeming, cannot passe vnpunished: or were you ready to say, that you had not good minds, that set him on to the Violence and Gall of the Multitude, which all touch'd and tainted with commixture?

Sicin. Say it be so?

Brut. Say it be so? He is your Enemy: they haue only in their Constitutions, one Choice, and you another. What is the Graue of a Contradiction? Nothing but Noyſe and Scribble. What good condition can haue that Applause, where Madneſſe is the Iudge? Or what Trust is in that Mans Loue, who euen now trebles his Breath to proclaime mischiefe, as he was lately employ'd to sooth? Your Breath of late, to fauour him. You talke of Pulling downe Tarquin the Proud, as a thing that euer since hath beene wiſht for: Were you but bound to this Leſſon, you could not haue powre enough to vtter it, for disproportioning with Iniury. Therefore take heede how you impaire one, considering how he may qualifie the other: for the Vertue of your Anger (being tied to Discretion) may make it lesſen'd, when it shall grow Infinite, and to be infinite, it must be limited.

Sicin. Well, on to the Market-place.

Corio. Sir, the Custome of Rome doth craue the Loues
Of the Voyce generally: therefore when
They shall present themselues, I do beſeech you
By my example, mildly to preſent
My honeſt Heart. To which, I must produce
Mine Enemy: the Marks of Honour on me, which
I must not say, but that they are mine Enemies,
And that I rather had, then wish'd a Scarre.
Well, I must do't: Wiſht Honour, liues in Teares
That die in Honours Blood. And Poore Plebeians, Whose Loues I do now beg, like Beggers (who
With their Importunacies, do tire
The Gods to heare them) for your Loues to me,
Harden your mouthes, your hands, your hearts against
My Honour, to preſerue my Honour to
Your Vſe. Well, I must do't:
Away my Disposition, and posseſſe me
Some Harlots Spirit: my Throat of Warre be turn'd,
Which quier'd with my Drum, into a Pipe
Small as an Eunuches, or the Virgin voyce
That babies lulles asleepe. The Smiles of Knaues
Tent in my Cheekes, and Schoole-boyes Teares take vp
The Glaſſes of my Sight. A Beggers Tongue
Make motion through my Lips, and my Arm'd Knees
Who bow'd but in my Stirrop, bend like his
That hath receiu'd an Almes. I will not do't,
Leſt I ſurcease to Honour mine owne Truth,
And by my Body's action, teach my Mind
A most inherent Baſeneſſe.

Brut. At your pleaſure.

Corio. How shall I begin, and in what Forme, what Phraſe,
Before the Plebeians I commend my Name
To their accuſtom'd Fauours?

*Brut

Brut. I Spare vs not. Say, we read Lectures to you,
How young Ile began to terue his Countrey,
How long continued, and what stocke he springs of,
The Noble House o'th Martians from whence came
That Ancus Martius, Numaes Daughters Sonne,
Who after great Hostilius here was King,
Of the same House Publius and Quintus were,
That our best Water brought by Conduits hither,
And Nobly nam'd, so twice being Censor,
Was his great Ancestor.
Scic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought,
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you haue found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed Enemie, and reuoke
Your iudgeme approbation.
Brut. Say you ne're had don't,
Harpe on that still, but by our putting on
And presently, when you haue drawne your number,
Repaire to'th Capitoll.
All. We will so: almost all repent in their election.
Exeunt Tribunes.
Brut. Let them goe on:
This Mutine were better put in hazard,
Then stay past doubt, for greater.
If wisely: being ript to the height of rage
We shall be sufficient to the full in rage
With their retorted both obiection and answer
To vantage of their anger.
Scic. Faith Captoll, come
We will be there before the stream o'th People:
And this shall seeme, as partly 'tis, their owne,
Which we shall season, as briefly as we can,
To the opinion that we gather of them,
And in the truth of it hereafter deale.
Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentry, Cominius, Titus Latius, and other Senators.
Corio. Tullus Auffidius then had made new head.
Latius. He had my Lord, and that it was which caus'd
Our swifter Composition.
Corio. So then the Volces stand but as at first,
Ready when time shall prompt them, to make roade
Vpon's againe.
Com. They are worne (Lord Consull) so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their Banners waue againe.
Corio. Saw you Auffidius?
Latius. On safegard he came to me, and did curse
Against the Volces, for they had so vildly
Yeelded the Towne: he is retyred to Antium.
Corio. Spoke he of me?
Latius. He did, my Lord.
Corio. How? what?
Latius. How often he had met you Sword to Sword
That of all Enemies, on the hatefull, elated
Your person most: That he would pawne on fortunes
To hopelesse restitution, so he might
Be call'd your Vanquisher.
Corio. At Antium lies he?
Latius. At Antium.
Corio. I wish I had a cause to seeke him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Welcome home.
Enter Scicinius and Brutus.
Behold, these are the Tribunes of the People,
The Tongues o'th Common Mouth. I do despise them:
For they do prank them in Authoritie,
Against all Noble sufferance.
Scicin. Passe no further.
Cor. Hah? what is that?
Brut. It will be dangerous to goe on: No further.
Corio. What makes this change?
Mene. The matter?
Com. Hath he not pass'd the Nobles, and the Commons?
Brut. Cominius, no.
Corio. Haue I had Childrens Voyces?
Senat. Tribunes giue way, he shall o'th' Market place.
Brut. The People are incens'd against him.
Scicin. Stop, or all will fall in broyle.
Corio. Are these your Herd?
Must these haue Voyces, that can yeeld them now,
And straight disclaim their tongues? what are your Offices?
You being their Mouthes, why rule you not their Teeth?
Haue you not set them on?
Mene. Be calme, be calme.
Corio. It is a purpos'd thing, and growes by Plot,
To curbe the Will of the Nobility:
Suffer't, and liue with such as cannot rule,
Nor euer will be ruled.
Brut. Call't not a Plot:
The People cry you mockt them: and of late,
When Corne was giuen them gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the Suppliants: for the People, call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to Nobleneſſe.
Corio. Why this was knowne before.
Brut. Not to them all.
Corio. Haue you informed them sithence?
Brut. How? I informe them?
Com. You are like to doe such businesse.
Brut. Not vnlike each way to better yours.
Corio. Why then should I be Consull? by yond Clouds
Let me deserue so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow Tribune.
Scicin. You shew too much of that,
For which the People stirre: if you will passe
To where you are bound, you must enquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit,
Or neuer be so Noble as a Consull,
Nor yoake with him for Tribune.
Mene. Let's be calme.
Com. The People are abus'd: set on, this paltring
Becomes not Rome: nor has's Coriolanus
Deseru'd this so dishonor'd Rub, layd falsely
I'th' plaine Way of his Merit.
Corio. Tell me of Corne: this was my speech,
And I will speak't againe.
Mene. Not now, not now.
Senat. Not in this heat, Sir, now.
Corio. Now as I liue, I will.
My Noble friends, I craue their pardons:
For the mutable rank-scented Meyne,
Let them regard me, as I do not flatter,
And therein behold themselues: I say againe,
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our Senate
The Cockle of Rebellion, Insolence, Sedition,
Which we our selues haue plowed for, sow'd & scatter'd,
By mingling them with vs, the honor'd Number,
Who lack not Vertue, no nor Power, but that
Which they haue giuen to Beggers.
Mene. Well, no more.
Senat. No more words, we beseech you.
Corio. How? no more?

As for my Country, I haue fhed my blood,
Not fcarre-out-worne with any Scorne: So that all my Limbs
Come weary'd hither, and doe decay: yet doubt thoſe Meazels
Which we diſcruſe ſhould ſeaze vs, ere we ſuffer
Iuſt ſcorne with ſcorne, or ſtarke contempt.
Sen. You ſpeake o'th people, as if you were a God,
To puniſh, Not a man of their Infirmity.
Scic. 'Twere well we could, if you could heare: what's the matter,
Men. What, what, his Choller?
Cor. Choller? Were I as patient as the midnight ſleep,
By Ioue, 'twould be my minde.
Scic. It is a minde that ſhall remaine a Coward,
Before his Commander, and the nam'd portion
Where it ſtands more, or ſhall be.
Cor. Your Voices?
Heare you me Menenius? Before the Mannors? Make you
Thoſe Obſeruances?
Com. I was from the Cannon.
Cor. Shall I? Good but no more Voices: that concernes you
Your graue, but wreakefull Senators, haue you thus
Giuen Hoſtages to ſhoote your Country,
That will in peremptorie Shall, deny but
Your Voyce, nay more, after my Mother, wiſhes not well
I pray heare you: Giue your Voices: for
An Enemy to your Peace, talke, talke,
Then vſe your Ignorance to the Dearth, as when
Your Gabbing ones, that haue not Bread to eate,
Beſeech you may haue Corne: by you: You are Plebeians,
If they be Senators: and they are no leſſe,
When both your Voices blended, the greateſt taſte
Moſt palateth theirs. They chuſe their Magiſtrate,
And ſuch a one are they, who puts by Shall,
Hoping your Shall, ſhall grant a greater deed
Then euer yet it gaue. By Ioue, I'le make
It makes the Coriuals bate, and my Soule ake
To ſee, when two Authorities are vp,
Neither Supreame; How ſoone Confuſion
May enter 'twixt the gap of Both, and take
The one by th'other.
Com. Well, on to'th Market-place.
Cor. Who euer gaue that Counſell, to giue forth
The Corne a'th Store-houſe gratis, as 'twas vſed
Sometime in Greece.
Men. Well, well, no more of that.
Cor. Though there the people had more abſolute power
I ſay they nourſ'd Diſſention, and ruin'd the ſtate.
Sic. Why ſhall the people giue
One that ſpeakes thus, their Voyce?
Cor. Ile giue my Reaſons,
More worthier than their Voyces. They know the Corne
Was not our recompence, reſting well before'd
They ne'r did ſeruice for't, being preſſed to the Warre,
Euen when the Nauell of the State was touch'd,
They would not thred the Gates. This kinde of Seruice
Did not deſerue Corne gratis. Being i'th Warre,
Their Mutinies and Reuolts, wherein they ſhew'd
Moſt Valour, ſpoke not for them. Th'Accuſation
Which they haue often made againſt the Senate,
All cauſe vnborne, could neuer be the Natiue
Of our ſo frank Donation. Well, what then?
How ſhall this Boſome multiplied, digeſt
The Senates Courteſie? Let deeds expreſſe
What's like to be their words, We did requeſt it,
We are the greater poze, and in true feare
They gaue vs our demands. Thus we debate
The Nature of our Seats, and make the Rabble
Call our Cares, feare. With the Power to do't
Breake open the Locks o'th Senate-houſe, and grope
The Crowes to peck the Eyes of our Auſpices
Men. Conſent—
Bru. Enough, with ouer meaſure.
Cor. No: take more.
What may be worſe than what is paſt, than what
Then compart doo's ſtand with Faction? Come,
Cor. Come, leaue your preface.
Men. Heare me ſpeake.
Bru. Well, ſay on.
Com. And keepe your hands off.
Cor. Hence rotten thing, or I ſhall ſhake thy bones
Out of thy Garments.
Sic. Heare you Citizens.
Enter a Meſſenger with the Aediles.
Men. On both ſides more reſpect.
Sic. Heere's he, that would take from you all your
Meſ. Stand faſt, Aediles,
All. Downe with him, downe with him.
2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons.
They all bustle about Coriolanus.
Tribunes, Patricians, Citizens what ho
Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, Citizens.
All. Peace, peace, peace: be quiet.
Men. What is about to be? I am out of Breath,
Confuſion's neere: I cannot ſpeake. You Tribunes
To th'people. Coriolanus patience: Speak good Sicinius.

Sen. [illegible] People peace
All. [illegible] peace speake, speake,
[illegible]
[illegible], Mar.,
[illegible],
Mar. [illegible], Coriolanus we will take, not to
[illegible].
Sen. I [illegible]
Sen. [illegible],
All. The People are [illegible]
Mar. By their owne [illegible], we were [illegible]
Peoples [illegible].
[illegible] Yes to [illegible]
Mene. And [illegible] to doe,
Com. [illegible] to be the Consent,
To [illegible] to [illegible],
A [illegible]
Escapes [illegible].
Sen. [illegible]
[illegible] Our [illegible]
Our [illegible],
[illegible],
[illegible]
Sen. [illegible]
Beare [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible].
All. Noble Tribunes heare.
Mar. I care no one word, 'beseech you Tribunes,
heare me but a word.
[illegible] Peace, peace
Mar. Be that you seeme truly your Countries friend,
And [illegible] to heed to what you would
Inuoke [illegible] redresse.
Sen. [illegible], [illegible] coll'd wayes,
That [illegible] [illegible] pes, are very poysonous,
[illegible] Disease [illegible]. Lay [illegible], on him,
[illegible] are [illegible] to the Rock. Corio. drawes his Sword
Corio. No, I'll die here
[illegible] come along you haue beheld me fighting,
Come [illegible] vpon your [illegible] what you haue [illegible].
Mene. Downe with that Sword, Tribunes withdraw awhile.
[illegible] Lay [illegible].
Mene. [illegible] [illegible] pray you that be noble, helpe
[illegible]
Au. [illegible], [illegible] with him. Exeunt
[illegible] Tribunes, People, Volsces, and the
[illegible]
[illegible] Our Home: be gone, away.
All [illegible].
[illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] as many friends as enemies.
[illegible]
Sen. I [illegible]
I pray [illegible] home to thy House,
I [illegible] to [illegible] Cause.
Mene. Come 'tis a Sore vpon vs,
You cannot Tent your selfe be gone, beseech you.
Com. Come Sir along with vs.
Mene. I would they were Barbarians as they are,
[illegible] Rome borne: not Romans, as they are not,
Though [illegible] Torch'th Capitoll
Before [illegible] your worthy Rage into your Tongue,
One time will owe another.
Corio. On faire ground, I could beat forty of them,
Mene. I could my selfe take vp a brace o'th' best of them, yea the two Tribunes.
Com. But now 'tis odds beyond Arithmetick,
And Manhood is cal'd Too ere we enter hands
Against a falling Fabrick. Will you hence,
Before the Tagge returne? whose Rage doth rend
Like interrupted Waters and ore-beare
What they are vs'd to beare
Mene. Pray you be gone
Ile [illegible] my selfe (if it be in request
With [illegible] that's [illegible] little. this must be patcht
With [illegible] of my Colour.
Com. Nay, come away. Exeunt Coriolanus and Cominius.
Patri. This man has marr'd his fortune.
Mene. His nature is too noble for the World:
He would not flatter Neptune for his Trident,
Or Ioue for's power to Thunder. His Heart's his Mouth:
What his Heart thinkes that's Tongue must vtter,
And [illegible] [illegible] that cure
Ile [illegible] the Name of Death. A Noise within.
Here's [illegible] worke,
Patri. I would they were a bed.
Mene. I would they were in Tyber
What the vengeance, could he not speake 'em fayre?
Enter Brutus and Sicinius with the rabble againe.
Sicin. Where's this Viper,
That would depopulate the city & be every mans selfe?
Mene. You worthy Tribunes.
Sicin. He shall be throwne downe the Tarpeian rock
With [illegible] of treason: he's [illegible] to Law
And therefore Law shall scorne him further trialls
Then the seuerity of the publike Power,
Which [illegible]
1 Cit. He shall well know the Noble Tribunes are
The [illegible], [illegible] and [illegible]
All. He shall, he shall.
Mene. Sir, Sir. Sicin. Peace.
Mene. Do not cry, hauocke, where you should but hunt
With modest warrant.
Sicin. Sir how comes it that you haue holpe
To make this rescue?
Mene. Heare me speake? As I do know
The Consull worthy deeds, to can I name his Faults.
Sicin. Consull? what Consull?
Mene. The Consull Coriolanus.
Brut. He Consull.
All. No, no no, no, no.
Mene. If by the Tribunes leaue,
And yours good people,
I may be heard, I would craue a word or two,
The which shall turne you to no further harme,
Then so much losse of time.
Sicin. Speake briefely then,
For we are peremptory to dispatch
This Viporous Traitor. to let him hence
Were but one danger, and to keepe him heere
Our certaine death: therefore it is decreed,
He dyes to night.
Mene. Now the good Gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome whose gratitude
Towards her deserued Children, is enroll'd
In Ioues owne Booke, like an vnnaturall Dam
Should now eate vp her owne

Sicin.

Sen. Nor a Limbe that will be cut away
Corio. Or a Limbe, that has but a Disease
Mortal, to cut it off, to cure it safe.
What is't Coriolanus must I doe, that is worthy death?
Telling our Romanes, their o're-charged Store
(Which daily does encrease) that he hath
By many an Ounce, he dropt it for his Country:
And what is't, to intreat his Countreys
Were to make Parties doubt, and popular
A foule dropt indifferently.
Sen. Thus to their Consuls
Brut. Marke you this
When he stands forth to speake his Country dear
Men. Pronounce the Consonant
Being once gone from hence, you shall then expect
Your Hatchets worke.
Brut. Well, I pray you come:
Put him to choller straight, when he is mov'd,
Let him be sure to lose all regard
Of what he has done before, and after Speake what
Men. One word more one word
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harme of unscan'd swiftnesse, will (too late)
Tye Leaden pounders to his heeles, Proue to you Tiscelle,
Least (prou'd fashion) breake our
And sticke i'th' wombe of Rashnesse.
Enter 2 Officers.
Sicin. Well, on to the
Were you not sent for?
Offi. Yes, all is done
Sicin. Consider this he has been bred i'th' Warres
Since he could draw a Sword, and is ill school'd
In bolted Language, Meale and Bran together
He throwes without distinction, Give me leave,
I shall go with you to the Capitoll,
And carefully speake to him in peace,
When he shall come: and to my Motion shall fine
Our people to his utmost perill.
Offi. Noble Tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will proue as fire, and all be done in hast,
Which though well fortified is not safe,
Nor true Tribunes be not too rash Obedient Officers,
But one that patiently and Mildly
Master-like downe your worthy passions,
Sen. Good Officers,
Offi. Meet on the Market-place: we'll attend you there
Where if you bring not Marcius we'll proceede
In our first way.
Men. Ile bring him to you.
Let me desire your company: he must come,
Or what is worth in't, were gone.
Sen. Pray you let's to him. Exeunt Omnes
Enter Coriolanus and Nobles.
Corio. Let them pull all about mine eares, present me
Death on the Wheele or at wilde Horses heeles,
Or pile ten hils on the Tarpeian Rocke
That the precipitation might downe stretch
Below the beame of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them.
Enter a Patrician.
Patri. You do the Nature.
Corio. Then I thanke you Mother
Do's my Brother Marcius?
Patri. He will (me thinkes) be mad.
To day at your Mothers Vrbanity was invited
By Volumnia, Cominius, Titus Lartius, and many more Captaines
And whether Warre, or Confusion,
Or rapine, or the desire of Mischiefe, or Mischance,
Which Warres drawes with him: Since the Earth o'th' Romanes
Hath not in three hundred yeares digested
Things worthy of Memorie, such as he
Hath done alone, he's made sole Monarch.
Corio. How! himself alone
To doe Romane? I must go shame him:
Where is he, where is he?
Patri. I'de not speake with him till after dinner.
Corio. Not speake with him?
Patri. You are too impatient to speake with him
Now he is in the vaine of Praising himselfe.
Corio. Of his owne Body?
Patri. I could not come neere him.
Corio. And he is mad indeed,
If he do require our eares, without our eyes.
Patri. Of his owne Body Caius, I do speake.
Corio. I know you well sir, and you know me:
Your Name my friend, we use to say, is worthier
Then ever your Lookes are fine to me.
Patri. You have put me now to such a part which never
I shall discharge to the life.
Corio. Come, come, we know you well enough.
You have been too rough, something too rough
You must return and mend it.
Patri. There's no remedy,
Unlesse by not so doing, our good City
Cleave in the midst, and perish.
Volum. Pray be counsell'd,
I have a heart as little apt as yours
But yet a braine, that leades my use of Anger
To better vantage.
Patri. Well said, Noble woman:
Before he should thus stoope to the heart, but that
The violent fit o'th' time craues it as Physicke
For the whole State, I would put mine Armour on,
Which I can scarcely beare.
Corio. What must I do?
Patri. Returne to the Tribunes.
Corio. Well, what then, what then?
Patri. Repent what you have spoke
Corio. For them, I cannot do it to the Gods,
Must I then do't to them?
Volum. You are too absolute,
Though therein you can never be too Noble,
But when extremities speake. I have heard you say,
Honest and Wise, is the best Mixture,
I pronounce to thee, when power to flatter
Bids to seeke Grace: In this mistaking me
Thy honor and my Person
Corio. What should I say?
Patri. A good demand.
Volum. If it Honor your Wrath, to seeme
The same you are not, which for your best ends
You adopt your policy. How is it lesse or worse
That it shall hold Companionship with Peace
With honor, as in War, since that to both
It stands in like request?
Corio. Why force you this?
Volum. Because that now
Now he is not ready to speake to the people:
Now, you have left your Honours on, which matter
Was not your Recommendation to them: you
Are not accustom'd to your Tongue,
Which best Boyes, and Girles
Or Infants of a Tongue, your truth
Now is not to dissemble, was your word
Now you have not to unlearne what you have
Then unknowne to the Beggerly Duty, and
Thus shall become a Masker.
For it is Boy-hood without Nature, where
My Honor and my Friends at stake, requir'd
I should do so in Honor. I am in this

Your Wife, your Sonne, These Senators, the Nobles,
And you, will rather shew our generall Lowts,
How we doe prize your loue, and pity you,
Then leaue our Countrey, and respect for feare,
Or what is else more strange.
Menen. Nay Noble Lord,
Come go with vs, speake to the people as beseemes you, I pray you,
Your Country in this dangerous time doth need you,
Do not cast off (like an vnnaturall Sonne)
Volum. I pray thee peace,
Goe to the Senate house (I know she cannot choose but yeeld,
And I am strange and vnable to resist her when she weepes)
This boy that cannot tell what he would haue but meerely,
A thing of custome, 'tis no meere regard to honour or
Meere care of what is comely for the time,
Nor dares reply to whether yea or no
But by the suggestion and authority
Of what the Gentry doth call profitable,
Nor cares vpon what termes we take it, whether Obedience, Feare, Loue, Hate, Custome, Nature,
Or what flat Seconds else will lead you on,
Do you suppose (as he that is a Beast would do)
I would put mine Armour on against the Hare,
Leape the Sea Billowes after Wash'd Fowle, or Conclude my Passe by the Amazes of Nice Maidens?
Menen. But this is not the common way to Court you,
Volum. Should I say Sir I thought you lou'd the people,
Whose loue I cannot seeke but basely, nor
The Suffrage of the Voice lowdly begg'd me
Giue you my Honours with a holy Voyce,
I should be counted humble, I repeate
Reports that indirectly fall on me,
And call them my Deeds that neuer tainted me,
Corio. Ile leaue you Sir, pray you stay by vs,
Do not resort to this vnleaded course
While we are suiting, rest you in our absence Good Sir,
And tell me of your Sonne, what his disposition,
How his affects his Mother, what his Honour,
Volum. He has a Lion's Nature, does require
Calme handling, which he will hardly beare,
Corio. Is he growne vp to be so rough, rash, and
Not fit to vse himselfe?
Volum. At twelue yeare old,
To his Mothers mind,
One of the Coursers of the Sun is not
When he did stand for Consull, which he lost
By lacke of Patience: Giue your voices for him,
Perswade the people to it, for my part
I'le leaue you to your selues.
Corio. Do as we may Sir, and blessings
Goe with you beauteous Mother.
Volum. Honest Wife, farewell.
Exit Volumnia.
Corio. Away the Tribunes do attend you, arme your selues
To answer mildly, for they are prepar'd
With Accusations, as I heare more strong
Then are vpon you yet.
Corio. The worst is Death, I dearely pray you let vs go,
Let them accuse me by inuention, I
Will answer in mine Honour.
Menen. I but mildly,
Corio. Well mildly be it then, Mildly. Exeunt

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannicall power: if he euade vs there,
Inforce him with his enuy to the people,
And that the Spoile got on the Antiats
Was ne're distributed. What, will he come?

Enter an Edile.

Edile. He's coming.
Bru. How accompanied?
Edile. With old Menenius, and those Senators
That always favour'd him.
Sicin. Haue you collected them by Tribes?
Edile. I haue,
Sicin. Assemble presently the people hither:
And when they heare me say it shall be so,
I' th' right and strength o' th' Commons be it either
For death, for fine or Banishment, then let them
If I say fine cry fine, if Death, cry Death,
Insisting on the olde prerogative
And power i' th' Truth o' th' Cause.
Bru. I shall informe them
Sicin. And when such time they haue begun to cry,
Let them not cease but with a noise confus'd
Inforce the present Execution
Of what we chance to Sentence.
Edile. Very well.
Sicin. Make them be strong and ready for this hint
When we shall hap to giue't them
Bru. Go about it,
Put him to Choler straight, he hath been vs'd
Ever to conquer, and to haue his worth
Of contradiction, Being once chaft, he cannot
Be rein'd againe to Temperance then he speakes

W

What's in his heart, and that is there which lookes
With vs to breake his neck.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, and Comin-
nius, with others.

Sen. Well, heere he comes.
Mene. Calmely, I do beseech you.
Corio. I, as an Hostler, that for th'poorest piece
Will beare the knaue by'th Volume.
Th'honor'd Gods
keepe Rome in this visage
Sup'd with worse meat then they came to eate
Through the Bodies of my Country peace
And make them drunke with Warre
1 Sen. Amen, Amen.
Mene. A Noble wish.

Enter the Plebeians.

Sicin. Draw neere ye people
Edile. List to your Tribunes Audience:
Peace I say.
Corio. First heare me speake.
Both Tri. Well: say: Peace hoe
Corio. Shall I be charg'd no further then this present?
Must all determine heere?
Sicin. I do demand,
If you submit you to the peoples voices,
Allow their Officers, and are content
To suffer Lawes that drop on fit such facts
As shall be prou'd vpon you.
Corio. I am Content.
Mene. Lo Citizens he sayes he is Content.
The warlike service he has done, consider: Thinke
Vpon the wounds his body beares, which shew
Like Graues i'th holy Churchyard.
Corio. Scratches with Briers, scarres to moue
Laughter only
Mene. Consider further
That when he speakes not like a Citizen,
You finde him like a Soldier: Do not take
His rougher Actions for malicious sounds
Stir'd as I say, such as become a Souldier,
Rather to see, then heare you.
Com. Well, well no more.
Corio. What is the matter,
That being past for Consull with full voyce:
I am so dishonor'd, that the very hower
You take it off againe.
Sicin. Answer to vs
Corio. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so.
Sicin. We charge you that you have contriu'd to take
From Rome (all season of) her Power, her Liberty,
Your ready to (in spight of) Warre, subuert
Her Friends, and Patricians to the people
Corio. Contriu'd? I do not:
Mene. Note how much (else) he serues you,
Corio. Hang 'em: I would the people were in Arms,
Could make a Gantlet of them: Were Number
Can'd as our Wrongs: I would my Horse drew Ploughs
And our Vineyards
Euen as the Clouds.
Sicin. Make your selues (else)
All. To Rocke to Rocke to dismember him.
Sicin. Peace.
We need not put new matter to his charge
What you haue seene him do and heard him speake,
Beating your Officers casting your selues,
Opposing Lawes with Strokes, and heere defying
Those whose great power must try him.
Euen this so great, and with such contempt made
Decrees of extreamest kind.
Bru. But since he hath
Seru'd well for Rome.
Corio. What do you prate of Seruice.
Bru. I talke of that that know it
Corio. You?
Mene. Is this the Promise that you made your mother.
Com. Know, I pray you.
Corio. I know no further:
Let them pronounce the steepe Tarpean death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a rotten death, how euer, drop
Their mercies, where I feele I feare,
Nor Checke, when Calmenesse, or care, or Custome,
To cast a Good morrow.
Sicin. Here's to much
As much as possible, from me to you
I charge you (in the people) lack of time
Your power, as now at hand,
Your ready hate (taking) of meanes
Your Enemies with nodding of their Plumes
Fall on vs now. Heere (before the people)
To banish you: Heere (in the view of Rome)
Your (aged) Senate (vnskilfull) as vnlearned
Make loose their graue Decrees: Heere in your Nation
Let womanish (and) childish (Clamour) scaring
For ouer the Cat. This I say, my backe,
There is a World elsewhere.

Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, with others.

Two Aed. and three or foure Cap.

Edile

[illegible] Tarpeian [illegible] gone [illegible]
[illegible] Hoo [illegible]
Sicin. [illegible] whom
[illegible]
[illegible]
All. Come, come, peace.
1. Off. I doe perceiue. Note [illegible] come. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Corio. and Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius, with the Young Nobility of Rome.

Corio. Come leaue your teares a briefe farwe: the beaſt
With many heads butts me away. Nay Mother,
Where is your ancient Courage? You were vſed
To [illegible] ſtreame as ſwift as ſprings,
Feare common cataracts. Cominius, beare,
That when the [illegible] done, like him
[illegible] Mother ſtoop to louing, for her powres,
Where I haue tooke me by a gentle wounded, craues
A Noble cunning. You were vſed to ſay
Extremity was the trier of ſpirits,
That common chances common men could beare,
That when the ſea was calme all boates alike
Shew'd Maſterſhip in floating, fortune's powres,
When moſt ſtruck home, being gentle wounded, craues
A Noble cunning. You were vſed to load me
With Precepts that would make inuincible
The heart that conn'd them.
Virg. O heauens! heauens!
Corio. Nay I prythee woman.
Volum. Now the Red Peſtilence ſtrike all Trades in Rome,
And occupations perish,
Corio. What what what?
I ſhall be of thee anon'd Mother,
Repeale as ſpeedily as euer they
[illegible] Loues,
[illegible] Yong Martius,
Dost preſent, [illegible] my Mother,
[illegible] Menenius,
[illegible] Mayſt [illegible] Generall,
[illegible] Nay [illegible]
[illegible] Hearts, [illegible] women,
[illegible]
And [illegible] My Mother, you wot well
My [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Makes [illegible] your Sonne
[illegible] be caught
With [illegible] practice.
Volum. My [illegible]
Whether will thee? Hence take goe. Cominius
Wilt thee away? Dare [illegible] ſome ſcuttle
Meete the [illegible] to eate a ſtone
That [illegible]
Corio. O ſtrange!
Come [illegible] Mother, deare with thee
Where [illegible] Friends, [illegible] may feare of vs,
[illegible] Voices ſhall not [illegible]
A [illegible] Repeale, with [illegible]
Ore the vaſt world, to ſeeke a ſingle man,
And [illegible] doth euer come
[illegible]
Corio. [illegible]
Thou art [illegible] and thou art too full
Of the warres ſurfers, to go rouſe with one
That's ſet on to bid [illegible] at Troians gate,
Come my ſweet wife, my deereſt Mother, and
My [illegible] of Noble touch: when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and ſmile. I pray you come:
While I remaine aboue the ground you ſhall
Heare from me ſtill and neuer of me ought
But what is like me formerly.
Menen. That's worthily
As any eare can heare. Come, let's not weepe.
If I could ſhake off but one ſeuen yeeres
From [illegible] armes and legges, by the good Gods
I'ld with thee, euery foot
Corio. Giue me thy hand: come Exeunt

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius and Brutus, with the Edile.

Sicin. Bid them all home, he's gone & we'l no further.
The Nobility are vexed, whom we ſee haue ſided
In his behalfe
Brut. Now we haue ſhewne our powers,
Let vs ſeeme humbled as the waters is done,
And ſhew no ſigne of feare.
Sicin. Bid them home: ſay their great enemy is gone,
And they ſtand in their ancient ſtrength.
Brut. Diſmiſſe them home. Here comes his Mother.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Menenius

Sicin. Let's not meete her.
Brut. Why?
Sicin. They ſay ſhe's mad.
Brut. They haue tane note of vs. Keepe on your way
Volum. O y'are well met:
The [illegible] requit your loue.
Men. Peace, peace we are not to loud
Volum. I that could haue wept up, you ſhould heare,
Nay and out-ſhall [illegible] reaſon: Will you [illegible]?
Sicin. Nay, but they tax you I would I had the power
To ſay ſo to my Bonds
Sicin. Are you mans [illegible]?
Volum. I [illegible] that a Name. Note but this Foole,
Was a man my Boy ere I had thus Foold you?
To banish him that ſtrooke more blowes for Rome
Then [illegible] ſpoken words.
Sicin. O bleſſed Heauens!
Volum. More Noble blowes, then euer wiſe words.
And for Rome good. I'le tell thee what yet goe.
Nay but [illegible] ſtay too: I would my Sonne
Were as Aranſas, as ſtrong as yonder Tribe before vm,
His good Sword in his hand.
Sicin. What then?
Virg. What then? he'ld make an end of thy poſterity
Volum. Baſtards and all.
Good man, the Wounds that he does beare for Rome!
Menen. Come, come peace

tio. Heere's [illegible] you a-foot. Come.
Corio. [illegible] him.
1 [illegible]
2 A[illegible] [illegible]
3 [illegible]
Corio. [illegible] Canopy.
3 Vnder the Canopy?
Corio.
3 [illegible]
Corio. [illegible]
3 [illegible] Comes? Worse and worse,
[illegible]
Corio. No, I'le not by Mafter
[illegible] Do's he meddle with
Corio. [illegible] meddle with
th[illegible] [illegible]
[illegible]
Corio. [illegible]
Auf. [illegible]
2 [illegible] like a dogge, but for
[illegible] Lords sweet.
Auf. [illegible] Where's your name?
[illegible]
Corio. A name vnknowne to the Volcians ears,
And scarfe to found at home.
Auf. Say what's your name?
Thou art a Grim-aspected thing, and thy face
Beares a Command in't: though thy Tackle's torne,
Thou shew'st a Noble Vessell. What's your name?
Corio. Prepare thy brow to frowne: know'st me yet?
Auf. I know thee not: thy Name?
Corio. My name is Caius Martius, who hath done
To thee particularly, and to all the Volces
Great hurt and Mischiefe: thereto witnesse may
My Surname [illegible] I got for service,
[illegible]
[illegible]
And [illegible] because
[illegible] only that name remains.
The Cruelty and [illegible]
Perswaded my ouerthrow: Mortall Steele, who
Haue [illegible]
And [illegible]
Hath [illegible] out of Rome. Now this extremity,
[illegible] Hope
[illegible]
I [illegible]
I [illegible]
I [illegible]
Stand I for fire? Heere I remaine: and at
Vnlesse [illegible]
I [illegible] and stop those maimes
[illegible]
And [illegible]
I [illegible]
As [illegible]
And [illegible]
[illegible]
I [illegible]

I'le answer thee in a word, I alfo am
Longer to liue most weary, and present
My throat to thee, and to thy Ancient Malice:
Which not to cut, would shew thee but a foole,
Since I haue euer followed thee with hate,
Drawne Tuners of Blood out of thy Countries breft,
And cannot liue but to thy shame, vnleffe
It be to do thee seruice.
Auf. O Martius, Martius;
Each word thou hast spoke, hath weeded from my heart
A roote of Ancient Enuy. If Iupiter
Should from yond cloud speake diuine things,
And say 'tis true, I'de not believe them more
Then thee all Noble Martius. Let me twine
Mine armes about that body, where against
My grained Ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scarr'd the Moone with splinters: heere I clep
The Anuile of my Sword, and do contest
As hotly and as Nobly with thy Loue,
As euer in Ambitious strength, I did
Contend against thy Valour. Know thou first,
I lou'd the Maid I married: neuer man
[illegible] I [illegible] heere
I [illegible] more dances my rapt heart,
I [illegible] the wedge Mallet faw
[illegible] Fireside. Worthy Mars! stay from thee,
[illegible] Power on foote: and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy Target from thy Brawne,
Or lose mine Arme for't. Thou hast beate me out
Twelue seuerall times, and I haue nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thy selfe and me:
We haue been downe together in my sleepe,
Vnbuckling Helmes, fisting each others Throat,
And wak'd halfe dead with nothing. Worthy Martius,
Had we no other quarrell else to Rome, but that
Thou art there banisht, we would muster all
From twelue, to twelue, and pouring Warre
Into the bowels of vngratefull Rome,
Like a bold Flood-beate downe, and come vpon,
And catch our Friendly Senators by the hands
Who now are heere, taxing the Romanes of vice
We are prepar'd. Yet for the loue of Rome,
[illegible]
Corio. [illegible]
Auf. [illegible] Sir, if thou wilt haue
The leading of thine owne Reuenges, take
The Ore'me of my Command: hand't downe
As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'ſt
Thy Countries strength and weakneſſe, thine own ways
Whether to knocke against the Gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fire their Pride, ere it dotray. For come on,
I [illegible] come of thee it, to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes,
And more a Friend then ere an Enemie,
Yet Martius that was much. Your hand most welcome.
Exeunt

Enter two of the Seruingmen.

1 Heere's a strange alteration?
2 By my hand, I had thought to haue strooken him with a Cudgell, and yet my mind gaue me, his clothes made a falſe report of him.
1 What an Arme he has, he turn'd me about with his finger and his thumbe, as one would set vp a Top.
2 Nay, I know by his face that there was ſome-thing in him. He had, I know not what face me thought, I cannot tell cell how to terme it.

1 He did so,looking as it were, would I were hang'd but I thought there was more in him,then I could think

2 So did I,I'le be sworne: He is simply the rarest man i'th' world.

1 I think he is: but a greater Soulder then he, You wot one

2 Who,my Master?

1 Nay,it's no matter for that.

2 Worth a fix on him.

1 Nay not so neither: but I take him to be the greater Souldeir

2 Faith look'e you,one cannot tell how to say that for the Defence of a Towne,our Generall is excellent.

1 I,and for an assault too

Enter the third Commoner.

3 O Sirs,Sirs,I can tell you Newes: Newes you Rascals

Both. What,what,what? Let's partake

3 I would not be a Roman of all Nations; I had as lief be a condemn'd man.

Both Wherefore? Wherefore?

3 Why here's he that was wont to thwacke our Generall, Caius Martius.

1 Why do you say thwacke our Generall?

3 I do not say thwacke our Generall, but he was always good enough for him.

2 Come we are fellowes and friends: he was ever too hard for him, I have heard him say so himselfe.

1 He was too hard for him directly,to say the Troth on't: before Corioles, he scotcht him and notcht him like a Carbinado.

2 An the'had been Cannibally given, he might have boyl'd and eaten him too.

1 But more of thy Newes

3 Why he is so made on here within, as if he were Son and Heire to Mars, set at every Posterne Gate: No question asked him by any of the Senators, but they stand bare before him. Our Generall himselfe makes a Mechanicke Tongue of him, Speakes in the Phrases of his Profession, leanes his Body through them in the view of the Commons: Describes all the Battailes to them, and the Enemy: Wounds and scarres, Receyved in Martius Gallia warre, before our Citie of Corioles: Bids the Senate reward his Deeds with doing them, and is ever more inclining to the Commons Request, then granting of it.

1 Faith I saw him prance it in the Market place, and on his Targe bestuck with many Oken Garlands.

2 Ay that he did, and receyved Scarres: It's reported he has at home, a Grandfather before him, and his Ancestors before him, and his Gods before them, with a Shield like a Hearth-cover, his Children are like Caskets, to hold his Actions, and the Count-Cup of his Predecessors.

3 Why so: you have found him now.

2 Faith we have: and yet we speake not treason.

1 Who will,before the Tribunes heare us.

2 Nay,and the Senate too,standing within hearing.

1 Yes,and the Tarpeian Rocke too.

3 Why,you are deceyved still: I'le tell you what Sir Sooth-sayer: I warrant you,when the Tribunes and the Rabblement have pronounced against him their Censure, his Crimes laid to his Charge,and the People ready to take him,and drag him to the Rocke: Shall I tell you what he will doe?

1 Marry shall we sir.

3 He'le turne Vengeance to his Heeles,and stand upon his Patience: Pocket up Iniuries: Keepe on his Course,and lastly,for the Benefit of the People,whom he hath exasperately stirr'd against him,doe grow Gracious,Milde,Affable,Tractable,Honest,Iust,and Immaculate in Carriage,as ever he was Proud,Scornefull,Wilfull,Slow,Vnaffable,or Malicious.

2 And affect Martius carried it so?

3 Who Martius?

2 Who? why he.

3 A Carbuncled face to him: I cannot tell how to terme it.

2 He did so,looking as it were, would I were hang'd but I thought there was more in him,then I could think.

3 So did I,I'le be sworne: He is simply the rarest man i'th' world.

1 I think he is: but a greater Souldier then he, You wot one

And neuer left off, till he left crying. Manet
Iun. Come, what talke you of Martius
Bru. Goes to full Hall, you shall not, I cannot be,
The Voices of the Common people.
Iun. Cannot be?
Bru. Cannot be?
A Noise they had (but very well meant)
Against the Noble Martius, whom to appease
With all their Art, but rest assur'd to day now
But ever in your way, without distraction,
And watch the Market-place, where now we stand
Lest parts be breed
Sic. Let me alone, I know this cannot be.
Bru. Now the fire burne
Enter a Messenger.
Mef. The Nobles in great earnestnesse are going
All to the Senate-house: some newes is coming
That turnes their Countenances
Sicin. 'Tis this Slaue
Go whip him 'fore the peoples eyes: His raising,
Nothing but his report
Mef. Yes worthy Sir,
The Slaue's report is seconded, and more
More fearfull is deliuered
Sicin. What more fearfull?
Mef. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Martius
Ioyn'd with Auffidius leads a power 'gainst Rome,
And vowes Reuenge as spacious, as betweene
The Youthfull Summer,
Sicin. Well, well, no more.
Mef. What is the matter,
That being past for Consull with full voice,
More then wish we our Friends, come in a minute
Empty at his hands?
Mef. He has no equall.
Sicin. When we hold so, so does the people, and
He's the more dangerous.
Mef. Naming his Actions
Done in our Fathers time, strooke all that heare him
Dumbe, and still the Musicke of his Prayse
Did runne (like Morning Hymnes) on many lips,
And in his Armes bore all before him.
Sicin. Speake quickly
Mef. I have done, as you haue all the loue to fortune.
Sicin. Was he not Consull last yeare?
Mef. He was.
Sicin. Not chosen since, sith then his Actions were Greater, not lesse: Nay let vs feare the worst
Touching his Conscience.
Enter 3. Messengers.
Mef. You are sent for to the Senate:
A fearefull Army, led by Caius Martius,
Associated with Auffidius, Rages
Vpon our Territories, and have already
The Ports (the Tribunes) and the rabble should
Haue first encountred him.
Enter Cominius.
Com. Go you home, I pray you well,
Mene. What newes? What newes?
Com. You have holpe to ransome your owne daughters &
Now the redeem'd, your Knees are now (your Teeth
To see your Wiues dishonour do not worke
Mene. Why? Where? Where's the newes?
Com. You have holpe to ransome your owne daughters, and Now the redeem'd, your Knees are now (your Teeth
Into an hungry fire are
Mene. Pray now, your Newes
You have made fine worke I feare me: pray your newes,
If Hannibal be voyced with Volcans.
Com. 'Tis as neere as God I beleeue it them: like a thing
Made of Copper. Your Day then Seruice,
Your Steeples, Temples, and the Beetter, and they to whom
Your Barnes, Granaries, Summer Boxes-flies,
Your Cradles, Beds, Childes Coates,
Mene. You have made good worke,
You and your Apron-men: you that stood so much
Vpon the voyce of occupation, and

The breath of Garlicke eaters
Com. Heere, take your Rome about your eares
Mene. As Coriolus and Caius Martius will
You have made faire worke.
Bru. But is this true, Sir?
Com. I, and you'll looke pale
Before you find it other. All the Regions
Do smile at Rome, and the Plebeians
Are mad for valiant Ignorance,
And a most constant Penne, who can blame him?
Your Enemies and his, finde something in him.
Mene. We are all vndone, and there
The Noble man saue mercy.
Com. Who shall aske it?
The Tribunes cannot hoot for shame: the people
Deserue such pity of him, as the Wolfe
Does of the Shepheards. For his best Friends, if they Should say be good to Rome, they charg'd him euen
As those should do that had deseru'd his hate,
And therein shew'd like Enemies.
Mene. 'Tis true: if 'twere put to my house, the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say beseech you cease. You have made faire hands,
You and your Crafts, you have crafted faire.
Com. You have brought
A Trembling vpon Rome, such as was neuer
S'incapable of helpe.
Tri. Say not, we brought it.
Mene. How? Was't we? We lou'd him,
But like Beasts, and Cowardly Nobles,
Gaue way vnto your Clusters, who did hoote
Him out o'th' City.
Com. But I feare
They'll roare him in againe. Tullus Auffidius,
The second name of men, obeyes his points
As if he were his Officer. Desperation,
Is all the Policy, Strength and Defence
That Rome can make against them.
Enter a troupe of Citizens.
Mene. Heere come the Clusters.
And Auffidius with him? You are they
That made the Aire vnwholsome, when you cast
Your stinking greasie Caps in hooting
At Coriolanus Exile. Now he's coming,
And not a hair vpon a Son of yours
Worth a hair off: proue a whip. As many Coxcombes
As you threw Caps vp, will he tumble downe,
And pay you for your voyces. 'Tis no matter,
If he could burne vs all into one coale,
We have deseru'd it.
Omnes. Faith, we heare fearfull Newes.
1 Cit. For mine owne part,
When I said, banish him, I said 'twas pity.
2 Cit. And so did I.
3 Cit. And so did I: and to say the truth, so did very many of vs: that we did we did for the best, and though we willingly consented to his Banishment, yet it was against our will.
Com. Y'are goodly things you Voyces.
Mene. You have made good worke
You and your cry. Shall's to the Capitoll?
Com. O I, what else? Exeunt both
Sicin. Go Masters get you home, be not dismaid,
These are a Side, that would be glad to haue
This true which they so seeme to feare. Go home,
And shew no signe of Feare

1 Cit. The Gods be good to vs. Come Masters let's home, I euer held we were i'th wrong, when we banish'd him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home. Exit Cit.

Bru. I do not like this Newes.

Sicin. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol. would halfe my wealth Would buy this for a lie.

Sicin. Pray let's go. Exeunt Tribunes.

Enter Aufidius with his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Romanes?

Lieu. I do not know what Witchcraft's in him, but Your Soldiers vse him as the Grace fore meate Their talke at Table, and their Thankes at end, And you are darkned in this action Sir, Euen by your owne.

Auf. I cannot helpe it now, Vnlesse by not so doing, our good City Cleaue in the midst, and perish. Yet I wish me, Mine honor had not so forestalled me, To haue done what I haue: since I see fortune By my hauing done it, hath been to me a Rebell. But let vs Nature Inthat's no Changeling: and I must excuse What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish Sir, (I meane for your particular) you had not Ioyn'd in Commission with him: but either haue borne The action of your selfe, or else to him had left it solely.

Auf. I vnderstand thee well, and be thou sure When he shall come to his account, he knowes not What I can vrge against him, although it seemes And so he thinkes, and is no lesse apparant To th'vulgar eye, that he bestirs him, and Wins so with ease, that hence his memory May haply be put downe, as I am. And turning his Good to make it Euill, he stirres vp a Coriolan (worse than hee) to hold Like Power as he doth, against Rome, and her Confederate Armes, gathered in their Masses, As Draw-sword Tribunes, that with the fall of their Ambition, come Falling in Rome, A Noble Wife he has, that Rome esteemes As highly as his Mother, down to th'graue In simple and low Level. To one Woman, Now the third yeere, since there is growne in him Much Pride, much Hope, much Businesse, and I thinke, That shortly he will be poyz'd with Loue enough, To ouer-top it selfe.

Lieu. Oh Noble Sir, Your kindnesse, and your Loue to my Reputation Makes you to question me: Before I came, I left my Name among the Volces, vpon Which, great as it is now, I got it mine owne, And I was the first man that euer broke the Head Of Rome. Euen as the Horse, the Asse, and the Oxe Haue their graine cut, and their Flesh wounded, So I, to proue mine honor, and to take Some part of your great Power, how I did duty Deepe scarres I beare, and am glad to shew them, In hope by them my Seruices to you Are quite forgot.

Auf. Be that thy Head, my Soldier, As it hath Rooted him out of Rome: Giue me thy hand, Come. Know thou first, I loued the Maid I married: Neuer man Sighed truer breath. But that I see thee here, Thou noble thing, more dances my rapt heart, Than when I first my Wedded Mistris saw Bestride my Threshold. Why thou Mars I tell thee, We haue a power on foot, and I had purpose Once more to hew thy Target from thy brawne, Or lose mine Arme for't: Rome haue I sworne to poure Into mine Enemies. Looke, there I stand, Neere to my Heart, as euer: Tell me freely, If Marcius ought Enter'd thy Gentle bosome? Speake thy Thoughts, As thy Opinion bids me trust thee, Say Boldly how hatefully he did Braue me, And what his Followers vrg'd to taxe and staine Their Country's Patience. Speake to me, I pray you, For I am loth to beate those Names to you, that Sometime I haue thought worthy. Know you more? To what passe Hath he displeas'd the Body of the State, Factions among the Nobles, Hate at home, Hot Enuy against the Tribunes, Beside the generall Component, Discontents, Fell it in generall, or in part, that we May haply more with our needfull Seruices, And first with Powder, to inflame their Minds Right to be hot.

Lieu. You do demand me, Worthy Sir, Against my Manners. Yet since I see you Put forth your Armes, and finde you Sword in Hand, Vnskilfull Lookers on, this comfort take, Your Banish'd Heart liues yet, and with the Volces Is more belou'd than euer. Who does feare His Country's Ruine, makes it his Warre, and Enuies Fortune Traitorously. Yet Sir, Your Person I saw not, but your Fame, in Rome, And what my Obseruance, Out of Act, and Power Could make me to discouer, that I did. Your Name, Both of the Warre and Peace, stood high in Fame, Euen to the Enuy of the Proudest. Hence It was, that I did seeke Occasion, Either to lay Hold of you, or make my Selfe Good with this Morsell.

Auf. Let it be so: What City Banish'd him?

Lieu. Rome.

Auf. Then thou shalt be his Graue. Against A Citty we both haue sworne Reuenge, And scarcely will this Hand purge my Oath, Without the Sworder. But your Countenance, Alas, I know not how, may fall me, As I weigh The Grandnesse of your Iniuries. Hide it from me, And let me vse thee freely. Beleeue me, Thy Valour, and my Spirit, honors thee More than a Stranger. If my Sonne were my Husband, I should freelier rejoyce in that Absence Wherein he won Honor, than in the Embracements Of his Bed, where he would show most Loue. Welcome: How many Horse Darst thou lead? Do't secretly, And make the Best you can.

Lieu. Sir, I can make My Company, to the Number you haue.

Auf. Let's haue your Hand. Come: Now your Foot Captaine, I am proud to say, that my Voice is Potent, My Power great, my Hope Constant. Our Enemies Shrug at the Rome-Rebell, and they feare him, As Beasts of Rage their Hunter. Come, Lead on.

Lieu. Would you had Conquer'd the Romans before You were surpriz'd by him: for I feare me, After this Businesse, You do not liue Well Friends long.

Auf. I know it, I know it, And feare not: Till he be dead, or I, Our Liues are Brothers. Lead on. I haue Forgot my Part, and I must Recompence.

Lieu. Your Wife, and Children.

Auf. Let vs make Hast, Come, Feare not our Ladies. Whose Name I am going to Destroy, is by his Mother call'd Deere Mars: Hath not that Charge and Priuiledge in Warre. Come, Let's away. While Volces Rome is thine, Thou art poore'st of all, then shortly art thou mine. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, the two Tribunes, with others.

Menen. No, I'll not go, you heare what he hath said Which was sometime his Generall, who grew thus In his displeasure. Sir, I conjure by Hecuba that she Loues you much, Speake to me as I request you, As things done of Loue. Whilest I remember Her Husband, your Sonne did so, for whose Loue, I pray you Heare me speake.

Corio. You haue (deere Sir) Made me forget a Mother's part, in that You haue not done a Wife's. Therefore first To her I do commit you.

Cor. Deere Lady, In mine Honor, not to grant any thing I am a Friend to Rome, after the which I will not hearken anything. Pray you Stay not, But instantly repaire the Haste I speake with Could not consist with Labouring to Perswade.

Volum. See, we haue done, And with our Language haue Inclin'd him to Your Fury.

Sicin. Yet Hearke.

Brut. And to Purpose. Yet Spare your Threats: 'Fore Rome he shall Plead his Iust Cause, how are you prepar'd To answer him?

Corio. Do not you so, Tell them this: It is the Part of Children to Feare the Displeasure of their Parents. Why (Vntill the Heauens Do their Part) should you feare? Are you Condemn'd? Haue you Lands, Limbes, Liues, Bodies, and Children, Friends, Name, Freedome, and Heauen, To lose by him?

Volum. My Deere Sonne, Do not Haue Thirsts, and Hunger for our Bowels. Perish Rome, Before thy Mother, Wife, and Child, Shall Satiate, and bluntly Destroy Poore Hearts, and Entrailes. Thou shalt Warre Then, Vpon thy Mother, whose Wombe Bore thee, On Children, whose Wishes Rais'd thee, Whose Loue Hath Made thee Fortunate. Before we Suffer Vnder our Enemies, we will Suffer Rome To Ruine vnder thee. Thou shalt Warre well For Rome, Before we Fall before Rome. Thou shalt Warre Well For Rome, Before we Fall before Rome. Thou shalt Warre Well For Rome, Before we Fall before Rome. Thou shalt Warre

He was not taken well, he had not din'd,
The Veines vnbak'd our blood is cold, and then
We powre vpon the Morning, are apt
To giue or to forgiue, but when we haue ſtuft
Theſe Pipes, and theſe Conueyances of our blood
With Wine and Feeding, we haue ſuppers, Seruices
Then what is our Emploiment, therefore hee waites them
Faire and conuenient to my requeſt,
And therein to the vpon him.

Cor. You know the very rode into his kindneſſe,
And cannot lose your way.

Mene. Good faith Ile proue him,
Speed how it will. I ſhall ere long, haue knowledge
Of my ſucceſſe. Exit.

Com. Hee's neuer caught of him.

Scri. Nor

Com. Hee doubtleſſe does it as high as eye,
Red as 'twou'd burne Rome: and his Iniury
The Gaoler to his pitty. I kneel before him,
'Twas very faintly he ſaid Rome, that he would do
Hee ſent in writing after me: what he would not,
Bound with an Oath to yeeld to his conditions:
So that all hope is vaine, vnleſſe his Noble Mother,
And his Wife who I heare, meane to ſolicite him
For mercy to his Country. Therefore let's hence,
And with our faire intreaties haſte them on. Exeunt

Enter Menenius to the Watch or Guard.

1 Watch. Stay: whence are you?

2 Watch. Stand, and go backe.

Mene. You guard like men, 'tis well: But by your leaue,
I am an Officer of State, and come
1 From whence? Mene. From me to you.
1 Your Meſſage may not paſſe, you muſt returne: our Generall
Will no more heare from thence.
2 You'le ſee your Rome imbraſt with fire, before
You ſpeake with Coriolanus.
Mene. Good my friends,
If you haue heard your Generall talke of Rome,
And of his friends there: it is lots to blanks,
My name hath touch'd your eares: it is Menenius.
1 Be it ſo, go back: the vertue of your name,
Is not heere paſſable.
Mene. I tell thee fellow,
The Generall is my Louer. I haue beene
The booke of his good Acts, whence men haue read
His Name vnparalell'd, haplely amplified:
For I haue euer verified my Friends
(Of whom he's chiefe) with all the ſize that verity
Would without lapſing ſuffer. Nay ſometimes,
Like to a bowle vpon a Subtle ground
I haue tumbled paſt the throw: and in his praiſe
Haue almoſt ſtampt the leaſing. Therefore be gone,
Mine eares againſt your ſuites are ſtronger than
Mine eyes to your demands.
1 Out affe, I cannot tell how many Lies in his behalfe, as you haue vttered words in your owne, you ſhould not paſſe heere: no, though it were as virtuous to lye, as to liue chaſtely. Therefore go backe.
Mene. Prethee fellow remember my name is Menenius, alwayes factionary on the party of your Generall.
2 How euer you haue been vſed to his Let, as you ſay you
haue; I am one that telles his vertues truly: makes him
no meacher than he is: and muſt ſay you cannot paſſe. Therefore go backe.
Mene. Has he dined Canidius? For I would not ſpeake with him, till after dinner.
1 You are a Roman are you?
Mene. I am as thy Generall is.
2 Then you ſhould hate Rome, as he do's. Can you,
when you haue puſht out your gates, the very Defender of them, and in a violent popular ignorance, giuen your enemy your ſhield, thinke to front his reuenges with the eaſie groanes of old women, the Virginall Palmes of your daughters, or with the paſſed interceſſion of ſuch a de-cayed Dotant as you, feeare to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire, your City is ready to flame in, with ſuch weake breath as this? No, you are deceiued, therfore backe to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our Generall has ſworne you out of repreeue and pardon.
Mene. Sirra, if thy Captaine knew I were heere,
He would vſe me with eſtimation.
2 Come, my Captaine knowes you not.
Mene. I meane thy Generall.
1 My Generall cares not for you. Back I ſay, go leaſt
I beſtir you your laſte peece of blood. Backe, that is the vi-
new of your hauing, backe.
Mene. Nay but fellow, fellow.

Enter Coriolanus with Auffidius.

Coria. What's the matter?
Mene. Now you Companion, I'le ſay an arrant for you:
you ſhall know now that I am in eſtimation: you ſhall
perceiue, that a Iacke gardant cannot office me from my Son Coriolanus, gueſſ but by my entertainment with him
if thou ſtand'ſt not i'th ſtate of hanging, or of ſome death more long in Spectatorſhip and crueller in ſuffering, behold now preſently, and ſwound for what's growne me vpon thee. The glorious Gods ſit inuiſible round about thy particular proweſſe, and hiſſe thee in thy owne Tongue
Fatter Menenius do's. O my Son, my Son thou art preparing fire for vs: looke thee, heere's water to quench it.
I was hardly moued to come to thee: but being aſſured
none but my ſelfe could moue thee, I haue been bold to ſtop your Gates vpon's. And ſtudied not long, I muſe thee on the way to eate vp Rome, and ſpit thy Tributary Countrymen. The good Gods aſſwage thy wrath, and turne the edge of it, vpon
this Varlet heere. This, who like a Blocke hath denyed my acceſſe to thee.
Coria. Away.
Mene. How? Away?
Coria. Wife, Mother, Child, I know not. My affaires
Are ſeruanted to others. Though I owe
My Reuenge properly, my remiſſion lies
In Volcan breſts. That we haue beene familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulneſſe ſhall poiſon rather
Then pitty. Note how much therefore be gone
Mine eares againſt your ſuites are ſtronger then
Your gates againſt my force. Yet for I loued thee,
Take this along, I write it for thy ſake,
And would haue ſent it. Another word Menenius,
I will not heare thee ſpeake. This man Auffidius
Was my belou'd in Rome, yet thou behou'd'ſt
Auffid. You keepe a conſtant temper. Exeunt

Manet the Guard and Menenius.

1 Now ſir, is your name Menenius?
2 'Tis a ſpell you ſee of much power:
You know the way home againe.
1 Do you heare how we are ſhent for keeping your greatneſſe backe?
2 What cauſe do you thinke I haue to ſwound?
Mene. I neither care for th'world, nor your General for ſuch things as you. I can ſcarſe thinke ther's any, y'are to ſlight. He that hath a will to die by himſelfe, feares it not

not from another. Let your Generall do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery encrease with your age. I say to you, as I was said to, Away. Exit.

1 A Noble fellow I warrant him.

2 The worthy Fellow is our Generall. He is the Rock, The Oake not to be winde-shaken. Exit 1 and 2.

Enter Coriolanus and Auffidius.

Corio. We will before the walls of Rome to morrow Set downe our Host. My partner in this Action, You must report to th' Volcian Lords, how plainly I have borne this Businesse.

Auf. Only their ends you have respected, Stop'd your eares against the generall suit of Rome, Never admitted a request, not of a Wife, a Child, a Friend, Of no time, breeding, person, or preferment, This was your charter, and your people's too. I wish this had been so, for we had Lost to Rome, and not to Rome, a Traitor.

Corio. O that I had, thou Auffidius, Rome now free, Which now compell me fly to thy Bosome, Againe to beat the Volcian Steele, our Sword, Once more to smell the dire smell of Mans Flesh, As often as I met thee in the field. This Peace is parcell of the Dastard Councels Whose ease forgets our Warres, and surfeits upon Our peace and Idlenesse. Now I am Banish'd, To scandall me unparalell'd. Haply Auffidius, Ere halfe an houre on my Journey, Or houres before the Sunne set, I shall finde Time to effect unthought of Deeds, Which can no lesse speake, then the worlds Disgrace Must beare the Name of Coriolanus. But Come in, Let me commend my selfe to your Noble Friendship. Is not this well?

Auf. It is not amisse, I warrant.

Corio. Let me then imbrace thee, as I would Imbrace the free Confederacie twixt Rome and Corioles. So, most welcome. Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Here comes the Lord.

Corio. Th' Lord Cominius? Let him be welcome To Auffidius Antium. Noble Auffidius, Take your Commission, hie you to your Bands, Let us alone to guard Corioles, If these assemble, put 'em home. Within This houre we will be with you, Let us part, Your Company to the Capitoll, where I know Our welcome is assured.

Auf. I will not meet you.

Corio. Not? you are welcome all.

1 I thinke not so.

Corio. Let me twist with you in private.

2 The Tribunes to himselfe, I will not go. The Lord Cominius will come upon you, Fight with us to day, or hereafter, whensoever, And no more private Conference then The deepest Councell.

Corio. Well, I will go with you.

Auf. Not yet, good Sir.

Corio. Come, come with us, Speake not Against our Loves, you see not my power Is instant, whole, and full. This we have done, Before our Enterprize at home, praise for us, As cause will give it, Custome of the Warres Commands it of these Businesses, for which To Coriolanus give your Hands, upon Your Honours faith. Come, Auffidius, Before your Tent, your Army, strengthen'd, seemes, You take the Entertainment of the Time, Fleet, Knights, and Gallants, all that are made Bearers of Spare, and Gratulate my Welcome With Kinde Imbraces. Feast with Mirth and Complement, The Warre is hence. Our Soldiers Remember well, that ere the Clocke Shall strike the houre upon the Bell, you serve The time o' th' day. It is done, and must be so, Ever to be Victors. Let the Drummes and Trumpets sound, we with our Friends, Will march to Rome. Exeunt Corio. Auf. and Nobles.

1 He has deserved worthily of his Country, And his Ascent is not by such degrees as others, But he mounts up at once, and his first Steppe Is to the Highest.

2 Which he will give over.

1 I warrant him.

2 We hope so, for we have need of all the Noble Service he can do us. He is the Sword of the Warre. The Gods preserve our Enemies, and their Backes.

1 Amen, Sir. To my Quarter, Farewell.

2 Hang him, Proud Rascall, what a Slave is grown, Since we were Children? Farewell. Exeunt.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria, with Attendants.

Volum. My wife comes formost, then the Honour'd Mould Wherein this Trophe was first drawne, and turnes The Spirits of the Noble Bed-fellow All that beholdem: this is he, my Sonne, And a Sonne indeed, I thinke, and am not Ouer-prowd to meet him.

Virg. And he is welcome. Then shall not Tarquin surprize me at my Wish, To see my Lord return so.

Valer. Not to me. Before him I prescribe a shame upon The first start of the Warre, he should not Looke upon his Enemies, without A Brand to perish him.

Virg. Deare Madam, Let us not Hold Acts of Hazard, Telling what we would do, But what is past.

Volum. Good Madam.

Virg. I am gone, But doubting what would please you most.

Volum. Then hold your owne, good Soule, your Husband's life Is the Breath of Noble Actions, that In your Remembrance should not thus Be staggered, but performe. I am no lesse Glad to see Valeria, then I was to Receive Virgilia, Honour'd Gentlewomen, Heartily were we glad to hear you well.

Virg. And you Valeria.

Valer. Madam, my Lord is well, I have sent Letters, Full of his Happy Successe, and in part Of what is done in Antium. Where's your Son?

Volum. Believe it not, we were prepar'd For hard Reception, were we not? Valeria, Alas, you are much held to him, but Your Husband's deeds, do make you to forget.

Valer. Lesse than the Name of Deere, I owe to him.

Volum. I prethee Daughter, doe remember it Now of thy Husband.

Virg. Where is your Son?

Volum. Daughter, he is gone with Martius into Corioles, Scarce Threescore of them backe againe, but I Not of a Woman's tender, whose Soft Nature Newly taught to finde the sharpe Edge of Warre, Bloodied his Enterprize, Come, Lay aside Your Bodkin, and Your Teares, and Entertaine Your Husband in a Manly welcome.

Virg. Pardon me Madam, Yonder comes my Lord, In Blood stain'd up to the Elbowes, fresh in Honour, And Unparalell'd Deeds.

Volum. Valeria, Impression strikes more deeply then Execution.

Valer. Good Madam, Let us Withdraw, lest we be Noted to Grieve, Or Joy in Publique.

Virg. Good Madam, Let us Withdraw, lest we be Noted to Grieve, Or Joy in Publique.

Volum. Their Teares are Salt enough, and that Their Joyes, Rain well upon them. Shall I Behold The Warre, and Marke my Sonne, now Mantled With Honour, Steele, and Blood? Destruction Fall on my Head, good Fortune must Say to my Eares, my Son is Valiant, and Unlesse it Lodge in the Noble Grave of Sorrow, Dart it not Rome, nor Rome's Gates, nor my Bed That Title in a Record.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Madam, my Lord is coming, And I must speake A Word with you.

Volum. Why, I pray you?

Mess. 'Tis not my Businesse where I did begin, Yet in the End, all. Madam, Health and Honour To their full Height.

Volum. Call's not have 'em.

Mess. Two Ladies, the Mother, and the Wife of Martius, Great Nature cries, Deny not. Let the Volces Plough Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never Be such a Gosling to obey Instinct, but stand As if a Man were Author of himselfe, And knew no other kin.

Virg. My Lord and Husband.

Corio. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Virg. The sorrow that delivers us thus changed, Makes you think so.

Corio. Like a dull Actor now, I have forgot my part, And I am out, even to a full disgrace. Best of my Flesh, Forgive my Tyranny, but do not say, For that, forgive our Romans. O a Kisse Long as my Exile, sweet as my Revenge! Now by the ielous Queene of Heaven, that kisse I carried from thee, deare, and my true Lippe Hath Virgin'd it ere since. You Gods, I prate, And the most noble Mother of the World Leave unsaluted. Sinke my knee i' th' earth, Kneeles. Of thy deepe duty, more impression shew Than that of common Sonnes.

Volum. Oh stand up blest! Whilst with no softer Cushion than the Flint I kneele before thee, and unproperly Shew duty, as mistaken, all this while,

Between the Child and Parent.

Corio. What's this, your knees to me? To your Corrected Sonne? Then let the Pebles on the hungry beach Fillop the Starres. Then, let the mutinous windes Strike the proud Cedars gainst the fiery Sunne, Murd'ring Impossibility, to make What cannot be, slight worke.

Volum. Thou art my Warrior, I hope to frame thee. Do you know this Lady?

Corio. The Noble Sister of Publicola; The Moone of Rome: Chaste as the Icicle That's curded by the Frost from purest Snow, And hangs on Dian's Temple. Deere Valeria.

Volum. This is a poore Epitome of yours, Which by the Interpretation of full time, May shew like all your selfe.

Corio. The Ornament Of Heaven. Faire Thoughts and Honour, Were the cleare Soule of our Conspiracie, Which ne'er ebbes up, it shall prove Immaculate, and stickes fixed Marbles In a great Sea-marke, standing every Flaw, And saving those that eye thee.

Volum. Your knee, Sirrah.

Corio. That's my brave Boy.

Volum. Even he, your wife, this Lady, and my selfe, Are Suitors to you.

Corio. I beseech you peace. Or if you'd aske, remember this before; The thing I have forsworne to grant, may never Be held by you denials. Do not bid me Dismisse my Soldiers, or capitulate Againe with Romes Mechanicks. Tell me not Wherein I seeme unnatural. Desire not, T' allay my Rages and Revenges, with Your colder reasons.

Volum. O no more, no more! You have said you will, And we are suppliants. Therefore hear us.

Corio. Aufidius, and you Volces, marke, for we'l Heare nought from Rome in private. Your request?

Volum. Should we be silent, and not speake, our Raiment And state of bodies would bewray what life We have led since thy Exile. Think with thy selfe, How more unfortunate than all living women Are we come hither, since that thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts, Constrains them weepe, and shake with feare & sorrow, Making the Mother, wife, and Child to see, The Husband, the Father tearing His Countries Bowels out. And to poore we Thine Enmities most capitall. Thou barr'st us Our prayers to the Gods, which is a comfort That all but we enjoy. For how can we? Alas! how can we, for our Country pray? Whereto we are bound, together with the victory, Whereto we are bound? Alacke, or we must loose The Country our deere Nurse, or else thy person Our comfort in the Country. We must lose A necessary Choice, though we had Our wish, which side should win. For either thou Must as a forraine Recreant be led With Manacles through our streets, or else Triumphantly tread on thy Countries ruine,

And beare the Palme, for hauing bravely shed
Thy Wife and Children's blood. For my selfe Sonne,
I purpose not to waite on Fortune, till
These Warres determine. If I cannot perswade thee,
Rather to shew a Noble grace to both parts,
I'ld beseech thee dooe greater Fauour to thy Mother,
Then to a Foule thy Country, then to breake
In Truth, thou shalt not, ere thy Mother's wombe
That brought thee to this world.
Yong. Ay and mine also doth weare dishonour
To take perpetuall shame vpon it selfe.
Boy. And mine shall
That I am bigger borne then my Father,
Rest assur'd, my Mother shall not be
Ere I be stretcht vpon a Bier so high,
Request me not Sonne, nor woman shame to me
I have set my selfe
Volum. Now, good Coriolanus
I cannot tell, how to vrge request to stand
To saue the Romanes, thereby to effect
The Voices will haue to vtter, you might condemne vs
As poysonous of your Honour. No, our loue
Is that you reconcile them. While the Voices
May say, let mercy we haue shew'd to the Romanes,
That we receiu'd, and each time more and more
Gaue the Allowance of our loue, and aym'd behauiour
For making vp this peace. Thou know'st, great Sonne,
The end of Warres vncertaine, balefull Steele,
That plowes on all hands, beares no regard
Where chaste Feare may escape, nor Noble name
Whose rendred gainst the dedicated Corpes
Whose Conquerour went the man was Noble,
But with no leaft Attempt, he wipes it out
Destroyes his Country, and his name remaines
To the ensuing Age abhorr'd. Speake to me Sonne.
Thou hast affected the fine Strains of Honour,
To imitate the Graces of the Gods,
To teare with Thunder the wide Cheekes o'th Aire,
And yet to charge thy Sulphure with a Bolt
That should but rive an Oake. Why do'st not speake?
Think'st thou it Honourable for a Noble man
Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, speake you,
He cares not for your weeping. Speake thou Boy,
Perhaps thy childishnesse will moue him more
Then can our Reasons. There's no man in the world
More bound to's Mother, yet here he lets me prate
Like one i'th stocks. Thou hast never in thy life,
Shew'd thy deere Mother any courtesie,
When she (poore Hen) fond of no second brood,
Has clucked thee to the Warres and safely home
Loden with Honour. Say my Request's vniust,
And spurne me backe. But, if it be not so
Thou art not honest, and the Gods will plague thee
That thou restrain'st from me the Duty which
To a Mother's part belongs. He turnes away.
Down Ladies, let vs shame him with our knees
To this same Roman, that longs more pride
Then pity to our Prayers. Downe, and end,
This is the last. So, we will home to Rome,
And die among our Neighbours. Nay, behold's,
This Boy that cannot tell what he would haue,
But kneeles and holds vp hands for fellowship,
Does reason our Petition with more strength
Then hotshall to heare vs. Come, let vs go
This Fellow had a Volcan to his Mother,
His Wife is in Corioles, and his Childe
Like him by chance. Yet giue vs our dispatch
I am hush't vntill our City be afire, & then Ile speak a little.
Holds her by the hands silent.
Corio. O Mother, Mother!
What haue you done? Behold, the Heauens do ope,
The Gods looke downe, and this vnnaturall Scene
They laugh at. O my Mother, Mother! O!
You haue won a happy Victory to Rome.
But for your Sonne, beleeue it, O beleeue it,
Most dangerously you haue with him preuayl'd,
If not most mortall to him. But let it come.
Aufidius, though I cannot make true Warres,
Ile frame conuenient peace. Now good Aufidius,
Were you in my stead, would you haue heard
A Mother lesse? or granted lesse Aufidius?
Auf. I was mou'd withall.
Corio. I dare be sworne you were:
And sir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But (good sir)
What peace you'l make, aduise me. For my part,
Ile not to Rome, Ile backe with you; and pray you
Stand to me in this cause. O Mother! Wife!
Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy, & thy Honor
At difference in thee. Out of that I'le worke
Myselfe a former Fortune.
Corio. I by and by. But we will drinke together;
And you shall bide
A better welcome then any found in Armes, whose rage
On like conditions, will haue Counter-seal'd.
Come enter with vs. Ladies you deserue
To haue a Temple built you. All the Swords
In Italy, and her Confederate Armes
Could not haue made this peace.
Exeunt.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Mene. See you yond Coigne a'th Capitoll, yond' corner
Sicin. Why what of that?
Mene. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the Ladies of Rome, especially his Mother may preuaile with him. But I say, there is no hope in't. Our throats are sentenc'd, and stay vpon execution.
Sicin. Is it possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man.
Mene. There is a differency betweene a Grub & a Butterfly; yet your Butterfly was a Grub. this Martius, is growne from Man to Dragon: He has wings; he's more then a creeping thing.
Sicin. He loues his Mother dearely.
Mene. So did he me: and he no more remembers his Mother now, then an eight yeare and a halfe Lobster. The tartnesse of his face sowres ripe Grapes. When he walkes, he moues like an Engine, and the ground shrinkes before his Treading. He is able to pierce a Corslet with his eye; Talkes like a knell, and his hum is a Battery. He sits in his State, as a Thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finish'd with his bidding. He wants nothing of a God but Eternity, and a Heauen to throne in.
Sicin. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.
Mene. I paint him in the Character. Marke what mercy his Mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, then there is milke in a male Tyger, that shall our poore City finde: and all this is long of you.
Sicin. The Gods be good vnto vs.
Mene. No in such a case as this, the Gods will not be good vnto vs. When we banish him, we neglect not them: and he returning to breake our necks, they respect not vs.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes.

Mes. Sir, if you'd saue your Image, flye to your House,
The Plebeians haue got your Fellow Tribune
And hale him vp and down, all swearing, if
The Roman Ladies bring not Coriolanus home
They'll giue him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger

Sicin. What's the Newes?

Mes. Good Newes for the Patricians, Sir,
The Volsces are in Armes, and Martius goes
A Moneth entire together ere we stirre
Not one Ex[illegible] of Rome.

Sicin. Lyes the report constant? Is't not possible?

Mes. As certain as I know the Sun is fire:
Where haue you liu'd, not to haue mark'd the Sun?
We're driuen to an Act of Mercy, when
As the vine sheds her teares, we Wayte vpon

Trumpets, Hoboyes, Drummes beate, all together.

The Trumpet, Sackbuts, Psalteries, and Fifes,
Tabors and Symbals, and the shrill Larmans,
Make the Welkin dance with the Cheere of Rome.

Mene. [illegible]
I will go meete the Ladies. This Morning
Is wondrous kinde, Sicinius,
A Custome of Theirs vpon the Nones,
A worthy Deuotion. Well to day
This Morning for ensuing the Nineteenth,
Direct your Plebeians, and let them know

Sicin. Tell the Goodnesse of the yonger sort, 'tis gay.
Now, accept my thankfulnesse.

Duk. Now we haue a great cause to giue great thanks

Sicin. They are neere the City.

Mes. And haue put forth to enter.

Sicin. Well met on, and help the ioy. Exeunt

Enter two Senators, with Ladies passe ouer the stage, with other Lords.

Sen. Behold our Patroness, the life of Rome
Call all your Tribes together, praise the Gods
And make triumphant fires, strew flowers before them:
Vnshout the noyse that banish'd Martius;
Repeale him, with the welcome of his Mother:
Cry welcome Ladies, welcome.

All. Welcome Ladies, welcome.

A Flourish with Drummes & Trumpets.

Enter Tullus Auffidius with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the Lords of the City I am here
Deliuer them this Paper: hauing read it,
Bid them repayre to th'Market-place, where I
Euen in theirs, and in the Commons eares
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse
The City Ports by this hath entred, and
Intends t'appoint by force, without more quarrell
Affection to their Seates, then Rome's owne Peace
Aboue that of their Persons, their Wiues Children,
Honours, and Possessions.

All. No, no, no, no, no.

Auf. If that I haue vttered Actes, his owne Kinne,
Who loues him not more tenderly then hee
Doth loue his Mother, may transpierce my Heart
And with a suddaine reproofe, haue ending Point
Euen in the fulnesse of my speech. So, Fellowes,
Will you vntent your selues?

All. Worthy Auffidius,
We will not sleepe.

Auf. Your Natiue Towne you enter like a Post,
And haue no Welcomes home: but he returnes
Splitting the Aire with noyse.

2. Con. And patient Fooles,
Whose Children he hath slaine, their base throats teare
With giuing him glory.

3. Con. Therefore at your vantage,
Ere he expresse himselfe, or moue the people
With what he would say, let him feele your Sword
Which we our selues will second, when he lies groaning
At every Wound: How scape he proud, shall bury
His Reputation with his Body.

Auf. Say no more. Heere come the Lords,

Enter the Lords of the City

All Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I haue not deseru'd it.
But worthy Lords, haue you with heede perus'd
What I haue written to you?

All. We haue.

1. Lord. And grieue to heare't.
What faults he made before the last, I thinke
Might haue found easie fines: but there to end
Where he was to begin, and giue away
The benefit of our Lawes, and Seruices
Will (our owne charge) make a Treason where
There was a yeelding, this admits no excuse.

Enter a your Voices in Corioli.
Alone I dare not, Boy
Am. We Noble Lords,
Wilt you be put to flight a'your backs by Fortune,
And shew your shame, by this unlucky Braggart?
Fore your own eyes, and eares?
All Con. Let him dye for't
All People. Tear him to peeces, do it presently.
He kill'd my Sonne, my daughter, kill'd my Cosen
Marcus, he kill'd my Father.
2 Lord. Peace ho, no outrage, peace
The man is Noble, and his fame folds in
This Orbe o'th earth. His last offences to vs
Shall have due hearing, Stand Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace
Cor. O that I had him, with six Aufidiuses, or more
His Tribe to use my lawfull sword.
Com. Insolent Villaine.
All Con. Kill, kill, kill, kill him.
Drawes the Conspirators, and kills Marcius, who falls on him.
Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.
Auf. My Noble Masters, heare me speake.
1 Lord. O Tullus.
2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed, whereat
Valour will weepe.
3 Lord. Tread not upon him. Masters all be quiet,
Put up your Swords.
Auf. My Lords,
When you shall know (as in this Rage
Provoked by him you cannot) the great danger
Which this man's life did owe you, you'l rejoyce
That he is thus cut off. Please it your Honours
To call me to your Senate, I'le deliver
Myselfe your loyall Servant, or endure
Your heaviest Censure.
1 Lord. Bear from hence his body,
And mourn you for him. Let him be regarded
As the most Noble Corse that ever Herald
Did follow to his Urne.
2 Lord. His own impatience,
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame:
Let's make the best of it.
Auf. My rage is gone,
And I am strucke with sorrow. Take him up
Helpe three o'th chiefest Soldiers, I'le be one.
Beate thou the Drum that it speake mournfully
Traile your steele Pikes. Though in this City he Hath widdowed and unchilded many a one,
Which to this houre bewayle the injury,
Yet he shall have a Noble Memory. Assist.
Exeunt bearing the Body of Marcius. A dead March sounded.

FINIS.

The Lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Flourish. Enter the Tribunes and Senatours aloft: And then enter Saturnine and his Followers at one doore, and Bassianus and his Followers at the other, with Drum and Colours.

Saturnine.

Noble Patricians, Patrons of my right,
Defend the Justice of my Cause with Armes
And Countrymen, my Loving Followers,
Plead my Successive Title with your Swords
I was the first proclaimed Emperour
Before the Tombe
Of the deceased Emperour,
Now if you Honour me
Bassianus Princely Romans Friends and Followers,
Of the Imperiall Seate
Vertues of noble Patrons, Sweet Bassianus, Cæsar, Sonne,
Were gracious in the eyes of Royall Rome,
Keepe then this passage to the Capitoll
And suffer not Dishonour to approach
The Imperiall Seate to Virtue consecrate
To Justice Continence, and Nobility
But let Desert in pure Election shine,
And Romanes, fight for Freedome in your Choice

Enter Marcus Andronicus aloft with the Crowne

Princes, that strive by factions and by friends,
Ambitiously for Rule and Empery,
Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand
A speciall Party, have by common voyce
In Election for the Romane Empery
Chose Andronicus Surnamed Pius,
For many good and great deserts to Rome.
A Nobler man, a braver warriour
Lives not this day within the City Walles:
He by the Senate is accited home
From weary Warres against the barbarous Gothes,
That with his Sonnes (a terror to our foes)
Hath yoakt a Nation strong, train'd up in Armes.
Ten yeares are spent since first he undertooke
This Cause of Rome, and chastised with Armes
Our Enemies pride: Five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his Valiant Sonnes
In Coffins from the field.
And now at last, laden with Honour's Spoiles,
Returnes the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in Armes.

What should I don this Robe and trouble you,
Be chosen with proclamations to day,
To morrow yeeld up rule, resigne my Life,
And set abroad new busines for you all
Rome, I have bene thy Souldier forty yeares,
And led my Countries Greatnesse tryumphantly,
And buried one and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Knighted in Field, slaine manfully in Armes,
In right and Service of their Noble Country
Give me a staffe of Honour for mine age
But not a Scepter to controule the world,
Upright the beldest Lords that held it last.
Mar. Titus thou shalt obtaine and aske the Emperie
Sat. Proud and ambitious Tribune can'st thou tell?
Titus Patience Prince Saturnine.
Sat. Romanes do me right.
Patricians draw your Swords, and sheath them not Till Saturnine be Romes Emperour.
Andronicus would thou were shipt to hell,
Rather than rob me of the peoples hearts
Luc. Proud Saturnine interrupter of the good
That Noble minded Titus means to thee
Tit. Content thee Prince I will restore to thee
The peoples hearts, and wean them from themselves.
Basi Andronicus I do not flatter thee
But honour thee, and will do till I die:
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friend,
I will most thankefully requite it.
Of Noble minded natures this is the best Meede.
Tit. People of Rome and Noble Tribunes heere,
I aske your voyces and your Suffrages,
Will you be to Titus friendly or Andronicus?
Tribunes. To gratifie the good Andronicus,
And Gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he nominates
Tit. Tribunes I thanke you and this suite I make,
That you create your Emperour's sonne Lord
Lord Saturnine, whose Vertues will I hope,
Reflect on Rome as Titans Rayes on earth,
And ripen Justice in this Commonweale:
Then if you will elect by my advise,
Crowne him, and say Long live our Emperour.
Mar. And With Voyces and applause of every sort,
Patricians and Plebeians we Create
Lord Saturnine Romes Great Emperour
And say, Long live our Emperour Saturnine
A long Flourish till they come downe.
Sat. Titus Andronicus for thy Favours done,
To us in our Election this day,
I give thee thankes in part of thy Deserts,
And will with Deedes requite thy gentlenesse:
And for an Onset Titus to advance
Thy Name and Honorable Family,
Lavinia will I make my Empresse,
Romes Royall Mistris, Mistris of my heart
And in the Sacred Pantheon her espouse.
Tell me Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?
Tit. It doth my worthy Lord, and in this match,
I hold me Highly Honoured of your Grace,
And here in sight of Rome to Saturnine,
King and Commander of our Commonweale,
The Wide-worlds Emperour, do I Consecrate,
My Sword, my Chariot, and my Prisoners,
Presents well Worthy Romes Imperiall Lord
Receive them then, the Tribute that I owe,
Mine Honours Ensignes humbled at my feete.

Sat. Thankes Noble Titus, Father of my life,
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts
Rome shall record, and when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable Deserts,
Romans forget your Fealty to me.
Tit. Now Madam are you prisoner to an Emperour,
To him that for you Honour and your State,
Will use you Nobly and your followers.
Sat. A goodly Lady trust me of the Hue
That I would choose were I to choose anew
Cleere up faire Queene that cloudy countenance,
Though chance of warre
Hath wrought this change of cheere,
Thou com'st not to be made a scorne in Rome:
Princely shall be thy usage every way
Rest on my word and let me see that cheere
Do not for these, Madam me thinkes you do,
Can make your Cheere dearer than the Queene of Gothes?
Lavinia you are not pleased with it,
Lav. Not I my Lord sith true Nobilitie,
Warrants these words in Princely courtesie
Sat. I thankes sweete Lavinia. Romanes let us goe, Ransomelesse here we set our Prisoners free,
Proclaime our Honors Lords with Trumpet and Drum
Bass. Lord Titus by your leave this Maiden is mine.
Tit. How sir are you in earnest then my Lord?
Bass. Noble Titus and resolved withall,
To doe my selfe this reason, and right.
Marc. Surnamed Scipio, is our Romes delight,
This Prince is come to claime his Right and his
Luc. Arme that he will have slain a thousand more
Tit. Traitors avaunt, where is the Emperours Guard?
Treason my Lord, Lavinia is surprized.
Sat. Surprized, by whom?
Bass. By him that justly may
Beare his Betrothed from all the world away.
Mut. Brothers I hope to convey her hence away,
And with my Sword ile keepe this doome fate.
Tit. Follow my Lord, and ile soone bring her backe.
Mut. My Lord you passe not heere
Tit. What villaine Boy, barst me my way in Rome?
Mut. Helpe Lucius helpe He wounds him.
Luc. My Lord you are unjust, and more than so,
In wronging Our Captaine, you have slaine your Son.
Tit. Nor thee, nor he are any sonnes of mine,
My sonnes would never so dishonour me.
Traitor restore Lavinia to the Emperour
Luc. Dead if you will, but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawfull promist Love.

Exeunt aloft the Emperour with Tamora and her two sonnes and Aaron the Moore

Emp. No Titus no the Emperour needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy Stocke.
Ile trust by Leisure him that mocks me once,
Thee never, nor thy Traiterous haughty sonnes,
Confederates all thus to dishonour me.
Was none in Rome to make a stale
But Saturnine? Full well Andronicus
Agrees these deedes, with that proud brave of thine,
That dar'd in this manner seize the Empire.
Tit. O monstrous, what reproachfull words are these?
Sat. But goe thy wayes goe give that changing peece,
To him that flourisht for her with his Sword.
A Valiant sonne in law thou shalt enjoy
One fit to bandy with thy lawlesse Sonnes,

To

[illegible] Commons and people of Rome.

Were gracious in those Princely eyes of thine,
Then heare me speake indifferently for all:
And at my suite (sweet) pardon what is past.
Sat. What Madam, be dishonoured openly,
And basely put it vp without reuenge?
Tam. Not to my Lord,
The Gods of Rome for-fend,
I should be Authour to dishonour you,
But on mine honour dare, I vndertake
For good Lord Titus innocence in all.
Whose fury not dissembled speakes his griefes:
Then at my suite looke graciously on him,
Loose not so noble a friend on vaine suppose,
Nor with sowre lookes afflict his gentle heart.
My Lord, be ruled by me be wonne at last,
Dissemble all your griefes and discontents,
You are but newly planted in your Throne,
Leaste then the people, and Patricians too,
Vpon a iust suruey take Titus part,
And so supplant vs for ingratitude,
Which vnto reputes to me a hainous crime
Yeeld at intreats, and then let me alone
Ile make a day, to make ye friends all,
And direct the fatall enterprise of ruine.
Thou enemy to Rome, and all thy treacherous crew.
To whom I sue my deare louing lookes to bite.
And make them know what 'tis to let a Queene,
Kneele in the streetes, and beg for grace in vaine.
Come, come, sweet Emperour, (come Andronicus)
Take vp this good old man, and cheere the heart,
That dies in tempest of thy angry frowne.
King. Rise Titus rise,
My Empresse hath prouail'd.
Titus. I thanke your Maiestie,
And her my Lord.
These words, these lookes,
Infuse new life in me.
Tamo. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily.
And must aduise the Emperour for his good,
This day all quarrels die Andronicus.
And let it be mine honour good my Lord,
That I haue reconcil'd your friends and you.
For you Prince Bassianus, I haue past
My word and promise to the Emperour,
That you will be more milde and tractable.
And feare not Lords:
And you Lauinia,
By my aduise all humbled on your knees,
You shall aske pardon of his Maiestie.
Sat. We doe,
And vow to Heauen, and to his Highnes,
That what we did, was mildly, as we ought,
Tending our sisters honour and our owne
Mar. That on mine honour heere I do protest
King. Away and talke not, trouble vs no more.
Tamo. Nay, nay,
Sweet Emperour, we must all be friends.
The Tribune and his Nephewes kneele for grace,
I will not be denied, sweet heart looke back
King Marcus,
For my sake and thy brothers heere,
And at my louely *Tamora*s intreats,
I doe remit these young mens heynous faults.
Stand vp: Lauinia, though you left me like a churle,
I found a friend, and sure as death I sweare,
I would not part a Batchellour from the Priest.
Come, if the Emperours Court can feast two Brides,
You are my guest Lauinia, and your friends:
This day shall be a Loue-day Tamora.
Tit. To morrow and it please your Maiestie,
To hunt the Panther and the Hart with me,
With horne and Hound,
We'le giue your Grace Bonjour.
Sator. Be it so Titus, and Gramercy to. Exeunt.

Actus Secunda.

Enter. Enter Aaron alone.

Aaron. Now climbes faire Tamora Pompus toppe,
Safe out of fortunes shot, and sits aloft,
Secure of Thunders crake or lightning flash,
Aduanced aboue pale enuies threatning reach
As when the golden Sunne salutes the morne,
And hurles his glorious beames through gloomy aire,
Gallops the Zodiacke in his glistering Coach,
And ouerlookes the highest peering hilles:
So Tamora
Vpon her wit doth earthly honour wait,
And vertue stoopes and trembles at her frowne.
Then Aaron arme thy heart, and fit thy thoughes,
To mount aloft with thy Imperiall Mistris,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fettered in amorous chaines,
And faster bound to Aarons charming eyes,
Then is Prometheus tide to Caucasus.
Away with slauish weedes, and idle thoughts,
I will be bright and shine in Pearle and Gold,
To waite vpon this new made Empresse
To waite said I? To wanton with this Queene,
This Goddesse, this Semiramis, this Queene,
This Syren, that will charme Romes Saturine,
And see his shipwracke, and his Commonweales.
Hollo, what storme is this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius brauing.

Dem. Chiron thy yeres wants wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners to intrude where I am grac'd,
And may for ought thou know'st affected be.
Chi. Demetrius, thou doo'st ouer-weene in all,
And so in this to bear me downe with braues,
'Tis not the difference of a yeere or two
Makes me lesse gracious, or thee more fortunate:
I am as able, and as fit, as thou,
To serue, and to deserue my Mistris grace,
And that my sword vpon thee shall approue,
And plead my passions for *Lauinia*s loue.
Aaron. Clubs, clubs, these louers will not keep the peace.
Dem. Why Boy, although our mother (vnaduised)
Gaue you a dancing Rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate growne to threat your friends?
Goe to haue your Lath glued within your sheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.
Chi. Meane while sir, with the little skill I haue,
Full well shalt thou perceiue how much I dare.
Dem. I Boy, grow ye so braue? They draw.
Aaron. Why how now Lords?
So neere the Emperours Pallace dare you draw,

And

A[aron] ...maintaine such a quarrell openly?
...answer I wote, the groundlesse feare is greate
I would not for a million of Gold,
The cause were known to them it most concernes.
...would your noble mother should impeache
...so dishonour her, and her Court thereby.
For shame put vp.
Dem. Not I, till I haue sheathed
My rapier in his bosome, and with thee,
I scorne to take such churlish checkes at hand,
That neither can become thee or my dishonour heere.
Chi. Braue boy, am I prepar'd, and am not slow,
Come proue Gentleman,
That dare encounter words with me,
And with my weapon manage it as perforce
Aron. Away, away.
Now by the gods that warlike Goths adore,
This petty brabble will vndoe vs all
Why Lords, and think you how dangerous
It is to let your mother heare of this,
What is Lauinia but her brothers honor,
Or Lauinia but her shame
That for her loue such quarrels may be broacht,
Without controlement, iustice, or reuenge?
Young Lords beware and should the Empresse know,
This discord growne, I make the matter woorse,
Chi. I care not I knowe the worst can be,
I loue Lauinia more then all the world
Dem. Youngling
Learne thou to make some meaner choice,
Lauinia is the elder brothers heire
Aron. Why are ye mad? O know ye not in Rome,
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brooke Competitors in loue?
I tell you Lords, you do but plot your deaths,
By this deuice.
Chi. Aron, a thousand deaths would I propose,
To atchieue her whom I loue.
Aron. To atchieue her, how?
Dem. Why makest it strange?
She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd,
She is a woman, therefore may be won,
She Lauinia hath as much to loue
As hath a Bridge more water glideth by the Mill
Than wots the Miller of, and easie it is
Of a cut loafe to steale a shiue we know
Though Bridget scorne to the Empresse brother,
Tut Fortune is the worse Vulcans badge.
Aron. I, and a thousand times must Martius shame
Dem. Tut Martius honour is subscribe that knowes to Words, and weapons, and liberality
What hast not thou full often stroke a Doe,
And borne her cleanly by the Keepers nose?
Aron. Why then it seemes some certaine snatch or so
Would serue your turnes.
Chi. I so the turne were serued.
Dem. Aaron thou hast hit it.
Aron. Would you had hit it too,
Then should not we be tired with this adoo:
Why harke ye, harke ye, and are you such fooles,
To striue for this? Would it offend you then
Chi. That it should me.
Dem. Nor me, so I were one.
Aron. For shame be friends & ioyne for that you iar.
'Tis policie and stratagem must doe
That you affect and so must you resolue,
That what you cannot as you would atchieue,
You must perforce accomplish as you may:
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste
Than this Lauinia, Bassianus loue,
A speedier course this lingring languishment
Must we pursue, and I haue found the path
My Lords, a solemne hunting is in hand,
There will the louely Roman Ladies troope:
The Forrest walkes are wide and spacious,
And many vnfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kinde for rape and villanie:
Single you thither then this dainty Doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words.
This way or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our Empresse with her sacred wit
To villanie and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend,
And she shall file our engines with aduise,
That will not suffer you to square your selues,
But to your wishes do applaud and sweet you vnto.
The Emperours Court is like the house of Fame,
The pallace full of tongues, of eyes, of eares:
The Woods are ruthlesse, dreadfull deafe, and dull
There speake, and strike braue Boyes, & take your turnes.
There serue your lusts, shadow'd from heauens eye,
And reuel in Lauinia's Treasurie.
Chi. Thy counsell Lad smells of no cowardise.
Dem. Sit fas aut nefas, till I finde the streames,
To coole this heate, Charmes to calme these fits,
Per Stygia per manes vehor Exeunt

Enter Titus Andronicus and his three sonnes, making a noyse with Hounds, and Hornes, and a Flourish.

Tit. The hunt is vp the morne is bright and gray,
The fields are fragrant, and the Woods are greene,
Vncouple heere and let vs make a day,
And wake the Emperour and his louely Bride,
And rouze the Prince and ring a hunters peale,
That all the Court may eccho with the noyse.
Sonnes let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the Emperours person carefully
I haue bene troubled in my sleepe this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Winde Hornes.

Heere a cry of hounds, and winde hornes in a peale, then Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lauinia, Chiron, Demetrius, and their Attendants.

Tit. Many good morrowes to your Maiestie,
Madam to you as many and as good.
I promised your Grace, a Hunters peale.
Satur. And you haue rung it lustily my Lords,
Somewhat to early for new married Ladies.
Bass. Lauinia, how say you?
Lau. I say no.
I haue bene awake two houres and more.
Satur. Come on then, horse and Chariots let vs haue,
And to our sport. Madam, now shall ye see,
Our Romaine hunting
Mar. I haue dogges my Lord,
Will rouze the proudest Panther in the Chase,
And climbe the highest Promontary top.
Tit. And I haue horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and runnes like Swallowes ore the plaine

Deme. Chiron

Deme. I know we shall not we, with better [illegible]
But hope to pluck a dart from Venus wound. Exeunt

Enter Aaron.

Aaron. Her hath the [illegible] Hadrian,
To leave so much to show her [illegible],
And so her after to [illegible]
Let me alone, I know how to [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

For no [illegible] nature but [illegible]
Tam. Gaue I [illegible] you stand, you shall know my boyes
Your Mother [illegible] your Mothers sting,
Dome. Nay Villaine [illegible] stop her,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Vpon [illegible]
[illegible]
And [illegible]
Cha. [illegible]
I would [illegible]
Drag [illegible]
And [illegible]
Tamo. But [illegible]
Let [illegible]
[illegible]
Come Madam [illegible]
That [illegible]
Lau. [illegible]
Tamo. I will not care [illegible]
Tam. Sweet Lord [illegible]
Lam. Let [illegible]
To [illegible]
As [illegible]
Lau. [illegible]
O does [illegible]
The [illegible]
[illegible]
Yet euery Mother [illegible]
Do thou [illegible]
Cha. Nay.
[illegible]
Lau. [illegible]
The [illegible]
Yet [illegible]
The [illegible]
To [illegible]
Some [illegible]
That [illegible]
Or [illegible]
[illegible]
Tam. I know not what it [illegible]
Lam. O [illegible]
That [illegible]
Be not obdurate [illegible]
Tam. [illegible]
I am [illegible]
Remember [illegible]
[illegible]
But [illegible]
[illegible]
Lau. [illegible]
Be [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Tam. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Or wanting strength to doe her so much good,
I may be plac'd into the wandring wombe,
Or in a deepe pit, poore Barbarus grave
I have no stirring place, creepe to the brooke.
Martius. Nor can I devise to cure without thy help.
Quin. Thy hand once gone, we must toole shame,
Till you are seene aloft or else below,
Thou can'st not come to me I come to thee. Exit Marcus

Enter the Emperour, Aaron the Moore

Saturn. Along with me: Hee see what hole is heere
And what he is that now is leapt into it.
Say, who art thou that lately did'st descend,
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
Martius. I am no more then newly risen Andronicus,
Brought into error by the deepe resort,
For my deere brothers sake unnaturall,
Saturn. My brother? no, 'tis none of Tamors wit,
He and his Lady both are at the Court,
Upon the Nurse that lately was deliver'd:
'Tis not an houre since I left them there.
Martius. We know as well we were at liberty,
But out alas, here have we found our end.

Enter Tamora, Andronicus and Lavinia.

Tamo. Where is my Lord the King?
King. Here Tamora, though griev'd with killing grefe
Tamo. Where is thy death that can relieve thy wound,
Poore Martius speechless sits here.
Tamo. I am advertised by a loyall Scout,
That two of thy whelpes fell Traytors be,
And were by cruelty slaine Andronicus,
In spight of mercie such murderous Tyranne.
Saturn. Reades a Superscribed Letter.

Saturn. reades the Letter.

And if we misse to meete him manfully,
Since they are mine, I am not worth the name,
Do you encounter with the Andronicus,
And you know our meaning for your reward
Among the Nobles of the Romane state:
Set him breast deepe in earth and famish him:
Dispatch my Nephewes for their villanies,
Doe this and purchase us for ever more friends

King. O Tamora, was ever heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the Elder tree,
Looke you, my Lords, you may have room enough,
I feare too much you have for your purpose here.
Aron. My gracious Lord, here is a bagge of Gold
King. Two of thy whelpes, fell Curres of bloody kind
Have here bereft my brother of his life.
Sirs, teare him from the pit, we two have found
Some newer kind of torturing, some for them.
Tamo. What are they, alreadie?
Or worse than earthly?
How is my murder'd sonne discovered?
Tit. High Emperour, upon my feeble knee,
I beg this boone, with teares not lightly shed,
That this fell fault of my accursed Sonnes,
Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them.
King. If it be proud? you see it is apparant,
Who found the Letter, Tamora was it you?
Tamora. Andronicus himselfe did take it up.
Tit. I did my Lord,
Yet let me be their bayle
For by my fathers reverent Tombe I vow
They shall be ready at your Highnesse will,
To answere their suspition with their lives
King. Thou shalt not bayle them, see thou follow me
Some bring the murthered body to the murtherers,
Let them not speake a word, the guilt is plaine,
For by my soule were there worse end than death,
That end upon them should be executed.
Tamo. Andronicus I will entreate the King,
Feare not thy Sonnes, they shall do well enough.
Tit. Come Lavinia, come,
Stay not to talke with them. Exeunt

Enter the Empresse Sonnes with Lavinia her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out, and ravished.

Demet. So now goe tell and if thy tongue can speake,
Who 'twas that cut thy tongue and ravish'd thee
Chi. Write downe thy mind, bewray thy meaning so,
And if thy stumps will let thee play the Scribe.
Demet. See how with signes and tokens she can scowle
Chi. Goe home,
Call for sweet water, wash thy hands
Demet. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash
And so let's leave her to her silent walkes.
Chi. An 'twere my cause I should goe hang myselfe.
Demet. If thou hadst hands to helpe thee knit the cord.
Exeunt.

Enter Marcus.

Enter Marcus from hunting to Lavinia.

Who is this my Neece that flies away so fast?
Cosen a word, where is your husband?
If dumbe as woods that saw thy speechless griefe,
Perchance some cold Morality you learne,
That teaches Termes to speake, and write her woes
Speake gentle Neece what stern ungentle hands
Have lopt and hew'd and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments
Whose circling shadowes kings have sought to sleepe in
And might not gently speake their pleasures
With speechless blushes, by your teares to speake?
Alas a crimson River warme as breath,
Doth rise and fall betweene thy Rosed lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath,
But more then all, how could'st thou lose thy tongue.
And all too much I fear you know how
And like a Scholler here you sit and figure
With some sad purpose how to execute
And like a Scholler here you sit and figure
With some sad purpose how to execute
Be it so gentle Neece, but cheare thy browe
Some bloody passion stirres thee to and fro
Or any other cause but that thy tongue
Should'st traine foule rape and slaughter on their flight
Sweet Virgins pleasures ever are made
Like to the Aprill buds that feed the Aire
But were some sad mischance unto their stalke
Before they can be tainted with the worme
Even so must all our hopes and expectations
Be nipt and blasted with untimely frosts
And death unto the braine of Morning dewe
Ere it be wrought with the desired heate
That this faire Creature might be good for ought
So should the damned touch thee foule dishonour.
Speake gentle Neece, some stirring Tragedie
Must needs have stolne thy tongue with modestie
For not a worse than any can unfold
Can counterfeit the deepe tragedians speech
But lose, alas, the Senate house of Rome
A worthier Tomb than ever Scipio had
Yet must at every Funerall there recite
And who but wretched Marcus for a Tombe
Hath spoke to thee, nephew, and renew'd
Thy fathers teares as hot as Scalding lead
Sorrow concealed like Oken hidden sap
Doth burne the heart to cinders where it is
Fair Neece what wrongs have rob'd you of your speech
And made your tongue unable to complaine
But love, I see some part of it in thee,
Alcra'tier Tamora with her two sonnes,
And me hath dealt as poorely I am sure

That

[illegible]

Enter Titus.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

I spetting euer when some one our turge,
Wil in his brutish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sonnes are gone:
Heere stands my other sonne, a banisht man,
And heere my brother weeping at my woes
But that which gives my soule the greatest wounde,
Is heere Lauinia dearer then my soule.
Had I but seene thy picture in this plight,
It would haue made me downe. Wrath, and reuenge
Now, behold thy tender body—
Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy teares
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyred thee
Thy husband he is dead, and for his death
Thy brothers are condemned and dead by this
Looke Marcus, ah sonne Lauinia looke on her.
When I did name her brothers, newe fresh teares
Stood on her cheekes as doth the honie dew,
Vpon a gathered lilie almost wither'd.
Mar. Perchance she weepes because they killed her husband,
Perchance because she knowes them innocent.
Tit. If they did kill thy husband then be joyfull,
Because the law hath tane reuenge on them.
No, no, they would not do so foule a deede,
Witnes the sorrow that their sister makes.
Gentle Lauinia let me kisse thy lips,
Or make some signes how I may do thee ease
Shall thy good Vncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou and I sit round about some fountaine,
Looking all downewards to behold our cheekes
How they are stain'd like meadowes yet not dry
With miery slime left on them by a flood?
And in the Fountaine shall we gape and drinke
Out of the challow'd caues with teares and sighes,
And to the skies let vs send forth our eyes
Like to three watry Centaures, to poure in
Fresh supply of brackish water like to vs,
That we may crie and drowne the lower parts
Of this sad world with our impetuous teares?
Or shall we cut away our hands like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues and in dumbe shewes
Passe the remainder of our hateful dayes?
What shall we do? Let vs that haue our tongues
Plot some deuice of further miseries
To make vs wonder'd at in time to come.
Luc. Sweet Father cease your teares, for at your griefe
See how my wretched sister sobs and weepes.
Mar. Patience deare Niece, good Titus dry thine eyes.
Tit. Ah Marcus, Marcus, Brother well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drinke a teare of mine,
For thou poore man hast drown'd it with thine owne.
Luc. Ah my Lauinia I will wipe thy cheekes.
Tit. Marke Marcus marke, I vnderstand her signes,
Had she a tongue to speake, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee.
His Napkin with her true teares all bewet,
Can do no seruice on her sorrowfull cheekes.
O what a mutuall of woe is this
As farre from helpe, as Limbo is from blisse,

Enter Aaron the Moore alone.

Aaron. Tytus Andronicus, my Lord the Emperour,
Sends thee this word, that if thou loue thy sonnes,
Let Marcus, Lucius or thy selfe old Titus,
Or any one of you chop off your hand,
And send it to the King: he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sonnes alyue,
And that shall be the ransome for their fault

Tit. O gracious Emperour of gratious Rome,
Did euer Raue so ioyfull for a Larke,
This grieues sweet day in getting of my sonnes
With mutuall weight, let me exchange for this,
Good Aaron wilt thou help to chop it off?
Luc. Stay Father, for that noble hand of thine,
That hath throwne downe so many enemies
Shall not be sent, my hand will serue the turne,
My youth can better spare my blood than you,
And therefore mine shall saue my brothers liues.
Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And rear'd aloft the bloody battaile axe,
Writing destruction on the enemies Castle?
O none of both but are of high desert,
My hand hath bin but idle, let it serue
To ransome my two nephewes from their death,
Then haue my hands scarues to shew for warres,
Fit to bedeck my kinsmen's funerals,
And my sad stumps instead of scutcheons,
Not one of which shall bring his maister backe,
But I will defend my handy-worke,
Speake Titus what is your sentence now?
Tit. Now I see you're a mutinous crew,
Say you will be controlled by your inferiour,
Or else we will banish you to the maine,
Come Brother take a knife, cut off your hand,
Or with the other I will send the head
Of you, or Titus sonne to Rome againe.
Luc. Is this the law, and this your common iustice?
Is this the sacred honour of your name,
That you esteeme your promise once engaged?
Mar. My lord, the case is hard, but common reason
Makes it seeme light: therefore I will die
For my deliuerance, as I hope to liue
To do my country seruice, if time and fortune serue me.
Tit. Speake thou no more, if all the rest will speede,
I'll cut off your heads, chop off your hands,
Send me the heads of all three for the ransome,
And hope to haue the Emperour to keepe his word.
Luc. Let me redeeme my brothers both with this hand,
Mar. And that my nephewes liberty with this.
Tit. Agree betweene you I will spare my hand
Luc. Then Ile go fetch an Axe.
Mar. But I will vse the Axe. Exeunt
Tit. Come hither Aaron, lend me here thy hand,
Giue me thy knife, and I will see thee paide,
Aaron. It shall be cause of more than the benefit,
And neuer while I liue receiued motion
But I deceiue you in some subtle sort,
And trust you I will cut off better parts.

Hearts of Iron and.

Enter Lucius and Marcus with Aaron.

Tit. Now stay you strife, what shall be, is dispatcht,
Good Aaron giue Marcus our Empresse hand,
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it:
More hath it merited, that let it haue,
As for his sonnes, say I account of them,
As iewels purchast at an easie price,
And yet dearer too as I bought them owne,
Aaron. I go Aaron and this my hand,
Look by and by to haue thy sonnes with thee:
Their heads I meane. Oh how this villany
Doth fit the deedie of it selfe
Let fooles do good, and fair men call for grace,
Aaron will haue his soule blacke like his face.
Tit. O here I lift this one hand vp to heauen,
And bow this feeble ruine to the earth,
If any power pities wretched teares,
To that I call: what wilt thou kneele with me?
Do then deare heart, for heauen shall heare our prayers,
Or with our sighes we'll breathe the welkin dimme,
And staine the Sunne with fogge as sad as ours,
Wee'll strike the ground with our impatient feete,
Mar. O brother speake with possibilities,
And do not breake into these deepe extreames
Tit. Is not my sorrow deepe, hauing no bottome?

Then be my passe-bottom of thy weary barke.
Mar. Ah brother, thus to grace me with thy teares.
Tam. There are yet seeds remaining in mine eyes,
Too barren for such fertile plants as these.
Who though they issue from their mother's wombe
Like to the Scythian Tamar, cold and dead,
Yet will I water them with fountains of my face:
And with my breath revive them to the life.
Mar. Then let me bathe them in the brinish sea,
Or with Niobe be turned into stone,
For these, me thinks, are fit for nothing else,
But to be water'd from the springs of heaven,
To deck the naked world with their moysture.

Enter Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Luc. Why weep'st thou, Aunt? these should be our hearts,
Our eyes are too unkind, too hard of heart,
Abusing the instruments wherewith we use
To express our passions with more ease.
Quin. Sweet Nephew, pardon us our griefs,
Our woes are written in our flowing eyes,
Which, like a sealed letter, must be read
Before the heart can understand the same.
Mar. Alas, my Lord, I have but kist your hand,
And closed in my hand her modest lip,
Which never opened but to speak the truth,
So have my cheeks been bathed in her tears,
Whose sacred moysture, trickling down my beard,
Like dew upon the mountain leaves,
Hath made them blush to be so passionate.
Quin. Ah Martius, strive not to conceal your grief,
Lest you run mad, as we poor Andronici,
Have done before you.
Tam. And let not him that is a Father long,
Show weakness how to bear his children's death.
Mar. Now gentle Nephew, let me see thy hand,
That I may help thee with my breath since dead
Thy uncle and thy father bade me do so.
Lucius, I will not mingle words and tears,
But bear me soberly to my grave.
Come cousin, you that were but late adorned
With princely robes to sit amongst the Queens,
Must now be servile to your wretched kin,
To lead fond Priam through the Grecian host.
Luc. Ah cousin, thou art much deceived in this,
My father never shall return to Rome.
Mar. Then I'll not go home to Lavinia,
I will consort thee in thy wanderings.
Luc. I'll bear you hence, for I will home to Rome.
Mar. Ah, we will help you to lament your exile,
And make the mockers weep to see our woe.
Tam. Alas, the senseless stones will sooner melt
Than Rome's hard-hearted Tribunes shed a tear.
Mar. Yet let us try what we can do or say,
To soften them with our deep-fetched sighs,
Since words will not prevail, nor tears suffice.
But if we cannot, we will take our leaves,
For we will mourn without the gates of Rome.
Tam. Will you leave us all alone here at the gates?
Mar. Ah, gentle Aunt, what shall we do else?
Luc. Return with us into the city, Uncle,
Say that we went to gather flowers for you,
Give us the garlands, and we will return.
Mar. I have the flowers already that I like,
Without the which I am not to be seen.
Quin. Then either let us all go in together,
Or all abide here until you come.
Mar. Fie, brother, fie, teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.
Luc. How shall I then begin to comfort you?
They want their tongues to tell their bitter griefs.
Mar. Ah, do not tell me of my tongue,
Lest I tell you how much I want my tongue.
Perceive you not by signs and tokens how
Her husband's dead, and her two brothers slain?
Luc. Ah, say no more lest I run mad.
Quin. We have no sons to succour us,
Our helpless years stand in need of maintenance,
Alas, we plough not, we have no trades to live by,
We cannot mow, we are not fit for war,
Therefore I tell you again, content you,
Or we will famish in these public streets.
Mar. Ah, now I see 'tis true, for they say,
Good deeds are fruitful in a fruitful field.
Luc. Then gentle Uncle, let us all depart,
Let us be gone, and find out Rome's enemies,
Come, come, sweet Lavinia, look not so sad,
Happily we shall meet with Titus there,
Or he with us, shall be returned to Rome.
Come, Aunt, you must not murmur thus,
Nor Martius, you must not weep.
Now let us take our last farewell of you.
Mar. Nephew, not so, for we will bear you hence.
Luc. Then have your own way, we will follow you.
Mar. Come on, poor babes, some heavenly power guide
Your pretty feet to right your wandering ways,
And sometimes rest you with heart-easing thoughts.
But somewhere stay to see your father's face.
Luc. And with this last farewell I take my leave,
Bending my eyes and blessing with my heart,
Directing my good will with holy thoughts.
Quin. Farewell, sweet Lucius, and good Martius,
Thy sister Lavinia and her loving kin,
Poor Queen of Goths, your hapless brother dead,
And Titus unto all brave Romans else.
Tam. Ah, let this my last blessing seem as warm
And take as deep impression of my mind,
As when Aeneas with his houshold gods
Forsook the ruins of the burning Troy,
Clapped his sails, and with a prosperous wind
Made for the fruitful Coasts of Italy,
Where he was promised he should arrive at last.
Even so with tearful eyes and labouring breath,
I take my leave of you my dearest friends.
Luc. Aunt and my Lord, good fortune speed us well,
Commit we now our holy vows to heaven,
To whose high will we bow our present woes,
That we may live to tell our children's children
What storms of fortune fell upon their house.
Come, Martius, come, fair Lavinia, dear cousin,

Speech, fell complayner I will learne thy thought:
In thy dumb action will be as perfect
As begging Hermits in their holy prayers.
Thou shalt not sigh, nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneele, nor make thy signe,
But I (of these) will wrest an Alphabet,
And by still practise learne to know thy meaning.
Boy. Good grandsire leave these bitter deepe laments,
Make my Aunt merry with some pleasing tale.
Mar. Alas the tender boy in passion moued,
Doth weep to see his grandsire heavinesse.
Andr. Peace tender sapling, thou art made of teares,
And teares will quickly melt thy life away.
Mar strikes the dish with a knife
What dost thou strike at Marcus with my knife?
Mar. At that that I have kild my lord that's dead.
Andr. Out on thee murderer, thou kildst my children,
My children are at rest and thou canst part
Their mother cannot mourne her children one,
A woe to her and me, for now she wakes.
Mar. Who wakes Lord Andronicus with her sighs?
Andr. Dead Lucina that doth not regard
How these are slaine, or Aaron the Moore
Sweet flowers and faire intending infancie,
Cut off before the season of their growth.
But see thy shame ranke theefe and read not on.
Mar. Sweet Vncle I beseech pardon me this,
Within the hollow compasse of a hand
I saw a thousand fearefull wrongs ingraft
In their dead father, these I am asham'd
That you should rip your noble minde with woe,
Least you should by my mirth perceive the weight
Which I have borne in my disturbed brest.
I pray you read some pleasant storie or other,
Apt to delight, and weane your minde from woe.
Andr. Lucius come hither, boy come hither,
What booke?
Luc. Forsooth an booke with prettie pictures,
'Twas a booke of Ouids Metamorphosis,
My father gaue me.
Andr. Let me see that booke.
Luc. I cannot grandsire, my father did not like
That I should learne by pictures when I read.
Andr. Ah boy, thy father hath done well in this,
Sorrow is dull and blunt in wretched soules,
Their weake apprehension cannot reach
The quicke invention of a learned man,
Their memories are gone, their senses lost,
Yet doth the Painter play the Orator
In action, gesture, and set figures,
Which well considered, tell a tragicke tale.
Come boy, and let thy grandsire see the truth
Of some sweet story, some prettie morall
Or some dispersed Tale of Troian Sinon,
Or any thing that fits not with my woe.
Luc. This booke shewes the storie of Philomele
And her faire sister Tereus forced rape,
And rape I feare was root of thine annoy.
Andr. Sorrow confound thee if it be the cause,
Ah gentle boy, thou makst me sad to see thee,
Philomele sweet girle, was ravished my wife?
Forced my daughter? and shee ravished?
Where was this booke when my sweet daughter
Was ravished, and the theefe bereft her tongue,
And hid the perfect path of her faire limbes
With knife full sharpe, and razing Instrument?
Alas poore girle, how blushest thou to tell
Thy shame, which like a canker in the spring
Hath blasted the fragrant bud of thy sweet flower?
Mar. Perchance my Lord she knowes some other way
To expresse her mind, for indeed I know
Some other way more common than this
To vent my passion by signes and tokens.
Andr. It was my deare, and he that wrong'd her brother
Abusde her hands that could on him bestow
Additions of honour, not disgrace.
How now my Lord, what say you to all this?
Haue you no hand to blush for such a wrong?
Speake boy, what say you?
Boy. Vnckle I say more than I can well performe,
Having no eyes to see, hands to teach,
Or tongue to speake a word with all.
Luc. Good grandsire leave these bitter deepe laments,
Make my Aunt merry with some pleasing tale.
Mar. Alas poore man, griefe has so wrought on him,
He takes false shadowes for true substances.
Andr. Come take away this booke, and read to me,
Thou art deformed, and read to me,
Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.
Come boy, and goe with me thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begin to dazle. Exeunt

Actus Quartus.

Enter young Lucius and his Aunt meeting him, and the boy bearing books that have been turned on.

Luc. Helpe sweet Aunt to carry, my Aunt Lauinia,
For shewes me euery where I know not why.
Good Vncle Marcus see how swift she comes,
And sweet Aunt stand not at whom you beare
Mar. Stand by me Lucius, do not feare thy Aunt.
Tit. She loues thee boy too well to do thee harme
Boy. I when my father was in Rome she did.
Mar. What meanes my Neece Lauinia by these signes?
Tit. Fear boy with her, some what doth fright her sure
See Lucius see how much she makes of thee:
Some whether would she haue thee goe with her.
Ah boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sonnes, than she hath read to thee,
Sweet Poetry, and Tullies Oratour.
Canst thou interpret to me Gentle boy,
What stirres her griefe with such impatience?
Luc. My Lord I know not, nor can I guesse,
Vnles some fit or frenzie do possesse her.
For I haue heard my Grandsire say full oft
Extremity of griefe would make men mad.
And I haue read that Hecuba of Troy,
Ran mad through sorrow: that made me to feare,
Although my Lord, I know my noble Aunt,
Loues me as deare as ere my mother did,
And am not sportiue of correction.
Your Honour knowes, and so I hope she doth,
I humbly craue, let me interpret for me.
If I my selfe haue done some vndeserued fault,
I know she should correct me for it,
And so I know she doth, for boyes must beare,
And I must beare from her, there is no remedie.
Mar. Pardon me Princes all, for what I shall haue said
Or done amisse in passion for my Neece,
And Noble Vncle, for my wife sake my Lord
Pardon my gentle Neece, that meekely seemes
To sue for grace with such a louely countenance.
Tit. Doth not she hope that I am well in blood
To haue her mother, if not sister slaine?
Mar. Come Lucius come stay not to talke with them.
Boy. Sweet Vncle speake you doubt my Aunt will hurt me?
How noble he is of his looks and speech!
Doth not she hope that I am growne more wise
Than rash young boyes that neuer gate experience,
And could not euermore be hid out of doores?
Doth not she hope that this experience
Hath taught me pawses for to time my deedes,
And to obserue occasion in my gate
Lest I be heard, and chid for being heard?
Doth not she hope for these experiments?
Mar. Fie Nephew, fie you are past your selfe,
Your Gentle Vncle kindly flouted you,
Why do you fetch these passions on your selfe?
Boy. Pardon me Vncle for my passion,
I haue some cause my Aunt should fright me,
Whose mother was her painting and her ornament,
Let not me think but death ends all my griefe.
And Vncle and Aunt haue done the deed.
Mar. Marke Vncle how he marks his Aunts wrongs
With bitter taunts and with obprobrious words.
Tit. It was my deare, and he that wrong'd her brother
Abusde her hands that could on him bestow
Additions of honour, not disgrace.
How now my Lord, what say you to all this?
Haue you no hand to blush for such a wrong?
Speake boy, what say you?
Boy. Vnckle I say more than I can well performe,
Having no eyes to see, hands to teach,
Or tongue to speake a word with all.
Luc. Good grandsire leave these bitter deepe laments,
Make my Aunt merry with some pleasing tale.
Mar. Alas poore man, griefe has so wrought on him,
He takes false shadowes for true substances.
Andr. Come take away Lauinia this booke,
Thou art deformed, and read to me,
Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.
Come boy, and goe with me thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begin to dazle. Exeunt

Actus Quartus.

Enter young Lucius and his Aunt meeting him, and the boy bearing books that have been turned on.

Luc. Helpe sweet Aunt to carry, my Aunt Lauinia,
For shewes me euery where I know not why.
Good Vncle Marcus see how swift she comes,
And sweet Aunt stand not at whom you beare
Mar. Stand by me Lucius, do not feare thy Aunt.
Tit. She loues thee boy too well to do thee harme
Boy. I when my father was in Rome she did.
Mar. What meanes my Neece Lauinia by these signes?
Tit. Fear boy with her, some what doth fright her sure
See Lucius see how much she makes of thee:
Some whether would she haue thee goe with her.
Ah boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sonnes, than she hath read to thee,
Sweet Poetry, and Tullies Oratour.
Canst thou interpret to me Gentle boy,
What stirres her griefe with such impatience?
Luc. My Lord I know not, nor can I guesse,
Vnles some fit or frenzie do possesse her.
For I haue heard my Grandsire say full oft
Extremity of griefe would make men mad.
And I haue read that Hecuba of Troy,
Ran mad through sorrow: that made me to feare,
Although my Lord, I know my noble Aunt,
Loues me as deare as ere my mother did,
And am not sportiue of correction.
Your Honour knowes, and so I hope she doth,
I humbly craue, let me interpret for me.
If I my selfe haue done some vndeserued fault,
I know she should correct me for it,
And so I know she doth, for boyes must beare,
And I must beare from her, there is no remedie.
Mar. Pardon me Princes all, for what I shall haue said
Or done amisse in passion for my Neece,
And Noble Vncle, for my wife sake my Lord
Pardon my gentle Neece, that meekely seemes
To sue for grace with such a louely countenance.
Tit. Doth not she hope that I am well in blood
To haue her mother, if not sister slaine?
Mar. Come take away Lauinia this booke,
Thou art deformed, and read to me,
Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.
Come boy, and goe with me thy sight is young,

Th. after me, I haue writ my name,
Without the help of any hand at all.
Curst be that hart that forces vs to this shift
Write thou good Neece, and heere deliuer it,
Wish God we might be heard, and we discouered for reuenge,
Heauen guide thy pen to print thy sorrowes plaine,
That we may know the Traytors and the truth.

She takes the staffe in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps and writes.

Tit. O doe you read my Lord what she hath writ?
Stuprum, Chiron, Demetrius.
Mar. What meanes that, the lustfull sonnes of Tamora
Performers of this hainous bloody deed?
Tit. Magne Dominator poli.
Tam omnia videns, quid dea tam cruda tacet?
Mar. O calme thee gentle Lord. Although I know
There is enough written vpon this earth,
To fire a mans incensed thoughts,
And arme reuenge downe right to cruelties.
My Lord kneele downe with me, Lauinia kneele,
And kneele sweet boy, the Romane Hectors hope,
And swear with me, as with the woefull heere
And father of that chaste dishonored Dame,
Lord Iunius Brutus sware for Lucrece rape,
That we will prosecute by good aduise,
Mortall reuenge vpon these traytorous Gothes,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.
Tit. Tis sure enough, and you knew how.
But if you hurt these Bearre whelpes, then beware
The Dam will wake and if she wind you once,
She's with the Lion deeply still in league
And lulls him whilst she playes on her backe,
And when he sleepes will she do what she list.
You are a fool to set a watch on him, let it alone.
And come, I will vse the skill of me.
And with a gad of steele will write these words,
And lay a fine plot in the Northerne winde
Will blow these sands like Sibels leaues abroad,
And what remaines of them will be to blame.
Boy. Faire Lord, and I were a man,
Their mother should not carry them thus for scorne.
For these bad bondmen to the yoake of Rome
Mar. Ist's my boy shall turne his fortune thus,
For I will helpe old Crazy time thereto.
Boy. And I will do it well, and oft assay.
Tit. Come go with me into mine Armorie,
Lucius shalt send the weapons well, my boy
Shall carry from me to the Empresse sonnes,
Presents that I intend to send them both,
Come, come, thou'lt do my message wilt thou not?
Boy. I with my dagger in their bosomes Grandsire:
Tit. No boy not so, Ile teach thee another course,
Lauinia come, Marcus vnto my house,
Lucius and I'le goe braue it at the Court,
I marry will we sir, and we'le be waited on. Exeunt
Mar. O heauens can you heare a good man groane
And not relent or not compassion him?
Marcus attend him in his extremes,
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Then foe-mans marks vpon his batter'd shield,
But yet so just, that he will not reuenge,
Reuenge the heauens for old Andronicus. Exit

Enter Aaron and Demetrius at one dore, and at the other Chiron and another, with a bundle of weapons and verses vpon them.

Chi. Demetrius heeres a sonnet of Lucres,
He hath some message to deliuer vs.
Aron. I some mad message from his mad Grandfather
Dem. My Lords, with all the humblenesse I may,
I greete your Honours from Andronicus,
And pray the Romane Gods confound you both.
Demet. Gramercie louely Lucres what's the newes?
For vnkle mark with tape. May it please you,
My Grandsire well aduised hath sent by me,
The goodliest weapons of his Armorie,
To gratifie your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome for so he bad me say.
And so I do and with his gifts present
Your Lordships when euer you haue need.
You may be armed and appointed well,
And so I leaue you both like bloody minded. Exit
Dem. What heere? a scrole, & written round about?
Let's see.
Integer vitæ scelerisque purus, non eget mauri iaculis nec arcu.
Chi. O 'tis verses Horace, I know it well
I read it in the Grammer long ago.
Aron. I iust it is Horace right you haue it,
Now what a thing it is to be an Asse?
Heere's no sound iest, the old man hath found their guile,
And sends the weapons wrapt about with lines,
That wound beyond their feeling to the quick.
But were our witty Empresse well a foot,
She would applaud Andronicus conceit.
But let her rest in her vnquiet a while.
And now young Lords was't not a happy starre
Led vs to Rome strangers, and more than so,
Captiues, to be aduanced to the state of Lords?
I said me good boy to the fortune of the Gothes.
To beare the Emperour wanders hunting
Dem. Be the Acteon was to see so great a Lord
Basely insinuate, and send vs gifts.
Aron. Had he not reason Lord Demetrius?
Did you not vse his daughter very friendly?
Dem. I would we had a thousand Roman Dames
At such a bay by turne to serue our lust.
Chi. A charitable wish, and full of loue.
Aron. Heere lack's but you mother to day, Amen.
Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more
Dem. Come, let vs go, and pray to all the Gods
For our beloued mother in her paines.
Aron. Pray to the deuils, the gods haue giuen vs ouer.
Trumpets sound within.
Dem. Why do the Emperors trumpets flourish thus?
Chi. Belike for ioy the Emperour hath a sonne.
Dem. Soft who comes heere?
Enter Nurse with a blacke a Moore childe.
Nur. Good morrow Lords
O tell me, did you see Aaron the Moore?
Aron. Well, more or lesse, or neere a whit at all,
Heere Aaron is, and what with Aaron now?
Nurse. Oh gentle Aaron, we are all vndone,
Now helpe or woe betide thee euermore
Aron. Why, what a caterwalling coil'st thou keepe?
What doest thou wrap and fumble in thy armes?
Nurse O that which I would hide from heauens eye,
Our Empresse shame, and stately Romes disgrace,
She is deliuered Lords, she is deliuered.
Aron To whom?
Nurse I meane she is brought a bed.
Aron. Well God giue her good rest,

What

What hath he sent her?

Nurse. A Letter!

Aaron. Why she is the Deuils Dam: a scourge for

Nurse. A blessed, damned blacke & sorrowful time,

Heere is the base is loathsome as a toad,

Amongst

The

And

Sweet

Lome.

Aaron.

Dem.

Enter Lucius with the rest and two Pages with him.

Tam. Newes, newes from heaven,
Marcus the post is come
Sonne, what yongs? haue you our letters?
Shall I haue Iustice what says Impiter?

Clowne. Ho? the maker, he sayes that he hath taken them downe againe, for the man must not be hang'd till the next weeke.

Tit. But what sayes Iupiter, I aske thee?

Clowne. Alas sir, I know not Iupiter
I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why villaine art not thou the Carrier?

Clowne. I of my horse haue, and my pelle

Tit. Why, doest thou not come from heauen?

Clowne. From heauen? Alas sir, I never came there
God forbid I should be so bold to presse to heauen in my young yeares. Why I am going with my pigeons to the Tribunall Plebs, to take vp a matter of brawle, betwixt my Vncle and one of the Emperialls men.

Mar. Why sir that is as fit as can be to serue for your Oration, and let him deliuer the Pigeons to the Emperour from you.

Tit. Tell me can you deliuer an Oration to the Emperour with a Grace?

Clowne. Nay truely sir I could neuer say Grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirra come hither, make no more adoe,
But giue your Pigeons to the Emperour,
Bethink you Father, this belongs vnto you.
Hold, meane while here's money for thy charges
Come take away. Lucius, will you deliuer
Your selues with a Grace, deliuer a Supplication?

Clowne. I sir

Tam. Now here is a Supplication for you, and when you come to him, at the first approch you must kneele, then kisse the Emperours feete, and then deliuer vp your Pigeons, and then lastly desire him to read the Supplication.

Clowne. I warrant you sir, let me alone.

Tit. Sirra hast thou a knife? Come let me see it.
Here Marcus fold the Bill vp for him,
As if it were a thing that I deliuer'd,
For if it should be toucht with any poyson,
The Emperour sooner will sucke it vp.
Come, go with me into mine Armorie,
Lucius, Ile fit thee, and withall my boy
Shall carry from me to the Empresse sonnes
Presents that I intend to send them both.
Come, come thou'lt do my message wilt thou not?

Clowne. I my Lord I warrant you, if you giue me good words inough.

Tit. Why then thou shalt haue 'em, hold, hold, hold.

Exeunt.

Enter the Emperour and Empresse, and her two Sonnes, the Emperour brings Arrowes in his hand that Iupiter shot at them.

Sat. Why Lords,
What wrongs are these? was euer seene
An Emperour of Rome thus ouerborne,
Troubled, confronted thus, and for the extent
Of egall Iustice vs'd in such contempt?
My Lords you know right well the feeble state of Rome,
(How euer these disturbers of our peace
Buzze in the peoples eares) there nought hath past,
But euen with law against the wilfull sonnes
Of old Andronicus. And what an end
His sorrowes haue, so fortune keepe her wheele,
So Rome may loose her honour in no more,
Then in the fall of this vnhappie man.
And now he writes to heauen for his reuenge.
See, here's to Iupiter, and this to Mercurie,

Tam.

This to Apollo, this to the God of warre
Sweet scrowles to fly about the streets of Rome
What's this but Libelling against the Senate,
And blazoning our [illegible] every where?
A goodly humour is not every [illegible]
As if we were supplyants to the people.
But I [illegible] deserues
Shall be a [illegible] to the stages
But [illegible]
In [illegible]
[illegible]
Get out the [illegible]
Tam. My [illegible] Saturnine,
For [illegible],
[illegible],
[illegible],
Whole [illegible], [illegible], and [illegible] heart,
And [illegible]
Vnapt to [illegible]
[illegible] compos. What [illegible] become
Is plotted Tamora to [illegible] Aside.
By Tam, I have to [illegible] like,
Two [illegible] [illegible] be wise,
[illegible], and the Aduersaries close.
Enter Clowne.
How now good fellow, would'st thou speake with vs?
Clow. Yea forsooth, an your Mistership be Emperiall.
Tam. Empriall villaine, thou vnderstandst the Emperour.
Clow. Troth, God & Saint Stephen giue you good den; I haue brought you a Letter, & a couple of pigeons heere.
Exit Clowne with the Letter.
Sat. Go take him away, and hang him presently.
Clowne. How much money must I haue?
Tam. Come to me first, and heare me speake.
Clow. Hang'd euer Lady then I haue strength to stretch a halter too. Exit.
Sat. Despight of all dishonorable wrongs,
Vnkindly deeds is monstrous vnkind?
I know from whence this same deuice proceedes.
May this be borne? As separate as the day,
This very day last I trust shall ouer-see.
Those [illegible] beene [illegible]
[illegible] the vildest [illegible]
Nor Age, nor [illegible], shall [illegible]
For [illegible]
Sylla [illegible]
[illegible]
Enter Nuntius [illegible]
Satur. What newes [illegible]?
Emm. Arme my Lord [illegible],
The Gothes haue gathered [illegible]
Of [illegible]
Hey [illegible]
O Lucius, [illegible]
What [illegible]
As [illegible]
Aar. Is [illegible] Generall of these Gothes?
The very [illegible]
As [illegible]
[illegible]
Tut [illegible],
My [illegible]
(When [illegible])
That Lucius banishment was wrongfully,
And they [illegible] that Lucius were their Emperour.
Tam. Why should you feare? is not our City strong?
Sat. Yes, but [illegible]
And [illegible]
And [illegible]
Tam. And [illegible] make it mine, and I thanke you all.
But [illegible]
And [illegible]
Sat. Then goe successantly, and plead for him. Exit

Actus Quintus.

Enter [illegible] with an Army of Gothes, with Drum and Soulders.

Luc. Approued warriors, and my faithfull Friends,
[illegible] Letters for great Rome,
[illegible] what hate they beares to our Emperour,
And [illegible]
The [illegible] Lords, to you I [illegible],
[illegible] to impatient of our wrongs,
And [illegible]
Let [illegible]
Goth. Braue slip-sprung from the Great Andronicus,
[illegible] was once our terrour now our comfort,
[illegible] your [illegible] Deeds,
[illegible] requests with foule contempt.
[illegible] weene for [illegible],
[illegible] Flies [illegible] Summers day,
For [illegible] Master to the lowrest [illegible],
And [illegible]
And [illegible]
Luc. I humbly [illegible] and I thanke you all.
But [illegible]
And [illegible]
Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troups I strayd,
To gaze vpon a famous Monument,

And

Luc. Even by my God I sweare to thee I saw him take it.
Aron. Eath know you
I begot him on the Empresse
Luc. O most intolerable villanie!
Aron. Tut Lucius! 'twas but a deed of Charitie,
To that which ere long shall be done for him,
These seuen Sonnes (as murdered for their
And cut their heads off and with mad rage and
Luc. O detestable villaine!
Call'st thou that trimming?
Aron. Why she was waild, and tender, and mild,
And 'twas too little for their barbarous griefe.
Luc. Once more, I warne thee to attempt them,
The Emperour and wretched Mother,
I am resolu'd then to acquaint the Emperour
And tell him of the treason you intend.
Who shall set downe the Ladder for the Moore,
Why there Demetrius and Chiron stood,
Why so, brave Lords, when we joyn'd in league,
I spied a Blacke-faced Moore, say I,
And blest him for the same:
Aron. Lucius, all hail Romes royall Emperour,
Luc. I pray thee tell me Aaron how begot'st thou
I know thou art the Father of a Boy,
Nay more, the Nurse and Midwife to the Child.
Aron. Ceremonious Lucius, once more
Behold my Babe swadled in these Armes,
Whose limbes resemble Noble Marshall Moore.
I say my Babe shall be a Noble man,
Which made me send him hither to your Grace,
Luc. Say, wilt thou go along with me or no?
Thy Mother will not heare me speake else.
Aron. Lucius, I will.
Luc. How many women saw this Childe of his?
Aron. Why so, brave Lords, when we joyn'd in league,
I spied a Blacke-faced Moore, say I,
And blest him for the same:
Luc. Aaron, I will

But to torment you with my bitter tongue
Luc. Sir stop your mouth, or else I shall speake no more
Enter Lucius
Goth. My Lord, there is Message from Rome
Desires to be admitted to your presence
Luc. Let him come neere
Welcome Ambassador, what's newes from Rome?
Emi. Lord Lucius, and you Princes of the Gothes,
The Romane Emperour greetes you all by me,
And for he hears you are addrest to Armes,
To expresse a noble care of your estate
With your good daughter Queene Tamora,
And your sad sonnes exiled from their Mother,
Goth. Would you had found some friendly Messenger
Luc. Then he had come as you doe, but more welcome
Your Noble Emperour sends to you all
Tam. Titus, unkinde Titus, speake to me some,
Behold thy daughter drops her Noble eyes
On this cold ground, my Father, my Lord,
Let me and pleasant Aaron creep
And wash the comfortless feet with my tears
Tit. Now farre be it from me to make you weepe,
Your eyes are precious eyes, they have wept
Enough already for your Brethren slaine,
And yet more dearly you must waile their fall,
Whose obsequies I come to celebrate,
Luc. Most noble Father, wofully we looke
Upon the sad solemnities you have,
And joy to see you in this happy state,
Tam. Why should a man whose bloud is warme within Sit like his Grandsire cut in Alabaster?
Sleepe we not commonly after our Warres?
Right glad am I he is not buried now
Among the number of the pallid dead,
And I am greeved for the hard mischance
That brings us quiet rest before the time,
Luc. Then gentle Brother, get you in againe,
Let Titus take his time to doe him honour,
Tam. Sir Nephew, that is well said at my Lords request,
But I am sure you will not say me nay,
Tit. Unto your Honour's love I doe commend
My boy to be Entombed with my Brethren,
Sem. Long live Lord Titus my beloved Brother,
Gracious Triumpher in the eyes of Rome,
Tit. Thanke Tribune, I thanke you all,
Anon when all our Soules are blithe and light,
In feasting and in joy of Titus safe return,
Forget not to expresse your Funerall mirth,
Luc. Uncle Marcus, since it is my Father's mind
That we obey his Funerall with gladnesse,
Marc. Then Nephew grace the Obsequies with sighs,
Sad Teares, sad Words, sad Weeds we all put on,
And bootlesse Plaints, and Cryes, and Orisons,
Lucius, I am sure you have a many sad Speeches
To say for your Noble Father in his Tombe,
Luc. Then gentle Brother, help me with your Mourning,
Exeunt Marcus and Lucius.
Tit. Now Farewell flesh, thus I enter thee,
Thus in this Hell doe I make my Bed,
Tam. Titus, unkinde Titus, speake to me some,
Behold thy daughter drops her Noble eyes
On this cold ground, my Father, my Lord,
Let me and pleasant Aaron creep
And wash the comfortless feet with my tears
Tit. Wee doubt not but with Conquest you will Enforce your love to make us Orisons,
But at your pleasure, and we will,
And shall my Soule be comforted?
Your Grace is welcome to the Citie,
Sem. Titus, I come to talke with thee
Tit. No more, no more, you see I have no Roome,
Where you shall not see Tombes and Sepulchres,
Sem. I am the Tribune of the People, and
I must intreate you to grant me one more
Tam. I am the Queene of Gothes,
Then you must heare me speake,
Tit. I am not bound to doe it, yet I will,
Speake Romane Tribune, and we will attend,
Sem. Then know Titus, that the Romane Commons
Have by their Tribunes and their Ancients
Elected him Emperour of Rome,
To be a torment to mine Enemies?
Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.
Tit. Do me not that dishonour Romane Lords,
To enterprise Rome Marcus Andronicus,
Now you are come unto your Seate
Sit on your Throne, serene and bright,
And dazle all beholders with your Honour,
And suffer me and mine to passe in peace,
And let me governe Rome as best I may,
Sem. Then Titus, I commend both me and Rome,
And Rome it selfe unto your gentle keeping,
Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the Emperour for his good,
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus,
And let it be mine Honour good my Lord,
That I commend my Lord the Emperour,
And her faire Princesse, Mistresse of my Marriage,
To the hope full comforts of your Lovely bed,
Faire Lavinia, you are not displeased with this?
Tit. Not I my Lord, sith true Nobility
Warrants these words in Princely courtesie,
Sem. Then please your Honours, let us ope the doores,
Tit. Lord Emperour, behold the doores are open,
And my gratious Lord of Gothes welcome to Rome,
Welcome also my gentle Lady of Gothes,
Tam. What, no speech to my Daughter Hecubaes Sonne?
Dem. See my Lord where your Sonne was slaine,
Tam. See Lords my Sonne was slaine because he fought for Rome,
And Lords we must requite your love so,
Tit. Why suffer you not speech to be made to your Sonne?
Tam. Alas, the senselesse Boy hears not our words,
Why doth my Lord Revive not Romes great Feast?
Tit. Unkinde Romans, unthankfull Citizens,
Could I perswade you to any thing,
Had you no Scarres to shew for loving me?
Then I should turne to see what helpe I had,
No, for you see me weake and sicke with cares,
That have no hope to live one houre with you,
But all alone to mourne some fifteene yeares,
Now you are come a Praying unto me,
I cannot sue unto my Countrymen,
Go backe to Rome, sollicite the Senate,
Get you a Warme dwelling, and happily
You may persuade perhaps a Banished man,
Alas, how can you credit what I say,
Since every Roman seeks for Revenge,
Even by the Sentence of Lavinia's Sonne,
And this my Sonne, this my deare Sonne,
Whose smiling gates I entred but two houres since,
Even he hath slaine with Deadly hate,
Some of your Sonnes, and me and all my Friends,
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eate up my invention,
Nor Fortune done my Untimely wrongs,
But they must ebbe and flow all in this hand,
And this shall execute the same on you,
Proud Insulting Boy, Becomming your Fortune ill,
Lavinia, take this Infant in your Armes,
Come Lords, and harke for your Lives,
None shall come neere for feare of worse,
Tam. Titus, I come to talke with thee
Tit. No, not a word, how can I grace my talke,
Wanting a hand to give it action?
I have not another tricke, were I to woe my Soule,
Tam. Titus, I have a hand to shake with thine,
That hand shall tell thee what thy words do meane,
Tit. Is not your Sonne slaine, is not that sad signe
A deed of death done on the innocent,
Sufficient to make me doe any thing
Which I forbid by any meanes to doe?
Tam. Know that the people of Rome for whom we stand,
Speake in this cause as Orators to Romulus,
Bid him enlarge his Pinions as the Roman Eagle
Doth spread her wings, view well the state of Rome,
But Titus what is done is done,
Let what is done unto them rest well done,
Let us be satisfied with what is done,
Luc. Then Brother welcome me to your gentle Tent,
Let not sad Fancie dwell in dolefull lookes,
But let your Reason with your Fortune sute,
And make a Mirth of your impatience,
For Andronicus, this I speake unto thee,
Tit. Proud Insulting Boy, Becomming your Fortune ill,
Lavinia, take this Infant in your Armes,
Come Lords, and harke for your Lives,
None shall come neere for feare of worse,
Tam. Titus, I come to talke with thee
Tit. No, not a word, how can I grace my talke,
Wanting a hand to give it action?
I have not another tricke, were I to woe my Soule,
Tam. Titus, I have a hand to shake with thine,
That hand shall tell thee what thy words do meane,
Tit. Is not your Sonne slaine, is not that sad signe
A deed of death done on the innocent,
Sufficient to make me doe any thing
Which I forbid by any meanes to doe?
Tam. Know that the people of Rome for whom we stand,
Speake in this cause as Orators to Romulus,
Bid him enlarge his Pinions as the Roman Eagle
Doth spread her wings, view well the state of Rome,
But Titus what is done is done,
Let what is done unto them rest well done,
Let us be satisfied with what is done,
Luc. Then Brother welcome me to your gentle Tent,
Let not sad Fancie dwell in dolefull lookes,
But let your Reason with your Fortune sute,
And make a Mirth of your impatience,
For Andronicus, this I speake unto thee,

Tam. Well all you leffe-ones is this all we do.
But wast not please thee good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius thy thrice Valiant Sonne,
Who leades towards Rome a Band of Warlike Gothes,
And bid him come and Banquet at thy house
When he is there, even at thy Mothers feast,
Will bring in the Emperesse Sonnes,
The Empresse selfe, and all thy Foes,
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneele,
And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.
What is this thy Sonne that neeles?

Enter Marcus.

Tit. Marcus my Brother, tis done Andronicus,
Can send Marcus to thy Nephew Lucius,
Thou shalt entreate him out among the Gothes,
Bid him repaire to Rome and bring with him
Some of the chiefest Peeres of the Gothes,
Bid him can pe his Soldiers where they are,
Tell him the Emperour, and the Empresse too,
Feasts at my house, and he shall feast with them,
This do thou for my love, and so return.
As he regards his aged Fathers life
Marc. This will I do, and soone return again.
Tam. Now will I hence about my businesse,
And take my Ministers along with me
Tit. Nay, nay, let Rapes and Murders stay with me,
Or else I feare my Brother backe againe,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.
Tam. What say you Boyes, will you bide with him,
Whiles I goe tell my Lord the Emperour,
How I have governed our determined jeast?
Tell him, it is the first time ever I
And if you will, I will come backe to you,
And come againe to Banquet with my Boyes.
Dem. Marcus we will.
Tam. How now Andronicus, what a mercy was this,
To have our dearest Friend to intercede,
Tit. Tell me, how shall I now requite you
Tam. Thus in obedience to your mandement,
I come to use Clemency and Favour
Pub. What is your will?
Tam. Know you these two?
Pub. The Empresse Sonnes
I take them Chiron Demetrius.
Tam. Fie Publius, fie, thou art too much deceaved
The one is Murder, rape is the others name,
And therefore bind them gentle Publius,
Caius and Valentine lay hands on them,
Oh that which I would hinder, must be done,
And not requested Marcus here are bloody theeves,
Chi. Villaines for feare we are the Empresse Sonnes.
Val. And therefore do we, what we are commanded.
Stop close their mouthes, let them not speake a word,
Is the order given? I think you bind them fast. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus with a knife and Lavinia with a Basen.

Tit. Come, come Lavinia, looke, thy Foes are bound,
Sirs stop their mouthes, let them not speake to me,
But let them heare what fearefull words I utter
O villaines, Chiron, and Demetrius.
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud,
This goodly Sommer with your Winter mixt.
You kill'd her husband, and for his sake
Two of her Brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest,
Both her sweet Hands, her Tongue, and that more deere
Then Hands or Tongue, her spotlesse Chastity.
Inhumane Traytors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
What would you say if I should let you speake?
Villaines for shame you could not beg for grace.
Harke Wretches, how I meane to martyr you,
This one Hand yet is left to cut your throats,
Whiles that Lavinia 'tweene her stumps doth hold.
The basen that receives your guilty blood.
You know your Mother meanes to feast with me,
And calles herselfe Revenge, and thinkes me mad,
Stand fast I have the Veines that must do you good,
And you shall drink more deare then Rhenish Wine,
And shake your gastly heads, that breake from you
Ere I have done her wicked Sonnes to death,
Like to the earth swallow her increase.
This is the day, that I have vow'd to you,
And duly to a haire have I performed
Not one houre more, nor one houre lesse,
No person thinke of ought but what I vow'd,
Now range not up and downe unseene and unknowne,
Come come, be every one officious,
I make the Banket ready, and you Sirs must dresse it,
Make dispatch, and bring the Empresse hither.
Hearts them with knives.
So now bring them in, for I'le play the Cooke,
And see them ready, gainst their Mother comes Exeunt.

Enter Lucius Marcus, and the Gothes.

Luc. Uncle Marcus since 'tis my Fathers minde
That I repair to Rome I am content
Goth. And ours with thine, befall what Fortune will
Luc. Good Uncle take you in this barbarous Moore,
This Ravenous Tiger, this accursed devill,
Let him receive no foode, nor cherishing, tye him,
Till he be brought unto the Empresse face,
For testifie many more foule proceedings.
And see the Ambush of our Friends be strong,
I feare the Emperour meanes no good to us.
Aron. Some devill whisper curses in my eare,
And prompt me that my tongue may utter forth,
The Venemous Malice of my swelling heart.
Luc. Away, Inhumane Dogge, Unhallowed Slave.
Sirs help our Uncle, to convey him in. Flourish.
The Trumpets shew the Emperour is at hand

Sound Trumpets Enter Emperour and Empresse, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more Sunnes then one?
Luc. What boots it thee to call thy selfe a Sunne?
Mar. Romes Emperour & Nephewe breake the parle
These quarrels must be quietly debated,
The feast is ready which the carefull Titus,

Hath

Hath ordained to an honourable end,
For Peace, for Loue, for League and good to Rome
Please you therefore draw nie and take your places.
Saturn. Marcus we will. Hautboyes

A Table brought in

Enter Titus with a Cooke, placing the meate on the Table and Tamora with Aaron and her sonnes.

Titus. Welcome my gracious Lord.
Welcome Dread Queene,
Welcome ye Warlike Gothes, welcome Lucius,
And welcome all although the cheere be spare,
In signe of your harts hartie thankefulnesse
Sat. Why art thou thus attyred Andronicus
Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well
To entertaine your Highnesse and your Loue.
Tam. We are beholding to you good Andronicus
Tit. And if your Highnesse knew my heart you were
My Lord the Emperour resolued on these,
Were well, and you desire not Titus dead
To slaughter his daughter with her owne graunt!
Because she was enforst by stratagem
Saturn. It was Andronicus,
Tit. Your reason, Mightie Lord?
Sat. Because the Girle should not survive her shame,
And by her presence still renew his sorrowes
Tit. A reason mightie strong and effectuall,
A pattern, precedent and lively warrant
For me, most wretched, to perform the like
Die, die Lauinia, and thy shame with thee,
And with thy shame thy Father sorrow too,
And with both, thy Brothers sorrow too

He kils her.

Sat. What hast done, vnnaturall and vnkinde?
Tit. Kild her for whom my teares haue made me blind
I am as woe-begone a father now as I,
And this sad shrowded Matrone was,
And it was ten times more then now I weepe
Sat. What was the cause? be briefe, for who ordained it,
Tit. Will please your Grace,
Will please you heare me speake?
Tam. Why speakest thou not sweet Gentle daughter?
Titus. Not I, 'twas charnald Demetrius,
They ravished her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong;
Sat. Go fetch them hither to vs presently
Tit. Why there they are both baked in that Pie
Whereof their Mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she her selfe hath bred
'Tis true, 'tis true, witnesse my knife what I haue done

He kils the Empresse

Sat. Defiant as she dies, behold the vile and bloody minded,
Luc. Can eyes no eye, or else no light see clear
These sundrie tortures, rest for a deserued deed,
Mar. You gratious Lords of Rome peace at this ouer-flowe of Rome,
By vertues noble mother I entreate,
Stain not your selues with these inhumane gulfs.
Let me teare your wrongs, to keep a mone
That ouer-flowes the compasse of the Towne,
Their broken lims are not entombed so,
Emb. Let Rome herselfe be bane vnto herselfe,
And she whom mightie Kingdomes curtsie too,
Like to a wofull and distressed cattaway,
Doe shamefull execution on herselfe.
But if my frosen signes can not perswade,
Graue witnesses of true experience,
Cannot moue you to attend my words,
Speake Romes deere friend, as erst our Ancestor,
When with his solemne tongue he did discourse
To loue-sicke Dido a sad tale of Troy,
The story of that baleful burning night,
When subtle Greekes surprizd King Priams Troy
Tell vs what Sinon hath bewitcht our eares,
Or who hath brought the fatall engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome the ciuill wound.
My teares are now prest out of their watrie well,
Not can vtter what our hart conceiues,
But hands, heart, eyes, words, all engaged in griefe,
All bleake my very vtterance euen in the time
When it should moue you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration.
Here is a Captaine, let him tell the tale,
Your eares will heare him speake.
Luc. Then Noble Auncle to you I begin,
Were neere to you, that sometimes were the proper Barber,
And these two were accessarie to your Sister,
For these intestate iniuries both of mine,
Of this inhumane and wofull murther on her,
And this vnnaturall massacre done on Rome,
Lastly, my selfe vnkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turnd weeping out,
To beg relenting entrance of this Emperesse,
Who driuen hence by my vnhappie accidents,
And with their armes to succour me a Friend
Not daunted with the dangers of the seas,
Come back againe to venge her iniuries,
And in the cause I hazarded my selfe,
Speaking no more but vnto Romes Protector,
Mou'd with compassion of my wofull plight,
Therefore I pray you let them enter in,
Mar. Noble Lord Lucius and the deere Goths Child,
Our wofull Lauinia enter here,
Let all that is lamentable come,
Come Aged Sire to lay thy sorrowes forth,
Thou Virgin tutor of Lauinia speake,
And daubed, as you are, with lies and blood
Now draw we neere and haue Titus to reuenge
The wrongs by vnreuenged out of date,
Or else to any thing to comfort vs.
Now what are you? what, you Romaines?
How are you growne so strange? shew vs some ruth,
Alas, you keepe a cruell old wrow,
That ouer-growes Andronicus
Who had no eare to see her noble doome,
And doth intombe to rob vs of our dues,
And with vnkindnesse bereaue vs of our due
Speake Romaines, speake, and if you say not well,
Let me haue leaue to weepe my wofull,
Emp. Come Emperesse, come Romaines all come,
And take vp these our wofull Infants,
Let vs intombe, and weepe,
Let vs intombe,
Lucius Emperour,
Goe, and with gentle words,
And comfortable speeches,
To the sad Empresse, and her dying death,
And with the Romaines grace Gouernour.

Luc. Thankes gentle Romanes: may I goe and pleade
To heale Romes harmes with my vnpartiall woe.
But gentle people giue me aime a while,
For Nature puts me to a heauie taske
Stand all aloofe: but Vncle draw you neere
To shed obsequious teares vpon this Trunke
Oh take this warme kisse on thy pale cold lips,
These sorrow-drops vpon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true Duties of thy Noble Sonne.
Mar. Teare for teare, and loue for loue.
Thy Brother Marcus tenders on thy lips
O were the sum of these that I should pay
Countlesse, and infinite, yet would I pay them
Luc. Come hither Boy, come, come and learne of vs
To melt in showres: thy Grandsire lou'd thee well:
Many a time he dandled thee vpon his knee
Sung thee asleepe, his Louely Boy, thy Pillow
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meete, and agreeing well with thine age to lend
And shall these childish teares saue this old Caddo,
Neere saw I the Mountaine doe such obseruance
As seemes this day the Tarbus breathes on vs.
Because Nature doth require me to
Lament the miseries of our Perish'd Stocke,
Let my teares stanch the wounds made by my Sword.
In peace and honour rest you heere my Lord,
Iust, Graue, and Reuerend Graue Senator,
Heere rest in peace with these in after Ages,
Free from iniurious Slanders of Enuie.
Defend'd from wrong by your braue Ancestors,
Whose Honours liue in Vertue of their Sonne.
Mar. O Kinsman, Kinsman, cease we this lamenting,
Our Woe is now growne to a Tragedie,
Least we remember still our former shames,
Let vs conclude that we haue wept and bled.
The day is almost spent, and we haue not
Intomb'd our Sorrowes, nor shut vp our Woes.
Speake gentle Neece what stops are these of Woe
Well doth it fit the time of night and place,
To speake of Woe, and Sorrow, and Lamenting.
Vnkle, I cannot tell, the Heauens haue their secret purposes,
And Mysteries which we haue not skill to sound,
But this I know, when Heauen doth worke for Woe,
And Sorrow, and Lamenting fill the House,
As doth this day, it doth portend some ill.
Harke how the Birds record in their sweet Notes
To rouze vp Sorrow, Sorrow, and Lamentation.
Harke how the Hounds and Eccho with shrill throats
Make wofull Riuet with Bootlesse Cries.
Looke how the Heauens are bent to wreake our Woes,
As who should say, you Gods, your Vengeance powre
Vpon this Head, these Threefold Miseries.
Speake Vncle, where is the Marshall and the Goths
That I may powre my Sorrowes in their Bosomes.
Mar. Heere Neece, what would you haue vs to do?
Shall we dash out our Braines vpon the Walls?
Teare the Graie Haires from off our Aged Heads?
Or shall we beate our Breasts, and howle and cry
Like to the Commons of the Stormy Tide?
Or shall we fall vpon our Bended Knees,
And pray for Mercy, as the Iewes haue done?
Or shall we with our Nayles downe-rend our Flesh,
And teare the Fleshes of our Friends in griefe?
Or shall we runne our Heads against the Walls
To breake our Braines, and quench our Burning Griefe?
Or shall we cast Vs headlong from the Rocke
Downe on the Marble Stones? Speake Gentle Neece
What Stormes of Sorrow shall we make to driue
Away the Flocke of these Calamities?
Luc. Alas, the Sea hath Teares to lend vs Showres,
The Dead are dombe, and haue not Eares to heare,
What Voice to speake, what Words to moue their Harts
To listen our Replies, our Helpe is lost,
The Heauens are deafe against our Prayers,
And Vengeance stands resolu'd to powre on Vs.
Mar. O Neece, I thinke not so, for I haue read
That Iustice, and Tryall, and Deliberate Warre
Euen with the Proudest stoop to Humble Things.
Luc. Then let vs stay and walke the Forrest Ground,
For now 'tis Time to Muse, and not to Speake.
Harke, Harke, the Hounds are at a Bay: Hearke Vncle,
Harke Boy, how the Iolly Hunters Hornes
And Voices sing Accord vnto the Woods.
See, see, the Game is rays'd, and Scarlet Hounds
Pursue the Proud Backe Panthers and the Beares
With Hornes and Tongues, as if Hell, Earth, and Heauen
Meant to Confound Destruction in a Storme.
Harke Boy, harke, I heare the Golden Throat
Of Chiron, Hyllus, Swift-foote Melua,
And Cheeke-hung Ethon, Theseus Fell-fac'd Dogge,
Seeme to Singe Peales when they the Game pursue.
Harke Boy, harke Vncle, how the Cry redoubles,
Harke, Harke, and see the Woods and Mountaines Eccho,
Their Shrill-mouth'd Beagles, Seeme to Barke Defiance.
Mar. Now Eagle-eyed Day, Praise the Lusty Gallants
Are Clad in Brothers, Friends, and Countrymen.
Publius, Sempronius, Quintus, Martius, Mutius, Lucius.
Pub. Who is this? my Kinsman Lucrece thus beset with Woes?
Speake Lucrece, what signifies these Signes?
Diuine, and Read the Horrors of thy Woes?
Speake gentle Neece, what Stormes haue toss'd thy Ship
Vnto this Rocke, vpon this Vnkle Shelfe?
Mar. Ah Publius, could thy Vnkle haue but halfe
An equall Interest in thy Neeces Woe,
Those Words would Season well thy Sorrowes.
For my Harts Deare Lies buried in my Breast,
And in my Eares sounds Tarbus Violent Threats.
By this poore Stay I was forbidden Sleepe,
And this the Morning-Early Day I finde
Keepes Watch, Keepes Home, Keepes Vigil for the Graue.
Pub. Very well gone: Saluted: Lucrece fayre.
Luc. I thanke you Publius, Morning is come and gone,
But Lucrece Morning is Turn'd to Heauie Night,
More Darke and Full of Clouds, anon to Raine.
Read on the Lines vpon my Shame, if can,
The Blushing Discipher of a Spotted Prime.
Open the Scrowle, Read o're my Fault, and know
The Worst of Woes, and Last of Lucrece Cares.
Read sad Histories End, Dead Lucrece Doome.
Pub. Lucrece I will, and if my Trembling Eyes
Erre not with Teares, this is the Tarbus Hand,
This the Right Writing of Saturninus.
Mar. And so as I am Noble Titus Brother,
In the Rape, Murther, and Mischiefe done to Lucrece,
And then I Soule this Wofull Discord chimes,
This Graue Notes, Sad Hiſtory, Dead Woes,
Of Publius Lucrece, Noble Tarbus Child,
There in Ruine, Hauocke, and Confuſion lies.
Pub. If Publius Lucrece, Noble Tarbus Child,
Can be Iniuriously Entombed in Ruine,
Hauocke, and Confuſion, Titus of Noble Fame,
And Noble Stocke, was Graced with Honour.
Luc. Both true, and Fatall: Who Records my Woes,
Which haue no Number, and Sad Figures Poynts
To Draw my Infinite Sorrowes into Sommes.
Bid him Write downe, to Dye my Louely Face,
And let my Dispightfull Sharne-Surprised Eyes
Looke Hollow, to their Fellowes Woe,
And let them Dimme, and Bleare, and Cast a Mist
Like Morning Clouds, vpon the Head of Heauen,
Let them Reflect me to my Woefull Selfe,
For Shame, and Disparagement: My Tongue
Powre Balefull Sentences on Lips that Haue
Beene Guilty of Disgracefull Monſtruous Deeds,
To Martyr me for Ruthfull Iniuries.
My Hands, for Hewing, Stabbing, Murthering
Walke Hence with Me, and Martyr me with Woe.
Let Me Teach Griefe to Mourne, my Hands are Guilty
Of Malice to Themſelues, and Bloody Handed Hate
Haue Slaughtered Me, Forſworne Themſelues, and Bankrupted
The Intire Maine of All Good Parts in Me.
All Scarres, Mine Hands, My Face, and Blemiſh'd Deeds
Write Downe, that Age, and Time, and Blood, and Shame,
And Bid me Read, for Bid my Soule it is,
Lines, Characters, and Horrors Tell my Woes.
Pub. Peace, Publius, peace, thou Canſt not Speake Reaſons
To Helpe, where is no Hope, nor Helpe a Hope.
Thy Hand can Worke no Weapon, but in Greefe,
Poore Harmes, Poore Spight, Poore Helpe, Poore Friendſhip is Euen Childiſh Impotence to Sad Woe.
But let the Golden Tongued Treaſons Saile
Vpon her Check, and Paint in Time with Teares
On Fortunes Cheeke, her Scandall, and Her Shame,
That Any Hand, Any Place, Any Time,
Any Girle, Any Boy, Any Old Man,
Any Child Speakes of, this Knowes, and Sees,
Is Cold in Amends, but Barren of Reuenge.
Thus Catch'd in Hate, and Prooued by Reaſons,
To Blot Old Bookes, and Alter their Contents,
Who Frownes, who Pleades, who Wiſhes, who Denies,
Who Excuſes, who Accuſes, who Diſpoſes,
But the Full Sway of Tarbus Mighty Will?
And Shall Her Ioyfull Honour Fresh Beautified
With Tryumph, and with Conqueſt, Ioyfully
Enter the Gates of Rome, to Gratify
The Gracious Welcome Flowing in the Eyes
Of Noble Titus, our Renowned Lord,
Defile the Sacred Temples with the Dust
Of Long Diſcended Bones, and Pray in Vaine
Vpon the Deafe Dumbe Gates, and Greete Her Lord
With Welcome Home, Vile Sanctuary, and Night,
A Welcome Shame? Let Vs Depart.
Luc. Stay Publius, Stay, Let Vs Depart.
Pub. Lucrece, Let Vs Depart.
Luc. Do Publius, Do

THE TRAGEDIE OF ROMEO and IVLIET.

Ioha Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter [illegible] Sucer, of the House of Capels.

Samson

Gregory [illegible]

Samp. [illegible] o'th Collar.

Samp. I strike quickly being moou'd.

Greg. But thou art not quickly moou'd to strike.

Samp. A dog of the house of [illegible] moues me.

Greg. To moue is to stirre, and to be valiant is to stand: Therefore if thou art moou'd, thou runn'st away.

Samp. A dog of that house shall moue me to stand. I will take the wall of any Man or Maid of Montagues.

Greg. That shewes thee a weake slaue, for the weakest goes to the wall.

Samp. True, and therefore women being the weaker Vessels, are euer thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Montagues men from the wall, and thrust his Maides to the wall.

Greg. The Quarrell is between our Masters, and vs their men.

Samp. 'Tis all one, I will shew my selfe a tyrant: when I haue fought with the men, I will be ciuill with the Maids, and cut off their heads.

Greg. The heads of the Maids?

Samp. I, the heads of the Maids, or their Maidenheads, Take it in what sense thou wilt.

Greg. They must take it in sense, that feele it.

Samp. Me they shall feele while I am able to stand: And 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.

Greg. 'Tis well thou art not fish: If thou hadst, thou hadst been poore Iohn. Draw thy Toole, here comes of the House of the Montagues.

Enter two other Seruingmen.

Sam. My naked weapon is out: quarrell, I will backe thee.

Greg. How? Turne thy backe, and run.

Sam. Feare me not.

Greg. No marry: I feare thee.

Sam. Let vs take the Law of our sides, let them begin.

Greg. I will frowne as I passe by, & let them take it as they list.

Sam. Nay as they dare. I will bite my Thumbe at them, which is a disgrace to them, if they beare it.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumbe at vs, Sir?

Samp. I do bite my Thumbe, Sir.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumbe at vs, Sir?

Sam. Is the Law of our side, if I say I? Greg. No

Sam. [illegible]

Greg. [illegible]

Abra. [illegible]

Abra. [illegible]

Sam. [illegible] with Seruingmen.

Gr. Sa[illegible] Yes, [illegible].

Abra. Yes Sir.

Samp. Draw [illegible] my Maisters.

Greg. [illegible]

Enter

[illegible]

Cap. What [illegible] Sword? [illegible] a Sword.

[illegible] Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prince [illegible] Peace, I say.

Cap. [illegible]

Enter Capulet in his Gowne, and Lady Capulet.

Cap. [illegible]

Enter Montague and his Lady.

Prince [illegible] Peace to this place,

Do you [illegible] Streets,

[illegible] Men out Beasts,

[illegible] from your veines.

[illegible] Partizans, and [illegible] old,

Cankred with [illegible] ece, to part your Cankred hate,

She's too farre, too witewis: fey too faire,
To merit bliſſe by making me deſpaire
She'hath forſwornе to loue, and in that vow
Do I liue dead that liue to tell it now.
Ben. Be ruld by me, forget to thinke of her.
Rom. O teach me how I ſhould forget to thinke.
Ben. By giuing liberty vnto thine eyes,
Examine other beauties.
Rom. 'Tis the way to call (hers) exquiſit in queſtion more
These happy maskes that kiſſe faire Ladies browes,
Being blacke, puts vs in mind they hide the faire.
He that is ſtrucken blinde, cannot forget
The precious treaſure of his eye-ſight loſt:
Shew me a Miſtreſſe that is paſſing faire,
What doth her beauty ſerue but as a note
Where I may read who paſſ'd that paſſing faire.
Farewell, thou canſt not teach me to forget,
Ben. I'le pay that doctrine, or elſe die in debt. Exeunt
Enter Capulet, Countie Paris, and the Clowne.
Capu. But Montague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike, and 'tis not hard I thinke,
For men ſo old as we to keepe the peace.
Par. Of honorable reckoning are you both,
And pittie 'tis you liu'd at odds ſo long.
But now my Lord, what ſay you to my ſuite?
Capu. But ſaying o're what I haue ſaid before,
My Child is yet a ſtranger in the world,
She hath not ſeene the change of fourteene yeares,
Let two more Summers wither in their pride
Ere we may thinke her ripe to be a Bride.
Par. Younger then ſhe are happy mothers made
Capu. And too ſoone marde are thoſe ſo early made.
The earth hath ſwallowed all my hopes but ſhe,
She is the hopefull Lady of my earth:
But woo her gentle Paris get her heart,
My will to her conſent is but a part,
And ſhe agree, within her ſcope of choice
Lies my conſent, and fair according voice.
This night I hold an old accuſtomed Feaſt,
Whereto I haue inuited many a Gueſt,
Such as I loue: and you among the ſtore,
One more, moſt welcome makes my number more:
At my poore houſe looke to behold this night,
Earth-treading ſtarres, that make darke heauen light,
Such comfort as do luſtie young men feele,
When well apparel'd Aprill on the heele
Of limping Winter treads, even ſuch delight
Among freſh female buds ſhall you this night
Inherit at my houſe: heare all, all ſee
And like her moſt whoſe merit moſt ſhall be:
Which on more view, of many, mine being one
May ſtand in number, though in reckning none.
Come, go with me: go ſirrah, trudge about,
Through faire Verona, find thoſe perſons out,
Whoſe names are writ there, and to them ſay,
My houſe and welcome on their pleaſure ſtay. Exit.
Ser. Find them out whoſe names are writ here. It is written, that the Shoomaker ſhould meddle with his Yard, and the Tayler with his Laſt, the Fiſher with his Pen, and the Painter with his Nets. But I am ſent to find thoſe perſons whoſe names are writ, & can neuer find what names the writing perſon hath here writ. I muſt to the learned) in good time.

Enter Benuolio, and Romeo.

Ben. Tut man, one fire burnes out another's burning,
One paine is leſſened by another's anguiſh
Turne giddie, and be holpen by backward turning,
One deſperate griefe cures with another's languiſh:
Take thou ſome new infection to thy eye,
And the rank poyſon of the old will die.
Rom. Your Plantan leafe is excellent for that.
Ben. For what I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken.
Ben. Why Romeo are you mad?
Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a mad-man is,
Shut up in priſon, kept without my food,
Whipt and tormented, and God-den good fellow.
Ser. God gi' god-den. I pray ſir can you read?
Rom. I mine owne fortune in my miſery.
Ser. Perhaps you haue learned it without booke.
But I pray can you read any thing you ſee?
Rom. Ay if I know the Letters and the Language.
Ser. Ye ſay honeſtly, reſt you merry.
Rom. Stay fellow I can read.

He reads the Letter

Signior Martino and his wife and daughters, Count Anſelme and his beauteous ſiſters, the Lady widdow of Vitruuio, Signior Placentio and his louely Neeces, Mercutio and his brother Valentine, mine vncle Capulet his wife and daughters, my faire Neece Roſaline and Liuia, Signior Valentio and his couſen Tybalt, Lucio and the liuely Helena.
A faire aſſembly: whither ſhould they come?
Ser. Vp
Rom. Whither?
Ser. To ſupper, to our houſe.
Rom. Whoſe houſe?
Ser. My Maſters.
Rom. Indeed I ſhould haue aſk'd you that before.
Ser. Now I'le tell you without aſking. My maſter is the great rich Capulet, and if you be not of the houſe of Montagues, I pray come and crush a cup of wine. Reſt you merry. Exit.
Ben. At this ſame auntient Feaſt of Capulets
Sups the faire Roſaline whom thou ſo loues,
With all the admired beauties of Verona,
Go thither and with unattainted eye,
Compare her face with ſome that I ſhall ſhow,
And I will make thee think thy Swan a Crow.
Rom. When the deuout religion of mine eye
Maintains ſuch falſehood, then turne teares to fire,
And theſe who often drown'd could never die,
Transparent heretikes, be burnt for liers.
One fairer than my Loue? the all-ſeeing Sun
Ne're ſaw her match ſince firſt the world begun.
Ben. Tut you ſaw her faire none elſe being by,
Herſelfe poiſe with her ſelfe in either eye:
But in that Chriſtall ſcales let there be weigh'd,
Your Ladies loue againſt ſome other Maid
That I will ſhow you ſhining at this feaſt,
And ſhe ſhall ſcant ſhow well that now ſhewes beſt.
Rom. I'le go along no ſuch ſight to be ſhowne,
But to reioyce in ſplendor of mine owne.

Enter Lady of the houſe, Nurſe.

Lad. Nurſe where's my Daughter? call her forth to me
Nurſe. Now by my Maiden-head at twelue yeares old I bad her come. What Lamb? what Ladie-bird? God forbid, where's this Girle? what Iuliet?

Enter Iuliet.

Iuliet. How now, who calls?
Nurſe. Your Mother.
Iuliet. Madam I am here, what is your will?
Lad. This is the matter. Nurſe giue leaue awhile, we must

[illegible] knowest

[illegible]

Mer. Tut, dun's the Mouse, the Constables owne word,
If thou art dun, weele draw thee from the mire
Or saue your reuerence loue, wherein thou stickest
Vp to the eares, come we burne day-light ho.
Rom. Nay that's not so.
Mer. I meane sir I delay,
We waft our lights in vaine, lights by day
Take our good meaning, for our Iudgement sits
Fiue times in that, ere once in our fine wits.
Rom. And we meane well in going to this Maske,
But 'tis no wit to go.
Mer. Why may one aske?
Rom. I dreampt a dreame to night
Mer. And so did I.
Rom. Well what was yours?
Mer. That dreamers often lye.
Rom. In bed a sleepe while they do dreame things true.
Mer. O then I see Queene Mab hath been with you.
She is the Fairies Midwife, & she comes
In shape no bigger then an Agat-stone, on the fore-finger of an Alderman drawne with a teeme of little Atomies, ouer mens noses as they lie asleepe: her Waggon Spokes made of long Spinners legs: the Couer of the wings of Grashoppers: her
Traces of the smallest Spiders web: her collers of the Moonshines watry beames: her Whip of Crickets bone,
the Lash of Philome: her Waggoner a small grey-coated
Gnat, not halfe so big as a round little Worme pickt
from the Lazie finger of a Maid: Her Chariot is an empty
Hasell-nut, made by the Ioyner Squirrell or old Grub, time out a mind, the Fairies Coachmakers: & in this state she gallops night by night, through Louers brains: and then they dreame of Loue: On Courtiers knees that dreame on Curtesies straight: ore Lawyers fingers who straight dreame on Fees: ore Ladies lips, who straight on kisses dreame, which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues, because their breath with Sweetmeats tainted are. Sometime she gallops ore a Courtiers nose, & then dreames he smells out a suite: & sometime comes she with a Tithe-pigs tayle tickling a Parsons nose as a lies asleepe, then he dreames another Benefice. Sometime comes she with a Scuruy
neede, & then dreames he of cutting Forraigne
Breaches, Ambuscadoes, Spanish blades of Healths fiue fadome deepe, and then
Pado he cepe drum ondrum
he starts, wakes and being thus frighted, swears a prayer or two & sleepes againe. This same plats the manes of Horses in the night, & bakes the Elocks in foule sluttish haires, which once vntangled, much misfortune bodes.
This is the Hag, when Maides lie on their backs,
That presses them and learnes them first to beare,
Making them women of good carriage
This is she.
Rom. Peace peace Mercutio peace,
Thou talkst of nothing.
Mer. True I talke of dreame,
Which are the children of an idle braine,
Begot of nothing but vaine fantasie,
Which is as thin of substance as the ayre,
And more inconstant then the wind, who wooes
Euen now the freezing coldnes of the North
And being angred puffes away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping South.
Ben. This wind you talke of blowes vs from our selues,
Supper is done, and we shall come too late
Rom. I feare too early, for my mind misgiues,
Some consequence yet hanging in the starres,
Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date
With this nights reuels, and expire the terme
Of a despised life clos'd in my brest
By some vile forfeit of vntimely death,
But he that hath the stirrage of my course,
Direct my suite. On lustie Gentlemen.
Ben. Strike Drum.
They march about the Stage, and Seruingmen come forth with their napkins.

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Where's Potpan, that he helpes not to take away? He shift a Trencher, he scrape a Trencher?
1. When good manners shall lie all in one or two mens hands and they vnwash'd too, 'tis a foule thing.
Ser. Away with the ioyne-stooles, remoue the Court cubbord, looke to the plate: good thou saue me a piece of Marchpane, and as thou louest me let the Porter let in Susan Grindstone and Nell, Anthonie and Potpan.
2. I boy ready.
Ser. You are looked for and cal'd for, asked for and sought for, in the great Chamber.
1. We cannot be here and there too. Cheerely boyes, Be brisk awhile, and the longer liue take all.

Exeunt.

Enter all the Maskers, and Torch-bearers.

Maior.
1. Gentlemen, We come Gentlemen.
Lads ere we be seene, each man take a Cup of wine,
You shall not say me nay, Gentlemen come Masquers,
Musicke plays, and they enter.
Vere we merry? Gentlemen, I'le vnfold the cause of our comming.
Mercutio, thou consorts with vs to grace the Ladies vp
And then we'll dance the Reuels greet me no more.
And yet before that I could scarce forbid you me
Now will not Cozen, nor Cozen, nor
I'le tell you I repent that I am free of idle
Nay I'le be briefe, for you see light, you see
Where's my Masque?
2. Cup. Here stands the Torch,
1. Cup. Where's Vaumpan that we sent before,
'Tis neere the Cupboord. Sirrah fill vs a Cup of wine.
Come Pentyce you were wont to sing,
Some heire are twenty yeares, and then we Maske
2. Cup. 'Tis more, 'tis more, Some sixe and thirty for His Sonne is thirty.
1. Cup. Will you tell me that?
His Sonne was but a Ward two yeares agone.
Rom. What Lady is that which doth enrich the hand
Of yonder Knight?
Ser. I know not sir.
Rom. O she doth teach the Torches to burne bright!
It seemes she hangs vpon the cheeke of night,
As a rich Iewell in an Aethiops eare
Beauty too rich for vse, for earth too deare:
So shewes a Snowy Doue trooping with Crowes,
As yonder Lady ore her fellowes shewes:
The measure done, I'le watch her place of stand,
And touching hers, make blessed my rude hand.

Did

Did my heart loue till now forsweare it sight,
For I ne'er saw true Beauty till this night.
Tib. This by his voice should be a Montague
Fetch me my Rapier boy. What dares the slaue
Come hither couer'd with an Antique face,
To scorne and flout our Solemnity?
Now by the stocke and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.
Cap. Why how now Kinsman,
Wherefore storme you so?
Tib. Vncle this is a Montague, our foe:
A Villaine that is hither come in spight,
To scorne at our Solemnity this night.
Cap. Young Romeo is it?
Tib. 'Tis he, that villaine Romeo.
Cap. Content thee gentle Coz, let him alone,
A bears him like a portly Gentleman:
And to say truth, Verona brags of him
To be a vertuous and well gouerned youth:
I would not for the wealth of all the Towne,
Here in my house do him disparagement:
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will, the which if thou respect,
Shew a faire presence and put off these frownes,
An ill beseeming semblance for a feast.
Tib. It fits when such a Villaine is a guest,
Ile not endure him.
Cap. He shall be endured.
What goodman boy? I say he shall, goe too,
Am I the Master here, or you? goe too.
You'le not endure him? God shall mend my soule,
You'le make a Mutiny among the Guests:
You will set cocke a hoope? you'le be the man
Tib. Why Vncle, 'tis a shame.
Cap. Go too, go too,
You are a sawcie Boy: is't so indeed?
This trick may chance to scath you, I know what,
You must contrary me, marry 'tis time.
Well said my hearts: you are a Princox, go:
Be quiet, or more light, more light: for shame
Ile make you quiet, what cheerly my hearts.
Tib. Patience perforce, with wilfull choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw, but this intrusion shall
Now seeming sweet, conuert to bitter gall. Exit
Rom. If I profane with my vnworthiest hand,
This holy shrine, the gentle sin is this,
My lips two blushing Pilgrims ready stand
To smooth that rough touch, with a tender kisse.
Iul. Good Pilgrime,
You do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly deuotion shewes in this,
For Saints haue hands that Pilgrims hands do touch,
And palme to palme is holy Palmers kisse.
Rom. Haue not Saints lips, and holy Palmers too?
Iul. I Pilgrim lips that they must vse in prayer.
Rom. O then deare Saint, let lips do what hands do,
They pray (graunt thou) least faith turne to dispaire.
Iul. Saints do not moue,
Though grant for prayers sake.
Rom. Then moue not while my prayers effect I take
Thus from thy lips, by thine my sin is purg'd.
Iul. Then haue my lips the sinne that they haue tooke.
Rom. Sinne from my lips? O trespasse sweetly vrg'd
Giue me my sinne againe.
Iul. You kisse by the booke

Nur. Madam your Mother craues a word with you.
Rom. What is her Mother?
Nurse. Marrie Batchelor,
Her Mother is the Lady of the house,
And a good Lady, and a wise, and Vertuous,
I Nurs'd her Daughter that you talkt withall.
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her,
Shall haue the chinkes.
Rom. Is she a Capulet?
O deare account! My life is my foes debt.
Ben. Away, be gone, the sport is at the best.
Rom. I so I feare, the more is my vnrest.
Cap. Nay Gentlemen prepare not to be gone,
We haue a trifling foolish Banquet towards.
Is it e'en so? why then I thanke you all
I thanke you honest Gentlemen, good night.
More Torches here: come on, then let's to bed.
Ah sirrah, by my fackie, we are short,
Ile to bed.
Iuli. Come hither, Nurse,
What is yond Gentleman.
Nur. The Son and heire of old Tyberio.
Iuli. What's he that now is going out at doore?
Nur. Marry that I think be young Petruchio.
Iuli. What's he that follows there that would not dance?
Nur. I know not.
Iuli. Go ask his name: if he be married,
My graue is like to be my wedded bed.
Nur. His name is Romeo, and a Montague,
The only Son of your great enemie.
Iuli. My only Loue sprung from my only hate,
Too early seene, vnknowne, and knowne too late,
Prodigious birth of Loue it is to me,
That I must loue a loathed Enemie.
Nur. What's this? what's this?
Iuli. A Rime I learnt even now
Of one I danc'd withall.

One calls within, Iuliet.

Nur. Anon, anon:
Come, let's away, the Strangers all are gone.

Exeunt.

Chorus.

Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heire,
That fair, for which Loue groand for and would die,
With tender Iuliet match'd, is now not fair.
Now Romeo is belou'd and loues againe,
Alike bewitched by the charme of lookes:
But to his foe supposed he must complaine,
And she steale Loues sweet bait from fearefull hookes.
Being held a foe, he may not haue accesse
To breathe such vowes as Louers vse to sweare,
And she as much in Loue, her meanes much lesse,
To meet her new Beloued any where:
But passion lends them power, time meanes, to meete,
Tempring extremities with extreme sweete.

Enter Romeo alone.

Rom. Can I go forward when my heart is here?
Turne backe dull earth, and find thy Center out.

Enter Benuolio with Mercutio.

Ben. Romeo, my Cosen Romeo, Romeo.
Mer. He is wise,
And on my life hath stolne him home to bed.
Ben. He ran this way, and leapt this Orchard wall.
Call good Mercutio.
Mer. Nay, Ile conjure too.

After

Mer. Romeo Humours Madman,Passion Lover,
Appeare thou in the likenesse of a sigh,
Speake but one rime,and I am satisfied
Cry me but ay me Pronounce but Loue and day,
Speake to my gossip Venus one faire word,
One Nickname for her purblind Sonne and her,
Young Abraham Cupid he that shot so trim,
When King Cophetua lou'd the begger Maid,
He heareth not,he stirreth not,he moueth not,
The Ape is dead,I must coniure him,
I coniure thee by Rosalines bright eyes,
By her High forehead,and her Scarlet lip,
By her Fine foote,Straight leg,and Quiuering thigh,
And the Demeanes that there Adiacent lie,
That in thy likenesse thou appeare to vs.
Ben. And if he heare thee thou wilt anger him
Mer. This cannot anger him,it would anger him
To raise a spirit in his Mistresse circle,
Some strange nature,letting it there stand
Till she had laid it,and coniured it downe,
That were some spight:
My inuocation is faire and honest,& in his Mistresse name
I coniure only but to raise vp him
Ben. Come,he hath hid himselfe among these Trees'
To be consorted with the Humorous night:
Blind is his Loue,and best befits the darke
Mer. If Loue be blind,Loue cannot hit the marke,
Now will he sit vnder a Medler tree,
And wish his Mistresse were that kinde of fruite,
As Maides call Medlers when they laugh alone,
O Romeo that she were,O that she were
An open,or thou a Poprin Peare,
Romeo good night,Ile to my Truckle bed,
This field bed is too cold for me to sleepe,
Come shall we go?
Ben. Go then,for 'tis in vaine to seeke him here
That meanes not to be found.
Rom. He iests at Scarres that neuer felt a wound:
But soft what light through yonder window breakes?
It is the East,and Iuliet is the Sunne
Arise faire Sunne and kill the enuious Moone,
Who is already sicke and pale with griefe,
That thou her Maid art far more faire than she:
Be not her Maid since she is enuious,
Her Vestall liuery is but sicke and green,
And none but fooles doe weare it,cast it off.
It is my Lady,O it is my Loue,O that she knew she were,
She speakes,yet she vtters not a word,what of that?
Her eye discourses,I will answer it
I am too bold,'tis not to me she speakes
Two of the fairest Starres in all the Heauen,
Hauing some businesse,doe intreat her eyes,
To twinkle in their Spheres till they returne:
What if her eyes were there,they in her head,
The brightnesse of her cheeke would shame those starres,
As daylight doth a Lampe,her eyes in heauen,
Would through the ayrie Region streame so bright,
That birds would sing and think it were not night:
See how she leanes her cheeke vpon her hand.
O that I were a Gloue vpon that hand
That I might touch that cheeke.
Iul. Ay me.
Rom. She speakes.
O speake again bright Angell,for thou art
As glorious to this night being ouer my head,
As is a winged messenger of heauen
Vnto the white-vpturned wondring eyes
Of mortals that fall backe to gaze on him,
When he bestrides the lazie-pacing Clouds,
And sailes vpon the bosome of the ayre
Iul. O Romeo,Romeo,wherefore art thou Romeo?
Denie thy Father and refuse thy name:
Or if thou wilt not,be but sworne my Loue,
And Ile no longer be a Capulet.
Rom. Shall I heare more,or shall I speake at this?
Iul. 'Tis but thy name that is my enemie
Thou art thy selfe though not a Montague.
What's Montague? it is nor hand,nor foote,
Nor arme,nor face,nor any other part
Belonging to a man.
What's in a name? that which we call a Rose
By any other word would smell as sweet,
So Romeo would were he not Romeo call'd,
Retaine that deare perfection which he owes
Without that title Romeo doffe thy name
And for thy name which is no part of thee,
Take all my selfe
Rom. I take thee at thy word
Call me but Loue,and Ile be new baptiz'd,
Henceforth I neuer will be Romeo
Iul. What man art thou,that thus bescreen'd in night
So stumblest on my counsell?
Rom. By a name
I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name deare Saint,is hateful to my selfe
Because it is an enemie to thee,
Had I it written,I would teare the word
Iul. My eares haue yet not drunke a hundred words
Of that tongues vttering,yet I know the sound
Art thou Romeo,and a Montague?
Rom. Neither faire Maid,if either thee dislike
Iul. How came'st thou hither,
Tell me,and wherefore?
The Orchard walles are high and hard to clime,
And the place death,considering who thou art,
If any of my kinsmen find thee here.
Rom. With Loues light wings
Did I ouer-perch these Walles,
For stony limits cannot hold Loue out,
And what Loue can do,that dares Loue attempt
Therefore thy kinsmen are no stop to me
Iul. If they do see thee they will murther thee.
Rom. Alack there lies more peril in thine eye,
Then twenty of their Swords,looke thou but sweete,
And I am proofe against their enmity
Iul. I would not for the world they saw thee here
Rom. I haue nights cloake to hide me from their eyes
And but thou loue me,let them finde me here,
My life were better ended by their hate,
Then death proroged,wanting of thy Loue
Iul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place
Rom. By Loue,that first did prompt me to enquire,
He lent me counsell,and I lent him eyes,
I am no Pylot,yet wert thou as far
As that vast shore-washt with the farthest Sea,
I would aduenture for such Merchandize
Iul. Thou know'st the maske of night is on my face,
Else would a Maiden blush bepaint my cheeke
For that which thou hast heard me speake to night,
Faine would I dwell on forme,faine,faine deny
What I haue spoke,but farewell compliment,
Dost thou Loue?I know thou wilt say I,

And w[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

We mocking our her naturall bosome find.
Many naturall many vertues excellent
None but for some, and yet all different.
O mickle is the powerfull grace that lies
In Plants, Herbs, stones, and their true qualities:
For nought so vile, that on the earth doth liue,
But to the earth some speciall good doth giue.
Nor ought so good, but strain'd from that faire vse,
Reuolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse.
Vertue it selfe turnes vice being misapplied,
And vice sometime by action dignified.

Enter Romeo.

Within the infant rind of this weake flower,
Poyson hath residence, and medicine power:
For this being smelt, with that part cheares each part,
Being tasted slayes all senses with the heart.
Two such opposed Kings encampe them still,
In man as well as Herbes, grace and rude will:
And where the worser is predominant,
Full soone the Canker death eates vp that Plant.
Rom. Good morrow Father.
Fri. Benedicite.
What early tongue so sweet saluteth me?
Young Son, it argues a distempered head,
So soone to bid good morrow to my bed;
Care keepes his watch in euery old mans eye,
And where Care lodges sleepe will neuer lie.
But where vnbruised youth with vnstuft braine
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleepe doth raigne;
Therefore thy earlie walke doth proclaime
Thou art vprous'd with some distemperature;
Or if not so, then here I hit it right,
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to night.
Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.
Fri. God pardon sin, wast thou with Rosaline?
Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly Father? No,
I haue forgot that name, and that name woe.
Fri. That's my good Son, but where hast thou bin then?
Rom. I tell thee ere thou aske it me agen
I haue been feasting with mine enemie,
Where on a sudden one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded, both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physicke lies:
I beare no hatred blessed man, for loe
My intercession likewise steads my foe.
Fri. Be plaine good Son, rest homely in thy drift,
Riddling confession, finds but riddling shrift.
Rom. Then plainly know my hearts deare Loue is set,
On the faire daughter of rich Capulet
As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine,
And all combin'd, saue what thou must combine
By holy marriage: when and where and how,
We met, we woo'd and made exchange of vow:
Ile tell thee as we passe, but this I pray,
That thou consent to marrie vs to day.
Fri. Holy S. Francis, what a change is here?
Is Rosaline that thou didst Loue so dear
So soone forsaken? young mens Loue then lies
Not truely in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Iesu Maria what a deale of brine
Hath washt thy sallow cheekes for Rosaline?
How much salt water throwne away in waste,
To season Loue, that of it doth not taste.
The Sun not yet thy sighes from heauen clears,
Thy old groanes yet ringing in mine ancient eares:
Lo here vpon thy cheeke the staine doth sit,
Or an old teare that is not washt off yet.
If ere thou wast thy selfe, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes, were all for Rosaline
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence then,
Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.
Rom. Thou chidst me oft for louing Rosaline
Fri. For doting not for louing pupill mine
Rom. And bad'st me bury Loue.
Fri. Not in a grane,
To lay one in another out to haue.
Rom. I pray thee chide me not, her I Loue now
Doth grace for grace, and Loue for Loue allow
The other did not so.
Fri. O she knew well,
Thy Loue did read by rote that could not spell
But come young wauerer, come go with me,
In one respect Ile thy assistant be
For this alliance may so happy prooue,
To turne your households rancour to pure Loue
Rom. O let vs hence, I stand on sodaine haste
Fri. Wisely and slow, they stumble that run fast.

Exeunt

Enter Benuolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the deuill should this Romeo be? came he not home to night?
Ben. Not to his Fathers I spoke with his man
Mer. Why that same pale hard hearted wench, that Rosaline torments him so, that he will sure runne mad.
Ben. Tybalt, kinsman to old Capulet, hath sent a Letter to his Fathers house.
Mer. A challenge on my life.
Ben. Romeo will answere it.
Mer. Any man that can write, may answere a Letter.
Ben. Nay he will answere the Letters Master how he dares being dared.
Mer. Alas poore Romeo, he is already dead: stabd with a white wenches blacke eye, run through the eare with a Loue song, the very pinne of his heart cleft with the blind Bowe-boyes but-shaft: and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?
Ben. Why what is Tybalt?
Mer. More then Prince of Cats. Oh he's the Courageous Captaine of Complements. He fights as you sing prick-song, keepes time, distance, and proportion, he rests his minum, one two, and the third in your bosome: the very butcher of a silke button, a Duellist, a Duellist: a gentleman of the very first house, of the first and second cause: ah the immortall Passado, the Punto reuerso, the Hay.
Ben. The what?
Mer. The Pox of such antique lisping affecting phantacies, these new tuners of accent: Iesu a very good blade, a very tall man, a very good whore. Why is not this a lamentable thing Grandsire, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies: these fashion Mongers, these pardon-mee's, who stand so much on the new forme, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench. O their bones, their bones.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.
Mer. Without his roe, like a dryed Herring. O Flesh, flesh how art thou fishified! Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in: Laura to his Lady, was a kitchin wench (marrie she had a better Loue to berime her) Dido a dowdie, Cleopatra a Gipsie, Hero and Hero, Hildings and Harlots, Thisbie a grey eie or so, but not to the purpose. Signior Romeo, bon iour, there's a French salutation to your

French flop you gaue vs the the counterfait fairely last night.

Romeo Good morrow to you both, what counterfeit did I giue you?

Mer. The flip, the flip, can you not conceiue?

Rom. Pardon Mercutio my bounefle was great, and in such a case as mine, a man may strain curtesie.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom Meaning to curtsie.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pinck of curtesie.

Rom. Pinke for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom Why then is my Pumpe well flowred.

Mer. Sure wit, follow me this iest now, till thou hast worne out thy Pumpe, that when the single sole of it is worne, the iest may remaine after the wearing, solesingular.

Rom O single sol'd Iest,
Solly singular for the singularitie.

Mer. Come betweene vs good Benuolio, my wits faints.

Rom Swits and spurs,
Swits and spurs, or Ile cry a match.

Mer Nay, I am sure hee hath his wit, Goose chase, I am done. For I am sure hee hath more then the Wild Goose in one of thy wits, than I am sure I haue in my whole five. Was I with you there for the Goose?

Rom. Thou wast neuer with mee for any thing, when thou wast not there for the Goose.

Mer I will bite thee by the eare for that iest.

Rom Nay, good Goose bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting,
It is a most sharpe sauce.

Rom. And is it not well seru'd into a Sweet Goose?

Mer O heres a wit of Cheuerell, that stretches from an inch narrow, to an ell broad.

Rom I stretch it out for that word, broad, which added to the Goose, proues thee farre and wide, a broad Goose.

Mer. Why is not this better now, than groaning for Loue, now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo, now art thou what thou art, by Art as well as by Nature, for this driueling Loue is like a great Natural, that runs vp and downe to hide his bable in a hole.

Ben Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me to stop my tale against the haire.

Ben Thou wouldst haue made me tell a tale.

Mer Obscene word, a word more made short, or I will come no more, for one thou mistakest, and meant indeed to occupy the argument no longer.

Enter Nurse and her man

Rom Heres goodly gear.
A sayle, a sayle.

Mer Two, and a Petticoate, and a Smockeare.

Nur Peter.

Peter Anon.

Nur. My fanne Peter.

Mer Good Peter to hide her face?
For her fanne is the fairer face?

Nur. God ye good morrow Gentlemen.

Mer God ye good den faire Gentlewoman.

Nur. Is it good?

Mer. Thou hast it enough, vnlesse it be a bawdy hand of the Dyall now it stands on the pricke of Noone.

Nur. Out vpon you, what a man are you?

Rom. One Gentlewoman,
That God hath made, himselfe to mar.

Nur. By my troth it is said, for himselfe to mar, quoth he. Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Romeo. I can tell you, but young Romeo will be older when you haue found him, than he was when you sought him. I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nur. You say well.

Mer. Yea is the worst well,
Very well tooke I faith, wisely, wisely.

Nur. If you be he sir,
I desire some confidence with you?

Ben. She will indite him to some Supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd a bawd. So ho.

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer No Hare sir, vnlesse a Hare sir in a Lenten pie, that is something stale and hoare ere it be spent.
An old Hare hoare, and an old Hare hoare is very good meat in Lent.
But a Hare that is hoare is too much for a score, when it hoares ere it be spent.
Romeo will you come to your Fathers? Weele to dinner thither.

Rom I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell ancient Lady:
Farewell, Lady, Lady, Lady.

Exit Mercutio, Benuolio.

Nur. I pray you sir, what saucie Merchant was this that was so full of his roperie?

Rom A Gentleman Nurse, that loues to heare himselfe talke, and will speake more in a minute, than he will stand to in a Month.

Nur And a speake any thing against me, I'le take him downe, & a were lustier than he is, and twenty such Iacks, and if I cannot, I will finde those that shall. Scurry knaue, I am none of his flurt gils, I am none of his skaines mates, and thou must stand by too and suffer every knaue to vse me at his pleasure.

Pet. I saw no man vse you at his pleasure, if I had my weapon within my reach, or you my age, I warrant you, I dare draw as soone as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrell, and the law on my side.

Nur Now afore God I am so vext, that every part about me quiuers. Skurry knaue. I pray you sir a word, and as I told you at my house, I was bound to bid you enquire you out, what he bid me say, I will keepe to my selfe: but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her in a fooles paradise, as they say it were a very grosse kind of behauiour, as they say: for the Gentlewoman is young, & therefore, if you should deale doubly with her, truely it were an ill thing to be offered to any Gentlewoman, and very weake dealing.

Nur Nurse commend me to thy Lady and Mistresse, I protest vnto thee.

Nur Good heart, and yfaith I will tell her as much. Lord, Lord she will be a ioyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her Nurse? thou dost not marke me?

Nur I will tell her sir, that you do protest, which as I take it, is a Gentleman like offer. (afternoone,

Rom Bid her deuise some meanes to come to shrift this
And there she shall at Frier Laurence Cell
Be shriu'd and married. Here is for thy paines.

Nur No truly sir not a penny.

Rom. Go too I say you shall.

Nurse

Nur. This afternoone sir? well she shall be there.
Ro. And stay thou good Nurse behind the Abbey wall,
Within this houre my man shall be with thee,
And bring thee Cords made like a tackled staire,
Which to the high top gallant of my ioy,
Must be my conuoy in the secret night.
Farewell, be trustie and I'le quite thy paines.
Farewell, commend me to thy Mistresse.
Nur. Now God in heauen blesse thee harke you sir.
Rom. What saist thou my deare Nurse?
Nurse. Is your man secret, did you neare heare say two may keepe counsell, putting one away.
Ro. Warrant thee my man as true as steele.
Nur. Well sir, my Mistresse is the sweetest Lady, Lord, Lord, when 'twas a little prating thing. O there is a Noble man in Towne one Paris, that would faine lay knife aboard: but the good soule had as leeue see a Toade, a very Toade as see him. I anger her sometimes and tell her that Paris is the properer man, but I'le warrant you, when I say so, she lookes as pale as any clout in the versall world. Doth not Rosemarie and Romeo begin both with a letter?
Rom. I Nurse, what of that? Both with an R.
Nur. A mocker that's the dogs name. R is for the no. I know it begins with some other letter, and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and Rosemary, that it would do you good to heare it.
Rom. Commend me to thy Lady.
Nur. I a thousand times. Peter?
Pet. Anon
Nur. Before and apace. Exit Nurse and Peter.

Enter Iuliet.

Iul. The clocke strook nine when I did send the Nurse,
In halfe an houre she promised to returne,
Perchance she cannot meete him that's not so.
O she is lame, Loues Heralds should be thoughts
Which ten times faster glides than the Sunnes beames,
Driuing backe shadowes ouer lowring hils:
Therefore do nimble Pinion'd Doues draw Loue,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.
Now is the Sun vpon the highmost hill
Of this dayes iourney, and from nine till twelue,
Is three long houres, yet she is not come.
Had she affections and warme youthfull blood,
She would be as swift in motion as a ball,
My words would bandy her to my sweete Loue,
And his to me: but old folkes,
Many faine as they were dead,
Vnwieldie, slow, heauy, and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse.

O God she comes, O hony Nurse what newes?
Hast thou met with him? send thy man away.
Nur. Peter stay at the gate.
Iul. Now good sweet Nurse:
O Lord, why lookest thou sad?
Though newes, be sad yet tell them merrily.
If good thou sain't it much the sweeter was,
By saying it to me, with such sowre a face.
Nur. I am a weary, giue me leaue awhile
Fie how my bones ake, what a iaunt haue I had?
Iul. I would thou hadst my bones, and I thy newes:
Nay come I pray thee speake good good Nurse speake.
Nur. Iesu what haste? can you not stay a while?
Do you not see that I am out of breath?
Iul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breath
To say to me that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou doest make in this delay,
Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy newes good or bad? answer to that,
Say either, and I'le stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied, is good or bad?
Nur. Well you haue made a simple choice, you know not how to chuse a man. Romeo, no not he though his face be better than any mans, yet his legges excell all mens, and for a hand, and a foote, and a body, though they be not to be talkt on, yet they are past compare: he is not the flower of courtesie but I'le warrant, as gentle as a Lambe. Go thy way wenches, serue God. What haue you dined at home?
Iul. No, no: but all this did I know before.
What saies he of our marriage? what of that?
Nur. Lord how my head aches, what a head haue I?
It beates as it would fall in twenty peeces.
My backe a'tother side, ah my backe, my backe:
Beshrew your heart for sending me about
To catch my death with iaunting vp and downe.
Iul. I'faith I am sorry that thou art not well.
Sweet sweet sweet Nurse tell me what saies my Loue?
Nur. Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman,
And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,
And I warrant a vertuous. Where is your Mother?
Iul. Where is my Mother? why she is within,
Where should she be?
How odly thou repliest?
Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman
Where is your Mother?
Nur. O Gods Lady deare,
Are you so hot? marrie come vp I trow,
Is this the Poultis for my aking bones?
Henceforward do your messages your selfe.
Iul. Here's such a coile, come what saies Romeo?
Nur. Haue you got leaue to go to shrift to day?
Iul. I haue.
Nur. Then hie you hence to Frier Laurence Cell,
There stayes a Husband to make you a wife.
Now comes the wanton blood vp in your cheekes,
They'le be in scarlet straight at any newes.
Hie you to Church, I must an other way,
To fetch a Ladder by the which your Loue
Must clime a birds nest soone when it is darke.
I am the drudge and toile in your delight:
But you shall beare the burthen soone at night.
Go I'le to dinner, hie you to the Cell.
Iul. Hie to high fortune, honest Nurse, farewell. Exeunt

Enter Frier and Romeo

Fri. So smile the heauens vpon this holy act,
That after houres, with sorrow chide vs not.
Rom. Amen amen but come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervaile the exchange of ioy
That one short minute giues me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then Loue-deuouring death do what he dare,
It is enough I may but call her mine.
Fri. These violent delights haue violent ends,
And in their triumph die like fire and powder,
Which as they kisse consume. The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his owne deliciousnesse,
And in the taste confounds the appetite.
Therefore Loue moderately, long Loue doth so,
Too swift arriues as tardie as too slow.

Enter Iuliet.

Here comes the Lady. O so light a foote
Will neare weare out the euerlasting flint,

A Louer may bestride the gossamers,
That idles in the wanton Summer ayre,
And yet not fall: [illegible]
Ben. Good [illegible]
Mer. [illegible]
Ben. [illegible]
Mer. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Brag of his horse? wrest Arithmetick?
[illegible]
But Romeo is belabored [illegible]
[illegible]
Ben. Come come, [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Enter Mercutio and Benuolio.

Ben. I [illegible]
[illegible]
And we meet, we [illegible]
[illegible]
Mer. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Ben. Am I like such a [illegible]?
Mer. Come, come [illegible], [illegible]
[illegible]
Ben. [illegible]
Mer. Nay, [illegible] we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou? why thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking Nuts, having no other reason, but because thou hast hasell eyes: what eye, but such an eye, would spie out such a quarrel? thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egge is full of meat, and yet thy head has been beaten as addle as an egge for quarrelling: thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lien asleepe in the Sunne: didst thou not fall out with a Taylor for wearing his new Doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old ribbond? and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling?
Ben. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[

I haue it, and soon at your House at.
Rom. Dun's Gentleman the Prouerbe speeds are,
My very Friend, hath got his mortall hurt
In my behalfe, my Reputation staind
With Tybalts slaunder, Tybalt that an houre
Hath been my Cozen: O sweet Iuliet,
Thy Beauty hath made me Effeminate,
And in my temper softned Valours Steele.
Enter Romeo.
Ben. O Romeo, Romeo braue Mercutio is dead,
That Gallant spirit hath aspir'd the Clouds,
Which too vntimely here did scorne the earth.
Rom. This day's blacke fate on mo daies doth depend,
This doat begins, or worse comes to end.
Enter Tybalt.
Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt backe againe.
Rom. Alegon as Victor he triumphs still?
And Mercutio slaine?
Away to Heauen respective Lenitie,
And fire and Furie be my conduct now.
Now Tybalt take the Villaine backe againe
That late thou gau'st me, for Mercutios soule
Is but a little way aboue our heads,
Staying for thine to keepe him company:
Either thou or I, or both must go with him.
Tyb. Thou wretched Boy that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.
Rom. This shall determine that.
They fight. Tybalt falls.
Ben. Romeo away be gone,
The Citizens are vp, and Tybalt slaine,
Stand not amaz'd, the Prince will Doome thee death
If thou art taken: hence, be gone, away.
Rom. O I am Fortunes foole.
Ben. Why dost thou stay?
Exit Romeo.
Enter Citizens.
Cit. Which way ran he that kild Mercutio?
Tybalt that Murtherer, which way ran he?
Ben. There lies that Tybalt.
Cit. Vp sir go with me,
I charge thee in the Princes name obey.
Enter Prince, old Montague, Capulet, their Wiues and all.
Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?
Ben. O Noble Prince, I can discouer all
The vnlucky Manage of this fatall brall:
There lies the man slaine by young Romeo,
That slew thy Kinsman braue Mercutio.
Cap. wife. Tybalt, my Cozen? O my Brothers Child,
O Prince! O Husband! O the blood is spild
Of my deare kinsman! Prince as thou art true,
For blood of ours shed blood of Montague.
O Cozen, Cozen.
Prin. Benuolio, who began this Fray?
Ben. Tybalt here slaine whom Romeo hand did slay,
Romeo that spoke him fayre bid him bethinke
How nice the Quarrell was, and vrg'd withall
Your high displeasure: all this vttered,
With gentle breath, calme looke, knees humbly bowed
Could not take truce with the vnruly spleene
Of Tybalt deafe to peace, but that he Tilts
With Piercing steele at bold Mercutio breast,
Who all as hot, turnes deadly point to point,
And with a Martiall scorne, with one hand beates
Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity

Enter Iuliet.
In Gallop apace you fiery footed Steedes,
Towards Phœbus mansion, such a Waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the West
And bring in Cloudy night immediately.
Spread thy close Curtaine Loue-performing night
That runaway eyes may winke, and Romeo
Leape to these armes vntalkt of and vnseene,
Louers can see to do their Amorous rites,
And by their owne Beauties: or if Loue be blind
It best agrees with Night. Come Night, come Romeo,
Come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie vpon the wings of night
Whiter then new Snow vpon a Rauens backe.
Come gentle night, come loued mournfull night,
Giue me my Romeo, and when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little starres,
And he will make the face of Heauen so fine,
That all the world will be in Loue with night,
And pay no worship to the garish Sun.
O I haue bought the Mansion of a Loue,
But not possest it, and though I am sold,
Not yet enioyed, so tedious is this day,
As is the night before some Festiuall,

To an unpatient child that nauseous robes
And may not weare them, O here comes my Nurse
Enter Nurse with cords.
And she brings newes and every tongue that speaks
[illegible]
Now Nurse, what newes? what hast thou there?
[illegible]
Nur. I, [illegible]
Iul. Aye, [illegible]
[illegible]
Nur. Aye, [illegible]
[illegible]
Iul. Can heauen be so enuious?
Nur. Romeo can,
Though heauen cannot. O Romeo, Romeo,
Who euer would haue thought it? Romeo.
Iul. What deuil art thou,
That doest torment me thus? this torture should be roard
In hell. Romeo speake an infamous blot,
And that Romeo dead, is worse then he,
A sparke of heauen more precious farre then shine
[illegible]
I am not I, if there be such an I,
Or those eyes shut that make thee answere I.
[illegible]
Blisters, [illegible] by vaine or woe.
Nur. [illegible] eyes,
Can heauen finde out but such an euill place,
As one vnfit for heauen, deceiue so rare?
Poysonous shapes, to beautifull abode,
[illegible]
Iul. O [illegible]
Poore Booke of griefe, that all this while art mine
Vncarefull eyes, that ouer-looke this fact,
And [illegible] Romeo dead here
Nur. O [illegible]
[illegible]
Iul. What storme is this that blowes so contrarie?
Is Romeo [illegible] and Tybalt dead?
My dearest [illegible] Lord
[illegible]
For who, is [illegible]
Nur. [illegible] Romeo banished,
Romeo [illegible]
Iul. O God!
Did Romeos hand, shed Tybalts blood
[illegible]
Nur. [illegible] with a flowing face.
Iul. [illegible] keepe so false a Caue?
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

What is the Princes Doome?
What sorrow craues acquaintance at my hand
That I yet know not?
Fri. Too familiar
Is my deare Sonne with such sowre Company?
I bring thee tidings of the Princes Doome
Rom. What less than Doomesday
Is the Princes Doome?
Fri. A gentler iudgement vanisht from his lippes,
Not bodied with [illegible]
Rom. Ha banishment? be merciful say death
For exile hath more terror in his looke
Much more than death: do not say banishment
Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banished:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide
Rom. There is no world without Verona walles,
But Purgatorie, Torture, hell itselfe
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world,
And world-exile is death: then banished,
Is death mis-termd: calling death banished,
Thou cut'st my head off with a golden Axe,
And smilest vpon the stroke that murders me
Fri. O deadly sinne, O rude vnthankfulnesse!
Thy fault our Law calles death: but the kind Prince
Taking thy part, hath rushed aside the law,
And turnd that blacke word death to banishment:
This is mercie, and thou seest it not.
Rom. 'Tis torture and not mercie: heauen is here
Where Iuliet liues: and euery Cat and Dog
And little Mouse, euery vnworthy thing
Liue here in Heauen and may looke on her,
But Romeo may not: More Validitie
More honourable state, more Courtship lies
In carrion Flies than Romeo: they may seize
On the white wonder of faire Iuliets skin,
And steale immortall blessing from her lippes,
Who euen in pure and vestall modestie
Still blush, as thinking their owne kisses sin:
This may flies do, when I from this must flie,
And saist thou yet that exile is not death?
But Romeo may not, he is banished.
Had'st thou no poyson mixt, no sharpe-ground knife,
No sudden meane of death though neuer so meane,
But banished to kill me? banished?
O Friar the damned vse that word in Hell:
Howlings attends it: how hast thou the heart
Being a Diuine, a Ghostly Confessor,
A Sin-Absoluer and my Friend profest
To mangle me with that word banished?
Fri. Thou fond Mad man, heare me speake.
Rom. O thou wilt speake againe of banishment.
Fri. Ile giue thee Armour to keepe off that word,
Aduersities sweet milke, Philosophie
To comfort thee though thou art banished.
Rom. Yet banished? Hang vp Philosophie.
Vnlesse Philosophie can make a Iuliet,
Displant a Towne, reuerse a Princes Doome,
It helpes not, it preuailes not, talke no more.
Fri. O then I see that Madmen haue no eares.
Rom. How should they,
When wise mens haue no eyes?
Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.
Rom. Thou canst not speake of that thou dost not feele,
Wert thou as young as I, Iuliet thy Loue,
An houre before our marriage, what of these
Would'st thou haue done to driue Tybalt from his life,
That murdered your Cosin? which way now
Should Tybalt haue deserued your hand,
But that your hand taught his hand so much
To claime his owne desert?
Fri. Vnderstand well,
I stayed by thee after I heard that loud,
And drew my weapon, prompted by my seruice
To do the deed that fury had committed,
Which was indeed Tybalt, who slew Mercutio.
Who now the price of his dead valour is
Banishment: thou art happie Romeo,
Dost thou not heare? thy head is not yet off,
Nor yet the sentence that should bring it off,
Happie art thou: for the wrath of the graue Iudge
Is parted from thee, and the hideous doome
That threatned, comes clad in a milder shape,
As a faire Mayd comes to a doting Wooer,
Hiding blacke purposes with a smiling cheere.
Be happie then, and part not with a storme,
Thou canst not stay in Mantua, flie hence,
Be gone, liue there, till we can finde a time
To call home thy Loue, pardon thy deed,
And ten times more ioy meete you both in one,
Than all the sower aduantages of sorrow.
Goe get thee to thy Loue as was decreed,
Ascend her Chamber, hence and comfort her,
But looke thou stay not till the Watch be set,
For then thou canst not passe to Mantua,
Where thou shalt liue, till we can finde a time
To blaze your Marriage, reconcile your Friends,
Beg pardon of the Prince, and call thee back
With twenty hundred thousand times more ioy
Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.
Goe before Nurse, commend me to thy Lady,
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heauie sorrow makes them apt vnto.
Romeo is coming.
Nur. O Lord I could haue stayd here all the night
To heare good counsell: O what learning is!
My Lord Ile tell my Lady you will come.
Rom. Do so, and bid my Sweet prepare to chide.
Nur. Here sir, a Ring she bid me giue you sir,
Hie you, make haste, for it growes very late.
Rom. How well my comfort is reuiued by this.
Fri. Goe hence, good night, and here stands all your state:
Either be gone before the Watch be set,
Or by the breake of day disguised from hence,
Sojourne in Mantua, Ile finde out your man,
And he shall signifie from time to time
Euery good hap to you that chances here,
Giue me your hand, 'tis late, farewell good night.
Rom. But that a ioy past ioy calls out on me,
It were a griefe so breefe to part with thee:
Farewell.

Scena

[illegible]

Exeunt.

Enter Romeo and Iuliet at a window.

Iul. Wilt thou be gone? It is not yet neere day:
It was the Nightingale, and not the Larke,
That pierc'd the fearefull hollow of thine eare,
Nightly she sings on yon Pomgranate tree,
Beleeue me Loue, it was the Nightingale.
Rom. It was the Larke the herald of the Morne
No Nightingale: looke Loue what enuious streakes
Do lace the seuering Clouds in yonder East:
Nights Candles are burnt out, and Iocond day
Stands tip-toe on the mistie Mountaines tops,
I must be gone and liue, or stay and die.
Iul. Yond light is not daylight, I know it I.
It is some Meteor that the Sunne exhales,
To be to thee this night a Torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua
Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.
Rom. Let me be tane, let me be put to death,
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
Ile say yon grey is not the Iournings eye,
'Tis but the pale reflexe of Cynthias brow.
Nor that is not the Larke whose notes do beate
The vaulty heauen so high aboue our heads,
I haue more care to stay, then will to go:
Come death and welcome Iuliet wills it so.
How is't my soule? lets talke, it is not day.
Iul. It is, it is, hie hence be gone away:
It is the Larke that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh Discords, and vnpleasing Sharpes.
Some say the Larke makes sweet Diuision;
This doth not so, for she diuideth vs.
Some say the Larke and loathed Toad change eyes,
O now I would they had chang'd voyces too

Since

Since arme from arme that voyce doth vs affray,
Hunting thee hence, with Hunts-vp to the day
O now be gone, more light and light it growes
Rom. More light and light, more dark and dark our woes
Enter Madam and Nurse.
Nur. Madam.
Iul. Nurse?
Nur. Your Lady Mo[ther] is coming to your chamber:
The day is broke, be wary, looke about.
Iul. Then window let day in, and let life out.
Rom. Farewell, one kisse and Ile descend.
Iul. Art thou gone so? Loue, Lord, ay husband, friend?
I must heare from thee euery day in the hower,
For in a minute there are many dayes:
O by this count I shall be much in yeares,
Ere I againe behold my Romeo.
Rom. Farewell:
I will omit no opportunitie,
That may conuey my greetings, loue, to thee.
Iul. O thinkst thou we shall euer meet againe?
Rom. I doubt it not, and all these woes shall serue
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
Iul. O God, I haue an ill Diuining soule,
Me thinkes I see thee now thou art so low,
As one dead in the bottome of a Tombe,
Either my eyesight failes, or thou look'st pale.
Rom. And trust me, Loue, in my eye so do you:
Dry sorrow drinkes our blood. Adieu, adieu.
Iul. O Fortune, Fortune, all men call thee fickle,
If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him
That is renown'd for faith? Be fickle Fortune,
For then I hope thou wilt not keepe him long,
But send him back.
Enter Mother.
La. Ho Daughter are you vp?
Iul. Who is't that calls? It is my Lady Mother.
Is she not downe so late, or vp so early?
What vnaccustom'd cause procures her hither?
Enter Mother.
Mo. Why how now Iuliet?
Iul. Madam I am not well.
Mo. Euermore weeping for your Cozen's death?
What wilt thou wash him from his graue with teares?
And if thou could'st, I'de thinke it not make me glad.
Therefore haue done, some griefe shewes much of Loue,
But much of griefe shewes still some want of wit.
Iul. Yet let me weepe, for such a feeling losse.
La. So shall you feele the losse, but not the friend
Which you weepe for.
Iul. Feeling so the losse,
I cannot chuse but euer weepe the Friend.
La. Well Girle thou weep'st not so much for his death,
As that the Villaine liues which slaughtered him.
Iul. What Villaine Madam?
La. That same Villaine Romeo.
Iul. Villaine and he be many Miles asunder.
God pardon, I doe with all my heart,
And yet no man like he doth grieue my heart.
La. That is because the traitor liues.
Iul. I Madam from the reach of these my hands:
Would none but I might venge my Cozens death.
La. We shall haue vengeance for it, feare thou not.
Then weepe no more, I'le send to one in Mantua,
Where that same banisht runnagate doth liue,
Shall giue him such an vnaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soone keepe Tybalt company:
And then I hope thou wilt be satisfied.
Iul. Indeed I neuer shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him. Dead
Is my poore heart for a kinsman vexed.
Madam if you could find out but a man
To beare a poyson, I would temper it,
That Romeo should vpon receit thereof,
Soone sleepe in quiet. O how my heart abhors
To heare him named, and cannot come to him,
To wreake the Loue I bore my Cozen
Vpon his body that slaughtered him.
La. Find you the meanes, and Ile find such a man.
But now Ile tell thee ioyfull tidings Girle.
Iul. And ioy comes well in such a needy time,
What are they, beseech your Ladyship?
La. Well Girle, thy kinsman Peare, thy Romeo,
Iul. Madam in happy time, what day is that?
La. Marry Madam, Thursday early morne,
The happy Bridegroome Peare shall goe to Rome.
Iul. He shall not here, till I see him.
La. Well then he shall not here, but I hope
I shall see him.
Enter Capulet and Nurse.
Cap. When the Sun sets the ayre doth drizzle dewe,
But for the Sunne-set of my Brother Sonne
It rayneth downe right.
How now Wife?
Haue you deliuered to her our decree?
La. I sir,
But she will none, she giues you thankes.
I would the foole were married to her graue.
Cap. Soft take me with you, take me with you wife,
How will she none? doth she not giue vs thankes?
Is she not proud? doth she not count her blest?
Vnworthy as she is that we haue wrought
So worthy a Gentleman to be her Bridegroome?
Iul. Not proud you haue,
But thankful that you haue:
Proud can I neuer be of what I hate,
But thankful euen for hate, that is meant Loue.
Cap. How now?
How now? Chopt Logicke? what is this?
Proud, and I thanke you, and I thanke you not,
Thanke me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,
But fettle your fine ioynts gainst Thursday next,

To

To go with Paris to Saint Peters Church:
Or I will drag thee on a Hurdle thither.
Out you greene-sicknesse carrion, out you baggage,
You tallow face.
La. Fie fie, what are you mad?
Iu. Good Father, I beseech you on my knees
Heare me with patience, but to speake a word.
Fa. Hang thee young baggage, disobedient wretch,
I tell thee what; get thee to Church a Thursday,
Or never after looke me in the face.
Speake not, reply not, do not answere me
My fingers itch: wife we scarce thought us blest,
That God had lent us but this only Child,
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we have a curse in having her.
Out on her hilding.
Nur. God in heaven blesse her.
You are to blame my Lord to rate her so.
Fa. And why my Lady wisedome hold your tongue
Good Prudence, smatter with your gossips, go.
Nur. I speake no treason.
Father, O God-eden,
May not one speake?
Fa. Peace you mumbling foole,
Utter your gravity o're a Gossips bowle
For here we need it not.
La. You are too hot.
Fa. Gods bread, it makes me mad
Day night, houre, tide, time, worke, play,
Alone in company, still my care hath bin
To have her matcht, and having now provided
A Gentleman of Noble Parentage
Of faire Demeanes, Youthful, and Nobly Allied,
Stor'd as they say with Honourable parts,
Proportioned as one could wish a man
And then to have a wretched puling foole,
A whining mammet, in her Fortunes tender,
To answer, I'le not wed, I cannot love
I am too young, I pray you pardon me.
But and you will not wed, I'le pardon you.
Graze where you will you shall not house with me
Looke to't, thinke on't, I do not use to jest.
Thursday is neere, lay hand on heart, advise,
And you be mine, I'le give you to my friend
And you be not, hang, beg, starve, die in the streets,
For by my soule I'le ne're acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good
Trust to't, bethinke you, I'le not be forsworne. Exit.
Iul. Is there a pitty sitting in the Clouds,
That sees into the bottome of my grief
O sweet my Mother cast me not away,
Delay this marriage for a month a weeke,
Or if you do not, make the Bridall bed
In that dim Monument where Tybalt lies.
La. Talke not to me, for I'le not speake a word
Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee. Exit.
Iul. O God!
Is no relenting? all these be prevented?
My Husband on earth, my faith in heaven,
How shall that faith returne againe to earth,
Unles that Husband send it me from heaven,
By leaving earth, Comfort me counsell me.
Alacke alacke, that heaven should practise stratagems
Upon so soft a subject as my selfe.
What? say'st thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, Nurse.
Nur. Faith here it is,
Romeo is banished, and all the world to nothing,
That he dares ne're come backe to challenge you.
Or if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then since the case so stands as now it doth,
I thinke it best you married with the Countie.
O he's a lovely Gentleman
Romeo's a dishclout to him: an Eagle Madam
Hath not so green, so quicke, so faire an eye
As Paris hath, beshrow my very heart,
I thinke you are happy in this second match,
For it excels your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead, or 'twere as good he were,
As living here and you no use of him.
Iul. Speakest thou from thy heart?
Nur. And from my soule too,
Or else beshrew them both.
Iul. Amen.
Nur. What?
Iul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much,
Go in, and tell my Lady I am gone,
Having displeas'd my father to Lawrence Cell,
To make confession, and to be absolv'd.
Nur. Marry I will, and this is wisely done.
Iul. Ancient damnation, O most wicked fiend!
Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworne,
Or to dispraise my Lord with that same tongue
Which she hath prais'd him with above compare,
So many thousand times? Go Counsellor,
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twaine:
Ile to the Frier to know his remedie,
If all else faile, my selfe have power to die. Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Countie Paris.

Fri. On Thursday sir? the time is very short.
Par. My Father Capulet will have it so,
And I am nothing slow to slacke his haste.
Fri. You say you do not know the Ladies mind?
Uneven is the course, I like it not.
Par. Immoderately she weepes for Tybalts death,
And therefore have I little talkt of Love,
For Venus smiles not in a house of teares.
Now sir, her Father counts it dangerous
That she doth give her sorrow so much sway:
And in his wisedome, hasts our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her teares,
Which too much minded by her selfe alone,
May be put from her by societie.
Now do you know the reason of this haste?
Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.
Looke sir, here comes the Lady towards my Cell.

Enter Iuliet.

Par. Happily met my Lady and my wife.
Iul. That may be sir, when I may be a wife.
Par. That may be must be Love, on Thursday next.
Iul. What must be shall be.
Fri. That's a certaine text.
Par. Come you to make confession to this Father?
Iul. To answer that I should confesse to you.
Par. Do not denie to him that you Love me.
Iul. I will confesse to you that I Love him.
Par. So will ye I am sure that you Love me.
Iul. If I do so, it will be of more price,
Being spoke behind your backe, than to your
Par. Poore soule, thy face is much abus'd with

Iul. The teares haue got small victorie by that.
For it was bad enough before their spight.
Par. Thou wrong'st it more then teares with that report.
Iul. That is no slander sir, which is a truth,
And what I spake, I spake it to my face
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slandred it.
Iul. It may be so, for it is not mine owne.
Are you at leasure, Holy Father now,
Or shall I come to you at euening Masse?
Fri. My leasure serues me pensiue daughter now.
My Lord you must intreat the time alone.
Par. God shield I should disturbe Deuotion,
Iuliet, on Thursday early will I rowse ye,
Till then adue, and keepe this holy kisse. Exit Par.
Iul. O shut the doore, and when thou hast done so,
Come weepe with me, past hope, past cure, past helpe.
Fri. O Iuliet, I already know thy griefe
It strayns me past the compasse of my wits
I heare thou must, and nothing may prorogue it,
On Thursday next be married to this Count.
Iul. Tell me not Frier that thou hearest of this,
Vnlesse thou tell me how I may prevent it:
If in thy wisedome, thou canst giue no helpe,
Do thou but call my resolution wise
And with this knife, I'le helpe it presently.
God ioyn'd my heart, and Romeos, thou our hands,
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd
Shall be the Label to another Deede,
Or my true heart with treacherous reuolt,
Turne to another, this shall slay them both:
Therefore out of thy long experience time,
Giue me some present counsell or behold
Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife
Shall play the vmpeere, arbitrating that,
Which the commission of thy yeares and Art,
Could to no issue of true honour bring.
Be not so long to speak I long to die
If what thou speak'st, speake not of remedy.
Fri. Hold daughter, I doe spie a kind of hope,
Which craues as desperate an execution,
As that is desperate which we would prevent.
If rather then to marry County Paris
Thou hast the strength of will to slay thy selfe,
Then is it likely thou wilt vndertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame,
That copst with death himselfe to scape from it:
And if thou dar'st, I'le giue thee remedie.
Iul. O bid me leape, rather then marrie Paris,
From off the battlements of any Tower,
Or walke in theeuish waies, or bid me lurke
Where Serpents are, chaine me with roaring Beares
Or hide me nightly in a Charnell house,
Ore-couered quite with dead men rattling bones,
With reekie shankes and yellow chapelesse skulls:
Or bid me go into a new made graue,
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud,
Things that to heare them told, haue made me tremble,
And I will do it without feare or doubt,
To liue an vnstained wife to my sweet Loue.
Fri. Hold then: go home, be merry, giue consent,
To marrie Paris: Wednesday is to morrow,
To morrow night, looke that thou lie alone,
Let not the Nurse lie with thee in thy Chamber.
Take thou this Viall being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drinke thou off,
When presently through all thy veines shall run,
A cold and drowsie humour: for no pulse
Shall keepe his natiue progresse but surcease:
No warmth, no breath shall testifie thou liu'st,
The Roses in thy lips and cheekes shall fade
To paly ashes, thy eyes windowes fall
Like death when he shuts vp the day of life
Each part depriu'd of supple gouernment
Shall stiffe and starke and cold appeare like death:
And in this borrowed likenesse of shrunke death
Thou shalt continue two and forty houres,
And then awake, as from a pleasant sleepe.
Now when the Bridegroome in the morning comes,
To rowse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then as the manner of our country is,
In thy best robes vncouer'd on the beere,
Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds graue
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie,
In the meane time against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my Letters know our drift,
And hither shall he come, and that very night
Shall Romeo beare thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame,
If no vnconstant toy nor womanish feare,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.
Iul. Giue me, giue me, O tell not me of feare.
Fri. Hold, get you gone, be strong and prosperous
In this resolue, I'le send a Frier with speed
To Mantua with my Letters to thy Lord.
Iul. Loue giue me strength,
And strength shall helpe afford.
Farewell deare father. Exit

Enter Father Capulet, Mother, Nurse and seruing men, two or three

Cap. So many guests inuite as here are writ,
Sirra, goe hire me twenty cunning Cookes.
Ser. You shall haue none my Lord, for I can lick my fingers.
Cap. How canst thou try them so?
Ser. Marry sir, 'tis an ill Cooke that cannot lick his owne fingers: therefore he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with me.
Cap. Go be gone, we shall be much vnfurnish'd for this time. What is my Daughter gone to Frier Laurence?
Nur. I forsooth.
Cap. Well may she thrift it to do some good on her,
A peeuish selfe-wild harlotry it is.
Enter Iuliet.
Nur. See where she comes from shrift
With sad looke.
Cap. How now my headstrong,
Where haue you been gadding?
Iul. Where I haue learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition
To you and your behests, and am enioyn'd
By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here,
To beg your pardon: pardon I beseech you,
Henceforward I am euer ruld by you.
Cap. Send for the Count, go tell him of this,
I'le haue this knot knit vp to morrow morning.
Iul. I met the youthful Lord at Laurence Cell,
And gaue him what becomed Loue I might,
Not stepping ore the bounds of modestie.
Cap. Why I am glad on't, this is well, stand vp,

This

That neat should be,let me see the County:
I marrie go I say,and fetch him hither
Now afore God,this reuerend holy Frier,
All our whole Citie is much bound to him.
Iul. Nurse will you go with me into my Closet,
To helpe me sort such needfull ornaments,
As you think fit to furnish me to morrow?
Mo. No not till Thursday,there's time enough.
Fa. Go Nurse,go with her,
Weele to Church to morrow.
Exeunt Iuliet and Nurse.
Mo. We shall be short in our prouision,
'Tis now neere night.
Fa. Tush I will stirre about,
And all things shall be well,I warrant thee wife
Go thou to Iuliet helpe to deck her sister,
Ile not to bed to night,let me alone
Ile play the huswife for this once. What ho?
They are all forth,well I will walke my selfe
To County Paris to prepare him vp
Against to morrow,my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same way-ward Gyrle is so reclaimed.
Exeunt Father and Mother.

Enter Iuliet and Nurse
Iul. I those attires are best,but gentle Nurse
I pray thee leaue me to my selfe to night
For I haue need of many Orysons,
To moue the heauens to smile vpon my state,
Which well thou know'st is crosse and full of sin.
Enter Mother.
Mo. What are you busie,need you my help?
Iul. No Madam we haue cull'd such necessaries
As are behouefull,for our state to morrow.
So please you,let me now be left alone
And let the Nurse this night sit vp with you,
For I am sure you haue your hands full all,
In this so sodaine busines.
Mo. Good night:
Get thee to bed and rest,for thou hast need. Exeunt.
Iul. Farewell
God knowes when we shall meete againe
I haue a faint cold feare thrills through my veines,
That almost freezes vp the heate of life.
Ile call them backe againe to comfort me
Nurse,what should she do here?
My dismall Scene,I needs must act alone.
Come Vial,what if this mixture do not worke at all?
Shall I be married then to morrow morning?
No no,this shall forbid it. Lie thou there,
What if it be a poyson,which the Frier
Subtilly hath ministred to haue me dead,
Least this marriage should be dishonourable,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I feare it is,and yet me thinkes it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man.
How,if when I am laid into the Tombe,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeeme me? There's a fearefull point.
Shall I not then be stifled in the Vault?
To whose foule mouth no healthsome ayre breathes in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes
Or if I liue,is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a Vaulte,an ancient receptacle,
Where for these many hundred yeeres the bones
Of all my buried Auncestors are packt,
Where bloody Tybalt,yet but greene in earth,
Lies festring in his shrow'd,where as they say,
At some houres in the night,Spirits resort:
Alacke,alacke,is it not like that I
So early waking,what with loathsome smels,
And shrikes like Mandrakes torne out of the earth,
That liuing mortals hearing them,run mad.
O if I walke,shall I not be distraught,
Inuironed with all these hideous feares,
And madly play with my forefathers ioynts?
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shrow'd?
And in this rage,with some great kinsmans bone,
As with a club,dash out my desperate braines.
O looke,me thinks I see my Cousins Ghost,
Seeking out Romeo that did spit his body
Vpon the Rapiers point:stay Tybalt,stay;
Romeo,Romeo,Romeo,here's drinke I drinke to thee.

Enter Lady of the house,and Nurse

Lady. Hold,
Take these keies,and fetch more spices Nurse.
Nur. They call for Dates and Quinces in the Pastrie
Enter old Capulet.
Cap. Come stir,stir,stir,
The second Cocke hath Crow'd,
The Curphew Bell hath rung,'tis three a clocke.
Looke to the bakte meates,good Angelica,
Spare not for cost.
Nur. Go you Cot-queane,go,
Get you to bed faith you'le be sicke to morrow
For this nights watching.
Cap. No not a whit,what? I haue watcht ere now
All night for lesse cause,and ne're been sicke.
La. I you haue been a Mouse-hunt in your time,
But I will watch you from such watching now.
Exit Lady and Nurse.
Cap. A iealous hood,a iealous hood,
Now fellow what there?
Enter three or four with Spits,and logs,and baskets.
Fel. I things for the Cooke sir,but I know not what.
Cap. Make haste,make haste,sirrah,fetch drier Logs.
Call Peter,he will show thee where they are.
Fel. I haue a head sir that will find out logs,
And neuer trouble Peter for the matter.
Cap. Mas and well said,a merrie horson,ha,
Thou shalt be logger-head,good faith,good faith.
Play Musicke.
The County will be here with Musicke straight,
For so he said he would,I heare him neere.
Nurse,wife,what ho?what Nurse I say?
Enter Nurse.
Go waken Iuliet go and trim her vp,
Ile go and chat with Paris:hie,make haste,
Make haste,the Bridegroome,he is come already:
Make haste I say.
Nur. Mistris,what Mistris?Iuliet?Fast I warrant her she.
Why Lambe,why Lady?fie you slug-abed,
Why Loue I say?Madam sweet-heart:why Bride?
What not a word?You take your pennyworths now.
Sleepe for a weeke,for the next night I warrant
The County Paris hath set vp his rest,
That you shall rest but little,God forgiue me,
Marrie and Amen,how sound is she a sleepe?

Because Master Romeo comes for you,
And he desires your house and company:
Exit.
And I hope it is not come to this,
Exit.

Rom. I Dreamt my Lady came and found me dead,
And breathe such life with kisses in my lips,
That I reuiued, and was an Emperor.
Ah me, how sweet is Loue it selfe possest,
When but Loues shadowes are so rich in ioy?
Enter Romeo.
Newes from Verona, how now Balthasar?
Dost thou not bring me Letters from the Fryer?
How doth my Lady? Is my Father well?
How fares my Iuliet? That I aske againe,
For nothing can be ill if she be well.
Man. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill,
Her body sleepes in Capels Monument,
And her immortall part with Angels liues,
I saw her laid low in her kindreds vault,
And presently tooke Poast to tell you this,
Pardon the bad newes I must haue told you.
Rom. Is it even so? then I defie you Starres.
Thou knowest my lodging, get me Inke and paper,
And hire Post Horses, I will hence to night.
Man. I do beseech you Sir haue patience,
Your looks are pale and wilde and do import
Some misaduenture.
Rom. Tush thou art deceiued,
Leaue me and do the thing I bid thee do,
Hast thou no Letters to me from the Fryer?
Man. No my good Lord.
Exit Man.
Rom. No matter: Get thee gone,
And hire those Horses, Ile be with thee straight.
Well Iuliet, I will lie with thee to night.
Let's see for meanes: O mischiefe thou art swift
To enter in the thoughts of desperate men:
I do remember an Apothecary,
And hereabouts he dwells, which late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with ouer-whelming browes,
Culling of Simples, meagre were his looks,
Sharpe misery had worne him to the bones:
And in his needy Shop a Tortoyse hung,
An Alligar stuft, and other Skins
Of ill shap'd fishes, and about his Shelues
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Greene earthen pots, bladders and mustie seedes,
Remnants of packthred, and old Cakes of Roses
Were thinly scattered to make vp a shew.
Noting this penury, to my selfe I said,
An if a man did need a poyson now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here liues a Caitiffe wretch would sell it him.
O this same thought did but forerun my need,
And this same needy man must sell it me.

As I remember, this should be the house,
Being holy day, the beggers shop is shut.
What ho: Apothecary?
Enter Apothecarie.
Apo. Who calls so loud?
Rom. Come hither man, I see that thou art poore,
Hold there is forty Duckets, let me haue
A dram of poyson, such soone speeding geare,
As will disperse it selfe through all the veines,
That the life-weary-taker may fall dead,
And that the Trunke may be discharg'd of breath,
As violently as hasty powder fired
Doth hurry from the fatall Cannons wombe.
Apo. Such mortall drugges I haue: but Mantuas law
Is death to any he that vents them.
Rom. Art thou so bare and full of wretchednesse,
And fearest to die? famine is in thy cheekes,
Need and oppression starueth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggery hangs vpon thy backe,
The world is not thy friend nor the worlds law,
The world affords no law to make thee rich,
Then be not poore, breake it and take this.
Apo. My poverty, but not my will consents.
Rom. I pay thy poverty and not thy will.
Apo. Put this in any liquid thing you will
And drink it off, and if you had the strength
Of twenty men it would dispatch you straight.
Rom. There is thy gold worse poison to mens soules,
Doing more murther in this loathsome world,
Then these poore compounds that thou may'st not sell.
I sell thee poyson, thou hast sold me none,
Farewell, buy food and get thee into flesh.
Come Cordiall, not poyson, goe with me
To Iuliets graue for there must I vse thee.
Exeunt
Enter Frier Iohn to Frier Lawrence.
Iohn. Holy Franciscan Frier Brother, ho!
Enter Frier Lawrence.
Law. This same should be the voice of Frier Iohn.
Welcome from Mantua: what says Romeo?
Or if his mind be writ, giue me his Letter.
Iohn. Going to find a barefoot Brother out,
One of our Order to associate me,
Here in this City visiting the sicke,
And finding him, the Searchers of the Towne
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did raigne,
Seal'd vp the doores and would not let vs forth,
So that my speed to Mantua there was staid.
Law. Who bare my Letter then to Romeo?
Iohn. I could not send it, here it is againe,
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearfull were they of infection.
Law. Vnhappy fortune! by my Brotherhood
The Letter was not nice but full of charge,
Of deere import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger. Frier Iohn go hence,
Get me an Iron Crow, and bring it straight
Vnto my Cell.
Iohn. Brother Ile go and bring it thee
Exit.
Law. Now must I to the Monument alone,
Within this three houres will faire Iuliet wake,
She will beshrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents.
But I will write againe to Mantua,

And

And keepe cranky Fortune from Romeo come,
Poore vnluckie Louer, crossed as a Louer is,

Exit.

Enter Paris and his Page.

Par. Gyue me that Torch to hither, and stand aloofe,
Yet put it out, for I would not be seene,
Vnder yond Yugh Trees lay thee all along,
Holding thine eare close to the hollow ground,
So shall no foote vpon the Churchyard tread,
Being loose, vnfirme with digging vp of Graues,
But thou shalt heare it: whistle then to me,
As signall that thou hearest something approach,
Giue me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.
Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone,
Here in the Churchyard, yet I will aduenture.

Par. Sweet flower with flowers thy bridall bed I strew,
O woe thy Canopie is dust and stones,
Which with sweet water nightly I will dew,
Or wanting that, with teares distild by mone,
To grace the obsequies that I for thee will keepe,
Nightly shall Page be strewing of thy graue,
And weepe ore it, thy Parents monument,
Which I will decke with many a seuerall flower,
Which I will water with my teares and mone,
For thee, O Iuliet, therefore for thee,
With sweets and teares I euermore will weepe.

Enter Romeo and Boy.

Rom. Giue me that Mattocke and the Wrenching Iron,
Hold take this Letter early in the morning,
See thou deliuer it to my Lord and Father,
Giue me the light, vpon thy life I charge thee,
Whate're thou hearest or seest, stand all aloofe,
And do not interrupt me in my course,
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is partly to behold my Ladies face,
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger,
A precious Ring, a Ring that I must vse
In deare employment, therefore hence be gone,
But if thou iealous dost returne to pry
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heauen I will teare thee ioynt by ioynt,
And strew this hungry Churchyard with thy limbes,
The time and my intents are sauage wilde,
More fierce and more inexorable farre,
Then empty Tygers or the roring Sea.
Boy. I will be gone sir, and not trouble you.
Rom. So shalt thou shew me friendship. Take thou that,
Liue and be prosperous, and farewell good fellow.
Boy. For all this same, I'le hide me hereabout,
His lookes I feare, and his intents I doubt.

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou wombe of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsell of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten iawes to open,
And in despight, I'le cram thee with more food.

Par. This is that banisht haughtie Montague,
That murdred our Loues Cousin, with which griefe,
It is supposed the faire Creature died,
And here is come to do some villanous shame
To the dead bodies, I will apprehend him.
Stop thy vnhallowed toyle, vile Montague,
Can vengeance be pursued further then death?
Condemned villaine, I do apprehend thee,
Obey and go with me, for thou must die.

Rom. I must indeed, and therefore came I hither.
Good gentle youth tempt not a desperate man,
Flie hence and leaue me, thinke vpon these gone,
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee youth,
Put not another sin vpon my head,
By vrging me to fury: O be gone,
By heauen I loue thee better then my selfe,
For I come hither arm'd against myselfe,
Stay not, be gone, liue, and hereafter say,
A mad mans mercy bid thee run away.
Par. I do defie thy conjurations,
And apprehend thee for a Felon here.
Rom. Wilt thou prouoke me? then haue at thee Boy.
Page. O Lord they fight, I will go call the Watch.
Par. O I am slaine, if thou be mercifull,
Open the Tombe, lay me with Iuliet.
Rom. In faith I will, let me peruse this face,
Mercutio's kinsman, noble Countie Paris,
What said my man when my betossed soule
Did not attend him as we rode? I think
He told me Paris should haue married Iuliet:
Said he not so? or did I dreame it so?
Or am I mad hearing him talke of Iuliet,
To think it was so? O giue me thy hand,
One writ with me in sowre misfortunes booke,
I'le bury thee in a triumphant graue,
A graue? O no a Lanthorne, slaughtered youth,
For here lies Iuliet, and her beauty makes
This Vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death lie thou there, by a dead man interd,
How oft when men are at the point of death
Haue they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O how may I
Call this a lightning? O my Loue, my Wife,
Death that hath suckt the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet vpon thy beauty:
Thou art not conquered, beauties ensigne yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not aduanced there.
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O what more fauour can I do to thee,
Then with that hand that cut thy youth in twaine,
To sunder his that was thine enemie?
Forgiue me Cousin. Ah deare Iuliet,
Why art thou yet so faire? shall I beleeue
That vnsubstantiall death is amorous,
And that the leane abhorred monster keepes
Thee here in darke to be his Paramour?
For feare of that I will still stay with thee,
And neuer from this Pallat of dim night
Depart againe: here, here will I remaine
With Worms that are thy Chamber maids: O here
Will I set vp my euerlasting rest
And shake the yoake of inauspicious starres
From this world-wearied flesh. Eyes look your last:
Arms take your last embrace: and lips O you
The doores of breath, seale with a righteous kisse
A dateless bargaine to engrossing death.
Come bitter conduct, come vnsauoury guide,
Thou desperate Pilot, now at once run on
The dashing Rocks thy Seasick weake Barke.
Heere's to my Loue. O true Apothecary,
Thy

I marrie them, and their stolne marriage day
Was Tybalts Dooms-day, whose vntimely death
Banish'd the new made Bridegroome from this Citie:
For whom (and not for Tybalt) Iuliet pin'de.
You (to remoue that siege of Griefe from her)
Betroth'd and would haue married her perforce
To County Paris: Then comes she to me,
And with wilde lookes bad me deuise some meanes
To rid her from this second Marriage,
Or in my Cell there would she kill her selfe.
Then gaue I her (so tutor'd by my Art)
A sleeping Potion, which so tooke effect
As I intended, for it wrought on her
The forme of death. Meane time, writ I to Romeo,
That he should hither come as this dire night,
To helpe to take her from her borrowed graue,
Being the time the Potions force should cease.
But he which bore my Letter, Friar Iohn,
Was stayd by accident, and yesternight
Returned my Letter back. Then all alone,
At the prefixed houre of her waking,
Came I to take her from her kindred vault,
Meaning to keepe her closely at my Cell,
Till I conueniently could send to Romeo:
But when I came (some minute ere the time
Of her awaking) here vntimely lay
The Noble Paris, and true Romeo dead.
She wakes, and I entreate her come forth,
And bear this worke of Heauen, with patience:
But then, a noyse did scare me from the Tombe,
And she (too desperate) would not go with me,
But (as it seemes) did violence on her selfe.
All this I know, and to the Marriage
Her Nurse is priuy: And if ought in this
Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrificed some houre before his time,
Vnto the rigour of seuerest Law.
Prince. We still haue known thee for a holy man.
Where's Romeos man? What can he say to this?
Bal. I brought my Master news of Iuliets death,
And then in poste he came from Mantua
To this same place, to this same Monument.
This Letter he early bid me giue his Father,
And threatned me with death, going in the Vault,
If I departed not, and left him there.
Prin. Giue me the Letter, we will see anon.
Where is the Countie Seruant? Rise Sir Page.
Page. He came with flowers to strew his Ladies graue:
And bid me stand aloofe, and so I did.
Anon comes one with light to ope the Tombe,
And by and by my Master drew on him,
And then I ran away, to call the Watch.
Prin. This Letter doth make good the Friers words,
Their course of Loue, the tydings of her death:
And here he writes, that he did buy a Poyson
Of a poore Pothecarie, and therewithall
Came to this Vault, to die, and lye with Iuliet.
Where be these Enemies? Capulet, Montague,
See what a scourge is laid vpon your hate,
That Heauen finds meanes to kill your ioyes with Loue.
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Haue lost a brace of kinsmen. All are punish'd.
Cap. O brother Montague, giue me thy hand,
This is my Daughters Iointure, for no more
Can I demand.
Mont. But I can giue thee more:
For I will raise her Statue in pure Gold,
That while Verona by that name is knowne,
There shall no figure at such rate be set,
As that of true and faithfull Iuliet.
Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his Lady lie,
Poore sacrifices of our enmity.
Prin. A glooming Peace this morning with it brings,
The Sunne for sorrow will not show his head:
Go hence, to haue more talke of these sad things,
Some shall be pardoned, and some punished:
For neuer was a Story of more woe,
Than this of Iuliet, and her Romeo.

Exeunt omnes.

*Pain

With one man becken'd from the reſt below,
Bowing his head againſt the ſteepy Mount
To clime his happineſſe, would be well expreſt
In our Condition.
Luc. Nay ſir, but heare me on:
All theſe ow'n were his ere it were his late,
Some better then his valew on the moſt part
Follow his Armes, his Lands (to which reſidence Name Sacred) all within the walls are his,
Make Sacred Even his ſtirrop, and through him
Drinke the free Ayre.
Pain. I marry, what of theſe?
Poet. When Fortune in her ſhift and change of mood
Spurnes downe her late beloued, all his Dependants
Which labour'd after in the Mount to creepe,
Even on their knees and hands (let him but fall)
Not one accompanying his declining foot.
Pain. 'Tis common
A thouſand morall Paintings I can ſhew,
That ſhall demonſtrate theſe quicke blowes of Fortunes,
More pregnantly then words. Yet you do well
To ſhew Lord Timon that meane eyes have ſeene
The foot above the head.

Trumpets ſound,
Enter Lord Timon addreſſing himſelfe curteouſly to every ſeuerall.

Tim. Impriſon'd is he ſay you?
Meſ. I my good Lord, five talents is his debt,
His meanes moſt ſhort, his Creditors moſt ſtraite.
Your Honourable Letter he deſires
To thoſe have ſhut him vp, which failing,
Periods his comfort.
Tim. Noble Ventidius well:
I am not of that Feather, to ſhake off
My Friend when he muſt need me. I do know him
A Gentleman, that well deſerues a helpe,
Which he ſhall have. Ile pay the debt, and free him.
Meſ. Your Lordſhip ever binds him.
Tim. Commend me to him, I will ſend his ranſome,
And being enfranchiz'd bid him come to me,
'Tis not enough to helpe the feeble vp,
But to ſupport him after. Fare you well.
Meſ. All happineſſe to your Honour. Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.
Old. Lord Timon heare me ſpeake.
Tim. Freely good Father.
Old. Thou haſt a Seruant nam'd Lucilius.
Tim. I have ſo: What of him?
Old. Moſt Noble Timon, call the man before thee.
Tim. Attends he here, or no? Lucilius
Luc. Heere at your Lordſhips ſeruice.
Old. This fellow heere, L. Timon, this thy Creature,
By night frequents my houſe. I am a man
That from my firſt haue been inclin'd to thrift,
And my eſtate deſerues an heyre more rais'd,
Then one which holds a Trencher.
Tim. Well: what further?
Old. One only Daughter haue I, no Kin elſe,
On whom I may confer what I haue got:
The Maid is faire, o'th'youngeſt for a Bride,
And I haue bred her at my deereſt coſt
In Qualities of the beſt. This man of thine
Attempts her loue: I prythee (Noble Lord)
Ioyne with me to forbid him her reſort,
My ſelfe haue ſpoke in vaine.
Tim. The man is honeſt.
Old. Therefore he will be Timon:
His honeſtie rewards him in it ſelfe,
It muſt not bear my Daughter.
Tim. Does ſhe loue him?
Old. She is yong and apt:
Our owne precedent paſſions do inſtruct us
What levities in youth.
Tim. Loue you the Maid?
Luc. I my good Lord, and ſhe accepts of it.
Old. If in her Marriage my conſent be miſſing,
I call the Gods to witneſſe, I will chooſe
Mine heyre from forth the Beggers of the world,
And diſpoſſeſſe her all.
Tim. How ſhall ſhe be endowed,
If ſhe be mated with an equall Husband?
Old. Three talents on the preſent, in future, all.
Tim. This Gentleman of mine
Hath ſerued me long:
To build his fortune, I will ſtrayne a little,
For 'tis my bounty. Take your Daughter,
Dowre his intention with this Indirect,
And it ſhall ſeeme as all the Gods had ſhar'd
To make him rich. Marry him to my Houſe,
Fall when I will, it ſhall not vex me.
Old. Moſt Noble Lord,
I owe me to this, or I'll never proſper.
Tim. Plight me your hand to ſee,
Make him know you may proſper
Luc. Sweet Lord, I'll take her, on her Lordſhips
Go not away. What haue you there, my friend?
Pain. A peece of Painting, which I do beſeech
Your Lordſhip to accept.
Tim. Painting is welcome.
The Painting is almoſt the Naturall man,
For ſince Diſhonor Traffickes with Mans nature,
He is but out-ſide: Theſe pencill'd figures are
Euen ſuch as they giue out. I like your worke,
And you ſhall finde I like it: Wait attendance
Till you heare further from me.
Pain. The Gods preſerue ye.
Tim. Well fare you Gentleman: giue me your hand.
We muſt needs dine together. Sir your Iewell
Hath ſuffer'd vnder praiſe.
Iewel. What my Lord, diſpraiſe?
Tim. A meere ſatiety of Commendations.
If I ſhould pay you for't as 'tis extold,
It would vnclew me quite.
Iewel. My Lord, 'tis rated
As thoſe which ſell would giue: but you well know,
Things of like valew differing in the Owners,
Are prized by their Maſters. Beleeue't deere Lord,
You mend the Iewell by the wearing it.
Tim. Well mock'd. Enter Apemantus.
Mer. No my good Lord, he ſpeakes the common tongue
Which all men ſpeake with him.
Tim. Looke who comes heere, will you be chid?
Iewel. We'll beare with your Lordſhip.
Mer. He'll ſpare none.
Tim. Good morrow to thee,

Exeunt

Enter Lord Timon, the

Timon re-

ppy d'ral Ape-

Timon,
my Tailors age,

Take my loue,

Leaue

I gaue it freely euer, and there's none
Can truely say he giues, if he receiues
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them. Faults that are rich are fair.
Vint. A Noble spirit.
Tim. Nay my Lords, Ceremony was but deuis'd at first
To set a gloze on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodnesse, sorry ere 'tis shewne
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray sit, more welcome are ye to my Fortunes,
Then my Fortunes to me.
1. Lord My Lord we alwaies haue confest.
Apem. Ho, ho, confest? Hah, hah, I smell you Knaues.
Tim. O Apemantus, you are welcome.
Apem. No, You shall not make me welcome
I come to haue thee thrust me out of doores.
Tim. Fie thou'rt a churle, ye haue got a humour there
Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame.
They say my Lords, Ira furor breuis est,
But yond man is euer angry.
Go, let him haue a Table by himselfe,
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for't indeed.
Apem. Let me stay at thine apperil Timon,
I come to obserue, I giue thee warning on't.
Tim. I take no heede of thee. Th'art an Athenian, therefore welcome. I my selfe would haue no power, prythee let my meate make thee silent.
Apem. I scorne thy meate, 'twould choake me, for I should ne're flatter thee. O you Gods! What a number of men eats Timon, and he sees 'em not? It grieues me to see so many dip their meate in one mans blood, and all the madnesse is, he cheeses them in, too.
How dost thou Captaine?
Alc. Sick of the disease of flattery,
Nor am I much better for being so retir'd.
Too intimate with my selfe, too much alone.
Good morrow to thy Lordship.
Tim. I thank you Captaine.
Alc. Noble Timon, what friendship may I doe for your Honour?
Tim. Why no, but I thank you.
Alc. I hope it is not so low with your Honour, that you haue no meanes to imploy your friend?
Tim. I thank you, you shall not loose by me at any time.
Alc. My Lord, they are Thieues and Villaines, that will rob you deepe, that dare not take by the high way. Let me haue some imployment, my Lord.
1. Lord So haue we all, imployment my Noble Lord.
2. Lord And so haue I, my good Lord.
3. Lord Make it our request to you.
Tim. My Friends, I am not so vnfurnish'd, but I can finde time for you all. And you shall finde me apt enough to your employments, however, I giue you thankes before hand, for I thinke you meane to employ me.
Alc. Doubt it not worthy Lord.
Tim. Then I pray you, doe not doubt it, for my friends deserue it well at my hands. But why should I keepe you heere? Why should you attend me? You know not my disposition, you know not how vnworthy I am. I will tell you, my Lords, and Gentlemen, what you see in me at the worst. You may take my faults as you take pearles, vpon trust. Coyning my words, that I call'd my friends, I haue often wish'd my selfe poorer, that I might come neerer to you. We are borne to do benefits: and what better or properer can we call our owne, then the riches of our friends? O what a precious comfort 'tis, to haue so many like brothers commanding one anothers fortunes. O ioy, e'ne made away ere't can be borne: mine eyes cannot hold out water, me thinkes: to forget their faults, I drinke to you.
Apem. Thou weep'st to make them drink, Timon.
2. Lord Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And at that instant, like a babe sprung vp.
Apem. Ho, ho, I laugh to think that babe a bastard.
3. Lord I promise you, my Lord, you mou'd me much.
Apem. Much.

Sound Tucket. Enter the Messengers of some three or four Lords, to Timon.
Let it in heere, gentle, willingly, and retire.

Tim. What means that Trumpet? How now?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Please your Lordship, there are certaine Ladies most desirous of admittance.
Tim. Ladies? what are their wils?
Ser. There comes with them a forerunner my Lord, which bears that office, to signifie their pleasures.
Tim. I pray let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid with the Maske of Ladies.

Cup. Hail to thee worthy Timon and to all that of his bounties taste the sweet best. Accept kindly the Maskers that thus like Apparitions come to greet thy welcome, and to make thy feasting more solemne.
Then taste to each all pleas'd from thy Table rise.
They only now come but to feast your eyes.
Tim. They're welcome all, let 'em haue kind admittance. Musicke make their welcome.
Lu. You see my Lord, how amply you're belou'd.
Apem. Hoyday,
What a sweepe of vanitie comes this way.
They dance! They are madwomen,

Enter a third Servant.

How now? What news?

3. Ser. Please you, my Lord, that honourable Gentleman Lord Lucius entreats your company to-morrow, to hunt with him, and has sent your Honour two brace of Grey-hounds.

Tim. He strives with me,

And ne'er can be secure, not with a fair Reward

Flu. What a strange Case is this?

He commands us to provide, and give great gifts, and

Now he knows we have to see into this,

To shew how much he does us, is ten times

Before our faces: we could not hate him,

Unless we saw what he speaks: we must consider, Lord:

He knows the deed, and gives us pay for't: where

We have our Offices, and what can we Know, or speak of this? Were I to tell

Only to Heaven and to him,

I am sure my Lord,

What

Of his own fall he mourns, and leaves us to

Partake with him.

Luc. Hang him, we have enough.

Tim. Ho, my Lord!

Luc. Commend me to him,

Tim. Ho, my Lord!

I am not of that feather, to shake off

My friend when he must need me. I do know him

A gentleman that well deserves a help:

Which he shall have. I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Luc. Your Lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him:

You shall hear more anon.

Luc. Most honourable Man!

Tim. Are they all gone?

1 Lord. Will not my Lord dine with us?

Luc. Why this is the world's soul,

Of his own fall he mourns, and leaves us to

Partake with him.

Luc. Hang him, we have enough.

Take [illegible]
A [illegible]
Cap. I will [illegible]
Sen. Go. Exeunt

Enter Steward with many Bills in his hand.

Stew. No care, no stop, so senselesse of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintaine it,
Nor cleanse his flowing hospitality
With [illegible] nor [illegible] care
Of what is to continue. Never mind,
Was to be so: which payes for all? One feeles
What [illegible] before it comes, so plaine
I must be forc'd to [illegible] comming.
Vile [illegible]

Enter three Creditors, I serv. and Caph.

Cap. Good even Varro: what, you come for money?
Var. Is not your Master [illegible]
Cap. It is to you, [illegible]
Hos. It is so.

Cap. Would we were [illegible]
Var. I feare it
Cap. Heere comes the Lord.

Enter Timon, and his Train.

Tim. So soone as dreaming men of [illegible]
My [illegible] Welcome, what [illegible]
Cap. My Lord, heere is a note of certaine dues.
Tim. Dues? whose [illegible]
Cap. Of Athens heere my Lord.
Tim. Go to my Steward
Cap. Please your Lordship to [illegible] me
To morrow come to my [illegible]
My [illegible] I will [illegible]
I feel [illegible]
I know [illegible]
In [illegible]
Tim. Make not [illegible]
Importune me [illegible]
Cap. Nay then [illegible]
Tim. [illegible]
[illegible]
I [illegible]
Cap. Nay then [illegible]
Tim. [illegible]
[illegible]
And [illegible]
[illegible]
I [illegible]
[illegible]
Are [illegible]
[illegible]
Wherein you are [illegible]
Cap. Do my Friends [illegible]
Stew. I [illegible]

Enter a third Creditor.

Cap. Stay, stay, [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Ant. A [illegible]
[illegible]
Ant. [illegible]
Ant. Do [illegible]
[illegible]
Ant. Nay, stir [illegible]
[illegible]
Ant. Nay, and [illegible]
Cap. Where's the [illegible]
Ant. He has [illegible] the [illegible] Poore Rogues, and
[illegible]
All. [illegible]
Ant. [illegible]
All. [illegible]
Ant. I [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
How does your Master?

Exeunt

Foole Shee's ne're a better go water to ice. Such Chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.

Ape. Good, Gramercy.

Enter Page.

Page Why how now Captaine? what do you in this wise company?

How dost thou my Lad?

Ape Would I might ride a Red mouth'd mouth that I might ever keep take-holds.

Page Perchance he commands me to see him ride on the finest Curtall o'th' Country, and how not shee's worth...

Ape Can'st thou ride?

Page No.

Ape Then will be a Leaping dyet on that day thou art... This is the Lord Timons Mule that Timon rides on. Can'st thou beare a load, and thou shalt be a Beast.

Page Then I should ever be a Dogge, and so shall finde Dogges meate...

Answer me, I say me Exit

Ape I feele your rusty Grace,

I doote I will powre some of it out. Timons

Foole. Will you ride me there?

Ape As I meet my Horse.

You shall see store of Vanities?

Ape I know every Cockscombe.

Ape So would I.

As good as to make it

Apace, and spur to it from hence I leave it.

Foole And so shall you see Vanity enough to be a Foole to his Servant. My Master is one, and I am sure I serve him. When comes he to see you? Marry, he comes to see his Friends, and spend his Money. His Friends are his Vanities, and his Money is his Vanity. So I serve my Master in wise, and am by that reason a Foole.

Page I cannot tell.

Ape Then hence, that we may account thee a Wise man and a Master of Arts, for not to know, thou shalt be no otherwise named

Page What is a Woman a Foole?

Foole A Woman is one that hath her sex from Heaven, and one of the best Creatures, keep Lent when the best Victuals are in the Market, and eates more than her husband can get all the Week. And he is a Foole that marries her, and he is a Foole that keeps not a Whore. He that keeps her shall have the worse bargaine, for he that keeps her will have as many Masters as she has Lovers, which may be a dozen a day, and he that marries her, marries them all: for each one partakes of the Harlot, and she grows to the common Hackney.

Page Why then every Man that hath a Penny is the Cuckold of a Foole.

Foole Not every Man that hath a Penny, but every Man that hath a Penny may be a Cuckold: For there are many Fooles that have Pennies, and they may be Cuckolds. Marry, not every Cuckold is a Foole, though every Foole be a Cuckold, and by your Office, you may be one.

Page Why, my Office?

Foole Why, your Master is a Foole, else he would not keep such a Knave as you.

Enter second Servant.

Ape Come, come, come Foole come

Foole I have no hast, stay at this Lowre, elder Brother, you Woman, you meet me at the Backdoore

Ser Pray you walke neere,

I have some speech with you. Exeunt.

Tim Let me know the worst, whereto tends the time

Have you cast up my state, all my debts,

That I may know what my expence

As I have been to meete.

Ser You would not heare me

At many leysures I propose.

Tim Go too:

Perchance some single vantages you tooke,

When my indisposition put you backe,

And that unaptnesse made your minister

Thus to excuse your selfe.

Ser. O my good Lord,

At many times I brought in my accounts,

Laid them before you, you would throw them off,

And say you found them in meere honestie,

When for some trifling present you have bid me

Returne so much, I have shooke my head and wept:

Yea 'gainst the Authority of manners pray'd you

To hold your hand more close. I did endure

Not seldome, nor no slight checkes when I have

Prompted you in the ebbe of your estate,

And your great flow of debts. My dear Lord,

Though you are now (to you are yet now) deare to me,

The greatest of your having, lacks a halfe,

To pay your present debts.

Tim Let all my Land be sold.

Ser 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone,

And what remaines will hardly stop the mouth

Of present dues, the future comes apace:

What shall defence, where payment crost and ready

Now pleades exchange

Tim. To Lacedemon: I say my Land is spent.

Ser Out, alas, Lord, to wade through sea and word,

Were to run through, to put a girdle round

How quickely were it gone

Tim You tell me true

Ser. If you suspect my Husbandry or Faith,

Call me before the exactest Auditors

And set me on the proofe. So the Gods bless me,

When all our Offices have been oppressed

With riotous Feeders, when our Vaults have wept

With drunken spilth of Wine, when every Room

Hath blaz'd with lights and bray'd with Minstrelsie,

I have retir'd me to a wastefull cocke,

And set mine eyes flow.

Tim Prythee no more.

Ser Heavens have I said the bounty of this Lord

How many prodigall mouthes have prais'd his sweete flesh

And made it proud. How many a breath

Is this day given to sing his goodnesse. Now

Of all these not one lookes on his estate.

How many goe by, and take of my Masters Groves,

And ne're looke once on him? Hardly shut the doore,

Or if they doe, sing by with some scorne,

Holding their course even by his window, as

By some old Beggar in the hollow edge

Of frozen Channell, looking through the bankes

With scraping Nailes, for Pitifull bleake Moldwarpe,

Have I seene these Parasites.

Tim Pray no more.

Ser No matter. I have observ'd the bounty of this Lord

How many prodigally puffe up his Sides and Pockets

Surfeiting the Gods bounty out of measure.

What many attend upon him, not Timons,

But Gold, that has attendants, which Gold is Timons

Guests. Timon No matter: Would it were no worse my fellow Lords:

Alas, that Heaven of hearts are great, but brittle Glasse,

That I account them blessings. For by these

Shall I try friends. You shall perceive

How you mistake my Fortunes.

I am wealthie in my Friends.

Within there, Flaminius Servilius?

Enter

Enter two servants.

1 Ser. My Lord is Lear.

2 Ser. I would speak with you, you, you,

what necessity belong'd to't, and yet was deny'de.

Luci. How?

2 I tell you, deny'de my Lord.

Luci. What a strange case was that? Now before the Gods I am asham'd on't. Deny'de that honourable man? There was very little Honour shew'd in't. For my owne part, I must needes confesse, I have receiv'd some small kindnesses from him, as Money, Plate, Jewels, and such like Trifles; nothing comparing to his: yet had he mistooke him and sent to me, I should ne're have denied his Occasion so many Talents.

Enter Servilius.

Servil. See, by good hap yonders my Lord, I have sweat to see his Honour. My Honour'd Lord.

Lucil. Servilius? You are kindely met, sir. Farthewell, commend me to thy Honourable vertuous Lord, my very exquisite friend.

Servil. May it please your Honour, my Lord hath sent ——

Lucil. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeered to that Lord, he's ever sending: how shall I thank him, think'st thou? And what has he sent now?

Servil. Has only sent his present Occasion now my Lord, requesting your Lordship to supply his instant use with so many Talents.

Lucil. I know his Lordship is but merry with me, He cannot want fifty five hundred Talents.

Servil. But in the mean time he wants less, my Lord. If his occasion were not vertuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Lucil. Dost thou speake seriously Servilius?

Servil. Upon my soule 'tis true Sir.

Lucil. What a wicked Beast was I to disfurnish my selfe against such a good time, when I might have shewne my selfe Honourable? How unluckily it happened, that I should Purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deale of Honour? Servilius, now before the Gods I am not able to do't: the more beast I say, I was sending to use Lord Timon myselfe, these Gentlemen can witnesse: but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good Lordship, and I hope his Honour will conceive the reason of mee, because I have no power to be kinde. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions say, that I cannot pleasure such an Honourable Gentleman. Good Servilius, will you bestow me so farre, as to use mine owne words to him?

Ser. Yes sir, I shall. Exit Servil.

Lucil. I'le looke you out a good turne Servilius.
True as you said, Timon is growne indeede,
And with the breath indeed of Courtesie,
Exceeding poore of that: for his Fortune
Hath left him long.
2 Do you observe this Hostilius?
2 I do well.
3 Why this is the world's soule,
And just of the same piece
Is every Flatterers spirit. Who can call him his Friend
That dips in the same dish? For in my knowing
Timon has oft times fed his Friends:
And kept his credit with his purse:
Supported his estate: nay Timons money
Has payd his men their wages. He ne're drinkes,
But Timons Silver treads upon his Lip,
And yet, oh see the monstrousnesse of man,
When he lookes out in an ungratefull shape;
He does deny him, (in respect of his)
What charitable men afford to Beggers.

3 Religion groanes at it.

1 For mine owne part, I never tasted Timon in my life
Nor came any of his bounties over me,
To marke me for his friend. Yet I protest,
For his right Noble minde, illustrious Vertue,
And Honourable Carriage,
Had his necessity made use of me
I would have put my wealth into Donation,
And the best halfe should have return'd to him,
So much I love his heart. But I perceive,
Men must learne now with pitty to dispence,
For Policy sits above Conscience. Exeunt.

Enter a third servant with Sempronius, another of Timons Friends.

Semp. Must he needs trouble me in't? Hum!
'Bove all others?
He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus,
And now Ventidius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from Imprisonment. All these
Owe their estates unto him.
Ser. My Lord,
They have all been touch'd, and found Base-Mettle,
For they have all denied him.
Semp. How! have they denied him?
Has Ventidius and Lucullus denyed him,
And does he send to me? Three? Humh!
It shews but little love or judgement in him.
Must I be his last refuge? His friends (like Physitians)
Thrive, give him over? Must I take the cure upon me?
Has much disgrac'd me in't, I'me angry at him,
That might have known my place. I see no sense for't,
But his Occasions might have woo'd me first:
For my owne love could never be but hir'd,
And that which springs from the end of the last bounty.
And does he think so backwardly of me now,
That he'le not stirre, till he needs must come?
And I must serve us so too, as we do the Creditor,
Who swim in Baite and firme it with our Loves.
As we flatter those
Of whose estates we doubt.
Well, his Occasions might have met my eares,
And they should, for my owne credit sake.
I serve his Honour now, not his Necessity.
And honour parts, where need takes leave of purse.
Who sues to me in forme? but he, of us all
Has alwayes won his Voice on me by Service,
Therefore not ranckt with them, who long since almost
Have forfeited their Seats. This shewes ingratitude
Past hope of Pardon.

Ser. Excellent. Your Lordships a goodly Villain. The devill knew not what he did, when he made man politicke, he crossed himselfe by't: and I cannot thinke, but in the end, the Villanies of man will set him cleere. How fairely this Lord strives to appeare foule? Takes Vertuous Copies to be wicked? Like those, that under hote ardent zeale would set whole Realmes on fire, of such a nature is his politicke love.
This was my Lords best hope, now all are fled
Save only the Gods. Now his Friends are dead,
Doores that were ne're acquainted with their Wards
Many a bounteous yeere, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their Master:
And this is all a liberall course allowes,
Who cannot keepe his wealth, must keep his house. Exit.

Enter Varro's man, meeting others. All Timons Creditors to wait for his comming out. Then enter Lucius and Hortensius.

Var. man. Well met, good morrow Titus & Hortensius

Tit. Troth like to you kinde Varro,
Hor. Lucius, what do we meet together?
Luc. I, and I think one businesse do's command vs all.
For mine is money.
Tit. So is theirs, and ours.
Enter [illegible]
Luc. And Sir Philotus too.
Phi. Good day at once.
Luc. Welcome good brother.
What do you think the hower is?
Phi. Labouring for Nine.
Luc. So much?
Phi. Is not my Lord seene?
Tit. No yet.
Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to shine at seuen.
Luc. I beare my selfe inuited to your Lords Feast to night.
Y[ou]r selfe faire Sir, and the rest, are bid forth to supper.
Is't to be Ladies, Dice, with Feasting, and Reuelling?
Tit. Faith, Gentlemen, whatsoeuer Pastime we shall afford, [illegible] present
Your Lord[ship]s euery houre.
Luc. I?
Tit. And Sir Philotus too.
Luc. Then time shall not be ouer-worne ere serued.
Tit. Almost ready, and it is diuers strokes of Nine.
Luc. How goes the world that men are growne so hot in their Affayres,
And euery houre in Councell?
Tit. Faith, Sir, Warres, and Contentions.
'Tis deepe Winter in the
Businesse my Lord of Warre, and Warre is wasteful.
And yet not so much Warre, as Creditors
[illegible]
Luc. [illegible]
Luc. Then Warre is a good thing, and the time of it.
Tit. Is't not strange, that euen in the midst of Warre,
And the Dominion of Enemies about vs,
Enter [illegible]
Tit. O[ne] of Lo[rd]s men.
Luc. I assume, for my Lord is readie
[illegible]
Tit. Now Lucullus?
Luc. Now Titus, what's the matter?
Tit. Your Lordship sent for some Money?
Luc. Hortensius hath it of me.
Tit. The Lord Timon hath the present vse of all his Treasure.
Luc. Why, he receiu'd but fifteene hundred Crownes.
Tit. But fifteene hundred Crownes? he hath eight thousand more in Ready Money.
And plate, and Jewels, whose worth will double the Heape.
Luc. Is't possible?
Tit. Is't not strange, that euen in the midst of Warre,
Peace should afford such store of Wealth,
And happiest Men, such aboundance?
Luc. I, but the answer is not seruile.
Tit. Seruile? as flatterie is now, and Gold
Your Lordship knowes the vse of either.
Luc. Why I know it to be good.
Tit. Your Honour euer did affect the Weightier Vertues.
Luc. Why, I hope my Seruant do's not call me Villaine for that.
Tit. I thinke not, but the Time is villanous,
To haue Good Men not call'd Knaues.
Luc. How? What does his cashier'd Worship mutter?
2 Varro. No matter what, he's poore, and that's reuenge enough. Who can speake broader, then he that has no house to put his head in? Such may raile against great buildings.
Enter [illegible]
Tit. O heere's Seruilius; now we shall know some answere.
Ser. I may beseech you Gentlemen, to repaire some other houre, I should derive much from't for assure you, my Lord takes worse then euer he did, and growes extreme melancholy.
Luc. May do's keepe me Chambers are not like,
And time bestowed euen to the leaues,
Me thinkes he should not pay his debts,
And neuer a cure way to the Gods.
Seru. Good Gods.
Tit. We cannot obserue too much for his honour.
Enter [illegible] my Lord, my Lord.
Enter Timon in a rage.
Tim. What are my doores opposed against my passage?
Haue I been ready at a becke to the first man that did salute me?
Ready to force him with Gifts before he wish'd?
To breathe his Asthma out with Sighes of Wine,
And Salt-water sorrow? Aroint thee Varlet.
Enter [illegible]
Tim. Me Lord?
Luc. My Lord, my Lord.
Tim. I will not heare of it.
1 Var. A word my Lord.
2 Var. A word Sir.
Fla. A word my Lord.
Tim. Knocke me downe with 'em, cleaue me to the Girdle.
Luc. A word my Lord.
Tim. Cut my heart in summes.
Tit. Many debts?
Tim. I, euery my bloud.
Luc. Free them, Creditors, my Lord.
Tim. Lend me a fetter.
Will no man heare me?
1 Var. My Lord.
2 Var. My Lord.
Tim. Teare me, take me, and the Gods fall vpon you.
Exit Timon.
Hor. I feare me, you haue displeas'd our Masters mighty choller.
Your businesse is not vnknowne to him, and conceiue you may with discretion do't, for his nature is comportable.
Exeunt.
Enter [illegible]
Tim. Flie to me, that my breath from mee the Plague
Might sicken Creditors. Dogges.
Ser. My Lord?
Tim. What should I for?
Ser. My Lord.
Tim. Behaue't so? My Steward?
Ste. Heere my Lord.
Tim. So hasty? Go, bid all my Friends againe,
Lucius, Lucullus and Sempronius. All,
I doe enforce thee to the Rascals.
Ste. O my Lord you only speake from your distracted soule, there's not so much left to furnish out a moderate Table.
Tim.

[illegible]

Enter three Senators at one doore, Alcibiades meets them

[illegible]

1 Sen. My Lo[illegible], you haue my voice, to[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
2 M[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Senate.
[illegible]
[illegible] Vertues
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Enter diuers Friends at seuerall doores.

1 The good time of day to you, sir.

2 I also wish it to you. I thinke this Honorable Lord did but try vs this other day.

1 Vpon that were my thoughts tyed in, when wee encountred. I hope it is not so low with him, as he made it seeme in the triall of his seuerall Friends.

2 It should not be, by the perswasion of his new Feasting.

1 I should, thinke so. He hath sent mee an earnest inuiting, which many my neere occasions did vrge mee to put off, but he hath coniured mee beyond them, and I must needs appeare.

2 In like manner was I deale to my importunate businesse, but he would not heare my excuse. I am sorie, when he sent to borrow of me, that my Prouision was out.

1 I am sicke of that grieefe too, as I vnderstand how all things go.

2 Euery man heares so, what would hee haue borrowed of you?

1 A thousand Peeces.

2 A thousand Peeces?

1 What of you?

2 He sent to me, ——— Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and attendants.

Tim. With all my heart Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

1 Euer at the best hearing well of your Lordship.

2 The Swallow follows not Summer more willing, then we your Lordship.

Tim. Nor more willingly leaues Winter, such Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long stay. Feast your eares with the Musicke awhile, if they will fare so harshly o'th Trumpets sound. We shall to't presently.

1 I hope it remaines not vnkindely with your Lordship that I returned you an empty Messenger.

Tim. O sir, let it not trouble you.

2 My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good friend, what cheere?

The Banket brought in.

2 My most Honorable Lord I am e'ne sicke of shame, that when your Lordship this other day sent to me, I was so vnfortunate a Beggar.

Tim. Thinke not on't sir.

2 If you had sent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come bring in all together.

2 All couered Dishes.

1 Royall Cheere I warrant you.

3 Doubt not that, if money and the season can yeeld it.

1 How do you? What's the newes?

3 Alcibiades banished?

Seru. Alcibiades banished?

3 Trebonius tells me so.

1 How? how?

2 I pray you vpon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends will you draw neere?

3 Ile tell you more anon. Here's a Noble feast toward.

2 This is the old man still.

3 Will holds: Will hold?

2 It does: but time will, and so.

3 I do conceiue.

Tim. Each man to his stoole, with that spurre as he would to the lip of his Mistris: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a Citie Feast of it, to let the meat coole, ere we can agree vpon the first place. Sit, sit. The Gods require our thankes.

You great Benefactors, sprinkle our Society with Thankefulnesse. For your owne gifts, make your selues prayed for: But reserue still to giue, least your Deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the Gods. Make the Meate be beloued more then the Man that giues it. Let no Assembly of Twenty, be without a Score of Villaines. If there sit twelue women at the Table, let a dozen of them be as they are. The rest of your fees, O Gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common Lag of People, what is amisse in them you Gods, make suit to haue it pardoned. For these my present Friends, as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bleese them, and to nothing are welcome.

Vncouer dogges, and lap.

Some speake. What does his Lordship meane?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better Feast neuer behold!

You knot of Mouth-friends! Smoke & luke-warme water
Is your perfection. This is Timons last,
Who stucke and spangled you with flatteries,
Washes off all, and sprinkles in your faces
Your reeking villanie. Liue loath'd, and long
Most smiling, smooth, detested Parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable Wolues, meeke Beares:
You Fooles of Fortune, Trencher-friends, Times flyes,
Cap and Knee-Slaues, vapours, and Minute Iackes.
Of Man and Beast the infinite Malady
Crust you quite o're. What dost thou go?
Soft, take thy Physicke first, thou shalt stay dinner.
Some neere Friends, necessary, borrow none
Vntill All thy Meate be cast. Be a Feast,
Worthy a Timon, and a welcome Guest
Enough to make a Athens neuer select hazard be Counted an Enemie, and a Feast-stay. Exit

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

1 How now my Lords?

2 Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?

3 Push! did you see my Cap?

4 I haue lost my Gowne.

1 He's but a mad Lord & nought but humors swayes him. He gaue me a iewell the other day, and now he has beate's on't now, on't what.

Did you see my Iewel?

2 Did you see my Cap.

3 Heere it is.

4 Heere lyes my Gowne.

1 Let's make no day.

2 Lord Timon is mad.

3 I feel't vpon my bones.

4 One day he giues vs Diamonds next day stones.

Exeunt the Senators.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe vpon thee. O thou Wall
That girdles in those Wolues, dyet in the earth,
And feed'st Athens. Matrons turne incontinent,
Obedience fayle in Children. Slaues and Fooles

Plucke the grave wrinkled Senate from the Bench,
And minister in their steeds, to generall Feasts.
Couert to Dames, and greene Virginity,
Doe of your Parents eyes. Bankrupts, hold fast
Rather then render backe, out-weare your Shoes,
And cut your Trusters throates. Bound Seruants, Steale,
Large-handed Robbers your grate Masters are,
And pill by Law. Maide, reserue thy Marriage bed,
Loue Mistris soft in Beasts. Some of sixteen,
Plucke the liu'd Grutch from thy old limping Sire,
Weight, beare out his times. Piety, and Feare,
Religion to the Gods, Peace, Iustice, Truth,
Domestick awe, Night-rest, and Neighbourhood,
Instruction, Manners, Mysteries, and Trades,
Degrees of Females, Customes, and Lawes,
Decline to your confounding contraries.
And yet Confusion liue. Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious Feauors, heape
On Athens ripe for stroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
As lame as their Manners. Lust, and Libertie
Creepe in the Minds and Marrowes of our youth,
That 'gainst the streame of Vertue they may striue,
And drowne themselues in Riot. Itches, Blaines,
Sowe all th'Athenian bosomes, and their crop
Be generall Leprosie. Breath infect breath,
That their Society (as their Friendship) may
Be meerely poysonous. Nothing I'le beare from thee
But nakednesse, thou detestable Towne,
Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he shall finde
Th'vnkindest Beast, more kinder then Mankinde.
The Gods confound (heare me you good Gods all)
Th'Athenians both within and without. Exit.

Enter Steward with two or three Seruants.

1 Heare you M. Steward, where's our Master?
Are we vndone, cast off, nothing remaining?
Stew. Alack my Fellowes, what should I say to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous Gods,
I am as poore as you.
1 Such a House broke?
So Noble a Master falne, all gone, and not
One Friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
And go along with him.
2 As we shall finde our backes
From our Companion, thrown into his grave,
So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
Slinke all away, leaue gaping Wounds with him
Like emptie purses pickt, and his poore selfe
A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
With his disease of all-shunn'd pouerty,
Walkes like contempt alone. More of our Fellowes.
Enter other Seruants.
Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd house.
3 Yet do our hearts weare Timons Liuery,
That see I by our faces. we are Fellowes still,
Seruing alike in sorrow. Leak'd is our Barke,
And we poore Mates, stand on the dying Decke,
Hearing the Surges threat. we must all part
Into this Sea of Ayre.
Stew. Good Fellowes all,
The latest of my wealth, Ile share among'st you.
Wherever we shall meete, for Timons sake,
Let's yet be Fellowes. Let's shake our heads, and say
As 'twere a Knell vnto our Masters Fortunes,
We haue seene better dayes. Let each take some:
Nay put not all your hands. Not one word more,
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poore.
Embrace and part seuerall wayes.
O the fierce wretchednesse that Glory brings vs!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since Riches point to Misery and Contempt?
Who would be so mock'd with Glory, or to liue
But in a Dreame of Friendship,
To haue his pompe, and all what State compounds,
But only painted, like his varnisht Friends?
Poore honest Lord, brought low by his owne heart,
Vndone by Goodnesse. Strange vnusual blood,
When mans worst sinnes, He do's too much Good.
Who then dares to be halfe so kinde as he?
For Bounty that makes Gods, do still adore Men.
My deerest Lord, blest to be most accurst,
Rich only to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
Are made thy chiefe Afflictions. Alas (kinde Lord)
He's flung in rage from this ingratefull Seate
Of monstrous Friends,
Nor has he with him to supply his life,
Or that which can command it.
Ile follow and enquire him out.
Ile euer serue his minde, with my best will,
Whilst I haue Gold, I'le be his Steward still. Exit.

Enter Timon in the woods.

Tim. O blessed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy Sisters Orbe
Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarse is dividant, touch them with seuerall fortunes,
The greater scornes the lesser. Not Nature
(To whom all sores lay siege) can beare great Fortune
But by contempt of Nature.
Raise me this Beggar, and denude that Lord,
The Senators shall beare contempt Hereditary,
The Beggar Native Honor.
It is the Pasture lards the Brothers sides,
The want that makes him leane. who dares? who dares
In purest of Mannond stand vpright
And say, this mans a Flatterer. If one be,
So are they all: for euerie grize of Fortune
Is smooth'd by that below. The Learned pate
Duckes to the Golden Foole. All is oblique;
There's nothing leuell in our curled Natures
But direct villanie. Therefore be abhorr'd,
All Feasts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
His semblable, yea himselfe Timon disdaines,
Destruction phang mankinde; Earth yeeld me Roots,
Who seekes for better of thee, sawce his palate
With thy most operant Poyson. What is heere?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
No Gods, I am no idle Votarist,
Roots you cleere Heauens. Thus much of this will make
Blacke, white, foule, faire, wrong, right;
Base, Noble, Old, young, Coward, valiant.
Ha you Gods! why this? what this, you Gods? why this
Will plucke your Priests and Seruants from your sides:
Pluck stout mens pillowes from below their heads.

This

This yellow Slaue,
Will knit and breake Religions, blesse th'accurst,
Make the hoare Leprosie ador'd, place Theeues,
And giue them Title, knee, and approbation
With Senators on the Bench: This is it
That makes the wappen'd Widdow wed againe;
Shee, whom the Spittle-house and vlcerous sores,
Would cast the gorge at. This Embalmes and Spices
To'th'Aprill day againe. Come damned Earth,
Thou common whore of Mankinde, that putst odds
Among the rout of Nations, I will make thee
Do thy right Nature. Warre sounds afarre off.
Ha? A Drum? Th'art hard now,
But yet I bury thee: I will go seeke
When Gowty keepers of thee cannot stand.
Nay stay thou out for earnest.

Enter Alcibiades, with Drumme and Fire in warlike manner, and Phrynia and Timandra.

Alc. What art thou there speake.
Tim. A Beast as thou art. I canker gnaw thy hart
For shewing me againe the eyes of Man.
Alc. What is thy name? is it friendly that thou answerst to hatefull to thee,
That art thy selfe a Man?
Tim. I am Misanthropos, and hate Mankinde.
For thy part, I do wish thou were a dogge,
That I might loue thee somthing.
Alc. I know thee well.
But in thy Fortunes am vnarm'd, and feare.
Tim. I know thee too, and more then that I know thee
I not desire to know. Follow thy Drumme,
With mans blood paint the ground gules, gules:
Religious Cannons, ciuil Lawes are statutes,
Then what should warre be? This still is more of euill,
Hath in her more destruction then thy Sword,
For all her Cherubin looke.
Phrin. Thy phrynia
Tim. I will not know thee, then the rot returnes
To thine owne lipps againe.
Alc. How came the Noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the Moone does, by wanting light to giue:
But then renew I could not like the Moone,
There were no Suns to borrow of.
Alc. Noble Timon, what friendly part may I do thee?
Tim. None, but to maintaine my opinion.
Alc. What is it Timon?
Tim. Promise me Friendship, but performe none:
If thou wilt not promise, the Gods plague thee, for thou art a man: if thou dost performe, confound thee, for thou art a man.
Alc. I haue forgot one of thy priuate angries.
Tim. True, I thinke thee but now.
Alc. Hearke, newes with you, a bottle of wine.
Tim. Art thou not returned with the whore and Parasites
Timon. To the Athenian Mason, whom the world
Voices so regardfully?
Tim. Art thou Timandra? Timan. Yes.
Tim. Be a whore still: they loue thee not that vse thee,
Giue them diseases, leauing with thee their Lust. Make vse of thy salt houres, season the slaues for Tubbes and Baths: bring downe rose-cheekt youth to the Tubfast, and the Diet.
Timan. Hang thee Monster.
Alc. Pardon him sweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his Calamities.
I haue but little Gold of late, braue Timon,
The want whereof, doth daily make reuolt
In my penurious Band. I haue heard and griev'd
How cursed Athens, mindelesse of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when Neighbour States
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod vpon them.
Tim. I prythee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.
Alc. I am thy Friend, and pitty thee deare Timon.
Tim. How dost thou pitty him whom thy dost trouble,
I had rather be alone.
Alc. Why fare thee well:
Heere is some Gold for thee.
Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eate it.
Alc. When I haue laid proud Athens on a heape.
Tim. Warr'st thou gainst Athens?
Alc. I haue begun to do it. Perhaps some
Tim. Do so, do so, I wish all well,
And send it carefully to the Gods confound them all by thy Conquest,
And then if they, when thou hast Conquer'd
Alc. Why me, Timon?
Tim. That by killing of Villaines
Thou wast borne to conquer my Country.
Put vp thy Gold: Goe on, heeres Gold, goe on,
Be as a Planetary plague, when Ioue
Will o're some high-vic'd City, hang his poyson
In the sicke ayre: Let not thy sword skip one:
Pity not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Vsurer. Strike me the counterfeit Matron,
It is her habite only, that is honest,
Her selfe's a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheeke
Make soft thy trenchant Sword: for those Milke paps
That through the window barre the bruit side eyes,
Are not within the leaden reach of stones:
But set them downe horrible Traytors: spare not the Babe
Whose dimpled smiles from fooles exhaust their mercy,
Thinke it a Bastard, whom the Oracle
Hath positively bounded, the bleat for feare,
And spare not a iot remorse. Sweare against Obiects,
Put armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whose proofe, nor yelles of Mothers, Maids nor Babes,
Nor sight of Priests in holy Vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a iot. There's Gold to pay thy Souldiers,
Make large confusion, and thy fury spent,
Confounded be thy selfe. Speake not, be gone.
Alc. Hast thou Gold yet, Ile take the Gold thou giuest me,
Not all thy Counsell.
Tim. Dost thou or dost thou not, Heauens curse vpon thee.
Both. Giue vs some Gold good Timon, hast more?
Tim. Enough to make a Whore forsweare her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold vp you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant: you are not Oathable,
Although I know you'l sweare, terribly sweare
Into strong shudders and to heauen's Agues
The Immortall Gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Be whores still: And he whose pious breath seekes to conuert you,
Be strong in Whore, allure him, burne him vp,
Let your close fire predominate his smoke,
And be no turne-coates: yet may your paines sixe monthes
Be quite contrary. And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter.
Weare them, betray with them: Whore still,
Paint till a horse may myre vpon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.
Both. Well, more Gold, what then?

Beseeche (illegible) for God

(illegible) you enough
(illegible) Seruants (illegible) Dogges, leaue
Timon (illegible)
Tim. (illegible)

(illegible) thee away,

Ile curse; thy Father (that poore ragge)
Must be thy subiect; who in spight put stuffe
To some thee-Begger, and compounded thee
Poore Rogue, hereditary. Hence, be gone,
If thou hadst not beene borne the worst of men,
Thou hadst beene a Knaue and Flatterer.
Ape. Art thou proud yet?
Tim. I, that I am not thee.
Ape. I, that I was no Prodigall.
Tim. I, that I am one now.
Were all the wealth I haue shut vp in thee,
I'ld giue thee leaue to hang it. Get thee gone:
That the whole life of Athens were in this,
Thus would I eate it.
Ape. Heere, I will mend thy Feast.
Tim. First mend thy company, take away thy selfe.
Ape. So I shall mend mine owne, by'th'lacke of thine
Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botcht;
If not, I would it were.
Ape. What would'st thou haue to Athens?
Tim. Thee thither in a whirlewind. If thou wilt,
Tell them there I haue Gold, looke, so I haue.
Ape. Heere is no vse for Gold.
Tim. The best, and truest:
For heere it sleepes, and do's no hyred harme.
Ape. Where lyest a nights Timon?
Tim. Vnder that's aboue me
Where feed'st thou a-dayes Apemantus?
Ape. Where my stomacke findes meate, or rather where I eate it.
Tim. Would poyson were obedient, & knew my mind
Ape. Where would'st thou send it?
Tim. To sawce thy dishes.
Ape. The middle of Humanity thou never knewest, but the extremitie of both ends. When thou wast in thy Gilt, and thy Perfume, they mockt thee for too much
Curiositie: in thy Ragges thou know'st none, but art de-spis'd for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee, eate it.
Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.
Ape. Do'st hate a Medler?
Tim. I, though it looke like thee.
Ape. And th'hadst hated Medlers sooner, y' should'st
haue loued thy selfe better now. What man didd'st thou euer know vnthrift, that was beloued after his meanes?
Tim. Who without those meanes thou talk'st of, didst
thou ever know belou'd?
Ape. My selfe.
Tim. I vnderstand thee: thou had'st some meanes to keepe a Dogge.
Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy Flatterers?
Tim. Women nearest, but men: men are the things themselues. What would'st thou do with the world A- pemantus, if it lay in thy power?
Ape. Giue it the Beasts, to be rid of the men.
Tim. Would'st thou haue thy selfe fall in the confusion of men, and remaine a Beast with the Beasts.
Ape. I Timon.
Tim. A beastly Ambition, which the Gods grant thee t'attaine to. If thou wert the Lyon, the Fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the Lambe, the Foxe would eate thee: if thou wert the Fox, the Lion would suspect
thee, when peraduenture thou wert accus'd by the Asse:
If thou wert the Asse, thy dulnesse would torment thee;
and still thou liu'dst but as a Breakefast to the Wolfe. If thou wert the Wolfe, thy greedinesse would afflict thee, & oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner. Wert
thou the Vnicorne, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine owne selfe the conquest of thy fury.
Wert thou a Beare, thou would'st be kill'd by the Horse:
wert thou a Horse, thou would'st be seaz'd by the Leopard: wert thou a Leopard, thou wert Germane to the Lion, and the spotter of thy Kindred, were Iurors on thy life. All thy safety were remotion, and thy defence absence. What Beast could'st thou bee, that were not obiect to a Beast: and what a Beast art thou already, that seest not thy losse in transformation.
Ape. If thou could'st please me
With speaking to me, thou might'st
Haue hit vpon it heere:
The Commonwealth of Athens, is become
A Forrest of Beasts.
Tim. How has the Asse broke the wall, that thou art
out of the Citie.
Ape. Yonder comes a Poet and a Painter.
The plague of Company light vpon thee
I will feare to catch it, and giue way.
When I know not what else to do,
Ile see thee againe.
Tim. When there is nothing liuing but thee,
Thou shalt be welcome
I had rather be a Beggers Dogge,
Then Apemantus.
Ape. Thou art the Cap
Of all the Fooles aliue.
Tim. Would thou were cleane enough
To spit vpon.
Ape. A plague on thee,
Thou art too bad to curse.
Tim. All Villaines
That do stand by thee, are pure.
Ape. There is no Leprosie,
But what thou speak'st
Tim. If I name thee, Ile beate thee;
But I should infect my hands.
Ape. I would my tongue
Could rot them off.
Tim. Away thou issue of a mangie dogge,
Choller does kill me.
That thou art aliue, I swoond to see thee.
Ape. Would thou would'st burst.
Tim. Away thou tedious Rogue, I am sorry I shall lose a stone by thee.
Ape. Beast.
Tim. Slaue.
Ape. Toad.
Tim. Rogue, Rogue, Rogue.
I am sicke of this false world, and will loue nought
But euen the meere necessities vpon't:
Then Timon presently prepare thy graue:
Lye where the light Foame of the Sea may beate
Thy graue stone dayly, make thine Epitaph,
That death in me, at others liues may laugh.
O thou sweete King-killer, and deare diuorce
Twixt naturall Sonne and sire: thou bright defiler
Of Hymens purest bed, thou valiant Mars,
Thou euer young fresh, loued, and delicate wooer,
Whose blush doth thawe the consecrated Snow
That lyes on Dians lap.
Thou visible God,
That soudrest close Impossibilities,
And mak'st them kisse; that speak'st with euerie Tonque

To cleere purpose. O thou touch of hearts,
Think thy instinct and thy voyce towards Vertue
Set them to execution, and the Beasts
May haue in time a worthy Empire.
Ape. Would they could so.
but neuer shall we see it while we Curse
Men are not to be trusted to thereby
Tim. Thou singst coole
Ape. I.
Tim. Thy Lucke I pray thee.
Ape. Lucke, we touch not money.
Tim. Long may it so, and long may I am quit.
Ape. Nothing but Vnkindnesse,
Fate Timon, and abhorre them. Exit Apeman.

Enter the Thieues.

1 Where should the honest Gods haue their seate? Is some poore Fragment, some slender Ort of his remayning? the meere want of Gold, and the falling from of his Friendes, driues him into this Melancholy.
2 It is noted
He hath a noble Nature
1 Let vs make readie vpon him, I feare not so't, how simply is he easily set vpon? how coactiue may we be tolde, how shun it?
2 True: for he beares it not about him
1 Is not this he?
All. Where?
2 It is his description.
3 I know him
All. Saue thee Timon
Tim. Now Theeues.
All. Soldiers not Theeues
Tim. Both too, and Women's Sonnes
All. We are not Theeues, but men
That much do want
Tim. You that are honest, what lacke you?
Want? Why want?
Rocks, Caues, Woods,
Are Beasts and Birds & Flies,
Rob one another. There's more Gold: Cut Throates,
All that you meete are Theeues: to Arms go,
Breake open Shoppes, nothing can you steale
But Theeues do lose it: steale lesse for this I giue you,
And gold confound you howsoere. Amen.
3 Hath not thy Steward spoke to vs all?
4 He wants my Art greatly to flatter him.
1 Is in the malice of mankinde, that no thing setles vs more to Theeuery, then our Masters.
2 He cannot scape vs as an Enemy,
And giue ouer my Trade.
1 Let vs first see peace in Athens, there is no time so miserable, but a man may be true. Exit Theeues.

Enter the Steward to Timon

Stew. O you Gods!
Is yond despised and ruinous man my Lord?
Full of decayed garrisons. O Monument
And wonder of good deedes, euilly bestowed
What an accurst an ostent has deprau'd made?
What viperous ingratitude raigne in the wretches,
Whom certaine Nobler natures, o'ercome deeds.
How rare does meeete with something strange
When man was wisht to loue his Enemies
Grant may not follow, and rather doo
Forbid that which they praise in heauen, I pray them
Hasten, the night's eye, I will preserue my selfe
Vnto my age as my Lord, to whose summe will my Loue
My decere Master.
Tim. Away what art thou?
Stew. Haue you forgot me Sir?
Tim. Why dost aske that? I haue forgot all men.
Then, if thou grant'st thou'rt a man
I haue forgot thee.
Stew. An honest poore seruant of yours
Tim. Then I know thee not.
I neuer had honest man about me, all
I kept were knaues to serue in meate to Villaines
Stew. The Gods are witnesse,
Neuer did poore Steward weare a truer griefe
For his vndone Lord, than my eyes for you.
Tim. What, dost thou weepe?
Come nearer then I loue thee
Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankinde: whose eyes do neuer giue,
But thorow Lust and Laughter. pittie sleeping
Strange times, that weepe with laughing, not with weeping.
Stew. I beggd of you to know me, good my Lord,
T'accept my greefe, and whether this poore wealth lasts,
To entertaine me as your Steward still.
Tim. Had I a Steward
So true, so iust, and now so comfortable?
It almost turnes my dangerous Nature wilde
Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man
Was borne of woman.
Forgiue my generall, and exceptlesse rashnesse
You perpetuall sober Gods. I do proclaime
One honest man. Mistake me not, but one
No more I pray, and he's a Steward.
How fain would I haue hated all mankinde,
And thou redeem'st thy life. But all saue thee,
I fell with Curses.
Me thinkes thou art more honest now, than wise:
For, by oppressing and betraying me,

Thou

You might haue sooner got another Seruice:
For many so arriue at second Masters,
Vpon their first Lords neck. But tell me true,
(For I must euer doubt, though ne're so sure)
Is not thy kindnesse subtle, couetous,
If not a Vsuring kindnesse, and as rich men deale Gifts,
Expecting in returne twenty for one?
Stew. No my most worthy Master, in whose breast
Doubt and Suspect (alas) are plac'd too late:
You should haue fear'd falce times, when you did Feast.
Suspect still comes, where an estate is least.
That which I show, Heauen knowes, is meerely Loue,
Duty, and Zeale, to your vnmatched minde;
Care of your food and liuing, and beleeue it,
My most Honour'd Lord,
For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope, or present, I'de exchange
For this one wish, that you had power and wealth
To requite me, by making rich yourselfe.
Tim. Looke thee, 'tis so: thou singly honest man,
Heere take: the Gods out of my misery
Ha's sent thee Treasure. Go, liue rich and happy.
But thus condition'd: Thou shalt build from men.
Hate all, curse all, shew Charity to none,
But let the famisht flesh slide from the Bone,
Ere thou releeue the beggar. Giue to dogges
What thou denyest to men. Let Prisons swallow 'em,
Debts wither 'em to nothing, be men like blasted woods
And may Diseases licke vp their false bloods,
And so farewell, and thriue.
Stew. O let me stay, and comfort you, my Master.
Tim. If hence thou art'st Curses
Stay with thy selfe, wer't thou art blest and free:
Ne're see thou man, and let me ne're see thee. Exit

Enter Poet, and Painter.

Pain. As I tooke note of the place, it cannot be farre
where he abides.
Poet. What's to be thought of him?
Does the Rumor hold for true,
That he's so full of Gold?
Painter. Certaine.
Alcibiades reports it: Phrynia and Timandra's
Had Gold of him. He likewise enrich'd
Poore straggling Souldiers with great quantity.
'Tis said, he gaue vnto his Steward
A mighty summe.
Poet. Then this breaking of his,
Has beene but a Try for his Friends?
Painter. Nothing else:
You shall see him a Palme in Athens againe,
And flourish with the highest.
Therefore, 'tis not amisse, we tender our loues
To him, in this supposed distresse of his.
It will shew honestly in vs,
And is very likely, to loade our purposes
With what they trauaile for,
If it be a iust and true report, that goes
Of his hauing.
Poet. What haue you now
To present vnto him?
Painter. Nothing at this time
But my Visitation: onely I will promise him
An excellent Peece.
Poet. I must serue him so too;
Tell him of an intent that's comming toward him.
Painter. Good as the best.
Promising, is the verie Ayre o'th'Time;
It opens the eyes of Expectation.
Performance, is euer the duller for his acte,
And but in the plainer and simpler kinde of people,
The deede of Saying is quite out of vse.
To Promise is most Courtly and fashionable;
Performance, is a kinde of Will or Testament
Which argues a great sickenesse in his iudgement
That makes it.

Enter Timon from his Caue.

Timon. Excellent Workeman,
Thou canst not paint a man so badde
As is thy selfe.
Poet. I am thinking
What I shall say I haue prouided for him.
It must be a personating of himselfe.
A Satyre against the softnesse of Prosperity,
With a Discouerie of the infinite Flatteries
That follow youth and opulency.
Timon. Must thou needes
Stand for a Villaine in thine owne Worke?
Wilt thou whip thine owne faults in other men?
Do so, I haue Gold for thee.
Poet. Nay let's seeke him.
Then do we sinne against our owne estate,
When we may profit meete, and come too late.
Painter. True:
When the day serues before blacke-corner'd night;
Finde what thou want'st, by free and offer'd light.
Come.
Tim. I'th'ere you: it may turne:
What a Gods Gold that, it is worshipt
In a baser Temple, then where Swine feede?
'Tis thou that rigg'st the Barke, and plow'st the Foame,
Set'st admired reuerence in a Slaue,
To thee be worshipt, and thy Saints for aye:
Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey.
How now? meet them
Poet. Hayle worthy Timon
Pain. Our late Noble Master.
Timon. Haue I once liu'd
To see two honest men?
Poet. Sir
Hauing often of your open Bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retyr'd, your Friends falne off,
Whose thankelesse Natures (O abhorred Spirits)
Not all the Whippes of Heauen, are large enough.
What, to you,
Whose Starre-like Nobleneſſe gaue life and influence
To their whole being? I am rapt, and cannot couer
The monstrous bulke of this Ingratitude
With any size of words.
Timon. Let it go,
Naked men may see't the better.
You that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best seene, and knowne.
Pain. He, and my selfe
Haue trauail'd in the great showre of your guifts,
And sweetly felt it.
Timon. Ay, you are honest men:
Painter. We are hither come
To offer you our seruice.
Timon. Most honest men:

Why

Why how shall I requite you?
Can you eate Roots, and drinke cold water, no?
Both. What we can do,
We'le do to do you seruice.
Tim. Y'are honest men,
Y'haue heard that I haue Gold,
I am sure you haue, speake truth, y'are honest men.
Pain. So it is said my Noble Lord, but therefore Came not my Friend, nor I.
Timon. Good honest men. Thou drawst a counterfet
Best in all Athens, th'art indeed the best,
Thou counterfet'st most liuely.
Pain. So, so, my Lord.
Tim. E'ne so sir as I say. And for thy fiction,
Why thy Verse swels with stuffe so fine and smooth,
That thou art euen Naturall in thine Art
But for all this (my honest Natur'd friends)
I must needs say you haue a little fault,
Marry 'tis not monstrous in you, neither wish I
You take much paines to mend.
Both. Beseech your Honour
To make it knowne to vs.
Tim. You'l take it ill.
Both. Most thankefully, my Lord.
Timon. Will you indeed?
Both. Doubt it not worthy Lord.
Tim. There's neuer a one of you but trusts a Knaue,
That mightily deceiues you.
Both. Do we, my Lord?
Tim. I, and you heare him cogge,
See him dissemble,
Know his grosse patchery, loue him, feede him,
Keepe in your bosome, yet remaine assur'd
That he's a made-vp-Villaine.
Pain. I know enough, my Lord.
Poet. Nor I.
Timon. Looke you,
I loue you well, Ile giue you Gold
Rid me these Villaines from your companies;
Hang them, or stab them, drowne them in a draught,
Confound them by some course, and come to me,
Ile giue you Gold enough.
Both. Name them my Lord, let's know them.
Tim. You that way, and you this.
But two in Company:
Each man apart, all single, and alone,
Yet an arch Villaine keepes him company:
If where thou art, two Villaines shall not be,
Come not neere him. If thou would'st not reside
But where one Villaine is, then him abandon.
Hence, packe, there's Gold, you came for Gold ye slaues:
You haue worke for me; there's payment, hence,
You are an Alcumist, make Gold of that;
Out Rascall dogges. Exeunt

Enter Steward, and two Senators.

Stew. It is vaine that you would speake with Timon:
For he is set so only to himselfe,
That nothing but himselfe, which lookes like man,
Is friendly with him.
1. Sen. Bring vs to his Caue.
It is our part and promise to th'Athenians
To speake with Timon.
2. Sen. At all times alike
Men are not still the same: 'twas Time and Griefes
That fram'd him thus. Time with his fairer hand,
Offering the Fortunes of his former dayes,
The former man may make him: bring vs to him
And chance it as it may.
Stew. Heere is his Caue:
Peace and content be heere. Lord Timon, Timon,
Looke out, and speake to Friends: Th'Athenians
By two of their most reuerend Senate greet thee:
Speake to them Noble Timon.

Enter Timon out of his Caue.

Tim. Thou Sunne that comforts burne,
Speake and be hang'd.
For each true word, a blister, and each falsse
Be as a Cauterizing to the root o'th'Tongue,
Consuming it with speaking.
2. Worthy Timon.
Tim. Of none but such as you,
And you of Timon.
1. The Senators of Athens, greet thee Timon.
Tim. I thanke them,
And would send them backe the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.
1. O forget
What we are sorry for our selues in thee:
The Senators, with one consent of loue,
Intreate thee backe to Athens, who haue thought
On speciall Dignities, which vacant lye
For thy best vse and wearing.
2. They confesse
Toward thee, forgetfulnesse too generall grosse;
Which now the publike Body, which doth seldome
Play the recanter, feeling in it selfe
A lacke of Timons ayde, hath since withall
Of it owne fall, restraining ayde to Timon,
And send forth vs, to make their sorrowed render,
Together, with a recompence more fruitfull
Then their offence can weigh downe by the Dramme,
Euen such heapes and summes of Loue and Wealth,
As shall to thee blot out, what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their loue,
Euer to read them thine.
Tim. You witch me in it;
Surprize me to the very brinke of teares;
Lend me a Fooles heart, and a womans eyes,
And Ile bewcepe these comforts, worthy Senators.
1. Therefore so please thee to returne with vs,
And of our Athens, thine and ours to take
The Captainship, thou shalt be met with thankes,
Allowed with absolute power, and thy good name
Liue with Authoritie: so soone we shall driue backe
Of Alcibiades th approaches wild,
Who like a Bore too sauage, doth root vp
His Countries peace.
2. And shakes his threatning Sword
Against the walles of Athens.
1. Therefore Timon.
Tim. Well sir, I will: therefore I will sir thus:
If Alcibiades kill my Countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sacke faire Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by th'Beards,
Giuing our holy Virgins to the staine
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd warres
Then let him know, and tell him Timon speakes it,

In

I'e pity of our aged, and our youth
I cannot choose but excuse thy outrages,
And let it be with thee as with wise Physitians,
When they have hearts to mourn. I know my Lord,
There's not a whittle, in the unruly Camps,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the Prosperous Gods,
As Thieves to Keepers.
Stew. Stay not all answer me.
Tim. Do you hear sir?
I will hear you speak.
Once more hear me sir.
Against the Walls of Athens, well, and fair,
Be this immediately done,
And hear me speedily.
1 We will sir.
Tim. Be mercifull before Execution,
One word more, for missing of your Supper,
Ascend to your offices.
1 I have sir.
Tim. Come, shall I entreat one word with you?
1 This will make every man my enemy, pardon me therefore sir.
2 And detest your service. Tim. Happy Athens
In this appears,
And these tokens of love,
Are pretty, and plausible. Ambitious,
For what are not fierce Wolves, and Bears capable,
In a Province of Barbarism, and Lines of Snow,
I am sorry that I have not time to wrong thee with
2 Excellent speed. Tim. Such a Wit, and yet a Fool!
That makes his Gift, more than is his Jobbe,
And shuts up in Measure, my Alone Acquaintance,
Of my Lord Lucullus, let him entertain
Some Worthy Friend of his, for me an Embleme
Of his own State, his Humorous Lord-ship,
And flatter him a little. Hang his Meat,
Apparrell, Fire, Table, Expence. All is spent,
That shall Timon, have from him. It stains me sorely,
To follow that Lord, whom I would not follow now,
That Timon fully knows. Let him but fall,
Not one accompanying his declining foot-step,
But shall Pursue him.
Tim. Come not to me again, but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting Mansion
Upon the Beached Verge of the Salt Flood,
Who once a day with his embossed Froth
The turbulent surge shall cover. Thither come,
And let my graved Tombe fast be a Fountaine
Lapt, in the Marry ripple of the Ocean end.
Where's a Sea daily Plague, to Athens sake,
Curses enough, you have, and Drops enough,
Then, Destruction fall on your Tongues, and Eyes.
Exit Timon
1 His discontents are unremediably coupled to Nature.
2 Our Horses shall eat no Hay, nor our Dogs bread.
And frame we Cudgels, to make Creatures
Incorrigible.
1 It requires swift foot. Exeunt

Enter two other Servants with a Senator.

1 I thought no less, it's strongly Rumored yesterday
As firmly as they report

Sen. I have spoke the least.
Besides his expedition promises present approach.
2 We stand much hazard if they bring not Timon
Mes. I met a Courier, one mine ancient friend,
Whom though in general part we were opposed,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends. This man was riding
From Alcibiades Camp to Athens,
With letters of unlucky signification,
Which if they speak according to the purport
I fear the Serious Cause of your Grief,
Will be thought a Jest.

Enter the other Senators.

1 Here come our Brothers.
3 No more of Timon, it is a lost Theame,
The very Princes of Athens are downe bending
Their Spirits to Death.
Our Letters are to the same effect. Exeunt

Enter a Souldier with Mes. before Timon.

Sol. By all desires whom here I come to please.
What comfort speaks our Noble Master?
Tim. Speak
Such Breath as fits his Faith, to every Man,
Dost you see my Grave where I intend to bury
Lamented and accompanied with Teares,
Thou'rt welcome,
And not a Mourner. Exit

Enter another Senator with Mes. before Timon.

Sen. Put forth to seek me out, and bring to the Gates,
Whom I could wish were Dogs, and Kennell'd
Tim. Here's a Letter sent
From Lord Alcibiades, full of unkind Sense,
Such Smiles, as Rich Men give Timon, before
The Getting of Sicknesse, Hope, or Flattery
Seals in Ingratitude the very Seale
And force him with his Power to Crush our Old Limbes
Ungratefull Man, who with a Banquet keepes
Thy Guests, and Friends from Starving.
Thy Lips rot off,
And thy Tongue be tied, that thy Voice shall make
No more Requests to Athens. Him Pluto, Power,
Who cares for those that Thou neglect'st? Forget
All Men, and Dyet in Mistrust
1 Hum, Hum.
2 Do you hear Captaine?
Some Comfort from this Letter.
Performance is Curse-sick, which defies the Search
Of Every Balme. I did not think to see you
Since I might serve no longer.
1 No matter sir,
What you have sent to me.
Tim. Well, well, well.
1 Leaves are Leaves, and Summer Friends. The Flowre
That's full of Leaves, you see this Winter.
Of Monstrous Friendship, behold our Lord
The Swallow Followes not Winter more, than we.
Will Fly with him, that Flies
And make a Season for him,
2 We must Winter
Too from our Countries. Our Cause lies
Remember'd. Not Unfeasible, but Risque
We must not stand by, nor abide
The Fall of that's to Ruine.
1 The Sea's our Course,
We are not exempted by their hands, from whom
You must expect your Fortunes. Nor are they such,
That these great Towres, Troppees, & Seconds should take
For private Faults in them.
2 Nor are they living

Who

Who were the motiues that you firſt went out,
(Shame that they wanted, cunning in exceſſe)
Hath broke their hearts. March Noble Lord,
Into our City with thy Banners ſpred,
By decimation and a tythed death;
If thy Reuenges hunger for that food
Which Nature loathes, take thou the deſt'nd tenth,
And by the hazard of the ſpotted dye,
Let dye the ſpotted.

1 All haue not offended:
For thoſe that were, it is not ſquare to take
On thoſe that are, Reuenge: Crimes, like Lands
Are not inherited, then deere Countryman,
Bring in thy rankes, but leaue without thy rage,
Spare thy Athenian Cradle and thoſe Kin
Which in the boſome of our wrath (kil'd
With thoſe that haue offended. Like a Shepheard,
Approach the Fold, and cull th'infected forth,
But kill not altogether.

2 What thou wilt,
Thou rather ſhalt inforce it with thy ſmile,
Then hew to't, with thy Sword.

1 Set but thy foot
Againſt our rampyr'd gates, and they ſhall ope:
So thou wilt ſend thy gentle heart before,
To ſay thou't enter friendly.

2 Throw thy Glooue,
Or any Token of thine Honour elſe,
That thou wilt vſe the wars as thy redreſſe,
And not as our Confuſion. All thy Powers
Shall make their harbour in our Towne, till wee
Haue ſeal'd thy full deſire.

Alc. Then there's my Gloue,
Deſcend and open your vncharg'd Ports,
Thoſe Enemies of Timons and mine owne
Whom you your ſelues ſhall ſet out for reproofe,
Fall and no more; and to attone your feares
With my more Noble meaning, not a man
Shall paſſe his quarter, or offend the ſtreame
Of Regular Iuſtice in your Cities bounds,
But ſhall be remedied to your publique Lawes
At heau'ſt anſwer.

Both. 'Tis moſt Nobly ſpoken.

Alc. Deſcend, and keepe your words

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Noble Generall, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd vpon the very hemme o'th'Sea,
And on his Graueſtone, this Inſculpture which
With wax I brought away: whoſe ſoft Impreſſion
Interpreſs for my poore ignorance.

Alcibiades reades the Epitaph.

Heere lies a wretched corſe, of wretched Soule bereft,
Seek not my name: A Plague conſume you wicked Caitifs left:
Heere lye I Timon, who aliue, all liuing men did hate,
Paſſe by, and curſe thy fill, but paſſe and ſtay not here thy gate.
These well expreſſe in thee thy latter ſpirits:
Though thou abhorr'dſt in vs our humane griefes,
Scorn'dſt our Braines flow, and thoſe our droplets, which
From niggard Nature fall, yet Rich Conceit
Taught thee to make vaſt Neptune weepe for aye
On thy low Graue, on faults forgiuen. Dead
Is Noble Timon, of whoſe Memorie
Hereafter more. Bring me into your Citie,
And I will vſe the Oliue, with my Sword
Make war breed peace; make peace ſtint war, make each
Preſcribe to other, as each others Leach.
Let our Drummes ſtrike. Exeunt.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF IVLIVS CÆSAR.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Flauius, Murellus, and certaine Commoners ouer the Stage.

Flauius.

HEnce home you idle Creatures, get you home:
Is this a Holiday? What, know you not (Being Mechanicall) you ought not walke
Vpon a labouring day, without the signe
Of your Profession? Speake, what Trade art thou?

Car. Why Sir, a Carpenter.

Mur. Where is thy Leather Apron, and thy Rule?
What dost thou with thy best Apparrell on?
You, sir, what Trade are you?

Cob. Truly sir, in respect of a fine Workman, I am but as you would say, a Cobler.

Mur. But what Trade art thou? Answer me directly.

Cob. A Trade sir, that I hope I may vse, with a safe Conscience; which is indeed sir, a Mender of bad soules.

Cob. What Trade thou knaue? Thou naughty knaue, what Trade?

Cob. Nay I beseech you Sir, be not out with me: yet if you be out sir, I can mend you.

Mur. What meanest thou by that? Mend me, thou sawcy Fellow?

Cob. Why sir, Cobble you.

Flau. Thou art a Cobler, art thou?

Cob. Truly sir, all that I liue by, is with the Awle: I meddle with no Tradesmans matters, nor women's matters, but with all. I am indeed sir, a Surgeon to old shoes: when they are in great danger, I recouer them. As proper men as euer trod vpon Neats Leather, haue gone vpon my handy-worke.

Flau. But wherefore art not in thy Shop today?
Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

Cob. Truly sir, that they may weare out their shoes, to get themselues more worke. But indeede sir, we make holiday, to see Cæsar, and to reioyce in his Triumph.

Mur. Wherefore reioyce?
What Conquest brings he home?
What Tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in Captiue bonds his Chariot Wheeles?
You blockes, you stones, you worse then senseless things:
O you hard hearts, you cruell men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey many a time and oft
Haue you climb'd vp to Walles and Battlements,
To Towres and Windowes, yea to Chimney tops,
Your Infants in your Armes, and there haue sate
The liue long day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey passe the streets of Rome:
And when you saw his Chariot but appeare,
Haue you not made an Vniuersall shout,
That Tyber trembled vnderneath her bankes,
To heare the replication of your sounds
Made in her Concaue Shores?
And do you now put on your best attire?
And do you now cull out a holiday?
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in Triumph ouer Pompeyes blood?
Be gone.
Runne to your houses, fall vpon your knees,
Pray to the Gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this Ingratitude.

Exe. Go, go good Countrymen, and for this fault
Assemble all the poore men of your sort;
Draw them to Tyber banke, and weepe your teares
Into the Channell, till the lowest streame
Do kisse the most exalted Shores of all.

Exeunt all the Commoners.

See whether their basest mettle be not moued,
They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltinesse.
Go you downe that way towards the Capitoll,
This way will I: Disrobe the Images,
If you do find them deckt with Ceremonies.

Mur. May we do so?
You know it is the Feast of Lupercal.

Flau. It is no matter, let no Images
Be hung with Cæsars Trophees. Ile about,
And driue away the vulgar from the streets:
So do you too, where you perceiue them thicke.
These growing Feathers, pluckt from Cæsars wing,
Will make him flye an ordinary pitch,
Who else would soare aboue the view of men,
And keepe vs all in seruile fearefulnesse. Exeunt

Enter Cæsar, Antonie for the Course, Calphurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, a Soothsayer: after them Murellus and Flauius.

Cæs. Calphurnia.

Casca. Peace ho, Cæsar speakes.

Cæs. Calphurnia.

Calp. Heere my Lord.

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonius way,
When he doth run his Course. Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar my Lord.

Cæs. Forget not in your speed Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia: for our Elders say,
The barren touched in this holy Chace,
Shake off their sterile curse.

Ant. I shall remember:
When Cæsar says, Do this, it is performed.

Cæs. Set on, and leaue no Ceremonie out.

Sooth. Cæsar.

Cæs. Ha? Who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still: peace yet againe.

Cæs. Who is it in the Presse that calls on me?
I heare a Voyce, more sharper than doth please
The dulled eare of Cæsar, crying Cæsar.
Speake, Cæsar is turn'd to hearke.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.

Cæs. What man is that?

Bru. A Soothsayer bids you beware the Ides of March.

Cæs. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cas. Fellow come from the Throng, look vpon Cæsar.

Cæs. What say'st thou to me now? Speake once again.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.

Cæs. He is a Dreamer, let vs leaue him: Passe.

Sennet. Exeunt. Manet Brutus and Cassius.

Cas. Will you go see the Order of the Course?

Bru. Not I.

Cas. I pray you do.

Bru. I am not Gamesome: I do lack some part
Of that quicke Spirit that is in Antonie.
Let me not hinder Cassius your desires,
I'le leaue you.

Cas. Brutus, I do obserue you now of late:
I haue not from your eyes that gentlenesse
And shew of Loue as I was wont to haue:
You beare too stubborne and too strange a hand
Ouer your Friend that loues you.

Bru. Cassius,
Be not deceiued: If I haue veyl'd my looke,
I turne the trouble of my countenance
Merely vpon my selfe. Vexed I am
Of late with passions of some difference,
Conceptions only proper to my selfe,
And not dependant on the generall world:
Therefore these griefes of mine, being dayly swallowed
Must needes be outward flow'd, as fountaine Issue
Is bounded in with Bankes of Flint.
I am glad that my weake words
Haue hurt your passion: (mouing like as much
Vpon the Tryall, that the losse of Life
Yours and mine speake of) I do beare me strangely.
Tell me good Brutus, can you see your face?

Bru. No Cassius: for the eye sees not it selfe,
But by reflection, by some other things.

Cas. 'Tis iust:
And it is very much lamented Brutus,
That you haue no such Mirrors as will turne
Your hidden worthinesse into your eye,
That you might see your Shadow. I haue heard
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
(Except immortall Cæsar) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning vnderneath this Age's yoake,
Haue wish'd that Noble Brutus had his eyes.

Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me Cassius,
That you would haue me seeke into my selfe
For that which is not in me?

Cas. Therefore good Brutus, be prepared to heare:
And since you know you cannot see your selfe
So well as by reflection, I your Glasse
Will modestly discouer to your selfe
That of your selfe which yet you know not of.
And be not iealous on me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common Laughter, or did vse
To stale with ordinary oathes my Loue
To every new Protester: if you know
That I do fawne on men, and hugge them hard,
And after scandall them, or if you know
That I professe my selfe in banqueting
To all the Rout, then hold me dangerous.

Flourish, and Shout.

Bru. What meanes this Shouting? I do feare the people
Choose Cæsar for their King.

Cas. Ay, do you feare it?
Then must I think you would not haue it so.

Bru. I would not Cassius, yet I loue him well.
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that you would impart to me?
If it be ought toward the generall good,
Set Honor in one Eye, and Death i'th other,
And I will looke on both indifferently:
For let the Gods so speed me, as I loue
The name of Honor more than I feare Death.

Cas. I know that Vertue to be in you Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward fauour.
Well, Honor is the subiect of my Story.
I cannot tell what you and other men
Think of this Life; but for my single self,
I had as lief not be, as liue to be
In awe of such a thing as I my selfe.
I was borne free as Cæsar, so were you:
We both haue fed as well, and we can both
Endure the Winters cold, as well as he:
For once vpon a raw and gustie day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with her Shores,
Cæsar said to me, Dar'st thou Cassius now
Leape in with me into this angry Flood,
And swim to yonder point? Vpon the word,
Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bad him follow: so indeed he did.
The

As

As a ſicke Girle. Ye Gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of ſuch a feeble temper ſhould
So get the ſtart of the Maiſticke world,
And beare the Palme alone.

Shout Flourish

Bru. Another generall ſhout?
I do beleeue, that theſe applauſes are
For ſome new Honors, that are heap'd on Cæſar.
Caſſ. Why man, he doth beſtride the narrow world
Like a Colloſſus, and we petty men
Walke vnder his huge legges and peepe about
To finde our ſelues dishonourable Graues.
Men at ſometime, are Maſters of their Fates:
The fault (deere Brutus) is not in our ſtarres,
But in our ſelues, that we are vnderlings.
Brutus and Cæſar: what ſhould be in Cæſar?
Why ſhould that name be ſounded more than yours?
Write them together, Yours is as fayre a Name:
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well:
Weigh them, it is as heauy: Coniure with 'em,
Brutus will ſtart a Spirit as ſoone as Cæſar.
Now in the names of all the Gods at once,
Vpon what meate doth this our Cæſar feede,
That he is grown ſo great? Age, thou art ſham'd:
Rome, thou haſt loſt the breed of Noble bloods.
When went there by an Age, ſince the great Flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they ſay (till now) that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide Walkes incompaſt but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and roome enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I, haue heard our Fathers ſay,
There was a Brutus once, that would haue brook'd
Th'eternall Diuell to keepe his State in Rome,
As eaſily as a King.
Bru. That you do loue me, I am nothing iealous:
What you would worke me to, I haue ſome aime:
How I haue thought of this, and of theſe times
I ſhall recount hereafter. For this preſent,
I would not ſo (with loue I might entreat you)
Be any further moued. What you haue ſaid,
I will conſider: what you haue to ſay
I will with patience heare, and find a time
Both meete to heare, and anſwer ſuch high things.
Till then, my Noble Friend, chew vpon this:
Brutus had rather be a Villager,
Then to repute himſelfe a Sonne of Rome
Vnder theſe hard Conditions, as this time
Is like to lay vpon vs.
Caſſi. I am glad that my weake words
Haue ſtrucke but thus much ſhew of fire from Brutus.

Enter Cæſar and his Traine.

Bru. The Games are done,
And Cæſar is returning.
Caſſ. As they paſſe by,
Plucke Caſca by the Sleeue,
And he will (after his ſowre faſhion) tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to day.
Bru. I will do ſo: but looke you, Caſſius,
The angry ſpot doth glow on Cæſars brow,
And all the reſt, looke like a chidden Traine,
Calphurnias Cheeke is pale, and Cicero
Lookes with ſuch Ferret and ſuch fiery eyes
As we haue ſeene him in the Capitoll,
Being croſt in Conference, by ſome Senators.
Caſſ. Caſca will tell vs what the matter is.
Cæſ. Antonio.
Ant. Cæſar.
Cæſ. Let me haue men about me, that are fat,
Sleeke-headed men, and ſuch as ſleepe a-nights:
Yond Caſſius has a leane and hungry looke
He thinkes too much: ſuch men are dangerous.
Ant. Feare him not Cæſar, he's not dangerous,
He is a Noble Roman, and well giuen.
Cæſ. Would he were fatter: but I feare him not:
Yet if my name were liable to feare,
I do not know the man I ſhould auoyd
So ſoone as that ſpare Caſſius. He reades much,
He is a great Obſeruer, and he lookes
Quite through the Deeds of men. He loues no Playes,
As thou doſt Antony: he heares no Muſicke.
Seldome he ſmiles, and ſmiles in ſuch a ſort
As if he mock'd himſelfe, and ſcorn'd his ſpirit
That could be moued to ſmile at any thing.
Such men as he, be neuer at heart's eaſe,
Whiles they behold a greater than themſelues,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be feard,
Than what I feare: for alwayes I am Cæſar.
Come on my right hand, for this eare is deafe,
And tell me truely, what thou think'ſt of him.

Exeunt Cæſar and his Traine.

Caſk. You pull'd me by the cloake, would you ſpeake
with me?
Bru. I pray thee tell vs what hath chanc'd to day
That Cæſar lookes ſo ſad.
Caſk. Why you were with him, were you not?
Bru. I ſhould not els be glad to know of it.
Caſk. Why there was a Crowne offered him: and being offered him, he put it by with the backe of his hand, thus: and then the people fell a ſhouting.
Bru. What was the ſecond noyſe for?
Caſk. Why for that too.
Caſſ. They ſhouted thrice: what was the laſt cry for?
Caſk. Why for that too.
Bru. Was the Crowne offer'd him thrice?
Caſk. I marry was't, and he put it by thrice, euery time gentler than other, and at euery putting by, mine honeſt Neighbours ſhouted.
Caſſ. Who offer'd him the Crowne?
Caſk. Why Antony.
Bru. Tell vs the manner of it gentle Caſca.
Caſk. I can as well be hang'd, as tell the manner of it: it was meere foolerie, I did not marke it. I ſaw Marke Antony offer him a Crowne, yet 'twas not a Crowne neyther, 'twas one of these Coronets: and as I told you, he put it by once: but for all that, to my thinking, he would faine haue had it. Then he offered it to him againe: then he put it by againe: but to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time: he put it the third time by: and ſtill as he refus'd it, the rabblement hooted, and clapt their chopt hands, and threw vp their ſweaty Nightcappes, and vttered ſuch a deale of ſtinking breath because Cæſar refus'd the Crowne, that it had almoſt choakt Cæſar: for he ſwounded, and fell downe at it. And for mine owne part, I durſt not laugh, for feare of opening my Lippes, and receiuing the bad Aire.

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous Night;
And thus vnbraced, Casca, as you see,
Have bar'd my bosome to the Thunder-stone:
And when the cross blew Lightning seem'd to open
The breast of Heaven, I did present my selfe
Euen in the aime and very flash of it.
Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the Heauens?
It is the part of men to feare and tremble,
When the most mighty Gods by tokens send
Such dreadful Heraldes to astonish vs.
Cask. You are dull Casca,
And those sparkes of life that should be in a Roman,
You doe want, or else you vse not:
You looke pale, and gaze, and put on fear,
And cast your faces vpon your wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the Heauens:
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding Ghosts,
Why Birds and Beasts, from quality and kinde,
Why Old men, fooles, and children calculate,
Why all these things change from their Ordinance,
Their Natures, and preformed Faculties,
To monstrous quality: why you shall finde,
That Heauen hath infus'd them with these Spirits,
To make them Instruments of feare, and warning,
Vnto some monstrous State.
Now could I (Casca) name to thee a man,
Most like this dreadful Night,
That thunders, lightens, opens Graues, and roares,
As doth the Lion in the Capitoll:
A man no mightier than thy selfe or me,
In personall action, yet prodigious grown,
And fearefull, as these strange eruptions are.
Casca. 'Tis Cæsar that you meane, is it not, Cassius?
Cassi. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Haue Thewes and Limbes like to their Ancestors;
But woe the while, our Fathers mindes are dead,
And we are Gouernd with our Mothers spirits,
Our yoake, and sufferance shewes vs Womanish.
Casca. Indeed, they say the Senators to morrow
Meane to establish Cæsar as a King:
And he shall weare his Crowne by Sea, and Land,
In euery place, saue here in Italy.
Cassi. I know where I will weare this Dagger then,
Cassius from bondage will deliuer Cassius:
Therein yee Gods, you Tyrants do not erre.
Now Stone-walls can be ouergone by Stone,
And Lyon, Bull, and Beare, (alike seuere)
Are seuerally inclos'd: yea the brainsick rage,
And shake the yoake by spurning at the Starres,
Else none of vs had eyes to see the way.
Out of the fatall Consequence of this,
Assume much honour, and a happy death,
Is fairely wrapt vp.
Cassius, from bondage will deliuer Cassius:
Were I a common laughter, or a thing
Euery man mockt, as Cynicall Diogenes,
That rate not words against a Tyrants teeth,
Say I loue Brutus, and I am prou'd by him,
As well as Cæsar is: Now in the Names of all the Gods at once,
Vpon what meate doth this our Cæsar feede,
That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd:
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of Noble bloods.
When went there by an Age, since the great Flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they say (till now) that talkt of Rome,
That her wide Walkes incompast but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and roome enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O, you and I, haue heard our Fathers say,
There was a Brutus once, that would haue brook'd
Th'eternall Deuill to keepe his State in Rome,
As easily as a King.
Bru. That you do loue me, I am nothing iealous,
What you would worke me to, I haue some aime,
How I haue thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter. For this present,
I would not (so with loue I might entreat you)
Be any further mou'd. What you haue said,
I will consider: what you haue to say,
I will with patience heare, and find a time
Both meete to heare, and answer such high things.
Till then, my Noble Friend, chew vpon this:
Brutus had rather be a Villager,
Than to repute himselfe a Sonne to Rome
Vnder these hard conditions as this time
Is like to lay vpon vs.
Cassi. I am glad that my weake words
Haue stird but blinde Passion in you, Brutus,
His blindnesse makes the stronger his Aduantage.
Enter Cæsar.
Bru. Stand close awhile, for heere comes one in haste.
Cassi. 'Tis Cæsar I mark how Lambent Caska
Begins and ends every sentence with a iest.
Casca. I tell thee what, Marcus Cicero (as they call him)
Cassi. No more of that, he is a Scholler.
Tell me, Antonius, and the other gay Companion,
Casca. Very well.
What was't that displeas'd Cæsar so?
I was sorry to see it: shall I see the next time?
Casca. Ay, marry shall you.
Cassi. Then place your selfe in the way of Brutus,
Portia's Husband, to know the reason of it.
Bru. Antonius, and Trebonius gone?
Casca. Ay, marry, Marcus Cicero and other gone
To take their places at the Theater,
And I am sent to tell you what I saw.
Cassi. Then leaue vs, you will see more ere long.
Casca. Exit Casca.
Come, Casca you and I will yet ere night,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already, and the man entire
Vpon the next encounter yeelds him ours.
Casca. O, they sit high in all the Peoples hearts:
And that which would appeare offence in vs,
His Countenance (like richest Alchymie)
Will change to Vertue, and to Worthinesse.
Cassi. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You haue right well conceited. Let vs go,
For it is after Noone, and ere day
We will awake him, and be sure of him.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Brutus in his Orchard.

Brut. What Lucius hoe?
I cannot by the progresse of the Starres,
Giue guesse how neere to day. Lucius, say?
I would it were my fault to sleepe so much.
When Lucius when? awake I say, what Lucius?
Enter Lucius.
Luc. Cal'd you my Lord?
Brut. Get me a Taper in my Study Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.
Luc. I will my Lord. Exit.
Brut. It must be by his death: and for my part,
I know no personall cause, to spurne at him,
But for the generall. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the question.
It is the bright day that brings forth the Adder,
And that craues wary walking. Crowne him that,
And then I grant we put a Sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
Th'abuse of Greatnesse is, when it disioynes
Remorse from Power. And to speake truth of Cæsar,
I haue not known when his affections sway'd
More than his Reason. But 'tis a common proofe,
That Lowlinesse is young Ambitions Ladder,
Whereto the Climber-upward turnes his face:
But when he once attaines the vpmost round,
He then vnto the Ladder turnes his back,
Looks in the Clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. So Cæsar may:
Then lest he may, preuent. And since the Quarrell
Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus, that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities:
And therefore think him as a Serpents Egge,
Which hatcht, would as his kind grow mischieuous:
And kill him in the Shell.
Enter Lucius.
Luc. The Taper burneth in your Closet Sir.
Searching the Window for a Flint, I found
This Paper, thus seal'd vp, and I am sure
It did not lye there when I went to bed.
Gives him the Letter.
Brut. Get you to bed againe, it is not Morrow Lucius:
Is not to morrow, boy, the first of March?
Luc. I know not, Sir.
Brut. Looke in the Kalender and bring me word.
Luc. I will Sir. Exit.
Brut. The Exhalations whizzing in the Ayre,
Giue so much light that I may read by them.
Opens the Letter and reades.
Brutus thou sleep'st: awake, and see
Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I peece it out:
I must emend: my Ancestors did from the streets of Rome
Expell Tarquin, when he was call'd King.
Speake, strike, redresse. Am I entreated
To speake, and strike? O Rome, I make thee promise,
If the redresse will follow, thou receiu'st
Thy full Petition at the hand of Brutus.
Enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, March is wasted fifteene dayes.
Knocke within.
Brut. 'Tis good. Go to the Gate, some body knocks.
Since Cassius first did whet me against Cæsar,
I haue not slept.
Betweene the acting of a dreadfull thing,
And the first motion, all the Interim is
Like a Phantasma, or a hideous Dreame:
The Genius, and the mortall Instruments
Are then in Councell; and the State of a man,
Like to a little Kingdome, suffers then
The nature of an Insurrection.
Enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, 'tis your Brother Cassius at the Doore,
Who doth desire to see you.
Brut. Is he alone?
Luc. No, Sir, there are moe with him.
Brut. Do you know them?
Luc. No Sir, their Hats are pluckt about their Eares,
And halfe their Faces buried in their Cloakes,
That by no meanes I may discouer them,
By any marke of favour.
Brut. Let 'em enter.
They are the faction. O Conspiracie,
Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous Brow by Night,
When euils are most free? O then by day
Where wilt thou finde a Cauerne darke enough,
To mask thy monstrous Visage? Seeke none Conspiracie,
Hide it in Smiles and Affability:
For if thou path, thy Natiue semblance on,
Not Erebus it selfe were deepe enough
For thee to stalke vnseene.
Enter the Conspirators, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, Metellus and Trebonius.
Cas. I think we are too bold vpon your Rest:
Good morrow, Brutus, do we trouble you?
Brut. I haue been vp this houre, awake all Night.
Know I these men that come along with you?
Cas. Yes, euery man of them, and no man here
But honors you, and euery one doth wish,
You had but that opinion of your selfe,
Which euery Noble Roman beares of you.
This is Trebonius.
Brut. He is welcome hither.
Cas. This Decius Brutus.
Brut. He is welcome too.
Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna; and this, Metellus Cimber.
Brut. They are all welcome.
What watchful Cares do interpose themselues
Betwixt your Eyes, and Night?
Cas. Shall I entreat a word? They whisper.
Decius. Here lyes the East: doth not the Day breake here?
Casca. No.
Cin. O pardon Sir, it doth: and you grey Lines,
That fret the Clouds, are Messengers of Day.
Casca. You shall confesse that you are both deceiu'd.
Here, as I point my Sword, the Sunne arises,
Which is a great way growing on the South,

Weighing

We gliding the youthful Season of the yeare,
Some two moneths hence, vp higher toward the North
Him first presents it selfe, and he comes on East
Stands as the Capitol directly here.
Bru. Giue me your hands all ouer, one by one.
Cas. And let vs swear our Resolution.
Bru. No, not an Oath: If not the Face of men,
The sufferance of our Soules, the times Abuse:
If these be Motiues weake, breake off betimes,
And euery man hence to his idle bed:
So let high-sighted Tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by Lottery. But those sports
(As I am sure they do) bear fire enough
To kindle Cowards, and to steele with valour
The melting Spirits of women. Then Country, Countrymen
What need we say our grudge, but our owne eyes
Will leach vs to a tyrant, and his fits
Before a Crow or Dawe? What need we Bond,
The secret Romans, that haue spoke the word,
And will not palter? And what other Oath,
Then Honesty to Honesty engag'd,
That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
Sweare Priests and Cowards, and men Cautelous,
Old feeble Carrions, and such suffering Soules
That welcome wrongs: Vnto bad causes sweare
Such Creatures as men doubt: but do not stayne
The euen Vertue of our Enterprize.
Nor th'Insuppressiue Mettle of our spirits,
To think that or our Cause, or our Performance
Did need an Oath. When euery drop of blood
That euery Romane bleeds, is Noble Cæsars,
If he doe breake the smallest particle
Of any promise that hath past from him.
Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him?
I think he will stand very strong with vs.
Casca. Let vs not leaue him out.
Cin. No, by no meanes.
Metel. O let vs haue him: for his Siluer hayres
Will purchase vs a good opinion,
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds.
It shall be said, his iudgement rul'd our hands:
Our youths and wildnesse shall no whit appeare,
But all be buried in his Grauity.
Bru. O name him not: let vs not break with him,
For he will neuer follow anything
That other men begin.
Cas. Then leaue him out.
Casca. Indeed he is not fit.
Decius. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Cæsar?
Cas. Decius well vrg'd: I think it is not meet,
Marke Antony, so well beloued of Cæsar,
Should outliue Cæsar: we shall find of him
A shrewd Contriuer. And you know, his meanes
If he improue them, may well stretch so farre
As to annoy vs all: which to preuent,
Let Antony and Cæsar fall together.
Bru. Our course will seeme too bloody, Caius Cassius,
To cut the Head off, and then hack the Limbes
Like Wrath in death, and Enuy afterwards
For Antony is but a Limbe of Cæsar.
Let's be Sacrificers, but not Butchers, Caius.
We all stand vp against the Spirit of Cæsar,
And in the Spirit of men there is no blood.
O that we then could come by Cæsars Spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar! But (alas)
Cæsar must bleed for it. And gentle Friends,
Let's kill him Boldly, but not Wrathfully:
Let's carue him, as a Dish fit for the Gods,
Not hew him as a Carkasse fit for Hounds:
And let our Hearts, as subtle Masters do,
Stirre vp their Seruants to an act of rage,
And after seeme to chide 'em. This shall make
Our purpose Necessary, and not Enuious.
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd Purgers, not Murderers.
And for Marke Antony, thinke not of him,
For he can do no more then Cæsars Arme,
When Cæsars head is off.
Cas. Yet I feare him,
For in the ingrafted loue he beares to Cæsar,
Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not thinke of him:
If he loue Cæsar, all that he can do
Is to himselfe: take thought and die for Cæsar.
And that were much he should, for he is giuen
To sports, to wildnesse, and much company.
Treb. There is no feare in him: let him not dye,
For he will liue, and laugh at this hereafter.
Clocke strikes.
Bru. Peace, count the Clocke.
Cas. The Clocke hath stricken three.
Treb. 'Tis time to part.
Cas. But it is doubtfull yet,
Whether Cæsar will come forth to day, or no:
For he is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the maine opinion he held once
Of Fantasie, of Dreames, and Ceremonies.
It may be, these apparant Prodigies,
The vnaccustom'd Terror of this night,
And the perswasion of his Augurers,
May hold him from the Capitol to day.
Dec. Neuer feare that: if he be so resolu'd,
I can o'reway him: for he loues to heare
That Vnicornes may be betray'd with trees,
And Beares with Glasses, Elephants with Holes,
Lyons with Toyles, and men with flatterers.
But when I tell him he hates flatterers,
He sayes he does, being then most flattered.
Let me worke:
For I can giue his humour the true bent;
And I will bring him to the Capitol.
Cas. Nay, we will all of vs be there to fetch him.
Bru. By eight o'clocke, and that's the vttermost.
Cin. Be that the vttermost, and fayle not then.
Met. Caius Ligarius doth beare Cæsar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey:
I wonder none of you haue thought of him.
Bru. Now good Metellus, go along by him:
He loues me well, and I haue giuen him Reasons,
Send him but hither, and Ile fashion him.
Cas. The morning comes vpon's:
We'll leaue you, Brutus.
And friends disperse your selues, but all remember
What you haue said, and shew your selues true Romans.
Bru. Good Gentlemen, looke fresh and merrily,
Let not our lookes put on our purposes,
But bear it as our Roman Actors do,
With vntyred Spirits and formall Constancie,
And so good morrow to you euery one. Exeunt

Manet Brutus

Boy, Lucius. Fast asleepe? It is no matter,
Enioy the honey-heauy Dew of Slumber:
Thou hast no figures, nor no fantasies,

Which

[illegible]

Enter Portia.

Por. I pray my Lord.

Bru. Why dost thou come so before the you now?

[illegible]

[illegible]

For. [illegible] Knocke

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

neere Cæsar, leaue all else to Cynna, trust not Trebonius, marke well Metellus Cimber, Decius Brutus loues not Cæsar thus much warnes Artemidorus. Here is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou beest not Immortall, looke about you. Security gates way to Conspiracie. The mighty Gods, defend thee.

Thy Louer, Artemidorus.

Heere will I stand till Cæsar passe along,
And as a Suitor will I giue him this.
My heart laments, that vertue cannot liue
Out of the teeth of Emulation.
If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou may'st liue;
If not, the Fates with traitors do contriue. Exit

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prythee Boy, run to the Senate-house,
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.
Why dost thou stay?
Luc. To know my errand Madam.
Por. I would haue had thee there, and here againe
Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there.
O Constancie, be strong vpon my side,
Set a huge Mountaine 'tweene my Heart and Tongue!
I haue a Man's mind, but a Woman's might.
How hard it is for Women to keepe counsell.
Art thou heere yet?
Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitoll, and nothing else?
And so returne you, and nothing else?
Por. Yes, bring me word Boy, if thy Lord look well,
For he went sickly forth: and take good note
What Cæsar doth, what Suitors presse to him.
Hearke Boy, what noyse is that?
Luc. I heare none Madam.
Por. Prythee listen well.
I heard a bustling rumour like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitoll.
Luc. Sooth Madam I heare nothing;

Enter the Soothsayer.

Por. Come neere Boy, whom way hast thou bin?
Sooth. At mine owne house, good Lady.
Por. What is't a clocke?
Sooth. About the ninth houre Lady.
Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitoll?
Sooth. Madam not yet, I go to take my stand,
To see him passe on to the Capitoll.
Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou not?
Sooth. That I haue Lady, if it will please Cæsar
To think it meet that I should woe for me.
I will beseech him to voutsafe me.
Por. Why, know'st thou any harme's intended towards him?
Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I feare may chance.
Good morrow to you. Heere the street is narrow:
The throng that followes Cæsar at the heeles,
Of Senators, of Prætors, common Suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death.
I'le get me into a place more voyd, and there
Speake to great Cæsar as he comes along. Exit
Por. I must go in.
Ay me! how weake a thing
The heart of Woman is! O Brutus,
The Heauens speede thee in thine enterprize.
Sure the Boy heard me: Brutus hath a suite
That Cæsar will not grant. O, I grow faint.
Run Lucius, and commend me to my Lord,
Say I am merry; Come to me againe,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee. Exeunt

Actus Tertius.

Flourish.

Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Caska, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cynna, Antony, Lepidus, Artemedorus, Publius, and the Soothsayer.

Cæs. The Ides of March are come.
Sooth. Ay Cæsar, but not gone.
Art. Haile Cæsar. Read this Scedule.
Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to ore-read
(At your best leysure) this his humble suite.
Art. O Cæsar, reade mine first: for mine's a suite
That touches Cæsar neerer. Read it great Cæsar.
Cæs. What touches vs our selfe, shall be last serv'd.
Art. Delay not Cæsar, reade it instantly.
Cæs. What, is the fellow mad?
Pub. Sirra, giue place.
Cæs. What, vrge you your Petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitoll.
Popil. I wish your enterprize to day may thriue.
Cæs. What enterprize Popilius?
Popil. Fare you well.
Bru. What said Popilius Lena?
Cæs. He wish't to day our enterprize might thriue:
I feare our purpose is discouered.
Bru. Looke how he makes to Cæsar: marke him.
Cæs. Casca, be sodaine, for we feare preuention.
Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known,
Cassius or Cæsar never shall turne backe,
For I will slay my selfe.
Bru. Cassius, be constant:
Popilius Lena speakes not of our purposes,
For looke he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.
Cæs. Trebonius knowes his time, for look you Brutus
He drawes Mark Antony out of the way.
Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber, let him go,
And presently prefer his suite to Cæsar.
Bru. He is addrest: presse neere and second him.
Cin. Casca, you are the first that reares your hand.
Cæs. Are we all ready? What is now amisse,
That Cæsar and his Senate must redresse?
Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar
Metellus Cimber throwes before thy Seate
An humble heart.
Cæs. I must preuent thee Cimber.
These couchings, and these lowly courtesies
Might fire the blood of ordinary men,
And turne pre-Ordinance, and first Decree
Into the law of Children. Be not fond
To think that Cæsar beares such Rebell blood
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth Fooles, I meane sweet words,
Low-crooked curtsies, and base Spaniel-fawning.
Thy Brother by decree is banished:
If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawne for him,
I spurne thee like a Cur out of my way:
Know Cæsar doth not wrong, nor without cause
Will he be satisfied.
Met. Is there no voyce more worthy then my owne,

To found more Rome, a greater Calphurne,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Bru. You shall, Marke Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.
You know not what you do, Do not consent
That Antony speake in his Funerall.
Know you how much the people may be moou'd
By that which he will vtter?

Bru. By your pardon,
I will my selfe into the Pulpit first,
And shew the reason of our Cæsars death.
What Antony shall speake, I will protest
He speakes by leaue, and by permission,
And that we are contented Cæsar shall
Haue all true Rites, and lawfull Ceremonies,
It shall aduantage more, then do vs wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall, I like it not.

Bru. Marke Antony, here take you Cæsars body:
You shall not in your Funerall speech, blame vs,
But speake all good you can deuise of Cæsar,
And say you do't by our permission:
Else shall you not haue any hand at all
About his Funerall. And you shall speake
In the same Pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so,
I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow vs. Exeunt.

Manet Antony.

Ant. O pardon me, thou bleeding peece of Earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these Butchers.
Thou art the Ruines of the Noblest Man
That euer liu'd in the Tide of Times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly Blood.
Ouer thy wounds now do I Prophesie,
(Which like dumbe mouthes do ope their Ruby Lips
To begge the voyce and vtterance of my Tongue)
A Curse shall light vpon the limbes of Men;
Domestike fury, and fierce Ciuill strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy.
Blood and Destruction shall be so in vse,
And dreadfull Obiects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quartered with the hands of Warre.
All pitty choak'd with custome of fell deeds,
And Cæsars spirit ranging for Reuenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from Hell,
Shall in these Confines with a Monarkes voyce,
Cry Hauocke, and let slip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule deede shall smell aboue the earth
With Carrion men, groaning for Burriall.

Enter Octauius Seruant.

You serue Octauius Cæsar, do you not?

Ser. I do Marke Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome.

Ser. He did receiue his Letters, and is comming,
And bid me say to you by word of mouth——
O Cæsar!

Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weepe.
Passion I see is catching, for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is Octauius Master comming?
Shall he make this good Progresse through the Lanes of Rome.

Ser. Pol. I haue my selfe
Heard him speake
Here amongst the dangerous Rome,

4. Marke how the blood of Cæsar followed it,
As rushing out of doores, to be resolu'd
If Brutus so vnkindely knock'd or no:
For Brutus as you know, was Cæsars Angel.
Iudge, O you Gods, how deerely Cæsar lou'd him:
This was the most vnkindest cut of all:
For when the Noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong then Traitors armes,
Quite vanquish him: then burst his Mighty heart,
And in his Mantle muffling vp his face,
Euen at the base of Pompeys Statue
Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
O what a fall was there my Countrymen?
Then I, and you, and all of vs fell downe,
Whilst bloody Treason flourish'd ouer vs.
O now you weepe, and I perceiue you feele
The dint of pitty: These are gracious droppes
That shed vpon the garments of poore Cæsar.
Looke you heere,
Heere is himselfe, marr'd as you see with Traitors.
1. O pitteous spectacle!
2. O Noble Cæsar!
3. O woefull day!
4. O traitors, Villaines!
1. O most bloody sight!
2. We will be reuenged: Reuenge
About, seeke, burne, fire, kill, slay.
Let not a Traitor liue.
Ant. Stay Countrymen.
1. Peace there: heare the Noble Antony.
2. We'll heare him, we'll follow him, we'll dy with him. (you vp
Ant. Good Friends, sweet Friends, let me not stirre
To such a bitter Flood of Mutiny.
They that haue done this Deede, are honourable.
What priuate griefe they haue, alas I know not,
That made them do it: They are Wise and Honourable,
And will no doubt with Reasons answer you.
I come not (Friends) to steale away your hearts,
I am no Orator, as Brutus is;
But (as you know me all) a plaine blunt man
That loues my Friend, and that they know full well,
That gaue me publike leaue to speake of him:
For I haue neyther wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor Vtterance, nor the power of Speech,
To stirre mens blood: I only speake right on:
I tell you that which you your selues do know,
Shew you sweet Cæsars wounds, poore poore dum mouths
And bid them speake for me. But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle vp your Spirits, and put a Tongue
In euery Wound of Cæsar, that should moue
The stones of Rome, to rise in Mutiny.
All. We'll Mutiny
1. We'll burne the house of Brutus.
3. Away then, come seeke the Conspirators.
Ant. Yet heare me Countrymen, yet heare me speake
All. Peace ho: heare Antony, most Noble Antony.
Ant. Why Friends you go to do you know not what:
Wherein hath Cæsar thus deseru'd your loues?
Alas you know not: I must tell you then:
You haue forgot the Will I told you of.
All. Most true: the Will: let's stay and heare the Will.
Ant. Heere is the Will, and vnder Cæsars Seale.
To euery Roman Citizen he giues,
To euery seuerall man, seuenty fiue Drachmaes.

2. Per

2 Ple. Most Noble Cæsar, wee'l reuenge his death.
3 Ple. O Royall Cæsar.
Ant. Heare me with patience.
All. Peace hoe.
Ant. Moreouer, he hath left you all his Walkes,
His priuate Arbors, and new-planted Orchards,
On this side Tyber, he hath left them you,
And to your heyres for euer, common pleasures
To walke abroad and recreate your selues.
Heere was a Cæsar! when comes such another?
1 Ple. Neuer, neuer: come, away, away:
Wee'l burne his body in the holy place,
And with the Brands fire the Traitors houses.
Take vp the body.
2 Ple. Go fetch fire.
3 Ple. Plucke downe Benches.
4 Ple. Plucke downe Formes, Windowes, any thing.
Exit Plebeians.
Ant. Now let it worke. Mischeefe thou art afoot,
Take what course thou wilt.
How now Fellow?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Sir, Octauius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is he?
Ser. He and Lepidus are at Cæsars house.
Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him.
He comes vpon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will giue vs any thing.
Ser. I heard them say, you shall see in the Capitoll
Tomorrow, the Matters to be frolike and merry.
Ant. Well, I will thither straight: and willingly.
How I did mistake his purpose.
Exeunt.

Enter Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

Cinna. I dreamt to night, that I did feast with Cæsar,
And things vnluckily charge my fantasie.
I haue no will to wander forth of doores,
Yet something leads me forth.
1. What is your name?
2. Whether are you going?
3. Where do you dwell?
4. Are you a married man, or a Batchelor?
2. Answer euery man directly.
1. I, and briefely.
4. I, and wisely.
3. I, and truly, you were best.
Cinn. What is my name? whether am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a Batchelor? Then to answer euery man, directly and briefely, wisely and truly: wisely I say, I am a Batchelor.
2. That's as much as to say, they are fooles that marry: you'le bide me a bang for that. I feare, proceed directly.
Cinna. Directly I am going to Cæsars Funerall.
1. As a friend, or an Enemy?
Cinna. As a friend.
2. That matter is answered directly.
4. For your dwelling, briefely.
Cinna. Briefely, I dwell by the Capitoll.
3. Your name, sir, truely.
Cinna. Truely, my name is Cinna.
1. Teare him to peeces, he's a Conspirator.
Cinna. I am Cinna the Poet, I am Cinna the Poet.
4. Teare him for his bad Verses, teare him for his bad Verses.
Cinn. I am not Cinna the Conspirator.
4. It is no matter, his name's Cinna, plucke but his name out of his heart, and turne him going.
3. Teare him, teare him. Come, Brands, ho, Firebrands: to Brutus, to Cassius, burne all. Some to Decius house, and some to Casca, some to Ligarius: Away, go.
Exeunt omnes Plebeians.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Antony, Octauius, and Lepidus.

Ant. These many then shall die, their names are prickt.
Oct. Your brother no doubt will die: consent you Lepidus?
Lep. I do consent.
Oct. Prick him downe Antony.
Lep. Vpon condition Publius shall not liue,
Who is your sister Marcus Antony.
Ant. He shall not liue, looke with a spot I damne him.
But Lepidus, go you vnto Cæsars house,
Fetch the Will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in Legacies.
Lep. What, shall I find you heere?
Oct. Or heere, or at the Capitoll.
Exit Lepidus.
Ant. This is a slight vnmeritable man,
Meet is he boy'd and sent to shake the rabble,
And beare the Beare for him. Hauing made vse
Of him, as of a Beast we lou'd to ride,
Not fit to sound within our Princely Counsels,
I say Octauius, being wrought to wrath,
(Like to the empty Asse) to shake his eares
And graze in Commons.
Oct. You may do your will,
But he's a tried and valiant Souldier.
Ant. So is my Horse Octauius, and for that
I do appoint him store of Prouender.
It is a Creature that I teach to fight,
To winde, to stop, to run directly on:
His corporall Motion, gouern'd by my Spirit.
And in some taste, is Lepidus but so:
He must be taught, and trained, and bid go forth:
A barren spirited fellow: one that feeds
On objects, Arts, and imitations,
Which out of vse and staled by other men,
Begin his fashion. Do not talke of him,
But as a property. And now, Octauius,
Listen great things. Brutus and Cassius
Are leuying Powers, we must straight make head:
Therefore let our Alliance be combin'd,
Our best Friends made, our meanes stretcht,
And let vs presently go sit in Counsell,
How couerture marches may be best disclos'd,
And open Perils surest answered.
Octa. Let vs do so: for we are at the stake,

Cæ. I feare not.
[illegible]
Cæ. What dreadful noise is this?
[illegible]
Cæ. Do [illegible], Love,
[illegible]
[illegible]
There is no fellowship in hell,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Fell Sorrow's Tribe, and [illegible]
From [illegible] hands, [illegible]
I may resolve on [illegible]
To you, or Gods, to pay my Loving,
Why yonder lyes the sweet [illegible]?
Shall I have it awes'd [illegible]?
[illegible] Mercy, shunn'd, awes not [illegible],
I take the Gain [illegible] from their Graves,
Be gone, Circle with your [illegible],
Dash him to pieces.
Cæ. [illegible].
Luc. You call.
Cæ. I could not [illegible]
[illegible] answer'd, [illegible] my Love
After the wicked deed [illegible].
Lucius [illegible].
Bru. Fear not, tender-hearted [illegible],
Cæ. You love me not.
Bru. [illegible] like your faults
Cæ. A sick Eye cannot see such Sights
Luc. All [illegible] would not, then [illegible] appeare
As [illegible]
Cæ. Come hither, sirrah, [illegible],
[illegible]

Hast [illegible]
Cæ. Nor [illegible],
[illegible] Note-book last night at midnight?
Look [illegible]
Luc. Not so, my Lord.
Cæ. I must hold [illegible]
Bru. Let me see, let me see, is't not the fourteenth?
Cæ. You have some sick [illegible]
Bru. Nothing, my Lord.
Cæ. Sick men can [illegible]
Bru. Hercules, sir, [illegible]
Cæ. What is't a Paper?
Bru. I know not, sir.
Cæ. What, so heedfull with the Noble Brutus?
Bru. Lucius, a Bill of [illegible].
Cæ. Will he [illegible]?
Bru. Lucius.
Cæ. Ha, Lucius!
Luc. I found it in his Closet, 'tis his [illegible].
Cæ. Let me see the Writing.
Bru. The matter is not [illegible].
Cæ. Yet I prithee.
Bru. Pardon me, Cæsar, for my Honour
Is not to look on [illegible].
Cæ. Then I will read it.
Bru. Then I will read it.
Cæ. Let me see, let me see.
Bru. Cæsar, thou shalt not have

Mes. [illegible] Letters of the State are Tender
Bru. [illegible]
Mes. Pompey is [illegible]
Octauius, Antony, and Lepidus
Haue put to death an hundred Senators.
Bru. Therein my Letters (if we heare) agree.
Marke Antony is there, and Brutus wife?
Is he not prouided, or hath he gone
Cæs. Cicero is dead,
And by that order of proscription.
Had you your Letters from your wife, my Lord?
Bru. No Messala.
Mes. Nor nothing in your Letters writ of her?
Bru. Nothing Messala.
Mes. That me thinkes is strange.
Bru. Why aske you?
Heare you ought of her, in yours?
Mes. No my Lord.
Bru. Now as you are a Romane tell me true.
Mes. Then like a Romane, bearе the truth I tell:
For certaine she is dead, and by strange manner.
Bru. Why farewell Portia. We must die Messala:
With meditating that she must die once,
I haue the patience to endure it now.
Mes. Euen so great men great losses should endure.
Cæs. I haue as much of this in Art as you,
But yet my Nature could not beare it so.
Bru. Well, to our worke aliue. What do you thinke
Of marching to Philippi presently.
Cæs. I do not thinke it good.
Bru. Your reason?
Cæs. This it is.
'Tis better that the Enemie seeke vs:
So shall he waste his means, weary his Souldiers,
Doing himselfe offence, whilst we lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimblenesse.
Bru. Good reasons must of force giue place to better.
The people 'twixt Philippi and this ground
Do stand but in a forced affection,
For they haue grudged vs Contribution.
The Enemie, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number vp,
Come on refresh'd, new added, and encouraged:
From which aduantage shall we cut him off,
If at Philippi we do face him there,
These people at our backe.
Cæs. Hearken no more Brother.
Bru. Vrge it no more. You shall offend him else.
If he should stand and hold his purpose forth,
Our Army lies ranged nigh, our Coast is cheape,
Our men are wanting rather than our need,
Must be supplied, our Numbers encreased:
Which standing full, and fresh before the Enemie,
Whilst we lie raw and wearie, shall discomfort
Our Men, our Armes, our Cause, our Reputation.
Cæs. Then with your will go on, we will along
Our selues, and meet him at Philippi.
Bru. The deepe of night is crept vpon our talke,
And Nature must obey Necessitie,
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
There is no more to say?
Cæs. No more, good night,
Early to morrow will we rise and hence.

Enter Lucius.

Bru. Lucius my Gowne. Farewell good Messala,
Good night Titinius. Noble Noble Cassius,
Good night and good repose.
Cæs. O my deere Brother,
This was an vnkind beginning of the night
We should haue found in one another
Let it not Brutus.

Enter Lucius with the Gowne.

Bru. Every thing is well.
Cæs. Good night my Lord.
Bru. Good night good Brother.
Tit. Mes. Good night Lord Brutus.
Bru. Farewell euery one. Exeunt
Giue me my Gowne. Where is my Taper?
Luc. Here it is in the Tent.
Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily?
Poore knaue I blame thee not, thou art ouer-watch'd.
Call Claudio and some other of my men,
Ile haue them sleepe on Cushions in my Tent.
Luc. Varro and Claudio.

Enter Varro and Claudio.

Var. Calls my Lord?
Bru. I pray you sirs, lie in my Tent and sleepe,
It may be I shall raise you by and by
On businesse to my Brother Cæsar.
Var. So please you, we will stand,
And watch your pleasure.
Bru. I will not haue it so. I haue downe good sirs,
It may be I shall otherwise bethinke me.
Looke Lucius, heere's the booke I sought for so.
I put it in the pocket of my Gowne.
Luc. I was sure your Lordship did not giue it me.
Bru. Beare with me good boy, I am much forgetfull.
Canst thou hold vp thy heauy eyes a while,
And touch thy Instrument a strooke or two?
Luc. I my Lord, an't please you.
Bru. It does my Boy
I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.
Luc. It is my duty Sir.
Bru. I should haue found in thee a hearty will,
Thou should'st find Youth would lacke for a time of rest.
But watch your leisure, gentle Lucius will do.
I know young bloods looke for a time of rest.
Luc. I haue slept my Lord already.
Bru. It was well done, and thou shalt sleepe againe.
I will not hold thee long. If I do liue,
I will be good to thee.

Musicke, and a Song.

This is a sleepy Tune. O Murderous Slumber!
Layest thou thy leaden Mace vpon my Boy,
That playest heere Musicke? Good night to thee.
I will not haue thee wrong'd so much to wake thee.
If thou do'st nod, thou break'st thy Instrument,
Ile take it from thee, and (good Boy) good night.
Let me see, let me see. Is not the Leaues turn'd downe
Where I left reading? Heere it is I thinke.

Enter the Ghost of Cæsar.

How ill this Taper burnes. Ha? Who comes heere?
I thinke it is the weakenesse of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous Apparition.
It comes vpon me. Art thou any thing?
Art thou some God, some Angell, or some Diuell,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my haire to stare?
Speake to me, what thou art.
Ghost. Thy euill Spirit Brutus.
Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost

Ghost. To tell thee thou shalt come at Philippi.
Brut. Well then I shall see thee againe?
Ghost. I, at Philippi
Brut. Why I will meet thee at Philippi.
Now I haue taken heart, thou vanishest,
Ill Spirit would hold more talke with me.
Boy. Lucius, Varrus, Claudius, Sirrah Volumnius.
Claudius.
Luc. The strings my Lord are false.
Brut. He thinks he still is at his Instrument,
Lucius awake
Luc. My Lord
Iras. Did'st thou dreame Lucius that thou so cri'dst out?
Luc. My Lord, I know not I am sure, I did cry.
Brut. Yes that thou did'st: Did'st thou see any thing
Luc. Nothing my Lord
Brut. Sleepe againe Lucius. Sirrah Claudius, fellow,
Thou. Awake
Var. My Lord
Clau. My Lord.
Brut. Why did you so cry out sirs, in your sleepe?
Both Did we my Lord?
Brut. I saw you rise both.
Var. No my Lord, I saw not you.
Clau. Nor I my Lord.
Brut. Go, and commend me to my Brother Cassius:
Bid him set on his Powres betimes before,
And we will follow.
Both It shall be done my Lord. Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Octauius, Antony, and their Army.

Oct. Now Antonie, our hopes are answered,
You said the Enemy would not come downe,
But keepe the Hilles and vpper Regions:
It proues not so: their battailes are at hand,
They meane to warne vs at Philippi heere:
Answering before we do demand of them.
Ant. Tut I am in their bosomes, and I know
Wherefore they do it: They could be content
To visit other places, and come downe
With fearefull brauery, thinking by this face
To fasten in our thoughts that they haue Courage:
But 'tis not so.
Enter a Messenger
Mes. Prepare you Generals,
The Enemy comes on in gallant shew:
Their bloody signe of Battell is hung out,
And something to be done immediately.
Ant. Octauius, leade your battell softly on
Vpon the left hand of the even field.
Oct. Vpon the right hand I, keepe you the left.
Ant. Why do you crosse me in this exigent.
Oct. I do not crosse you: but I will do so. March

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, & their Army.

Bru. They stand, and would haue parley.
Cas. Stand fast Titinius, we must out and talke.
Oct. Marke Antonie, shall we giue sign of battell?
Ant. No Cæsar, we will answer on their Charge.
Make forth, the Generals would haue some words.
Oct. Stirre not vntill the Signall.
Bru. Words before blowes: will you answer to Conference?
Oct. Not that we loue words better, as you do.
Bru. Good words are better then bad strokes Octauius.
Ant. In your bad strokes Brutus you giue good words
Witnesse the hole you made in Cæsars heart,
Crying Long liue, hayle Cæsar.
Cas. Antonie,
The posture of your blowes are yet vnknowne
But for your words, they rob the Hibla Bees,
And leaue them Hony-lesse.
Ant. Not stinglesse too.
Bru. O yes, and soundlesse too:
For you haue stolne their buzzing Antonie,
And very wisely threat before you sting.
Ant. Villains: you did not so, when your vile daggers
Hackt one another in the sides of Cæsar:
You shew'd your teeth like Apes,
And fawn'd like Hounds,
And bow'd like Bondmen, kissing Cæsars feete,
Whilst damned Casca, like a Cur behinde
Strooke Cæsar on the neck. O you Flatterers.
Cas. Flatterers: Now Brutus thanke your selfe,
This tongue had not offended so to day,
If Cassius might haue rul'd.
Oct. Come, come the cause: If arguing make vs sweat,
The proofe of it will turne to redder drops.
Looke, I draw a Sword against Conspirators,
When think you that the Sword goes vp againe?
Never till Cæsars three and thirty wounds
Be well auenged, or till another Cæsar
Haue added slaughter to the Sword of Traitors.
Bru. Cæsar, thou canst not dye by Traitors hands,
Vnlesse thou bring'st them with thee.
Oct. So I hope.
I was not borne to dye on Brutus Sword.
Bru. O if thou were the Noblest of thy Straine,
Young man, thou could'st not dye more honourable.
Cas. A peeuish schoole-boy, worthless of such Honour
Ioyn'd with a Masker and a Reueller.
Ant. Old Cassius still.
Oct. Come Antonie, away:
Defiance Traitors, hurle we in your teeth.
If you dare fight to day, come to the field,
If not, when you haue stomackes.
Exit Octauius, Antony, and Army
Cas. Why now blow wind, swell billow,
And swimme Barke
The storme is vp, and all is on the hazard.
Bru. Ho Lucilius, harke a word with you.
Lucilius and Messala stand forth.
Luc. My Lord.
Cas. Messala.
Mes. What saies my Generall?
Cas. Messala, this is my birth-day: as this very day
Was Cassius borne. Giue me thy hand Messala
Be thou my witnesse that against my will,
(As Pompey was) am compell'd to set
Vpon one Battell all our Liberties.
You know that I held Epicurus strong,
And his Opinion: Now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage.
Comming from Sardis, on our former Ensigne
Two mighty Eagles fell, and there they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our Soldiers hands,

[illegible]
Enter Antonius
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible], [illegible]. Exeunt

Manent Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cas. Oh [illegible] Titinius, looke, [illegible]
My [illegible]
[illegible]
I flew the Coward, and [illegible]
Tit. O [illegible], Brutus gaue the word too early,
Who [illegible]
To [illegible]
With [illegible]

Enter Pindarus.

Pin. Flye further off my Lord, flye further off,
Mark Antony is [illegible] my Lord,
Therefore Noble Cassius, flye farre off.
Cass. This Hill is farre enough. Looke, look Titinius,
Are those my Tents where I perceiue the fire?
Tit. They are, my Lord.
Cass. Titinius, if thou lou'st me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurres in him,
Till he haue brought thee vp to yonder Troopes
And heere againe, that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond Troopes are Friend or Enemy.
Tit. I will be heere againe, euen with a thought. Exit.
Cass. Go Pindarus, get higher on that hill,
My sight was euer thicke; regard Titinius,
And tell me what, thou not'st about the Field.
This day I breathed first, Time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end,
My [illegible] are [illegible], Sirra, what newes?
Pin. [illegible] Oh my Lord
Cass. What newes?
Pin. Titinius is enclosed round about
With Horsemen, that make to him on the Spurre,
Yet he spurres on. Now they are almost on him
Now Titinius. Now some light. Oh he lights too.
He's ta'ne. Showt.
And hee's, they shout for ioy.
[illegible] Come downe, behold no more
[illegible], [illegible] too long,
To see thy [illegible] thy face

Enter Pindarus

Come hither Sirra. In Parthia did I take thee Prisoner,
And then I swore thee, sauing of thy life,
That whatsoeuer I did bid thee do,
Thou should'st attempt it. Come now keepe thine oath,
Now be a Freeman, and with this good Sword
That ran through Cæsars bowels, search this bosome.
Stand not to answer. Heere, take thou the Hilts,
And when my face is couer'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the Sword. Cæsar, thou art reuenged,
Euen with the Sword that kill'd thee.
Pin. So, I am free,
Yet would not so haue beene
Durst I haue done my will. O Cassius,
Farre from this Country Pindarus shall run,
Where euer Roman shall take note of him.

Enter Titinius and Messala.

Mes. It is but change Titinius; for Octauius
Is ouerthrowne by Noble Brutus power,
As Cassius Legions are by Antony.
Tit. These tydings will well comfort Cassius.
Mes. Where did you leaue him,
Tit. All disconsolate,
With Pindarus his Bondman on this Hill.
Mes. Is not that he that lyes vpon the ground?
Tit. He lies not like the Liuing. Oh my heart!
Mes. Is not that he?
Tit. No, this was he Messala,
But Cassius is no more. O setting Sunne
As in thy red Rayes thou dost sinke to night,

So

[illegible] By your leaue Gentles, let him go with vs.
[illegible] Let vs be carefull what we do, for Cæsars sake.
Brutus, your eye is pale.
Cassius, your eyes burne.
Many eminent men turne their eyes,
And looke pale with this dreadfull Enterprize,
Like Gods assembled in the Capitoll,
Staying the fall of some graue Monarchy,
Shrinking his thrond with Agues, as I Marke Antony,
Our Arme contracted, euen to such a pitch,
As his strooke Enuie seeming to strike,
Long and displeasing stroke, our Bones would rest,
That but a moment, euen in length of time:
So our great Deed, like mightie Ordinance,
Which doth not onely beate the Eare of Heauen,
But with the Eccho backe into the Earth,
Seemes to shake the Center. Can it be said,
Our Power is Murder?

Cas. Stoop then and wash. How many Ages hence
Shall this our lofty Scene be acted ouer,
In States vnborne, and Accents yet vnknowne?

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,
That now on Pompeyes Basis lyes along,
No worthier than the dust?

Cas. So oft as that shall be,
So often shall the Knot of vs be call'd
The Men that gaue their Country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cas. I, euery man away:
Brutus shall lead, and we will grace his heeles
With the most Noble Blood of all this day.

Bru. Soft, who comes here? A Friend of Antonies.

Ant. Thus like the Romans bow to the Stout Beast,
And humbly greet thee, mighty Cæsar.
Would I had but the gifts of Eloquence,
To finde such Speech, to wrap my Mind in Sense,
As might well moue this dead man to returne,
And tell the Cruell Issues of this Deed,
Did not the Riddle fright me from my Wits.
That I must die here, and liue hence, by Truth I will not.
Of all the Wounds with which my Eyes behold me,
None so poore, as do call for such a Man.
Shrinke me, you Romane Vassailes, and hurt me not,
Your Enemies, and mine, their Sword and Charge
Stood all aloofe from the Entrailes of their Lord.

Bru. Or if you did, your Power was limited,
By our Superior Power, we were your Fellowes
Then, in your Sorrow, not your Seruants, Sorrow.

Ant. That's all I seeke:
And am moreouer suitor, that I may
Produce his Body to the Market-place,
And in the Pulpit, as becomes a Friend,
Speake in the Order of his Funerall.

Bru. You shall Marke Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.
You know not what you do: Do not consent
That Antony speake in his Funerall.
Know you how much the People may be mou'd
By that which he will vtter?

Bru. By your pardon,
I will my selfe into the Pulpit first,
And shew the reason of our Cæsars death:
What Antony shall speake, I will protest
He speakes by leaue and by permission,
And that we are contented Cæsars Funerals
Should haue all Rites and Lawfull Ceremonies.
It shall aduantage more than do vs wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall, I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here take you Cæsars Body.
You shall not in your Funerall Speech blame vs,
But speake all good you can deuise of Cæsar,
And say you do't by our permission,
Else shall you not haue any hand at all
About his Funerall. And you shall speake
In the same Pulpit whereto I am going,
After my Speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so,
I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the Body then, and follow vs.

Exeunt omnes.

Manet Antonius.

Ant. O pardon me thou bleeding peece of Earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these Butchers.
Thou art the Ruines of the Noblest Man,
That euer liu'd in the Tide of Times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly Blood.
Ouer thy Wounds now do I Prophesie,
Which like dumbe mouthes do ope their Ruby Lippes,
To begge the Voice and Vtterance of my Tongue,
A Curse shall light vpon the limbes of Men;
Domestick Fury, and fierce Ciuill Strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and Destruction shall be so in vse,
And dreadfull Objects so familiar,
That Mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their Infants quartered with the hands of War,
All pitty choakt with Custome of Fell Deeds:
And Cæsars Spirit ranging for Reuenge,
With Ate by his side come hot from Hell,
Shall in these Confines with a Monarchs Voice
Cry Hauocke, and let slip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule Deed shall smell aboue the Earth
With Carrion Men, groaning for Burriall.

Enter Octauio's Seruant.

You serue Octauius Cæsar, do you not?

Ser. I do Marke Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome.

Ser. He did Mark Antony.

Ant. Then in a Letter
Thus my Lamenting Tongue shall boldly speake
To him my Thoughts.
Cæsars Spirit ranging for Reuenge,
With Ate by his side come hot from Hell,
Shall in these Confines with a Monarchs Voice
Cry Hauocke, and let slip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule Deed shall smell aboue the Earth
With Carrion Men, groaning for Burriall.
You serue Octauius Cæsar, do you not?
I do Marke Antony.
Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome.
He did Mark Antony.
Then in a Letter
Thus my Lamenting Tongue shall boldly speake
To him my Thoughts.
Come I pray you,
What dangerous Edge I finde vnder your Cloake,
Euen from the Nape, to the Point of the Sword?
Looke you how many Shrinkings there are drawne,
In Cæsars Mantle. Good Friends speake the truth,
Was this most Bloody Accident done
Through Treason, or no?

Ser. Treason Mark Antony.

Ant. Treason, saist thou?
Why then I haue a Taske to do.
Thou look'st like an honest man.

Ser. I hope I am so Sir,
In Seruing my Master to Reuenge his Death.

Ant. Thou do'st not liue the lesse for that good Minde.
Octauius is already come to Rome.

Ser. He is Mark Antony.

Ant. Where is he?

Ser. He and Lepidus are at Cæsars House.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him:
He beares very strange Affections
Of his Fathers Murder, and I do perceiue
He will much thanke me for the Death of Brutus.

Ser. I heard him say Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like Madmen through the Gates of Rome.

Ant. Belike they had some Notice of the People,
How I had mou'd them. Bring me to Octauius.

Exeunt.

Enter Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

Cin. I dreamt to night that I did Feast with Cæsar,
And things vnluckily charge my Fantasie.
I haue no will to wander forth of doores,
Yet something leads me forth.

1. Ple. What is your Name?

2. Ple. Whither are you going?

3. Ple. Where do you dwell?

4. Ple. Are you a Married man or a Batchelor?

2. Ple. Answer euery man directly.

1. Ple. I, and briefely.

4. Ple. I, and wisely.

3. Ple. I, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my Name? Whither am I going?
Where do I dwell? Am I a Married man or a Batchelor?
Then to answer euery man directly and briefely, wisely and truly:
Wisely I say I am a Batchelor.

2. Ple. That's as much as to say they are fooles that marry:
You'le beare me a bang for that I feare. Proceed directly.

Cin. Directly I am going to Cæsars Funerall.

1. Ple. As a Friend or an Enemy?

Cin. As a Friend.

2. Ple. That matter is answered directly.

4. Ple. For your Dwelling, briefely.

Cin. Briefely I dwell by the Capitoll.

3. Ple. Your Name Sir truly.

Cin. Truly my Name is Cinna.

1. Ple. Teare him to pieces, he's a Conspirator.

Cin. I am Cinna the Poet, I am Cinna the Poet.

4. Ple. Teare him for his bad Verses, teare him for his bad Verses.

Cin. I am not Cinna the Conspirator.

4. Ple. It is no matter, his name's Cinna, pull but his name out of his heart, and turne him going.

3. Ple. Teare him, teare him: Come, Brands, Firebrands: to Brutus, to Cassius, burne all: some to Decius house, and some to Casca's, some to Ligarius: away, go.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF MACBETH.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Scena Secunda.

Alarum within. Enter King, Malcolme, Donalbaine, Lenox, with attendants, meeting a bleeding Captaine.

King. What bloody man is that? he can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.
Mal. This is the sergeant,
Who like a good and hardy Souldier fought
'Gainst my Captivity: Hayle brave friend,
Say to the King the knowledge of the broyle,
As thou didst leave it.
Cap. Doubtfull it stood,
As two spent Swimmers, that doe cling together
And choake their Art: The merciles Macdonell (Worthie to be a Rebell, for to that
The multiplying Villanies of Nature
Doe swarme upon him) from the Westerne Isles
Of Kernes and Gallowgrosses is supplied,
And Fortune on his damned Quarrey smiling,
Shew'd like a Rebells Whore: but all's too weake:
For brave Macbeth (well he deserves that Name)
Disdaining Fortune, with his brandisht Steele,
Which smoak'd with bloody execution,
(Like Valours Minion) carv'd out his passage,
Till he fac'd the Slaue:
Which ne're shook hands, nor bad farewell to him,
Till he vnseam'd him from the Nauell to the Chops,
And fix'd his Head vpon our Battlements.

King. O valiant Cousin! worthy Gentleman!
As whence the Sunne 'gins his reflexion
Shipwracking Storms and direfull Thunders breake,
So from that Spring, whence comfort seem'd to come
Discomfort swells. Marke King of Scotland, marke,
No sooner Justice had with Valour armed
Compell'd these skipping Kernes to trust their heeles,
But the Norweyan Lord surveying vantage,
With furbisht Armes, and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault.
Cap. Dismay'd not this
Our Captaines Macbeth and Banquo?
Sold. Yes:
As Sparrowes, Eagles; or the Hare, the Lyon.
If I say sooth, I must report they were
As Cannons ouer-charg'd with double Cracks,
So they doubly redoubled Stroakes vpon the Foe.
Except they meant to bathe in reeking Wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell.
But I am faint, my Gashes cry for helpe.
King. So well thy words become thee, as thy Wounds,
They smack of Honour both: Goe get him Surgeons.
Enter Rosse and Angus.
Who comes here?
Mal. The worthy Thane of Rosse.
Len. What a haste looks through his eyes? So should he looke
That seemes to speake things strange.
Rosse. God saue the King!
King. Whence cam'st thou, worthy Thane?
Rosse. From Fife, great King,
Where the Norweyan Banners flout the Skie,
And fanne our people cold.
Norway himselfe, with terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyall Traytor
The Thane of Cawdor, began a dismall Conflict,
Till that Bellona's Bridegroome, lapt in proofe,
Confronted him with Selfe-comparisons,
Point against Point, rebellious Arme 'gainst Arme,
Curbing his lauish spirit: and to conclude,
The Victory fell on vs.
King. Great happinesse.
Rosse. That now
Sweno, the Norweyes King, craues composition,
Nor would we deigne him Burial of his men,
Till he disbursed at Saint Colmes Inch
Ten thousand Dollars to our generall vse.
King. No

King. No more that Thane of Cawdor shall deceiue
Our Bosome interest: Goe pronounce his present death,
And with his former Title greet Macbeth.
Rosse. I'le see it done.
King. What he hath wonne, Noble Macbeth hath wonne.
Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1. Where hast thou been Sister?
2. Killing Swine.
3. Sister where thou?
1. A Sailors Wife had Chestnuts in her Lappe,
And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht:
Giue me, quoth I.
Aroynt thee, Witch, the rumpe-fed Ronyon cries.
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, Master o'th' Tyger:
But in a Sieue Ile thither sayle,
And like a Rat without a tayle,
I'le do, I'le do, and I'le do.
2. Ile giue thee a Wind.
1. Th'art kinde.
3. And I another.
1. I my selfe haue all the other,
And the very Ports they blow,
All the Quarters that they know,
I'th Ships nauigable.
And I will drayne him dry as Hay:
Sleepe shall neyther Night nor Day
Hang vpon his Penthouse Lid.
He shall liue a Man forbid:
Weary Sennights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peake and pine:
Though his Barke cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be Tempest-tost.
Looke what I haue.
2. Shew me, shew me.
1. Heere I haue a Pilots Thumbe,
Wrackt as homeward he did come. Drum within.
3. A Drumme, a Drumme:
Macbeth doth come.
All. The weyward Sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the Sea and Land,
Thus do go, about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice againe, to make vp nine.
Peace, the Charme's wound vp.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foule and faire a day I haue not seene.
Banq. How farre is't call'd to Soris? What are these,
So withered, and so wilde in their attire,
That looke not like th'inhabitants o'th' Earth,
And yet are on't? Liue you, or are you aught
That man may question? You seeme to vnderstand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Vpon her Skinny Lips: You should be Women,
And yet your Beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.
Macb. Speake if you can: What are you?
1. All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Glamis.
2. All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Cawdor.
3. All haile Macbeth, that shalt be King hereafter.
Banq. Good Sir, why do you start, and seeme to feare
Things that do sound so fayre? I'th' name of Truth
Are ye fantasticall, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew? My Noble Partner
You greet with present Grace, and great prediction
Of Noble hauing, and of Royall hope,
That he seemes wrapt withall: to me you speake not.
If you can looke into the Seedes of Time,
And say which Graine will grow, and which will not,
Speake then to me, who neyther beg nor feare
Your fauours, nor your hate.
1. Hayle
2. Hayle.
3. Hayle.
1. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.
2. Not so happy, yet much happier.
3. Thou shalt get Kings, though thou be none:
So all hayle Macbeth and Banquo.
1. Banquo and Macbeth, all hayle
Macb. Stay you imperfect Speakers, tell me more.
By Sinells death I know I am Thane of Glamis,
But how of Cawdor? the Thane of Cawdor liues
A prosperous Gentleman: And to be King,
Stands not within the prospect of Belecue,
No more that Thane of Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this strange Intelligence, or why
Vpon this blasted Heath you stop our way
With such Prophetique greeting?
Speake, I charge you. Witches vanish.
Banq. The Earth hath bubbles as the Water has,
And these are of them. Whither are they vanish'd?
Macb. Into the Ayre: and what seem'd corporall,
Melted as breath into the Wind.
Would they had stayd.
Banq. Were such things here as we do speake about?
Or haue we eaten on the insane Root,
That takes the Reason Prisoner?
Macb. Your Children shall be Kings.
Banq. You shall be King.
Macb. And Thane of Cawdor too: went it not so?
Banq. To the selfe-same tune, and words. Who's here?

Enter Rosse and Angus.

Rosse. The King hath happily receiu'd, Macbeth,
The newes of thy successe: and when he reades
Thy personall Venture in the Rebels fight,
His Wonders and his Prayses doe contend,
Which should be thine, or his: Silenc'd with that,
In viewing o'er the rest o'th' selfe-same day,
He finds thee in the stout Norweyan Rankes,
Nothing afeard of what thy selfe didst make
Strange Images of death, as thick as Tale
Can post with post, and euery one did beare
Thy praises in his Kingdomes great defence,
And powr'd them downe before him.
Angus. We are sent
To giue thee from our Royall Master thanks,
Only to harbor thee to his sight,
Not pay thee.
Rosse. And for an earnest of a greater Honor,
He bad me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawdor:

In

In which addition, hayle to thee worthy Thane,
For it is thine.
Banq. What, can the Deuill speake true?
Macb. The Thane of Cawdor liues
Why doe you dreſſe me in borrowed Robes?
Ang. Who was the Thane, liues yet,
But vnder heauie Iudgement bears that Life,
Which he deſerues to looſe.
Whether he was combin'd with thoſe of Norway,
Or did line the Rebell with hidden helpe,
And vantage, or that with both he labour'd
In his Countries wracke, I know not.
But Treaſons Capitall, confeſſ'd, and prou'd.
Haue ouerthrowne him.
Macb. Glamys, and Thane of Cawdor:
The greateſt is behinde. Thankes for your paines.
Do you not hope your Children ſhall be Kings,
When thoſe that gaue the Thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no leſſe to them?
Banq. That trauell'd with vs,
Might yet enkindle you vnto the Crowne,
Beſides the Thane of Cawdor. But 'tis ſtrange
And oftentimes to win vs to our harme,
The inſtruments of Darkneſſe tell vs Truths,
Win vs with honeſt Trifles, to betray's
In deepeſt conſequence.
Couſins, a word, I pray you.
Macb. Two Truths are told,
As happy Prologues to the ſwelling Act
Of the Imperiall Theame. I thanke you Gentlemen.
This ſupernaturall ſoliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good.
If ill, why hath it giuen me earneſt of ſucceſſe,
Commencing in a Truth? I am Thane of Cawdor.
If good, why doe I yeeld to that ſuggeſtion,
Whoſe horrid Image doth vnfixe my heire,
And make my ſeated Heart knock at my ribbes,
Againſt the vſe of Nature? Preſent Feares
Are leſſe then horrible Imaginings.
My Thought, whoſe Murther yet is but fantaſticall,
Shakes ſo my ſingle ſtate of Man,
That Function is ſmother'd in ſurmiſe,
And nothing is, but what is not.
Banq. Looke how our Partner's rapt.
Macb. If Chance will haue me King,
Why Chance may Crowne me,
Without my ſtirre.
Banq. New Honors come vpon him
Like our ſtrange Garments, cleaue not to their mould,
But with the aide of vſe.
Macb. Come what come may,
Time, and the Houre, runs through the roughſt Day.
Banq. Worthy Macbeth, we ſtay vpon your leyſure.
Macb. Giue me your fauour:
My dull Braine was wrought with things forgotten.
Kinde Gentlemen, your paines are regiſtred,
Where euery day I turne the Leafe,
To read them.
Let vs toward the King: think vpon
What hath chanc'd: and at more time,
The Interim hauing weigh'd it, let vs ſpeake
Our free Hearts each to other.
Banq. Very gladly.
Macb. Till then enough.
Come friends. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Flourish. Enter King, Lenox, Malcolme, Donalbaine, and Attendants.

King. Is execution done on Cawdor, or
Are not thoſe in Commiſſion yet returned?
Mal. My Liege, they are not yet come backe,
But I haue ſpoke with one that ſaw him die:
Who did report, that very frankly he
Confeſs'd his Treaſons, implor'd your Highneſſe Pardon
And ſet forth a deepe Repentance:
Nothing in his Life became him,
Like the leauing it. He dy'de
As one that had been ſtudied in his death,
To throw away the deareſt thing he ow'd,
As 'twere a careleſſe Trifle.
King. There's no Art,
To finde the Mindes conſtruction in the Face:
He was a Gentleman, on whom I built
An abſolute Truſt.

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Roſſe and Angus.

O worthieſt Couſin,
The ſinne of my Ingratitude euen now
Was heauy on me: Thou art ſwifter then
That ſwift Wing of Recompence is ſlow,
To ouertake thee. Would thou had'ſt leſſe deſerued,
That the proportion both of thanks and payment,
Might haue been mine: only I haue left to ſay,
More is thy due, then more then all can pay.
Macb. The ſeruice and the loyaltie I owe,
In doing it, payes it ſelfe.
Your Highneſſe part, is to receiue our Duties:
And our Duties are to your Throne, and State,
Children and Seruants: which do but what they ſhould,
By doing euery thing ſafe toward your Loue
And Honour.
King. Welcome hither:
I haue begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo,
That haſt no leſſe deſerued, nor muſt be known
No leſſe to haue done ſo: Let me infold thee,
And hold thee to my Heart.
Banq. There if I grow,
The Harueſt is your owne.
King. My plenteous Ioyes,
Wanton in fulneſſe, ſeeke to hide themſelues
In drops of ſorrow. Sonnes, Kinſmen, Thanes,
And you whoſe places are the neareſt, know,
We will eſtabliſh our Eſtate vpon
Our eldeſt, Malcolme, whom we name hereafter,
The Prince of Cumberland: which Honor muſt
Not vnaccompanied, inueſt him only,
But ſignes of Nobleneſſe, like Starres, ſhall ſhine
On all deſeruers. From hence to Inuernes,
And bind vs further to you.
Macb. The reſt is Labor, which is not vſed for you:
Ile be my ſelfe the Herbenger, and make glad
The hearing of my Wife, with your approach:
So humbly take my leaue.
King. My worthy Cawdor.
Macb. The Prince of Cumberland: that is a ſtep,
On which I muſt fall downe, or elſe o're-leape,

Lay on my Walls no Anes, Starres hide your fires,
Let not Light see my black and deepe desires.
The Eye wink at the Hand, yet let that be,
Which the Eye fears, when it is done to see. Exit
King. This Castle hath a pleasant seate, Banquo. he is no leſſe valiant,
And to his commendations, I am fed
It is a Banket to me. Let's after him.
Whose care is gone before, to bid us welcome
It is a peerelesse Kinsman. Flourish. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeths Wife alone with a Letter.

Lady. They met me in the day of ſucceſſe: and I haue learn'd by the perfect'ſt report, they haue more in them, then mortall knowledge. When I burnt in deſire to queſtion them further, they made themſelues Ayre, into which they vaniſh'd. Whiles I ſtood rapt in the wonder of it, came Miſſiues from the King, who all-hail'd me Thane of Cawdor by which Title before, theſe weyward Siſters ſaluted me, and referr'd me to the comming on of time, with Haile King that ſhalt be. This haue I thought good to deliuer thee (my deareſt Partner of Greatneſſe) that thou might'ſt not loſe the dues of reioycing, by being ignorant of what Greatneſſe is promis'd thee. Lay it to thy hart, and farewell.
Glamys thou art, and Cawdor, and ſhalt be
What thou art promis'd: yet doe I feare thy Nature,
It is too full o'th' Milke of humane kindneſſe,
To catch the neereſt way. Thou would'ſt be great,
Art not without Ambition, but without
The illneſſe ſhould attend it. What thou would'ſt highly,
That would'ſt thou holily: would'ſt not play falſe,
And yet would'ſt wrongly winne.
Thou'ldſt haue great Glamys that which cryes,
Thus thou muſt doe, if thou haue it,
And that which rather thou do'ſt feare to doe,
Then wiſh'd ſhould be vndone. Hight thee hether,
That I may powre my Spirits in thine eare,
And chaſtiſe with the valour of my Tongue
All that impedes thee from the Golden Round,
Which Fate and Metaphyſicall ayde doth ſeeme
To haue thee crown'd withall. Enter Meſſenger
What is your tidings?
Meſſ. The King comes here to Night.
Lady. Thou'rt mad to ſay it.
Is not thy Maſter with him? who were ſo,
Would haue inform'd for preparation.
Meſſ. So pleaſe you, it is true: our Thane is comming
One of my fellowes had the ſpeed of him:
Who almoſt dead for breath, had ſcarcely more
Then would make vp his Meſſage.
Lady. Giue him tending,
He brings great newes. Exit Meſſenger.
The Raven himſelfe is hoarſe,
That croakes the fatall entrance of Duncan
Vnder my Battlements. Come you Spirits,
That tend on mortall thoughts, vnſex me here,
And fill me from the Crowne to the Toe, top-full
Of direſt Cruelty: make thicke my blood,
Stop vp th'acceſſe and paſſage to Remorſe,
That no compunctious viſitings of Nature
Shake my fell purpoſe, nor keepe peace betweene
Th'effect and it. Come to my Womans Breſts,
And take my Milke for Gall, you murth'ring Miniſters,
Where-euer in your ſightleſſe ſubſtances,
You wait on Natures Miſchiefe. Come thicke Night,
And pall thee in the dunneſt ſmoake of Hell,
That my keene Knife ſee not the Wound it makes
Nor Heauen peepe through the Blanket of the darke,
To cry, hold, hold. Enter Macbeth
Great Glamys, worthy Cawdor,
Greater then both by the all-haile hereafter,
Thy Letters haue tranſported me beyond
This ignorant preſent, and I feele now
The future in the inſtant.
Mach. My deareſt Loue,
Duncan comes here to Night.
Lady. And when goes hence?
Mach. To morrow, as he purpoſes.
Lady. O neuer,
Shall Sunne that Morrow ſee.
Your Face my Thane, is as a Booke, where men
May reade ſtrange matters, to beguile the time.
Looke like the time, beare welcome in your Eye,
Your Hand, your Tongue: looke like the innocent flower,
But be the Serpent vnder't. He that's comming,
Muſt be prouided for: and you ſhall put
This Nights great Buſineſſe into my diſpatch,
Which ſhall to all our Nights, and Dayes to come,
Giue ſolely ſouereigne ſway, and Maſterdome.
Mach. We will ſpeake further.
Lady. Only looke vp cleare:
To alter fauor, euer is to feare.
Leaue all the reſt to me. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Hoboyes, and Torches. Enter King Malcolme, Donalbaine, Banquo, Lenox, Macduff, Roſſe, Angus and Attendants.

King. This Caſtle hath a pleaſant ſeat,
The ayre nimbly and ſweetly recommends it ſelfe
Vnto our gentle ſenſes.
Banq. This Gueſt of Summer,
The Temple-haunting Martlet does approue,
By his lou'd Manſonry, that the Heauens breath
Smells wooingly here: no Iutty frieze,
Buttreſſe, nor Coigne of Vantage, but this Bird
Hath made his pendant Bed, and procreant Cradle,
Where they moſt breed, and haunt, I haue obſerued
The ayre is delicate. Enter Lady.
King. See, ſee, our honor'd Hoſteſſe.
The Loue that followes vs, ſometime is our trouble,
Which ſtill we thanke as Loue. Herein I teach you,
How you ſhall bid God-eyld vs for your paines,
And thanke vs for your trouble.
Lady. All our ſeruice,
In euery point twice done, and then done double,
Were poore, and ſingle Buſineſſe, to contend
Againſt thoſe Honors deepe, and broad,
Wherewith your Maieſtie loades our Houſe
For thoſe of old, and the ſeuere Dignities,
Heap'd vp to them, we reſt your Hermites.

King Where's

King. Where's the Thane of Cawdor?
We course him at the heeles, and had a purpose
To be his Purueyor. But he rides well,
And his great Loue (sharpe as his Spurre) hath holpe him
To his home before vs. Faire and Noble Hostesse
We are your guest to night.
La. Your Seruants euer,
Haue theirs, themselues, and what is theirs in compt,
To make their Audit at your Highnesse pleasure,
Still to returne your owne.
King. Giue me your hand,
Conduct me to mine Host: we loue him highly,
And shall continue, our Graces towards him.
By your leaue Hostesse. Exeunt

Scena Septima.

Hoboyes. Torches.

Enter a Sewer, and diuers Seruants with Dishes and Seruice ouer the Stage. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well,
It were done quickly: If th'Assassination
Could trammell vp the Consequence, and catch
With his surcease, Successe: that but this blow
Might be the be all, and the end all. Heere,
But heere, vpon this Banke and Schoole of time,
Wee'd iumpe the life to come. But in these Cases,
We still haue iudgement heere, that we but teach
Bloody Instructions, which being taught, returne
To plague th'Inuenter. This euen-handed Iustice
Commends th'Ingredience of our poyson'd Chalice
To our owne lips. Hee's heere in double trust;
First, as I am his Kinsman, and his Subiect,
Strong both against the Deed: Then as his Host,
Who should against his Murderer shut the doore,
Not beare the knife my selfe. Besides, this Duncane
Hath borne his faculties so meeke; hath been
So clere in his great Office, that his Vertues
Will pleade like Angels, Trumpet-tongu'd against
The deepe damnation of his taking-off:
And Pitty, like a naked New-borne-Babe
Striding the blast, or Heauens Cherubin, horsed
Vpon the sightlesse Curriers of the Aire,
Shall blow the horrid deed in euery eye,
That teares shall drowne the wind. I haue no Spurre
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting Ambition, which o'erleapes it selfe,
And falles on th'other. Enter Lady.
How now? What Newes?
La. He has almost supt: why haue you left the chamber?
Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?
La. Know you not, he has?
Macb. We will proceed no further in this Businesse:
He hath Honour'd me of late, and I haue bought
Golden Opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worne now in their newest glosse,
Not cast aside so soone.
La. Was the hope drunke,
Wherein you dress'd your selfe? Hath it slept since?
And wakes it now, to looke so greene and pale,
At what it did so freely? From this time
Such I account thy loue. Art thou afear'd
To be the same in thine owne Act, and Valour,
As thou art in desire? Would'st thou haue that
Which thou esteem'st the Ornament of Life,
And liue a Coward in thine owne Esteeme?
Letting I dare not, wait vpon I would,
Like the poore Cat i'th'Adage.
Macb. Prythee peace:
I dare do all that may become a man,
Who dares no more, is none.
La. What Beast was't then
That made you breake this enterprize to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man:
And to be more then what you were, you would
Be much more the man. Nor time nor place
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both:
They haue made themselues, and that their fitnesse now
Does vnmake you. I haue giuen Suck, and know
How tender 'tis to loue the Babe that milkes me,
I would while it was smiling in my Face,
Haue pluckt my Nipple from his Boneless Gummes,
And dasht the Braines out, had I so sworne
As you haue done to this.
Macb. If we should faile?
La. We faile?
But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not faile. When Duncan is asleepe,
(Whereto the rather shall his dayes hard Journey
Soundly inuite him) his two Chamberlaines
Will I with Wine and Wassell so conuince,
That Memorie the Warder of the Braine,
Shall be a Fume, and the receit of Reason
A Limbeck only: when in Swinish sleepe
Their drenched Natures lyes as in a Death,
What cannot you and I performe vpon
The vnguarded Duncan? What not put vpon
His spungie Officers? who shall beare the guilt
Of our great quell.
Macb. Bring forth Men-Children only;
For thy vndaunted Mettle should compose
Nothing but Males. Will it not be receiu'd,
When we haue mark'd with Blood those sleepie two
Of his owne Chamber, and vs'd their very Daggers,
That they haue done't?
Lady. Who dares receiue it other,
As we shall make our Griefes and Clamor roare,
Vpon his Death?
Macb. I am settled, and bend vp
Each corporall Agent to this terrible Feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show,
False face must hide what the false Heart doth know.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance, with a Torch before him.

Banq. How goes the Night, Boy?
Fleance. The Moone is downe: I haue not heard the Clock.
Banq. And she goes downe at Twelue.
Fleance. I take't, 'tis later Sir.
Banq. Hold, take my Sword: there's Husbandry in Heauen,
Their Candles are all out: take thee that too.

A heauie Summons lyes like Lead vpon me,
And yet I would not sleepe:
Mercifull Powers, restraine in me the cursed thoughts
That Nature giues way to in repose.

Enter Macbeth, and a Seruant with a Torch.

Giue me my Sword: who's there?
Mach. A Friend.
Banq. What Sir, not yet at rest? the King's a bed.
He hath beene in vnusuall Pleasure,
And sent forth great Largesse to your Offices.
This Diamond he greetes your Wife withall,
By the name of most kinde Hostesse,
And shut vp in measureless content.
Mach. Being vnprepar'd,
Our will became the seruant to defect,
Which else should free haue wrought.
Banq. All's well.
I dreamt last Night of the three weyward Sisters:
To you they haue show'd some truth.
Mach. I thinke not of them:
Yet when we can entreat an houre to serue
We would spend it in some words vpon that Businesse,
If you would graunt the time.
Banq. At your kind'st leysure.
Mach. If you shall cleaue to my consent,
When 'tis, it shall make Honor for you.
Banq. So I lose none,
In seeking to augment it, but still keepe
My Bosome franchis'd, and Allegeance cleare,
I shall be counsail'd.
Mach. Good repose the while.
Banq. Thankes Sir: the like to you. Exit Banquo.
Mach. Goe bid thy Mistresse, when my drinke is ready,
She strike vpon the Bell. Get thee to bed. Exit.
Is this a Dagger, which I see before me,
The Handle toward my Hand? Come, let me clutch thee:
I haue thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not fatall Vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A Dagger of the Minde, a false Creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed Braine?
I see thee yet, in forme as palpable,
As this which now I draw.
Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going,
And such an Instrument I was to vse.
Mine Eyes are made the fooles o'th'other Senses,
Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still,
And on thy Blade, and Dudgeon, Gouts of Blood,
Which was not so before. There's no such thing:
It is the bloody Businesse, which informes
Thus to mine Eyes. Now o're the one halfe World
Nature seemes dead, and wicked Dreames abuse
The curtain'd sleepe. Witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecats Offrings: and wither'd Murther,
Alarum'd by his Centinell, the Wolfe,
Whose howle's his Watch, thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquins ravishing sides, towards his designe
Moues like a Ghost. Thou sowre and firme-set Earth
Heare not my steps, which they may walke, for feare
Thy very stones prate of my where-about,
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it. Whiles I threat, he liues:
Words to the heat of deedes too cold breath giues.
A Bell rings.
I goe, and it is done: the Bell inuites me.
Heare it not, Duncan, for it is a Knell,
That summons thee to Heauen, or to Hell. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lady.

La. That which hath made the drunk, hath made me bold:
What hath quench'd them, hath giuen me fire.
Hearke, peace: it was the Owle that shriek'd,
The fatall Bell-man, which giues the stern'st good-night.
He is about it, the Doores are open:
And the surfeited Groomes doe mock their charge
With Snores. I haue drugg'd their Possets,
That Death and Nature doe contend about them,
Whether they liue, or dye.
Enter Macbeth
Mach. Who's there? what hoa?
Lady. Alack, I am afraid they haue awak'd,
And 'tis not done: th'attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds vs: hearke: I layd their Daggers ready,
He could not misse 'em. Had he not resembled
My Father as he slept, I had don't.
My Husband?
Mach. I haue done the deed.
Didst thou not heare a noyse?
Lady. I heard the Owle scream, and the Crickets cry.
Did not you speake?
Mach. When?
Lady. Now.
Mach. As I descended?
Lady. I.
Mach. Hearke, who lyes i'th' second Chamber?
Lady. Donalbaine.
Mach. This is a sorry sight.
Lady. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.
Mach. There's one did laugh in's sleepe,
And one cry'd Murther, that they did wake each other:
I stood, and heard them: But they did say their Prayers,
And addrest them againe to sleepe.
Lady. There are two lodg'd together.
Mach. One cry'd God blesse vs, and Amen the other,
As they had seene me with these Hangmans hands.
Listning their feare, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God blesse vs.
Lady. Consider it not so deepely.
Mach. But wherefore could not I pronounce Amen?
I had most need of blessing, and Amen stuck in my throat.
Lady. These deeds must not be thought
After these wayes: so, it will make vs mad.
Mach. Me thought I heard a voyce cry, Sleep no more:
Macbeth does murther Sleepe, the innocent Sleepe,
Sleepe that knits vp the ravell'd Sleeue of Care,
The death of each dayes Life, sore Labors Bath,
Balme of hurt Mindes, great Natures second Course,
Chiefe nourisher in Life's Feast.
Lady. What do you meane?
Mach. Still it cry'd, Sleepe no more to all the House:
Glamis hath murther'd Sleepe, and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleepe no more: Macbeth shall sleepe no more.
Lady. Who was it that thus cry'd? why worthy Thane,
You doe vnbend your Noble strength, to thinke
So braine-sickly of things: Goe get some Water,

And

And wash this filthie Witnesse from your Hand.
Why did you bring these Daggers from the place?
They must lye there: go carry them, and smeare
The sleepie Groomes with blood.
Mach. I goe no more
I am afraid, to thinke what I haue done
Looke on't againe, I dare not.
Lady. Infirme of purpose
Giue me the Daggers: the sleeping, and the dead,
Are but as Pictures: 'tis the Eye of Childhood,
That feares a painted Deuill. If he bleed,
I'le guild the faces of the Groomes withall,
For it must seeme their Guilt. Exit
Knocke within.
Mach. Whence is that knocking?
How is't with me, when euery noyse appalls me?
What Hands are here? hah: they pluck out mine Eyes.
Will all great Neptunes Ocean wash this blood
Cleane from my Hand? no: this my Hand will rather
The multitudinous Seas incarnardine,
Making the Greene one, Red.

Enter Lady.

Lady. My Hands are of your colour: but I shame
To weare a heart so white. Knocke.
I heare a knocking at the South entry:
Retyre we to our Chamber
A little Water cleares vs of this deed
How easie is it then? your Constancie
Hath left you vnattended. Knocke.
Hearke, more knocking
Get on your Night-Gowne, least occasion call vs,
And shew vs to be Watchers: be not lost
So poorely in your thoughts.
Mach. To know my deed, Knocke
'Twere best not know my selfe.
Wake Duncan with thy knocking:
I would thou could'st. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter a Porter.

Knocking within.

Porter. Here's a knocking indeede: if a man were Porter of Hell Gate, hee should haue old turning the Key. Knock. Knock, Knock, Knock. Who's there i'th' name of Belzebub? Here's a Farmer, that hang'd himselfe on th'expectation of Plentie: Come in time, haue Napkins enow about you; here you'le sweat for't. Knock. Knock, knock. Who's there in th'other Deuils Name? Faith here's an Equiuocator, that could sweare in both the Scales against either Scale, who committed Treason enough for Gods sake, yet could not equiuocate to Heauen: O come in, Equiuocator. Knock. Knock, knock, knock. Who's there? Faith here's an English Taylor come hither, for stealing out of a French Hose. Come in Taylor, here you may roste your Goose. Knock. Knock, Knock. Neuer at quiet: What are you? but this place is too cold for Hell. Ile Deuill-Porter it no further: I had thought to haue let in some of all Professions, that goe the Primrose way to th'euerlasting Bonfire. Knock. Anon, anon, I pray you remember the Porter.

Enter Macduff, and Lenox.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to Bed,
That you doe lye so late?
Port. Faith Sir, we were carowsing till the second Cocke:
And Drinke Sir, is a great prouoker in three things.
Macd. What three things does Drinke especially prouoke?
Port. Marry Sir, Nose-painting, Sleepe, and Vrine. Lechery Sir, it prouokes and vnprouokes: it prouokes the desire, but takes away the performance. Therefore much Drinke may be said to be an Equiuocator with Lechery: it makes him, and marres him; it sets him on, and takes him off; it perswades him, and disheartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equiuocates him in a sleepe, and giuing him the Lye, leaues him.
Macd. I beleeue Drinke gaue thee the Lye last Night.
Port. That it did, Sir, i'the very throat on me: but I requited him for his Lye, and (I think) made bold with him; but I shall neuer pay him againe.
Macd. Is thy Master stirring?
Our knocking has awak'd him: here he comes.
Lenox. Good morrow, Noble Sir.
Mach. Good morrow both.
Macd. Is the King stirring, worthy Thane?
Mach. Not yet.
Macd. He did command me to call timely on him,
I haue almost slipt the houre.
Mach. I'le bring you to him.
Macd. I know this is a joyfull trouble to you.
But yet 'tis one.
Mach. The labour we delight in, Physicke paine.
This is the Doore.
Macd. Ile make so bold to call, for 'tis my limited
seruice. Exit Macduff.
Lenox. Goes the King hence to day?
Mach. He does: he did appoint so.
Lenox. The Night has been vnruly:
Where we lay, our Chimneys were blowne downe,
And (as they say) lamentings heard i'th' Ayre;
Strange Schreenes of Death,
And Prophecying, with Accents terrible,
Of dyre Combustion and confus'd Euents,
New hatch'd toth' woful time.
The obscure Bird clamor'd the liue-long Night:
Some say the Earth was feuorous,
And did shake.
Mach. 'Twas a rough Night.
Lenox. My young remembrance cannot parallell
A fellow to it.

Enter Macduff.

Macd. O horror, horror, horror,
Tongue nor Heart cannot conceiue nor name thee.
Mach. and Lenox. What's the matter?
Macd. Confusion now hath made his Masterpeece:
Most sacrilegious Murther hath broke ope
The Lords anoynted Temple, and stole thence
The Life o'th' building.
Mach. What is't you say? the Life?
Lenox. Meane you his Maiestie?
Macd. Approch the Chamber, and destroy your sight
With a new Gorgon. Do not bid me speake

See, and then speake your selues. Awake, awake,
Exeunt Macbeth and Lenox.
Ring the Alarum Bell. Murther, and Treason,
Banquo and Donalbaine, Malcolme awake,
Shake off this Downie sleepe, Death's counterfeit,
And looke on Death it selfe. Vp, vp, and see
The great Doome's Image. Malcolme, Banquo,
As from your Graues rise vp, and walke like Sprights,
To countenance this horror. Ring the Bell.
Bell rings. Enter Lady.
Lady. What's the businesse,
That such a hideous Trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the House? speake, speake.
Macd. O gentle Lady,
'Tis not for you to heare what I can speake.
The repetition in a Womans eare,
Would murther as it fell.
Enter Banquo.
O Banquo, Banquo, Our Royall Master's murthered.
Lady. Woe, alas
What, in our house?
Ban. Too cruell, any where
Deare Duff, I prythee contradict thy selfe,
And say, it is not so.

Enter Macbeth, Lenox, and Rosse.

Macb. Had I but died an houre before this chance,
I had liu'd a blessed time; for from this instant,
There's nothing serious in Mortalitie:
All is but Toyes: Renowne and Grace is dead,
The Wine of Life is drawne, and the meere Lees
Is left this Vault, to brag of.

Enter Malcolme and Donalbaine.

Donal. What is amisse?
Macb. You are, and do not know't:
The Spring, the Head, the Fountaine of your Blood
Is stopt, the very Source of it is stopt.
Macd. Your Royall Father's murthered.
Mal. O, by whom?
Lenox. Those of his Chamber, as it seem'd, had done't:
Their Hands and Faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their Daggers, which vnwip'd, we found
Vpon their Pillowes: they star'd, and were distracted,
No mans Life was to be trusted with them.
Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my furie,
That I did kill them.
Macd. Wherefore did you so?
Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate, & furious,
Loyall, and Neutrall, in a moment? No man
The expedition of my violent Loue
Outran the pauser, Reason. Here lay Duncan,
His Siluer skin, lac'd with his Golden blood,
And his gash'd Stabs, look'd like a Breach in Nature,
For Ruines wasteful entrance: there the Murtherers,
Steep'd in the Colours of their Trade, their Daggers
Vnmannerly breech'd with gore: who could refraine,
That had a heart to loue; and in that heart,
Courage, to make's loue knowne?
Lady. Helpe me hence, hoa.
Macd. Look to the Lady.
Mal. Why are we silent? and in tongues, whose Interest most it is to speake?
Don. What should be spoken here,
Where our Fate hid in an augure hole,
May rush, and seize vs? Let's away,
Our Teares are not yet brew'd.
Mal. Nor our strong Sorrow
Vpon the foot of Motion.
Ban. Looke to the Lady
And when we haue our naked Frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure; let vs meet,
And question this most bloody piece of worke,
To know it further. Feares and scruples shake vs:
In the great hand of God I stand, and thence,
Against the vndivulg'd pretence, I fight
Of Treasonous Malice.
Macd. And so do I.
All. So all.
Macb. Let's briefely put on manly readinesse,
And meet i'th Hall together.
All. Well contented. Exeunt.
Mal. What will you do?
Let's not consort with them:
To shew an vnfelt Sorrow, is an Office
Which the false man do's easie.
I'le to England.
Don. To Ireland, I:
Our separated fortune shall keepe vs both the safer:
Where we are there's Daggers in mens Smiles;
The neere in blood, the neerer bloody.
Mal. This murtherous Shaft that's shot,
Hath not yet lighted: and our safest way,
Is to auoid the aymc. Therefore to Horse,
And let vs not be dainty of leaue-taking,
But shift away: there's warrant in that Theft,
Which steales it selfe, when there's no mercie left.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosse, with an Old man.

Old man. Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the Volume of which Time, I haue seene
Houres dreadfull, and things strange, but this sore Night
Hath trifled former knowings.
Rosse. Ha, good Father,
Thou seest the Heauens, as troubled with mans Act,
Threatens his bloody Stage: byth Clock 'tis Day,
And yet darke Night strangles the trauailing Lampe:
Is't Nights predominance, or the Dayes shame,
That Darkenesse does the face of Earth entombe,
When liuing Light should kisse it?
Old man. 'Tis vnnaturall,
Euen like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,
A Falcon towring in her pride of place,
Was by a Mowsing Owle hawkt at, and kill'd.
Rosse. And Duncans Horses,
(A thing most strange, and certaine)
Beauteous, and swift, the Minions of their Race,
Turn'd wilde in nature, broke their stalls, flong out,
Contending 'gainst Obedience, as they would Make Warre with Mankinde.
Old man. 'Tis said they eate each other.
Rosse. They did so:

To

To th'amazement of mine eyes that look'd vpon't
Enter Macduffe.
Heere comes the good Macduffe.
How goes the world Sir, now?
Mald. Why see you not?
Ross Is known who is't can tell?
Mald. Those that Macbeth hath slaine
Ross Alas the day,
What good could they pretend?
Mald. They were suborned,
Malcolme, and Donalbaine the Kings two Sonnes
Are stolne away and fled, which puts vpon them
Suspition of the deed.
Ross 'Gainst Nature still!
Thriftlesse Ambition, that wilt rauen vp
Thine owne liues meanes! Then 'tis most like,
The Soueraignty will fall vpon Macbeth
Mald. He is already named, and gone to Scone
To be inuested.
Ross. Where is Duncans body?
Mald. Carried to Colmekill,
The Sacred Store-house of his Predecessors
And Guardian of their Bones.
Ross Will you to Scone?
Mald. No Cosen, not I feare.
Ross Well I will thither
Mald. Well may you see things well done there: Adieu
Lest our old Robes sit easier then our new.
Ross Farewell, Father
Old M. God's benyson go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes.
Exeunt omnes

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo.
Banq. Thou hast it now: King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weyard Women promis'd, and I feare
Thou play'dst most foully for't: yet it was said
It should not stand in thy Posterity,
But that my selfe should be the Roote, and Father
Of many Kings. If there come truth from them,
As vpon thee Macbeth, their Speeches shine,
Why by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my Oracles as well,
And set me vp in hope. But hush, no more.

Sennet sounded. Enter Macbeth as King, Lady, Lenox, Rosse, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. Heere's our chiefe Guest.
La. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great Feast,
And all-thing vnbecomming.
Macb. To night we hold a solemne Supper sir,
And I request your presence.
Banq. Let your Highnesse
Command vpon me, to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye
For euer knit.
Macb. Ride you this afternoone?
Ban. I, my good Lord.
Macb. We should haue else desir'd your good aduice
(Which still hath been both graue, and prosperous)
In this dayes Counsell; but we'le take to morrow
Is't farre you ride?
Ban. As farre my Lord, as will fill vp the time
'Twixt this, and Supper. Goe not my Horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the Night,
For a darke houre, or twaine.
Macb. Faile not our feast.
Ban. My Lord I will not.
Macb. We heare our bloody Cozens are bestow'd
In England, and in Ireland, not confessing
Their cruell Parricide, filling their hearers
With strange inuention. But of that to morrow,
When therewithall, we shall haue cause of State,
Craue your disposition. Get you gone,
Till you returne at Night.
Goes Fleance with you?
Ban. I my good Lord: our time does call vpon's.
Macb. I wish your Horses swift, and sure of foot:
And so I do commend you to their backs.
Farewell. Exit Banquo.
Let euery man be master of his time,
Till seuen at Night: to make societie
The sweeter welcome:
We will keepe our selfe till Supper time alone:
While then, God be with you. Exeunt Lords.
Sirrha, a word with you. Attend those men
Our pleasure?
Seruant. They are, my Lord without the Palace Gate.
Macb. Bring them before vs. Exit Seruant.
To be thus, is nothing: but to be safely thus
Our feares in Banquo stick deepe,
And in his Royalty of Nature reignes that
Which would be feared. 'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntlesse temper of his Mind,
He hath a Wisedome that doth guide his Valour,
To act in safety. There is none but he,
Whose being I do feare: and vnder him,
My Genius is rebuk'd, as it is said
Marke Antonies was by Cæsar. He chid the Sisters,
When first they put the Name of King vpon me,
And bad them speake to him. Then Prophet-like,
They hayl'd him Father to a Line of Kings
Vpon my head they plac'd a fruitlesse Crowne,
And put a barren Scepter in my Gripe,
Thence to be wrenched with an vnlineall Hand,
No Sonne of mine succeeding. If't be so,
For Banquo's Issue haue I fil'd my Mynde,
For them, the gracious Duncan haue I murther'd,
Put Rancours in the Vessell of my Peace
Only for them, and mine eternall Jewell
Giuen to the common Enemie of Man,
To make them Kings, the Seedes of Banquo Kings.
Rather then so, come Fate into the Lyst,
And champion me to th'vtterance.
Who's there?

Enter Seruant, and two Murtherers.

Now goe to the Doore, and stay there till we call.
Exit Seruant.
Was it not yesterday we spoke together?
Murth. It was, so please your Highnesse.
Macb. Well then,
Now haue you consider'd of my speeches.

Know,

know, [illegible] times past,
Which [illegible] so much to make,
Which [illegible] might haue been our owne selfe,
This I make good to you, in our last Conference,
Past in probation with you
How you were borne in hand, how crost
The Instruments, who wrought with them,
And all things else that might
To halt a Soule and to a Nation dazzle,
Say, This deed [illegible]
1. Murth. You made it knowne to vs.
Macb. I did so
And went further, which is now
Our point of second meeting.
Doe you finde your patience so preposterous,
In your nature, that you can let this goe?
Are you so Gospell'd, to pray for this good man,
And for his issue, whose heauie hand
Hath bow'd you to the Graue, and begger'd
Yours for euer?
1. Murth. We are men, my Liege
Macb. I, in the Catalogue ye goe for men,
As Hounds, and Curres, Showghes, Diuers Mungrels, Spaniels, Curres,
Showghes, Water-Rugs, and Demy-Wolues are clept
All by the Name of Dogges: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The House-keeper, the Hunter, euery one
According to the gift which bounteous Nature
Hath in him closed: whereby he does receiue
Particular addition from the Bill,
That writes them all alike: and so of men.
Now if you haue a station in the file,
Not i'th' worst ranke of Manhood, say it,
And I will put that Businesse in your Bosomes,
Whose execution takes your Enemie off,
Grapples you to the heart, and loue of vs,
Who weare our selues, and our enterprize,
Vnsure the Deed, were ecstasie.
2. Murth. I am one, my Liege,
Whom the vile Blowes and Buffets of the World
Hath so incens'd, that I am reckelesse what I do,
To spight the World.
1. Murth. And I another,
So weary with Disasters, tugg'd with Fortune,
That I would set my Life on any Chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.
Macb. Both of you know Banquo was your Enemie.
Murth. True, my Lord
Macb. So is he mine: and in such bloody distance,
That euery minute of his being, thrusts
Against my neere'st of Life: and though I could
With barefac'd power, sweepe him from my sight,
And bid mine eye be friend to what my hand
Will blindly execute, yet I must not,
For certaine friends that are both his, and mine,
Whose loues I may not drop, but wayle his fall,
Who I my selfe struck downe: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance doe make loue,
Masking the Businesse from the common Eye,
For sundry weightie Reasons.
2. Murth. We shall my Lord,
Performe what you command vs.
1. Murth. Though our Liues—
Macb. Your Spirits shine through you.
Within this houre at most,
I will aduise you where to plant your selues,
Acquaint you with the perfect Spy o'th' time,
The moment on't, for't must be done to Night,
And something from the Palace: alwayes thought,
That I require a clearenesse; and with him,
To leaue no Rubs nor Botches in the Worke.
Fleans, his Sonne, that keepes him companie,
Whose absence is no lesse materiall to me,
Then is his Fathers, must embrace the fate
Of that darke houre: resolue your selues apart,
Ile come to you anon.
Murth. We are resolu'd, my Lord.
Macb. Ile call vpon you straight: abide within,
It is concluded: Banquo thy Soules flight,
If it finde Heauen, must finde it out to Night. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macbeths Lady, and a Seruant.

Lady. Is Banquo gone from Court?
Seruant. I, Madame, but returnes againe to Night.
Lady. Say to the King, I would attend his leysure,
For a few words.
Seruant. Madame, I will. Exit.
Lady. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis safer, to be that which we destroy,
Then by destruction dwell in doubtfull joy.
Enter Macbeth.
How now, my Lord, why doe you keepe alone?
Of sorryest Fancies your Companions making,
Vsing those Thoughts, which should indeed haue dy'd
With them they thinke on: things without all remedie
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.
Macb. We haue scorch'd the Snake, not kill'd it:
Shee'le close, and be her selfe, whilest our poore Malice
Remaines in danger of her former Tooth.
But let the frame of things dis-ioynt,
Both the Worlds suffer,
Ere we will eate our Meale in feare, and sleepe
In the affliction of these terrible Dreames,
That shake vs Nightly: Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gayne our peace, haue sent to peace,
Then on the torture of the Minde to lye
In restlesse extasie.
Duncane is in his Graue:
After Lifes fitfull Feuer, he sleepes well,
Treason has done his worst: nor Steele, nor Poyson,
Malice domestique, forraine Leuie, nothing,
Can touch him further.
Lady. Come on:
Gentle my Lord sleeke o're your rugged Lookes,
Be bright and Iouiall among your Guests to Night
Macb. So shall I Loue, and so I pray be you:
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo,
Present him Eminence, both with Eye and Tongue:
Vnsafe the while, that we must laue
Our Honors in these flattering streames,
And make our Faces Vizards to our Hearts,
Disguising what they are.
Lady. You must leaue this
Macb. O, full of Scorpions is my Minde, deare Wife:
Thou know'st, that Banquo and his Fleans

Lady. But

Lady. But in them Natures Copie's not eterne.
Mach. There's comfort yet, they are assailable,
Then be thou iocund: ere the Bat hath flowne
His Cloyster'd flight, ere to black Hecats summons
The shard-borne Beetle, with his drowsie hums,
Hath rung Nights yawning Peale,
There shall be done a deed of dreadfull note.
Lady. What's to be done?
Mach. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest Chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling Night,
Scarfe vp the tender Eye of pittifull Day,
And with thy bloodie and inuisible hand
Cancell and teare to pieces that great Bond,
Which keepes me pale. Light thickens,
And the Crow makes Wing to the Rooky Wood:
Good things of Day begin to droope, and drowze,
Whiles Nights black Agents to their Prey's doe rowze.
Thou marueil'st at my words: but hold thee still,
Things bad begun make strong themselues by ill:
So prythee goe with me. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter three Murtherers.

1. But who did bid thee ioyne with vs?
3. Macbeth.
2. He needes not our mistrust, since he delivers
Our Offices, and what we haue to doe,
To the direction iust.
1. Then stand with vs.
The West yet glimmers with some streakes of Day.
Now spurres the lated Traueller apace,
To gayne the timely Inne, and neere approches
The subiect of our Watch.
3. Hearke, I heare Horses.
Banquo within. Giue vs a Light there hoa.
2. Then 'tis hee.
The rest, that are within the note of expectation,
Already are i'th'Court.
1. His Horses goe about.
3. Almost a mile: but he does vsually,
So all men doe, from hence toth' Palace Gate
Make it their Walke.

Enter Banquo and Fleans, with a Torch.

2. A Light, a Light.
3. 'Tis hee.
1. Stand to't.
Ban. It will be Rayne to Night.
1. Let it come downe.
Ban. O, Treachery!
Flye good Fleans, flye flye flye,
Thou may'st reuenge. O Slaue!
3. Who did strike out the Light?
1. Was't not the way?
3. There's but one downe: the Sonne is fled.
2. We haue lost
Best halfe of our Affaire.
1. Well, lets away, and say how much is done.
Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Banquet prepar'd. Enter Macbeth, Lady, Rosse, Lenox, Lords, and Attendants.

Mach. You know your owne degrees, sit downe:
At first and last, the hearty welcome.
Lords. Thankes to your Majesty.
Mach. Our selfe will mingle with Society,
And play the humble Host.
Our Hostesse keepes her State, but in best time
We will require her welcome.
Lad. Pronounce it for me Sir to all our Friends,
For my heart speakes, they are welcome.
Enter first Murderer.
Mach. See they encounter thee with their hearts thanks
Both sides are even: heere Ile sit i'th'mid'st,
Be large in mirth, anon we'll drinke a Measure
The Table round. There's blood vpon thy face.
Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.
Mach. 'Tis better thee without, then he within.
Is he dispatch'd?
Mur. My Lord his throat is cut, that I did for him.
Mach. Thou art the best o'th' Cut-throats,
Yet he's good that did the like for Fleans:
If thou did'st it, thou art the Non-pareil.
Mur. Most Royall Sir
Fleans is scap'd.
Mach. Then comes my Fit againe: I had else been perfect;
Whole as the Marble, founded as the Rocke,
As broad, and generall, as the casing Ayre:
But now I am cabin'd, crib'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts, and feares. But Banquo 's safe?
Mur. I, my good Lord: safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head,
The least a Death to Nature.
Mach. Thankes for that:
There the growne Serpent lies, the worme that's fled
Hath Nature that in time will Venom breed,
No teeth for th' present. Get thee gone, to morrow
Wee'l heare our selues againe. Exit Murderer.
Lady. My Royall Lord,
You do not giue the Cheere, the Feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making:
'Tis given, with welcome: to feede were best at home
From thence, the sawce to meate is Ceremony,
Meeting were bare without it.

Enter the Ghost of Banquo, and sits in Macbeths place.

Mach. Sweet Remembrancer:
Now good digestion waite on Appetite,
And health on both.
Lenox. May't please your Highnesse sit.
Mach. Here had we now our Countries Honor, roof'd,
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present:
Who, may I rather challenge for vnkindnesse,
Then pitty for Mischance.
Rosse. His absence (Sir)
Layes blame vpon his promise. Please your Highnesse
To grace vs with your Royall Company?

Mach.

Macb. The Table full.
Lenox. Heere is a place reserued Sir,
Macb. Where?
Lenox. Heere my good Lord
What is't that moues your Highneſſe?
Macb. Which of you haue done this?
Lords. What, my good Lord?
Macb. Thou canſt not ſay I did it: neuer ſhake
Thy goary locks at me.
Rosſe. Gentlemen riſe, his Highneſſe is not well
Lady. Sit worthy Friends: my Lord is often thus,
And hath beene from his youth: pray you keepe ſeat,
The fit is momentary, vpon a thought
He will againe be well. If much you note him
You ſhall offend him, and extend his Paſſion,
Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?
Macb. I, and a bold one, that dare looke on that
Which might appall the Diuell.
La. O proper ſtuffe:
This is the very painting of your feare:
This is the Aire-drawne Dagger which you ſaid
Led you to Duncan. O, theſe flawes and ſtarts
(Impoſtors to true feare) would well become
A woman's ſtory, at a Winters fire
Authoriz'd by her Grandam. Shame it ſelfe,
Why do you make ſuch faces? When all's done
You looke but on a ſtoole.
Macb. Prythee ſee there:
Behold, looke, loe, how ſay you:
Why what care I, if thou canſt nod, ſpeake too.
If Charnell houſes, and our Graues muſt ſend
Thoſe that we bury, backe, our Monuments
Shall be the Maws of Kytes.
La. What quite vnmans you thus.
Macb. I am aſham'd to ſhed thy cold bloud,
La. Fie for ſhame.
Macb. Bloud hath been ſhed ere now, i'th' olden time
Ere humane Statute purg'd the gentle Weale:
I, and ſince too, Murthers haue been perform'd
Too terrible for the eare. The times has been,
That when the Braines were out, the man would dye,
And there an end. But now they riſe againe
With twenty mortall murthers on their crowns,
And puſh vs from our ſtooles. This is more ſtrange
Then ſuch a murther is.
La. My worthy Lord
Your Noble Friends do lacke you.
Macb. I do forget
Do not muſe at me my moſt worthy Friends,
I haue a ſtrange infirmity, which is nothing
To thoſe that know me. Come, loue and health to all,
Then I'le ſit downe. Giue me ſome Wine, fill full.
Enter Ghoſt.
I drinke to the generall ioy o'th' whole Table,
And to our deere friend Banquo, whom we miſſe:
Would he were heere: to all, and him we thirſt,
And all to all.
Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.
Macb. Auant, & quit my ſight, let the earth hide thee:
Thy bones are marrowleſſe, thy bloud is cold:
Thou haſt no ſpeculation in thoſe eyes
Which thou doſt glare with.
La. Think of this good Peeres
But as a thing of Cuſtome: 'Tis no other,
Only it ſpoyles the pleaſure of the time.
Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Ruſſian Beare,
The arm'd Rhinoceros, or th' Hircan Tiger,
Take any ſhape but that, and my firme Nerues
Shall neuer tremble. Or be aliue againe,
And dare me to the Deſart with thy Sword:
If trembling I inhabit then, proteſt mee
The Baby of a Girle. Hence horrible ſhadow,
Vnreall mock'ry hence. Why ſo, being gone
I am a man againe: pray you ſit ſtill.
La. You haue diſplac'd the mirth
Broke the good meeting, with moſt admir'd diſorder.
Macb. Can ſuch things be,
And ouercome vs like a Summers Cloud,
Without our ſpecial wonder? You make me ſtrange
Euen to the diſpoſition that I owe,
When now I thinke you can behold ſuch ſights,
And keepe the naturall Rubie of your Cheekes,
When mine is blanch'd with feare.
Roſſe. What ſights, my Lord?
La. I pray you ſpeake not: he growes worſe & worſe
Queſtions enrages him. At once, good night.
Stand not vpon the order of your going,
But go, at once.
Len. Good night, and better health
Attend his Maieſty.
La. A kinde good night to all. Exit Lords.
Macb. It will haue Bloud they ſay:
Bloud will haue Bloud:
Stones haue beene knowne to moue, & Trees to ſpeake:
Augures and vnderſtood Relations, haue
By Magot Pyes, & Choughes, & Rookes brought forth
The ſecret'ſt man of Bloud. What is the night?
La. Almoſt at oddes with morning, which is which.
Macb. How ſay'ſt thou that Macduff denies his perſon
At our great bidding.
La. Did you ſend to him Sir?
Macb. I heare it by the way: But I will ſend
There's not a one of them but in his houſe
I keepe a Seruant Feed. I will to morrow
(And betimes I will) to the weyard Siſters.
More ſhall they ſpeake: for now I am bent to know
By the worſt meanes, the worſt, for mine owne good,
All cauſes ſhall giue way. I am in bloud
Step't in ſo farre, that ſhould I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go ore:
Strange things I haue in head, that will to hand,
Which muſt be acted, ere they may be ſcand.
La. You lacke the ſeaſon of all Natures, ſleepe.
Macb. Come, we'l to ſleepe: My ſtrange & ſelfe-abuſe
Is the initiate feare, that wants hardineſſe.
We are yet but young indeed. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting Hecat.

1. Why how now Hecat, you looke angerly?
Hec. Haue I not reaſon (Beldams) as you are?
Sawcy, and ouer-bold, how did you dare
To Trade, and Trafficke with Macbeth,
In Riddles, and Affaires of death;

And

And Liue a Man-[illegible] of your Charmes,
The close contriuer of all Harmes,
Was neuer [illegible] of my Sex,
Of them the glory must accrue
[illegible] vote, to you alone
[illegible] of Women-kinde,
[illegible] that [illegible] (as the rest do)
Loues fained owes, does not stay
But makes it haste Anon to obey,
And at the powre Acheron
Meete me i'th' Morning: thou secret'st
Welcome to all the Skies
Your Veyle, and your Starres, from prying
Your Causes and ever, close vp
Euen for Asse Thus night [illegible]
Vntill that Nature, and that Deed
Gaue the wide World, and all that doe
Vpon the Corner of the Moone
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound,
Ile catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by Magicke Slights,
Shall raise such Artificiall Sprites,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his Confusion.
He shall spurne Fate, scorne Death, and beare
His hopes 'bout Wisedome, Grace, and Feare:
As I am sure you know, Security
Is Mortals chiefest Enemie.

Musicke, and a Song.

Hearke, I am call'd: my little Spirit see
Sits in a Foggy cloud, and stayes for me.

Sing within. Come away, come away &c.

1 Come let's make vse of Time: Come shun the Backe againe. Exeunt

Scena Sexta.

Enter Lenox, and another Lord.

Lenox. My former Speeches,
Haue but hit your Thoughts
Which can interpret further: Only I say
Things haue been strangely borne. The gracious Duncan
Was pittied of Macbeth: marry he was dead:
And the right valiant Banquo walk'd too late,
Whom you may say (if't please you) Fleance kill'd,
For Fleance fled: Men must not walke too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcome, and for Donalbane
To kill their gracious Father? Damned Fact,
How it did grieue Macbeth? Did he not straight
In pious rage, the two delinquents teare
That were the Slaues of drinke, and thralles of sleepe?
Was not that Nobly done? I, and wisely too.
For 'twould haue angred any heart alue
To heare the men deny't. So that I say,
He has borne all things well, and I do thinke,
That had he Duncans Sonnes vnder his key,
(As, and't please Heauen he shall not) they should finde
What 'twere to kill a Father: So should Fleance.
But peace, for from broad words, and 'cause he fayl'd
His presence at the Tyrants Feast, I heare
Macduffe liues in disgrace. Sir, can you tell
Where he bestowes himselfe?
Lord. The Sonnes of Duncan
(From whom this Tyrant holds the due of Birth)
Liues in the English Court, and is receiu'd
Of the most Pious Edward, with such grace,
That the malcontent of Fortune, nor
Takes from him ought respect. Thither Macduffe
Is gone, to pray the holy King vpon his aide
To make vp this [illegible] with his Powres,
Thereby, that Power [illegible] may make
Forth-with our Wayes: and Feasts
Giue to our Tables meate, Sleepe to our Nights;
Free from our Feasts and Banquets bloody kniues;
Do faithfull Homage, and receiue free Honours:
All which we pine for now. And this report
Hath so exasperate their King, that hee
Prepares for some attempt of Warre.
Len. Sent he to Macduffe?
Lord. He did: and with an absolute Sir, not I
The cloudy Messenger turnes me his backe,
And hums, as who should say, you'l rue the time
That clogges me with this Answer.
Len. And that well might
Aduise him to a Caution, t'hold what distance
His wisedome can prouide. Some holy Angell
Flye to the Court of England, and vnfold
His Messadge ere he come, that a swift blessing
May soone returne to this our suffering Country,
Vnder a hand accurs'd.
Lord. Ile send my prayers with him. Exeunt

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Three the brinded Cat hath mew'd
2 Three, and once the Hedge-Pigge whin'd
3 Harpier cries, 'Tis time, 'tis time.
1 Round about the Caldron go:
In the poysond entrailes throw
Toad, that vnder cold stone,
Dayes and Nights has thirty one
Sweltred Venom sleeping got,
Boyle thou first i'th' charmed pot.
All. Double, double toyle and trouble
Fire burne, and Caldron bubble
2 Fillet of a Fenny Snake,
In the Caldron boyle and bake
Eye of Newt, and Toe of Frogge,
Wooll of Bat, and Tongue of Dogge
Adders Forke, and Blinde-wormes Sting,
Lizards legge, and Howlets wing:
For a Charme of powrefull trouble,
Like a Hell-broth boyle and bubble.
All. Double, double toyle and trouble,
Fire burne, and Caldron bubble.
3 Scale of Dragon, Tooth of Wolfe,
Witches Mummey, Maw, and Gulfe
Of the rauin'd salt Sea-shark
Roote of Hemlocke, digg'd i'th' darke
Liuer of Blaspheming Iew,
Gall of Goate, and Slippes of Yew,
Sliuer'd in the Moones Eclipse:

Noise of Trumpets. Enter [illegible]
[illegible]
Or else worse tydings shall,
[illegible]
And poste with poste incounter thy Confines.
Enter Rosse and Angus.
Whence comest thou worthy Thane?
Ross. From Fife great King,
Where the Norweyan Banners flout the Skie,
And fanne our people cold.
Norway himselfe, with terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyall Traytor
The Thane of Cawdor began a dismall Conflict,
Till that Bellona's Bridegroome, lapt in proofe,
Confronted him with Selfe-comparisons,
Point against Point, rebellious Arme 'gainst Arme,
Curbing his lauish spirit: and to conclude,
The Victorie fell on us.
Dunc. Great happinesse.
Ross. That now Sweno, the Norwayes King,
Craues composition:
Nor would we deigne him Burriall of his men,
Till he disbursed, at Saint Colmes Inch,
Ten thousand Dollars, to our generall vse.
Dunc. No more that Thane of Cawdor shall deceiue
Our Bosome interest: Goe pronounce his present death,
And with his former Title greet Macbeth.
Ross. Ile see it done.
Dunc. What he hath lost, Noble Macbeth hath won.
Exeunt.
Enter Macbeth, Banquo, and Rosse.
Macb. So foule and faire a day I haue not seene.
Ban. How farre is't call'd to Forres? What are these
So withered, and so wilde in their attire,
That looke not like th'Inhabitants o'th'Earth,
And yet are on't? Liue you, or are you aught
That man may question? You seeme to vnderstand me,
By each at once her choppie finger laying
Vpon her Skinnie Lips: You should be Women,
And yet your Beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.
Macb. Speake if you can: What are you?
1 All hayle Macbeth, hayle to thee Thane of Glamis.
2 All hayle Macbeth, hayle to thee Thane of Cawdor.
3 All hayle Macbeth, that shalt be King hereafter.
Ban. Good Sir, why do you start, and seeme to feare
Things that do sound so faire? I'th'name of Truth,
Are ye fantasticall, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show? My Noble Partner
You greet with present Grace, and great Prediction
Of Noble hauing, and of Royall hope,
That he seemes wrapt withall: to me you speake not.
If you can looke into the Seedes of Time,
And say which Graine will grow, and which will not,
Speake then to me, who neyther begge nor feare
Your fauours, nor your hate.
1 Hayle.
2 Hayle.
3 Hayle.
1 Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.
2 Not so happy, yet much happier.
3 Thou shalt get Kings, though thou be none:
So all hayle Macbeth and Banquo.
1 Banquo and Macbeth, all hayle.
Macb. Stay you imperfect Speakers, tell me more:
By Sinells death I know I am Thane of Glamis,
But how of Cawdor? the Thane of Cawdor liues
A prosperous Gentleman; and to be King
Stands not within the prospect of belecfe,
No more than to be Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this strange Intelligence? or why
Vpon this blasted Heath you stop our way
With such Prophetique greeting? Speake, I charge you.
Ban. The earth hath bubbles as the Water has,
And these are of them: Whither are they vanish'd?
Macb. Into the Ayre: and what seem'd corporall, melted
As breath into the Windes. Would they had stayd.
Ban. Were such things here, as we do speake about?
Or haue we eaten on the insane Root,
That takes the Reason Prisoner?
Macb. Your Children shall be Kings.
Ban. You shall be King.
Macb. And Thane of Cawdor too: went it not so?
Ban. To the selfe-same tune and words. Who's here?
Enter Rosse and Angus.
Ross. The King hath happily receiu'd, Macbeth,
The newes of thy Successe: and when he reades
Thy personall Venture in the Rebels fight,
His Wonders and his Prayses do contend
Which should be thine or his: Silenc'd with that,
In viewing o're the rest o'th'selfe-same day,
He findes thee in the stout Norweyan Ranks,
Nothing afeard of what thy selfe didst make,
Strange Images of Death. As thick as Tale
Came post with post, and euery one did beare
Thy Praises in his Kingdomes great defence,
And powr'd them downe before him.
Ang. We are sent
To giue thee from our Royall Master thanks,
Only to harken for thy company,
To bring thee to him, and conduct thee safely
To see him for the present.
Ban. This I'le do.
Macb. Stay you, imperfect Speakers, tell me more:
Of Nothing can we feare? Answer me
Now what I aske you.
1 Speake.
2 Demand.
3 We'l answer.
1 Say, if th'hadst rather heare it from our mouthes,
Or from our Masters.
Macb. Call them, let me see them.
1 Sinells Issue (Posthume to Inheritance)
Hearbe-grow Giant stands vpon the Blasted Heath
With his Brow Gripe, and Firstlings of his Gleabe
Which interdicts inhabitance. Answer me
To what I aske you.
1 Speake.
2 Demand.
3 We'l answer.
1 Say, if th'hadst rather heare it from our mouthes,
Or from our Masters.
Macb. Call them, let me see them.
1 Sinells Issue (Posthume to Inheritance)
Hearbe-grow Giant stands vpon the Blasted Heath
With his Brow Gripe, and Firstlings of his Gleabe
From Murderers Gibbets, throw
Into the Flame.
All. Come in this kind.
Thy Selfe and Office deafe his Duller sense. Thunder.
1 Apparition, an Armed Head.
Macb. Tell me, thou vnknowne power.
1 He knowes thy thought:
Heare his speech but say thou nought.
1 Apparition, Macbeth, Macbeth
Beware Macduffe, beware the Thane of Fife: dismisse me. Enough.
He Descends.
Macb. Whatere thou art, for thy good caution, thanks
Thou hast harpt my feare aright. But one word more.
1 He will not stand to be commanded: Heere's another
More potent then the first. Thunder.
2 Apparition, a Bloody Child.
2 Macb. Had I three eares, I'de heare thee.
2 Be bloody, bold, and resolute
Laugh to scorne
The powre of man. For none of woman borne
Shall harme Macbeth. Descend.
Macb. Then liue Macduffe: what need I feare of thee?
But yet Ile make assurance double sure,
And take a Bond of Fate: thou shalt not liue,
That may tell pale-hearted Feare, it lies;
And sleepe in spight of Thunder. Thunder
3 Apparition, A Child Crowned, with a Tree in his hand.
What is this,
That rises like the issue of a King,
And weares vpon his Baby-brow, the round
And top of Soueraignty?
All. Listen, but speake not to't.
3 Appar. Be Lyon mettled, proud, and take no care:
Who chafes, who frets or where Conspirers are.
Macbeth shall neuer vanquish'd be vntill
Great Byrnam Wood, to high Dunsinane Hill
Shall come against him. Descends.
Macb. That will neuer bee
Who can impresse the forrest, bid the Tree
Vnfixe his earth-bound Root? Sweet boadements good!
Rebellious dead, rise neuer till the Wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high-plac't Macbeth
Shall liue the Lease of Nature, pay his breath
To time, and mortall Custome. Yet my Hart
Throbbs to know one thing: Tell me (if your Art
Can tell so much) Shall Banquo 's Issue euer
Reigne in this Kingdome?
All. Seeke to know no more.
Macb. I will be satisfied. Deny me this,
And an eternall Curse fall on you. Let me know.
Why sinkes that Caldron? & What noise is this? Hoboyes
1 Shew.
2 Shew.
3 Shew.
All. Shew his Eyes, and greeue his Hart,
Come like shadowes, so depart.
A shew of eight Kings, and Banquo last, with a glasse in his hand.
Macb. Thou art too like the Spirit of Banquo. Down!
Thy Crowne does sceare mine Eye-balls. And thy haire
Thou other Gold-bound-brow, is like the first.
A third, is like the former. Filthy Hagges,
Why do you shew me this? —— A fourth? Start eyes!
What will the Line stretch out to'th'crack of Doome?
Another yet? A seuenth? Ile see no more:
And yet the eight appeares, who beares a glasse,
Which shewes me many more; and some I see,
That two-fold Balles and treble Scepters carry.
Horrible sight! Now I see 'tis true,
For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles vpon me,
And points at them for his. What, is this so?
1 I Sir, all this is so. But why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
Come Sisters, cheere we vp his sprights,
And shew the best of our delights.
Ile Charme the Ayre to giue a sound,
While you performe your Antique round.
That this great King may kindly say,
Our duties, did his welcome pay. Musicke
The Witches Dance, and vanish.
Macb. Where are they? Gone?
Let this pernicious houre,
Stand aye accursed in the Kalender.
Come in, without there. Enter Lenox.
Lenox. What's your Graces will.

Macb.

Mach. Saw you the Weyard Sisters?
Lenox. No my Lord
Mach. Came they not by you?
Lenox. No indeed my Lord.
Mach. Infected be the Aire whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them. I did heare
The galloping of Horse. Who was't came by?
Len. 'Tis two or three my Lord that bring you word.
Macbeth. [illegible]
Mach. Fled to [illegible]?
Len. I my good Lord,
Mach. Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'retooke
Vnlesse the deed go with it. From this moment
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And even now
To Crowne my thoughts with Acts, be it thought & done:
The Castle of Macduff I will surprise,
Seize vpon Fife, give to the edge o'th' Sword
His Wife, his Babes, and all vnfortunate Soules
That trace him in his Line. No boasting like a Foole,
This deed Ile do, before this purpose coole,
But no more sights. Where are these Gentlemen?
Come bring me where they are. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macduffes Wife, her Son, and Rosse.

Wife. What has he done, to make him fly the Land?
Rosse. You must have patience Madam.
Wife. He had none:
His flight was madnesse: when our Actions do not,
Our feares do make vs Traitors.
Rosse. You know not
Whether it was his wisedome, or his feare.
Wife. Wisedom? to leave his wife, to leave his Babes,
His Mansion, and his Titles, in a place
From whence himselfe do's flye? He loves vs not,
He wants the naturall touch: For the poore Wren
(The most diminutive of Birds) will fight,
Her young ones in her Nest, against the Owle.
All is the feare, and nothing is the Love,
As little is the Wisedome, where the flight
So runnes against all reason.
Rosse. My dearest Coosin,
I pray you schoole your selfe. But for your Husband,
He is Noble, Wise, Judicious, and best knowes
The fits o'th' Season. I dare not speake much further,
But cruell are the times, when we are Traitors
And do not know our selves: when we hold Rumor
From what we feare, yet know not what we feare,
But float vpon a wilde and violent Sea
Each way, and move. I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but Ile be heere againe:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climbe vpward,
To what they were before. My pretty Cosine,
Blessing vpon you.
Wife. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherlesse.
Rosse. I am so much a Foole, should I stay longer
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort.
I take my leave at once. Exit Rosse.

Wife. Sirra, your Fathers dead,
And what will you do now? How will you live?
Son. As Birds do Mother.
Wife. What with Wormes and Flyes?
Son. With what I get, I meane, and so do they.
Wife. Poore Bird,
Thou'dst never feare the Net nor Lime,
The Pitfall, nor the Gin.
Son. Why should I Mother?
Poore Birds they are not set for.
My Father is not dead for all your saying
Wife. Yes, he is dead
How wilt thou do for a Father?
Son. Nay how will you do for a Husband?
Wife. Why I can buy me twenty at any Market.
Son. Then you'l buy 'em to sell againe.
Wife. Thou speak'st with all thy wit,
And yet i'faith with wit enough for thee
Son. Was my Father a Traitor, Mother?
Wife. I, that he was
Son. What is a Traitor?
Wife. Why one that sweares and lyes
Son. And be all Traitors, that do so?
Wife. Every one that do so, is a Traitor,
And must be hanged.
Son. And must they all be hang'd, that sweare and lye?
Wife. Every one.
Son. Who must hang them?
Wife. Why the honest men.
Son. Then the Liars and Swearers are Fools: for there are Liars and Swearers enow, to beate the honest men,
and hang vp them.
Wife. Now God helpe thee, poore Monkie:
But how wilt thou do for a Father?
Son. If he were dead, you'd weepe for him: if you would not, it were a good sign, that I should quickly
have a new Father.
Wife. Poore prattler, how thou talk'st?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Bles you faire Dame: I am not to you known,
Though in your state of Honor I am perfect;
I doubt some danger do's approach you neerely.
If you will take a homely mans advice,
Be not found heere. Hence with your little ones.
To frighten you thus, Me thinkes I am too savage
To do worse to you were feare Cruelty,
Which is too nye your person. Heaven preserve you,
I dare abide no longer. Exit Messenger
Wife. Whether should I flye?
I have done no harme. But I remember now
I am in this earthly world: where to do harme
Is often laudable, to do good sometime
Accounted dangerous folly. Why then (alas)
Do I put vp that womanly defence,
To say I have done no harme? What are these faces?

Enter Murtherers.

Mur. Where is your Husband?
Wife. I hope in no place so vnsanctified,
Where such as thou may'st find him.
Mur. He's a Traitor
Son. Thou ly'st thou shagge-eard Villaine.
Mur. What you Egge?
Young fry of Treachery?
Son. He has kill'd me Mother,
Run away I pray you. Exit crying Murther

Scena Tertia.

Enter Malcolme and Macduffe.

Mal. Let vs seeke out some desolate shade, & there
Weepe our sad bosomes empty.
Macd. Let vs rather
Hold fast the mortall Sword: and like good men,
Bestride our downfall Birthdome: each new Morne,
New Widdowes howle, new Orphans cry, new sorowes
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland, and yelld out
Like Syllable of Dolour.
Mal. What I believe, Ile waile;
What know, believe, and what I can redresse,
As I shall finde the time to friend, I will.
What you have spoke, it may be so perchance.
This Tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,
Was once thought honest, you have lou'd him well,
He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young, but something
You may discerne of him through me, and wisdome
To offer vp a weake, poore innocent Lambe
T'appease an angry God.
Macd. I am not treacherous.
Mac. But Macbeth is.
A good and vertuous Nature may recoyle
In an Imperiall charge. But I shall crave your pardon.
That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose;
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell.
Though all things foule, would wear the brows of grace
Yet Grace must still looke so.
Macd. I have lost my Hopes.
Mac. Perchance even there
Where I did finde my doubts.
Why in that rawnesse left you Wife, and Childe?
Those precious Motives, those strong knots of Loue,
Without leave-taking? I pray you,
Let not my Jealousies, be your Dishonors.
But mine owne Safeties: you may be rightly just,
Whatsoever I shall thinke.
Macd. Bleed, bleed poore Country,
Great Tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodnesse dare not check thee: wear thy wrongs,
The Title, is affeer'd. Fare thee well Lord,
I would not be the Villaine that thou think'st,
For the whole Space that's in the Tyrants Grasp,
And the rich East to boot.
Mal. Be not offended:
I speake not as in absolute feare of you.
I thinke our Country sinkes beneath the yoake,
It weepes, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. I thinke withall,
There would be hands uplifted in my right:
And here from gracious England have I offer
Of goodly thousands. But for all this,
When I shall tread upon the Tyrants head,
Or wear it on my Sword; yet my poore Country,
Shall have more vices than it had before,
More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeede.
Macd. What should he be?
Mal. It is myselfe I meane: in whom I know
All the particulars of Vice so grafted,
That when they shall be open'd, blacke Macbeth
Will seeme as pure as Snow, and the poore State
Esteeme him as a Lambe, being compar'd
With my confineless harmes.
Macd. Not in the Legions
Of horrid Hell, can come a Deuill more damn'd
In evils, to top Macbeth.
Mal. I grant him Bloody,
Luxurious, Auaricious, False, Deceitfull,
Sodaine, Malicious, smacking of every sinne
That has a name. But there's no bottome, none
In my Voluptuousnesse: Your Wiues, your Daughters,
Your Matrons, and your Maides, could not fill vp
The Cesterne of my Lust, and my Desire
All continent Impediments would o're-beare
That did oppose my will. Better Macbeth,
Then such an one to reigne.
Macd. Boundlesse intemperance
In Nature is a Tyranny. It hath beene
Th'vntimely emptying of the happy Throne,
And fall of many Kings. But feare not yet
To take vpon you what is yours: you may
Conuey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seeme cold. The time you may so hoodwinke.
We haue willing Dames enough: there cannot be
That Vulture in you, to deuoure so many
As will to Greatnesse dedicate themselues,
Finding it so inclinde.
Mal. With this, there growes
In my most ill-compos'd Affection, such
A stanchlesse Auarice, that were I King,
I should cut off the Nobles for their Lands,
Desire his Jewels, and this others House,
And my more-having, would be as a Sawce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels vniust against the Good and Loyall,
Destroying them for wealth.
Macd. This Auarice
Sticks deeper: growes with more pernicious roote
Then Summer-seeming Lust, and it hath bin
The Sword of our slaine Kings: yet do not feare,
Scotland hath Foysons, to fill vp your will
Of your meere Owne. All these are portable,
With other Graces weigh'd.
Mal. But I haue none. The King-becoming Graces,
As Iustice, Verity, Temperance, Stablenesse,
Bounty, Perseuerance, Mercy, Lowlinesse,
Deuotion, Patience, Courage, Fortitude,
I haue no relish of them, but abound
In the diuision of each seuerall Crime,
Acting it many wayes. Nay, had I powre, I should
Powre the sweet Milke of Concord into Hell,
Vproare the vniuersall peace, confound
All vnity on earth.
Macd. O Scotland, Scotland.
Mal. If such a one be fit to gouerne, speake:
I am as I haue spoken.
Macd. Fit to gouerne? No not to liue. O Nation miserable!
With an vntitled Tyrant, bloody Sceptred,
When shalt thou see thy wholsome dayes againe?
Since that the truest Issue of thy Throne
By his owne Interdiction stands accurst,
And do's blaspheme his breed? Thy Royall Father
Was a most Sainted-King: the Queene that bore thee,
Oftner vpon her knees, then on her feet,
Dy'de euery day she liu'd. Fare thee well,

These

These Euils thou repeat'st vpon thy felfe,
Hath banish'd me from Scotland. O my Breft,
Thy hope ends here.
Mal. Macduff, this Noble paſſion
Child of integrity, hath from my ſoule
Wip'd the black ſcruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good Truth, and Honor. Diuelliſh Macbeth,
By many of theſe traines, hath ſought to win me
Into his power, and modeſt Wiſedome pluckes me
From ouer-credulous haſte: but God aboue
Deale betweene thee and me, for eere no w
I put my ſelfe to thy Direction, and Vnſpeake mine owne detraction. Here abiure
The taints and blames I laide vpon my ſelfe,
For ſtrangers to my Nature. I am yet
Vnknowne to Woman, neuer was forſworne,
Scarſely haue coueted what was mine owne,
At no time broke my Faith, would not betray
The Deuill to his Fellow, and delight
No leſſe in truth, then Life. My firſt vnkindeſt ſpeaking
Was this vpon my ſelfe. What I am truly
Is thine, and my poore Countries to command
Whither indeed, before thy here approach
Old Seyward with ten thouſand warlike men
Already at a point, was ſetting forth:
Now we'l together, and the chance of goodneſſe
Be like our warranted Quarrell. Why are you ſilent?
Macd. Such welcome, and vnwelcome things at once
'Tis hard to reconcile.
Enter a Doctor.
Mal. Well, more anon. Comes the King forth I pray you?
Doct. I Sir, there are a crew of wretched Soules
That ſtay his Cure: their malady conuinces
The great aſſay of Art. But at his touch,
Such ſanctity hath Heauen giuen his hand,
They preſently amend. Exit.
Mal. I thanke you Doctor.
Macd. What's the Diſeaſe he meanes?
Mal. 'Tis call'd the Euill:
A moſt miraculous worke in this good King,
Which often ſince my here-remaine in England,
I haue ſeene him do. How he ſolicites heauen
Himſelfe beſt knowes: but ſtrangely viſited people
All ſwolne and Vlcerous, pittifull to the eye,
The mere deſpaire of Surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden ſtampe about their necks,
Put on with holy Prayers, and 'tis ſpoken
To the ſucceeding Royalty he leaues
The healing Benediction. With this ſtrange vertue,
He hath a heauenly gift of Prophecie,
And ſundry Bleſſings hang about his Throne,
That ſpeake him full of Grace.
Enter Roſſe.
Macd. See who comes here.
Mal. My Countryman: but yet I know him not.
Macd. My ever gentle Cozen, welcome hither.
Mal. I know him now. Good God betimes remoue
The meanes that makes vs Strangers.
Roſſe. Sir, Amen.
Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?
Roſſe. Alas poore Country,
Almoſt afraid to know it ſelfe. It cannot
Be call'd our Mother, but our Graue, where nothing
But who knowes nothing, is once ſeene to ſmile:
Where ſighes, and groanes, and ſhrieks that rent the aire
Are made, not mark'd. Where violent ſorrow ſeemes
A Modeme extaſie. The Deadmans knell,
Is there ſcarce aſk'd for, who, and good mens liues
Expire before the Flowers in their Caps,
Dying, or ere they ſicken.
Macd. O Relation, too nice, and yet too true
Mal. What's the neweſt griefe?
Roſſe. That of an houres age doth hiſſe the ſpeaker,
Each minute teemes a new one.
Macd. How does my Wife?
Roſſe. Why well.
Macd. And all my Children?
Roſſe. Well too.
Macd. The Tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?
Roſſe. No: they were at peace, when I did leaue 'em.
Macd. Be not a niggard of your ſpeech. How goes't?
Roſſe. When I came hither to tranſport the Tydings
Which I haue heauy borne, there ran a Rumour
Of many worthy Fellowes that were out,
Which was to my beliefe witneſſ'd the rather,
For that I ſaw the Tyrants Power a-foot.
Now is the time of helpe: your eye in Scotland
Would create Soldiours, make our Women fight,
To doote their diſeaſes.
Mal. Be't their comfort
We are coming thither. Gracious England hath
Lent vs good Seyward, and ten thouſand men,
An older, and a better Soldier, none
That Chriſtendome giues out.
Roſſe. Would I could anſwer
This comfort with the like. But I haue words
That would be howl'd out in the deſert aire,
Where hearing ſhould not latch them.
Macd. What concerne they,
The generall cauſe, or is it a Fee-griefe
Due to ſome ſingle breſt?
Roſſe. No mind that's honeſt
But in it ſhares ſome woe, though the maine part
Pertaines to you alone.
Macd. If it be mine
Keepe it not from me, quickly let me haue it.
Roſſe. Let not your eares deſpiſe my tongue for euer,
Which ſhall a moſt poore Matron wound it ſelfe
That euer yet they heard.
Macd. Humh: I gueſſe at it.
Roſſe. Your Caſtle is ſurpriſ'd: your Wife, and Babes
Sauagely ſlaughter'd: To relate the manner
Were on the Quarry of theſe murther'd Deere
To adde the death of you.
Mal. Merciful Heauen:
What man, ne're pull your hat vpon your browes:
Giue ſorrow words, the griefe that do's not ſpeake,
Whiſpers the o're-fraught heart, and bids it breake.
Macd. My Children too?
Roſſe. Wife, Children, Seruants, all that could be found.
Macd. And I muſt be from thence! My wife kill'd too?
Roſſe. I haue ſaid.
Mal. Be comforted.
Let's make vs Medicines of our great Reuenge,
To cure this deadly greefe.
Macd. He has no Children. All my pretty ones?
Did you ſay All? O Hell-kite! All?
What, All my pretty Chickens, and their Dam
At one fell ſwoope?
Mal. Diſpute it like a man.
Macd. I ſhall do ſo

But I must also feele it as a man
I cannot but remember such things were
That were most precious to me. Did heauen looke on,
And would not take their part? Sinne, Master,
Teares were all stroke for euer. Nay, to this hour,
Not for their owne demerits, but for mine
Fell slaughter on their soules. Heauen reioyce not now
Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword, let griefe
Conuert to anger: blunt not the heart, enrage it.
Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And Braggart with my tongue. But gentle Heauens,
Cut short all intermission. Front to front,
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland, and my selfe
Within my sword's length set him, if he scape
Heauen forgiue him too.
Mal. This time goes manly.
Come go we to the King, our Powre is ready,
Our lacke is nothing but your absence. Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the Powres aboue
Put on their instruments. Receiue what cheere you may,
The Night is long that neuer finds the Day. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Doctor of Physicke, and a Waiting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I haue two Nights watch'd with you, but can perceiue no truth in your report. When was it she last walk'd?

Gent. Since his Maiesty went into the Field, I haue seene her rise from her bed, throw her Night-Gowne vpon her, vnlocke her Closet, take forth paper, fold it, write vpon't, read it, afterwards seale it, and againe returne to bed, yet all this while in a most fast sleepe.

Doct. A great perturbation in Nature, to receyue at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching. In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actuall performances, what (at any time) haue you heard her say?

Gent. That, Sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may, to me, and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one, hauing no witnesse to confirme my speech.

Enter Lady with a Taper.

Lo you, heere she comes. This is her very guise, and vpon my life, fast asleepe. Obserue her, stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why it stood by her: she has light by her continually, 'tis her command.

Doct. You see her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense are shut.

Doct. What is it she now do's?

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seeme thus washing her hands: I haue knowne her continue in this a quarter of an houre.

Lady. Yet heere's a spot.

Doct. Heare her speake, I will set downe what comes from her, to satisfie my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady. Out damned Spot: out I say. One: Two: Why then 'tis time to do't. Hell is murky. Fie my Lord, fie, a Soldier, and afeard? What need we feare who knowes it, when none can call our power to accompt: yet who would haue thought the old man to haue had so much blood in him.

Doct. Do you marke that?

Lady. The Thane of Fife, had a wife: where is she now? What will these hands ne're be clean? No more o'that my Lord, no more o'that: you marre all with this starting.

Doct. Go too, go too:
You haue known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: Heauen knowes what she has known.

Lady. Heere's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh, oh, oh.

Doct. What a sigh is there? The heart is sorely charg'd.

Gent. I would not haue such a heart in my bosome, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well.

Gent. Pray God it be sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practise: yet I haue known those which haue walk'd in their sleep, who haue dyed holily in their beds.

Lady. Wash your hands, put on your Night-Gowne, looke not so pale. I tell you yet againe Banquo's buried, he cannot come out on's graue.

Doct. Euen so?

Lady. To bed, to bed: there's knocking at the gate: Come, come, come, come, giue me your hand: What's done, cannot be vndone. To bed, to bed, to bed.

Exit Lady.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foule whisp'rings are abroad: vnnaturall deeds
Do breed vnnaturall troubles: infected mindes
To their deafe pillowes will discharge their Secrets.
More needs she the Diuine, than the Physician.
God, God forgiue vs all. Looke after her,
Remoue from her the meanes of all annoyance,
And still keepe eyes vpon her. So good night:
My minde she has mated, and amaz'd my sight.
I thinke, but dare not speake.

Gent. Good night good Doctor. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Drum and Colours. Enter Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, Lenox, Soldiers.

Ment. The English powre is neere led on by Malcolme, his Vncle Seyward, and the good Macduff.
Reuenges burne in them, for their deere causes
Would to the bleeding, and the grim Alarme
Excite the mortified man.
Ang. Neere Byrnan wood
Shall we well meet them, that way are they comming.
Cath. Who knowes if Donalbane be with his brother?
Len. For certaine Sir, he is not. I haue a File
Of all the Gentry, there is Seywards Sonne,
And many vnrough youths, that euen now
Protest their first of Manhood.
Ment. What does the Tyrant.
Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly Fortifies.
Some say he's mad: Others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant Fury, but for certaine

He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of Rule.
Ang. Now does he feele
His secret Murthers sticking on his hands,
Now minutely Revolts vpbraid his faith-breach:
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in loue. Now does he feele his Title
Hang loose about him, like a Giants Robe
Vpon a dwarfish Theefe.
Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester'd Senses to recoyle and start,
When all that is within him do's condemne
Itselfe, for being there?
Cath. Well, march we on,
To giue Obedience, where 'tis truly ow'd:
Meet we the Med'cine of the sickly Weale,
And with him poure we in our Country purges,
Each drop of vs.
Lenox. Or so much as it needes,
To dew the Soueraigne Flower and drowne the Weeds.
Make we our March towards Birnan. Exeunt marching.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Mach. Bring me no more Reportes, let them fly all
Till Byrnane wood remoue to Dunsinane,
I cannot taint with Feare. What's the Boy Malcolme?
Was he not borne of woman? The Spirits that know
All mortall Consequences, haue pronounc'd me thus:
Feare not Macbeth, no man that's borne of woman
Shall ere haue power vpon thee. Then fly false Thanes,
And mingle with the English Epicures,
The mind I sway by, and the heart I beare,
Shall neuer tagge with horrid feare, nor shake with feare.
Enter Seruant.
The Deuill Damne thee blacke, thou cream-fac'd Loone!
Where got'st thou that Goose-looke?
Ser. There is ten thousand.
Mach. Geese Villaine?
Ser. Soldiers Sir.
Mach. Go prick thy face, and ouer-red thy feare
Thou Lilly-liuer'd Boy. What Soldiers, Patch?
Death of thy Soule, those Linnen cheekes of thine
Are Counsellers to feare. What Soldiers Whay-face?
Ser. The English Force, so please you.
Mach. Take thy face hence. Seyton, I am sicke at heart,
When I behold. Seyton, I say, this push
Will cheere me euer, or dis-eate me now.
I haue liu'd long enough, my way of life
Is fall'n into the Seare, the yellow Leafe,
And that which should accompany Old-Age,
As Honor, Loue, Obedience, Troopes of Friends,
I must not looke to haue, but in their steed,
Curses not loud but deepe, Mouth-honor, breath
Which the poore heart would faine deny, and dare not.
Seyton?
Enter Seyton.
Sey. What's your gracious pleasure?
Mach. What Newes more?
Sey. All is confirm'd my Lord, which was reported.
Mach. Ile fight, till from my bones, my flesh be hackt.
Giue me my Armor.
Sey. 'Tis not needed yet.
Mach. Ile put it on.
Send out more Horses, skirre the Country round,
Hang those that talke of Feare. Giue me mine Armor.
How does your Patient, Doctor?
Doct. Not so sicke my Lord,
As she is troubled with thicke-coming Fancies
That keepe her from her rest.
Mach. Cure of that.
Can'st thou not Minister to a mynde diseas'd,
Plucke from the Memory a rooted Sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the Braine,
And with some sweet Obliuious Antidote
Cleanse the stufft bosome, of that perilous stuffe
Which weighes vpon the heart?
Doct. Therein the Patient
Must minister to himselfe.
Mach. Throw Physicke to the Dogs, Ile none of it.
Come, put mine Armour on: giue me my Staffe.
Seyton, send out. Doctor, the Thanes flye from me.
Come sir dispatch. If thou could'st Doctor, cast
The Water of my Land, finde her Disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very Echo,
That should applaud againe. Pull't off I say.
What Rubarb, Cyme, or what Purgatiue drugge
Would scowre these English hence? Hear'st thou of them?
Doct. I my good Lord, your Royall Preparation
Makes vs heare something.
Mach. Bring it after me.
I will not be afraid of Death and Bane
Till Byrnane Forrest come to Dunsinane.
Doct. Were I from Dunsinane away and cleere,
Profit againe should hardly draw me heere. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Drum and Colours. Enter Malcolme, Seward Macduffe, Seyward, Seuen Souldiers, Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, and Souldiers Marching.

Malc. Cosins I hope the dayes are neere at hand
That chambers will be safe.
Ment. We doubt it nothing.
Siew. What wood is this before vs?
Ment. The wood of Byrnane.
Malc. Let euery Souldier hew him downe a Bough,
And bear't before him, thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our Hoast, and make discouery
Erre in report of vs.
Sould. It shall be done.
Siew. We learne no other, but the confident Tyrant
Keepes still in Dunsinane, and will indure
Our setting downe before't.
Malc. 'Tis his maine hope:
For where there is aduantage to be giuen,
Both more and leſſe haue giuen him the Reuolt,
And none serue with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.
Macd. Let our iust Censures
Attend the true euent, and put we on

[illegible]

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeth, [illegible] & Seruants, with Drumme and Colours.

Macb. Hang our Banners on the outward walls,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Seemes bruited: Let me finde him Fortune,
And more I beg'e not. Exit. Alarums.

Enter Malcolme and Seward.

Sey. This way my Lord, the Castle gently rendred:
The Tyrants people on both sides do fight,
The Noble Thanes do bravely in the Warre,
The day almost it selfe professes yours,
And little is to do.
Malc. We have met with Foes
That strike beside us.
Sey. Enter Sir, the Castle. Exeunt. Alarum.

Enter Macbeth.

Mach. Why then is this part of Romane Fame, and the
On mine owne sword: Whiles I see lives, the gashes
Do better vpon them.

Enter Macduffe.

Macd. Turne Hell-hound, turne.
Mach. Of all men else I have avoided thee:
But get thee back, my soule is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.
Macd. I have no words,
My voice is in my Sword, thou bloodier Villaine
Then tearmes can giue thee out. Fight. Alarum.
Macb. Thou loosest labour.
As easie may'st thou the intrenchant Ayre
Wound with thy keenest Sword, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable Crests,
I beare a charmed life, which must not yeeld
To one of woman borne.
Macd. Dispaire thy Charme,
And let the Angell whom thou still hast seru'd
Tell thee, Macduffe was from his Mothers wombe
Vntimely ripp'd.
Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so;
For it hath Cow'd my better part of man:
And be these Juggling Fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with vs in a double sence;
That keepe the word of promise to our eare,
And breake it to our hope. I'le not fight with thee.
Macd. Then yeeld thee Coward,
And liue to be the shew, and gaze o'th time.
Wee'l have thee, as our rarer Monsters are Painted vpon a pole, and vnder-writ,
Heere may you see the Tyrant.
Macb. I will not yeeld
To kisse the ground before young Malcolmes feet,
And to be baited with the Rabbles curse.
Though Byrnane wood be come to Dunsinane,
And thou opposed, being of no woman borne,
Yet I will try the last: before my body,
I throw my warlike Shield: Lay on Macduffe,
And damn'd be him that first cries hold enough.
Exeunt fighting. Alarums.

Enter Fighting, and Macbeth slaine.

Retreat, and Flourish. Enter with Drum and Colours, Malcolme, Seward, Ross, Thanes, and Soldiers.
Mal. I would it were the good of your Noble Friends are
Sey. Some must go off: and yet (by these I see)
So great a day, as fits the Conquest.
Mal. Macduffe is missing, and your Noble Son.
Ross. Your Son my Lord, has paid a soldiers debt:
He only liu'd but till he was a man,
The which no sooner had his Prowesse confirm'd
In the vnshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.
Sey. Then he is dead?
Ross. Ay and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.
Sey. Had he his hurts before?
Ross. I, on the front.
Sey. Why then, God's Soldier be he:
Had I as many sonnes as I have haires,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so his Knell is knoll'd.
Mal. He's worth more sorrow,
And that shall have it: he can speake, and die,
And speake of it: Now all my Cares are done,
Saue what is spoken, or done for memories.
Not those of mine, but our generall Ills,
Are heavy on me: Thus much for my selfe,
Figure it, and I stand both bound and vow'd
To all the Friends I have, to end the Tyrant,
And by his fall, to make a Kingdome happie.
Sey. Let vs rest our Royall Father heere,
And summon their best Councell to the Schoole:
Who are yet strangers here, but heare it said
They are call'd from farre, to see vs Crown'd at Scone.
Flourish. Exeunt Omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF
HAMLET, Prince of Denmarke.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Barnardo and Francisco two Centinels.

Bar. Who's there?

Fran. Nay answer me: Stand & vnfold

Bar. Long liue the King

Fran. Barnardo?

Bar. He.

Fran. You come most carefully vpon your houre

Bar. 'Tis now strooke twelue, get thee to bed Francisco

Fran. For this releefe much thankes: 'Tis bitter cold,
And I am sicke at heart

Bar. Haue you had quiet Guard?

Fran. Not a Mouse stirring

Bar. Well, good night. If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus, the Riuals of my Watch, bid them make haste.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Fran. I think I heare them. Stand: who's there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And Leige-men to the Dane.

Fran. Giue you good night.

Mar. O farwell honest Soldier, who hath relieu'd you?

Fra. Barnardo has my place: giue you good night. Exit Fran.

Mar. Holla Barnardo

Bar. Say, what is Horatio there?

Hor. A peece of him.

Bar. Welcome Horatio, welcome good Marcellus.

Mar. What, has this thing appear'd again to night.

Bar. I haue seene nothing.

Mar. Horatio saies, 'tis but our Fantasie,
And will not let beleefe take hold of him
Touching this dreaded sight twice seene of vs,
Therefore I haue intreated him along
With vs, to watch the minutes of this Night,
That if againe this Apparition come,
He may approue our eyes, and speake to it.

Hor. Tush, tush, 'twill not appeare.

Bar. Sit downe awhile,
And let vs once againe assaile your eares,
That are so fortified against our Story,
What we two Nights haue seene.

Hor. Well, sit we downe,
And let vs heare Barnardo speake of this.

Bar. Last night of all,
When yond same Starre that's Westward from the Pole
Had made his course t'illume that part of Heauen

Where now it burnes, Marcellus and my selfe,
The Bell then beating one.

Mar. Peace, break thee off, looke where it comes againe.

Enter the Ghost

Bar. In the same figure like the King that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a Scholler, speake to it Horatio.

Bar. Looks it not like the King? Marke it Horatio.

Hor. Most like: It harrowes me with fear & wonder.

Bar. It would be spoke too.

Mar. Question it Horatio.

Hor. What art thou that vsurp'st this time of night,
Together with that faire and warlike forme
In which the Maiesty of buried Denmarke
Did sometimes march? By Heauen I charge thee speake.

Mar. It is offended.

Bar. See it stalkes away.

Hor. Stay: speake, speake I charge thee speake.

Exit Ghost.

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Bar. How now Horatio? You tremble & look pale:
Is not this something more then Fantasie?
What think you on't?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this beleeue
Without the sensible and true auouch
Of mine owne eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the King?

Hor. As thou art to thy selfe.
Such was the very Armour he had on
When he the ambitious Norway combated:
So frown'd he once, when in an angry parle
He smot the sledded Polax on the Ice.
'Tis strange.

Mar. Thus twice before, and iust at this dead houre,
With Martiall stalke hath he gone by our Watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not:
But in the grosse and scope of my opinion,
This bodes some strange eruption to our State.

Mar. Good now sit downe, and tell me he that knowes
Why this same strict and most obseruant Watch,
So nightly toyles the subiect of the Land,
And why such dayly Cast of Brazon Cannon
And Forraigne Mart for implements of warre:
Why this impresse of shipwrights, whose sore taske
Does not diuide the Sunday from the weeke.
What might be toward, that this sweaty haste
Doth make the Night ioynt-Labourer with the day
Who is't that can informe me?

Hor. That can I,

At least the whisper goes so. Our last King,
Whose image even but now appear'd to vs,
Was (as you know) by Fortinbras of Norway,
(Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate Pride)
Dar'd to the Combate. In which our Valiant Hamlet,
(For so this side of our known world esteem'd him)
Did slay this Fortinbras; who by a Seal'd Compact
Well ratified by Law, and Heraldrie,
Did forfeit (with his life) all those his Lands
Which he stood seized of, to the Conqueror:
Against the which, a Moity competent
Was gaged by our King; which had return'd
To the Inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he been Vanquisher, as by the same Cou'nant
And carriage of the Article design'd,
His fell to Hamlet. Now Young Fortinbras,
Of vnseene prooued Mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there
Sham'd vp a List of Landlesse Resolutes,
For Foode and Diet, to some Enterprise
That hath a Stomacke in't: which is no other
(As it doth well appeare vnto our State)
But to recouer of vs by strong hand
And terms Compulsatiue those foresaid Lands
So by his Father lost: and this (I take it)
Is the maine Motiue of our Preparations,
The Source of this our Watch, and the chiefe head
Of this post-hast, and Romage in the Land.

Enter Ghost againe.

But soft, behold: Lo where it comes againe.
Ile crosse it, though it blast me. Stay illusion.
If thou hast any sound, or vse of Voyce,
Speake to me: If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me, speake to me:
If thou art priuy to thy Countries fate
(Which happily foreknowing may auoyd) O speake.
Or, if thou hast vp-hoorded in thy life
Extorted Treasure in the wombe of Earth,
(For which, they say, you Spirits oft walke in death,)
Speake of it. Stay, and speake. Stop it Marcellus.
Mar. Shall I strike at it with my Partizan?
Hor. Do, if it will not stand.
Barn. 'Tis heere.
Hor. 'Tis heere.
Mar. 'Tis gone. Exit Ghost.
We do it wrong, being so Maiesticall
To offer it the shew of Violence,
For it is as the Ayre, inuulnerable,
And our vaine blowes malicious Mockerie.
Barn. It was about to speake, when the Cocke crew.
Hor. And then it started, like a guilty thing
Vpon a fearefull Summons. I haue heard,
The Cocke that is the Trumpet to the Morn
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding Throate
Awake the God of Day: and at his warning,
Whether in Sea or Fire, in Earth or Ayre,
Th'extrauagant, and erring Spirit hies
To his Confine: and of the truth herein
This present Obiect made probation.
Mar. It faded on the crowing of the Cocke.
Some say, that euer 'gainst that Season comes
Wherein our Sauiour's Natiuity is celebrated,
The Bird of Dawning singeth all night long:
And then (they say) no Spirit can walke abroad,
The nights are wholsome, then no Planets strike,
No Fairy takes, nor Witch hath power to Charme:
So hallow'd, and so gracious is that time.
Hor. So haue I heard, and do in part beleeue it.
But looke, the Morne in Russet mantle clad
Walkes o're the dew of yon high Eastward Hill.
Breake we our Watch vp, and by my aduice
Let vs impart what we haue seene to night
Vnto young Hamlet. For vpon my life
This Spirit dumbe to vs will speake to him.
Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needfull in our Loues, fitting our Duty?
Mar. Let's do't, I pray, and I this morning know
Where we shall find him most conueniently. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the new King of Denmark, Queene the Queene, Hamlet, Counsellors, and Attendants with O- fficers.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our deere Brother's death
The memory be greene, and that it vs befitted
To beare our hearts in griefe, and our whole Kingdome
To be contracted in one brow of Woe,
Yet so farre hath Discretion fought with Nature,
That we with wisest sorrow thinke on him,
Together with remembrance of our selues.
Therefore our sometimes Sister, now our Queene,
The Imperiall Ioyntresse of this warlike State,
Haue we, as 'twere with a defeated Ioy,
With an Auspicious, and a dropping Eye,
With mirth in Funerall, and with Dirge in Marriage,
In equall Scale weighing Delight and Dole,
Taken to Wife: nor haue we herein Barr'd
Your better Wisedomes, which haue freely gone
With this affaire along. For all, our Thankes.
Now follows, that you know young Fortinbras,
Holding a weake supposall of our worth,
Or thinking by our late deere Brothers death
Our State to be disioynt, and out of Frame,
Colleagued with this dreame of his Aduantage,
He hath not fayled to pester vs with Message,
Importing the surrender of those Lands
Lost by his Father, with all Bonds of Law
To our most valiant Brother. So much for him.

Enter Voltemand and Cornelius.

Now for our selfe, and for this time of meeting:
Thus much the businesse is. We haue heere writ
To Norway, Vncle of young Fortinbras,
Who impotent and Bed-rid, scarcely hears
Of this his Nephewes purpose, to suppresse
His further gate herein. In that the Leuies,
The Lists, and full proportions are all made
Out of his Subiect: and we heere dispatch
You good Cornelius, and you Voltemand,
For bearer hereof, to old Norway,
Giuing to you no further personall power
To businesse with the King, more than the scope
Of these dilated Articles allow.
Farewell, and let your haste commend your duty.
Volt. In that, and all things, will we shew our duty.
King. We doubt it nothing: heartily farewell.

Exit Voltemand and Cornelius.

And now Laertes, what's the newes with you?

You to vpbraide me? wil you [illegible] Laertes?
For, cannot speake of Reason to the Dane,
And loose your voyce: what would you haue good Laertes,
That drawes not one with Power to draw with you?
The Head is not more Natiue to the Heart,
The hand more instrumentall to the Mouth,
Then is the Throne of Denmarke to thy Father.
What would you haue Laertes?
Laer. Dread my Lord,
Your leaue and fauour to returne to France,
From whence though willingly I came to Denmarke
To shew my duty in your Coronation,
Yet now I must confesse that duty done,
My thoughts and wishes bend againe towards France,
And bow them to your gracious leaue and pardon.
King. Haue you your Fathers leaue? What saies Polonius?
Pol. He hath my Lord:
I do beseech you giue him leaue to go.
King. Take thy faire houre Laertes, time be thine,
And your best graces spend it at thy will:
But now my Cosin Hamlet, and my Sonne?
Ham. A little more then kin, and lesse then kinde.
King. How is it that the Clouds still hang on you?
Ham. Not so my Lord, I am too much i'the Sun.
Queen. Good Hamlet cast thy nyghtly colour off,
And let thine eye looke like a friend on Denmarke.
Do not for euer with thy vayled lids
Seeke for thy Noble Father in the dust:
Thou know'st 'tis common, all that liues must dye,
Passing through Nature to Eternity.
Ham. I Madam, it is common.
Queen. If it be;
Why seemes it so particular with thee.
Ham. Seemes Madam? Nay it is, I know not Seemes.
'Tis not alone my Inky Cloake good Mother,
Nor Customary suits of solemne Blacke,
Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
No, nor the fruitfull River in the Eye,
Nor the dejected haviour of the Visage,
Together with all Formes, Moodes, shewes of Griefe,
That can denote me truely. These indeed seeme,
For they are actions that a man might play:
But I haue that within which passeth show,
These but the Trappings and the Suites of woe.
King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in
Your Nature Hamlet,
To giue these mourning duties to your Father:
But you must know, your Father lost a Father,
That Father lost, lost his, and the Survivor bound
In filiall Obligation, for some terme
To do obsequious Sorrow: But to perséuer
In obstinate Condolement, is a course
Of impious stubbornnesse: 'tis vnmanly greefe,
It shewes a will most incorrect to Heauen,
A Heart vnfortified, a Mind impatient,
An Vnderstanding simple, and vnschool'd.
For what we know must be, and is common
As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we in our peeuish Opposition
Take it to heart? Fie, 'tis a fault to Heauen,
A fault against the Dead, a fault to Nature,
To Reason most absurd, whose common theame
Is death of Fathers, and who still hath cryed,
From the first Corse till he that died to day,
This must be so. We pray you throw to earth
This vnpreuailing woe, and thinke of vs
As of a Father: For let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our Throne,
And with no lesse Nobility of Loue,
Then that which deerest Father beares his Sonne,
Do I impart toward you. For your intent
In going backe to Schoole in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire:
And we beseech you, bend you to remaine
Here in the cheere and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefe Courtier Cosin, and our Sonne.
Qu. Let not thy Mother lose her prayers Hamlet:
I prythee stay with vs, go not to Wittenberg.
Ham. I shall in all my best
Obey you Madam.
King. Why 'tis a louing, and a faire Reply,
Be as ourselfe in Denmarke. Madam come,
This gentle and vnforc'd accord of Hamlet
Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof,
No iocond health that Denmarke drinkes to day,
But the great Cannon to the Clouds shall tell,
And the Kings Rouce the Heauens shall bruite againe,
Re-speaking earthly Thunder. Come away. Exeunt.

Manet Hamlet.

Ham. Oh that this too too solid Flesh, would melt,
Thaw, and resolue it selfe into a Dew:
Or that the Euerlasting had not fixt
His Canon 'gainst Seale-slaughter. O God, O God
How weary stale flat, and vnprofitable
Seemes to me all the vses of this world?
Fie on't, ah fie, 'tis an vnweeded Garden
That growes to Seed: Things rank, and grosse in Nature
Possesse it merely. That it should come to this
But two months dead: Nay, not so much, not two,
So excellent a King, that was to this
Hiperion to a Satyre: so louing to my Mother,
That he might not beteeme the winds of heauen
Visit her face too roughly. Heauen and Earth
Must I remember? why she would hang on him,
As if increase of Appetite had growne
By what it fed on: and yet within a month?
Let me not thinke on't. Frailty, thy name is woman.
A little Month, or ere those shoes were old,
With which she followed my poore Fathers body
Like Niobe, all teares. Why she, euen she.
(O heauen! A beast that wants discourse of Reason
Would haue mourn'd longer) married with mine Vnkle,
My Fathers Brother: but no more like my Father,
Then I to Hercules. Within a Moneth?
Ere yet the salt of most vnrighteous Teares
Had left the flushing of her gauled eyes,
She married. O most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to Incestuous sheets.
It is not, nor it cannot come to good
But break my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

Enter Horatio, Barnard, and Marcellus.

Hor. Haile to your Lordship.
Ham. I am glad to see you well
Horatio, or I do forget my selfe.
Hor. The same my Lord,
And your poore Seruant euer.
Ham. Sir my good friend,
Ile change that name with you.
And what make you from Wittenberg Horatio?

Mar-

Marcellus.

Mar. My good Lord.

Ham. I am very glad to see you, good euen Sir.
But what in faith make you from Wittenberge?

Hor. A truant disposition good my Lord.

Ham. I would not hear your Enemy say so,
Nor shall you do mine eare that violence,
To make it truster of your owne report
Against your selfe. I know you are no Truant.
But what is your affaire in Elsenour?
We'l teach you to drinke deepe ere you depart.

Hor. My Lord, I came to see your Fathers Funerall.

Ham. I pray thee doe not mocke me (fellow Student)
I think it was to see my Mothers Wedding.

Hor. Indeed my Lord, it followed hard vpon.

Ham. Thrift thrift Horatio, the Funerall bakt-meats
Did coldly furnish forth the Marriage Tables,
Would I had met my dearest foe in heauen,
Ere I had euer seene that day Horatio.
My father, me thinkes I see my father.

Hor. O where my Lord?

Ham. In my mindes eye (Horatio)

Hor. I saw him once; he was a goodly King.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look vpon his like againe.

Hor. My Lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw? Who?

Hor. My Lord, the King your Father.

Ham. The King my Father?

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent eare, till I may deliuer
Vpon the witnesse of these Gentlemen,
This maruell to you.

Ham. For Heauens loue let me heare.

Hor. Two nights together, had these Gentlemen
Marcellus and Bernardo, on their Watch
In the dead waste and middle of the night
Been thus encountred. A figure like your Father,
Armed at all points exactly, Cap a Pe,
Appeares before them, and with solemne march
Goes slow and stately. By them thrice he walkt,
By their oppressed and feare-surprized eyes,
Within his Truncheons length; whilst they distilled
Almost to Jelly with the Act of feare,
Stand dumbe and speake not to him. This to me
In dreadfull secrecie impart they did,
And I with them the third Night kept the Watch,
Whereas they had deliuer'd both in time,
Form of the thing, each word made true and good,
The Apparition comes. I knew your Father
These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My Lord vpon the platforme where we watcht.

Ham. Did you not speake to it?

Hor. My Lord, I did,
But answere made it none. Yet once me thought
It lifted vp it head, and did addresse
It selfe to motion, like as it would speake.
But even then the Morning Cocke crew lowd,
And at the sound it shrunke in haste away,
And vanisht from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do liue my honoured Lord 'tis true;
And we did thinke it writ downe in our duty
To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed Sirs, but this troubles me.
Hold you the watch to Night?

Both. We do my Lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

Both. Arm'd, my Lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

Both. My Lord, from head to foote.

Ham. Then saw you not his face?

Hor. O yes, my Lord, he wore his Beauer vp.

Ham. What, look't he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay very pale.

Ham. And fixt his eyes vpon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had been there.

Hor. It would haue much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like, very like. Stayd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Both. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizly? no.

Hor. It was as I haue seene it in his life,
A Sable Siluered.

Ham. I will watch to Night, perchance 'twill walke againe.

Hor. I warrant it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble Fathers person,
Ile speake to it though Hell it selfe should gape
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you haue hitherto concealed this sight,
Let it be tenable in your silence still.
And whatsoeuer els shall hap to night,
Giue it an vnderstanding but no tongue;
I will requite your loues, so fare ye well.
Vpon the Platforme 'twixt eleuen and twelue,
Ile visit you.

All. Our duty to your Honour. Exeunt.

Ham. Your loue as mine to you, farewell.
My Father's Spirit in Armes! All is not well
I doubt some foule play, would the Night were come.
Till then sit still my soule, foule deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelme them to mens eies. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessaries are imbarkt, Farewell:
And Sister, as the Winds giue Benefit,
And Conuoy is assistant, doe not sleepe,
But let me heare from you.

Ophe. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his fauour,
Hold it a fashion, and a toy in Blood;
A Violet in the youth of Primy Nature;
Forward, not permanent; sweet, not lasting
The perfume and suppliance of a minute? No more.

Ophe. No more but so.

Laer. Think it no more:
For nature crescent does not grow alone,
In thewes and bulke, but as this Temple waxes,
The inward seruice of the Mind and Soule
Grows wide withall. Perhaps he loues you now,
And now no soyle nor cautell doth besmerch
The vertue of his feare, but you must feare

His greatest feare is what in vs thee lies,
For he is wise, is watch'd as the Lawes
Hee may not, as vnto his Person due,
Carue for himselfe, for on his choyce depends
The safety and health of this whole State,
And therefore must his choyce be circumscrib'd
Vnto the voyce and yeelding of that Body,
Whereof he is the Head. Then if he sayes he loues you,
It fits your Wisedome so farre to beleeue it,
As he in his peculiar Sect and force
May giue his saying deed: which is no further,
Then the maine voyce of Denmarke goes withall.
Then weigh what losse your Honour may sustaine,
If with too credent eare you list his Songs,
Or lose your Heart, or your chaste Treasure open
To his vnmaster'd importunity.
Feare it Ophelia, feare it my deare Sister,
And keepe within the rereward of your Affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chariest Maid is Prodigall enough,
If she vnmaske her beauty to the Moone.
Vertue it selfe scapes not calumnious strokes,
The Canker galles the infants of the Spring
Too oft before the buttons be disclos'd,
And in the Morne and liquid dew of Youth,
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Be wary then, best safety lies in feare,
Youth to it selfe rebels, though none else neere.
Ophe. I shall th'effect of this good Lesson keepe,
As watchman to my heart. But good my Brother
Doe not as some vngracious Pastors doe,
Shew me the steepe and thorny way to Heauen;
Whilst like a puft and reckelesse Libertine
Himselfe the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his owne reede.
Laer. O, feare me not.

Enter Polonius.

I stay too long: but here my Father comes.
A double blessing is a double grace,
Occasion smiles vpon a second leaue.
Polon. Yet here Laertes? Aboard, aboard for shame,
The wind sits in the shoulder of your sayle,
And you are staid for. There, my blessing with you,
And these few Precepts in thy memory
See thou Character. Giue thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any vnproportioned thought his act.
Be thou familiar, but by no meanes vulgar.
Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soule, with hoopes of Steele:
But do not dull thy palme with entertainment
Of each vnhatch'd, vnbreathed Companie. Beware
Of entrance to a quarrell, but being in,
Bear't that the opposed may beware of thee.
Giue euery man thine eare, but few thy voyce.
Take each mans censure, but reserue thy iudgement:
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not expressed in fancie, rich not gawdie:
For the Apparell oft proclaimes the man,
And they in France of the best ranke and station,
Are most select and generous chiefe in that.
Neither a borrower nor a lender be,
For loane oft loses both it selfe and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.
This aboue all, to thine owne selfe be true,
And it must follow, as the Night the Day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.
Farewell: my Blessing season this in thee.
Laer. Most humbly do I take my leaue my Lord.
Polon. The time inuites you, goe, your seruants tend
Laer. Farewell Ophelia, and remember well
What I haue said to you.
Ophe. 'Tis in my memory lockt,
And you your selfe shall keepe the key of it.
Laer. Farewell. Exit Laer.
Polon. What is't Ophelia he hath said to you?
Ophe. So please you, something touching the L. Hamlet.
Polon. Marry, well bethought:
'Tis told me he hath very oft of late
Giuen priuate time to you, and you your selfe
Haue of your audience been most free and bounteous.
If it be so, as so 'tis put on me;
And that in way of caution, I must tell you,
You do not vnderstand your selfe so clearely,
As it behoues my Daughter, and your Honour.
What is betweene you, giue me vp the truth?
Ophe. He hath my Lord of late, made many tenders
Of his affection to me.
Polon. Affection, puh. You speake like a greene Girle,
Vnsifted in such perilous Circumstance.
Do you beleeue his tenders as you call them?
Ophe. I do not know, my Lord, what I should think.
Polon. Marry I'le teach you, think your selfe a baby,
That you haue taken his tenders for true pay,
Which are not sterling. Tender your selfe more dearely;
Or not to crack the wind of the poore Phrase,
Roaming it thus, you tender me a foole.
Ophe. My Lord, he hath importun'd me with loue,
In honourable fashion.
Polon. I fashion you may call it, go too, go too.
Ophe. And hath giuen countenance to his speech,
My Lord, with all the vowes of Heauen.
Polon. I, Springes to catch Woodcocks. I doe know
When the blood burnes, how Prodigall the Soule
Giues the tongue vowes: these blazes, Daughter,
Giuing more light then heate; extinct in both,
Euen in their promise, as it is a making,
You must not take for fire. From this time Daughter,
Be somthing scanter of your Maiesty
Then lately: Set your entreatments at a higher rate,
Then a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet,
Beleeue so much in him, that he is young,
And with a larger tether may he walke,
Then may be giuen you. In few, Ophelia,
Do not beleeue his vowes, for they are Brokers,
Not of that eye, which their inuestments show:
But meere implorators of vnholy Suites,
Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,
The better to beguile. This is for all
I would not, in plaine termes from this time forth,
Haue you so slander any moment leysure,
As to giue words or talke with the Lord Hamlet:
Looke to't, I charge you, come your wayes.
Ophe. I shall obey my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, Marcellus.

Ham. The Ayre bites shrewdly: it is very cold?
Hor. It is a nipping and an eager ayre.
Ham. What hower now?
Hor. I think it lacks of twelue.
Mar. No, it is strooke. (season,
Hor. I heard it not: it then draws neere the
Wherein the Spirit held his wont to walke.
What,

What does this meane my Lord?

Ham. The King is a wake to night, and takes

Keepes wassell, and the swaggering vpspring reeles,

And as he drayneth euery draught of Rhenish,

The Trumpets sound

Hor. Is it a custome?

Ham. I marry is't,

And to my mind though I am natiue here

And to the manner borne, it is a custome

More honour'd in the breach, then the obseruance.

Hor. Looke my Lord, it comes.

Ham. Angels and Ministers of grace defend vs!

Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,

Bring with thee aires from Heauen, or blasts from Hell,

Be thy intents wicked, or charitable,

Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,

That I will speake to thee: I'le call thee Hamlet,

King, Father, Royall Dane: O answer me:

Let me not burst in ignorance: but tell

Why thy canonized bones hearsed in death,

Haue burst their cerements? why the Sepulcher

Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,

Hath op'd his ponderous and marble iawes,

To cast thee vp againe? What may this meane,

That thou dead corse againe in complete steele,

Reuisits thus the glimpses of the Moone,

Making night hideous? and we fooles of Nature

So horridly to shake our disposition,

With thoughts beyond the reaches of our soules?

Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?

Ghost beckons Hamlet.

Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,

As if it some impartment did desire

To you alone.

Mar. Looke with what courteous action

It waues you to a more removed ground:

But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no meanes.

Ham. It will not speake; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not my Lord.

Ham. Why what should be the feare?

I do not set my life at a pins fee:

And for my soule, what can it do to that?

Being a thing immortall as it selfe:

It waues me forth againe; Ile follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the Flood, my Lord,

Or to the dreadfull Summet of the Cliffe,

That beetles o're his base into the Sea,

And there assumes some other horrible forme,

Which might deprive your Soueraignty of Reason,

And draw you into madnesse? thinke of it:

The very place puts toyes of desperation,

Without more motiue, into euery braine

That lookes so many fadoms to the Sea,

And heares it roare beneath.

Ham. It waues me still:

Go on, Ile follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go my Lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be ruled, you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,

And makes each petty Arture in this body

As hardy as the Nemean Lions nerue.

Still am I cal'd? Vnhand me Gentlemen,

By Heauen Ile make a Ghost of him that lets me:

I say away: Go on, Ile follow thee.

Exeunt Ghost and Hamlet.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow, 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Haue after, to what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the State of Denmarke.

Hor. Heauen will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him.

Exeunt.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

From Worme-wood, from Worme-wood, and loue me truely.

Remember thee?

Yea, from the Table of my Memory,

Ile weare away all Records, all Formes, all Pressures past,

That youth and Obseruation copied there,

And thy Commandement all alone shall liue

Within the Booke and Volume of my Braine,

Vnmixt with baser matter: yes, by Heauen.

O most pernicious woman!

Ham. Oh Villaine, Villaine, smiling damned Villaine!

My Tables, my Tables, meet it is I set it downe,

That one may smile, and smile, and be a Villaine:

At least I am sure it may be so in Denmarke:

So Vncle there you are: Now to my word,

It is, Adieu, Adieu, remember me.

I haue sworne't.

Hor. My Lord, my Lord.

Mar. Lord Hamlet.

Hor. Heauen secure him.

Ham. So be it.

Hor. Illo, ho, ho, my Lord.

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy: come, and come more,

Art thou there Truepenny?

Come on, you hear this fellow in the Cellerage,

Consent to sweare.

Hor. Propose the Oath my Lord.

Ham. Neuer to speake of this that you haue seene,

Sweare by my Sword.

Ghost. Sweare.

Ham. Hic & vbique? then we'le shift our ground:

Come hither Gentlemen,

And lay your hands againe vpon my Sword:

Neuer to speake of this that you haue heard,

Sweare by my Sword.

Ghost. Sweare.

Ham. Well said Old Mole, can'st worke i'th' ground so fast?

A worthy Pioner: once more remoue good friends.

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger giue it welcome.

There are more things in Heauen and Earth, Horatio,

Then are dreamt of in our Philosophy.

But come,

Here as before, neuer so helpe you mercy,

How strange or odde some'er I beare my selfe,

As I perchance hereafter shall thinke meet

To put an Antick disposition on:

That you at such times seeing me, neuer shall,

With Armes encombred thus, or this head-shake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtfull Phrase,

As well we know, or we could and if we would,

Or if we list to speake, or there be and if there might,

Or such ambiguous giuing out, to note

That you know ought of me: this not to do,

So grace and mercy at your most need helpe you,

Sweare.

Ghost. Sweare.

Ham. Rest, rest perturbed Spirit: so Gentlemen,

With all my loue I do commend me to you:

And what so poore a man as Hamlet is

May do t'expresse his loue and friending to you,

God willing, shall not lacke: let vs goe in together,

But soft, me thinkes I eat the Mornings Ayre;
Brieflie sir me be [illegible] Steeping within mine Orchard,
My custome alwayes in the afternoone;
Vpon my secure hower thy Vncle stole
With iuice of cursed Hebenon in a Viol,
And in the Porches of mine eares did poure
The leaperous Distilment; whose effect
Holds such an enmity with blood of Man,
That swift as Quick-siluer it courses through
The natures [illegible] and Annealeth the Body,
And with a sodaine vigour doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into Milke.
The [illegible] blood [illegible],
And [illegible] Tetter barke about,
Most Lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my [illegible]
[illegible] was [illegible] Brothers hand,
Of life, of Crowne, of Queene at once dispatcht;
Cut off euen in the Blossomes of my Sinne,
Vnhouzzled, disappointed, vnaneald,
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head,
O horrible, O horrible, most horrible.
If thou hast nature in thee, beare it not Let not the Royall Bed of Denmarke be
A Couch for Luxury and damned Incest.
But howsoeuer thou pursuest this Act,
[illegible] against thy Mother ought,
Leaue her to Heauen, and to those Thornes that [illegible]
In her owne [illegible] to prick and sting her.
Fare-well at once, remember me.
[illegible] Ear
[illegible] Ghost [illegible]
And [illegible]
[illegible]
Yea, [illegible] Meanes,
[illegible] Reuels,
And [illegible] meere wantonnesse,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Yea, [illegible] Maxims,
Retaine you all [illegible] yet, by Heauen
O most pernitious woman!
O villaine, villaine, smiling damned Villaine!
My Tables, my Tables, meet it is I set it downe,
That one may smile, and smile, and be a Villaine;
At least I am sure it may be so in Denmarke:
So Vncle there you are, now to my word,
It is [illegible], [illegible] Remember.
Hor. [illegible] my Lord.
Enter Horatio and Marcellus.
Mar. [illegible] Hamlet
[illegible]
Mar. [illegible]
[illegible] Lord.
[illegible]
[illegible] Lord?
Hor. [illegible]
Ham. [illegible]
Hor. [illegible] my Lord tell it.
Ham. No you'l reueale it.

Hor. Not I, my Lord, by Heauen.
Mar. Nor I, my Lord. (thinke?
Ham. How say you then, would heart of man once
But you'l be secret?
Both. I by Heau'n, my Lord.
Ham. There's neere a villaine dwelling in all Denmarke
But he's an arrant knaue.
Hor. There needs no Ghost my Lord, come from the Graue, to tell vs this.
Ham. Why right, you are i'th'right;
And so, without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands, and part:
You, as your businesse and desires shall point you:
For euery man hath businesse and desire,
Such as it is: and for mine owne poore part,
Looke you, Ile go pray.
Hor. These are but wild and hurling words, my Lord.
Ham. I'm sorry they offend you heartily:
Yes faith heartily.
Hor. There's no offence my Lord.
Ham. Yes by Saint Patrick, but there is my Lord,
[illegible] to [illegible] Vpon [illegible]
[illegible] Gentlemen [illegible] you
[illegible] to know what is betweene vs,
Oster't as you may. And now good friends,
As you are friends, Schollers and Soldiers,
Giue me one poore request.
Hor. What's my Lord? we will.
Ham. Neuer make known what you haue seen to night.
Both. My Lord, we will not.
Ham. Nay but swear't.
Hor. In faith my Lord not I.
Mar. Nor I my Lord in faith.
Ham. [illegible]
[illegible] me my Lord already.
[illegible]
(Ghost. [illegible] vnder the Stage
[illegible]
[illegible]
Ham. [illegible] my Lord.
[illegible] Nay but swear by my sword
Neuer to speake of this that you haue heard.
Sweare by my sword
(Ghost [illegible]
Ham. Aha boy, say'st thou so, art thou there truepenny? Come on, you heare this fellow in the Cellerage,
Consent to sweare.
Hor. Propose the Oath my Lord.
Ham. Neuer to speake of this that you haue heard,
Sweare by my sword.
(Ghost [illegible]
Ham. Hic & vbique? then we'l shift our ground. Come hither Gentlemen,
And lay your hands againe vpon my sword,
Neuer to speake of this that you haue heard.
Sweare by my sword
(Ghost [illegible]
Ham. Well said old Mole, can'st worke i'th' ground so fast? A worthy Pioner, once more remoue good friends.
Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange.
Ham. And therefore as a stranger giue it welcome.
There are more things in Heauen and Earth, Horatio,
Then are dreamt of in your Philosophy. But come,

Act. Secund.

And leads the will to desperate Vndertakings,
As oft as any passion vnder Heauen,
That does afflict our Natures. I am sorrie,
What haue you giuen him any hard words of late?
Ophe. No my good Lord, but as you did command,
I did repell his Letters, and denyed
His accesse to me.
Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am sorrie that with better speed and iudgement
I had not quoted him. I feare he did but trifle,
And meant to wracke thee: but beshrew my iealousie:
It seemes it is as proper to our Age,
To cast beyond our selues in our Opinions,
As it is common for the younger sort
To lacke discretion. Come go we to the King,
This must be knowne, which being kept close might moue
More griefe to hide, then hate to vtter loue. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Queene, Rosencraus, and Guildenstern.
Cum alijs.

King. Welcome deere Rosencraus and Guildenstern.
Moreouer, that we much did long to see you,
The need we haue to vse you did prouoke
Our hastie sending. Something haue you heard
Of Hamlets transformation: so I call it,
Since nor the exterior, nor the inward man
Resembles that it was. What it should bee
More then his Father's death, that thus hath put him
So much from the vnderstanding of himselfe,
I cannot deeme of. I entreat you both,
That being of so young dayes brought vp with him,
And since so Neighbored to his youth and humour,
That you vouchsafe your rest heere in our Court
Some little time: so by your Companies
To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather
So much as from Occasions you may gleane,
That open'd lies within our remedie.
Qu. Good Gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you,
And sure I am, two men there are not liuing,
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To show vs so much Gentrie, and good will,
As to expend your time with vs a while,
For the supply and profit of our Hope,
Your Visitation shall receiue such thankes
As fits a Kings remembrance.
Ros. Both your Maiesties
Might by the Soueraigne power you haue of vs,
Put your dread pleasures, more into Command
Then to Entreatie.
Guil. But we both obey,
And heere giue vp our selues, in the full bent,
To lay our Seruices freely at your feete,
To be commanded.
King. Thankes Rosencraus and gentle Guildenstern.
Qu. Thankes Guildenstern and gentle Rosencraus.
And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too much changed Sonne.
Go some of you,
And bring these Gentlemen where Hamlet is.
Guil. Heauens make our presence and our practises
Pleasant and helpfull to him. Exit.

Queene. Amen.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Th'Ambassadors from Norway, my good Lord,
Are ioyfully returned.
King. Thou still hast bin the Father of good Newes
Pol. Haue I my Lord? Assure you, my good Liege,
I hold my duine, as I hold my Soule,
Both to my God, one to my gracious King
And I do think, or else this braine of mine
Hunts not the traile of Policie, so sure
As I haue vs'd to do: that I haue found
The very cause of Hamlets Lunacie
King. Oh speake of that, that I do long to heare.
Pol. Giue first admittance to th'Ambassadors,
My Newes shall be the Newes to that great Feast.
King. Thy selfe do grace to them, and bring them in.
He tells me my sweet Queene, that he hath found
The head and source of all your Sonnes distempet.
Qu. I doubt it is no other but the maine,
His Fathers death, and our o'erhastie Marriage.

Enter Polonius, Voltimand, and Cornelius.

King. Well, we shall sift him. Welcome good Friends
Say Voltimand, what from our Brother Norway?
Volt. Most faire returne of Greetings, and Desires.
Vpon our first, he sent out to suppresse
His Nephewes Leuies, which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polacke.
But better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your Highnesse, whereat greeued,
That so his Sicknesse, Age, and Impotence
Was falsely borne in hand, sends out Arrests
On Fortinbras, which he (in breefe) obeyes,
Receiues rebuke from Norway, and in fine,
Makes Vow before his Vncle neuer more
To giue the assay of Armes against your Maiestie.
Whereon old Norway, ouercome with ioy,
Giues him three thousand Crowns in Annuall Fee,
And his Commission to employ those Soldiers
So leuied as before, against the Polacke:
With an entreaty heerein further shewne
That it might please you to giue quiet passe
Through your Dominions, for his Enterprize,
On such regards of safety and allowance,
As heerein are set downe.
King. It likes vs well
And at our more consider'd time wee'l read,
Answer and think vpon this Businesse.
Meane time we thanke you, for your well took Labour.
Go to your rest, at night wee'l feast together.
Most welcome home. Exit Ambass.
Pol. This businesse is very well ended.
My Liege and Madam, to expostulate
What Maiestie should be, what Duetie is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste Night, Day and Time.
Therefore, since Breuitie is the Soule of Wit,
And tedious the foole, the mantles and outward flourishes,
I will be breefe. Your Noble Sonne is mad:
Mad call I it, for to define true Madnesse,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad.
But let that go.
Qu. More matter, with lesse Art.
Pol. Madam I sweare I vse no Art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true: 'Tis true 'tis pitie,
And pitie it is true: A foolish figure,
But farewell it: for I will vse no Art.

Mad

Mauleres gra[illegible] and now remaines
That we finde out the cause of this effect,
Or rather say, the cause of this defect,
For this effect defective, comes by cause,
Thus it remaines, and the remainder thus, perpend,
I haue a daughter, haue while she is mine,
Who in the Dutie and Obedience of
Hath giuen me this: now gather, and surueie

The Letter.

To the Celestiall and my Soules Idoll, the most beautified Ophelia

That's an ill Phrase, a vilde Phrase, beautified is a vilde Phrase: but you shall heare thus in her excellent white bosome, these

Qu. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good Madam stay awhile, I will be faithfull.

Doubt thou the Starres are fire,
Doubt that the Sunne doth moue:
Doubt Truth to be a Liare,
But neuer doubt I loue.

I haue not art to reckon my groanes: but that I loue thee best, O most best, beleeue it. Adieu.

Thine euermore most deere Lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet.

This in Obedience hath my daughter shewed me.
And more aboue, hath his solicitings
As they fell out by Time, by Meanes, and Place,
All giuen to mine eare.

King. But how hath she receiued his Loue?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithfull and Honourable.

Pol. I would fain proue so. But what might you think?
When I had seene this hot loue on the wing,
As I perceiued it, I must tell you that
Before my Daughter told me what might you
Or my deere Maiestie your Queene here, think,
Had I plaid the Deske or Table-booke
Or giuen my heart a working, mute and dumbe
Or looked vpon this Loue with idle sight
What might you think? no I went round to worke,
And (my young Mistris) thus I did bespeake
Lord Hamlet is a Prince out of thy Starre,
This must not be: and then I Precepts gaue her,
That she should locke her selfe from his resort,
Admit no Messengers, receiue no Tokens:
Which done, she tooke the Fruites of my Aduice,
And he repulsed (a short Tale to make)
Fell into a Sadnesse, then into a Fast
Thence to a Watch, thence into a Weakenesse,
Thence to a Lightnesse, and by this declension
Into the Madnesse wherein now he raues,
And all we waile for.

King. Do you think 'tis this?

Qu. It may be very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time (I'd fain know that)
That I haue positiuely said, 'tis so,
When it prou'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise,
If Circumstances lead me, I will finde
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeede
Within the Center.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know sometimes
He walkes foure houres together, here
In the Lobby.

Qu. So he has indeed.

Pol. At such a time Ile loose my Daughter to him,
Be you and I behinde an Arras then,
Marke the encounter: If he loue her not
And be not from his reason falne thereon
Let me be no Assistant for a State,
And keepe a Farme and Carters.

King. We shall try it.

Enter Hamlet reading on a Booke.

Qu. But looke where sadly the poore wretch
Comes reading.

Pol. Away I do beseech you both away,
Ile board him presently. Exit King & Queen.
O giue me leaue. How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, God-a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me my Lord?

Ham. Excellent excellent well: y'are a Fishmonger.

Pol. Not I my Lord.

Ham. Then would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my Lord?

Ham. I: for to be honest as this world goes, is to be one man pick'd out of two thousand.

Pol. That's very true my Lord.

Ham. For if the Sunne breed Magots in a dead dogge, being a good kissing Carrion——
Haue you a daughter?

Pol. I haue my Lord.

Ham. Let her not walke i'th' Sunne. Conception is a blessing, but not as your daughter may conceiue, friend looke to't.

Pol. How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter: yet he knew me not at first, he said I was a Fishmonger: he is farre gone, farre gone: and truely in my youth, I suffered much extremity for Loue: very neere this. I'le speake to him againe. What do you read my Lord?

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my Lord?

Ham. Betweene who?

Pol. I meane the matter you meane my Lord.

Ham. Slanders, Sir: for the Satyricall Rogue sayes heere, that old men haue grey Beards, that their faces are wrinkled, their eyes purging thicke Amber, or Plum-Tree Gumme, and that they haue a plentifull lacke of Wit, together with weake Hammes: All which Sir, though I most powerfully, and potently beleeue, yet I hold it not honesty to haue it thus set downe, for your selfe Sir, shall be old as I am, if like a Crab you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madnesse,
Yet there is Method in't: will you walke
Out of the Aire my Lord?

Ham. Into my Graue?

Pol. Indeed that is out o'th' Aire.
How pregnant (sometimes) his Replies are?
A happinesse,
That often Madnesse hits on,
Which Reason and Sanitie could not
So prosperously be deliuer'd of.
I will leaue him,
And suddenly contriue the meanes of meeting
Betweene him and my daughter.
My Honourable Lord, I will most humbly
Take my leaue of you

Ham. You cannot take from me any thing, that I will more willingly part withall, except my life, except my life.

Pol. Fare you well my Lord.

Ham. These tedious old fooles.

Pol. You goe to seeke my Lord Hamlet, there he is.

Enter Rosencrane and Guildenstarne.

Ros. God blesse you Sir.

Guild. Mine honoured Lord.

Ros. My most deare Lord.

Ham. My excellent good friends. How do'st thou Guildenstarne? Oh Rosencrane, good lads. How doe ye both?

Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

Guild. Happy in that we are not ouer happy on Fortunes cap: we are not the very button.

Ham. Nor the soales of her shooe?

Ros. Neither my Lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waste, or in the middle of her favour?

Guild. Faith her priuates we.

Ham. In the secret parts of Fortune? O most true: she is a strumpet. What's the newes?

Ros. None my Lord, but that the World's growne honest.

Ham. Then is Doomesday neere: But your newes is not true. Let me question more in particular: what haue you my good friends, deserued at the hands of Fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

Guild. Prison my Lord?

Ham. Denmarke's a prison.

Ros. Then is the World one.

Ham. A goodly one, wherein there are many Confines, Wards, and Dungeons: Denmarke being one o'th worst.

Ros. We think not so my Lord.

Ham. Why then 'tis none to you, for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why then your Ambition makes it one: 'tis too narrow for your mind.

Ham. O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count my selfe a King of infinite space, were it not that I haue bad dreames.

Guild. Which dreames indeed are Ambition: for the very substance of the Ambitious, is meerely the shadow of a Dreame.

Ham. A dreame it selfe is but a shadow.

Ros. Truely, and I hold Ambition of so aery and light a quality, that it is but a shadowes shadow.

Ham. Then are our Beggers bodies, and our Monarchs and outstretcht Heroes the Beggers shadowes. Shall we to the Court: for by my fay I cannot reason.

Both. We'll waite vpon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my seruants: for to speake to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended. But in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsonower?

Ros. To visit you my Lord, no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am euen poore in thankes; but I thanke you: and sure deare friends my thankes are too deare a halfepenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your owne inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, deale iustly with me: come, come: nay speake.

Guild. What should we say my Lord?

Ham. Why any thing: But to the purpose, you were sent for, and there is a kind of confession in your lookes which your modesties haue not craft enough to colour. I know the good King and Queene haue sent for you.

Ros. To what end my Lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the obligation of our euer-preserued loue, and by what more deare a better proposer could charge you withall; be euen and direct with me, whether you were sent for or no.

Ros. What say you?

Ham. Nay then I haue an eye of you: if you loue me hold not off.

Guild. My Lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why: so shall my anticipation preuent your discouery of your secrecie to the King and Queene moult no feather. I haue of late (but wherefore I know not) lost all my mirth, forgone all custome of exercises: and indeed it goes so heauily with my disposition, that this goodly frame the Earth seemes to me a sterile promontory, this most excellent Canopy the Ayre, look you this braue o'erhanging firmament, this Maiestical Roofe fretted with golden fire, why it appeares no other thing to me, than a foule and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of worke is a man! how Noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in forme and mouing how expresse and admirable! in action how like an Angell! in apprehension how like a God! the beauty of the world! the Paragon of Animals; and yet to me, what is this Quintessence of dust? Man delights not me; no, nor woman neither, though by your smiling you seeme to say so.

Ros. My Lord, there was no such stuffe in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did ye laugh then, when I said, Man delights not me?

Ros. To think, my Lord, if you delight not in Man, what Lenton entertainment the Players shall receiue from you: we coted them on the way, and hither are they comming, to offer you Seruice.

Ham. He that plaies the King shall be welcome: his Maiesty shall haue tribute of me: the aduenturous Knight shall vse his foyle and target: the Louer shall not sigh gratis: the humorous man shall end his part in peace: the Clowne shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickle a'th sere: and the Lady shall say her mind freely, or the blanke Verse shall halt for't. What Players are they?

Ros. Euen those you were wont to take delight in, the Tragedians of the City.

Ham. How chances it they trauell? their residence both in reputation and profit was better both ways.

Ros. I thinke their Inhibition comes by the meanes of the late Innouation?

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the City? Are they so followed?

Ros. No indeed they are not.

Ham. How comes it? do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeauour keepes in the wonted pace. But there is Sir an Aerie of Children, little Yases, that crye out on the top of question; and are most tyrannically clapt for't: these are now the fatadowes, and to be-ratled the common Stages (so they call them) that many wearing Rapiers, are afraide of Goose-quils, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What are they Children? Who maintains 'em? How are they escoted? Will they pursue the Quality no longer then they can sing? Will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselues to common Players (as it is most like, if our meanes are no better) their Writers do them wrong, to make them exclaime against their owne Succession?

Rosin. Faith there has been much to-do on both sides, and the Nation holds it no sinne, to tarre them to controuersie. There was for a while, no money bid for argument, vnlesse the Poet and the Player went to Cuffes in the Question.

Ham. Is't possible?

Guil. O there has been much throwing about of Braines.

Ham. Do the Boyes carry it away?

Rosin. I that they do (my Lord) Hercules and his load too.

Ham. It is not strange: For mine Vncle is King of Denmarke, and those that would make mowes at him while my Father liued, giue twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred Ducates a peece for his Picture in little. There is something in this more then Naturall, if Philosophie could finde it out.

Flo. (within) For the Players.

Guil. There are the Players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsonour: your hands, come: Th'appurtenance of Welcome is Fashion and Ceremony: Let me comply with you in this Garbe, lest my Extent to the Players (which I tell you must show fairely outward) should more appropriate to my Welcome then the Welcome to the Players. Welcome: but my Vncle-father, and Aunt-mother are deceiued.

Guil. In what my deere Lord?

Ham. I am but mad North North-West: when the Wind is Southerly, I know a Hawke from a Handsaw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be-met Gentlemen.

Ham. Hark you Guildenstern, and you too: at each eare a hearer: that great Baby you see there, is not yet out of his Swadling-clouts.

Rosin. Happily he is the second time come to them: for they say an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will Prophesie he comes to tell me of the Players: Mark it. You say right Sir: for a Monday morning 'twas indeed.

Pol. My Lord, I haue Newes to tell you.

Ham. My Lord, I haue Newes to tell you.

When Roscius was an Actor in Rome—

Pol. The Actors are come hither my Lord.

Ham. Buzze, buzze.

Pol. Vpon mine Honour.

Ham. Then came each Actor on his Asse——

Pol. The best Actors in the world, either for Tragedie, Comedie, Hiſtorie, Paſtorall, Paſtorall-Comicall, Hiſtorical-Paſtorall, Scene indiuidible, or Poem vnlimited: Seneca cannot be too heauy, nor Plautus too light for the law of Writ, and the Liberty. These are the only men.

Ham. O Iephthah Iudge of Iſrael, what a Treaſure had'ſt thou?

Pol. What a Treaſure had he my Lord?

Ham. Why one faire Daughter and no more,

The which he lou'd paſſing well.

Pol. Still on my Daughter.

Ham. Am not I i'the right old Iephthah?

Pol. If you call me Iephthah my Lord, I haue a daughter that I loue paſſing well.

Ham. Nay that followes not.

Pol. What follows then, my Lord?

Ham. Why, As by lot, God wot: and then you know, It came to paſſe, as most like it was. The firſt rowe of the Pious Chanſon will ſhow you more. For looke where my Abridgements come.

Enter foure or five Players.

You are welcome Maſters, welcome all. I am glad to ſee thee well. Welcome good friends. O my old friend? Thy face is valanced ſince I ſaw thee laſt. Comeſt thou to beard me in Denmarke? What, my young Lady and Miſtreſſe? By'lady your Ladyſhip is nearer Heauen than when I ſaw you laſt, by the altitude of a Chopine. Pray God your voice like a peece of vncurrant Gold be not cracked within the ring. Maſters, you are all welcome. We'le e'ne to't like French Falconers, flie at any thing we ſee. We'le haue a ſpeech ſtraight. Come giue vs a taſte of your quality: come, a paſſionate ſpeech.

1 Play. What ſpeech my Lord?

Ham. I ever heard you ſay, a ſpeech once but ſung vnto me: I was one, for the Play I remember pleaſed not the Million, 'twas caviare to the Generall: but it was (as I receiued it, and others whoſe iudgements in ſuch matters, cried in the top of mine) an excellent Play, well digeſted in the Scenes, ſet downe with as much modeſtie as cunning. I remember one ſaid, there were no Sallets in the lines, to make the matter ſauoury, nor no matter in the phraſe, that might indict the Author of affectation, but called it an honeſt method. One cheefe Speech in it, I cheeſly loued, 'twas Aeneas Tale to Dido, and thereabout of it eſpecially, where he ſpeaks of Priams ſlaughter. If it liue in your memory, begin at this line: let me ſee, let me ſee. The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian Beaſt——

Pol. 'Tis well, I'll haue thee ſpeake the reſt ſhortly.

Ham. Anon he finds him
Striking too ſhort at Greekes. His antique Sword,
Rebellious to his Arme, lyes where it falles
Repugnant to command. Vnequall match,
Pyrrhus at Priam driues, in Rage ſtrikes wide:
But with the whiffe and wind of his fell Sword,
Th'vnnerued Father falles. Then ſenſe of Ilium,
Seemd to feele this blow, with flaming top
Stoopes to his Baſe, and with a hideous craſh
Takes Priams Counſell. Pyrrhus bleared eyne
Vpon the Anuile of his Sword,
Which was deſcending on the Milke-white head
O Reuerend Priam, ſeeme but for Ayre to ſtricke

So

So as a painted Tyrant Pyrrhus stood,
And like a Newtrall to his will and matter did nothing.
But as we often see against some storme,
A silence in the Heavens, the Rackes stand still,
The bold Windes speechlesse, and the Orbe below
As hush as death: Anon the dreadfull Thunder
Doth rend the Region: So after Pyrrhus pause,
A rowsed Vengeance sets him new a-worke,
And never did the Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his Armours tempred for proofe keene,
With lesse remorse then now the sword
Now falne on Priam.
Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! All you Gods,
In generall Synode take away her power,
Breake all the Spokes and Fellies from her wheele,
And boule the round Nave downe the hill of Heaven,
As low as to the Fiends.
Pol. This is too long.
Ham. It shall to the Barbers with your beard. Prythee say on. He's for a Jigge, or a tale of Bawdry, or he sleepes. Say on, come to Hecuba.
1. Player. But who, O who had seene the mobled Queene
Ham. The mobled Queene?
Pol. That's good. Mobled Queene is good.
1. Play. Run barefoot up and downe,
Threatning the flame
With bisson rheume. A clout about that head,
Where late the Diadem stood, and for a Robe
About her lanke and all o're-teemed loynes,
A blanket in the Alarum feare caught up.
Who this had seene, with tongue in Venome steep'd,
'Gainst Fortunes State would Treason have pronounc'd?
But if the Gods themselves did see her then
When she saw Pyrrhus make mal-worke
In generall Synode bake bloud,
(Vn. [illegible])
Who this had seene, with eyne impearled in teares,
And broken words.
Pol. I'leave you sir: even my selfe am dead a sixt time at the verie point of Pronouncing.
Ham. 'Tis well, I'le see thee speake out the rest, soone. Good my Lord, will you see the Players well bestowd. Do you hear, let them be well vs'd, for they are the Abstract and breefe Chronicles of the time. After your death you were better have a bad Epitaph, then their ill report while you liv'd.
Pol. My Lord I will vse them according to their desart.
Ham. Gods bodykins man, better. Vse every man after his desart, and who shall scape whipping. Vse them after your owne honour and dignity. The lesse they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.
Exit Polon.
Come sirs.
Hor. Right glad I am to see thee Lord. See you play the first or second Prologue.
1. Play. I my Lord.
Ham. Are you good enough? Tomorrow night. You could for a need study a speech of some dozen or sixteene lines, which I would set down, and insert in't? Could ye not?
1. Play. I my Lord.
Ham. Very well. Follow that Lord and looke you mock him not. My good friends, I'le leave you till night. You are welcome to Elsonower?

Exit Rosin. Good my Lord Exeunt.

Manet Hamlet

Ham. Ile God buy ye. Now I am alone.
O what a Rogue and Peasant slave am I?
Is it not monstrous that this Player heere,
But in a Fixion, in a dreame of Passion,
Could force his soule so to his whole conceit,
That from her working all his visage warm'd;
Teares in his eyes, distraction in's Aspect,
A broken voyce, and his whole Function suiting
With Formes, to his Conceit? And all for nothing?
For Hecuba!
What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba
That he should weepe for her? What would he doe,
Had he the Motive and the Cue for passion
That I have? He would drowne the Stage with teares,
And cleave the generall eare with horrid speech:
Make mad the guilty, and appale the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed,
The very faculty of Eyes and Eares. Yet I,
A dull and muddy-mettled Rascall, peake
Like John a dreames, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing. No, not for a King,
Upon whose property and most deere life,
A damn'd defeate was made. Am I a Coward?
Who calles me Villaine? breakes my pate a-crosse?
Pluckes off my Beard, and blowes it in my face?
Tweakes me by the Nose? gives me the Lye i'th Throate,
As deepe as to the Lungs? Who does me this?
Ha? Why I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am Pigeon-Liver'd, and lack Gall
To make oppression bitter, or ere this
I should have fatted all the Region Kites
With this Slaves offall, bloudy a bawdy villaine!
Remorselesse, Treacherous, Letcherous, kindlesse villaine!
Why what an Asse am I? This is most braue,
That I, the Son of a dear Father murthered,
Prompted to my Revenge by Heaven, and Hell,
Must (like a Whore) unpacke my heart with words,
And fall a Cursing like a very Drab,
A Scullion! Fye upon't! Foh. About my Braine.
I have heard that guilty Creatures sitting at a Play,
Have by the very cunning of the Scene
Been strooke so to the Soule, that presently
They have proclaim'd their Malefactions.
For Murther though it have no tongue, will speake
With most miraculous Organe. I'le have these Players,
Play something like the murder of my Father,
Before mine Vncle. Ile observe his lookes,
Ile tent him to the quicke: If he but blench
I know my course. The Spirit that I have seene
May be the Deuill, and the Deuill hath power
T'assume a pleasing shape, yea and perhaps
Out of my Weaknesse and my Melancholly,
As he is very potent with such Spirits
Abuses me to damne me. I'le have grounds
More Relatiue than this. The Play's the thing,
Wherein Ile catch the Conscience of the King. Exit

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosincrance, Guildenstern, and Lords.

King. And can you by no drift of circumstance
Get from him why he puts on this Confusion,
Grating so harshly all his dayes of quiet

With

With turbulent and dangerous Lunacy.
Rosin. He does confesse he feeles himselfe distracted,
But from what cause he will by no meanes speake.
Guil. Nor do we finde him forward to be sounded,
But with a crafty Madnesse keepes aloofe:
When we would bring him on to some Confession
Of his true state.
Qu. Did he receiue you well?
Rosin. Most like a Gentleman.
Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.
Rosin. Niggard of question, but of our demands
Most free in his reply.
Qu. Did you assay him to any pastime?
Rosin. Madam, it so fell out, that certaine Players
We o're-wrought on the way: of these we told him,
And there did seeme in him a kinde of joy
To heare of it: They are about the Court,
And (as I thinke) they haue already order
This night to play before him.
Pol. 'Tis most true:
And he beseech'd me to intreate your Maiesties
To heare, and see the matter.
King. With all my heart, and it doth much content me
To see him so inclin'd. Good Gentlemen,
Giue him a further edge, and driue his purpose on
To these delights.
Rosin. We shall my Lord. Exeunt.
King. Sweet Gertrude leaue vs too,
For we haue closely sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia: Her father and my selfe (lawfull espials)
Will so bestow our selues, that seeing vnseene
We may of their encounter frankly iudge,
And gather by him, as he is behaued,
If't be th'affliction of his loue, or no,
That thus he suffers for.
Qu. I shall obey you.
And for your part Ophelia, I do wish
That your good Beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlets wildenesse: so shall I hope your Vertues
Will bring him to his wonted way againe,
To both your Honors.
Ophe. Madam, I wish it may.
Pol. Ophelia, walke you here. Gracious so please ye
We will bestow our selues. Read on this booke,
That shew of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliuesse. We are oft too blame in this,
'Tis too much prou'd, that with Deuotions visage,
And pious Action, we do sugar o're
The deuill himselfe.
King. O 'tis true:
How smart a lash that speech doth giue my Conscience?
The Harlots Cheeke beautied with plaist'ring Art
Is not more vgly to the thing that helpes it,
Than is my deede to my most painted word.
O heauie burthen.
Pol. I heare him comming, let's withdraw my Lord.
Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the Question:
Whether 'tis Nobler in the mind to suffer
The Slings and Arrowes of outragious Fortune,
Or to take Armes against a Sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them: to dye to sleepe
No more, and by a sleepe, to say we end
The Heart-ake, and the thousand Naturall shockes
That Flesh is heyre too? 'Tis a consummation
Deuoutly to be wish'd. To dye to sleepe,
To sleepe, perchance to Dreame; ay there's the rub,
For in that sleepe of death, what dreames may come,
When we haue shuffel'd off this mortall coile,
Must giue vs pawse. There's the respect
That makes Calamity of so long life:
For who would beare the Whips and Scornes of time,
The Oppressors wrong, the poore mans Contumely,
The pangs of dispriz'd Loue, the Lawes delay,
The insolence of Office, and the Spurnes
That patient merit of the vnworthy takes,
When he himselfe might his Quietus make
With a bare Bodkin? Who would these Fardles beare
To grunt and sweat vnder a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The vndiscouered Country, from whose Borne
No Traueller returnes, Puzels the will,
And makes vs rather beare those ills we haue,
Than flye to others that we know not of?
Thus Conscience does make Cowards of vs all,
And thus the hew of Resolution
Is sicklied o're, with the pale cast of Thought,
And enterprizes of great pith and moment,
With this regard their Currants turne away,
And lose the name of Action. Soft you now,
The faire Ophelia? Nimph in thy Orizons
Be all my sinnes remembred.
Ophe. Good my Lord,
How does your Honor for this many a day?
Ham. I humbly thanke you: well, well, well.
Ophe. My Lord, I haue Remembrances of yours,
That I haue longed long to re-deliuer,
I pray you now receiue them.
Ham. No, no, I neuer gaue you ought.
Ophe. My honor'd Lord, I know right well you did,
And with them words of so sweet breath compos'd,
As made the things more rich, then perfume left:
Take these againe, for to the Noble minde
Rich gifts wax poore, when giuers proue vnkinde.
There my Lord.
Ham. Ha, ha! Are you honest?
Ophe. My Lord.
Ham. Are you faire?
Ophe. What means your Lordship?
Ham. That if you be honest and faire, your Honesty should admit no discourse to your Beautie.
Ophe. Could Beautie my Lord, haue better Comerce than your Honestie?
Ham. I truely: for the power of Beautie will sooner transforme Honestie from what it is to a Bawd, than the force of Honestie can translate Beautie into his likenesse.
This was sometime a Paradox, but now the time giues it
proofe. I did loue you once.
Ophe. Indeed my Lord, you made me beleeue so.
Ham. You should haue beleeued me. For vertue cannot so inoculate our old stocke, but we shall relish
of it. I loued you not.
Ophe. I was the more deceiued.
Ham. Get thee to a Nunnery. Why would'st thou be a breeder of Sinners? I am my selfe indifferent honest, but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better
my Mother had not borne me. I am very proud, reuengefull, Ambitious, with more offences at my beck, than I haue thoughts to put them in imagination, to giue them shape, or time to act them in. What should such fel-

To feed, & cloath thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?
No, let the Candied tongue, like abiurd pompe,
And crooke the pregnant Hindges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow faning? Dost thou heare,
Since my deere Soule was Mistris of my choyce,
And could of men distinguish her election
Hath seal'd thee for herselfe. For thou hast bene
As one in suffering all, that suffers nothing.
A man that Fortunes buffets and Rewards
Hath ta'en with equall thankes. And blest are those,
Whose blood and judgement are so well commingled,
That they are not a Pipe for Fortunes fingers,
To sound what stop she please. Give me that man,
That is not Passions Slave, and I will weare him
In my hearts Core, ay in my heart of heart,
As I do thee. Something too much of this.
There is a Play to night before the King,
One Scene of it comprises the neere Image
Of my Fathers death. What I told thee of,
When thou seest that Act a foot, even with
Even with the mine Vnkle. If his occulted guilt
Do not it selfe vnkennell in one speech,
It is a damned Ghost that we have seene.
And my Imaginations are as foule
As Vulcans Stythe. Give him needfull note,
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face,
And after we will both our iudgements ioyne,
To censure of his seeming.

Hora. Well my Lord.
If he steale ought the whil'st this Play is Playing,
And scape detecting, I will pay the Theft.

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosincrance, Guildenstern, and other Lords attended with Guard, bearing Torches. Danish March. Sound a Flourish.

Ham. They are coming to the Play, I must be idle:
Get you a place.

King. How fares our Cosin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent I faith, of the Camelions dish: I eate the Ayre promise-crammed, you cannot feed Capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer Hamlet, these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine now. My Lord, you played once i'th' Vniversity, you say?

Polon. That I did my Lord, and was accounted a good Actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Iulius Cæsar, I was kill'd i'th' Capitol: Brutus kill'd me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so Capitall a Calfe there. Be the Players ready?

Rosin. I my Lord, they stay vpon your patience.

Qu. Come hither my good Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No good Mother, here's Metall more attractive.

Pol. Oh ho do you marke that?

Ham. Lady, shall I lye in your Lap?

Ophe. No my Lord.

Ham. I meane, my Head vpon your Lap?

Ophe. I my Lord.

Ham. Do you think I meant Country matters?

Ophe. I think nothing, my Lord.

Ham. That's a faire thought to ly between Maids legs.

Ophe. What is my Lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Ophe. You are merrie, my Lord?

Ham. Who I?

Ophe. I my Lord.

Ham. O God your only Jigge-maker. What should a man do, but be merrie. For looke you how cheerefully my Mother looks, and my Father died within's two Houres.

Ophe. Nay, 'tis twice two moneths my Lord.

Ham. So long? Nay then let the Diuel weare blacke, for Ile haue a suite of Sables. O Heauens! die two moneths ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope a great mans Memorie may outlue his life halfe a yeare: But by'r Lady he must build Churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the Hobby-horse, whose Epitaph is, For O, For O, the Hobby-horse is forgot.

Hoboyes play. The dumbe shew enters.
Enter a King and a Queene very lovingly; the Queene embracing him. She kneeles, and makes show of Protestation vnto him. He takes her vp, and declines his head vpon her neck. Layes him downe vpon a Bancke of Flowers. She seeing him asleepe, leaves him. Anon comes in a Fellow, takes off his Crowne, kisses it, and powres Poyson in the Kings eares, and Exits. The Queene returnes, finds the King dead, and makes passionate Action. The Poysoner with some two or three Mutes comes in againe, seemes to condole with her. The dead body is carried away. The Poysoner Wooes the Queene with Gifts, she seemes harsh awhile, but in the end accepts his loue. Exeunt.

Ophe. What means this, my Lord?

Ham. Marry this is Miching Mallecho, that means Mischeefe.

Ophe. Belike this show imports the Argument of the Play?

Ham. We shall know by these Fellowe: the Players cannot keepe counsell, they'll tell all.

Ophe. Will they tell vs what this show meant?

Ham. I or any show that you'll show him: Be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Ophe. You are naught, you are naught: Ile mark the Play.

Enter Prologue.
For vs, and for our Tragedie,
Heere stooping to your Clemencie
We beg your hearing patiently.

Ham. Is this a Prologue, or the Posie of a Ring?

Ophe. 'Tis briefe my Lord.

Ham. As Woman's loue.

Enter King and the Queene.

King. Full thirtie times hath Phœbus Cart gone round,
Neptunes salt Wash and Tellus Orbed ground,
And thirtie dozen Moones with borrowed sheene,
About the World haue times twelue thirties beene,
Since loue our hearts, and Hymen did our hands
Vnite comutuall, in most sacred bands.

Bap. So many iourneys may the Sunne and Moone
Make vs againe count o're, ere loue be done.
But woe is me, you are so sicke of late,
So farre from cheere and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet though I distrust,
Discomfort you (my Lord) it nothing must:
For women's Feare and Loue, holds quantitie,

In

Ham. Sir, a whole History.
Guild. The King, sir.
Ham I sir, what of him?
Guild. Is in his retyrement, marvellous distempered.
Ham. With drinke Sir?
Guild. No my Lord, rather with choller.
Ham. Your wisedome should shew it selfe more richer, to signifie this to his Doctor: for for me to put him to his Purgation, would perhaps plunge him into more choller.
Guild. Good my Lord put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wide from my affayre
Ham. I am tame Sir, pronounce.
Guild. The Queene your Mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you
Ham. You are welcome.
Guild. Nay, good my Lord, this courtesie is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholsome answer, I will doe your Mothers command ed: if not your pardon, and my returne shall be the end of my Businesse
Ham Sir, I cannot
Guild What my Lord?
Ham Make you a wholsome answere: my wits diseased. But sir, such answere as I can make, you shall command: or rather you say, my Mother therefore more anon to the matter. My Mother you say
Rosin. Then thus she layes: your behaviour hath strooke her into amazement, and admiration.
Ham. O wonderful Son, that can so astonish a Mother. But is there no sequell at the heeles of this Mothers admiration?
Rosin She desires to speake with you in her Closset ere you go to bed
Ham We shall obey, were she ten times our Mother. Have you any further Trade with vs?
Rosin. My Lord, you once did love me.
Ham. So I do still, by these pickers and stealers
Rosin. Good my Lord, what is your cause of distemper? You do freely barre the doore of your owne Libertie, if you deny your greefes to your friend.
Ham. Sir I lacke Advancement.
Rosin How can that be, when you have the voyce of the King himselfe, for your Succession in Denmarke?
Ham. I, but while the grasse grows, the Proverbe is something musty.

Enter one with a Recorder.

O the Recorder. Let me see, to withdraw with you: why do you go about to recouer the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toyle?
Guild. O my Lord, if my Duties be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.
Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play vpon this Pipe?
Guild. My Lord, I cannot.
Ham. I pray you
Guild Believe me I cannot.
Ham I do beseech you.
Guild. I know no touch of it my Lord.
Ham 'Tis as easie as lying: gouerne these Ventages with your finger and thumbe, giue it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most excellent Musicke. Looke you these are the stoppes.
Guild. But these cannot I command to any vtterance of harmony, I haue not the skill.
Ham. Why look you now, how vnworthy a thing you make of me: you would play vpon me; you would seeme to know my stops: you would pluck out the heart of my Mysterie, you would sound me from my lowest Note, to the top of my Compasse: and there is much Musicke, excellent Voice, in this little Organe, yet cannot you make it. Why do you thinke, that I am easier to be played on, then a Pipe? Call me what Instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play vpon me. God blesse you Sir.

Enter Polonius.

Polon. My Lord, the Queene would speake with you, and presently
Ham. Do you see that Clowd? that's almost in shape like a Camell.
Polon. By'th'Misse, and it's like a Camell indeed.
Ham. Me thinkes it is like a Weazell.
Polon. It is backt'd like a Weazell.
Ham. Or like a Whale?
Polon Very like a Whale.
Ham. Then will I come to my Mother, by and by: They foole me to the top of my bent.
I will come by and by
Polon I will say so Exit.
Ham. By and by, is easily said. Leaue me Friends
'Tis the very witching time of night,
When Churchyards yawne, and Hell it selfe breathes out
Contagion to this world. Now could I drinke hot blood,
And do such bitter businesse as the day
Would quake to looke on. Soft now to my Mother
O Heart, loose not thy Nature; let not ever
The Soule of Nero enter this firme bosome
I will speake daggers to her, but vse none,
My Tongue and Soule in this be Hypocrites,
How in my words soeuer she be shent,
To giue them Seales, neuer my Soule consent.

Enter King, Rosencrance and Guildensterne

King I like him not, nor stands it safe with vs,
To let his madnesse range. Therefore prepare you,
I your Commission will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you:
The termes of our estate, may not endure
Hazard so dangerous as doth hourely grow
Out of his Lunacies.
Guild We will our selues prouide.
Most holy and Religious feare it is
To keepe those many many bodies safe
That liue and feede vpon your Maiestie
Rosin The single
And peculiar life is bound
With all the strength and Armour of the minde,
To keepe it safe, from most accidentall more,
That spirit, vpon whose spirit depends and rests
The liues of many, the cease of Maiestie
Dies not alone: like a Gulfe doth draw
What's neere it, with it. It is a massie wheele
Fixt on the Somnet of the highest Mount,
To whose huge Spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortiz'd and adioyned, which when it falles,
Each small annexment, petty consequence
Attends the boysterous Ruine. Neuer alone did the King sigh, but with a generall grone.
King. Arme you I pray you to this speedie Voyage,
For we will Fetters put vpon this feare,

Which now goes too free-footed.
Both. We will attend vs. Exeunt Gent.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My Lord, he's going to his Mothers Closet.
Behinde the Arras Ile conuey my selfe
To heare the Processe. Ile warrant shee'l tax him home,
And as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meete that some more audience then a Mother,
Since Nature makes them partiall, should o're-heare
The speech of vantage. Fare you well my Liege,
Ile call vpon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.
King. Thankes deere my Lord.
O my offence is rancke, it smels to heauen,
It hath the primall eldest curse vpon't,
A Brothers murther. Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharpe as will
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,
And like a man to double busines bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect, what if this cursed hand
Were thicker then it selfe with Brothers blood,
Is there not Raine enough in the sweet Heauen
To wash it white as Snow? Whereto serues mercy,
But to confront the visage of Offence?
And what's in Prayer, but this two-fold force,
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being downe? Then Ile looke vp,
My fault is past. But oh what forme of Prayer
Can serue my turne? Forgiue me my foule Murther?
That cannot be, since I am still possest
Of those effects for which I did the Murther
My Crowne, mine owne Ambition and my Queene.
May one be pardon'd, and retaine th'offence?
In the corrupted currants of this world,
Offences gilded hand may shoue by Iustice,
And oft 'tis seene the wicked prize it selfe
Buyes out the Law; but 'tis not so aboue,
There is no shuffling, there the Action lyes
In his true Nature, and we our selues compell'd
Euen to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To giue in euidence. What then? What rests?
Try what Repentance can. What can it not?
Yet what can it when one cannot repent?
O wretched state! O bosome, black as death!
O limed soule, that struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd! Helpe Angels, make assay.
Bow stubborne knees, and heart with strings of Steele,
Be soft as sinewes of the new-borne Babe,
All may be well.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I do it pat, now he is praying,
And now I'le do't, and so he goes to Heauen,
And so am I reueng'd, that would be scand'd,
A Villaine killes my Father, and for that
I his sole Sonne, do this same Villaine send
To heauen. Why this is Hire and Salary, not Reuenge.
He tooke my Father grossely, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blowne, as fresh as May,
And how his audit stands, who knowes, saue Heauen.
But in our circumstance and course of thought
'Tis heauy with him, and am I then reueng'd,
To take him in the purging of his Soule,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage? No
Vp sword, and know thou a more horrid hent
When he is drunke asleepe, or in his Rage,
Or in th'incestuous pleasure of his bed,
At gaming, swearing, or about some acte
That has no relish of Saluation in't,
Then trip him, that his heeles may kicke at Heauen,
And that his Soule may be as damn'd and blacke
As Hell, whereto it goes. My Mother stayes,
This Physicke but prolongs thy sickly dayes. Exit.
King. My words flye vp, my thoughts remain below,
Words without thoughts, neuer to Heauen go. Exit.

Enter Queene and Polonius.

Pol. He will come straight
Looke you lay home to him,
Tell him his prankes haue been too broad to beare with,
And that your Grace hath screen'd, and stood betweene
Much heate, and him. Ile silence me e'ene here.
Pray you be round with him.
Ham. (within.) Mother, mother, mother.
Qu. Ile warrant you, feare me not.
Withdraw, I heare him comming.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now Mother, what's the matter?
Qu. Hamlet, thou hast thy Father much offended.
Ham. Mother, you haue my Father much offended.
Qu. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.
Ham. Go, go, you question with an idle tongue.
Qu. Why how now Hamlet! (Wicked)
Ham. What's the matter now?
Qu. Haue you forgot me?
Ham. No by the Rood not so.
You are the Queene, your Husbands Brothers wife,
But would you were not so. You are my Mother.
Qu. Nay, then Ile set those to you that can speake.
Ham. Come, come, and sit you downe, you shall not boudge.
You go not till I set you vp a glasse,
Where you may see the inmost part of you?
Qu. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murther me?
Helpe ho.
Pol. What ho, helpe, helpe, helpe.
Ham. How now a Rat? dead for a Ducate, dead.
Pol. O I am slaine. Kills Polonius
Qu. O me, what hast thou done?
Ham. Nay I know not, is it the King?
Qu. O what a rash, and bloody deed is this?
Ham. A bloody deed almost as bad good Mother,
As kill a King, and marrie with his Brother.
Qu. As kill a King?
Ham. I Lady, 'twas my word.
Thou wretched, rash, intruding foole farewell,
I tooke thee for thy Betters, take thy Fortune,
Thou find'st to be too busie, is some danger.
Leaue wringing of your hands, peace sit you downe,
And let me wring your heart, for so I shall
If it be made of penetrable stuffe;
If damned Custome haue not braz'd it so,
That it is proofe and bulwarke against Sense.
Qu. What haue I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tong,
In noise so rude against me?
Ham. Such an Act
That blurres the grace and blush of Modestie,
Calls Vertue Hypocrite, takes off the Rose
From the faire forehead of an innocent loue,
And makes a blister there. Makes marriage vowes
As false as Dicers Oathes. O such a deed,

As

As from the body of Contraction plucker
The very soule, and sweete Religion makes
A rapsidie of words. Heauens face doth glow,
Yea this solidity and compound masse,
With tristful visage as against the doome,
Is thought-sicke at the act.
Qu. Ay me; what act, that roares so lowd, & thunders in the Index.
Ham. Looke heere vpon this Picture, and on this,
The counterfet presentment of two Brothers
See what a grace was seated on his Brow,
Hyperions curles, the front of Ioue himselfe,
An eye like Mars, to threaten or command
A Station, like the Herald Mercurie
New lighted on a heauen-kissing hill:
A Combination, and a forme indeed,
Where euery God did seeme to set his Seale,
To giue the world assurance of a man.
This was your Husband. Looke you now what follows
Heere is your Husband, like a Mildew'd eare
Blasting his wholsom breath. Haue you eyes?
Could you on this faire Mountaine leaue to feed,
And batten on this Moore? Ha? Haue you eyes?
You cannot call it Loue: For at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waites vpon the Iudgement: and what Iudgement
Would step from this to this? What diuell was't,
That thus hath cousned you at hoodman-blinde?
O Shame! where is thy Blush? Rebellious Hell,
If thou can'st mutine in a Matrons bones,
To flaming youth, let Vertue be as waxe,
And melt in her owne fire. Proclaime no shame,
When the compulsiue Ardure giues the charge,
Since frost it selfe, as actiuely doth burne,
As hot in paulters Web.
Qu. O Hamlet, speake no more.
Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soule,
And there I see such blacke and grained spots,
As will not leaue their Tinct.
Ham. Nay, but to liue
In the ranke sweat of an enseamed bed,
Stew'd in Corruption, honying and making loue
Ouer the nasty Stye.
Qu. O, speake to me, no more,
These words like Daggers enter in mine eares.
No more sweet Hamlet
Ham. A Murderer, and a Villaine:
A Slaue that is not twentieth part the tythe
Of your precedent Lord. A vice of Kings,
A Cutpurse of the Empire and the Rule.
That from a shelfe, the precious Diadem stole,
And put it in his Pocket.
Qu. No more.

Enter Ghost

Ham. A King of shreds and patches.
Saue me; and houer o're me with your wings
You heauenly Guards. What would your gracious figure?
Qu. Alas he's mad
Ham. Do you not come your tardy Sonne to chide,
That lapst in Time and Passion, lets go by
Th'important acting of your dread command? O say.
Ghost. Do not forget: this Visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But looke, Amazement on thy Mother sits;
O step betweene her, and her fighting Soule,
Conceit in weakest bodies, strongest workes.
Speake to her Hamlet
Ham. How is it with you Lady?
Qu. Alas, how is't with you?
That you bend your eye on vacancie,
And with the incorporall ayre do hold discourse.
Forth at your eyes, your spirits wildely peepe,
And as the sleeping Soldiours in th'Alarme,
Your bedded haire, like life in excrements,
Start vp, and stand an end. O gentle Sonne,
Vpon the heate and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle coole patience. Whereon do you looke?
Ham. On him, on him. Look you how pale he glares
His forme and cause conioyn'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Do not looke vpon me,
Least with this pitteous action you conuert
My sterne effects: then what I haue to do
Will want true colour; teares perchance for blood.
Qu. To who do you speake this?
Ham. Do you see nothing there?
Qu. Nothing at all, yet all that is I see
Ham. Nor did you nothing heare?
Qu. No nothing, but our selues
Ham. Why look you there. Looke how it steales away
My Father in his habite as he liued.
Looke where he goes euen now out at the Portall. Exit.
Qu. This is the very coynage of your Braine.
This bodilesse Creation extasie is very cunning in.
Ham. Extasie!
My Pulse as yours doth temperately keepe time,
And makes as healthfull Musicke. It is not madnesse
That I haue vttered: bring me to the Test
And I the matter will re-word; which madnesse
Would gambole from. Mother for loue of Grace,
Lay not a flattering Vnction to your soule,
That not your trespasse, but my madnesse speakes:
It will but skin and filme the Vlcerous place,
Whil'st ranke Corruption mining all within,
Infects vnseene. Confesse your selfe to Heauen,
Repent what's past, auoyd what is to come,
And do not spred the Compost on the Weedes,
To make them ranke. Forgiue me this my Vertue.
For in the fatnesse of these pursie times,
Vertue it selfe, of Vice must pardon beg,
Yea curbe, and woe for leaue to do him good.
Qu. O Hamlet,
Thou hast clest my heart in twaine.
Ham. O throw away the worser part of it,
And liue the purer with the other halfe.
Good night, but go not to mine Vnkles bed,
Assume a Vertue if you haue it not. That monster
And that shall lend a kinde of easinesse
To the next abstinence. Once more good night,
And when you are desirous to be blest,
Ile blessing beg of you. For this same Lord,
I do repent: but heauen hath pleas'd it so,
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their Scourge and Minister
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gaue him. So again good night.
I must be cruell, only to be kinde;
Thus bad begins and worse remaines behinde.
Qu. What shall I do?
Ham. Not this by no meanes that I bid you do:
Let the blunt King tempt you againe to bed
Pinch Wanton on your cheeke, call you his Mouse,
And let him for a paire of reechie kisses,

Or padling in your necke with his damn'd Fingers,
[illegible] you to ravell all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madnesse,
But made in craft. 'Twere good you let him know,
For who that's but a Queene, faire, sober, wise,
Would from a Paddocke, from a Bat, a Gibbe,
Such deere concernings hide, Who would do so,
No in despight of Sense and Secrecie,
Unpegge the Basket on the houses top:
Let the Birds flye, and like the famous Ape
To try Conclusions in the Basket, creepe
And breake your owne necke downe.
Qu. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life: I have no life to breath
What thou hast said to me
Ham. I must to England you know that?
Qu. Alacke I had forgot: 'Tis so concluded on.
Ham. This man shall set me packing:
Ile lugge the Guts into the Neighbor roome,
Mother goodnight. Indeede this Counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life, a foolish prating Knave.
Come sir, to draw toward an end with you.
Good night Mother.
Exit Hamlet tugging in Polonius.
Enter King.
King. There's matters [illegible] sighes
The profound effects
Do [illegible] translate: Ile see we understand them.
Where is your Sonne?
Qu. Ah my good Lord, what I have seene to night?
King. What Gertrude? How does Hamlet?
Qu. Mad as the Seas and Winde, when both contend
Which is the Mightier: in his lawlesse fit
Behinde the Arras hearing something stirre,
He whips his Rapier out, and cries a Rat, a Rat,
And in this brainish apprehension kills
The unseene good old man.
King. O heavy deed,
It had been so with us had we been there:
His liberty is full of threats to all,
To you your selfe, to us, to every one.
Alas, how shall this bloody deede be answered?
It will be laide to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrained and out of haunt,
This mad young man. But so much was our love,
We would not understand what was most fit,
But like the Owner of a foule disease,
To keepe it from divulging, let it feede
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?
Qu. To draw apart the body he hath kild,
O're whom his very madnesse like some Ore
Among a Mineral of Metalls base
Shewes it selfe pure. He weepes for what is done.
King. O Gertrude, come away:
The Sunne no sooner shall the Mountaines touch,
But we will ship him hence, and this vile deed,
We must with all our Majesty and Skill
Both countenance, and excuse. Enter Ros. & Guild.
Ho Guildenstern?
Friends both go joyne you with some further ayde:
Hamlet in madnesse hath Polonius slaine,
And from his Mother Closset hath he drag'd him
Go seeke him out, speake fayre, and bring the body
Into the Chappell. I pray you haste in this. Exit Gent.
Come Gertrude, wee'l call up our wisest friends,
To let them know both what we meane to do,
And what's untimely done. Oh come away,
My soule is full of discord and dismay. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Safely stowed.
Gentlemen within. Hamlet, Lord Hamlet.
Ham. What noise? Who cals on Hamlet?
Oh heere they come. Enter Ros. and Guildensterne.
Ro. What have you done my Lord with the dead body?
Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kinne.
Rosin. Tell us where 'tis that we may take it thence,
And beare it to the Chappell.
Ham. Do not believe it.
Rosin. Believe what?
Ham. That I can keepe your counsell, and not mine owne. Besides, to be demanded of a Spunge, what replication should be made by the Sonne of a King.
Rosin. Take you me for a Spunge, my Lord?
Ham. I sir, that sokes up the Kings Countenance, his Rewards, his Authorities (but such Officers do the King best service in the end. He keepes them like an Ape in the corner of his jaw, first mouth'd to be last swallowed, when he needes what you have glean'd, it is but squeezing you, and Spunge you shall be dry again.
Rosin. I understand you not my Lord.
Ham. I am glad of it: a knavish speech sleepes in a foolish eare.
Rosin. My Lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the King.
Ham. The body is with the king, but the King is not with the body. The King, a thing ——
Guild. A thing, my Lord?
Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him, hide Fox and all after. Exeunt.

Enter King.

King. I have sent to seeke him, and to find the bodie:
How dangerous is it that this man goes loose:
Yet must not we put the strong Law on him:
He's lov'd of the distracted multitude
Who like not in their judgement, but their eyes:
And where 'tis so, th'Offender scourge is weigh'd
But never the offence: to beare all smooth, and even,
This sodaine sending him away, must seeme
Deliberate pause: diseases desperate grown,
By desperate appliance are relieved,
Or not at all. Enter Rosincrane.
How now? What hath befalne?
Rosin. Where the cold body is bestow'd my Lord,
We cannot get from him.
King. But where is he?
Rosin. Without my Lord, guarded to know your pleasure.
King. Bring him before us.
Rosin. Hoa, Guildensterne! Bring in my Lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now Hamlet, where's Polonius?
Ham. At Supper.
King. At Supper? Where?
Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten, a certaine convocation of wormes are e'ating him. Your worm is your only Emperor for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat our selfe for Magots. Your fat King, and your leane Begger is but variable service to dishes, but to one Table that's the end.
King. What dost thou meane by this?
Ham.

Ham. Nothing but to shew you how a King may go a Progresse through the guts of a Begger.

King. Where's Polonius.

Ham. In heaven, send him thither to see. If your Messenger finde him not there, seeke him i'th other place your selfe: but indeed, if you finde him not this moneth, you shall nose him as you go vp the staires into the Lobby.

King. Go seeke him there.

Ham. He will stay till ye come. Exit.

King. Hamlet, this deed of thine for thine especiall safety
Which we do tender, as we deerely greeve
For that which thou hast done, must send thee hence
With fierie Quicknesse. Therefore prepare thy selfe,
The Barke is ready, and the wind at helpe,
Th'Associates tend, and every thing is bent
For England.

Ham. For England?

King. I Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a Cherube that sees him: but come, for England. Farewell deere Mother.

King. Thy loving Father Hamlet.

Hamlet. My Mother: Father and Mother is man and wife: man and wife is one flesh, and so my Mother. Come, for England. Exit

King. Follow him at foote,
Tempt him with speed aboord:
Delay it not, Ile haue him hence to night.
Away, for every thing is seal'd and done
That else leanes on th'Affaire: pray you make haft.
And England, if my loue thou hold'st at aught,
As my great power thereof may giue thee sense,
Since yet thy Cicatrice lookes raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thy free awe
Payes homage to vs: thou mayst not coldly set
Our Soueraigne Processe, which imports at full
By Letters conjuring to that effect
The present death of Hamlet. Do it England,
For like the Hecticke in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me: till I know 'tis done,
How ere my haps, my joyes were ne're begun. Exit

Enter Fortinbras with an Armie.

For. Go Captaine, from me greet the Danish King,
Tell him that by his license, Fortinbras
Craues the conueyance of a promis'd March
Ouer his Kingdome. You know the Rendeuous:
If that his Maiesty would ought with vs,
We shall expresse our duty in his eye,
And let him know so.

Cap. I will do't, my Lord.

For. Go softly on. Exit.

Enter Queene and Horatio.

Qu. I will not speake with her.

Hor. She is importunate, indeed distract, her moode will needs be pitied.

Qu. What would she haue?

Hor. She speakes much of her Father; saies she heares
There's tricks i'th world, and hems, and beats her heart,
Spurnes enuiously at Strawes, speakes things in doubt,
That carry but halfe sense: Her speech is nothing,
Yet the vnshaped vse of it doth moue
The hearers to Collection, they aym at it,
And botch the words vp fit to their owne thoughts,
Which as her winkes, and nods, and gestures yeild them,
Indeed would make one thinke there would be thought,
Though nothing sure yet much vnhappily.

Qu. 'Twere good she were spoken with,
For she may strew dangerous coniectures
In ill breeding minds. Let her come in.
To my sicke soule (as sinnes true Nature is)
Each toy seemes Prologue to some great amisse,
So full of Artlesse iealousie is guilt,
It spills it selfe, in fearing to be spilt.

Enter Ophelia distracted.

Oph. Where is the beauteous Maiesty of Denmark.

Qu. How now Ophelia?

Oph. How should I your true loue know from another one?
By his Cockle hat and staffe, and his Sandall shoone.

Qu. Alas sweet Lady: what imports this Song?

Oph. Say you? Nay pray you marke.
He is dead and gone Lady, &c.
At his head a grasse-greene turfe, &c.

Enter King.

Qu. Nay but Ophelia.

Oph. Pray you marke.
White his shroud as the Mountaine Snow.

Qu. Alas looke here my Lord.

Oph. Larded all with sweet flowers,
Which bewept to the graue did go
With true-loue showres.

King. How do ye, pretty Lady?

Oph. Well, God dil'd you. They say the Owle was a Bakers daughter. Lord we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your Table.

King. Conceit vpon her father.

Oph. Pray you let's haue no words of this: but when they aske you what it meanes, say you this:
To morrow is Saint Valentines day,
All in the morning betime,
And I a Maid at your window,
To be your Valentine.
Then vp he rose, and don'd his clothes & dupt the chamber dore,
Let in the Maid, that out a Maid never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia.

Oph. Indeed la, without an oath Ile make an end on't:
By Gis and by Saint Charity,
Alack and fie for shame,
Young men will do't if they come to't,
By Cock they are to blame.
Quoth she, before you tumbled me,
You promis'd me to wed.
So would I ha done by yonder Sunne,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot chuse but weepe, to think they should lay him i'th cold ground. My brother shall know of it, and so I thank you for your good counsell. Come, my Coach. Good night Ladies, Good night sweet Ladies, Good night, good night. Exit.

King. Follow her close,
Giue her good watch I pray you.
Oh this is the poyson of deepe griefe, it springs
All from her Fathers death. O Gertrude Gertrude,
When sorrowes comes, they come not single spies,
But in Battalions. First, her Father slaine:
Next your Sonne gone, and he most violent Author
Of his owne iust remoue: the people muddied,
Thicke and vnwholsome in their thoughts and whispers
For good Polonius death, and we haue done but greenly,
In hugger mugger to inter him: Poore Ophelia
Diuided from her selfe and her fayre Iudgement,

With [illegible] Pictures, or meere Beasts.
[illegible] as Arithmetic,
[illegible] coine Commixture,
Keepes [illegible], keepes in the Common ods,
[illegible] Leaues to [illegible] Feare
[illegible] Fathers death,
[illegible] to make Regard
[illegible] Vulgare
[illegible]. O [illegible] Instruments,
[illegible] Pieces,
Giues me superfluous death. A Noise within.

Enter a Gentleman.

Qu. A'le, What noyse is this?
King. Where are my Switzers?
Let [illegible] alone. What is the matter?
Gent. Saue your selfe, my Lord
The Ocean (ouer-peering of his List
Eates not the Flats with more impitious haste
To [illegible] head,
Cries cheerely you Gentlemen, not like a Mob.
And as the [illegible] were but beg'd,
And [illegible], Custome not known,
The [illegible] Posts of Counsell, would,
Breake, eye of ewe Laertes breakes downe.
Cries Hands, and Feet, Captaines, and Councell cries the clouds,
Laertes shall be King, Laertes King.
Qu. How cheerefully on the false Traile they cry,
O this is counter you false Danish Dogges.
Noyse within. Enter Laertes.
King. The doores are broke
Laer. Where is this King? Sirs Stand you all without
All. No, let's come in.
Laer. I pray you giue me leaue.
All. We will, we will.
Laer. I thanke you, keepe the doore.
O thou vile King, giue me my Father
Qu. Calmely good Laertes
Laer. That drop of blood, that calmes
I shame the Father,
Crest like a Bastard on my Father, brow
Of my true Mother.
King. What is the cause Laertes,
That thy Rebellion looks so Gyant like?
Let him go Gertrude. Do not feare our person:
There's such Diuinity doth hedge a King,
That Treason can but peepe to what it would,
Acts little of his will. Tell me Laertes,
Why thou art thus Incenst. Let him go Gertrude.
Speake man.
Laer. Where is my Father?
King. Dead.
Qu. But not by him.
King. Let him demand his fill.
Laer. How came he dead? Ile not be Iuggel'd with.
To Hell Allegeance! Vowes to the blackest deuice,
Conscience and Grace to the profoundest Pit.
I dare Damnation: To this point I stand,
That both the worlds I giue to negligence,
Let come what comes; only I'le be reueng'd
Most throughly for my Father.
King. Who shall stay you?
Laer. My Will, not all the world,
And for my meanes, I'le husband them so well,
They shall go farre with little

King. Good Laertes:
If you desire to know the certainty
Of your deere Fathers death, if writ in your reuenge,
That Soop-Stake you will draw both Friend and Foe,
Winner and Loser.
Laer. None but his Enemies
King. Will you know them then,
Laer. To his good Friends, thus wide Ile ope my Armes.
And like the kinde Life-rendring Politician, Pelican
Repast them with my blood.
King. Why now you speake
Like a good Child, and a true Gentleman.
That I am guiltlesse of your Fathers death,
And am most sensibly in griefe for it,
It shall as leuel to your Iudgement pierce
As day does to your eye
A noise within. Let her come in.
Enter Ophelia.
Laer. How now? what noyse is that?
O heate dry vapour sup my Brayne, teares seuen times salt,
Burne out the Sence and Vertue of mine eye.
By Heauen thy madnesse shall be payed by weight,
Till our Scale turne the beame. O Rose of May,
Deere Maid, kinde Sister, sweet Ophelia
O Heauens, is't possible, a young Maids wits,
Should be as mortall as an old mans life?
Nature is fine in Loue, and where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of it selfe
After the thing it loues.
Oph. They bore him bare-fac'd on the Beer,
Hey no nony, nony, hey nony
And in his graue rain'd many a teare,
Fare you well my Doue.
Laer. Had'st thou thy wits, and did'st perswade Reuenge
It could not move thus.
Oph. You must sing a downe, a downe, and you call him a downe-a. O how the wheele becomes it? It is the false Steward, that stole his Masters daughter.
Laer. This nothing's more then matter.
Oph. There's Rosemary, that's for Remembrance.
Pray loue remember: and there is Pansies, that's for Thoughts.
Laer. A document in madnesse, thoughts & remembrance fitted.
Oph. There's Fennel for you, and Columbines: there's Rew for you: and here's some for me: we may call it Herbe-Grace a Sundayes: O you must weare your Rew with a difference. There's a Daysie: I would giue you some Violets, but they withered all when my Father dyed: They say he made a good end;
For bonny sweet Robin is all my ioy
Laer. Thought, and Affliction, Passion, Hell it selfe.
She turnes to Fauour, and to prettinesse.
Oph. And will he not come again,
And will he not come again?
No, no he is dead, go to thy Death-bed,
He never will come again.
His Beard as white as Snow,
All Flaxen was his Poll:
He is gone, he is gone and we cast away mone,
God a mercy on his Soule
And of all Christian Soules, I pray God.
God buy ye. Exeunt Ophelia
Laer. Do you see this, you Gods?
King. Laertes I must common with your griefe,
Or you deny me right: go but apart,

Make

M[illegible] choice of w[illegible] your wisest Friends you will,
And they shall heare and iudge 'twixt you and me;
If by direct or by Collateral hand
They finde vs touch'd, we will our Kingdome giue,
Our Crowne, our Life, and all that we call ours
To you in satisfaction. But if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to vs,
And we shall ioy'ntly labour with your soule
To giue it due content.
Laer. Let this be so.
His meanes of death, his obscure buriall
No Trophee, Sword, or Hatchment o're his bones,
No Noble rite, nor formall ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from Heauen to Earth,
That I must call in question.
King. So you shall,
And where the offence is, let the great Axe fall.
I pray you go with me. Exeunt

Enter Horatio with an Attendant

Hora. What are they that would speake with me?
Ser. Sailors Sir, they say they haue Letters for you.
Hor. Let them come in.
I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailor.

Sai. God blesse you Sir.
Hor. Let him blesse thee too.
Sai. He shall Sir, and't please him. There's a Letter for you Sir. It comes from th' Ambassadors that was bound for England, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Reads the Letter

HOratio When thou shalt haue ouerlook'd this, giue these Fellowes some meanes to the King: They haue Letters for him. Ere we were two dayes old at Sea, a Pyrate of very Warlike appointment gaue vs chace. Finding our selues too slow of Saile, we put on a compelled Valour. In the grapple, I boorded them. On the instant they got cleare of our Ship, so I alone became their Prisoner. They haue dealt with me, like Thieues of Mercy: but they knew what they did: I am to do a good turne for them. Let the King haue the Letters I haue sent, and repaire thou to me with as much hast as thou would'st flye death. I haue words to speake in your eare, will make the actions that you (and I) haue in hand grow dumbe, yet are they much too light for the bore of the Matter. These good Fellowes will bring thee where I am. Rosincrance and Guyldenstone, hold their course for England. Of them I haue much to tell thee, Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine,
Hamlet.

Come, I will giue you way for these your Letters,
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. Exit

Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seale,
And you must put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you haue heard, and with a knowing eare,
That he which hath your Noble Father slaine,
Pursued my life.
Laer. It well appeares. But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feates,
So crimefull and so Capitall in Nature,
As by your Safety, Wisedome, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd vp.
King. O for two speciall Reasons,
Which may to you perhaps seeme much vnsinnowed,
And yet to me they are strong. The Queene his Mother,
Liues almost by his lookes, and for my selfe,
My Vertue or my Plague, be it either which,
She's so conioyned to my life and soule,
That as the Starre moues not but in his Sphere,
I could not but by her. The other Motiue,
Why to a publike count I might not go,
Is the great loue the generall gender beare him,
Who dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would like the Spring that turneth Wood to Stone,
Conuert his Gyues to Graces. So that my Arrowes
Too slightly timbred for so loud a Winde,
Would haue reuerted to my Bowe againe,
And not where I had aym'd them.
Laer. And so haue I a Noble Father lost,
A Sister driuen into desperate tearmes,
Whose worth (if praises may go backe againe)
Stood Challenger on mount of all the Age
For her perfections. But my reuenge will come.
King. Breake not your sleepes for that, you must not think
That we are made of stuffe so flat and dull,
That we can let our Beard be shooke with danger,
And think it pastime. You shortly shall heare more.
I lou'd your Father, and we loue our Selfe,
And that I hope will teach you to imagine ——

Enter a Messenger.

How now? What Newes?
Mes. Letters my Lord from Hamlet.
This to your Majesty; this to the Queene.
King. From Hamlet? Who brought them?
Mes. Sailors my Lord, they say, I saw them not:
They were giuen me by Claudio, he receiu'd them
Of him that brought them.
King. Laertes you shall heare them.
Leaue vs. Exit Messenger.
High and Mighty, You shall know I am set naked on your Kingdome. To morrow shall I begge leaue to see your Kingly eyes: when I shall (first asking your Pardon thereunto) recount the occasion of my sodaine and more strange returne. Hamlet.
What should this mean? Are all the rest come backe?
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?
Laer. Know you the hand?
King. 'Tis Hamlets Character. Naked? And in a Postscript here he sayes alone. Can you deuise me?
Laer. I am lost in it my Lord. But let him come,
It warmes the very sicknesse in my heart,
That I liue and tell him to his teeth,
Thus diddest thou.
King. If it be so Laertes, as how should it be so:
How otherwise will you be rul'd by me?
Laer. If so be you shall not binde me either,
King. Then your owne peace. For the naked Prince
Returning through the perils of the Seas,
No more to England, I will worke him
To an exploit now ripe in my Deuice,
Vnder the which he shall not choose but fall:
And for his death no winde of blame shall breath,
But euen his Mother shall vncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Some two Monthes hence
Here was a Gentleman of Normandy,
I haue seene my selfe, and serued against the French,
And they ran well on Horsebacke, but this Gallant

Had

Had witchcraft of his wit, or learned Spell,
And to such wonder doo copy his shape well,
As had he been incorpsed and demy-Natured
With the brave beast, he is all the sport would not
That I in forgery of shapes and tricks,
Come short of: what a Treason is here done?
Laer. A Norman was't?
King. A Norman.
Laer. Vpon my life Lamound
King. The very same.
Laer. The very Rapier and the Brooch indeed,
And gemme of all the Nation.
King. He made confession of you,
And gaue you such a Masterly report,
For Art and exercise in your defence,
And for your Rapier most especiall,
That he cryed out, 'twould be a sight indeed,
If one could match you: the Scrimures of their Nation
He swore had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you opposed them: sir this report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his Enuy,
That he could nothing do but wish and beg
Your sudden coming ore to play with him:
Now out of this.
Laer. What out of this, my Leige?
King. Laertes was your Father dear to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?
Laer. Why ask you this?
King. Not that I think you did not loue your Father,
But that I know Loue is begun by time,
And that I see in passages of proofe,
Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.
Hamlet comes back: what would you vndertake,
To show your selfe your Fathers Sonne indeed,
More then in words?
Laer. To cut his throat i'th' Church.
King. No place indeed should murther Sanctuarize,
Reuenge should haue no bounds: but good Laertes
Will you do this, keepe close within your Chamber.
Hamlet returned shall know you are come home:
We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the fame
The Frenchman gaue you, bring you in fine together,
And wager on your heads: he being remisse,
Most generous, and free from all contriuing,
Will not peruse the foiles, so that with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choose
A sword vnbated, and in a pash of practise,
Requite him for your Father.
Laer. I will do't,
And for that purpose I'le annoint my sword.
I bought an Vnction of a Mountebanke
So mortall I but dipt a knife in it,
Where it drawes blood no Cataplasme so rare,
Collected from all Simples that haue Vertue
Vnder the Moone, can saue the thing from death
That is but scratcht withall: Ile touch my point,
With this contagion, that if I gall him slightly,
It may be death.
King. Let's further think of this,
Weigh what conuenience both of time and means
May fit vs to our shape: if this should fayle;
And that our drift look through our bad performance,
'Twere better not assayed: therefore this Project
Should haue a back or second, that might hold,
If this should blast in proofe. Soft, let me see
We'll make a solemne wager on your commings,
That I am when in your motion you are hot and dry,
As make you bowse more then vsuall drinke,
And that I call for drinke, I haue prepar'd him
A Chalice for the nonce, whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,
Our purpose may hold there; now sweet Queene.

Enter Queene.

Queen. One woe doth tread vpon anothers heele,
So fast they follow: your Sisters drown'd Laertes
Laer. Drown'd! O where?
Queen. There is a Willow growes aslant a Brooke,
That shewes his hoare leaues in the glassie streame
There with fantasticke Garlands did she come,
Of Crow-flowers, Nettles, Daysies and long Purples,
That liberall Shepheards giue a grosser name
But our cold Maids doe dead Mens fingers call them
There on the pendant boughes her Coronet weeds
Clambring to hang, an enuious sliuer broke,
When downe the weedy Trophies and her selfe,
Fell in the weeping Brooke: her clothes spread wide,
And Mermaid-like, awhile they bore her vp,
Which time she chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her owne distresse,
Or like a creature native and indued
Vnto that Element: but long it could not be,
Till that her garments heauy with their drinke,
Pull'd the poore wretch from her melodious lay,
To muddy death.
Laer. Alas, then she is drown'd?
Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.
Laer. Too much of water hast thou poore Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my teares: but yet
It is our tricke, Nature her custome holds,
Let shame say what it will: when these are gone
The woman will be out. Adieu my Lord,
I haue a speech of fire that fain would blaze,
But that this folly drownes it. Exit
King. Let's follow Gertrude
How much I had to do to calme his rage?
Now feare I this will giue it start againe;
Therefore let's follow. Exeunt.

Enter two Clowners.

Clow. I Ore-head her vnlesse she had ben confined to Christian buriall, that wilfully seekes her owne saluation?
Other. I tell thee she is: therefore make her Grane straight: the Crowner hath set on her, and finds it Christian buriall.
Clow. How can that be, vnlesse she drowned her selfe in her owne defence?
Other. Why 'tis found so.
Clow. It must be Se offendendo, it cannot be else: for heere lies the point, If I drowne my selfe wittingly, it argues an Act: and an Act hath three branches. It is an Act of Commission to offend, to offer, or commit: argall she drown'd her selfe wittingly.
Other. Nay but heare you Goodman Deluer.
Clow. Giue me leaue, heere lies the water: good: heere stands the man: good: If the man goe to this water and drowne himselfe, it is will he nill he, he goes, marke you that? But if the water come to him & drowne him, he drownes not himselfe. Argall, he that is not guilty of his owne death, shortens not his owne life.
Other. But is this law?
Clo. I marry is't, Crowners Quest Law.

Other.

Other. Will you ha the truth on's if this had not beene a Gentlewoman, shee should have beene buried out o'Christian Buriall.

Clo. Why there thou say'st. And the more pitty that great folke should ha countenance in this world to drowne or hang themselues, more then their even Christian. Come my Spade; there is no auncient Gentlemen, but Gardiners, Ditchers and Grave-makers, they hold up Adams Profession.

Other. Was he a Gentleman?

Clo. He was the first that ever bore Armes.

Other. Why he had none.

Clo. What, art a Heathen? how dost thou understand the Scripture? the Scripture sayes Adam digg'd, could he digge without Armes? Ile put another question to thee, if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confesse thy selfe——

Other. Go too.

Clo. What is he that builds stronger then either the Mason, the Shipwright, or the Carpenter?

Other. The Gallowes-maker, for that frame outlives a thousand Tenants.

Clo. I like thy wit well in good faith, the Gallowes does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that doe ill: now, thou dost ill to say the Gallowes is built stronger then the Church: Argall, the Gallowes may do well to thee. To't again, Come.

Other. Who builds stronger then a Mason, a Shipwright, or a Carpenter?

Clo. I, tell me that, and vnyoake.

Other. Marry, now I can tell.

Clo. To't.

Other. Mass I cannot tell.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio a farre off.

Clo. Cudgell thy braines no more about it; for your dull Asse will not mend his pace with beating; and when you are aske this question next, say a Grave-maker: the houses he makes last till Doomesday. Go, get thee to Yaughan, fetch me a stoupe of Liquor.

Sings

In youth when I did love, did love,
me thought it was very sweete:
To contract O the time for a my behoue,
O me thought there was nothing meete.

Ham. Ha's this fellow no feeling of his businesse, that he sings at Grave-making?

Hor. Custome hath made it in him a property of easinesse.

Ham. 'Tis e'en so; the hand of little Imployment hath the daintier sense.

Clowne Sings

But Age with his stealing steps
hath caught me in his clutches:
And hath shipped me into the Land,
as if I had neuer been such.

Ham. That Scull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: how the knaue iowles it to the ground, as if it were Cains iaw-bone, that did the first murther. It might be the Pate of a Politician, which this Asse now ore-offices; one that could circumuent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my Lord.

Ham. Or of a Courtier, which could say, Good Morrow sweet Lord: how dost thou, good Lord? this might be my Lord such a one, that praised my Lord such a one's Horse, when he meant to beg it, might it not?

Hor. I, my Lord.

Ham. Why e'en so: and now my Lady Wormes, Chapelesse, and knocked about the Mazard with a Sexton's Spade, heere's fine Reuolution, and we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at Loggets with 'em? mine ake to thinke on't.

Clowne sings

A Pickaxe and a Spade a Spade,
For and a shrowding Sheete:
O a Pit of Clay for to be made,
for such a Guest is meete.

Ham. There's another: why might not that be the Scull of a Lawyer? where be his Quiddits now? his Quillets? his Cases? his Tenures, and his Tricks? why does he suffer this rude Knaue now to knocke him about the Sconce with a dirty Shouel, and will not tell him of his Action of Battery? Hum. This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of Land, with his Statutes, his Recognizances, his Fines, his double Vouchers, his Recoueries: is this the fine of his Fines, and the recouery of his Recoueries, to have his fine Pate full of fine dirt? will his Vouchers vouch him no more of his Purchases and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a paire of Indentures? the very Conueyances of his Lands will hardly lye in this Boxe; and must the Inheritor himselfe have no more, ha?

Hor. Not a iot more, my Lord.

Ham. Is not Parchment made of Sheep-skinnes?

Hor. I my Lord, and of Calues-skinnes too.

Ham. They are Sheepe and Calues which seek out assurance in that. I will speake to this fellow. Whose Grave's this Sir?

Clo. Mine Sir.

O a Pit of Clay for to be made,
for such a Guest is meete.

Ham. I think it be thine indeed, for thou liest in't.

Clo. You lie out on't Sir, and therefore it is not yours for my part. I do not lie in't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in't, to be in't and say it is thine: 'tis for the dead, not for the quicke, therefore thou lyest.

Clo. 'Tis a quicke lye Sir, 'twill away againe from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou digge it for?

Clo. For no man Sir.

Ham. What woman then?

Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

Clo. One that was a woman Sir; but rest her Soule, shee's dead.

Ham. How absolute the Knaue is? we must speake by the Carde, or equiuocation will vndoe vs. By the Lord Horatio, this three yeares I have taken note of it, the Age is growne so picked, that the toe of the Peasant comes so neere the heele of the Courtier, he galls his Kibe. How long hast thou been a Grave-maker?

Clo. Of all the dayes i'th' yeare, I came to't that day that our last King Hamlet o'recame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that since?

Clo. Cannot you tell that? every foole can tell that: It was the very day that young Hamlet was borne, hee that was mad, and sent into England.

Ham. I marry, why was he sent into England?

Clo. Why, because he was mad: hee shall recouer his wits there, or if he do not, it's no great matter there.

Ham.

Ham. Why?

Gen. 'Tis not to be seene in him, there the men are as

Hor. How came he mad?

Gen. Very strangely they say.

Ham. How strange?

Gen. Faith e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Vpon what ground?

Gen. Why heere in Denmarke. I haue bin sixteene yeeres a boy time passes.

Ham. How long will a man lie i'th earth ere he rot?

Gen. I faith if he be not rotten before he die as we haue many pocky Coarses nowadayes, that will scarce hold the laying in, he will last you some eight yeare, or nine yeare. A Tanner will last you nine yeare.

Ham. Why he, more then another?

Gen. Why sir, his hide is so tand with his Trade, that he will keepe out water a great while. And your water, is a sore Decayer of your whoreson dead body. Heres a Scull now hath lien you i'th earth three and twenty yeares.

Ham. Whose was it?

Gen. A whoreson mad Fellowes it was; Whose doe you thinke it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

Gen. A pestilence on him for a mad Rogue, a powr'd a Flaggon of Renish on my head once. This same Scull sir, was Yorickes Scull, the Kings Iester.

Ham. This?

Gen. E'en that.

Ham. Let me see. Alas poore Yorick! I knew him Horatio, a fellow of infinite iest, of most excellent fancy, he hath bore me on his backe a thousand times. And how abhorred my imagination is now? My gorge rises at it. Heere hung those lipps, that I haue kist I know not how oft. Where be your Gibes now? Your Gambols? Your Songs? Your flashes of Merriment, that were wont to set the Table on a Roare? Not one now, to mocke your owne Ieering? Quite chopfalne? Now get you to my Ladies Chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this fauour she must come. Make her laugh at that. Prythee Horatio tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that my Lord?

Ham. Dost thou thinke Alexander looked o'this fashion i'th earth?

Hor. Euen so.

Ham. And smelt so? Pah.

Hor. Euen so my Lord.

Ham. To what base vses we may returne Horatio. Why may not Imagination trace the Noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bunghole.

Hor. 'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No faith not a iot, but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it, as thus. Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth into dust, the dust is earth, of earth we make Loame, and why of that Loame whereto he was conuerted might they not stopp a Beere barrell?

Imperious Cæsar, dead and turn'd to clay,
Might stop a hole to keepe the wind away.
O that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a Wall, t'expell the Winters flaw.
But soft, but soft, aside, heere comes the King.

Enter King, Queene, Laertes, and a Coffin, with Lords, Attendants.

The Queene, the Courtiers. Who is that they follow,
And with such maimed rites? This doth betoken
The corse they follow, did with desperate hand,
For doe it owne life, 'twas some Estate.
Couch we a while, and marke.

Laer. What Ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes a very Noble youth. Marke.

Laer. What Ceremony else?

Priest. Her Obsequies haue bin as farre inlarg'd,
As we haue warrantis, her death was doubtfull,
And but that great Command o're-swayes the order,
She should in ground vnsanctified haue lodg'd,
Till the last Trumpet. For charitable prayer,
Shardes, Flints and Peebles, should be throwne on her
Yet heere she is allowed her Virgin Rites.
Her Maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of decent Burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

Priest. No more can be done.
We should prophane the seruice of the dead,
To sing a Requiem and such rest to her
As to peace-parted Soules.

Laer. Lay her i'th earth,
And from her fayre and vnpolluted flesh,
May Violets spring. I tell thee churlish Priest,
A Ministring Angell shall my Sister be,
When thou lyest howling.

Ham. What the faire Ophelia?

Queene. Sweets to the sweet farewell.
I hop'd thou should'st haue bin my Hamlets wife;
I thought thy Bride-bed to haue deckt (sweet Maide)
And not haue strew'd thy Graue.

Laer. O terrible woer,
Fall ten times treble on that cursed head
Whose wicked deed thy most Ingenious sence
Depriued thee of. Hold off the earth a while,
Till I haue caught her once more in mine Armes:
Leapes in the grave.
Now powre your dirt, vpon the liue and dead.
Till of this flat a Mountaine you haue made,
To o'retop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blew Olympus.

Ham. What is he, whose griefes
Beares such an Emphasis? whose phrase of Sorrow
Coniure the wandring Starres, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

Laer. The deuill take thy soule.

Ham. Thou prai'st not well,
I prythee take thy fingers from my throat,
For though I am not Spleenatiue and rash,
Yet haue I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wiseling feare. Away thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Qu. Hamlet Hamlet.

Gen. Good my Lord be quiet.

Ham. Why I will fight with him vpon this Theme.
Vntill my eyelids will no longer wag.

Qu. O my Sonne what Theame?

Ham. I lou'd Ophelia, forty thousand Brothers
Could not (with all their quantitie of Loue)
Make vp my summe. What wilt thou do for her?

King. O he is mad Laertes.

Qu. For loue of God forbeare him.

Ham. Come show me what thou'lt do.
Woo't weepe? Woo't fight? Woo't teare thy selfe?
Woo't drinke vp Esile, eate a Crocadile?

He

Ie doo'e. Doſt thou come heere to whine;
To outface me with leaping in her Graue?
Be buried quicke with her, and ſo will I.
And if thou prate of Mountaines; let them throw
Millions of Akers on vs; till our ground
Sindging his pate againſt the burning Zone,
Make Ossa like a wart. Nay, and thou'lt mouth,
Ile rant as well as thou.
Kin. This is meere Madneſſe:
And thus a while the fit will worke on him:
Anon as patient as the female Doue,
When that her golden Couplets are diſclos'd;
His ſilence will ſit drooping.
Ham. Heare you Sir:
What is the reaſon that you vſe me thus?
I lou'd you ever; but it is no matter:
Let Hercules himſelfe doe what he may,
The Cat will Mew, and Dogge will haue his day. Exit.
Kin. I pray you good Horatio wait vpon him,
Strengthen your patience in our laſt nights ſpeech,
Wee'l put the matter to the preſent push.
Good Gertrude ſet ſome watch ouer your Sonne,
This Graue ſhall haue a liuing Monument.
An houre of quiet ſhortly ſhall we ſee;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this Sir; now let me ſee the other,
You doe remember all the Circumſtance.
Hor. Remember it my Lord?
Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kinde of fighting,
That would not let me ſleepe; me thought I lay
Worſe then the mutines in the Bilboes. raſhly,
(And prais'd be raſhneſſe for it) let vs know,
Our indiſcretion ſometimes ſerues vs well,
When our deare plots do pauſe, and that ſhould teach vs,
There's a Diuinity that ſhapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.
Hor. That is moſt certaine.
Ham. Vp from my Cabin
My ſea-gowne ſcarft about me in the darke,
Grop'd I to find out them; had my deſire,
Fingar'd their Packet, and in fine, withdrew
To mine owne roome againe, making ſo bold,
(My feares forgetting manners) to vnſeale
Their grand Commiſſion, where I found Horatio,
O royall knauery: An exact command,
Larded with many ſeuerall ſorts of reaſons
Importing Denmarks health, and Englands too,
With hoo, ſuch Bugges and Goblins in my life,
That on the ſuperuize no leaſure bated,
No not to ſtay the grinding of the Axe,
My head ſhould be ſtruck off.
Hor. Is't poſſible?
Ham. Here's the Commiſſion, read it at more leyſure:
But wilt thou heare me how I did proceed?
Hor. I beſeech you.
Ham. Being thus benetted round with Villaines,
Ere I could make a Prologue to my braines,
They had begun the Play. I ſate me downe,
Deuis'd a new Commiſſion, wrote it faire,
I once did hold it as our Statiſts doe,
A baſeneſſe to write faire; and labour'd much
How to forget that learning: but Sir now,
It did me Yeomans ſeruice: wilt thou know
The effects of what I wrote?
Hor. I, good my Lord.
Ham. An earneſt Conjuration from the King,
As England was his faithfull Tributary,
As loue betweene them, as the Palme ſhould flouriſh,
As Peace ſhould ſtill her wheaten Garland weare,
And ſtand a Comma 'tweene their amities,
And many ſuch like Aſſes of great charge,
That on the view and know of theſe Contents,
Without debatement further, more or leſſe,
He ſhould the bearers put to ſodaine death,
Not ſhriuing time allowed.
Hor. How was this ſeal'd?
Ham. Why, euen in that was Heauen ordinate;
I had my fathers Signet in my Purſe,
Which was the Modell of that Danish Seale
Folded the Writ vp in forme of the other,
Subſcribd it, gaue't th' impreſſion, plac't it ſafely,
The changeling neuer knowne. Now, the ſubſequent day
Was our Sea fight, and what to this was ſequent,
Thou know'ſt already.
Hor. So Guyldenſterne and Rosencraus go to't.
Ham. Why man they did make loue to this employment
They are not neere my Conſcience; their debate
Doth by their owne inſinuation
Grow out of nothing. Thou know'ſt Alexanders comes Betweene the paſſe, and fell incenſed points
Of mighty oppoſites.
Hor. How was a King ſuch?
Ham. Does it not, thinkſt thee, ſtand me now vpon
He that hath kil'd my King, and whor'd my Mother,
Popt betweene th' election and my hopes
Throwne out his Angle for my proper life,
And with ſuch cozenage, is't not perfect conſcience,
To quit him with this arme? And is't not to be damn'd
To let this Canker of our nature come
In further euill.
Hor. It muſt be ſhortly knowne to him from England
What is the iſſue of the buſineſſe there.
Ham. It will be ſhort,
The interim's mine, and a mans life's no more
Than to ſay one. But I am very ſorry good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot my ſelfe;
For by the image of my Cauſe I ſee
The Portraiture of his. He'le count his fauours
But ſure the brauery of his griefe did put me
Into a Towring paſſion.
Hor. Peace, who comes heere?

Enter young Oſricke. (marke.

Oſr. Your Lordſhip is right welcome back to Denmarke.
Ham. I humbly thank you Sir, doſt know this waterflie?
Hor. No my good Lord.
Ham. Thy ſtate is the more gracious; for 'tis a vice to know him: he hath much Land, and fertile; let a Beaſt be Lord of Beaſts, and his Crib ſhall ſtand at the Kings Meſſe; 'tis a Chowgh; but as I ſaw ſpacious in the poſſeſſion of dirt.
Oſr. Sweet Lord, if your friendſhip were at leyſure, I ſhould impart a thing to you from his Majeſty.
Ham. I will receiue it with all diligence of ſpirit; put your bonet to his right vſe: 'tis for the head.
Oſr. I thanke your Lordſhip, 'tis very hot.
Ham. No, beleeue mee 'tis very cold, the winde is Northerly.
Oſr. It is indifferent cold my Lord, indeed.
Ham. Mee thinkes it is very ſoultry, and hot for my Complexion.

Oſricke

Ofr. Exceedingly, my Lord, it is very soulry, as 'twere I cannot tell how: but my Lord, his Majesty bad me signifie to you, that he ha's laid a great wager on your head. Sir, this is the matter.

Ham. I beseech you remember.

Ofr. Nay in good earnest, for mine ease in good faith. Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon

Ham. What's his weapon?

Ofr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons, but well

Ofr. The sir King has wag'd with him six Barbary Horses against the which he has impon'd as I take it, six French Rapiers and Poniards, with their assignes, as Girdle, Hangers or so: three of the Carriages in faith are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberall conceit.

Ham. What call you the Carriages?

Ofr. The Carriages Sir, are the Hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more Germane to the matter: If we could carry Cannon by our sides, I would it might be Hangers till then, but on: six Barbary Horses against six French swords their Assignes, and three liberall conceited Carriages, that's the French bet against the Danish, why is this impon'd as you call it?

Ofr. The King Sir, hath laid that in a dozen passes betweene you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits, He hath laid on twelve for nine, and it would come to immediate tryall, if your Lordship would vouchsafe the Answere.

Ham. How if I answere no?

Ofr. I meane my Lord, the opposition of your person in tryall.

Ham. Sir, I will walke heere in the Hall, if it please his Majestie, 'tis the breathing time of day with me: let the Foyles be brought, the Gentleman willing, and the King hold his purpose; I will win for him if I can: if not, I will gaine nothing but my shame, and the odde hits.

Ofr. Shall I redeliver you e'en so?

Ham. To this effect Sir, after what flourish your nature will.

Ofr. I commend my duty to your Lordship.

Ham. Yours, yours. He does well to commend it himselfe, there are no tongues else for's turne.

Hor. This Lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did Comply with his Dugge before he suck'd it. Thus has he (and many more of the same Breede that I know the drossie age dotes on) only got the tune of the time, and outward habit of encounter, a kinde of yesty collection, which carries them through & through the most fond and winnowed opinions; and do but blow them to their trialls, the bubbles are out.

Hor. You will lose this wager, my Lord.

Ham. I do not think so, since he went into France, I have been continually exercising: I shall win at the odds. but thou wouldst not think how ill all's heere about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my Lord.

Ham. It is but foolery, but it is such a kinde of gaine-giving, as would perhaps trouble a woman.

Hor. If your minde dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestall their repaire hither, and say you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defie augury, there's a speciall Providence in the fall of a Sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come: if it be not to come, it will be now: if it be not now; yet it will come; the readinesse is all, since no man has ought of what he leaues. What is't to leave betimes?

Enter King, Queene Laertes and Lords, with other Attendants with Foyles, and Gauntlets, a Table and Flagons of Wine on it.

King. Come Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

Ham. Give me your pardon Sir, I've done you wrong,
But pardon't as you are a Gentleman.
This presence knowes,
And you must needs have heard how I am punish't
With sore distraction. What I have done
That might your nature honour, and exception
Roope in you awake, I heere proclaime was madnesse;
Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet,
If Hamlet from himselfe be tane away:
And when he's not himselfe, do's wrong Laertes,
Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it:
Who does it then? His Madnesse? If't be so,
Hamlet is of the Faction that is wrong'd,
His madnesse is poore Hamlets Enemy.
Sir, in this Audience,
Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd evill,
Free me so farre in your most generous thoughts,
That I have shot mine Arrow o'r the house,
And hurt my Mother.

Laer. I am satisfied in Nature,
Whose motive in this case should stirre me most
To my Revenge. But in my termes of Honor
I stand aloofe, and will no reconcilement,
Till by some elder Masters of known Honor,
I have a voyce, and president of peace
To keepe my name ungorged. But till that time,
I do receive your offer'd love like love,
And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely,
And will this Brothers wager frankely play.
Give us Foyles. Come on.

Laer. Come one for me.

Ham. I'le be your foile Laertes in mine ignorance,
Your Skill shall like a Starre i'th darkest night,
Stirre the fancy of your foile.

Laer. You mock me Sir.

Ham. No by this hand.

King. Give them the foyles yong Osricke,
Cousin Hamlet, you know the wager.

Ham. Very well my Lord,
Your Grace hath laid the oddes a'th weaker side.

King. I do not feare it,
I have seene you both
But since he is better, I have therefore oddes.

Laer. This is too heavy,
Let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well,
These Foyles have all a length. Prepare to play.

Osricke. I my good Lord

King. Set me the Stoopes of wine upon that Table.
If Hamlet give the first, or second hit,
Or quit in answere of the third exchange,
Let all the Battlements their Ordinance fire,
The King shall drinke to Hamlets better breath,
And in the Cup an Union shall he throw
Richer then that, which foure successive Kings
In Denmarkes Crowne have worne.

Give

Giue me the Cups,
And let the Kettle to the Trumpets speake,
The Trumpet to the Cannoneer without,
The Cannons to the Heauens, the Heauen to Earth,
Now the King drinkes to Hamlet. Come, begin,
And you the Iudges beare a wary eye.
Ham. Come on sir.
Laer. Come on sir. They play.
Ham. One.
Laer. No.
Ham. Iudgement.
Osr. A hit, a very palpable hit.
Laer. Well, againe.
King. Stay, giue me drinke.
Hamlet, this Pearle is thine,
Here's to thy health. Giue him the cup.
Trumpets sound, and shot goes off.
Ham. Ile play this bout first, set by a-while
Come. Another hit, what say you?
Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confesse.
King. Our Sonne shall win.
Qu. He's fat, and scant of breath.
Heere's a Napkin, rub thy browes,
The Queene Carowses to thy Fortune, Hamlet.
Ham. Good Madam.
King. Gertrude, do not drinke.
Qu. I will my Lord;
I pray you pardon me.
King. It is the poyson'd Cup, it is too late.
Ham. I dare not drinke yet Madam,
By and by.
Qu. Come, let me wipe thy face.
Laer. My Lord, Ile hit him now.
King. I do not thinke it.
Laer. And yet it is almost against my conscience.
Ham. Come for the third.
Laertes, you but dally,
I pray you passe with your best violence,
I am afeard you make a wanton of me.
Laer. Say you so? Come on. Play.
Osr. Nothing neither way.
Laer. Haue at you now.
In scuffling they change Rapiers.
King. Part them, they are incens'd.
Ham. Nay come, againe.
Osr. Looke to the Queene there ho.
Ham. They bleed on both sides. How is it my Lord?
Osr. How is't Laertes?
Laer. Why as a Woodcocke
To mine Sprindge, Osrick,
I am iustly kill'd with mine owne Treachery.
Ham. How does the Queene?
King. She swounds to see them bleede.
Qu. No, no, the drinke, the drinke,
O my deare Hamlet, the drinke, the drinke,
I am poyson'd.
Ham. Oh Villany! How? Let the doore be lock'd.
Treachery, seeke it out.
Laer. It is heere Hamlet.
Hamlet, thou art slaine,
No Medicine in the world can do thee good.
In thee, there is not halfe an houre of life;
The Treacherous Instrument is in thy hand,
Vnnerued and venom'd: the foule practise
Hath turn'd it selfe on me. Loe, heere I lye,
Neuer to rise againe: Thy Mother's poyson'd:
I can no more, the King, the King's too blame.
Ham. The point envenom'd too,
Then venome to thy worke.
Hurts the King.
All Treason, Treason.
King. O yet defend me Friends, I am but hurt.
Ham. Heere thou incestuous, murderous,
Damned Dane,
Drinke off this Potion: Is thy Vnion heere?
Follow my Mother. King Dyes.
Laer. He is iustly seru'd.
It is a poyson temper'd by himselfe:
Exchange forgiuenesse with me, Noble Hamlet;
Mine and my Fathers death come not vpon thee,
Nor thine on me. Dyes.
Ham. Heauen make thee free of it, I follow thee.
I am dead Horatio, wretched Queene adiew,
You that looke pale, and tremble at this chance,
That are but Mutes or audience to this acte,
Had I but time (as this fell Sergeant, Death
Is strict in his Arrest) O I could tell you,
But let it be. Horatio I am dead,
Thou liu'st, report me and my cause aright
To the vnsatisfied.
Hor. Neuer believe it,
I am more an Antike Roman than a Dane,
Heere's yet some Liquor left.
Ham. As th'art a man giue me the Cup.
I will go, by Heauen I will not.
O good Horatio, what a wounded name,
(Things standing thus vnknowne) shall liue behinde me.
If thou did'st euer hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in paine,
To tell my Story.
March afarre off, and shot within.
What warlike noyse is this?

Enter Osrick.

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland
To the Ambassadors of England giues this warlike volley.
Ham. O I dye Horatio:
The potent poyson quite o're-crowes my spirit,
I cannot liue to heare the Newes from England,
But I do prophesie th'election lights
On Fortinbras, he has my dying voyce,
So tell him with the occurrents more and lesse,
Which haue solicited. The rest is silence. O, o, o, o. Dies.
Hora. Now cracke a Noble heart.
Good night sweet Prince,
And flights of Angels sing thee to thy rest.
Why does the Drumme come hither?

Enter Fortinbras with the Ambassadors with Drumme, Colours and Attendants.

Fort. Where is this sight?
Hor. What is it ye would see?
If ought of woe or wonder cease your search.
Fort. This quarry cries on hauocke. O proud death,
What feast is toward in thine eternall Cell,
That thou so many Princes at a shoote,
So bloodily hast strooke.
Emb. The sight is dismall,
And our affaires from England come too late,
The eares are senselesse that should giue vs hearing,
To tell him his commandement is fulfill'd,

[illegible] to Canterbury [illegible] dead.
[illegible] how was this sealed?
Hor. Why, even in that was heauen ordinant.
[illegible] Not [illegible] sodaine,
[illegible] I had not [illegible] to thanke you:
[illegible] euer gaue commandement for their death.
[illegible] to vs to impeyson this bloodie question,
[illegible] on the Pallace Warres, and you from England
[illegible] Embassadors, that these Bootes
[illegible] on a stage be placed to the view,
[illegible] speake to yet vnknowing world,
[illegible] things came about. So shall you heare
[illegible] and vnnaturall acts,
[illegible] iudgements, casuall slaughters
[illegible] on by cunning, and forc'd cause,
[illegible] or purposes mistooke
[illegible] on the Inuentors heads. All this can I
Truly deliuer.
Fort. Let vs haste to heare it,
And call the Noblest to the Audience.
For me, with sorrow, I embrace my fortune,
I haue some Rites of memory in this Kingdome,
Which are to claime, my vantage doth
Inuite me.
Hor. Of that I shall haue alwayes cause to speake,
And from his mouth
Whose voyce will draw on more:
But let this same be presently performd,
Euen while mens minnes are wide,
Lest more mischance
On plots, and errors happen.
Fort. Let foure Captaines
Beare Hamlet like a Souldier to the Stage,
For he was likely, had he beene put on
To haue prou'd most royally.
And for his passage,
The Souldiours Musicke, and the rites of Warre
Speake lowdly for him.
Take vp the bodey; Such a sight as this
Becomes the Field, but heere shewes much amis.
Go, bid the Souldiers shoote.

Exeunt Marching: after the which, a Peale of Ordenance are shot off.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF KING LEAR.

Act I. Scæna I.

Kent

Duke of

Glou

Kent. I thought the King had more affected the Duke of Glou. I cannot conceive you.

Kent. Is not this your Son, my Lord?

Glou. His breeding, Sir, hath been at my charge. I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to't.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glou. Sir, this young fellow's mother could, whereupon she grew round-wombed, and had indeed, Sir, a Son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

Glou. But I have, Sir, a Son by Order of Law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knave came something saucily to the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair, there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged. Do you know this Noble Gentleman, Edmund?

Edm. No, my Lord.

Glou. My Lord of Kent:

Remember him hereafter as my Honourable Friend.

Edm. My services to your Lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glou. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again. The King is coming.

Sound. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Cordelia, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the Lords of France & Burgundy, Gloucester.

Glou. I shall, my Lord.

Lear. Meane time we shall expresse our darker purpose.
Give me the Map there. Know, that we have divided
In three our Kingdome: and 'tis our fast intent,
To shake all Cares and Businesse from our Age,
Conferring them on younger strengths, while we
Unburthen'd crawle toward death. Our son of Cornwall,
And you our no lesse louing Sonne of Albany,

Cor. Nothing.
Lear. Nothing will come of nothing, speake againe.
Cor. Vnhappie that I am, I cannot heaue
My heart into my mouth, I loue your Maiestie
According to my bond, no more nor less.
Lear. How, how, Cordelia? mend your speech a little,
Least you may marre your fortunes.
Cor. Good my Lord,
You haue begot me, bred me, lou'd me,
I returne those duties backe as are right fit,
Obey you, loue you, and most Honour you.
Why haue my Sisters husbands, if they say
They care for all the dower they haue?
That I will neuer haue, I neuer meant to take my portion, for my Father
Hauing once giuen me halfe, haue my Care, and Duetie,
Sure I shall neuer marry like my Sisters.
Lear. But goest thou this to winne a Husband?
Cor. Nothing my Lord.
Lear. Nothing?
Cor. Nothing.
Lear. Speake againe.
Cor. Vnhappie that I am, I cannot heaue
My heart into my mouth, I loue your Maiestie
By all the operation of the Orbes,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Here I disclaime all my Paternall Care,
Propinquitie, and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me,
Hold thee from this for euer. The barbarous Scythian,
Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosome
Be as well neighbour'd, pittied, and relieued,
As thou my sometime Daughter.
Kent. Good my Liege.
Lear. Peace Kent,
Come not betweene the Dragon and his wrath,
I lou'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nurserie. Hence and auoid my sight:
So be my graue my peace, as here I giue
Her Father heart from her, call France, who stirres?
Call Burgundy, Cornwall, and Albanie,
With my two Daughters Dowers, digest the third,
Let pride, which she cals plainnesse, marry her.
I do inuest you ioyntly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troope with Maiestie. Our selfe by Monthly course,
With reseruation of an hundred Knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turne. Only we shall retaine
The name, and all th'additions to a King: the sway,
Reuennew, execution of the rest,
Beloued Sonnes be yours, which to confirme,
This Coronet part betweene you.
Kent. Royall Lear
Whom I haue euer honour'd as my King,
Lou'd as my Father, as my Master followed,
As my great Patron thought on in my prayers.
Lear. The bow is bent and drawne, make from the shaft.
Kent. Let it fall rather, though the forke inuade
The Region of my heart: be Kent vnmannerly,
When Lear is mad, what would'st thou do old man?
Think'st thou that duty shall haue dread to speake,
When power to flattery bowes?
To plainnesse honour's bound,
When Maiestie falls to folly, reserue thy state,
And in thy best consideration checke
This hideous rashnesse, answere my life, my iudgement,
Thy yongest Daughter do's not loue thee least,
Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sounds
Reuerbe no hollownesse.
Lear. Kent, on thy life no more.
Kent. My life I neuer held but as pawne
To wage against thine enemies, nere feare to loose it,
Thy safety being motiue.
Lear. Out of my sight.
Kent. See better Lear, and let me still remaine
The true blanke of thine eie.
Lear. Now by Apollo,
Kent. Now by Apollo King
Thou swear'st thy Gods in vaine.
Lear. O Vassall! Miscreant.
Alb. Cor. Deare Sir forbeare.
Kent. Kill thy Physition, and thy fee bestow
Vpon the foule disease reuoke thy guift,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throate,
Ile tell thee thou dost euill.
Lear. Heare me recreant on thine allegeance heare me;
That thou hast sought to make vs breake our vowes,
Which we durst neuer yet, and with strained pride,
To come betwixt our sentence, and our power,
Which nor our nature, nor our place can beare,
Our potencie made good, take thy reward.
Fiue dayes we do allot thee for prouision,
To shield thee from diseases of the world,
And on the sixt to turne thy hated backe
Vpon our kingdome, if on the tenth day following,
Thy banisht trunke be found in our Dominions,
The moment is thy death, away. By Iupiter,
This shall not be reuoked.
Kent. Fare thee well King, sith thus thou wilt appeare,
Freedome liues hence, and banishment is here.
The Gods to their deere shelter take thee Maid,
That iustly think'st, and hast most rightly said.
And your large speeches may your deeds approue,
That good effects may spring from words of loue:
Thus Kent, O Princes, bids you all adiew,
Hee'l shape his old course, in a Country new. Exit

Flourish. Enter Glester with France, and Burgundy Attendants.

Cor. Heere's France and Burgundy, my Noble Lord.
Lear. My Lord of Burgundie,
We first addresse towards you who with this King
Hath riuald for our Daughter, what in the least
Will you require in present Dower with her,
Or cease your quest of Loue?
Bur. Most Royall Maiestie,
I craue no more than hath your Highnesse offer'd,
Nor will you tender lesse?
Lear. Right Noble Burgundy,
When she was deare to vs, we did hold her so,
But now her prices are fallen. Sir, there she stands,
If aught within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pieced,
And nothing more may fitly like your Grace,
She's there, and she is yours.
Bur. I know no answer.
Lear. Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Vnfriended, new adopted to our hate,
Dow'rd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or, leaue her.
Bur. Pau-

Bur. Pardon me Royall Sir,
Election makes not vp in such conditions.
Le. Then leaue her sir, for by the powre that made me,
I tell you all her wealth. For you great King,
I would not from your loue make such a stray,
To match you where I hate, therefore beseech you
I'assent your loue a more worthier way,
Then on a wretch as vile Nature is asham'd
Almost t'acknowledge hers.
Fra. This is most strange,
That she whom euen but now was your obiect,
The argument of your praise, balme of your age
The best endeared, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of fauour. Sure her offence
Must be of such vnnaturall degree,
That monsters it, Or your fore-vouch'd affection
Fall into taint, which to beleeue of her
Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Should neuer plant in me.
Cor. I yet beseech your Maiesty
If for I want that glibnesse and oyly Art
To speake and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'le do't before I speake, that you make works
It is no vicious blot, murther or foulnesse,
No vnchaste action or dishonored step
That hath depriu'd me of your Grace and fauour,
But euen for want of that, for which I am richer,
A still soliciting eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I haue not, though not to haue it,
Hath lost me in your liking.
Lear. Better thou had'st
Not been borne, then not t'haue pleas'd me better.
Fra. Is it but this? A tardinesse in nature,
Which often leaues the history vnspoke
That it intends to do. My Lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the Lady? Loue's not loue
When it is mingled with regards, that stands
Aloof from th'entire point. Will you haue her?
She is herselfe a Dowrie.
Bur. Royall King,
Giue but that portion which your selfe proposd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchesse of Burgundie.
Lear. Nothing: I haue sworne, I am firme.
Bur. I am sorry then you haue so lost a father,
That you must loose a husband.
Cor. Peace be with Burgundie,
Since that respects and Fortunes are his loue,
I shall not be his wife.
Fra. Fairest Cordelia that art most rich being poore,
Most choise forsaken, and most lou'd despis'd,
Thee and thy vertues here I seize vpon,
Be it lawfull I take vp what's cast away.
Gods, Gods! 'Tis strange that from their cold'st neglect
My Loue should kindle to inflam'd respect.
Thy dowrelesse Daughter King, throwne to my chance,
Is Queene of vs, of ours and our faire France:
Not all the Dukes of wat'rish Burgundie
Can buy this vnprizd precious Maid of me.
Bid them farewell Cordelia, though vnkinde,
Thou loosest here a better where to finde.
Lear. Thou hast her France, let her be thine, for we
Haue no such Daughter, nor shall euer see
That face of hers again. Therefore be gone,
Without our Grace, our Loue, our Benizon:

Come Noble Burgundy.
Fra. Bid farewell to your Sisters.
Cor. The iewels of our Father, with washt eyes
Cordelia leaues you. I know you what you are,
And like a Sister am most loth to call
Your faults as they are named. Loue well our Father:
To your professed bosoms I commit him:
But yet alas, stood I within his Grace,
I would prefer him to a better place,
So farewell to you both.
Reg. Prescribe not vs our duties.
Gon. Let your study
Be to content your Lord, who hath receiu'd you
At Fortunes almes. You haue obedience scanted,
And well are worth the want that you haue wanted.
Cor. Time shall vnfold what plighted cunning hides,
Who couers faults, at last with shame derides.
Well may you prosper.
Fra. Come my faire Cordelia. Exit France and Cor.
Gon. Sister, it is not little I haue to say,
Of what most neerely appertains to vs both.
I think our Father will hence to night.
Reg. That's most certaine, and with you: next month with vs.
Gon. You see how full of changes his age is, the obseruation we haue made of it hath not been little: he alwayes loued our Sister most, and with what poore iudgement he hath now cast her off, appeares too grossely.
Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age: yet he hath euer but slenderly knowne himselfe.
Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash, then must we looke from his age to receiue not alone the imperfections of long ingraffed condition, but therewithall the vnruly waywardnesse that infirme and cholericke yeares bring with them.
Reg. Such vnconstant starts are we like to haue from him, as this of Kents banishment.
Gon. There is further compliment of leauetaking betweene France and him. Pray let vs hold our selues in that readinesse, which the busines craues. I feare his Daughter will scarce be welcome.
Reg. We shall further thinke of it.
Gon. We must do something, and i'the heate. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Bastard

Bast. Thou Nature art my Goddesse, to thy Law
My seruices are bound, wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custome, and permit
The curiosity of Nations to deprive me?
For that I am some twelue or fourteene Moonshines
Lag of a Brother? Why Bastard? Wherefore base?
When my Dimensions are as well compact,
My minde as generous, and my shape as true
As honest Madams issue? Why brand they vs
With Base? with baseness Bastardie? Base, Base?
Who in the lusty stealth of Nature take
More composition and fierce quality,
Then doth within a dull stale tyred bed
Get tweene sleepe and wake? Well then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must haue your land,
Our Fathers loue, is to the Bastard Edmond,
As to th'legitimate: fine word, Legitimate

Well, my Legitimate, if this Letter speed,
And my inuention thriue, Edmond the base
Shall to'th'Legitimate. I grow, I prosper:
Now Gods, stand vp for Bastards.

Enter Gloucester.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus? and France in choller parted?
And the King gone to night? prescribd his powre,
Confin'd to exhibition? All this done
Vpon the gad? Edmond, how now? What newes?

Bast. So please your Lordship, none.

Glou. Why so earnestly seeke you to put vp that Letter?

Bast. I know no newes, my Lord.

Glou. What Paper were you reading?

Bast. Nothing, my Lord.

Glou. No? What needed then that terrible dispatch of it into your Pocket? The quality of nothing hath not such need to hide it selfe. Let's see: Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need Spectacles.

Bast. I beseech you, Sir, pardon me: it is a Letter from my Brother, that I haue not all ore-read; and for so much as I haue perus'd, I finde it not fit for your ore-looking.

Glou. Giue me the Letter, Sir.

Bast. I shall offend, either to detaine, or giue it:
The contents, as in part I vnderstand them,
Are to blame.

Glou. Let's see, let's see.

Bast. I hope for my Brothers iustification, he wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my Vertue.

Glou. reads. This policie and reuerence of Age makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keepes our Fortunes from vs, till our oldnesse cannot relish them. I begin to finde an idle and fond bondage, in the oppression of aged tyranny, who sways not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, that of this I may speake more. If our Father would sleepe, till I waked him, you should enioy halfe his Reuenue for euer, and liue the beloued of your Brother, Edgar.
Hum? Conspiracy? Sleepe till I waked him, you should enioy halfe his Reuenue? My sonne Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? A heart and braine to breed it in? When came you to this? Who brought it?

Bast. It was not brought me, my Lord, there's the cunning of it: I found it throwne in at the Casement of my Closset.

Glou. You know the character to be your Brothers?

Bast. If the matter were good, my Lord, I durst swear it were his: but in respect of that, I would faine think it were not.

Glou. It is his.

Bast. It seemes his, but my Lord I hope his heart is not in the Contents.

Glou. Has he neuer before sounded you in this businesse?

Bast. Neuer, my Lord. But I haue often heard him maintaine it to be fit, that Sonnes at perfect age, and Fathers declining, the Father should be as Ward to the Son, and the Son manage his reuenue.

Glou. O Villaine, villaine! His very opinion in the Letter. Abhorred Villaine, vnnaturall, detested, brutish Villaine; worse then brutish! Go sirrah, seeke him: Ile apprehend him. Abhominable Villaine, where is he?

Bast. I do not well know my L. Best had perhaps vpon some graue reason perswaded you to it.

Glou. But where is he?

Bast. Looke Sir, I'ld speake with him; but if you can finde him, pray you, finde him where, if you vnaduisedly proceed against him, may not only displace, but also make a great example of you.

Glou. Make your selfe inuisible, and search his Closset, the Booke is at hand, I will come to him, parts of this and my Brothers Letter, proue strange. Inuisible, and search? And a Booke? Ah Villaine! Where is he?

Bast. I thinke, my Lord, it were not conuenient you should finde him, vntill he hath pacified your Honour with your owne Sword, which I aduise you to take, or some other meane I will direct you to, by the which you may giue him his due, and winne your Noble Satisfaction. Your Honour knowes my Loue to your Lordship, and how farre I would not spare my selfe in any iust way of your Reuenge.

Glou. I thinke you do.

Bast. If your Honour iudge it meete, I will place you where you shall heare vs conferre of this, and by an Auricular assurance haue your satisfaction, and that without any further delay, than this very Euening.

Glou. He cannot be such a Monster. Edmond seeke him out: winde me into him, I pray you: frame the businesse after your owne wisedome. I would vnstate my selfe, to be in a due resolution.

Bast. I will seeke him, Sir, presently: conuey the businesse as I shall find meanes, and acquaint you withall.

Glou. These late Eclipses in the Sun and Moone portend no good to vs: though the wisedome of Nature can reason it thus, and thus, yet Nature finds it selfe scourg'd by the sequent effects. Loue cooles, friendship falls off, Brothers diuide. In Cities, mutinies; in Countries, discord; in Palaces, Treason; and the Bond cracked 'twixt Sonne and Father. This villaine of mine comes vnder the prediction; there's Son against Father, the King falls from byas of Nature, there's Father against Child. We haue seene the best of our time. Machinations, hollownesse, treachery, and all ruinous disorders follow vs disquietly to our Graues. Find out this Villaine, Edmond, it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully. And the Noble and true hearted Kent banish'd, his offence, honesty! 'Tis strange.

Exit.

Edg. This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sicke in fortune, often the surfeit of our owne behauiour, we make guilty of our disasters, the Sun, the Moone, and Starres, as if we were villaines on necessity; Fooles by heauenly compulsion, Knaues, Theeues, and Treachers by Spherical predominance, Drunkards, Liars, and Adulterers by an enforc'd obedience of Planetary influence; and all that we are euill in, by a diuine thrusting on. An admirable euasion of Whore-master man, to lay his Goatish disposition to the charge of a Starre! My father compounded with my mother vnder the Dragons taile, and my Natiuity was vnder Vrsa Maior, so that it followes, I am rough and Leacherous. I should haue bin that I am, had the maidenlest Starre in the Firmament twinkled on my offending.

Enter Edgar.

Pat: he comes like the Catastrophe of the old Comedie: my cue is villanous Melancholly, with a sighe like Tom o'Bedlam. — O these Eclipses do portend these diuisions. Fa, Sol, La, Me.

Edg. How now, Brother Edmond, what serious contemplation are you in?

Bast. I am thinking, Brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these Eclipses.

Edg. Do you busie your selfe with that?

Bast. I promise you, the effects he writes of, succeede vnhappily.

When saw you my Father last?

Edg. The night gone by.

Bast. Spake you with him?

Edg. I, two houres together.

Bast. Parted you in good termes? Found you no displeasure in him, by word, nor countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Bast. Bethink your selfe wherein you may haue offended him: and at my entreaty forbeare his presence vntill some little time hath qualified the heate of his displeasure, which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischiefe chiefe of your person, it would scarcely allay.

Edg. Some Villaine hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my feare, I pray you have a continent forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower: and as I say retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will bring you to heare my Lord speake: pray ye goe, there's my key: if you do stirre abroad, goe armed.

Edg. Armed, Brother?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best, I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward you: I have told you what I have seene and heard: But faintly. Nothing like the image, and horror of it, pray you away.

Edg. Shall I heare from you anon? Exit

Edm. I do serve you in this businesse.
A Credulous Father, and a Brother Noble,
Whose nature is so farre from doing harmes,
That he suspects none: on whose foolish honesty
My practises ride easie: I see the businesse.
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit,
All with me's meete, that I can fashion fit. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gonerill and Steward.

Gon. Did my Father strike my Gentleman for chiding of his Foole?

Ste. I Madam.

Gon. By day and night he wrongs me every howre
He flashes into one grosse crime or other,
That sets us all at odds: I'le not endure it:
His Knights grow riotous, and himselfe upbraides us
On every trifle. When he returnes from hunting,
I will not speake with him, say I am sicke,
If you come slack of former services,
You shall do well: the fault of it I'le answer.

Ste. He's coming Madam, I heare him.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your Fellowes: I'de have it come to question:
If he dislike it, let him to our Sister,
Whose mind and mine I know in that are one,
Remember what I have said.

Ste. Well, Madam.

Gon. And let his Knights have colder looks among you: what growes of it, no matter, advise your fellowes so, I'le write straight to my Sister to hold my course: prepare for dinner. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Kent.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech diminish or advance
My purpos'd purpose to the saying on,
Which I have rais'd: my banisht face, safe shape,
Hath pluckt all grace and manners from my fortunes,
And (which more than all the rest) my name:
Yet shall my deeds appeale for what I am,
If ought they doe, and in the fashion I'le intend.

Hornes within. Enter Lear and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner, go get it ready. How now, what art thou?

Kent. A man Sir.

Lear. What dost thou professe? What would'st thou with us?

Kent. I do professe to be no lesse than I seeme, to serve him truely that will put me in trust, to love him that is honest, to converse with him that is wise and speakes little, to feare judgement, to fight when I cannot choose, and to eate no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest hearted Fellow, and as poore as the King.

Lear. If thou be'st as poore for a subject, as he is for a King, thou art poore enough. What would'st thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who would'st thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Do'st thou know me fellow?

Kent. No Sir, but you have that in your countenance which I would faine call Master.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services can'st thou do?

Kent. I can keepe honest counsell, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plaine message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in, and the best of me, is Diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young Sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for any thing: I have yeares on my backe forty eight.

Lear. Follow me, thou shalt serve me: if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner, ho, dinner. Where's my Knave? my Foole? Go you, and call my Foole hither. You, you Sirrah, where's my Daughter?

Enter Steward.

Ste. So please you ——— Exit

Lear. What says the Varlet with the Clotpole backe? Where's my Knave? my Foole? Go you, and call my Foole hither. You, you Sirrah, where's my Daughter?

Kent. He answers you, my Lord, your Sonne's not so.

Lear. Why came not the slaue back to me when I call'd him?

Kent. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not?

Kent. My Lord, I know not what the matter is, but to my judgement your Highnesse is not entertained with that Ceremonious affection as you were wont, there's a great abatement of kindnesse appeares as well in the generall dependants, as in the Duke himselfe also and your Daughter.

Lear. Ha? Say'st thou so?

Kent. I beseech you pardon me my Lord, if I be mistaken, for my duty cannot be silent, when I think your Highnesse wronged.

Lear. Thou but remembrest me of mine owne Conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as mine owne jealous curiosity, then as a very pretence and purpose of unkindnesse: I will looke further into't. but where's my Foole? I have not seene him this two dayes.

Knight. Since my young Ladies going into France Sir,

Sir, the Foole hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that, I have noted it well, goe you and tell my Daughter, I would speake with her. Goe you call him my Foole: Oh you Sir, you, Come you hither Sir, who am I Sir?

Enter Steward.

Ste. My Ladies Father.

Lear. My Ladies Father? my Lords knaue you whorson dogge, you slaue you curre.

Ste. I am none of these my Lord, I beseech your pardon.

Lear. Do you bandy lookes with me you Rascall?

Ste. I'le not be strucken my Lord.

Kent. Nor tript neither, you base Foot-ball player.

Lear. I thanke thee fellow, Thou seru'st me, and Ile loue thee.

Kent. Come sir arise, away, I'le teach you differences away, away, if you will measure your lubbers length againe, tarry but a while, away, goe too, ha will you come, sir?

Lear. Now my friendly knaue I thanke thee, there's earnest of thy seruice.

Enter Foole.

Foole. Let me hire him too, here's my Coxcombe.

Lear. How now my pretty knaue how dost thou?

Foole. Sirra, you were best take my Coxcombe.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. Why? for taking ones part that's out of fauour, nay, & thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly, there take my Coxcombe: why this fellow ha's banisht two on's Daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will, if thou follow him, thou must needs weare my Coxcombe. How now Nuncle? would I had two Coxcombes and two Daughters.

Lear. Why my boy?

Fool. If I gaue them all my liuing, I'ld keepe my Coxcombes my selfe, there's mine, beg another of thy Daughters.

Lear. Take heed Sirrah, the whip.

Foole. Truth's a dogge must to kennell, hee must bee whipt out, when Ladie the brach may stand by'th'fire and stinke.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me.

Foole. Sirrah, Ile teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Foole. Marke my Nuncle,

Haue more than thou showest,
Speake lesse than thou knowest,
Lend lesse than thou owest,
Ride more than thou goest,
Learne more than thou trowest,
Set lesse than thou throwest;
Leaue thy drinke and thy whore,
And keepe in a doore,
And thou shalt haue more,
Than two tens to a score.

Kent. This is nothing Foole.

Foole. Then 'tis like the breath of a vnfeed Lawyer, you gaue me nothing for't, can you make no vse of nothing Nuncle?

Lear. Why no Boy,
Nothing can be made out of nothing.

Foole. Prythee tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to, he will not beleeue a Foole.

Lear. A bitter Foole.

Foole. Do'st thou know the difference my Boy, betweene a bitter Foole, and a sweet one.

Lear. No Lad teach me.

Foole. Nuncle, giue me an egge, and Ile giue thee two Crownes.

Lear. What two Crownes shall they be?

Foole. Why after I haue cut the egge i'th middle and eate vp the meate, the two Crownes of the egge: when thou clouest thy Crownes i'th middle, and gau'st away both parts, thou bor'st thine Asse on thy backe o're the dirt: thou hadst little wit in thy bald crowne, when thou gau'st thy golden one away: o let me kisse that for that word.

Fooles had ne're leſſe grace in a yeere,
For wiſemen are growne foppiſh,
And know not how their wits to weare,
Their manners are ſo apiſh.

Lear. When were you wont to be ſo full of Songs ſirrah?

Foole. I haue vſed it Nuncle, ere ſince thou mad'ſt thy Daughters thy Mothers: for when thou gau'ſt them the rod, and put'ſt downe thine owne breeches, then they For ſorrow ranne,
And I for ſorrow ſung,
That ſuch a King ſhould play bo-peepe,
And goe the Foole among.
Pry'thee Nuncle keepe a Schoolemaſter that can teach thy Foole to lie, I would faine learne to lie.

Lear. And you lie ſirrah, wee'll haue you whipt.

Foole. I marrie what am I, thou and thy daughters are, they'll haue me whipt for ſpeaking true, thou'lt haue me whipt for lying, and ſometimes I am whipt for holding my peace. I had rather be any kinde o'thing than a Foole, and yet I would not be thee Nuncle, thou haſt pared thy wit o'both ſides, and left nothing i'th middle: heere comes one o'the parings.

Enter Goneril.

Lear. How now Daughter? what makes that Frontlet on? You are too much of late i'th frowne.

Foole. Thou waſt a pretty fellow when thou had'ſt no need to care for her frowning, now thou art an O without a figure, I am better than thou art now, I am a Foole, thou art nothing. Yes forſooth I will hold my tongue, ſo your face bids me, though you ſay nothing.

Mum, mum, he that keepes nor crut, nor crum,
Weary of all, ſhall want ſome. That's a ſheal'd Peacod.

Gon. Not only Sir this, your all-licenc'd Foole,
But other of your inſolent retinue
Do hourely Carpe and Quarrell, breaking forth
In rancke and not to be endured riots Sir.
I had thought by making this well known vnto you,
To haue found a ſafe redreſſe, but now grow fearefull
By what your ſelfe too late haue ſpoke and done,
That you protect this courſe, and put it on
By your allowance, which if you ſhould, the fault
Would not ſcape cenſure nor the redreſſes ſleepe,
Which in the tender of a wholeſome weale,
Might in their working do you that offence,
Which elſe were ſhame, that then neceſſitie
Will call diſcreet proceeding.

Foole. For you know Nuncle, the hedge-Sparrow fed the Cuckoo ſo long, that it's had it head bit off by it young, ſo out went the Candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our Daughter? (dome

Gon. I would you would make vſe of your good wiſ-
(Whereof I know you are fraught) and put away
Theſe diſpoſitions, which of late tranſport you
From what you rightly are.

Foole. May

Foole. May not an Asse know, when the Cart drawes the Horse?
Whoop Iugge I loue thee.
Lear. Do's any heere know me?
This is not Lear:
Do's Lear walke thus? Speake thus? Where are his eies?
Either his Notion weakens, his Discernings
Are Lethargied. Ha! Waking? 'Tis not so?
Who is it that can tell me who I am?
Foole. Lears shadow
Lear. Your name, faire Gentlewoman?
Gon. This admiration Sir, is much o'th' savour
Of other your new prankes. I do beseech you
To understand my purposes aright:
As you are Old and Reuerend, should be Wise.
Heere do you keepe a hundred Knights and Squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debosh'd and bold,
That this our Court infected with their manners,
Shewes like a riotous Inne, Epicurisme and Lust
Makes it more like a Tauerne or a Brothell,
Then a grac'd Pallace. The shame it selfe doth speake
For instant remedy. Be then desir'd
By her, that else will take the thing she begges,
A little to disquantity your Traine,
And the remainders that shall still depend,
To be such men as may besort your Age,
Which know themselues and you.
Lear. Darkenesse, and Diseases.
Saddle my Horses: call my Traine together.
Degenerate Bastard, I'le not trouble thee,
Yet haue I left a daughter.
Gon. You strike my people, and your disorder'd rable,
make Seruants of their Betters.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents:
Is it your will, Speake Sir? Prepare my Horses.
Ingratitude! thou Marble-hearted Fiend,
More hideous when thou shew'st thee in a Child,
Than the Sea-monster.
Alb. Pray Sir be patient.
Lear. Detested Kite, thou lyest.
My Traine are men of choice, and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know,
And in the most exact regard, support
The worships of their name. O most small fault,
How vgly did'st thou in Cordelia shew?
Which like an Engine, wrench'd my frame of Nature
From the fixt place; drew from my heart all Loue,
And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beate at this gate that let thy Folly in,
And thy deere Iudgement out. Go, go, my people.
Alb. My Lord, I am guiltlesse, as I am ignorant
Of what hath moued you.
Lear. It may be so, my Lord.
Heare Nature, heare deere Goddesse, heare:
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this Creature fruitfull.
Into her Wombe conuey sterilitie,
Dry vp in her the Organs of increase,
And from her derogate body, neuer spring
A Babe to honor her. If she must teeme,
Create her child of Spleene, that it may liue
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.
Let it stampe wrinkles in her brow of youth,
With cadent Teares fret Channels in her cheekes,
Turne all her Mothers paines, and benefits
To laughter, and contempt. That she may feele,
How sharper than a Serpents tooth it is,
To haue a thankleſſe Childe. Away, away. Exit.
Alb. Now Gods that we adore,
Whereof comes this?
Gon. Neuer afflict your selfe to know more of it:
But let his disposition haue that scope
As dotage giues it.

Enter Lear.

Lear. What fifty of my followers at a clap?
Within a fortnight?
Alb. What's the matter Sir?
Lear. I'le tell thee.
Life and death! I am asham'd
That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus,
That these hot teares, which break from me perforce
Should make thee worth them.
Blasts and Fogges vpon thee:
Th'vntented woundings of a Fathers curse
Pierce euery sense about thee. Old fond eyes,
Beweepe this cause againe, I'le plucke ye out,
And cast you with the waters that you loose
To temper Clay. Ha? Let it be so.
I haue another daughter,
Who I am sure is kinde and comfortable:
When she shall heare this of thee, with her nayles
She'le flea Wolues-head: and hath power to make
I haue cast off for euer. Exit
Gon. Do you marke that?
Alb. I cannot be so partiall Goneril,
To the great loue I beare you.
Gon. Pray you content. What Oswald, ho?
You Sir, more Knaue than Foole, after your Master.
Foole. Nuncle Lear, Nuncle Lear,
Tarry, take the Foole with thee.
A Fox, when one has caught her,
And such a Daughter,
Should sure to the Slaughter,
If my Cap would buy a halter,
So the Foole follows after. Exit
Gon. This man hath had good Counsell,
A hundred Knights?
'Tis politique, and safe to let him keepe
At point a hundred Knights: yes, that on euery dreame,
Each buz, each fancie, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage with their powres,
And hold our liues in mercy. Oswald, I say.
Alb. Well you may feare too farre.
Gon. Safer than trust too farre:
Let me still take away the harmes I feare,
Not feare still to be taken. I know his heart,
What he hath vttered I haue writ my Sister:
If she sustaine him, and his hundred Knights
When I haue shew'd th'vnfitnesse.

Enter Steward.

How now Oswald?
What haue you writ that Letter to my Sister?
Stew. I Madam.
Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse,
Informe her full of my particular feare,
And thereto adde such reasons of your owne,
As may compact it more. Get you gone,

And

And haſten your returne, no no, my Lord,
This [illegible]
[illegible]
You haue [illegible] welcome.
[illegible]
[illegible] ſhe
[illegible]
Stew. Nay then——
Bast. Wounds, I hope. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Lear, Kent, Gentleman, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloſter with theſe Letters, acquaint my Daughter no further with any thing you know, than comes from her demand out of the Letter, if your Diligence be not ſpeedy, I ſhall be there afore you.

Kent. I will not ſleepe my Lord, 'till I haue deliuered your Letter. Exit.

Fool. If a Man's braines were in's heeles, were't not in danger of kibes?

Lear. I Boy.

Fool. Then I prythee be merry, thy wit ſhall not go ſlipſhod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha.

Fool. Shall Goſſips laugh at thee, for thou wert nimble, but not beſhrew me, but the laſt neate and furre boote, a Crabbed Man ſhould not make a Groome of his Dogges, and leaue himſelfe

Lear. [illegible]

Fool. [illegible] Oyſter-wenches offer?

Lear. No.

Fool. No indeed, for I can tell why a Snayle has a [illegible]

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why to put his head in, not to giue it away to his daughters, and leaue his hornes without a caſe.

Lear. I will forget my Nature, ſo kind a Father? Be my Horſes ready?

Fool. Thy Aſſes are gone about 'em. The reaſon why the ſeuen Starres are no more than ſeuen, is a pretty reaſon.

Lear. Becauſe they are not eight?

Fool. Yes indeed: thou would'ſt make a good Foole.

Lear. To take't againe perforce! Monſter Ingratitude!

Fool. If thou were my Fool Nuncle, I'd haue thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou ſhouldſt not haue been old, before thou hadſt beene wiſe.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad ſweet Heauen. Keepe me in temper, I would not be mad. How now are the Horſes?

[illegible] my Lord,

Lear. Come boy.

Fool. She that's a Maid now, and laughs at my departure, Shall not be a Maid long, vnleſſe things be cut ſhorter (Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Baſtard, and Curan ſeuerally.

Baſt. Saue thee Curan.

Cur. And your's I warrant me. How comes it that the Prince and my Father ſhould ſo ſuddenly take Horſe?

Baſt. How come you to that?

Cur. Nay I know not, you haue heard of the newes abroad, I meane the whiſper'd ones, for they are yet but ear-kiſſing arguments.

Baſt. Not I: pray you what are they?

Cur. Haue you not heard of any warres toward, betwixt the Dukes of Cornwall and

Baſt. Not a word.

Cur. You may then in time. Fare you well ſir. Exit.

Baſt. The Duke be here to night? The better, beſt, This weaues it ſelfe perforce into my buſineſſe, My Father hath ſet guard to take my Brother, And I haue one thing of a queaſie queſtion Which I muſt act: briefeneſſe and fortune worke. Brother, a word, deſcend: Brother I ſay, [illegible] my Father watches: O Sir fly this place, [illegible] Warres out vpon thee? Vnpriuately attended by a Switzer? Let's ſee: Hum'd, and Switzer? Let's ſee: I heare my Father comming, pardon me, In cunning I muſt draw my Sword vpon you: Draw, ſeeme to defend your ſelfe, Now quit you well. Yeeld, come before my Father, Light hoa, here, Fly Brother, Torches, Torches, ſo farewell. Exit Edgar.

Some blood drawne on me would beget opinion Of my more fierce endeauour: I haue ſeene drunkards Do more then this in ſport, Father, Father, Stop, ſtop, no helpe?

Enter Gloſter, and Seruants with Torches.

Glo. Now Edmund where's the villaine?

Baſt. Here ſtood he in the dark, his ſharpe Sword out, Mumbling of wicked charmes, coniuring the Moone To ſtand's auſpicious Miſtris.

Glo. But where is he?

Baſt. Looke ſir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villaine, Edmund?

Baſt. Fled this way ſir, when by no meanes he could

Glo. Purſue him, go after. By no meanes, what?

Baſt. Perſwade me to the murther of your Lordſhip.

Glo.

But that I told him the reuenging Gods,
'Gainſt Parricides did all the thunder bend,
Spoke with how manifold, and ſtrong a Bond
The Child was bound to th' Father, Sir: in fine,
Seeing how lothly opposite I ſtood
To his vnnaturall purpoſe: in fell motion
With his prepared Sword, he charges home
My vnprouided body, lanch'd mine arme;
But when he ſaw my beſt alarum'd ſpirits
Bold in the quarrels right, roſe the deed encounter,
Or whether gaſted by the noyſe I made,
Full ſoone I was free from him, and he fled.

Gost. Let him ly farre
Not in this Land, leaſt he remaine vncaught
And found, diſpatch: the Noble Duke my Maſter,
My worthy Arch and Patron comes to night,
By his authority I will proclaime it,
That he which finds him ſhall deſerue our thankes,
Bringing the murderous Coward to the ſtake:
He that conceales him death.

Bast. When I diſſwaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it, with curſt ſpeech
I threatned to diſcouer him; he replied
Thou vnpoliſhed Baſtard, (ſaid he) that I
I would ſtand by th' other, could'ſt thou
(As I ſtand not) throw doubt to my truth, valour, or worth in me
Make thy words faith'd? No, what I ſhould denie,
(As this I would, though thou did'ſt produce
My very Character) I'd turne it all
To my Inſcription, plot, and damned praiſe:
And that I'll make a ſtaffe to the world,
I hauing profits, might ſee the proſpect of my death
Were very preſſant and potent to effects
To make thee ſeeke it. Tucket within.

Gon. O ſtrange and faſtned Villaine,
Would he deny his Letter, ſaid he?
Harke, the Dukes Trumpets, I know not where he comes;
All Ports I'le barre: the Villaine ſhall not ſcape,
The Duke muſt grant me that: beſides, his picture
I will ſend farre and neere, that all the Kingdome
May haue due note of him: and of my Land,
Loyall and naturall Boy, I'le worke the meanes
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now my Noble friend, ſince I came hither
(Which I can call but now) I haue heard ſtrange newes.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too ſhort
Which can purſue th' offender: how dooſt my Lord?

Glo. O Madam, my old heart is crack'd, it's crack'd.

Reg. What, did my Fathers Godſonne ſeeke your life?
He whom my Father nam'd, your Edgar?

Glo. O Lady, Lady, ſhame would haue it hid.

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous Knights
That tended vpon my Father?

Glo. I know not Madam, 'tis too bad, too bad.

Bast. Yes Madam, he was of that conſort.

Reg. No marualle then, though he were ill affected,
'Tis they haue put him on the old mans death,
To haue th' expence and waſt of his Reuenues:
I haue this preſent euening from my Siſter
Been well informd of them, and with ſuch cautions,
That if they come to ſojourne at my houſe,
Ile not be there.

Corn. Nor I, aſſure thee Regan:
Edmund, I heare that you haue ſhewne your Father
A Child-like Office.

Bast. It was my duty Sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practiſe, and receiu'd
This hurt you ſee, ſtriuing to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he purſued?

Glo. I my good Lord.

Corn. If he be taken, he ſhall neuer more
Be feard of doing harme, make your owne purpoſe,
How in my ſtrength you pleaſe: for you, Edmund,
Whoſe vertue and obedience doth this inſtant
So much commend it ſelfe, you ſhall be ours,
Nature's of ſuch deepe truſt, we ſhall much need
You we firſt ſeize on.

Bast. I ſhall serue you truely, however elſe.

Glo. For him I thanke your Grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to viſit you?

Reg. Thus out of ſeaſon, threading darke-eyed night:
Occaſions Noble Corn. of moment,
Wherein we muſt haue vſe of your aduiſe.
Our Father he hath writ, ſo hath our Siſter,
Of differences, which I beſt thought it fit
To anſwere from our home: the ſeuerall Meſſengers
From hence attend diſpatch: our good old friend,
Lay comfort to your boſome, and beſtow
Your needful Counſaile to our buſineſſes,
Which craues the inſtant vſe.

Glo. I ſerue you Madam,
Your Graces are right welcome. Exeunt. Flor. and.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Kent, and Steward ſeuerally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee Friend: art of this houſe?

Kent. I.

Stew. Where may we ſet our horſes?

Kent. I'th' mire.

Stew. Prythee if thou lou'ſt me, tell me.

Kent. I loue thee not.

Stew. Why then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury Pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why do'ſt thou vſe me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow I know thee.

Stew. What do'ſt thou know me for?

Kent. A Knaue, a Raſcall, an eater of broken meates, a baſe, proud, ſhallow, beggerly, three-ſuited-hundred pound, filthy worſted-ſtocking knaue, a Lilly-liuered, action-taking, whoreſon glaſſe-gazing ſuper-ſeruiceable finicall rogue: one Trunke-inheriting ſlaue: one that wouldſt be a Bawd in way of good ſeruice, and art nothing but the compoſition of a knaue, beggar, Coward, Pandar, and the ſonne and Heire of a Mungrill Bitch, one whom I will beate into clamours whining if thou deny'ſt the leaſt ſillable of thy addition.

Stew. Why what a monſtrous Fellow art thou thus to raile on one, that is neither knowne of thee, nor knowes thee?

Kent. What a brazen-fac'd Varlet art thou, to deny thou knoweſt me? Is it two dayes ſince I tript vp thy heeles, and beate thee before the King? Draw you rogue, for for (th)ee (o)ppressed King. Is (it) the Moone (or) no, I'le make a (spe)cial Meanin(g) of (yo)u, (Yo)u w(o)rship(ful) Cu(ck)old: I

slaue, strike

Stew. Helpe (ho), murther, murther

Enter Bastard, Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, Seruants.

Bast. How now, (wh)at's the matter? Part.

Kent. With (yo)u (go)od (ma)n Boy, (if) you (ple)ase, come,
(I'l) (fl)esh (yo)u, (co)me on (yo)ung Master

Glo. Weapons? (Ar)mes? (wh)at's the matter here?

Gon-

Glue you good morrow.
Glo. The Duke is too blame in this,
'Twill be ill taken. Exit.
Kent. Good King, that must approue the common law,
Thou out of Heauens benediction com'st
To the warme Sun.
Approach a Beacon to this vnder Globe,
That by it comfortable Beames I may
Peruse this Letter. Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery. I know 'tis from Cordelia
Who hath most fortunately been informed
Of my obscured course. And shall find time
From this enormous state, seeking to giue
Losses their remedies. All weary and o'erwatch'd,
Take vantage heauy eyes not to behold
This shameful lodging. Fortune good night,
Smile once more, turne thy wheele.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard my selfe proclaimed,
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. No Port is free, no place
That guard and most vnusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. While I may scape
I will preserue my selfe: and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape
That euer penury, in contempt of man,
Brought neere to beast: my face I'le grime with filth,
Blanket my loines, elfe all my hayres in knots,
And with presented nakednesse out-face
The Winds and persecutions of the sky.
The Country gaue me proofe and precedent
Of Bedlam beggers, who with roaring voices,
Strake in their numb'd and mortified Armes
Pins, Wodden prickes, Nayles, sprigs of Rosemarie
And with this horrible obiect, from low Farmes
Poore pelting Villages, Sheepcoates, and Mils
Sometime with lunatick bans, sometime with prayers
Inforce their charitie. Poore Turlygod, poore Tom,
That's something yet: Edgar I nothing am. Exit.

Enter Lear, Foole, and Gentleman

Lear. 'Tis strange that they should so depart from home,
And not send backe my Messengers.
Gent. As I learn'd,
The night before there was no purpose in them
Of this remoue.
Kent. Hayle to thee Noble Master.
Lear. Ha? Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?
Kent. No my Lord.
Foole. Ha, ha, he wears Cruell Garters. Horses are tide by the heads, Dogges and Beares by the neckes, Monkeys by the loynes, and Men by the legs: when a man ouer-lustie at legs, then he weares wodden nether-stocks.
Lear. What's he,
That hath so much thy place mistooke
To set thee here?
Kent. It is both he and she
Your Son and Daughter.
Lear. No.
Kent. Yes.
Lear. No I say.
Kent. I say yea.
Lear. By Iupiter I sweare no.

Kent. By Iuno, I sweare I.
Lear. They durst not do't:
They could not, would not do't: 'tis worse then murther
To do vpon respect such violent outrage
Resolue me with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserue, or they impose this vsage,
Coming from vs.
Kent. My Lord when at their home
I did commend your Highnesse Letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place, that shewed
My duty kneeling, came there a reeking Poste,
Stew'd in his haste, halfe breathlesse, panting forth
From Goneril his Mistris, salutations;
Deliuer'd Letters spight of intermission,
Which presently they read, on those contents
They summon'd vp their meiney, straight tooke Horse,
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer, gaue me cold lookes,
And meeting here the other Messenger,
Whose welcome (I perceiue) had poyson'd mine,
Being the very fellow which of late
Display'd so sawcily against your Highnesse,
Hauing more man then wit about me, drew,
He raised the house with loud and coward cries.
Your Sonne and Daughter found this trespasse worth
The shame which here it suffers.
Foole. Winters not gone yet, if the wilde Geese fly that way.
Fathers that weare rags, do make their Children blind,
But Fathers that beare bags, shall see their children kind.
Fortune that arrant whore, ne'er turns the key to the poore.
But for all this thou shalt haue as many Dolours for thy Daughters, as thou canst tell in a yeare.
Lear. O how this Mother swels vp toward my heart!
Hysterica passio, downe thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below. Where is this Daughter?
Kent. With the Earle sir here within.
Lear. Follow me not,
Stay here. Exit.
Gent. Made you no more offence?
Kent. Neither.
Foole. Why, Fellow there's no more shall come in a Nunckle, then a Shell is to a Snaile, or a Lobster to a Crab, or a Wise man to a Gentleman more then one.
Kent. Why, Foole?
Foole. Why, to make him such fooles for that parts out of the rest of his Reason: Sirra, you were best take my Coxcombe.
Kent. Why, Foole?
Foole. Why, for taking one's part that's out of fauour: nay and thou can'st not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly: there take my Coxcombe: why this fellow has banish'd two on's Daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will, if thou follow him, thou must needs weare my Coxcombe. How now Nunckle? Would I had two Coxcombes and two Daughters.
Lear. Why my Boy?
Foole. If I gaue them all my liuing, I'ld keepe my Coxcombes my selfe. There's mine, beg another of thy Daughters.
Lear. Take heed Sirra, the whip.
Foole. Truth's a dog must to kennell, he must be whipt out, when Ladie the Brach may stand by the fire and stinke.
Lear. A pestilent gall to me.
Foole. Sirra, Ile teach thee a speech.
Lear. Do.
Foole. Marke it Nunckle:
Haue more then thou showest,
Speake lesse then thou knowest,
Lend lesse then thou owest,
Ride more then thou goest,
Learne more then thou trowest,
Set lesse then thou throwest;
Leaue thy drinke and thy whore,
And keepe in a dore,
And thou shalt haue more
Then two tens to a score.
Kent. This is nothing Foole.
Foole. Then 'tis like the breath of an vnfeed Lawyer, you gaue me nothing for't. Can you make no vse of nothing Nunckle?
Lear. Why no Boy,
Nothing can be made out of nothing.
Foole. Prythee tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to, he will not beleeue a Foole.
Lear. A bitter Foole.
Foole. Do'st know the difference my Boy, betweene a bitter Foole, and a sweet one?
Lear. No Boy.
Foole. Why, after I haue cut the egge i'the middle and eate vp the meate, the two Crownes of the egge. When thou clouest thy Crowne i'the middle, and gau'st away both parts, thou bor'st thine Asse on thy backe o're the durt. Thou had'st little wit in thy bald crowne, when thou gau'st thy golden one away. When thou gau'st them the rod, and put'st downe thine breeches,

Lear. Deny to speake with me?
They are ficke, they are weary,
They haue trauail'd all the night? meere fetches
The images of reuolt and flying off.
Fetch me a better answer.
Glo. My deere Lord,
You know the fiery quality of the Duke,
How vnremoueable and fixt he is
In his owne course.
Lear. Vengeance, Plague, Death, Confusion:
Fiery? What quality? Why Gloster, Gloster,
I'ld speake with the Duke of Cornewall, and his wife.
Glo. Well my good Lord, I haue inform'd them so.
Lear. Inform'd them? Do'st thou vnderstand me man.
Glo. I my good Lord.
Lear. The King would speake with Cornwall,
The deere Father
Would with his Daughter speake, commands, tends, ser-
Are they inform'd of this? My breath and bloods (uice, Fiery? The fiery Duke, tell the hot Duke that ——
No, but not yet, may be he is not well,
Infirmity doth still neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound we are not our selues,
When Nature being oppreſt, commands the mind
To suffer with the body, Ile forbeare,
And am fallen out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit,
For the sound man. Death on my state: wherefore
Should he sit heere? This act perswades me,
That this remotion of the Duke and her
Is practise only. Giue me my Seruant forth;
Go tell the Duke, and's wife, I'ld speake with them:
Now, presently: bid them come forth and heare me,
Or at their Chamber doore Ile beate the Drum,
Till it cry sleepe to death.
Glo. I would haue all well betwixt you. Exit.
Lear. Oh me my heart! My rising heart! But down.
Fool. Cry to it Nuncle, as the Cockney did to the Eeles, when she put em i'th' Paste aliue, she knapt em o'th coxcombs with a ſtick, and cryed downe wantons, downe, 'twas her Brother, that in pure kindneſſe to his Horſe buttered his Hay.

Enter Cornewall, Regan, Gloſter, Seruants.
Lear. Good morrow to you both.
Corn. Haile to your Grace. Kent here ſet at liberty.
Reg. I am glad to ſee your Highneſſe.
Lear. Regan, I think you are. I know what reaſon
I haue to think ſo, if thou ſhould'ſt not be glad,
I would diuorce me from thy Mothers Tombe,
Sepulchring an Adulteresſe. O are you free?
Some other time for that. Beloued Regan,
Thy Sisters naught: oh Regan, ſhe hath tied
Sharpe-tooth'd vnkindneſſe, like a vulture heere,
I can ſcarce ſpeake to thee, thou'lt not beleeue
With how depraue'd a quality. Oh Regan.
Reg. I pray you Sir, take patience, I haue hope
You leſſe know how to value her deſert,
Then ſhe to ſcant her duetie.
Lear. Say? How is that?
Reg. I cannot thinke my Sister in the leaſt
Would faile her Obligation. If Sir perchance
She haue reſtrained the Riots of your Followers,
Tis on ſuch ground, and to ſuch wholeſome end,
As cleeres her from all blame.
Lear. My curſes on her.
Reg. O Sir, you are old,
Nature in you ſtands on the very Verge
Of his confine: you ſhould be rul'd, and led
By ſome diſcretion, that diſcernes your ſtate
Better then you your ſelfe: therefore I pray you,
That to our Sister, you do make returne,
Say you haue wrong'd her.
Lear. Aske her forgiueneſſe?
Do you but marke how this becomes the houſe?
Deere daughter, I confeſſe that I am old;
Age is vnneceſſary: on my knees I begge,
That you'l vouchſafe me Raiment, Bed, and Food.
Reg. Good Sir, no more: theſe are vnſightly trickes:
Returne you to my Sister.
Lear. Neuer Regan:
She hath abated me of halfe my Traine;
Look'd blacke vpon me, ſtrooke me with her Tongue
Moſt Serpent-like, vpon the very Heart.
All the ſtor'd Vengeances of Heauen, fall
On her ingrateſull top! ſtrike her yong bones
You taking Ayres, with Lameneſſe.
Corn. Fye ſir, fie.
Lear. You nimble Lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her ſcornfull eyes: Infect her Beauty,
You Fen-ſuck'd Fogges, drawne by the powrfull Sunne,
To fall, and blaſter
Reg. O the bleſt Gods!
So will you wiſh on me, when the raſh moode is on.
Lear. No Regan, thou ſhalt neuer haue my curſe:
Thy tender-hefted Nature ſhall not giue
Thee o're to harſhneſſe: Her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort, and not burne. 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleaſures, to cut off my Traine,
To bandy haſty words, to ſcant my ſizes,
And in conclusion, to oppoſe the bolt
Againſt my comming in. Thou better know'ſt
The Offices of Nature, bond of Childhood,
Effects of Curteſie, dues of Gratitude:
Thy halfe o'th Kingdome haſt thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd
Reg. Good Sir, to'th'purpoſe. Tucket within.
Lear. Who put my man i'th'Stockes?
Enter Steward.
Corn. What Trumpet's that?
Reg. I know't, my Siſters: this approues her Letter,
That ſhe would ſoone be heere. Is your Lady come?
Lear. This is a Slaue, whoſe eaſie borrowed pride
Dwels in the ſickly grace of her he followes.
Out Varlet, from my ſight.
Corn. What meanes your Grace?
Enter Gentill.
Lear. Who ſtocke my Seruant? Regan, I haue good hope
Thou did'ſt not know on't.
Who comes here? O Heauens!
If you do loue old men; if your ſweet ſway
Allow Obedience; if you your ſelues are old,
Make it your cauſe. Send downe, and take my part.
Art not aſham'd to looke vpon this Beard?
O Regan, will you take her by the hand?
Gen. Why not by'th'hand Sir? How haue I offended?
All's not offence that indiſcretion findes,
And dotage termes ſo.
Lear. O ſides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?
How came my man i'th'Stockes?
Corn. I ſet him there, Sir: but his owne Diſorders

Deſerue'd

Deserued much lesse aduancement.
Lear. You? Did you?
Reg. I pray you hauing heare being weake, seeme so.
[illegible] expectation of your Mouth
You will reuolue and [illegible] with my Sister,
Dismisse [illegible] your traine, come then to me,
I am [illegible] out of that prouision
Which shall be needful for your entertainement.
Lear. Returne to her? And fifty men dismiss'd?
No, rather I abiure all roofes, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o'th' ayre,
To be a Comrade with the Wolfe, and Owle,
Necessities sharpe pinch. Returne with her?
Why the Hot-blooded France, that dowerlesse tooke
Our youngest borne, I could as well be brought
To knee his Throne, and Squire-like pension beg,
To keepe base life a foote. Returne with her?
Perswade me rather to be slaue and sumpter
To this detested groome.
Gon. At your choice Sir.
Lear. I prythee Daughter do not make me mad,
I will not trouble thee my Child, farewell:
We'll no more meete, no more see one another.
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my Daughter,
Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needes call mine. Thou art a Boile,
A plague-sore, an imposthume in my blood,
Who hast but power to shame me. Hate him not,
I can chide, not curse. He not chide thee,
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it,
I do not bid the Thunder-bearer shoote,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-iudging Ioue,
Mend when thou can'st, be better at thy leysure,
I can be patient, I can stay with Regan,
I and my hundred Knights.
Reg. Not altogether so,
I look'd not for you yet, nor am prouided
For your fit welcome, giue eare Sir to my Sister,
And execute what she desires to your [illegible]
Must be content to think you old, and so,
But she knowes what she doth.
Lear. Is this well spoken?
Reg. I dare auouch it Sir, what fifty followers?
Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea or so many? Sith that both charge and danger,
Speake 'gainst so great a number? How in one house
Should many people, vnder two commands
Hold amity? 'Tis hard, almost impossible.
Gon. Why might not you my Lord, receiue attendance
From those that she cals Seruants, or from mine?
Reg. Why not my Lord?
If then they chanc'd to slacke ye,
We could controll them; if you will come to me,
(For now I spie a danger) I entreate you
To bring but fiue and twenty, to dismisse
My followers at once, and I will vse
So many, and my Louing thoughts to you.
Lear. I gaue you all.
Reg. And in good time you gaue it.
Lear. Made you my Guardians, my Depositaries,
But kept a reseruation to be followed
With such a number. What, must I come to you
With fiue and twenty, Regan said you so?
Reg. And speake't againe my Lord, no more with me.
Lear. Those wicked Creatures yet do look well fauour'd
When others are more wicked; not being the worst
Stands in some rank of praise. He go with thee,
Thy fifty yet doth double fiue and twenty,
And thou art twice her Loue.
Gon. Heare me my Lord;
What need you fiue and twenty? Ten? Or fiue?
To follow in a house where twice so many
Haue a command to tend you?
Reg. What need one?
Lear. O reason not the need: our baser Beggers
Are in the poorest thing superfluous,
Allow not Nature more than Nature needs
Mans life is cheape as Beasts. Thou art a Lady,
If only to go warme were gorgeous,
Why Nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st
Which scarcely keepes thee warme, but for true need,
You Heauens giue me that patience patience I need,
You see me here (you Gods) a poore old man,
As full of griefe as age, wretched in both,
If it be you that stirre these Daughters hearts
Against their Father, fooles me not so much,
To beare it tamely, touch me with Noble anger,
And let not womens weapons water drops,
Staine my mans cheeke. No you vnnatural Hags,
I will haue such reuenges on you both,
That all the world shall—— I will do such things,
What they are yet I know not, but they shall be
The terrors of the earth. You thinke I'le weepe,
No, I'le not weepe, I haue full cause of weeping.
Storme and Tempest.
But this heart shall break into a hundred thousand flawes
Or ere I'le weepe; O Foole, I shall go mad. Exeunt Lear, Kent, Gentleman, Fool.
Corn. Let vs withdraw, 'twill be a Storme.
Reg. This house is little, the old man and his people,
Cannot be well bestow'd.
Gon. 'Tis his owne blame hath put himselfe from rest,
And must needs taste his folly.
Reg. For his particular, I'le receiue him gladly,
But not one follower.
Gon. So am I purpos'd.
Where is my Lord of Gloster?
Enter Gloster.
Corn. Followed the old Knaue this way, but return'd
Glo. The King is in high rage.
Corn. Whether is he going?
Glo. He calls to horse, but will I know not whether.
Corn. 'Tis best to giue him way, he leads himselfe.
Gon. My Lord, entreat him by no meanes to stay.
Glo. Alacke the night comes on, and the high windes
Do sorely ruffle; for many Miles about
There's scarce a bush.
Reg. O Sir, to wilfull men,
The iniuries that they themselues procure,
Must be their schoole-Masters. Shut vp your doores,
He is attended with a desperate traine,
And what they may incense him too, being apt
To haue his eare abus'd, wisedome bids feare.
Corn. Shut vp your doores my Lord, 'tis a wil'd night,
My Regan counsels well, come out o'th' storme. Exeunt

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Storme still. Enter Kent, and a Gentleman, seuerally.

Kent. Who's there besides foule weather?
Gen. One minded of the same with the King,

Kent. I know you. Where's the King?

Gent. Contending with the fretfull Elements;
Bids the winde blow the Earth into the Sea,
Or swell the curled Waters 'boue the Maine,
That things might change, or cease.

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the Foole, who labours to out-iest
His heart-strooke iniuries.

Kent. Sir I do know you,
And dare vpon the warrants of my note
Commend a deere thing to you. There is diuision
(Although as yet the face of it is couer'd
With mutuall cunning) 'twixt Albany and Cornwall
Who haue (as who haue not, that their great Starres Thron'd and set high?) Seruants, who seeme no leſſe,
Which are to France the Spies and Speculations
Intelligent of our State. What hath been seene,
Either in ſnuffes, and packings of the Dukes
Or the hard Rein which both of them hath borne
Against the old kinde King, or ſomething deeper,
Whereof (perchance) these are but furnishings.

Gent. I will not be the Diuell to say.

Kent. Nay do not.
For certain am I there is a friendly matter
(Vnder the meere out-walls, to speake with you)
What ſhall you offer Cordelia, (As I feare not but you ſhall finde the vantage)
And ſhew the Horſe you haue of her admit
That yet you are ignorant. The Iarres toward,
I will go ſeeke the King.

Gent. Giue me your hand,
Haue you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but to effect more then all yet;
That when we haue found the King (in which your paine
That way, I'le this) he that firſt lights on him,
Holla the other. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Storme ſtill. Enter Lear and Foole.

Lear. Blow winds & crack your cheeks, Rage, blow
You Cataracts, and Hyrricano's ſpout,
Till you haue drench'd our Steeples, drown the Cockes
You Sulphurous and Thought-executing Fires,
Vaunt-curriers of Oake-cleaning Thunder-bolts,
Sindge my white head. And thou all-ſhaking Thunder,
Smite flat the thicke Rotundity o'th'world,
Crack Nature moulds, all germaines ſpill at once
That make vngrateful Man.

Foole. O Nuncle Court holy-water in a dry house is better then this Rain-water out o' doore. Good Nuncle in, aske thy Daughter bleſſing, heere's a night pitties neither Wiſe-men nor Fooles.

Lear. Rumble thy fill, fire fall and Raine
Now ſaue the Winde and Raine haue my Daughters,
I taxe not you my Elements with vnkindneſſe.
I neuer gaue you Kingdome, call'd you Children,
You owe me no ſubſcription. Then let fall
Your horrible pleaſure. Heere I ſtand your Slaue,
A poore, infirme, weake and diſpiſed old man.
But yet I call you Seruile Miniſters,
That will with two pernicious Daughters ioyne
Your high-engender'd Battailes, gainſt a head

So old, and white as this. O, ho! 'tis foule.

Foole. He that has a house to put's head in, has a good Head-peece.
The Cod-piece that will house before the head has any,
The Head and he ſhall Louſe: ſo Beggers marry many.
The man yͤ makes his Toe what he his Hart ſhould make,
Shall of a Corne cry woe, and turne his ſleepe to wake.
For there was neuer yet faire woman, but ſhee made mouthes in a glaſſe.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the patterne of all patience,
I will ſay nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Foole. Marry heres Grace, and a Cod-peece, that's a Wiſeman, and a Foole.

Kent. Alas Sir are you here? Things that loue night,
Loue not ſuch nights as these? The wrathfull Skies
Gallow the very wanderers of the darke
And make them keepe their Caues: Since I was man,
Such ſheets of fire, ſuch burſts of horrid Thunder,
Such groanes of roaring Winde and Raine, I neuer
Remember to haue heard. Mans Nature cannot carry
Th'affliction nor the feare.

Lear. Let the great Gods
That keepe this dreadfull pudder o're our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble thou Wretch,
That haſt within thee vndiuulged Crimes
Vnwhipt of Iuſtice. Hide thee, thou Bloody hand;
Thou periur'd, and thou Simular of Vertue
That are inceſtuous. Caytiffe to peeces ſhake
That vnder couert, and conuenient ſeeming
Haſt practiſ'd on mans life: Close pent-vp guilts,
Riue your concealing Continents, and cry
These dreadful Summoners grace. I am a man,
More ſinn'd againſt, then ſinning.

Kent. Alacke bare-headed?
Gracious my Lord, hard by heere is a Houell,
Some friendſhip will it lend you gainſt the Tempeſt
Repoſe you there, while I to this hard houſe,
More harder then the ſtones whereof 'tis rais'd,
Which euen but now, demanding after you,
Denyed me to come in) returne, and force
Their ſcanted courteſie.

Lear. My wits begin to turne.
Come on my boy. How dost my boy? Art cold?
I am cold my ſelfe. Where is this Straw, my Fellow?
The Art of our Neceſſities is ſtrange,
And can make vile things precious. Come, your Houell,
Poore Foole and Knaue, I haue one part in my heart
That's ſorry yet for thee.

Foole. He that has a little-tyne wit,
With heigh-ho, the Winde and the Raine,
Muſt make content with his Fortunes fit,
Though the Raine it raineth euery day.

Lear. True Boy. Come bring vs to this Houell. Exit.

Foole. This is a braue night to cool a Curtizan.
Ile ſpeake a Prophecie ere I go:
When Prieſts are more in word then matter,
When Brewers marre their Malt with water;
When Nobles are their Taylors Tutors,
No Heretiques burn'd, but wenches Suitors;
When euery Caſe in Law is right;
No Squire in debt, nor no poore Knight,
When Slanders do not liue in Tongues,
Nor Cut-purſes come not to throngs;
When Vſurers tell their Gold i'th'Field,

And

And Baudes, and whores, do Churches build,
Then shall the Realme of Albion come to great confusion:
Then comes the time, who liues to see't,
That going shalbe vs'd with feet. (come.
This prophecie Merlin shall make, for I liue before his

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gloster, and Bastard.

Glo. Alacke alacke Edmund, I like not this vnnaturall dealing: when I desired their leaue that I might pity him, they tooke from me the vse of mine owne house, charged me on paine of perpetuall displeasure, neither to speake of him entreat for him, or any way sustaine him.

Bast. Most sauage and vnnaturall.

Glo. Go too, say you nothing. There is diuision betweene the Dukes, and a worse matter then that: I haue receiued a Letter this night, 'tis dangerous to be spoken, I haue locked the Letter in my Closet, these iniuries the King now beares will be reuenged home, there is part of a Power already footed, we must incline to the King, I will looke him, and priuily relieue him: go you and maintaine talke with the Duke, that my charity be not of him perceiued, If he aske for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no lesse is threatned me, the King my old Master must be relieued. There is strange things toward Edmund, pray you be carefull. Exit.

Bast. This Courtesie forbid thee, shall the Duke
Instantly know, and of that Letter too:
This seemes a faire deseruing, and must draw me
That which my Father loses, no lesse then all,
The younger rises, when the old doth fall. Exit

Scena Quarta.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Foole.

Kent. Here is the place my Lord, good my Lord enter,
The tirany of the open night's too rough
For Nature to endure. Storme still
Lear. Let me alone.
Kent. Good my Lord enter here.
Lear. Wilt breake my heart?
Kent. I had rather breake mine owne,
Good my Lord enter.
Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much that this contentious storme
Inuades vs to the skin: so 'tis to thee,
But where the greater malady is fixt,
The lesser is scarce felt. Thou'dst shun a Beare:
But if thy flight lay toward the roaring Sea
Thou'dst meet the Beare i'th mouth. When the mind's free,
The bodies delicate: the tempest in my mind,
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Saue what beates there. Filiall ingratitude,
Is it not as this mouth should teare this hand
For lifting food to't? But I will punish home.
No, I will weepe no more. In such a night,
To shut me out? Powre on I will endure
In such a night as this? O Regan, Goneril,
Your old kind Father, whose franke heart gaue all,
O that way madnesse lies, let me shun that:
No more of that.
Kent. Good my Lord enter here.
Lear. Prythee go in thy selfe, seeke thine owne ease,
This tempest will not giue me leaue to ponder
On things would hurt me more: but I'le go in.
In, Boy; go first. You houselesse pouerty,
Nay get thee in. I'le pray, and then I'le sleepe.
Poore naked wretches, wheresoe're you are
That bide the pelting of this pitilesse storme,
How shall your houselesse heads and vnfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggednesse defend you
From seasons such as these? O I haue ta'ne
Too little care of this. Take Physicke Pompe,
Expose thy selfe to feele what wretches feele,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew the Heauens more iust.

Enter Edgar and Foole.

Edg. Fathom and halfe, fathom and halfe, poore Tom.
Foole. Come not in here Nuncle, here's a spirit, helpe me, helpe me.
Kent. Giue me thy hand, who's there?
Foole. A spirit, a spirit, he sayes his name's poore Tom.
Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i'th straw? Come forth.
Edg. Away the foule Fiend followes me: through the sharpe Hauthorne blow the windes. Humh, go to thy bed and warme thee.
Lear. Did'st thou giue all to thy Daughters? And art thou come to this?
Edg. Who giues any thing to poore Tom? Whom the foule Fiend hath led through fire, and through flame, and through Sword and Whirle-pooles, ore Bogges and Quagmires, that hath layd Knives vnder his Pillow, and Halters in his Pue, set Ratsbane by his Porredge, made him proud of heart to ride on a Bay trotting Horse ouer foure inch'd Bridges, to course his owne shadow for a Traitor. Bless thy five Wits, Tom's cold. O do de, do de, do de. Blesse thee from Whirle Winds, Starre-blasting, and taking. Do poore Tom some charitie, whom the foule Fiend vexes. There could I haue him now, and there, and there, and there againe, and there. Storme still.
Lear. Ha's his Daughters brought him to this passe?
Could'st thou saue nothing? Would'st thou giue 'em all?
Foole. Nay he reserued a Blanket, else we had all beene wet.
Lear. Now all the plagues that in the pendulous ayre
Hang fated o'er mens faults, fall on thy Daughters.
Kent. He hath no Daughters Sir.
Lear. Death Traitor, nothing could haue subdu'd Nature
To such a lownesse, but his vnkind Daughters. (Nature
Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers
Should haue thus little mercy on their flesh?
Iudicious punishment, 'twas this flesh begot
Those Pelicane Daughters.
Edg. Pillicock sate on Pillicock hill, alow, alow, loo loo.
Foole. This cold night will turne vs all to Fooles, and Madmen.
Edgar. Take heed o'th foule Fiend, obey thy Parents, keepe thy words Iustice, sweare not, commit not with [illegible] Spaniels [illegible] Dogge, [illegible] Sweet-heart on [illegible] Tom a Bedlam.

Lear. What art thou fellow?

Edg. A Seruingman? I [illegible] heart and minde, [illegible] day, and night, [illegible] Gentlemens [illegible] Maisters [illegible] wore [illegible] swore as many [illegible] wiues, [illegible] Bed [illegible] Horse [illegible] Dog [illegible] Bed, [illegible] Sheepe [illegible] Wheele [illegible] Dog [illegible] Horse, Rogge [illegible] Lender [illegible] Prison [illegible] Sword, [illegible] Blood [illegible] Lechers [illegible] Horse [illegible] Boote, Hogge [illegible] Cat [illegible] Ware [illegible] Beggar [illegible] Woman [illegible] Mistris [illegible] Kersey [illegible] Mowse [illegible] Rat [illegible] Rug [illegible] Dogge [illegible] Loue [illegible] Hound [illegible] Purse [illegible] Hart [illegible] Ladies [illegible] Blanket [illegible] Horse [illegible] Traine [illegible] Shooe [illegible] Troth [illegible] Dice [illegible] Hell [illegible] Starre [illegible] Whore [illegible] Drab [illegible] Vomit [illegible] Nose [illegible] Pye [illegible] Placket [illegible] Pen [illegible] Beefe [illegible] Heele [illegible] Spider [illegible] Modo [illegible] Maho [illegible] Flibbertigibbet [illegible] Mopping [illegible] Mowing [illegible] Who [illegible] Foule [illegible] Fiend [illegible] Rides [illegible] Forth [illegible] Cocke [illegible] Horse [illegible] Halter [illegible] Woollen [illegible] Lendings [illegible] Knees [illegible] Hat [illegible] Ribbon [illegible] Neck [illegible] Liuer [illegible] Lilly [illegible] Table [illegible] Prayer [illegible] Curse [illegible] Cold [illegible] Sleepes [illegible] Maw [illegible] Bay [illegible] Salt [illegible] Sweare [illegible] Scene [illegible]

Lear. Thou wert better in a Graue, then to answer with thy vncouered body, this extremity of the skies. Is man no more than this? Consider him well. Thou ow'st the Worme no Silke, the Beast no Hide, the Sheepe no Wooll, the Cat no perfume. Ha? Heere's three on's are sophisticated. Thou art the thing it selfe: vnaccommodated man is no more but such a poore, bare, forked Animall as thou art. Off, off you lendings: Come, vnbutton heere.

Enter Gentleman with a Torch.

Fool. Prythee Nuncle be contented, 'tis a naughty night to swim in. Now a little fire in a wilde field, were like an old Lecherous Mans heart, a small spark, all the rest on's body cold. Looke heere comes a Walking fire.

Edg. This is the foule Flibbertigibbet: he begins at Curfew, and walkes at first Cocke. He giues the Web and the Pin, squints the eye, and makes the Harelip: Mildewes the White Wheate, and hurts the poore Creature of earth.

[illegible] Swithold [illegible]
Hee [illegible] Night-Mare, [illegible]
[illegible] Lights, [illegible]
[illegible] Pathway [illegible]
Kent. How fares your Grace?
Lear. What's he?
Kent. Who's there? What is't you seeke?
Glou. What are you there? Your names?
Edg. Poore [illegible] Tom, [illegible] Frogge, [illegible] Toad, [illegible] Lizard, [illegible] Newt, [illegible] Water [illegible] that [illegible] Cow-dung [illegible] Sallets, [illegible] Ditch, [illegible] Dead [illegible] Drinke, [illegible] Pelting [illegible] Mansion [illegible] Shunning [illegible] Hound [illegible] Whip [illegible] Three [illegible] Sixe [illegible] Horse [illegible] Beefe, [illegible] Swine [illegible] Rat [illegible] Ration, [illegible] Dog [illegible] Coate.
Kent. [illegible] Dearer,
[illegible] Friend, [illegible] Seuen [illegible] Yeares [illegible] Prayers [illegible] Sleepe [illegible] Lord, [illegible] Grace [illegible] Company?
Edg. [illegible] a Gentleman Modo [illegible].
[illegible] Sonne [illegible] my Lord, [illegible] growne [illegible]
Edg. Poore [illegible]
[illegible] Gentlewoman, my [illegible] cannot [illegible]

To obey [illegible] your daughters hard commands:
[illegible] command me to barre my doores,
[illegible] Tempest [illegible] take hold upon you,
[illegible] heare you cursed to come seeke you out,
And [illegible] you were both horse, and food to feede.
Lear. Thou'dst [illegible] like wat'rish Labourer,
What [illegible] dost [illegible]
Kent. Good my Lord take his offer,
Go into [illegible]
Lear. Let me [illegible] a word with this [illegible] learned Theban.
What is your [illegible]
Edg. How to prepare the Feend, and to kill Vermine.
Lear. Let me aske you one word in priuate.
Kent. Importune him once more to go my Lord,
His [illegible] begin [illegible]
Glou. Can'st [illegible] him? Storme still [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

Corn. True or falſe, it hath made thee Earle of Glouceſter. Seeke out where thy Father is, that he may be ready for our apprehenſion.

Bast. If I finde him comforting the King, it will ſtuffe his ſuſpition more fully. I will perſeuer in my courſe of Loyalty, though the conflict be ſore betweene that, and my blood.

Corn. I will lay truſt vpon thee: and thou ſhalt finde a deere Father in my loue. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Kent and Glouceſter.

Glou. Here is better then the open Ayre, take it thankefully. I will peece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you. Exit.

Kent. All the power of his wits, haue given way to his impatience: the Gods reward your kindneſſe.

Enter Lear, Fool, and Edgar.

Edg. Frateretto calls me, and tells me Nero is an Angler in the Lake of Darkneſſe. Pray Innocent, and beware the foule Fiend.

Foole. Prythee Nuncle tell me, whether a madman be a Gentleman or a Yeoman.

Lear. A King, a King.

Foole. No, he's a Yeoman, that has a Gentleman to his Sonne: for he's a mad Yeoman that ſees his Sonne a Gentleman before him.

Lear. To haue a thouſand with red burning ſpits come hiſſe vpon them.

Edg. Bleſſe thy five wits.

Kent. O pity! Sir, where is the patience now That you ſo oft haue boaſted to retaine?

Edg. My teares begin to take his part ſo much, They marre my counterfeiting.

Lear. The little dogges and all, Trey, Blanch, and Sweet-heart ſee, they barke at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them. Auaunt you Curres: Be thy mouth or blacke or white, Tooth that poyſons if it bite: Maſtiffe, Grey-hound, Mongrill, Grim, Hound or Spaniell, Brache, or Hym: Or Bobtaile tight, or Troudle taile, Tom will make him weepe and waile, For with throwing thus my head: Dogges leape the hatch, and all are fled, Do, de, de, de. Sessa. Come, march to Wakes and Faires, And Market Townes. Poore Tom thy horne is dry.

Lear. Then let them Anatomize Regan: See what breeds about her heart. Is there any cauſe in Nature that make theſe hard-hearts. You, Sir, I entertaine for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the faſhion of your garments. You will ſay they are Perſian; but let them be chang'd.

Enter Glouſter.

Kent. Now good my Lord, lye here, and reſt awhile.

Lear. Make no noiſe, make no noiſe, draw the Curtaines: ſo, ſo, we'l go to Supper i'th' morning.

Foole. And I'le go to bed at noone.

Glou. Come hither Friend.
Where is the King my Maſter?

Kent. Here Sir, but trouble him not, his wits are gone.

Glou. Good friend I prythee take him in thy armes, I haue o're-heard a plot of death vpon him: There is a litter ready, lay him in't, And driue towards Douer, friend, where thou ſhalt meete Both welcome and protection. Take vp thy Maſter, If ſhould ſtay halfe an houre, his life, with mine, Do what you will, thus much I muſt deſire you, That what we do, it be moſt ſpeedily.

Kent. Then be it ſo my good Lord. How do's the King?

Glou. Mad as the vext Sea, ſinging aloud, Againſt too narrow Rimes and Bounds of Hoſtile force, Which dare not touch him, what further will hee vſe, Then flight with him: So thinke the Caſtle vnſure, Till further ſettling.

Kent. Will't pleaſe your Lord, I'le ſtay.

Glou. Out of my ſorrow I am fooliſh, then I ſhall Euen the very Dragon my diſeaſe. Sir, I do beſeech you, Take you my Maſter.

Kent. Well, Sir, o'th' way.

Glou. Good friend I prythee take him, for my life, Be ſuſpitious of his gouernance.

Kent. Oppreſſed Nature ſleepes: This reſt might yet haue balmed thy broken ſinewes, Which if conuenience will not allow, Stand in aſſured loſſe. Take vp, take vp, And follow me, that will to ſome prouiſion Giue thee quicke conduct. Come, come, away. Exeunt.

Scena Septima.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gonerill, Baſtard, and Seruants.

Corn. Poſt ſpeedily to your Lord, your Husband, ſhew him this Letter. The Army of France is landed. Seeke out the Traitor Glouceſter.

Reg. Hang him inſtantly.

Gon. Plucke out his eyes.

Corn. Leaue the puniſhment to vs. Edmund, keepe you our Siſter company: the reuenges we are bound to take vpon your Traiterous Father, are not fit for your beholding. Aduiſe the Duke where you are going, to a moſt feſtinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Our Poſts ſhall be ſwift, and intelligent betwixt vs. Farewell deere Siſter, farewell my Lord of Glouceſter.

Enter Steward.

How now? Where's the King?

Stew. My Lord of Glouceſter hath conueyed him hence. Some fiue or ſix and thirty of his Knights Hot Queſtrits after him, met him at gate, Who, with ſome other of the Lords, dependants, Are gone with him toward Douer, where they boaſt To haue well armed Friends.

Corn. Get horſes for your Miſtreſſe.

Gon. Farewell ſweet Lord, and Siſter. Exit.

Corn. Edmund, farewell. Go ſeeke the Traitor Glouceſter, Pinnion him like a Theefe, bring him before vs. Though well we may not paſſe vpon his life Without the forme of Juſtice, yet our power Shall do a curſie to our wrath, which men May blame, but not compraue.

Enter Glouceſter, and Seruants.

Wherefore bound? Who is the Traitor?

Reg. Ingratefull Fox, 'tis he.

Corn. Bind faſt his corky armes.

Glou. What meanes your Graces? Good my Friends conſider you are my Gueſts: Do me no foule play, Friends.

Corn. Bind him I ſay.

Reg. Hard, hard. O filthy Traitor.

Glou. Vnmerciful Lady as you are, I'me none.

Corn. To this Chaire bind him, Villaine, thou ſhalt finde.

Glou. By the kinde Gods, 'tis moſt ignobly done To plucke me by the Beard.

Reg. So white, and ſuch a Traitor?

Glou. Naughty Lady,
These haires which you doſt ranſh from my chin Will quicken and accuſe thee. I am your Hoſt, With Robbers hands, my hoſpitable fauours

You

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?
Corn. Come Sir,
What Letters had you late from France?
Reg. Be simple answerd, for we know the truth.
Corn. And what confederacie haue you with the Traitors, late footed in the Kingdome?
Reg. To whose hands
You haue sent the Lunaticke King: Speake.
Glou. I haue a letter, gessingly set downe
Which came from one that's of a newer part,
And not from one oppos'd.
Corn. Cunning.
Reg. And false.
Corn. Where hast thou sent the King?
Glou. To Douer.
Reg. Wherefore to Douer?
Was't thou not charg'd, at perill?
Corn. Wherefore to Douer? Let him answer that.
Glou. I am tyed to'th Stake,
And I must stand the Course.
Reg. Wherefore to Douer?
Glou. Because I would not see thy cruell Nailes
Plucke out his poore old eyes; nor thy fierce Sister,
In his Anointed flesh stick Boarish fangs.
The Sea, with such a Storme as his bare head
In Hell-black night indur'd, would haue buoy'd vp
And quench'd the Stelled fires:
Yet poore old heart, he holpe the Heauens to raine.
If Wolues had at thy Gate howl'd that sterne time,
Thou should'st haue said, good Porter turne the Key.
All Cruels else subscribe: but I shall see
The winged Vengeance ouertake such Children.
Corn. See't shalt thou neuer. Fellowes hold the Chaire,
Vpon these eyes of thine, Ile set my foote.
Glou. He that will think to liue till he be old,
Giue me some helpe. — O cruell! O you Gods!
Reg. One side will mocke another: th'other too.
Corn. If you see vengeance —
Seru. Hold your hand, my Lord:
I haue seru'd you euer since I was a Child:
But better seruice haue I neuer done you,
Than to bid this, which good manners shall Hold my hand from speaking: Should it still Proceed in his hot way, worse might ensue:
But beshrew me, the instances of Loue
Make me more bold.
Corn. How now, you dog?
Seru. If you did weare a beard vpon your chin,
I'd shake it on this quarrell. What do you meane?
Corn. My Villaine!
Seru. Nay then come on, and take the chance of anger.
Reg. Giue me my Sword. A Peasant stand vp thus?
Seru. O I haue ta'ne
Too much of your owne Law: (Hold your hand, my Lord)
A Dogge, a Bloud-hound: if I had my Sword,
I'ld not be stom'ack'd with a Father:
Corn. How dare my Dastard, my Cullion, Darely leaue?
Where is your Swords?
Edmund Why so thy Slaue, thy Foe?
To noble Anger.
Reg. Out, Treacherous Villaine,
Thou call'st on him that hates thee: It was he
That made the ouerture of thy Treasons to vs,
Who is too good to pittie thee.
Glou. O my Follies! then Edgar was abus'd,
Kinde Gods forgiue me that, and prosper him.
Reg. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell
His way to Douer. Exit with Glouster
How is't my Lord? How look'st you?
Corn. I haue receiu'd a hurt: Follow me Lady,
Turne out that eyelesse Villaine: throw this Slaue
Vpon the Dunghill. Regan, I bleed apace,
Vntimely comes this hurt, Giue me your arme. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus and known to be contemn'd,
Than still contemn'd and flattered, to be worst:
The lowest and most deiected thing of Fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lyes not in feare:
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returnes to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou vnsubstantiall ayre that I embrace:
The Wretch that thou hast blowne vnto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts.
Enter Gloucester, and an Old man.
But who comes heere? My Father poorely led?
World, World, O world!
But that thy strange mutations make vs hate thee,
Life would not yeelde to age.
Old. O my good Lord, I haue beene your Tenant,
And your Fathers Tenant, these fourescore yeares.
Glou. Away, get thee away: good Friend be gone,
Thy comforts can do me no good at all,
Thee they may hurt.
Old. You cannot see your way.
Glou. I haue no way, and therefore want no eyes:
I stumbled when I saw. Full oft 'tis seene
Our meanes secure vs, and our meere defects
Proue our Commodities. O deere Son Edgar,
The food of thy abused Fathers wrath,
Might I but liue to see thee in my touch,
I'ld say I had eyes againe.
Old. How now? Who's there?
Edg. O Gods! Who is't can say I am at the worst?
I am worse than ere I was.
Old. 'Tis poore mad Tom.
Edg. And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
So long as we can say this is the worst.
Old. Fellow, where goest?
Glou. Is it a Beggar-man?
Old. Madman, and beggar too.
Glou. He has some reason, else he could not beg.
I'th last nights Storme I such a Fellow saw;
Which made me think a Man, a Worme. My Sonne
Came then into my mind, and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him.
I haue heard more since.
As flies to wanton Boyes, are we to th'Gods,
They kill vs for their sport.
Edg. How should this be?
Bad is the Trade that must play Foole to sorrow,
Ang'ring it selfe and others. Blesse thee Master.
Glou. Is that the naked Fellow?
Old. I, my Lord.
Glou. Get thee away: If for my sake
Thou wilt ore-take vs hence a mile or twaine
I'th'way toward Douer, doe it for ancient loue,
And bring some couering for this naked Soule,
Which I'le intreate to leade me.
Old. Alacke sir, he is mad.

Glou. 'Tis the time plagues,
When Madmen leade the blinde:
Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure
Above the rest, be gone.
Oldm. Ile bring him the best Parrel that I haue
Come on't what will. Exit
Glou. Sirrah, naked fellow.
Edg. Poore Tom's a-cold. I cannot daub it further.
Glou. Come hither fellow
Edg. And yet I must
Bleste thy sweete eyes, they bleede
Glou. Know'st thou the way to Douer?
Edg. Both stile and gate, Horse-way and foot-path.
poore Tom hath been scar'd out of his good wits. Bless thee good man's sonne from the foule Fiend.
Glou. Here take this purse, thou whom the heauens plagues
Hast not inuented to antoole: thou liu'st wretched
Make thee the happier. Heauens deale so still:
Let the superfluous, and Lust-dieted man
That slaues your ordinance, that will not see
Because he doth not feele, feele your powre quickly.
So distribution should vndoe excesse,
And each man haue enough. Dost thou know Douer?
Edg. I Master.
Glou. There is a Cliffe whose high and bending head
Looke fearefully in the confined Deepe:
Bring me but to the very brimme of it,
And I'le repayre the misery thou dost beare
With something rich about me: from that place,
I shall no leading need.
Edg. Giue me thy arme;
Poore Tom shall leade thee. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Generall, Bastard, and Steward.

Gon. Welcome my Lord. I meruell our mild husband
Not met vs on the way. Now where's your Master?
Stew. Madam within, but neuer man so chang'd.
I told him of the Army that was Landed:
He smil'd at it: I told him you were comming,
His answer was the worse: Of Glosters Treachery,
And of the loyall Seruice of his Sonne
When I inform'd him, then he cal'd me Sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out:
What most he should dislike, seemes pleasant to him;
What like, offensiue.
Gon. Then shall you go no further.
It is the Cowish terror of his spirit
That dares not vndertake: He'le not feele wrongs
Which tye him to an answer. our wishes on the way
May proue effects. Backe Edmund to my Brother,
Hasten his Musters and conduct his powres
I must change names at home, and giue the Distaffe
Into my Husbands hands. This trustie Seruant
Shall passe betweene vs: ere long you are like to heare
(If you dare venture in your owne behalfe)
A Mistresses command. Weare this; spare speech,
Decline your head. This kisse, if it durst speake
Would stretch thy Spirits vp into the ayre:
Conceiue, and fare thee well.
Bast. Yours in the ranges of death. Exit.
Gon. My most deere Gloster.
O, the difference of man, and man,
To thee a Womans seruices are due,
My Foole vsurpes my bodie.
Stew. Madam, here comes my Lord.
Enter Auany.
Gon. I haue beene worth the whistle.
Alb. O Goneril,
You are not worth the dust which the rude winde
Blowes in your face.
Gon. Milke-liuer'd man,
That bear'st a cheeke for blowes, a head for wrongs,
Who hast not in thy browes an eye-discerning
Thine honour, from thy suffering.
Alb. See thy selfe diuell:
Proper deformitie seemes not in the Fiend
So horrid as in woman.
Gon. O vaine fellow.
Enter a Messenger.
Mes. Oh my good Lord, the Duke of Cornwals dead,
Slaine by his Seruant going to put out
The other eye of Gloster.
Alb. Gloster's eyes.
Mes. A Seruant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his Sword
To his great Master, who threat-ened
Fell'd him, and with his sword it selfe vnarmed from dead,
But not without that harmefull stroke, which since
Hath pluck'd him after.
Alb. This shewes you are aboue
You Iustices that these our Natures
Scape your eyes vengeance. Bot (Opposite Gloster)
Lost he his other eye?
Mes. Both, both, my Lord.
This Letter Madam, craues a speedy answer
'Tis from your Sister.
Gon. One way I like this well
But being widdow, and my Glosters wife,
May all the building in my fancie plucke
Vpon my hatefull life. Another way
The Newes is not to be receiued, sealed, answered.
Alb. Where was his Sonne
When they did take his eye.
Mes. Come with my Lady hither.
Alb. He is not here.
Mes. No my good Lord, I met him backe againe.
Alb. Knowes he the wickednesse?
Mes. I my good Lord, 'twas he informed against him
And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment
Might haue the freer course.
Alb. Gloster, I liue
To thanke thee for the loue thou shew'dst the King,
And to reuenge thine eyes. Come hither Friend,
Tell me what more thou know'st. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Cordelia, Gentlemen, and Souldiers.

Cor. Alacke, 'tis he: why he was met euen now
As mad as the vext Sea, singing aloud,
Crown'd with rancke Fenitar and furrow weeds
With Hardokes, Hemlocke, Nettles, Cuckoo flowres,
Darnel,

Darnell, all the rancke weedes that grow
In our sustaining Corne. A Century send forth;
Search every Acre in the high-grow'n field,
And bring it to our eye. What can man's wisedome
In the restoring his bereaued Sense, he that helpes him,
Take all my outward worth.
Gent. There is one reares Madam:
Our foster Nurse of Nature, is repose,
The which he lackes that to prouoke in him
Are many Simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of Anguish.
Corn. All blest Secrets,
All you vnpublish'd Vertues of the earth,
Spring with my teares; be aydant and remediate
In the Goodmans disposition of my Lord.
Reg. Leaue me a while.
I feare me that the holy-water Daughter
Doth with her pitty-full regard, repaire
Her Fathers ranke, and choyce-lost benefits
Stew. Newes Madam,
The Brittish Powres are marching hitherward.
Corn. 'Tis known before. Our preparation stands
In expectation of them. O deere Father,
It is thy businesse that I go about. Therefore great France
My mourning, and important teares hath pittied.
No blame can be but mine. Your Brother's pronounc't
For these affaires: Come hither Oswald, wait
Vpon my Lord.
Reg. Giue me your hand.
Haue you no more to say?
Stew. Few words, but to effect
More than all yet: That when he brings you who
Maintaines your Father, you not follow him
Vnto his threatned danger, but conduct
Your Sister presently. Giue me quick notice
How you shall giue me cause to send, or say.
Reg. Be sure of that: Farewell.
Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Gloucester, and Edmund.

Glou. Edmund, he sent this curtesie to thee?
Stew. I Madam.
Glou. He describes perfect here?
Stew. Madam, my Lord is very much alter'd.
Your Sister is the better Soldier.
Glou. Lord Edmund spake not with your Lord at home?
Stew. No Madam.
Glou. What might import my Sisters Letter to him?
Stew. I know not Lord.
Glou. It is very strange.
Edm. And like a dreame affects me.
Glou. A Letter of this consequence, calls forth
Times, seasons, and reasons, to meete him here.
And I must not say these are the reasons:
The reasons are not the matter.
Edm. So please your Lordship,
I neuer knew my Father touch'd with greater griefe
Than hee did this day in your behalfe.
Glou. Ha? Letters, Traitors?
Edm. Hard and fearefull for your Lordship,
It did concerne my duty, and my loue
To send the Letter to your Lordship.
Glou. Edmund, where hast thou this Letter? Vrge not
My haste now, tell me what it speakes.
Edm. Pardon me Lord, it is hard Ambiguous betweene
Your Brother and him. Perchance his nature
Moues him to haue me keepe his Letters.
Glou. Thou no Letter Edmund?
Edm. Not that I know my Lord.
Glou. Thou didst neuer Edmund, nor no man else.
All this I see: And like a scribbled Peace-make,
Will I dissemble all. Read Edmund.
Edm. Sir, I shall find time till I effect your doubt.
Glou. And found dispatch. Where hast thou this Sword?
Edm. Sir, I know not well.
Glou. How now, how now, what newes?
Stew. So please your Lordship,
My Lady is delivered of a Son,
In this his Chamber.
Glou. My Sonne Edmund?
Edm. In this hand Madam.
Glou. I prethee conceale it.
Stew. I must not Madam:
My Lady charg'd my duty in this businesse.
Edm. Why Madam did she write this to Edmund?
Glou. Why might she not Edmund? why tell me that?
Edm. Some things I know not what. Ile loue thee much
Let me vnseale the Letter.
Stew. Madam I had rather——
Edm. I know your Lady does not loue her Husband,
I am sure of that: and at her late being heere,
She gaue strange eliads, and most speaking lookes
To Noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosome.
Stew. I Madam?

Reg. I speake in vnderstanding. Y'are: I know't,
Therefore I do aduise you take it not:
My Lord is dead: Edmund, and I haue talk'd,
And more concernments haue we on my hand
Than for your Ladies: You may gather more:
If you do finde him, pray you giue him this,
And when your Mistris heares thus much from you,
I pray desire her call her wisedome to her.
So farre you well:
If you do chance to heare of that blinde Traitor,
Preferment falls on him, that cuts him off.
Stew. Would I could meet Madam, I should shew
What party I do follow.
Reg. Farre to well.
Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Gloucester, and Edgar.

Glou. When shall I come to the top of that same hill?
Edg. You do climbe vp it now: Look how we labor.
Glou. Me thinkes the ground is eauen.
Edg. Horrible steepe.
Hearke, do you heare the Sea?
Glou. No truely.
Edg. Why then your other Senses grow imperfect
By your eyes anguish.
Glou. So may it be indeed.
Me thinkes thy voyce is alter'd, and thou speak'st
In better phrase, and matter than thou did'st.
Edg. Y'are much deceiu'd: In nothing am I chang'd
But in my Garments.
Glou. Me thinkes y'are better spoken.
Edg. Come on Sir,
Here's the place: stand still. How fearefull
And dizzie 'tis, to cast one eye so low,
That the Crowes, and Chowes that wing the midway ayre
Show scarce so grosse as Beetles. Halfe way downe
Hangs one that gathers Samphire, dreadfull Trade:
Me thinkes he seemes no bigger than his head.
The Fishermen, that walk'd vpon the beach
Appeare like Mice: and yond tall Anchoring Barke,
Diminish'd to her Cocke: her Cocke, a Buoy
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring Surge,
That on the vnnumbred idle Pebble chafes
Cannot be heard so high. I'le looke no more,
Least my braine turne, and the deficient sight
Topple downe headlong.
Glou. Set me where you stand.
Edg. Giue me your hand:
You are now within a foote of th'extreme Verge
For all beneath the Moone would I not leape vpright.
Glou. Let go my hand.
Heere Friend's another purse: in it, a Iewell
Well worth a poore mans taking. Fayries, and Gods
Prosper it with thee. Go thou further off,
Bid me farewell, and let me heare thee going.
Edg. Now fare ye well, good Sir.
Glou. With all my heart.
Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his dispaire,
Is done to cure it.
Glou. O you mighty Gods!
This world I do renounce, and in your sights

Shake

Shake patiently my great affliction off:
If I could beare it longer, and not fall
To quarrell with your great opposeleſſe willes,
My ſnuffe, and loathed part of Nature ſhould
Burne it ſelfe out. If Edgar liue, O bleſſe him.
Now Fellow, fare thee well.
Edg. Gone Sir, farewell:
And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The Treaſury of life, when life it ſelfe
Yeelds to the Theft. Had he bin where he thought,
By this had thought him parſ. Aliue, or dead?
How, you Sir: friend, heare you Sir, ſpeake.
Thus might he paſſe indeed: yet he reuiues.
What are you Sir?
Glou. Away, and let me dye
Edg. Had'ſt thou beene ought
But Gozemore, Feathers, Ayre,
(So many fathome downe precipitating)
Thou'dſt ſhiuer'd like an Egge: but thou do'ſt breath:
Haſt heauy ſubſtance, bleed'ſt not, ſpeak'ſt, art ſound.
Ten Maſts at each, make not the altitude
Which thou haſt perpendicularly fell,
Thy life's a Myracle. Speake yet againe.
Glou. But haue I falne, or no?
Edg. From the dread Sommet of this Chalkie Bourne
Looke vp a height, the ſhrill-gorg'd Larke ſo farre
Cannot be ſeene, or heard: Do but looke vp.
Glou. Alacke, I haue no eyes:
Is wretchednesſe depriu'd that benefit
To end it ſelfe by death? 'Twas yet ſome comfort,
When miſery could beguile the Tyrants rage,
And fruſtrate his proud will.
Edg. Giue me your arme.
Vp, ſo: How is't? Feele you your Leggs? You ſtand.
Glou. Too well, too well.
Edg. This is aboue all ſtrangeneſſe,
Vpon the crowne o'th'Cliffe. What thing was that
Which parted from you?
Glou. A poore vnfortunate Beggar.
Edg. As I ſtood heere below, me thought his eyes
Were two full Moones: he had a thouſand Noſes,
Hornes wealk'd, and waued like the enraged Sea:
It was ſome Fiend: Therefore thou happy Father,
Think that the cleereſt Gods, who make them Honors
Of mens impoſſibilities, haue preſerued thee.
Glou. I do remember now: henceforth Ile beare
Affliction, till it do cry out it ſelfe
Enough, enough, and dye. That thing you ſpeake of,
I tooke it for a man: often 'twould ſay
The Fiend, the Fiend, he led me to that place.
Edgar. Beare free and patient thoughts.
Enter Lear.
But who comes heere?
The ſafer ſenſe will ne're accommodate
His Maſter thus.
Lear. No, they cannot touch me for crying. I am the King himſelfe.
Edg. O thou ſide-piercing ſight!
Lear. Nature's aboue Art, in that reſpect. Ther's your Preſſe-money. That fellow handles his bow, like a Crow-keeper: draw me a Clothiers yard. Looke, looke, a Mouſe: peace, peace, this peece of toaſted Cheeſe will doo't. There's my Gauntlet, Ile proue it on a Gyant. Bring vp the browne Billes. O well flowne Bird. i'th' clout, i'th'clout: Hewgh. Giue the word.
Edg. Sweet Marioram.
Lear. Paſſe.
Glou. I know that voice.
Lear. Ha! Goneril with a white beard? They flatter'd me like a Dogge, and told mee I had the white haires in my Beard, ere the blacke ones were there. To ſay I, and no, to euery thing that I ſaid I, and no too, was no good Diuinity. When the raine came to wet me once, and the winde to make me chatter: when the Thunder would not peace at my bidding, there I found 'em, there I ſmelt 'em out. Go too, they are not men o'their words: they told me, I was euery thing: 'Tis a Lye, I am not Ague-proote
Glou. The tracke of that voyce, I do well remember
Is't not the King?
Lear. I, euery inch a King
When I do ſtare, ſee how the Subiect quakes.
I pardon that mans life. What was thy cauſe?
Adultery? thou ſhalt not dye: dye for Adultery?
No, the Wren goes too't, and the ſmall gilded Fly
Do's lecher in my ſight. Let Copulation thriue
For Gloſters baſtard Son was kinder to his Father,
Then my Daughters got 'tweene the lawful ſheets.
To't Luxury pell-mell, for I lacke Souldiers.
Behold yond ſimp'ring Dame, whoſe face betweene her
Forkes preſages Snow; that minces Veruine, & do's ſhake the head to heare of pleaſures name. The Fitchew, nor the ſoyled Horſe goes too't with a more riotous appetite. Downe from the waſte they are Centaures, though Women all aboue: but to the Girdle do the Gods inherit, beneath is all the Fiends. There's hell, there's darke-neſs, there is the ſulphurous pit; burning, ſcalding, ſtench, conſumption: Fye, fie, fie; pah, pah: Giue me an Ounce of Ciuet; good Apothecary ſweeten my imagination:
There's money for thee.
Glou. O let me kiſſe that hand.
Lear. Let me wipe it firſt,
It ſmelles of Mortality.
Glou. O ruin'd peece of Nature, this great world
Shall ſo weare out to naught.
Do'ſt thou know me?
Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. doſt thou ſquiny at me? No, doeſ't thy worſt blinde Cupid, Ile not loue. Reade thou this challenge, marke but the penning of it
Glou. Were all thy Letters Sunnes, I could not ſee.
Edg. I would not take this from report,
It is, and my heart breakes at it.
Lear. Read.
Glou. What with the Caſe of eyes?
Lear. Oh ho, are you there with me? No eies in your head, nor no money in your purſe? Your eyes are in a heauy caſe, your purſe in a light, yet you ſee how this world goes.
Glou. I ſee it feelingly.
Lear. What, art mad? A man may ſee how this world goes, with no eyes. Looke with thine eares: See how yond Iuſtice railes vpon yond ſimple theefe. Hearke in thine eare: Change places, and handy-dandy, which is the Iuſtice, which is the theefe? Thou haſt ſeene a Farmers dogge barke at a Beggar?
Glou. I Sir.
Lear. And the Creature run from the Cur? there thou might'ſt behold the great image of Authority: a Dogge's obey'd in Office. Thou Rafcall Beadle, hold thy bloody hand: why doſt thou laſh that Whore? Strip thy owne

Bast. Come hither Captaine, hearke
Take thou this note, go to, ouer-take them to prison,
One step I haue aduanc'd thee, if thou do'st
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To Noble Fortunes: know thou this, that men
Are as the times is, to be tender-minded
Do not become a Sword, thy great employment
Will not beare question: either say thou'lt do't,
Or thrue by other meanes
Capt. I'le do't my Lord.
Bast. About it: and write happy, when th'hast done,
Marke I say instantly, and carry it so
As I haue set it downe. Exit Captaine.

Flourish. Enter Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Soldiers

Alb. Sir, you haue shew'd to day your valiant straine
And Fortune led you well: you haue the Captiues
Who were the opposites of this day's strife:
I do require them of you so to vse them,
As we shall find their merites, and our safety
May equally determine.
Bast. Sir, I thought it fit,
To send the old and miserable King to some retention,
Who, since as I haue wits to see, and feele,
The plot of Power, as doth eclipse my Father.
Which Approues him an intelligent partie
To the dislikes, and wants of the Kingdome,
Vpon which grounds this businesse did take his forme,
Since I haue carried him to the Castle, and his traine
Is dismiss'd from him, nothing vrg'd against him,
Were not the quality of his wrongs, his Age,
And those that were about him, mutinous Knights,
Whose reputations he himself did call downe,
And send into the Tempest. Lastly, but not least,
Vpon his owne confession.
Alb. I do assent to all this well done,
That we may more to your shame clear him, and you.
Reg. But in such iudgement, we craue the hearing
Of our Sister's cause.
Alb. Go you, call hither Edmund, and my Cousin Gloster.
Some Officers take you to my Daughter,
Her voice was euer soft, gentle, and low,
An excellent thing in Woman. I kill'd the Slaue that was a-hanging thee.
Capt. 'Tis true (my Lords) he did.
Alb. Did I my Lord?
Then I did not know one of more worth
Either to kill, or hate, vpon no cause.
Capt. He cride out much, his wife view'd it greatly,
Shee's dead as we haue it.
Alb. Saue me Iudgement,
Twice then the Starres, and more by Heauen
Then Humane Accidents, foretold this businesse,
Which haue but worne vs all. Still you are in no certaine grace,
Almost forget your selfe, go after.

Enter Edmund, Gloster, Regan, Soldiers

Reg. Welcome my Lord, I meruell our mild husband
Not met vs on the way. Now where's your Master?
Stew. Madam within, but neuer man so chang'd.
I told him of the Army that was landed,
He smil'd at it: I told him you were coming,
His answer was, the worse: of Gloster's Treachery,
And of the loyall seruice of his Sonne
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me Sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out:
What most he should dislike, seemes pleasant to him,
What like, offensiue.
Reg. Then shall you go no further.
It is the Cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not vndertake: he'le not feele wrongs
Which tye him to an answer. Our wishes on the way
May proue effects. Backe Edmund to my Brother,
Hasten his Musters, and conduct his Powres:
I must change names at home, and feigne the Queene
Of your Mistris Commandments. Hold, take my Ring.
Bast. My Seruice sworne, your Mistris shall be mine.
If on my Steed I gallop well, I'le breathe
Two Friends by Sword.
Reg. Only to her, and hers.
Bast. Commend me to her, and my Soule shall waite
On her Imperious Fortunes.

Exeunt. Enter Albany, Gonerill, Soldiers

Gon. Why is this reason'd?
Alb. Combine together 'gainst the enemie:
For these domestick, and particular broyles
Are not to question here.
Gon. Let vs then determine
With the ancient of warre on our proceedings.
Alb. I shall attend you presently at your Tent.
Gon. Sister, you'le go with vs?
Reg. No.
Gon. 'Tis most conuenient, pray you go with vs.
Reg. O ho, I know the Riddle: I will goe.

Enter Edgar and Gloster

Edg. If e'er your Grace had speech with man so poore,
Heare me one word.
Alb. I'le ouertake you: speake.
Edg. Before you fight the Battaile, ope this Letter.
If you haue victory, let the Trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seeme,
I can produce a Champion that will proue
What is auouched there: if you miscarry,
Your businesse of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune loue you.
Alb. Stay till I haue read the Letter.
Edg. I was forbid it.
When time shall serue, and I shall mine Auow,
Come, and my Meed hath an Inuitement,
A Trumpet shall be found: if not, my last
Is not with you.
Exit Edgar.
Glo. Know my name is lost,
By Treasons tooth bare-gnawne, and Canker-bit,
Yet am I Noble as the Aduersary
I come to cope.
Alb. Which is that Aduersary?
Edg. What's he that speakes for Edmund Earle of Gloster?
Edm. Himselfe: what say'st thou to him?
Edg. Draw thy Sword
That if my speech offend a Noble heart,
Thy arme may do me Iustice, heere is mine:
Behold it is my priuiledge,
The priuiledge of mine Honours,
My oath, and my profession. I protest,
Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence,
Despight thy victor-Sword, and fire-new Fortune,
Thy valour, and thy heart, thou art a Traitor:
False to thy Gods, thy Brother, and thy Father,
Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious Prince,
And from the extremest vpward of thy head,
To the discent and dust below thy foote,

A-boh? Toad, spotted Traitor. Say thou no,
This Sword, this arme and my best spirits are bent
To proue vpon thy heart, whereto I speake,
Treason'd.
Bast. Inow e name I should aske thy name,
But since thy outside lookes so faire and Warlike,
And that thy tongue (some say of breeding breathes)
What safe, and nicely I might well delay,
By rule in Knighthood, and my Order sworne
Backe do I tosse these Treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated Lye, ore-whelme thy heart,
This sword of mine shall giue them instant way,
Where they shall rest for euer. Trumpets speake.
Alb. Saue him, saue him. Alarums. Fight.
Gon. This is practise Gloster
By th'law of Warre thou wast not bound to answer
An vnknowne opposite thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozen'd, and beguil'd.
Alb. Shut your mouth Dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it. Hold Sir,
Thou worse then any name, read thine owne euill.
No tearing Lady, I perceiue you know it.
Gon. Say if I do, the Lawes are mine not thine,
Who can arraigne me for't? Exit.
Alb. Most monstrous! Oh know'st thou this paper?
Bast. Aske me not what I know.
Alb. Go after her, she's desperate, gouerne her.
Edg. What you haue charg'd me with,
That haue I done,
And more, much more the time will bring to light.
To pay thee hate and terror to thy worth.
Thou art not vanquish'd but cozen'd and beguil'd,
Now gone thee
Edg. Let's exchange charity.
I am no less in blood then thou art Edmund,
If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar and thy Fathers Sonne,
The Gods are iust, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to plague vs:
The darke and vitious place where thee he got,
Cost him his eyes.
Bast. Th'hast spoken right, 'tis true,
The Wheele is come full circle I am heere
Alb. Me thought thy very gate did prophesie
A royall Noblenesse: I must embrace thee,
Let sorrow split my heart, if euer I
Did hate thee or thy Father.
Edg. Worthy Prince I know't.
Alb. Where haue you hid your selfe?
How haue you known the miseries of your Father?
Edg. By nursing them my Lord. List a breefe tale,
And when 'tis told, O that my heart would burst.
The bloody proclamation to escape
That follow'd me so neere, (O our liues sweetnesse,
That we the paine of death would hourely dye,
Rather then die at once) taught me to shift
Into a mad-mans rags, t'assume a semblance
That very Dogges disdain'd: and in this habit
Met I my Father with his bleeding Rings,
Their precious Stones new lost: became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sau'd him from dispaire.
Neuer (O Father) reueal'd my selfe vnto him,
Vntill some halfe houre past when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping of this good successe,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last
Told him our pilgrimage. But his flaw'd heart
(Alacke too weake the conflict to support)
Twixt two extremes of passion, ioy and greefe,
Burst smilingly.
Bast. This speech of yours hath moued me,
And shall perchance do good but speake you on,
You looke as you had something more to say.
Alb. If there be more, more woful, hold it in,
For I am almost ready to dissolue,
Hearing of this.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gen. Helpe helpe! O helpe.
Edg. What kinde of helpe?
Alb. Speake man.
Edg. What meanes this bloody Knife?
Gen. 'Tis hot, it smokes, it came euen from the heart
o'——O she's dead.
Alb. Who dead? Speake man.
Gen. Your Lady Sir, your Lady: and her Sister
By her is poyson'd: she confesses it.
Bast. I was contracted to them both, all three
Now marry in an instant.
Edg. Here comes Kent.

Enter Kent.

Alb. Produce the bodies, be they alyue or dead;
Exit Gentl. and Regans bodies brought out.
This iudgement of the heauens that makes vs tremble,
Touches vs not with pitty. O, is this he?
The time will not allow the complement
Which very manners vrges.
Kent. I am come
To bid my King and Master aye good night.
Is he not here?
Alb. Great thing of vs forgot.
Speake Edmund, where's the King? and where's' Cordelia?
See'st thou this obiect Kent?
Kent. Alacke, why thus?
Bast. Yet Edmund was belou'd:
One other poysoned for my sake,
And after slew her selfe.
Alb. Euen so couer their faces.
Bast. I pant for life: some good I meane to do
Despight of mine owne Nature. Quickly send,
(Be briefe in it) to'th Castle, for my Writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:
Nay send in time.
Alb. Run, run, O run
Edg. To who my Lord? Who ha's the Office?
Send thy token of reprieue.
Bast. Well thought on, take my Sword,
Giue it the Captaine.
Edg. Haste thee for thy life.
Bast. He hath Commission from thy Wife and me,
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame vpon her owne dispaire,
That she for-did her selfe.
Alb. The Gods defend her, beare him hence awhile.

Enter Lear with Cordelia in his armes.

Lear. Howle, howle, howle. O you are men of stones,
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd vse them so,
That Heauens vaulte should crack. She's gone for euer.
I know when one is dead, and when one liues,
She's dead as earth. Lend me a Looking-glasse,

If

If that her breath will mist or stayne the stone,
Why then she lives.
Kent. Is this the promis'd end?
Edg. Or image of that horror
Alb. Fall and cease.
Lear. This feather stirs, she lives! if it be so,
It is a chance which does redeeme all sorrowes
That ever I have felt.
Kent. O my good Master.
Lear. Prythee away
Edg. 'Tis Noble Kent your Friend
Lear. A plague upon you Murderors Traitors all,
I might have sau'd her, now she's gone for ever
Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha
What is't thou saist? Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
I kill'd the Slave that was a hanging thee
Gent. 'Tis true (my Lord) it is so
Lear. Did I not fellow?
I have seene the day, with my good biting Faulchion
I would have made them skip: I am old now,
And these same crosses spoile me. Who are you?
Mine eyes are not o'the best: Ile tell you straight
Kent. If Fortune brag of two, she lou'd and hated,
One of them we behold
Lear. This a dull sight, are you not Kent?
Kent. The same: your Seruant Kent,
Where is your Seruant Caius?
Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that,
He'le strike and quickly too, he's dead and rotten.
Kent. No my good Lord, I am the very man.
Lear. Ile see that straight.
Kent. That from your first of difference and decay,
Have follow'd your sad steps.
Lear. You are welcome hither.
Kent. Nor no man else
All's cheerlesse, darke, and deadly,
Your eldest Daughters have fore-done themselues,
And desperately are dead
Lear. I so I think.
Alb. He knowes not what he sees, and vaine is it
That we present vs to him.

Enter a Messenger.

Edg. Very bootlesse
Capt. Edmund is dead my Lord.
Alb. That's but a trifle heere.
You Lords and Noble Friends, know our intent,
What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be applyed. For vs we will resigne,
During the life of this old Majesty
To him our absolute power, you to your rights,
With boote and such addition as your Honours
Have more then merited. All Friends shall
Taste the wages of their vertue, and all Foes
The cup of their deseruings. O see, see.
Lear. And my poore Foole is hang'd: no, no, no life?
Why should a Dog, a Horse, a Rat, haue life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,
Never, never, never, never, never.
Pray you vndo this Button. Thanke you Sir,
Do you see this? Looke on her? Looke her lips,
Looke there, looke there. He dies.
Edg. He faints my Lord, my Lord
Kent. Breake heart, I prythee breake.
Edg. Looke vp my Lord.
Kent. Vex not his ghost, O let him passe, he hates him,
That would vpon the wracke of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.
Edg. He is gone indeed.
Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long,
He but vsurpt his life.
Alb. Beare them from hence our present businesse
Is generall woe. Friends of my soule, you twaine,
Rule in this Realme, and the gor'd state sustaine.
Kent. I have a journey Sir, shortly to go,
My Master cals me, I must not say no.
Edg. The waight of this sad time we must obey,
Speake what we feele, not what we ought to say.
The oldest hath borne most: we that are yong,
Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

Exeunt with a dead March

I I 3

THE TRAGEDIE OF

Othello, the Moore of Venice.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Your heart is burſt, you have ſhot out one your ſoule
Euen now, now, very now, an old black ram
Is tupping your white Ewe. Arme, arme,
Awake the ſnorting Citizens with the bell,
Or elſe the deuill will make a grandſire of you.
Arme I ſay.
Iag. Nay, haue you not my word?
Rod. My money.
Bra. Patience good Sir.
Iag. Patience, hang lilly patience.
Bra. What tell me?
Iag. You are a ſenator.
Bra. This is ſome monſter of my houſe, on the
Iag. Do not beleeue that of me.
Bra. Rod. Sir.
Iag. I am one, if it thinke you fit to bee
So great with him, to haue him pluck'd.
Bra. Are, Diabolo, ho.
Iag. Do you not heare my Lord?
Bra. You are vile.
Iag. My Lord I am,
Bra. If partly I diſcerne what art, or what
Iag. Sir, you are—
Bra. My Lord, or Sir, I care not.
Iag. Very well, Sir.
Bra. Rod. Light a taper.
Iag. Sir, I am not bound to anſwer
Your Daughter is not married to you.
Bra.

The Law (with all his might to enforce it on)
Will giue him Cable.
Oth. Let him do his spight.
My Seruices, which I haue done the Signorie
Shall out-tongue his Complaints. 'Tis yet to know,
Which when I know, that boasting is an Honour,
I shall promulgate. I fetch my life and being,
From Men of Royall Seige. And my demerites
May speake (vnbonnetted) as proud a fortune
As this that I haue reach'd. For know Iago,
But that I loue the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my vnhoused free condition
Put into Circumscription and confine,
For the Seas worth. But look, what lights come yond?

Enter Cassio, with Iago, &c.

Iago. Those are the Raskals that behaue the Moore,
You were best go in.
Oth. Not I, I must be found.
My Parts, my Title, and my perfect Soule
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?
Iago. By Janus, I take no
Oth. The Seruants of the Duke?
And my Lieutenant?
The good newes come the Night vpon you. (Friends, Wherefore are Newes?)
Iago. The Duke do's greet you Generall)
And he requires your haste, Post-haste appearance,
Euen on the instant.
Oth. What's the matter, think you?
Cassio. Something from Cyprus, as I may diuine.
It is a businesse of some heate. The Gallies
Haue sent a dozen sequent Messengers
This very night, at one anothers heeles:
And many of the Consulate are call'd vp,
Are at the Dukes already. You haue been hotly call'd for,
When being not at your Lodging to be found,
The Senate hath sent about three seuerall Quests,
To search you out.
Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you.
Cassio. Ancient, what makes he here?
Iago. Faith he to night hath boarded a Land Carract
If it proue lawfull prize, he's made for euer.
Cassio. I do not vnderstand.
Iago. He's married.
Cassio. To who?
Iago. Marry to ——— Come Captaine, will you go?
Oth. Haue with you.
Iago. Here comes another Troope to seeke for you.

Enter Brabantio, Roderigo, with Officers, and Torches.

Iago. It is Brabantio. Generall be aduis'd,
He comes to bad intent.
Oth. Holla, stand there.
Rod. Signior, it is the Moore.
Bra. Downe with him, theefe.
Iago. You, Roderigo? Come Sir, I am for you.
Oth. Keepe vp your bright Swords, for the dew will rust them. Good Signior, you shall more command with yeares, then with your Weapons.
Bra. O thou foule Theefe,
Where hast thou stow'd my Daughter?
Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her
For I'le referre me to all things of sense,
(If in the course of Magick were not bound)
Whether a Maid, so tender, Faire, and Happie,
So opposite to Marriage that she shun'd
The wealthy curled Darlings of our Nation,
Would euer haue (t'incurre a generall mocke)
Run from her Guardage to the sooty bosome,
Of such a thing as thou: to feare, not to delight?
Iudge me the world, if 'tis not grosse in sense,
That thou hast practis'd on her with foule Charmes,
Abus'd her delicate Youth, with Drugs or Minerals,
That weakens Motion. I'le haue it disputed on,
'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking:
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,
For an abuser of the World, a practiser
Of Arts inhibited, and out of warrant,
Lay hold vpon him, if he goe or stirre
To vndergo it, at his peril.
Oth. Hold your hands
Both you of my inclining, and the rest.
Were it my Cue to fight, I should haue knowne it
Without a Prompter. Whether will you that I goe
To answere this your charge?
Bra. To prison, till fit time
Of Law, and course of direct Session
Call thee to answer.
Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the Duke be therewith satisfi'd,
Whose Messengers are here about my side,
Vpon some present businesse of the State,
To bring me to him?
Officer. 'Tis true, most worthy Signior,
The Duke's in Counsell, and your noble selfe,
I am sure is sent for.
Bra. How? The Duke in Councell?
In this time of the night? Bring him away;
Mine's not an idle Cause. The Duke himselfe,
Or any of my Brothers of the State,
Cannot but feele this wrong as 'twere their owne.
For if such Actions may haue passage free,
Bond-slaues and Pagans shall our Statesmen be. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Duke, Senators, and Officers.

Duke. There's no composition in this Newes,
That giues them Credite.
1 Sen. Indeed, they are disproportioned;
My Letters say, a Hundred and seuen Gallies.
Duke. And mine a Hundred forty.
2 Sen. And mine two Hundred.
But though they iumpe not on a iust accompt,
(As in these Cases where the aymes reports,
'Tis oft with difference, yet do they all confirme
A Turkish Fleete, and bearing vp to Cyprus.
Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to iudgement
I do not so secure me in the Error,
But the maine Article I do approue
In fearefull sense.
Sailor within. What hoa, what hoa, what hoa.
Enter Sailor.

Officer. A

Officer. A Messenger from the Gallies.
Duke. Now? What's the businesse?
Sen. The Turkish Preparation makes for Rhodes,
So was I bid report here to the State,
By Signior Angelo.
Duke. How say you by this change?
1. Sen. This cannot be
By no assay of reason: 'Tis a Pageant
To keepe vs in false gaze, when we consider
Th'importance of Cyprus to the Turke
And let our selues againe but understand,
That as it more concernes the Turke than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question beare it,
For that it stands not such a ranke and distance
From the Head-maine, as Rhodes doth from Cyprus,
No more pertinent to vs, nor is likely
To do more hurt, (Iustly as we may Esteeme our selues secure) than Rhodes might do,
We must not make scarre-fire with our State,
To fright vs from our watch: for our owne face,
Is more than any terror can present,
Must like be fear'd: and hence we should be slacke
To waken, as with labour, that sleepe
Whereto we are inuited, whiles we feare
Our selues to sleepe.
Duke. Nay, in all confidence he's not for Rhodes.
Officer. Here are more Newes.

Enter a Messenger.

Messen. The Ottomites reuerend and gracious,
Steering with due course toward the Ile of Rhodes,
Haue there iniected yesterday on Cyprus
1. Sen. I, so I thought: how many, as you guesse?
Mes. Of thirtie Saile: and now they do re-stemme
Their backward course, bearing with frame of purpose
Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your noble and most Valiant Seruitour,
With his free duty recommends him to you.
Duke. Ye are assur'd you do but iest with vs.
Mes. Pardon me, I do not.
Duke. Why, I am certaine then to feare each part
Of my account: for I do iudge the Turke
Is surely mou'd.
1. Sen. If we make thought of this,
We must not thinke the Turke is so vnskilfull,
To leaue that latest, which concernes him first,
Neglecting an attempt ripe: and prize
To wake, and wage a danger profitable,

[illegible] State Lawes for vse,
[illegible]
Duke Send for Othello
[illegible] I left no friend to stand vpon my [illegible]
[illegible] better Starre of my [illegible]
[illegible] cater-cousin'd with the Rusticke [illegible],
[illegible] Accident, and flood-gate, and breach,
[illegible] Antres vast, and Deserts idle,
[illegible] rough Quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heauen,
It was my hint to speake. Such was the Processe,
And of the Cannibals that each other eate,
The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Grew beneath their shoulders. These things to heare,
Would Desdemona seriously incline:
But still the house Affaires would draw her thence,
Which euer as she could with haste dispatch,
She'ld come again, and with a greedy eare
Deuoure vp my discourse: which I obseruing,
Tooke once a pliant houre, and found good meanes
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my Pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intentiuely. I did consent,
And often did beguile her of her teares,
When I did speake of some distressefull stroke
That my youth suffered. My Story being done,
She gaue me for my paines a world of sighes:
She swore, in faith 'twas strange, 'twas passing strange,
'Twas pitty, 'twas wondrous pitty,
She wish'd she had not heard it, yet she wish'd
That Heauen had made her such a man. She thank'd me,
And bad me, if I had a friend that lou'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Vpon this hint I spake,
She lou'd me for the dangers I had past,
And I lou'd her that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I haue vs'd:
Here comes the Lady, let her witnesse it.

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Attendants.

Duke. I think this tale would win my Daughter too,
Good Brabantio, take vp this mangled matter at the best,
Men do their broken Weapons rather vse,
Than their bare hands.
Bra. I pray you heare her speake?
If she confesse that she was halfe the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man. Come hither gentle Mistris,
Do you perceiue in all this Noble Company,
Where most you owe obedience?
Des. My Noble Father,
I do perceiue here a diuided duty,
To you I am bound for life, and education,
My life and education both do learne me,
How to respect you. You are the Lord of duty,
I am hitherto your Daughter. But heere's my Husband,
And so much duty as my Mother show'd

To you, preferring you before her Father:
So much I challenge that I may professe
Due to the Moore my Lord.
Bra. God be with you: I have done.
Please it your Grace, on to the State Affaires;
I had rather to adopt a Child, than get it.
Come hither Moore,
I heere do giue thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keepe from thee. For your sake (Iewell)
I am glad at soule, I have no other Childe,
For thy escape would teach me Tyranny
To hang Clogges on them. I haue done my Lord.
Duke. Let me speake like your selfe:
And lay a Sentence,
Which as a grize, or step may helpe these Louers.
When remedies are past the griefes are ended
By seeing the worst which late on hopes depended.
To mourne a Mischeefe that is past and gone,
Is the next way to draw new mischeefe on.
What cannot be preuented, when Fortune takes,
Patience her iniury a mockery makes.
The robb'd that smiles, steales something from the Thiefe,
He robs himselfe that spends a bootelesse griefe.
Bra. So let the Turke of Cyprus vs beguile,
We loose it not to say as we can lose.
He scores the water for a ship of stone,
That warres vpon his patience bootlesse Patience borrow.
His wounds that smile, do mocke the hand that maimes,
Than they are hurt by griefe: who quickly calls,
Being flowne to others, that haue power to stay.
But words are words; I never yet did heare
That the bruized heart was pierced through the eares.
I humbly beseech you proceed to the Affaires of State.
Duke. The Turke with a most mighty Preparation makes for Cyprus. Othello, the Fortitude of the place is best known to you. And though we haue there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a more souereigne Mistris of Effects, throwes a more safer voice on you: you must therefore be content to slubber the gloue of your new Fortunes, with this more stubborne, and boysterous expedition.
Oth. The Tyrant Custome most Graue Senators,
Hath made the flynty, and steele Couch of Warre
My thrice-driuen bed of Downe. I do agnize
A Natiue and prompt Alacritie,
I finde in Hardnesse, and do vndertake
This present Warres against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your State,
I craue fit disposition for my Wife,
Due reference of Place, and Exhibition,
With such Accommodation and besort
As leuies with her breeding.
Duke. Why at her Fathers?
Bra. I will not haue it so.
Oth. Nor I.
Des. Nor would I there reside,
To put my Father in impatient thoughts
By being in his eye. Most Gracious Duke,
To my vnit doing, lend your prosperous eare,
And let me find a Charter in your voice
T'assist my simplenesse.
Duke. What would you Desdemona?
Des. That I did loue the Moore, to liue with him,
My downe-right violence, and storme of Fortunes,

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

For Prauncing drum, and the man commands,
Like a full Soldier. Let's to the Sea-side (ho!)
As we to see the Vessell bear's enough,
And let the rough-out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make the Main and th' Aerie blew,
An indistinct regard.
Gen. Come let's do so.
For every Minute is expectancie
Of more Arrivance

Enter Cesario.

Cesa. Thankes you the valiant of this warlike Isle,
That so approue the Moore. O let the Heauens
Giue him defence against the Elements,
For I am lost in this dangerous Sea
Mon. Is he well shipt?
Cesa. His Barke is stoutly Timber'd, and his Pylot
Of very expert, and approued Allowance
Therefore my hopes (not surfeited to death)
Stand in bold Cure.
A Saile, a Saile, a Saile
Mon. What noise?
Cesa. The Townes empty on the Pyer to gaze:
Some Main-sailes we can discerne
Mon. See for the Cannons
Cesa. Pray heauen he be:
For so I count him, worth that welcome,
Enter Gentleman.
Gent. Newes friends our warres are done,
The Turkish Fleet
Mon. How? is this true?
Gent. The ship is here put in,
A Veronesa: Michael Cassio
Lieutenant to the warlike Moore Othello,
Is come on shore: the Moore himselfe at Sea,
And is in full Commission here for Cyprus
Mon. I am glad on't, 'tis a worthy Gouernor.
Cesa. But this same Cassio, though he speake of Comfort touching the Master and the Ship,
And prizes the vnmeasurable Moore,
Euen till we make the Main and th' Aerie blew,
An indistinct regard.
Gent. Come let's do so.
For every Minute is expectancie
Of more Arriu

Cas. He is not yet arriu'd, nor know I ought
But that he's well, and will be shortly heere.
Des. Oh, but I feare
How lost you company?
Cassio. The great Contention of Sea, and Skies
Parted our fellowship. But hearke a Saile.
Within. A Saile, a Saile
Gent. They giue this greeting to the Cittadell
This likewise is a friend.
Cas. See for the Newes:
Good Ancient, you are welcome. Welcome Mistris:
Let it not gaule your patience (good Iago)
That I extend my Manners. 'Tis my breeding,
That gives me this bold shew of Courtesie.
Iago. Sir, would she giue you so much of her lippes,
As of her tongue she oft bestowes on me,
You would haue enough.
Des. Alas: she has no speech.
Iago. Infaith too much
I finde it still, when I haue leaue to sleepe:
Marry before your Ladyship, I grant
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.
Æmil. You haue little cause to say so.
Iago. Come on, come on, you are Pictures out of doore: Bells in your Parlours: Wild-Cats in your Kitchens: Saints in your Injuries: Diuels being offended: Players in your Housewifery, and Housewiues in your Beds.
Des. Oh, fie vpon thee, Slanderer.
Iago. Nay, it is true: or else I am a Turke,
You rise to play, and go to bed to worke.
Æmil. You shall not write my praise
Iago. No, let me not.
Desde. What would'st write of me, if thou should'st praise me?
Iago. Oh, gentle Lady, do not put me to't,
For I am nothing, if not Criticall.
Des. Come on, assay
There's one gone to the Harbour?
Iago. I Madam.
Des. I am not merry: but I do beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.
Come, how would'st thou praise me?
Iago. I am about it, but indeed my inuention comes from my pate, as Birdlyme do's from Freeze, it plucks out Braines and all. But my Muse labours, and thus she is deliuer'd.
If she be faire, and wise: faire, and wise, or fairenesse and wit,
The one for vse, the other vseth it.
Des. Well prais'd:
How if she be Blacke and Witty?
Iago. If she be blacke, and therto haue a wit,
She'le finde a white, that shall her blackenesse fit.
Des. Worse, and worse.
Æmil. How if Faire, and Foolish?
Iago. She never yet was foolish that was faire,
For euen her folly helpes her to an heire.
Desde. These are old fond Paradoxes, to make Fooles laugh i'th'Alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's Foule, and Foolish?
Iago. There's none so foule and foolish thereunto,
But do's foule pranks which faire, and wise-ones do.
Desde. Oh heauy ignorance: thou praisest the worst best. But what praise could'st thou bestow on a deseruing woman indeed? One, that in the authority of her merit, did iustly put on the vouch of very malice it selfe?

Iago. She that was euer faire, and neuer proud,
Had Tongue at will, and yet was neuer loud,
Neuer lackt Gold, and yet went neuer gay,
Fled from her wish, and yet said now I may,
She that being angred, her reuenge being nie,
Bad her wrong stay, and her displeasure flie,
She that in wisedome neuer was a fraide,
To change the Cods head for the Salmons taile,
She that could thinke, and neu'r disclose her mind,
See Suitors following, and not looke behind:
She was a wight, (if euer such wights were)
Des. To do what?
Iago. To suckle Fooles, and chronicle small Beere.

Desde. Oh most lame and impotent conclusion. Do not learne of him Æmilia, though he be thy husband. How say you Cassio, is not a Politician, and a peruerse Stickler?
Cassio. He speakes home (Madam) you may relish him more in the Souldier, then in the Scholler.
Iago. He takes her by the palme: I, well said, whisper. With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a Fly as Cassio. I smile vpon her, do: I will giue thee in thine owne Courtship. You say true, 'tis so indeed. If such tricks as these strip you out of your Lieutenantrie, it had been better you had not kist your three-hoo-gees so oft, which now may seeme some practice. Is it possible? very good: well kist, and excellent Courtesie: 'tis so indeed. Yet againe your fingers to your lippes? Would they were Clister-pipes for your sake.
The Moore I know his Trumpet.
Cassio. 'Tis truely so
Des. Let's meete him, and receiue him
Cassio. Loe, where he comes.

Enter Othello, and Attendants

Oth. O, my faire Warriour.
Des. My deere Othello.
Othe. It giues me wonder great, as my content
To see you heere before me.
Oh my Soules ioy
If after euery Tempest, come such Calmes,
May the windes blow till they haue waken'd death
And let the labouring Barke climbe hills of Seas
Olympus high, and duck againe as low,
As hell's from Heauen. If it were now to dye,
'Twere now to be most happy. For I feare,
My Soule hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this,
Succeedes in vnknowne fate.
Des. The Heauens forbid
But that our Loues
And Comforts should encrease
Euen as our dayes do grow
Othe. Amen to that (sweet Powers)
I cannot speake enough of this content,
It stops me heere: it is too much of ioy.
And this, and this the greatest discords be
That ere our hearts shall make.
Iago. Oh you are well tun'd now: But I'le set downe the pegges that make this Musicke, as honest as I am.

Othe. Come Iago, you to the Castle
Newes (friends) our Warres are done
The Turkes are drown'd.
How do's my old Acquaintance of this Isle?
(Honey) you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus,
I haue found great loue amongst them. Oh my Sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
In mine owne comforts. I prythee good Iago,
Go to the Bay and disembarke my Coffers
Bring thou the Master to the Citadell,
He is a good one, and his worthy deserts
Do challenge much respect. Come Desdemona,
Once more well met at Cyprus.
Exit Othello and Desdemona.

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the Harbour. Come hither, if thou be'st valiant (as they say base men being in Loue, haue then a Nobility in their Natures, more than is natiue to them) list me. The Lieutenant to night watches on the Court of Guard. First, I must tell thee this: Desdemona is directly in loue with him.

Rod. With him? why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus, and let thy soule be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first lou'd the Moore, but for bragging, and telling her fantasticall lies. To loue him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart beate it. Euen this may plucke on pitty. And what delight shall she haue to looke on the diuell? When the blood is made dull with the Act of Sport, there should be againe to inflame it and to giue Satiety a fresh appetite, Loueliness in fauour, sympathy in Yeares, Manners and Beauties: all which the Moore is defective in. Now for want of these requir'd Conueniences, her delicate tenderwill will finde it selfe abus'd, begin to heaue, gorge, disrelish and abhorre the Moore, very Nature will instruct her in it, and compell her to some second choice. Now sir, this granted (as it is a most pregnant and vnforc'd position) who stands so eminent in the degree of this Fortune, as Cassio does? a knaue very voluble: no further conscionable, than in putting on the meere forme of Ciuill and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose Affection? why none: A slipper, and subtle knaue: a finder of occasion: that has an eye can stampe, and counterfeit Aduantages, though true Aduantage neuer present it selfe: A deuilish knaue: besides the knaue is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and greene mindes looke after. A pestilent complet knaue, and the woman has found him already.

Rod. I cannot beleeue that in her, she's full of most blest condition.

Iago. Blest fig's end: The Wine she drinkes is made of grapes. If she had been blest, she would neuer haue lou'd the Moore: blest pudding. Didst not see her paddle with the palme of his hand? Didst not mark that?

Rod. Yes that I did: but that was but courtesie.

Iago. Lechery by this hand: an index, and obscure prologue to the History of Lust and foule thoughts. They met so neere with their lippes, that their breaths embrac'd together. Villanous thoughts Roderigo, when these mutabilities so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the Master, and main exercise th' incorporate conclusion. Pish. But Sir, be you rul'd by me. I haue brought you from Venice. Watch you to night: for the Command, I'le lay't vpon you. Cassio knowes you not. I'le not be farre from you. Do you finde some occasion to anger Cassio either by speaking too loud, or taxing his Duty beyond from what other course you please, which the time shall more fauourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir he is rash and very sodaine in Choller, and happily may strike at you: prouoke him that he may: for euen out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to Mutiny: whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you haue a shorter iourney to your desires, by the meanes I shall then haue to prefer them. And the impediment most profitably remoued, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if you can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meete me by and by at the Citadell. I must fetch his Necessaries a Shore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu. Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loues her, I do well beleeue't:
That she loues him, 'tis apt, and of great Credite.
The Moore (how beit that I endure him not)
Is of a constant, louing Noble Nature,
And I dare thinke, he'll proue to Desdemona
A most deere husband. Now I do loue her too,
Not out of absolute Lust, (though peraduenture
I stand accomptant for as great a sinne)
But partly led to diet my Reuenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moore
Hath leap'd into my Seate. The thought whereof,
Doth like a poysonous Mineral, gnaw my inwardes:
And nothing can, or shall content my Soule
Till I am euen'd with him, wife for wife,
Or failing so, yet that I put the Moore,
At least into a Ielousie so strong
That judgement cannot cure. Which thing to do,
If this poore Trash of Venice, whom I trace
For his quicke hunting, stand the putting on,
I'le haue the Michael Cassio on the hip,
Abuse him to the Moore in the rancke garbe
(For I feare Cassio with my Night-Cap too)
Make the Moore thanke me, loue me, and reward me,
For making him egregiously an Asse,
And practising vpon his peace and quiet,
Euen to madnesse. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd,
Knauery's plaine face is neuer seene, till vs'd. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, Herald with a Proclamation.

Herald. It is Othello's pleasure, our Noble and Valiant Generall. That vpon certaine tydings now arriued, importing the meere perdition of the Turkish fleete, euery man put himselfe into Triumph. Some to daunce, some to make Bonfires, each man to what Sport and Reuels his addition leads him. For besides these beneficiall Newes, it is the Celebration of his Nuptiall. So much was his pleasure should be proclaym'd. All offices are open, & there is full libertie of feasting from present houre of fiue, till the Bel haue told eleuen

Blesse the Isle of Cyprus, and our Noble Generall Otello.
Exit.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio and Attendants.

Othe. Good Michael, looke you to the Guard to night.
Let's teach our selues the Honourable stop,
Not to out-sport discretion.
Cas. Iago hath direction what to do
But notwithstanding with my personall eye
Will I looke to't.
Othe. Iago is most honest
Michael goodnight. To morrow with your earliest
Let me haue speech with you. Come my deere Loue,
The purchase made, the fruites are to ensue,
That profit's yet to come 'tweene me and you.
Goodnight. Exit

Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome Iago, we must to the Watch
Iago. Not this houre Lieutenant, 'tis not yet ten o'th'cocke. Our Generall cast vs thus early for the loue of his Desdemona. Who let vs haue therefore a blame before him not yet made wanton the night with her and she is sport for Ioue.
Cas. She's a most exquisite Lady
Iago. And I'le warrant her full of Game.
Cas. Indeed she's a most fresh and delicate creature.
Iago. What an eye she has?
Methinkes it sounds a parley to prouocation
Cas. An inuiting eye:
And yet me thinkes right modest.
Iago. And when she speakes,
Is it not an Alarum to Loue?
Cas. She is indeed perfection.
Iago. Well happies he to their Sheetes. Come Lieutenant, I haue a stope of Wine, and heere without are a brace of Cyprus Gallants, that would faine haue a measure to the health of blacke Othello.
Cas. Not to night, good Iago, I haue very poore, and vnhappie Braines for drinking. I could well wish Courtesie would inuent some other Custome of entertainment.
Iago. O they are our Friends: but one Cup, Ile drinke for you.
Cassio. I haue drunke but one Cup to night, and that was craftily qualified too, and behold what innouation it makes heere. I am vnfortunate in the infirmity and dare not taske my weakenesse with any more
Iago. What man? 'Tis a night of Reuels, the Gallants desire it
Cas. Where are they?
Iago. Heere, at the doore. I pray you call them in
Cas. I'le do't, but it dislikes me. Exit.
Iago. If I can fasten but one Cup vpon him
With that which he hath drunke to night already,
He'll be as full of Quarrell and offence
As my young Mistris dogge.
Now my sicke Foole Roderigo,
Whom Loue hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath to night Caroused
Potts of Muscadine, to the sea-watch.
Three else of Cyprus, Noble swelling Spirites,
That hold their Honours in a wary distance,
The very Elements of this Warre-like isle,
Haue I to night fluster'd with flowing Cups,
And they Watch too

Now 'mongst this Flocke of drunkards
Am I put to our Cassio in some Action
That may offend the Isle. But here they come

Enter Cassio, Montano, and Gentlemen.

If Consequence do but approue my dreame,
My Boate sailes freely, both with wind and Stremme
Cas. Loue, these are they, haue seene worse then already
Mon. Good Lieutenant, I pray you not paint it, as I am a Souldier
Iago. Some Wine ho
And let me the Canakin clinke, clinke,
And let me the Canakin clinke
A Souldiers a man,
A life's but a span,
Why then let a Souldier drinke.
Some Wine boyes
Cas. Fore God, an excellent Song.
Iago. I learn'd it in England, where indeed they are most potent in potting: your Dane, your Germaine, and your swag-bellied Hollander, (Drinke hoa) are nothing to your English
Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking?
Iago. Why, he drinkes you with facility your Dane dead drunke. He sweates not to ouerthrow your Almaine: he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next Pottle can be filled
Cas. To the health of our Generall
Mon. I am for it Lieutenant, and I'le do you iustice
Iago. O sweet England
And let me the Canakin clinke
Hee's that he was not borne in a Towne,
In that he was not christened in a Temple,
Hee's that he was not married within the fifth Commandement,
That he was not a Cuckold before he was wise,
Hee's that he was not a Cuckold before he was wise,
And let me the Canakin clinke.
Some Wine ho.
Cas. Why this is a more exquisite Song, then the other
Iago. Will you heare't againe?
Cas. No: for I hold him to be vnworthy of his Place that does those things. Well heauen is aboue all, and there be Soules must not be saued, and there be Soules must not be saued.
Iago. It's true, good Lieutenant
Cas. For mine owne part, no offence to the Generall, nor any man of quality: I hope to be saued
Iago. And so do I too Lieutenant.
Cas. I: but by your leaue, not before me. The Lieutenant is to be saued before the Ancient. Let's haue no more of this: let's to our Affaires. Forgiue vs our sinnes. Gentlemen, let's looke to our businesse. Do not thinke Gentlemen I am drunke: this is my Ancient, this is my right hand, and this is my left: I am not drunke now: I can stand well enough, and I speake well enough.
Gent. Excellent well
Cas. Why very well then: you must not thinke then, that I am drunke. Exit
Mon. To the Platforme (Masters) come, let's set the Watch.
Iago. You see this Fellow that is gone before,
He's a Soldier fit to stand by Cæsar,
And giue direction. And do but see his vice,
'Tis to his vertue, a iust Equinox,

[illegible] as long as th'other. 'Tis pittie of him
[illegible] Othello part a man,
[illegible]
[illegible] hand
Mon. But is he often thus?
[illegible] Tis evermore the prologue to his sleepe,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] man of
[illegible]
[illegible] appeare in Cassio,
[illegible]
Enter Montano
[illegible]
[illegible] go
[illegible]
pray you after them, go.
Mon. [illegible] that the Noble Moore
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
To the Moore
Iago. Not this houre Lieutenant,
I [illegible] would not mad
[illegible] But speake what note?
Exeunt all but Iago & Cassio.
Cas. You hedge you know not at
Iago. [illegible]
Cas. Why [illegible] my selfe
[illegible] to Drinke?
Iago. But one?
Cas. Do you call me prate, hedge?
Iago. No [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] the Moore
[illegible] me, you shake
Cassio. Drunke?
Iago. Nay you may go to your Lady Mistris
Nay good Lieutenant, Alas Gentlemen
I speake no harme. Lieutenant, Sir Montano
Helpe Masters [illegible] a good [illegible] indeed.
[illegible]
The Towne will rise. Fie the Lieutenant,
You shall be all dismist for ever

Enter Othello and Attendants

Oth. What is the matter masters?
Mon. I feare my Lord, I am not to deale [illegible] He dies.
Oth. Hold for your lives.
[illegible] Lieutenant Sir Montano, Gentlemen
Have you forgot all place of sence and duty?
[illegible] passion can have power
[illegible]
[illegible] exclamations
[illegible] Barbarous, Brawle
[illegible]
[illegible] the Ottomites
[illegible] Mahon
[illegible]
From me, stand [illegible] What is the matter, Masters?
Honest Iago that looks dead with grieving,
[illegible] Can thou relate?
Iago. I know [illegible] friends all, but now, even now
In quarter, and in terms like Bride and Groome
Devesting them for Bed: and then but now,
(As if some Planet had unwitted men)
Swords out, and tilting one at others breasts,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speake
Any beginning to this peeuish oddes
And would in Action glorious, I had lost
Those legges, that brought me to a part of it.
Oth. How comes it (Michaell, you are thus forgot?
Cas. I pray you pardon me, I cannot speake.
Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be civill;
The gravitie, and stillnesse of your youth
The world hath noted. And your name is great
In mouthes of wisest Censure. What's the matter
That you unlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion, for the name
Of a night-brawler? Give me answer to it.
Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger,
Your Officer Iago, can inform you,
While I spare speech which something now offends me.
Of all that I do know, nor know I aught
By me, that's said or done amisse this night,
Unlesse self-charitie be sometimes a vice,
And to defend our selves, it be a sinne
When violence assailes us
Oth. Now by Heaven,
My blood begins my safer Guides to rule,
And passion (having my best judgement collied)
Assayes to lead the way. If I once stirre,
Or do but lift this Arme the best of you
Shall sinke in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foule rout began. Who set it on,
And to what is appointed, is sillinesse,
Thought it had [illegible] with me, both at a birth,
Shall loose me [illegible] Towne of warre,
Yea wilde, [illegible] fearefull be to [illegible] of feare,
To Manage private and domestick Quarrell?
In night, and on the Court and Guard of safetie?
'Tis monstrous. Iago, who began it?
Mon. If partially Affin'd or leagu'd in office,
Thou dost deliver more, or lesse than Truth,
Thou art no Souldier.
Iago. Touch me not so neere,
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth,
Than it should do offence to Michael so;
Yet perswade my eye, to speake a thought
Some [illegible] wrong'd [illegible] Cassio
Was [illegible] Generall:
[illegible]
There comes a knowne evill that attorneyes me,
And [illegible] downe with me, and Sword
To [illegible] Souldier,
Stop [illegible] affaire entreats his owne
My [illegible] should plead
Death, I can answer, [illegible]
The Towne [illegible] (out of doore)
Or rather my [illegible] from their rather
For [illegible] and [illegible] swords,
And [illegible] Who can [illegible]
[illegible] When I came backe
[illegible] was beat [illegible] them asunder together
[illegible] and [illegible] they were
When you vouchsafe to [illegible] them.
[illegible]
[illegible] Men are Men. The best sometimes forget,
[illegible] did some harme to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,
Yet (soothly) Captaine [illegible]
From him that fled, some strange indignitie
Which patience could not passe.

Oth.

Othe. I know Iago
Thy honestie, and loue doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Cassio, I loue thee,
But never more be Officer of mine.

Enter Desdemona attended.

Looke if my gentle Loue be not raysd vp.
Ile make thee an example.
Des. What is the matter Deere?
Oth. All's well. Sweeting,
Come away to bed. Sir, for your hurts,
My selfe will be your Surgeon. Lead him off.
Iago, looke with care about the Towne,
And silence those whom this vile brawle distracted.
Come Desdemona, 'tis the Souldiers life,
To haue their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife.

Exeunt.

Iago. What are you there? Come in, and giue some ayde.
Cas. I pray talke me to no body, I am hurt to the danger of my life.
Iago. Masty, these are the things we shall get by seruing drunkards.
Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O I haue lost my Reputation! I haue lost the immortall part of my selfe, and what remaines is bestiall. My Reputation, Iago, my Reputation.
Iago. As I am an honest man I thought you had receiu'd some bodily wound; there is more sence in that then in Reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition, oft got without merit, and lost without deseruing. You haue lost no Reputation at all, vnlesse you repute your selfe such a loser. What man, there are more wayes to recouer the Generall againe. You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policie, then in malice, euen as one would beate his offending Gunne, to affright an Imperious Lion. Sue to him againe, and he's yours.
Cas. I will rather sue to be dispis'd of then to deceiue so good a Commander, with so light, so drunken a part, and so indirect an Officer. Drunke? And speake Parrot? And squabble? Swagger? Sweare? And discourse fustian with ones owne shadow? O thou inuisible Spirit of Wine, if thou hast no name to be knowne by, let vs call thee Diuel!
Iago. What was he that you followed with your Sword? What had he done to you?
Cas. I know not.
Iago. Is't possible?
Cas. I remember a massie of things, but nothing distinctly; a Quarrell, but nothing wherefore. O that men should put an Enemie in their mouthes, to steale away their Braines! that we should with ioy, pleasance, reuell and applause, transforme our selues to Beasts!
Iago. Why? But you are now well enough: how came you thus recouered?
Cas. It hath pleas'd the deuell Drunkennesse to giue place to the deuell Wrath: one vnperfectnesse shewes me another, to make me frankly despise my selfe.
Iago. Come, you are too seuere a Moraler. As the Time, the Place, & the Condition of this Country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen: but since it is as it is, mend it for your owne good.
Cas. I will ask him for my Place againe, he shall tell me, I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouthes as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a Foole, and presently a Beast! O strange! Euery inordinate cup is vnblest, and the Ingredient is a Deuell.

Iago. Come, come good wine, is a good familiar Creature, if it be well vs'd: exclaime no more against it. And good Lieutenant, I think you think I loue you.
Cas. I haue well approued it, Sir. I drunke!
Iago. You or any man liuing, may be drunke at a time, man. I tell you what you shall do. Our Generall's Wife is now the Generall. I may say so in this respect, for that he hath deuoted and giuen vp himselfe to the contemplation, marke and denotement of her parts and graces. Confesse your selfe freely to her, importune her help to put you in your place againe. She is of so free, so kinde, so apt, so blessed a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodnesse, not to do more than she is requested. This broken ioint between you and her Husband, entreate her to splinter. And my fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your loue shall grow stronger than it was before.
Cas. You aduise me well.
Iago. I protest in the sincerity of Loue, and honest kindnesse.
Cas. I thinke it freely: and betimes in the morning will I beseech the vertuous Desdemona to vndertake for me. I am desperate of my fortunes if they check me.
Iago. You are in the right. Good night Lieutenant, I must to the Watch.
Cas. Good night, honest Iago.

Exit Cassio.

Iago. And what's he then, that sayes I play the Villaine?
When this aduice is free I giue and honest,
Proball to thinking, and indeed the course
To win the Moore againe.
For 'tis most easie
The inclining Desdemona to subdue
In any honest Suite. She's fram'd as fruitefull
As the free Elements. And then for her
To win the Moore, were to renounce his Baptisme,
All Seales and Symbols of redeemed sinne,
His Soule is so enfetter'd to her Loue,
That she may make, vnmake, do what she list,
Euen as her appetite shall play the God,
With his weake function. How am I then a Villaine,
To counsell Cassio to this parallel course,
Directly to his good? Diuinitie of hell,
When diuels will the blackest sinnes put on,
They do suggest at first with heauenly shewes,
As I do now. For whiles this honest Foole
Plies Desdemona to repaire his fortune,
And she for him pleades strongly to the Moore,
I'le powre this pestilence into his eare,
That she repeals him for her bodies Lust.
And by how much she strives to do him good,
She shall vndo her credit with the Moore.
So will I turne her vertue into pitch,
And out of her owne goodnesse make the Net,
That shall enmesh them all.
How now Roderigo?

Enter Roderigo.

Rodorigo. I do follow heere in the Chace, not like a Hound that hunts, but one that fills vp the Cry. My Money is almost spent, I haue been to night exceedingly well Cudgell'd. And I thinke the issue will

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cassio, Musitians.

Exeunt

Enter Iago

Exit Clo

Enter Desdemona

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen

Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Aemilia.

Exeunt

I giue thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, Ile perform it
To the last Article. My Lord shall neuer rest
Ile watch him tame, and talke him out of patience,
His Bed shall seeme a Schoole, his Boord a Shrift,
Ile intermingle euery thing he do's
With Cassio's suite: therein shall I diuerty seruice,
Till I am setled in my full Office.
How gue thy cause away

Enter Othello, Desdemona, and
Lodouico, Emilia, Cassio, and Attendants.

Lod. Madam, good morrow to
Cas. Mas. Desdemona
Des. Welcome
Iago. Mas. Lodouico, welcome,
Sir, welcome to Cyprus.
Lod. I thank you. How does
Des. Well, my good Lord.
Oth. Would it were Heauen!
Iago. Nothing my Lord: —Well, my Lord is
Oth. Was not
Iago. Cassio, my Lord
Saw them talke
Seeing you coming,
Oth. I do beleeue 'twas he
Des. How now
I haue bin talking with a Suitor here,
A man that comforts you my Lord
Cas. You were
Des. You were best
If I haue any grace, or power to moue you,
I haue no power to moue
Your best is not
Vnlesse the bitternesse of affliction
I am (blessed in your good will)
Good

Des. Why, this is not a boone:

'Tis as I should entreate you, wear your
Or feede on nourishing dishes, or keep you
Or breath vnto you, to do a peculiar profit
To your owne person. Nay,
Where I haue spoke any
I
And

Why
Oh
Prithee

Is

The worſt of words.
Iago. Good me Lord pardon me,
Though am bound to euery Act of me,
I am not bound to that All ſlaues are free to
Vſe my Thoughts? Why ſay they are vild and falſe?
Is where ſtraight Pooles were our eyes? One
Sometimes to this end Will ſend the worſer part,
Where vnbridled in
Keepe Leets, and Law-dayes, and in ſhort
Oth. Thou doſt conſpire againſt thy friend Iago,
If thou but think'ſt him wrong'd, and mak'ſt his eare
A ſtranger to thy Thoughts.
Iago. I do not know,
Though I perchance am vicious in my gueſſe
As I confeſſe it is my Nature pleaſure
To ſcan this thing no further: Leaue it vnknowne
Your wiſe, and your Lord, preſent no more trouble
Out of this fearefull, and vnſure obſeruance,
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my Manhood, Honeſty, and Wiſedome,
To let you know my thoughts.
Oth. What doſt thou meane?
Iago. Good name in Man, and Woman, deare my Lord
Is the immediate Iewell of their Soules,
Who ſteales my purſe, ſteales traſh:
'Tis ſomething, nothing:
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been ſlaue to thouſands:
But he that filches from me my good Name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poore indeed.
Oth. Ile know my Thoughts.
Iago. You cannot if my heart were in your hand,
Nor ſhall not, whil'ſt 'tis in my cuſtodie.
Oth. Ha?
Iago. Oh, beware my Lord, of Iealouſie,
It is the greene-ey'd Monſter, which doth mocke
The meate it feeds on. That Cuckold liues in bliſſe,
Who certaine of his Fate, loues not his wronger.
But oh, what damned minutes tells he o're,
Who dotes, yet doubts: Suſpects, yet ſtrongly loues?
Oth. O miſery.
Iago. Poore and Content, is rich and rich enough,
But Riches fineleſſe is as poore as Winter,
To him that euer feares he ſhall be poore:
Good Heauen, the ſoules of all my Tribe defend
From Iealouſie.
Oth. Why? why is this?
Think'ſt thou, I'ld make a Life of Iealouſie;
To follow ſtill the changes of the Moone
With freſh ſuſpition? No: to be once in doubt,
Is once to be reſolu'd. Exchange me for a Goat,
When I ſhall turne the buſineſſe of my Soule
To ſuch exſufflate, and blowne Surmiſes,
Matching thy Inference. 'Tis not to make me Iealious,
To ſay my Wife is faire, feeds well, loues company,
Is free of Speech, Sings, Plaies, and Dances:
Where Vertue is, there is moſt certaine
Nor, where I know am free from gentle motiues,
That ſhall not make me tricke or chaſe me out of Councels
For ſhe had eyes, and chooſe me. No Iago
Ile ſee before I doubt: when I doubt proue:
And on the proofe, there is no more but this,
Away at once with Loue, or Iealouſie.
I am glad of this: For now I ſhall haue reaſon
To ſhew the Loue and Duty that I beare you
With franker ſpirit. Therefore (as I am bound)
Receiue it from me. I ſpeake not yet of proofe
Looke to your wife, obſerue her well with Caſſio,
Weare your eyes, thus: not Iealious, nor Secure
I would not haue your free, and Noble Nature,
Out of ſelfe-Bounty, be abus'd: Looke to't.
I know our Country diſpoſition well.
In Venice, they do let Heauen ſee the prankes
They dare not ſhew their Husbands.
Their beſt Conſcience,
Is not to leaue't vndone, but keepe vnknowne.
Oth. Doſt thou ſay ſo?
Iago. She did deceiue her Father, marrying you,
And when ſhe ſeem'd to ſhake, and feare your lookes,
She lou'd them moſt.
Oth. And ſo ſhe did.
Iago. Why go too then:
Sheele ſo young could giue out ſuch a Seeming
To ſeele her Fathers eyes vp, cloſe as Oake,
He thought 'twas Witchcraft.
But I am much too blame:
I humbly do beſeech you of your pardon
For too much louing you.
Oth. I am bound to thee for euer
Iago. I ſee this hath a little daſh'd your Spirits:
Oth. Not a iot, not a iot.
Iago. Troth me, I feare it has
I hope you will conſider what is ſpoke
Comes from your Loue.
But I do ſee y'are moou'd:
I am to pray you, not to ſtraine my ſpeech
To groſſer iſſues, nor to larger reach,
Then to ſuſpition.
Oth. I will not.
Iago. Should you do ſo (my Lord)
My ſpeech ſhould fall into ſuch vilde ſucceſſe,
Which my Thoughts aym'd not.
Caſſio my worthy friend
My Lord, I ſee y'are moou'd.
Oth. No, not much moo'd
I do not think but Deſdemona is honeſt.
Iago. Long liue ſhe ſo
And long liue you to thinke ſo.
Oth. And yet how Nature erring from it ſelfe.
Iago. I, there is the point:
As (to be bold with you)
Not to affect many propoſed Matches
Of her owne Clime, Complexion, and Degree,
Whereto we ſee in all things, Nature tends:
Foh, one may ſmell in ſuch, a will moſt ranke,
Foule diſproportions, Thoughts vnnaturall.
But pardon me, I do not in poſition
Diſtinctly ſpeake of her, though I may feare
Her will, recoyling to her better iudgement,
May fall to match you with her Country formes,
And happily repent.
Oth. Farewell farewell:
If more thou doſt perceiue, let me know more:
Set on thy wife to obſerue.
Leaue me Iago.
Iago. My Lord, I take my leaue
Oth. Why did I marry?
This honeſt Creature (doubtleſſe)
Sees, and knowes more, much more then he vnfolds.

Iago My Lord, I would I might entreat your Honor
To scant this thing no farther. Leave it to time,
Although 'tis fit that Cassio have his place,
For sure he fills it vp with great Ability:
Yet if you please to hold him off awhile,
You shall by that perceiue him, and his meanes:
Note if your Lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vehement importunity,
Much will be seene in that. In the meane time,
Let me be thought too busie in my feares,
As worthy cause I haue to feare I am)
And hold her free, I do beseech your Honor.
Oth. Feare not my gouernment.
Iago. I once more take my leaue. Exit
Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty
And knowes all Qualities with a learned Spirit
Of humane dealings. If I do proue her Haggard,
Though that her Iesses were my deere heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her downe the wind
To prey at fortune. Haply for I am blacke,
And haue not those soft parts of Conuersation
That Chamberers haue: Or for I am declin'd
Into the vale of yeares, yet that's not much)
She's gone. I am abus'd, and my releefe
Must be to loath her. O Curse of Marriage
That we can call these delicate Creatures ours,
And not their Appetites? I had rather be a Toad,
And liue vpon the vapour of a Dungeon,
Than keepe a corner in the thing I loue
For others vses. Yet 'tis the plague of Great-ones,
Prerogatiu'd are they lesse than the base,
'Tis destiny vnshunnable, like death.
Even then this forked plague is fated to vs,
When we do quicken. Looke where she comes.

Enter Desdemona and Æmilia.

If she be false, Heauen mocks itselfe
Ile not beleeue't.
Des. How now, my deere Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous Islanders
By you inuited, do attend your presence.
Oth. I am to blame.
Des. Why do you speake so faintly?
Are you not well?
Oth. I haue a paine vpon my forehead, heere.
Des. Why that's with watching, 'twill away againe.
Let me but binde it hard, within this houre
It will be well.
Oth. Your Napkin is too little:
Let it alone. Come, Ile go in with you. Exit.
Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.
Æmil. I am glad I haue found this Napkin:
This was her first remembrance from the Moore,
My wayward Husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steale it. But she so loues the token,
(For he coniures her, she will keepe it)
That she reckons as needfull as the eyes
To lose't, or giue't away, were such perdition,
As nothing else could match.
Iago. How now? What do you heere alone?
Æmil. Do not you chide: I haue a thing for you.
Iago. You haue a thing for me?
It is a common thing ——
Æmil. Ha?
Iago. To haue a foolish wife.
Æmil. Oh, is that all? What will you giue me now
For that same Handkerchiefe.
Iago. What Handkerchiefe?
Æmil. What Handkerchiefe?
Why that the Moore first gaue to Desdemona
That which so often you haue bid me steale.
Iago. Hast stolne it from her?
Æmil. No, but she let it fall by negligence,
And to the aduantage, I being heere, tooke it vp.
Looke, heere it is.
Iago. A good wench, giue it me.
Æmil. What will you do with't, that you haue beene
So earnest to haue me filch it?
Iago. Why, what is that to you?
Æmil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Giue't me againe. Poore Lady, she'll run mad
When she shall lacke it.
Iago. Be not acknowne on't,
I haue vse for it. Go, leaue me. Exit Æmil.
I will in Cassio's Lodging loose this Napkin,
And let him finde it. Trifles light as Ayre,
Are to the iealous Confirmations strong
As proofes of Holy Writ. This may do something.
The Moore already changes with my poyson:
Dangerous conceits, are in their Nature poysons,
Which at the first are scarce found to distaste,
But with a little Act vpon the blood,
Burne like the Mines of Sulphur. I did say so.

Enter Othello.

Looke where he comes. Not Poppy, nor Mandragora,
Nor all the drowsie Syrops of the world
Shall euer medicine thee to that sweet sleepe
Which thou owedst yesterday.
Oth. Ha, ha, false to me?
Iago. Why how now Generall? No more of that.
Oth. Auant, be gone. Thou hast set me on the Racke.
I sweare 'tis better to be much abus'd,
Than but to know a little.
Iago. How now my Lord?
Oth. What sense had I of her stolne houres of lust?
I saw't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me.
I slept the next night well, was free and merry.
I found not Cassio's kisses on her Lippes.
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolne,
Let him not know't, and he's not robbed at all.
Iago. I am sorry to heare this.
Oth. I had been happy, if the generall Campe,
Pioners and all had tasted her sweet Body,
So I had nothing known. Oh now for euer
Farewell the tranquil mind, farewell Content,
Farewell the plumed Troope, and the bigge Warres,
That makes Ambition Vertue! Oh farewell,
Farewell the neighing Steed and the shrill Trumpe,
The spirit-stirring Drum, the eare-piercing Fife,
The Royall Banner, and all Quality,
Pride, Pompe and Circumstance of glorious Warre:
And O you mortall Engines, whose rude throates
Th'immortall Ioues dread Clamours counterfet,
Farewell. Othello's Occupation's gone.
Iago. Is't possible my Lord?
Oth. Villaine, be sure thou proue my Loue a Whore;
Be sure of it. Giue me the Ocular proofe,

Or

O by the worth of mine eternall Soule,
Thou hadst better haue bin borne a Dog
Then answer my wak'd wrath.
Iago. Is't come to this?
Oth. Make me to see't, or (at the least) so proue it,
That the probation bear no Hinge, nor Loope,
To hang a doubt on: Or woe vpon thy life
Iago. My Noble Lord.
Oth. If thou dost slander her and torture me,
Neuer pray more: Abandon all remorse
On Horrors head, Horrors accumulate:
Do deeds to make Heauen weepe, all earth amaz'd;
For nothing canst thou to damnation adde,
Greater then that.
Iago. O Grace! O Heauen forgiue me!
Are you a Man? Haue you a Soule? or Sense?
God buy you: take mine Office. O wretched Foole,
That lou'st to make thine Honestie, a Vice!
O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O World,
To be direct and honest, is not safe.
I thanke you for this profit, and from hence
Ile loue no friend, sith Loue breeds such offence.
Oth. Nay, stay: thou should'st be honest.
Iago. I should be wise; for Honestie's a Foole,
And loses that it works for.
Oth. By the World,
I thinke my Wife be honest, and thinke she is not;
I thinke that thou art just, and thinke thou art not.
Ile haue some proofe. My name that was as fresh
As Dians Visage, is now begrim'd and blacke
As mine owne face. If there be Cords, or Kniues,
Poyson, or Fire, or suffocating streames,
Ile not endure it. Would I were satisfied.
Iago. I see you are eaten vp with Passion:
I do repent me, that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied?
Oth. Would? Nay, and I will.
Iago. And may: but how? How satisfied my Lord?
Would you the supervision grossely gape on?
Behold her top'd?
Oth. Death, and damnation! Oh!
Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I thinke,
To bring them to that Prospect: Damne them then,
If euer mortall eyes do see them bolster
More then their owne. What then? How then?
What shall I say? Where's Satisfaction?
It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as Goates, as hot as Monkeyes,
As salt as Wolues in Pride, and Foole as grosse
As Ignorance made drunke: But yet, I say,
If Imputation, and strong circumstances,
Which lead directly to the doore of Truth,
Will giue you satisfaction, you might haue't.
Oth. Giue me a cause for this: Ile see't.
Iago. I do not like the Office:
But sith I am entred in this cause so farre
(Prick'd to't by foolish Honesty, and Loue)
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately,
And being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleepe. There are a kinde of men,
So loose of Soule, that in their sleepes will mutter
Their Affayres: one of this kinde is Cassio.
In sleepe I heard him say, Sweet Desdemona,
Let vs be wary, let vs hide our Loues,
And then (Sir) would he gripe, and wring my hand:
Cry, O sweet Creature: then kisse me hard,
As if he pluck'd vp kisses by the roots,
That grew vpon my lippes, laid his Leg ore my Thigh,
And sigh, and kisse, and then cry curs'd Fate,
That gaue thee to the Moore.
Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!
Iago. Nay, this was but his Dreame.
Oth. But this denoted a fore-gone conclusion,
'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a Dreame.
Iago. And this may helpe to thicken other proofes,
That do demonstrate thinly.
Oth. Ile teare her all to peeces.
Iago. Nay yet be wise; yet we see nothing done,
She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,
Haue you not sometimes seene a Handkerchiefe
Spotted with Strawberries, in your wiues hand?
Oth. I gaue her such a one: 'twas my first gift.
Iago. I know not that: but such a Handkerchiefe
(I am sure it was your wiues) did I to day
See Cassio wipe his Beard with.
Oth. If it be that.
Iago. If it be that, or any, it was hers.
It speakes against her with the other proofes.
Oth. O that the Slaue had forty thousand liues:
One is too poore, too weake for my reuenge.
Now do I see 'tis true. Looke here Iago,
All my fond loue thus do I blow to Heauen. 'Tis gone.
Arise blacke vengeance, from the hollow hell,
Yeeld vp (O Loue) thy Crowne, and hearted Throne
To tyrannous Hate. Swell bosome with thy fraught,
For 'tis of Aspickes tongues.
Iago. Yet be content.
Oth. O blood, blood, blood.
Iago. Patience I say: your minde may change.
Oth. Neuer Iago. Like to the Pontick Sea,
Whose Icie Current, and compulsiue course,
Ne'r feels retyring Ebbe, but keepes due on
To the Propontick, and the Hellespont:
Euen so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace
Shall neuer looke backe, nere ebbe to humble Loue,
Till that a capable, and wide Reuenge
Swallow them vp. Now by yond Marble Heauen,
In the due reuerence of a Sacred vow,
I here engage my words.
Iago. Do not rise yet.
Witnesse you euer-burning Lights aboue,
You Elements, that clip vs round about,
Witnesse that here Iago doth giue vp
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wronged Othello's Seruice. Let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse,
What bloody businesse euer.
Oth. I greet thy loue,
Not with vaine thankes, but with acceptance bounteous,
And will vpon the instant put thee too't.
Within these three dayes let me heare thee say,
That Cassio 's not aliue.
Iago. My Friend is dead.
'Tis done at your Request.
But let her liue.
Oth. Damne her lewde Minx:
O damne her, damne her.
Come go with me a-part, I will withdraw
To furnish me with some swift meanes of death
For the fayre Diuell.
Now art thou my Lieutenant.
Iago. I am your owne for euer. Exeunt
Seqve

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Desdemona, Æmilia and Clown.

Des. Do you know sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lyes?

Clow. I dare not say he lies any where.

Des. Why man?

Clo He is a Souldier, and for me to say a Souldier lyes, 'tis stabbing.

Des. Go too, where lodges he?

Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lye

Des Can any thing be made of this?

Clo I know not where he lodges, and for me to devise a lodging, and say he lies here, or he lies there, were to lye in mine owne throat.

Des Can you enquire him out? and be edified by report

Clo I will Catechize the world for him, that is, make Questions and by their answer.

Des. Seeke him, bid him come hither, tell him, I have mooued my Lord on his behalfe, and hope all will be well.

Clo. To do this is within the compasse of mans Wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it. Exit Clo

Des Where should I loose the Handkercheefe, Æmilia?

Æmil. I know not Madam

Des Beleeue me, I had rather haue lost my purse full of Cruzadoes. And but my Noble Moore Is true of minde, and made of no such baseneſſe, As iealous Creatures are, it were enough To put him to ill-thinking.

Æmil. Is he not iealous?

Des Who, he? I think the Sunne where he was borne, Drew all such humours from him.

Æmil. Looke where he comes.

Enter Othello.

Des I will not leaue him now, til Cassio be Cal'd to him. How is't with you, my Lord?

Oth. Well, my good Lady. Oh hardnes to diſſemble! How do you, Desdemona?

Des Well, my good Lord.

Oth. Giue me your hand This hand is moiſt, my Lady.

Des It hath felt no age, nor known no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulneſſe, and liberall heart: Hot, hot, and moyſt. This hand of yours requires A iequeſter from Liberty, Fasting, and Prayer, Much Castigation, Exercise deuout, For here's a young and sweating Deuil here That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand, A frank one.

Des. You may (indeed) say so, For 'twas that hand that gaue away my heart.

Oth A liberall hand. The hearts of old gaue hands. But our new Heraldry is hands, not hearts.

Des. I cannot speake of this? Come, now your promiſe.

Oth. What promiſe Chuck?

Des I haue sent to bid Cassio come speake with you.

Oth. I haue a salt and sorry Rheume offends me. Lend me thy Handkercheefe.

Des. Heere my Lord.

Oth That which I gaue you.

Des. I haue it not about me.

Oth Not?

Des No indeed, my Lord.

Oth. That's a fault. That Handkercheefe Did an Ægyptian to my Mother giue She was a Charmer, and could almoſt read The thoughts of people. She told her, while she kept it, I would make her Amiable and subdue my Father Intirely to her loue. But if she lost it, Or made a Gift of it, my Fathers eye Should hold her loathed, and his Spirits should hunt After new Fancies. She dying gaue it me, And bid me (when my Fate would haue me Wiu'd) To giue it her. I did so, and take heed on't, Make it a Darling, as precious as mine eye To loose it, or giue't away, were such perdition, As nothing else could match.

Des Is't possible?

Oth 'Tis true. There's Magicke in the web of it. A Sybill that had numbred in the world The Sunne to course two hundred compaſſes, In her Prophetick fury sowed the Worke The Wormes were hallowed that did breed the Silke, And it was dyde in Mummy, which the Skilfull Conſerued of Maidens hearts.

Des. Indeed? Is't true?

Oth Most veritable, therefore looke to't well.

Des. Then would to God that I had neuer seene't!

Oth Ha? wherefore?

Des Why do you speake so startingly and rash?

Oth Is't lost? Is't gone? Speak, is it out o'th' way?

Des Heauen blesse vs.

Oth Say you?

Des It is not lost, but what and if it were?

Oth. How?

Des I say it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch't, let me see't.

Des Why so I can, but I will'e not now: This is a trick to put me from my suite, Pray you let Cassio be receiu'd againe.

Oth Fetch me the Handkercheefe, My minde misgiues.

Des. Come, come, you neuer meant a man so much.

Oth. The Handkercheefe.

Des A man that all his time Hath founded his good Fortunes on your loue; Shar'd dangers with you.

Oth The Handkercheefe.

Des. I'faith you are too blame.

Oth Away. Exit Othello.

Æmil. Is not this man iealous?

Des. I ne'r saw this before Sure, there's some wonder in this Handkercheefe, I am most vnhappy in the loſſe of it.

Æmil 'Tis not a yeare or two shewes a man: They are all but Stomackes, and we all but Food, They eate vs hungerly, and when they are full They belch vs.

Enter Iago and Cassio.

Looke you, Cassio and my Husband

Iago There is no other way, 'tis she must doo't: And lo the happineſſe, go, and importune her.

Des.

Des. How now (good Cassio) what's the newes with you?

Cassio. Madam, my former suite. I do beseech you,
That by your vertuous meanes, I may againe
Exist, and be a member of his loue,
Whom I, with all the Office of my heart
Intirely honour, I would not be delayd
If my offence, be of such mortall kinde,
That nor my Seruice past, nor present Sorrowes,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransome me into his loue againe,
But to know so, must be my benefit
So shall I clothe me in a forc'd content,
And shut my eyes vpon some other course
To fortunes Almes.

Des. Alas (most iniurious gentle Cassio)
My Aduocation is not now in Tune;
My Lord, is not my Lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in Fauour, as in Humour alter'd.
So helpe me euery spirit sanctified,
As I haue spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blanke of his displeasure
For my free speech. You must awhile be patient
What I can do, I will: and more I will,
Then for my selfe, I dare. Let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my Lord angry?

Æmil. He went hence but now
And certainly in strange vnquietnesse.

Iago. Can he be angry? I haue seene the Cannon
When it hath blowne his Ranks into the Ayre,
And like the Deuill from his very Arme
Puff'st his owne Brother. And is he angry?
Something of moment then. I will go meet him,
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry. Exit

Des. I prythee do so. Something sure of State,
Either from Venice, or some vnhatch'd practise
Made demonstrable heere in Cyprus, to him,
Hath puddled his cleare Spirit: and in such cases,
Mens Natures wrangle with inferiour things,
Though great ones are their obiect. 'Tis euen so.
For let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthfull members, euen to a sense
Of paine. Nay, we must thinke men are not Gods,
Nor of them looke for such obseruancie
As fit the Bridall. Beshrew me much, Æmilia,
I was (vnhandsome Warrior, as I am)
Arraigning his vnkindnesse with my soule:
But now I finde, I had suborn'd the Witnesse,
And he's Indicted falsely.

Æmil. Pray heauen it be
State matters, as you thinke, and no Conception,
Nor no iealous Toy concerning you.

Des. Alas the day, I neuer gaue him cause.

Æmil. But iealous soules will not be answer'd so;
They are not euer iealous for the cause,
But iealous, for they're iealous. It is a Monster
Begot vpon it selfe, borne on it selfe.

Des. Heauen keepe that Monster from Othello's mind.

Æmil. Lady Amen.

Des. I will go seeke him. Cassio walke heere about
If I do finde him fit, Ile moue your suite,
And seeke to effect it to my vttermost.

Cas. I humbly thanke your Ladyship. Exeunt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. Saue you (Friend Cassio)

Cassio. What make you from home?
How is't with you, my most faire Bianca?
Indeed (sweet Loue) I was comming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your Lodging, Cassio
What? keepe a weeke away? Seuen dayes, and Nights?
Eight score eight houres? And Louers absent howres
More tedious then the Diall, eight score times?
Oh weary reckoning.

Cassio. Pardon me, Bianca.
I haue this while with leaden thoughts beene prest,
But I shall in a more continuate time
Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca
Take me this worke out.

Bian. Oh Cassio, whence came this?
This is some Token from a newer friend,
To the felt-Absence now I feele a Cause:
Is't come to this? Well, well.

Cassio. Go too, woman
Throw your vilde guesses in the Diuels teeth,
From whence you haue them. You are iealious now,
That this is from some Mistris, some remembrance;
No, in good troth Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cassio. I know not neither.
I found it in my Chamber,
I like the worke well; Ere it be demanded
(As like enough it will) I would haue it copied:
Take it and go't, and leaue me for this time.

Bian. Leaue you? Wherefore?

Cassio. I do attend heere on the Generall,
And think it no addition nor my wish
To haue him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cassio. Not that I loue you not.

Bian. But that you do not loue me,
I pray you bring me on the way a little,
And say, if I shall see you soone at night?

Cassio. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you,
For I attend heere. But Ile see you soone.

Bian. 'Tis very good. I must be circumstanc'd.
Exeunt ambo.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Iago. Will you thinke so?

Oth. Thinke so, Iago?

Iago. What, to kisse in priuate?

Oth. An vnauthoriz'd kisse?

Iago. Or to be naked with her Friend in bed,
An hour or more, not meaning any harme?

Oth. Naked in bed (Iago) and not meane harme?
It is hypocrisie against the Deuill:
They that meane vertuously, and yet do so,
The Deuill their vertue tempts, and they tempt Heauen.

Iago. If they do nothing, 'tis a Veniall slip:
But if I giue my wife a Handkerchiefe.

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then 'tis hers (my Lord) and being hers,
She may (I thinke) bestow't on any man.

Oth. She is Protectresse of her honor too:
May she giue that?

Iago Her honor is an Essence that's not seene,
They haue it very oft, that haue it not:
But for the Handkercheife
Othe. By heauen, I would most gladly haue forgot it.
Thou saydst (oh it comes ore my memorie,
As doth the Raueus ore the infectious house
Boading to all) he had my Handkercheife.
Iago I what of that?
Oth. That's not so good now.
Iago What if I had said I had seene him do you wrong?
Or heard him say (as knaues be subtle and hacknie
Will say we thinke) how do we know the times,
Or worke vpon the blood, and set it downe,
Is nothing, but bare supposition yet
But they must out: Let
Oth. Hath he said any thing?
Iago. I cannot tell (my Lord) what you will haue it,
No more then he hath done, and more
Oth. What hath he said?
Iago Why that he did I know not what he did.
Oth. What, What?
Iago. Lye
Oth. With her?
Iago With her (on her what you will.)
Oth. Lye with her? Lye on her? (We say lye on her, when they belye her) Lye with her, that's fulsome.
Handkercheife confession Handkercheife. To confesse and be hanged for his labour. First to be hanged and then to confesse. I tremble at it. Nature would not inuest herselfe in such shadowing passion without some instruction. It is not words that shake me thus. Pish.
Noses Eares and Lippes. Is't possible. Confesse? Handkercheife? O diuell. Falls in a trance
Iago Worke on,
My Medicine workes. Thus credulous Fooles are caught,
And many worthy, and chaste Dames euen thus,
(All guiltlesse) meerely come to this, and all's gone. My Lord?
My Lord, I say Othello

Enter Cassio

How now Cassio?
Cas. What's the matter?
Iago My Lord is fallen into an Epilepsie,
This is his second Fit, he had one yesterday
Cas. Rub him about the Temples
Iago The Lethargie must haue his quiet course
If not he foames at mouth, and by and by
Breakes out to sauage madnesse. Look he stirres.
Do you withdraw your selfe a little while,
He will recouer straight: when he is gone,
I would on great occasion, speake with you.
How is it (Generall) haue you not hurt your head?
Oth. Dost thou mock me?
Iago. I mocke you not, by Heauen.
Would you would beare your fortune like a Man.
Oth. A Horned man's a Monster, and a Beast.
Iago There's many a beast then in a populous Citie,
And many a ciuil Monster.
Oth. Did he confesse it?
Iago Good Sir be a man
Think euery bearded fellow that's but yoak'd
May draw with you. There's Millions now aliue,
That nightly lye in those vnproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar. Your case is better.
Oh 'tis the spight of Hell, the Fiends Arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a secure Couch:
And to suppose her chaste. No, let me know,
And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.
Oth. O thou art wise, 'tis certaine.
Iago Stand you awhile apart,
Confine your selfe but in a patient list.
Whilst you were here, ore-whelmed with your griefe
(A passion most resulting such a man)
Cassio came hither. I shooed him away,
And laid good 'scuses vpon your Ecstasie,
Bad him anon returne and here speake with me,
The which he promis'd. Do but encaue your selfe,
And marke the Fleeres, the Gybes, and notable Scorns
That dwell in euery Region of his face.
For I will make him tell the tale anew
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is againe to cope your wife.
I say but marke his gesture. Marry patience,
Or I shall say you are all in all in spleene,
And nothing of a Man.
Oth. Dost thou heare Iago,
I will be found most cunning in my patience,
But (dost thou heare) most bloody.
Iago. That's not amisse,
But yet keepe time in all. Will you withdraw?
Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A huswife that by selling her desires
Buyes her selfe bread, and cloth. It is a Creature
That dotes on Cassio, as 'tis the Strumpets plague
To beguile many, and be beguil'd by one.
He when he hears of her, cannot refraine
From the excesse of laughter. Here he comes.

Enter Cassio.

As he shall smile Othello shall go mad:
And his vnbookish Ielousie must construe
Poore Cassies smiles, gestures, & light behauiours
Quite in the wrong. How do you now Lieutenant
The worser that you giue me the addition
Whose want euen kills me.
Iago Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't.
Now if this suit lay in Bianca's power,
How quickly should you speed?
Cas. Alas poore Caitiffe
Oth. Looke how he laughes already.
Iago I neuer knew woman loue man so.
Cas. Alas poore Rogue, I thinke indeed she loues me
Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughes it out.
Iago Do you hear Cassio?
Oth. Now he importunes him
To tell it o're. Go to, well said, well said.
Iago She gives it out that you shall marry her
Do you intend it?
Cas. Ha, ha, ha
Oth. Do you triumph Roman? do you triumph?
Cas. I marry. What? A customer? prythee beare
Some charity to my wit, do not think it so vnwholesome. Ha, ha, ha.
Oth. So, so, so, so: they laugh that win.
Iago Why the cry goes that you marry her.
Cas. Prythee say true
Iago I am a very villaine else.
Oth. Haue you scor'd me? Well.
Cas. This is the Monkies owne giuing out:
She is persuaded I will marry her
Out of her owne loue & flattery, not out of my promise

Oth. ...go becomes me now he begins the story.

Cas. ...not very seldom now she comes me in ...ce. I was the other day talking on the Sea-bank with certaine Venetians, and thither comes the Bauble, and falls me thus about my neck.

Oth. Crying on mee re Cassio as it were his gesture imports it.

Cas. So hanging, and weeping upon me. So shakes, and pulls me, ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Now he tells how she plucked him to my Chamber: oh, I see that nose of yours, but not that dogge, I shall throw it.

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me looke where she comes.

Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew, marry a perfumed one? What do you meane by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let me know you meane by calling me to you, do you take me for a stale? Where was you this morning?

Cas. ...

Bian. ...

Oth. ...

Bian. If you can come to supper to night you may: you will not, come when you are next prepared for. Exit

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. ...

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. Yes, I ...

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you: for I would very fain speake with you.

Cas. ...

Iago. ...

Oth. ...

Iago. ...

Oth. ...

Iago. ...

*Oth

Othe Mistris,
Des. My Lord.
Oth. What would I you wi'sher, Sir?
Lod. Who I my Lord?
Oth. I, you did wish, that I would make her turne
Sir, she can turne, and turne, and yet go on
And turne again. And she can weepe, Sir, weepe
And she's obedient, as you'l not denie
Very well: proceed with the rest, I say.
Lod. Is this your Noble Moore, and his Wife?
Des. Cassio my Lord, better I were Dead
I do intreat, that we may sup with you
You are welcome Sir to Cyprus.
Goates and Monkeys. Exit
Lod. Is this the Noble Moore, whom our full Senate
Call all in all sufficient? Is this the Nature
Whom Passion could not shake? whose solid Vertue
The shot of Accident, nor dart of Chance
Could neither graze, nor pierce?
Iago. He is much chang'd.
Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of braine?
Iago. He's that he is: I may not breath my censure
What he might be: if what he might, he is not,
I would to heaven he were.
Lod. What strike his wife?
Iago. Faith that was not well: yet would I knew
That stroke would prove the worst.
Lod. Is it his use?
Or did the Letters worke upon his blood,
And new create this fault?
Iago. Alas, alas.
It is not honestie in me to speake
What I have seene and knowne. You shall observe him,
And his owne courses will denote him so,
That I may save my speech: do but go after
And marke how he continues.
Lod. I am sorry that I am deceiv'd in him. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You have seene nothing then?
Emil. Nor ever heard, nor ever did suspect.
Oth. Yes, and have seene those things.
Emil. I have not seene any.
Oth. Lodovico and he used to be familiar,
Emil. But then I saw no harme, and then I heard,
Each syllable that breath made up betweene them.
Oth. What? did they never whisper?
Emil. Never my Lord.
Oth. Nor send you out o'th' way?
Emil. Never.
Oth. To fetch her Fan, her Gloves, or her Mask?
Emil. Never my Lord.
Oth. That's strange.
Emil. I durst my Lord to wager she is honest,
Lay downe my Soule at stake. If you think other,
Remove your thought: It doth abuse your bosome.
If any wretch have put this in your head,
Let Heaven requite it with the Serpents curse,
For if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy. The purest of their Wives
Is foule as Slander.
Oth. Bid her come hither: go.
She says enough: yet she's a simple Bawd
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle Whore
A Closet Lock and Key of villanous Secrets
And yet she'll kneele, and pray; I have seene her do't.

Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

Des. My Lord, what is your will?
Oth. Pray you Chuck come hither.
Des. What is your pleasure?
Oth. Let me see your eyes:
Look in my face.
Des. What horrible fancie's this?
Oth. Some of your Function Mistris,
Leave procreants alone, and shut the door,
Cough, or cry hem if any body come:
Your Mystery, your Mystery: nay dispatch. Exit Emilia.
Des. Upon my knee, what doth your speech import?
I understand a fury in your words,
But not the words.
Oth. Why what art thou?
Des. Your Wife my Lord, your true
And loyall Wife.
Oth. Come, swear it, damne thy selfe,
Lest being like one of Heaven, the Divels themselves
Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double damn'd,
Swear thou art honest.
Des. Heaven doth truly know it.
Oth. Heaven truly knowes that thou art false as Hell.
Des. To whom my Lord? with whom? how am I false?
Oth. Ah Desdemon, away, away, away.
Des. Alas the heavy day: why do you weepe?
Am I the motive of these teares my Lord?
If haply you my Father do suspect
An instrument of this your calling back,
Lay not your blame on me: If you have lost him,
Why I have lost him too.
Oth. Had it pleas'd Heaven
To try me with affliction, had they rain'd
All kinds of sores, and shames on my bare head,
Steep'd me in Poverty to the very lips,
Given to Captivity me and my utmost hopes,
I should have found in some part of my soule
A drop of Patience: but (alas) to make me
A fixed Figure, for the time of Scorne
To point his slow unmoving finger at,
Yet could I bear that too, well, very well:
But there where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life,
The Fountaine from the which my current runs,
Or else dries up: to be discarded thence,
Or keepe it as a Cesterne, for foule Toades
To knot and gender in. Turne thy complexion there
Patience thou young and rose-lipp'd Cherubin,
Ay there look grim as Hell.
Des. I hope my Noble Lord esteemes me honest.
Oth. O I, as Summer Flies are in the Shambles,
That quicken even with blowing. O thou weed
Who are so lovely fayre, and smell'st so sweete
That the Sense aches at thee, would thou hadst never Never been borne.
Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?
Oth. Was this faire Paper, this most goodly Booke
Made to write Whore upon? What committed,

Commanded? Out of our publicke Commoner,
I should make very forges of my cheekes,
That would to Cynders burne vp Modestie,
Did I but speake thy deedes. What committed?
Heauen stops the Nose at it, and the Moone winkes,
The bawdy wind that kisses all it meetes
Is hush'd within the hollow Mine of earth,
And will not hear't. What committed?
Des. By Heauen you do me wrong.
Oth. Are not you a Strumpet?
Des. No, as I am a Christian.
If to preserue this vessell for my Lord,
From any other foule vnlawfull touch
Be not to be a Strumpet, I am none.
Oth. What not a Whore?
Des. No, as I shall be sau'd.
Oth. Is't possible?
Des. O Heauen forgiue vs.
Oth. I cry you mercy then,
I tooke you for that cunning Whore of Venice,
That married with Othello. You Mistris,
Enter Æmilia.
That liue the Exchequer to Saint Peter,
And keepe the gate of Hell. You you, I, you.
We haue done our course, there's money for your pains,
I pray you turne the key, and keepe our counsell. Exit
Æmil. Alas what does this gentleman conceiue?
How do you Madam? How do you my good Lady?
Des. Faith halfe asleepe.
Æmil. Good Madam,
What's the matter with my Lord?
Des. With who?
Æmil. Why, with my Lord, Madam?
Des. Who is my Lord?
Æmil. He that is yours, sweet Lady.
Des. I haue none: do not talke to me Æmilia,
I cannot weepe, nor answers haue I none,
But what should go by water. Prythee to night,
Lay on my bed my wedding sheetes, remember,
And call thy husband hither.
Æmil. Here's a change indeed. Exit
Des. 'Tis meete I should be vs'd so, very meete.
How haue I been behaue, that doctor'd is
This man? this hell?
Iago. How do you Madam, how do you?
Æmil. Good, good.
Iago. You are weeping.
Æmil. Alas, I know not.
Iago. Are you not wondrous sorry?
Good Madam, pardon me, I do beleeue you think me
Wicked indeed, to keepe his honour from
The vile embraces of a Barbarous Moore?
Come, swear it, damne thy selfe, lest being like one of Heauen,
The diuels themselues should feare to seize thee,
Sweare thou art honest.
Des. Heauen doth truly know it.
Iago. Heauen truly knowes that thou art false as Hell.
Des. To whom, Iago?
Iago. To thy Husband.
Des. I am none, nor euer will be Iago.
Iago. Oh good Lady.
Des. Prythee to bed, and call my Seruant hither.
Iago. Madam I will.
Des. Alas, what does this gentleman conceiue?
How do you Madam? how do you my good Lady?
Æmil. Faith halfe asleepe.
Des. Good Madam,
What's the matter with my Lord?
Des. With who?
Æmil. Why, with my Lord, Madam?
Des. Who is my Lord?
Æmil. He that is yours, sweet Lady.
Des. I haue none, do not talke to me Æmilia,
I cannot weepe, nor answers haue I none,
But what should go by water. Prythee to night,
Lay on my bed my wedding sheetes, remember,
And call thy husband hither.
Æmil. Here's a change indeed. Exit
Des. 'Tis meete I should be vs'd so, very meete.
How haue I been behaue, that doctor'd is
This man? this hell?
Iago. How do you Madam, how do you?

enter Iago and Æmilia.

Iago. What is your pleasure Madam?
How is't with you?
Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young Babes
Do it with gentle meanes, and easie tasks:
He might haue chid me so, for in good faith
I am a Child to chiding.
Iago. What is the matter Lady?
Æmil. Alas Iago, my Lord hath so bewhor'd her,
Throwne such dispight and heauy termes vpon her
That true hearts cannot beare it.
Des. Am I that name Iago?
Iago. What name fit for this Lady?
Des. Did he so take me for a common Drudge,
You should haue heard me say my Lord did say I was
Æmil. He call'd her whore a Begger in his drinke,
Could not haue laid such termes vpon his Callet.
Iago. Why did he so?
Des. I do not know, I am sure I am none such.
Iago. Do not weepe, do not weepe, alas the day.
Æmil. Hath she forsooke so many Noble Matches?
Her Father? And her Country? And her Friends?
To be call'd Whore? Would it not make one weepe?
Des. It is my wretched Fortune.
Iago. Beshrew him for't.
How comes this Trick vpon him?
Des. Nay Heauen doth know.
Æmil. I will be hang'd if some eternall Villaine,
Some busie and insinuating Rogue,
Some cogging cozening Slaue, to get some Office,
Haue not deuis'd this Slander. I will be hang'd else.
Iago. Fie, there is no such man: it is impossible.
Des. If any such there be, Heauen pardon him.
Æmil. A halter pardon him.
And hell gnaw his bones
Why should he call her Whore?
Who keepes her companie?
What Place? What Time?
What Forme? What Likelihood?
The Moore's abus'd by some most villanous Knaue,
Some base notorious Knaue, some scuruy Fellow
O Heauens, that such companions thou'dst vnfold,
And put in euery honest hand a whip
To lash the Rascalls naked through the world,
Euen from the East to the West.
Iago. Speake within doore
Æmil. O fie vpon them. Some such Squire he was
That turn'd your wit, the seamy-side without,
And made you to suspect me with the Moore.
Iago. You are a Foole, go too.
Des. Alas Iago,
What shall I do to win my Lord againe?
Good friend, go to him, for by this light of Heauen,
I know not how I lost him. Here I kneele.
If ere my will did trespasse gainst his Loue,
Either in discourse of thought, or actuall deed,
Or that mine eyes, mine eares, or any Sence
Delighted them in any other Forme.
Or that I do not yet, and euer will,
Though he doth shake me off
To beggerly diuorcement. Loue him dearely,
Comfort forsweare me. Vnkindnesse may do much,
And his vnkindnesse may defeat my life,
But neuer taint my Loue. I cannot say Whore,
It does abhorre me now I speake the word,
To do the Act, that might the addition earne,
Not the world's Mass of Vanity could make me
Iago. I pray you be content, 'tis but his humour
The businesse of the State do's him offence,
Des. If 'twere no other.
Iago. It is but so, I warrant.
Hearke how these Instruments summon to supper:
The Messengers of Venice staies the meate,
Go in, and weepe not at things that be wel.
Exeunt Desdemona and Æmilia

Enter Rodorigo.

How now Rodorigo?
Rod. I do follow heere
That I do feele not fayly weld me.
Iago What in the contrarie?
Rodor. Euery day thou dafts me with some deuise
Iago, and rackes, as it seemes to me now, keepe'st from me all conueniencie, than suppliest me with the least aduantage of hope. I will indeed no longer endure it. Nor am I yet perswaded to put vp in peace, what already I
haue foolishly suffred.
Iago. Will you heare me Rodorigo?
Rodor. I

Rodor. I haue heard too much, and your words and Performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most vniustly.

Rod. With naught but truth. I haue wasted my selfe out of my meanes. The iewels you haue had from me to deliuer Desdemona would haue preferred a Vestall. You haue told me she hath receiued them, and returned me expectations and comforts of liking in respect of louelinesse, and not iealousie.

Iago. Well, goe to, very well.

Rod. Very well, goe to? I cannot goe, man, nor 'tis not very well. By this hand I say it is very scurvy, and begin to finde my selfe fobbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rodor. I tell you, 'tis not very well. I will make my selfe known to Desdemona. If she will returne me my iewels, I will giue ouer my suit, and repent my vnlawfull solicitation; if not, assure your selfe, I will seeke satisfaction of you.

Iago. You haue said now.

Rod. I, and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee, and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Giue me thy hand, Roderigo. Thou hast taken against me a most iust exception, but yet I protest I haue dealt most directly in my Affaire.

Rod. It hath not appear'd.

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appear'd, and your suspition is not without wit and iudgement. But Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I haue greater reason to beleeue now than euer, I meane purpose, courage, and valour, this night shew it: if thou the next night following enioyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery, and deuise engines for my life.

Rod. Well, what is it? Is it within reason and compasse?

Iago. Sir, there is especiall commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? Why then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O no, he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fare Desdemona, vnlesse his abode be lingred here by some accident: wherein none can be so determinate as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you meane, removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him vncapable of Othello's place: knocking out his braines.

Rod. And that you would haue me to do.

Iago. I, if you dare do your selfe a profit, and a right. He sups to night with a harlotry, and thither will I go to him. He knowes not yet of his Honourable Fortune. If you will watch his going thence (which I will fashion to fall out between twelue and one) you may take him at your pleasure. I will be neere to second your Attempt, and he shall fall between vs. Come, stand not amaz'd at it, but go along with me. I will shew you such a necessity in his death, that you shall thinke your selfe bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night growes to waste. About it.

Rod. I will consider of it.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Othello, Lodouico, Desdemona, Emilia, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble your selfe no further.

Oth. O pardon me, 'twill do me good to walke.

Lodou. Madam, good night, I humbly thanke your Ladyship.

Des. Your Honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walke sir? O Desdemona.

Des. My Lord.

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant, I will be returned forthwith: dismisse your Attendant there: looke it be done.

Exit.

Des. I will my Lord.

Emil. How goes it now? He looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says he will returne incontinent,

And hath commanded me to go alone.

Emil. Desire me

Des. I would most gladly haue it so, Emilia,

Good night, good night: Heauen me such vses send,

Not to pick bad from bad, but by bad mend.

Exeunt

Iago. Here, stand behind this Bulke, straight will he come:

Dismisse your selfe well to this Gentleman,

And quickly draw him on to this Reuenge,

Stand not amaz'd at it, but go along

Where you shall heare me rayle in the wrong'st tearmes,

Euen to the disposition that I owe her,

And you shall see a fellow speaking Termes,

Which cannot choose but breed a working matter

Fit for your minde: goe, walke, call me to you straight.

Rod. Do it, as you shall finde me ready to the Act.

Iago. And what's he then that sayes I play the Villaine,

When this aduice is free I giue, and honest,

Proball to thinking, and indeed the course

To win the Moore againe? For 'tis most easie

The inclining Desdemona will re-copie him,

And my Lord calls him backe from Mauritania,

To set his Title on confirmed. Take me this worke out.

Rod. O heauen, how I do loue the Moore!

Iago. Come, go to bed, he hates me sore,

That daily shames me with his doltish will,

And in his office nightly wakes me ill.

Well, I must now to Cassio, and intreate him

To come to this place: harke, who's that knocks?

Oth. How now Lieutenant?

Des. The Moore of Venice!

Iago. Now sir, haue you sought me out at last?

Rod. Why, how now Ancient? Then we are betrayed.

Iago. Why, no matter for that, if it be done.

Rod. Will you go on afore?

Iago. I will.

Emil. Madam, see you how she walkes this way?

Des. I speake not how she should.

Emil. Beleeue me I thinke she doth.

Des. Good Gentlemen.

Iago. Sir, I will.

Emil. Come, my Lord.

Oth. Desdemona.

Des. My Lord.

Oth. Come hither.

Des. Good my Lord.

Oth. Let me see your eyes,

Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. Some of your Function, Mistris,

Leaue procreants alone, and shut the doore,

Cough, or cry hem, if any body come:

Your mystery, your mystery: nay dispatch.

Des. Vpon my knee, what doth your speech import?

I vnderstand a fury in your words,

But not the words.

Oth. Why what art thou?

Des. Your wife my Lord, your true

And loyall wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damne thy selfe,

Lest being like one of Heauen, the diuels themselues

Should feare to seize thee: therefore be double damn'd,

Swear thou art honest.

Des. Heauen doth truly know it.

Oth. Heauen truly knowes that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom my Lord? With whom? How am I false?

Oth. Ah Desdemon! away, away, away.

Des. Alas the heauy day! Why do you weepe?

Am I the motiue of these teares my Lord?

If haply you my Father do suspect

An instrument of this your calling back,

Lay it vpon me: if my mother

Haue lost her child, I am as true as truth

To lose a father, that any act or thought

Of mine, that might instruct you qualification,

Or see, or thinke how I might proue vnkind

To this deere hand, whose knot I broke to make mine?

Oth. Were it my cue to fight, I should haue known it

Without a Prompter. Where will that day finde me,

And now of all times, thus to haue you speake

Of my reuolt? O Desdemona, away, away, away.

Des. Alas the heauy day! That I do weepe,

Is to moue laughter to my selfe, that I am blam'd

Without the knowledge of my fault, let Loue not power

To snatch my words, my mourning, my dispaires,

Into the eares of cruelty. If she must die,

She'll sure speake to my wayling, O good my Lord,

I would haue had you seene and heard me speake,

Before you touch'd me: for to strike the sense

Of my poore heart with this immoueable grief,

Were to incur your temper, and my fate

Delighted them in any other forme:

Yet for I know compassion in its nature

Discouers lightly its effect, and hardnesse

Will worke like Mines, and blow it selfe with winde

To the confusion of her hauer: I may intreate you then

Let me but stay by you all night, this night,

Two houres, one houre, but the poore time I aske you,

Oth. What, what?

Des. Ay me, I am vndone.

Oth. Out, out, out.

Des. Why then Heauen haue mercy on me.

Oth. Now I do relent,

Thy confession is thy freedome.

Des. Do not kill me,

To day kill me, but not to night.

Oth. Well, do it, and beware of crying out.

Des. Sweet my Lord, kill me to morrow, let me liue to night.

Oth. Nay if you striue.

Des. But halfe an houre.

Oth. Being done, there is no pawse.

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late.

Emil. My Lord, my Lord, what ho, my Lord, my Lord.

Oth. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?

I that am cruell am yet merciful,

I would not haue thee linger in thy paine,

So, so.

Emil. What ho, my Lord, my Lord.

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. O good my Lord, I would speake a word with you.

Oth. Yes, 'tis Emilia, by and anon, she's dead,

'Tis like she comes to speake of Cassio's death,

The noise was high, ha, no more moouing?

Still as the graue, shall she come in? Were't good?

I think she stirres againe, no, what's best to do?

If she come in, she'll sure speake to my wife,

My wife, my wife, what wife? I haue no wife,

O insupportable! O heauy houre!

Me thinkes it should be now a huge Eclipse

Of Sunne and Moone, and that the affrighted Globe

Should yawne at alteration.

Emil. I pray my Lord let me come speake with you.

Oth. I had forgot thee: O come in Emilia,

Soft, by and by, let me the Curtaines draw,

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now?

Emil. O my good Lord, yonder's foule murthers done.

Oth. What? now?

Emil. But now my Lord.

Oth. It is the very error of the Moone,

She comes more neere the Earth than she was wont,

And makes men mad.

Emil. Cassio, my Lord, hath killed a young Venetian

Call'd Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo kill'd,

And Cassio kill'd?

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd? then murther's out of tune,

And sweet reuenge growes harsh.

Des. O falsely, falsely murthered.

Emil. Alas what cry is that?

Oth. That? what?

Emil. Out and alas that was my Ladies voice:

Helpe, helpe, ho, helpe. O Lady speake againe,

Sweet Desdemona, O sweet mistris speake.

Des. A guiltlesse death I die.

Emil. O who hath done this deed?

Des. Nobody, I my selfe, farewell:

Commend me to my kinde Lord, O farewell.

Oth. Why how should she be murthered?

Emil. Alas who knowes?

Oth. You heard her say her selfe, it was not I.

Emil. She said so, I must needs report the truth.

Oth. She's like a liar gone to burning hell,

'Twas I that killed her.

Emil. O the more Angell she,

And you the blacker deuill.

Oth. She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.

Emil. Thou dost belye her, and thou art a deuill.

Oth. She was false as water.

Emil. Thou art rash as fire,

To say that she was false: O she was heauenly true.

Oth. Cassio did top her, ask thy husband else,

O I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,

But that I did proceed vpon iust grounds

To this extremity. Thy husband knew it all.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. Thy husband.

Emil. That she was false to wedlock?

Oth. I, with a Captaine: would he had not so prized her,

For she had eyes, and chose me. No, I must not waile her,

Her sinne is on her head.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. I say thy husband: dost understand the word?

My friend, thy husband, honest, honest Iago.

Emil. If he said so, may his pernicious soule

Rot halfe a grain a day, he lies to the heart,

She was too fond of her most filthy bargaine.

Oth. Ha!

Emil. Do thy worst:

This deed of thine is no more worthy heauen,

Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not halfe the power to do me harme,

As I haue to be hurt. O gull, O dolt,

As ignorant as dirt, thou hast done a deed

I care not for thy sword, I'le make thee known,

Though I lost twenty liues: helpe, helpe, ho, helpe,

The Moore hath killed my Mistris, murther, murther.

Mon. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. My Lord, my Lord, what ho, my Lord, my Lord.

Oth. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?

I that am cruell am yet merciful,

I would not haue thee linger in thy paine,

So, so.

Mon. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. My Lord, my Lord, what ho, my Lord, my Lord.

So get some cords, come bring away
Do not vex me for I will come
Emil. I do not care what the matter is
Des. It is Othello's pleasure our noble Moore
To have us make our present with the Senate
I will be glad of this night's stealing by him
Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed
Des. All's one, good Father how foolish are our minds?
Emil. Shall I go with you?
Des. No by no means.
Iago. Not long abode here, and goe you thither
Tell your Mistris of your entertainment
Perchance Emilia I will doo you that kinde
Emil. I warrant it grieves my husband
Iago. Well, well, 'tis no matter, tell her it is
One that do's speak your Lady horrible fondnesse
I pray you trouble her with no more
Emil. Nay she will not be troubled with me
It is a great pitie, that she should affect him so
Iago. Sir, I shall have you ere long
Emil. I know not what she should see in him
Indeed done Marry I know what I would not see for a world's King, nor any stores at large of Jewels, Pearles, Corals, or Lips, nor any price exceeding as the wide world is, who would not make her husbands Cuckold to make him a Monarch I should venture
Purgatorie for't.
Des. Beshrew me if ever I do the like
For ever me ward
Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i'th world and having the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong
in your owne world and you might quickly make it right.
Iago. I do not think there is any such woman
Emil. Yes, a dozen and as deep as hell, as well as I have the wit to know
For such faults as they are men would have
While she laid by, shall have the world to play,
And when she's angry know how to make amends,
Give husbands kisses for their pates, and chide
Why we have offices as you have hearts, we have needs,
Or else we do compt our selves for your neglects,
They see and smell
And have their palates both for sweet and sowre
As husbands have. What is it that they do,
When they change us for our evils? Fie upon't
I think it is our fault. The ayre of heaven
I think it is. I know not well what to say
Yet some there be that imputation lay
Gainst us most rightly for our owne faults
Some fond thing by our owne insufficiencies
Or else unkindly quitting his unshapely bed
Or else we do deserve it, and maintain
Their wives are their business, or they owe them
Nothing but that which comes from their purses, Exeunt

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Iago and Roderigo

Iago. Here stand behind this bulke straight will he come
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home
Quicke, quicke, feare nothing, I'le be at thy elbow,
It makes us or it mars us, think on that,
And fixe most firme thy resolution.
Rod. Be nere at hand, may my heart stand
Iago. Content to be, & take it in good part
Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed,
And yet he hath given me satisfying Reasons
'Tis but a man gone. Forth my Sword he dies
Iago. I have rubb'd this young Quat almost to the sense
And he growes angry. Now whether he kill
Cassio, or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Every way makes my gaine. Now he provokes me,
I shall have reasonable cause of anger,
If Cassio do remaine, he hath a daily beauty in his life
That makes me ugly: and besides, the Moore
May unfold me to him, there stand I in much peril.
No, he must dye. But so, I heard him coming.
Enter Cassio
Rod. I know his gate, 'tis he. Villaine thou dyest
Cas. That thrust had been enough to carry to
But I will make sure doubly enough
Base as my Coate is better than thou art
I will make proofe of thine
Rod. O I am slaine
Cas. I am maim'd for ever
Helpe ho, Murther, murther
Enter Othello
Oth. The voice of Cassio, Iago keeps his word
Rod. O Villaine that I am.
Oth. It is even so
Cas. O helpe ho, Light a Surgeon
Oth. 'Tis he, O brave Iago honest and just
That hast such noble sence of thy friends wrong
Thou teachest me. Minion your dear lies dead,
And your unblest fate hies. Strumpet I come
Forth of my heart those charmes, thine eyes are blotted
Thy bed lust-stain'd shall with lust's blood be spotted
Exit Othello
Enter Lodouico and Gratiano
Cas. What ho, no watch? no passage?
Murther, Murther
Gra. 'Tis some mischance the voice is very direfull
Cas. O helpe
Lod. Hearke
Rod. O wretched Villaine
Lod. Two or three groane. It is a direfull cry,
It may be counterfeit. Let's think't unsafe
To come in to the cry without more helpe
Rod. Nobody come then shall I bleed to death
Enter Iago.
Lod. Hearke
Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with Light and Weapons
Iago. Who's there?
Whose noise is this that cries on murther?
Lod. We do not know
Iago. Do not you heare a cry?
Cas. Here, here for heaven sake helpe me.
Iago. What's the matter?
Gra. This is Othello's Ancient, as I take it.
Lod. The same indeed, a very valiant fellow.
Iago. What are you here, that cry so grievously?
Cas. Iago? O I am spoyl'd, undone by Villaines
Give me some helpe.
Iago. O me, Lieutenant
What Villaines have done this?
Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout,

And cannot make away
Iago. O treacherous Villaines
What are you there? come you and goe forth
Rod. O murder, murder
Mon. O villaine
Iago O damned Villaine!
Rod. O damned Iago! O damned Iago!
Iago
Who cries on murder?
How came you Sir?
What is the matter?
Mon. Why, Masters, have your Weapons drawne?
Iago Put vp your Swords,
My Lord is not needs of such Weapons:
Happily your wisedome may more charme
Your Masters patience, then your Sword hurts
Will you hence sir?
What is the matter, Masters?
Honest Iago, that looks dead with grieuing,
Speake who began this? on thy loue I charge thee.
Iago. I do not know:
Friends all but now, euen now,
In quarter, and scarce set downe to draw
As if some planet had vnwitted men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speake
Any beginning to this peeuish odds,
And would in action glorious I had lost
Those legs, that brought me to a part of it.
Des. How comes it Michael you are thus forgot?
Cas. I pray you pardon me, cannot speake.
Iago Come, come, the wine is strong,
And it doth affect you.
Des. Faire Iago, this is not this Gentlemans way.
Iago. Truely I thinke he hardly meanes well.
And hearts abruptly all
Would runne another flood to day and night:
This Sun see it vp on his Tent peg,
Ere the braue Beast can be awake againe
To do vs this warre.
Mon. Marke the fellow.
Cas. I do not find that thou deal'st iustly with me.
Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar Creature,
if it be well vs'd: exclaim no more against it.
And good Lieutenant, I think you think I loue you.
Cas. I haue well approued it, Sir. I drunke!
Iago. You or any man liuing may be drunke at some time, man. I tell you what you shall do. Our Generall and his wife are now talking of Deuotion, and you were best
go and make your peace with her.
Cas. I will ask him for my place.
Iago. Come, come, you are too angry.
Cassio, I loue you, but neuer more be Officer of mine.
Enter Roderigo.
Looke, if my Gentle Louer is not gone by him?
Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio,
Either by speaking too loud, or tainted
Or vnlesse the Bestowment of the place should Displease the Moore, and Sweare I was driuen to't.
Well: Now he is my Competitor.
Now if this Suit lay in Bianca's power,
How quickly should you speed?
Rod. Alas poore Rogue, I thinke indeed she loues me.
Iago Will you looke for him to night?
Rod. I, when he comes back from the Guard.
Iago Do but finde him, poure in his eare
Whatsoeuer you can make him apprehend
Against the Moore: For I feare he will
Vpon the first offer.
Rod. I go sir.
Iago Do it much you may.
Rod. I will incontinently drowne my selfe.
Iago Well, if you do, I will neuer loue you after.
Why, I confesse me thus farre profited.
Rod. Adieu.
Iago And what's he then that sayes I play the Villaine?
When this aduice is free I giue and honest,
Proball to thinking, and indeed the course
To win the Moore againe. For 'tis most easie
Th'inclining Desdemona to subdue
In any honest suit. She's fram'd as fruitfull
As the free Elements. And then for her
To win the Moore, were to renounce his Baptisme,
All seales and Symbols of redeemed sinne,
His soule is so enfetter'd to her loue,
That she may make, vnmake, do what she list,
Euen as her appetite shall play the God
With his weake function. How am I then a Villaine
To counsell Cassio to this parallel course,
Directly to his good? Diuinity of Hell!
When diuels will the blackest sinnes put on,
They do suggest at first with heauenly shewes,
As I do now: For whiles this honest foole
Plies Desdemona to repaire his fortune,
And she for him pleades strongly to the Moore,
I'le powre this pestilence into his eare,
That she repeals him for her body's lust;
And by how much she strives to do him good,
She shall vndo her credit with the Moore.
So will I turne her vertue into pitch,
And out of her owne goodnesse make the net
That shall enmesh them all.
How now Roderigo?
Rod. I do follow the way you prescribe, but I am not sorry I haue put my selfe into it.
Iago Wait, what is to be said? Put money, Roderigo?
Rod. I, I haue laid my selfe out.
Iago Why then thriue on that drift: Put money, Roderigo?
Merchants may looke blacke when Wrecks and Storms
Make poore aduentures good. But one cannot alter the Clymate or Constellations of Starres, and say this or that is the Moone or Starres, as the Prouerbe is not to be done: you shall more command with yeares, then with the Register and Prescription of Bookes: Thou know'st
we worke by Wit, and not by Witchcraft, and wit depends on dilatory time. Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee, and thou by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio:
Though other things grow fayre against the Sun,
Yet fruits that blossome first, will first be ripe:
Content thy selfe awhile. In troth 'tis morning,
Pleasure and Action make the houres seeme short.
Retire thee, go where thou are billeted:
Away I say, thou shalt know more hereafter:
Nay get thee gone. Two things are to be done,
My Wife must moue for Cassio to her Mistris:
I'le set her on my selfe a while apart,
And finde a time to sollicite my Moore.
Now I do loue her too,
Not out of absolute Lust, though peraduenture
I stand accountant for as great a sinne,
But partly led to diet my Reuenge,
For that I do suspect the lustie Moore
Hath leapt into my Seate: the thought whereof
Doth like a poysonous Mineral gnaw my inwards,
And nothing can or shall content my Soule
Till I am euen with him, wife for wife,
Or failing so, yet that I put the Moore
At least into a Iealousie so strong
That iudgement cannot cure. Which thing to do,
If this poore Trash of Venice whom I trace
For his quicke hunting, stand the putting on,
I'le haue our Michael Cassio on the hip,
Abuse him to the Moore in the rancke Garbe
(For I feare Cassio with my Nightcap too)
Make the Moore thanke me, loue me and reward me
For making him egregiously an Asse,
And practising vpon his peace and quiet
Euen to madnesse. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd:
Knauery's plaine face is neuer seene till vs'd.

Oth.

Oth. Amen, with all my heart.
Def. If you say, I hope you will not kill me.
Oth. Humm.
Def. And yet I fear you: for you're fatall then
When your eyes roll so.
Why I should feare, I know not,
Since guiltinesse I know not: but yet I feele I feare.
Oth. Thinke on thy sinnes.
Def. They are loves I beare to you.
Oth. I and for that thou dyest.
Def. That death's vnnaturall that kills for louing.
Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:
These are portents: but yet I hope, I hope,
They do not point on me.
Oth. Peace and be still.
Def. I will so. What's the matter?
Oth. That handkerchiefe
Which I so lou'd, and gaue thee, thou gau'st to Cassio.
Def. No, by my life, and soule she neuer saw it.
Send for the man
Oth. Sweet Soule take heed, take heed of Periury,
Thou art on thy death bed.
Def. I but not yet to dye.
Oth. Presently.
Therefore confesse thee freely of thy sinne:
For to deny each Article with Oath,
Cannot remoue nor choake the strong Conception
That I do groane withall. Thou art to dye.
Def. Then Lord haue mercy on me.
Oth. I say, Amen.
Def. And haue you mercy too. I neuer did
Offend you in my life: neuer lou'd Cassio
But with such generall warrantie of heauen,
As I might loue. I neuer gaue him Token.
Oth. By Heauen, I saw my Handkerchiefe in's hand.
O periur'd woman, thou do'st stone my heart,
And mak'st me call, what I intend to do,
A Murther, which I thought a Sacrifice
I saw the Handkerchiefe.
Def. He found it then,
I never gaue it him. Send for him hither,
Let him confesse a truth.
Oth. He hath confest.
Def. What, my Lord?
Oth. That he hath vs'd thee.
Def. How, vnlawfully?
Oth. I
Def. He will not say so.
Oth. No, his mouth is stopt,
Honest Iago hath tane order for't.
Def. O my fear interprets. What is he not dead?
Oth. Had all his haires been liues, my great Reuenge
Had stomacke for them all.
Def. Alas he is betrayd, and I vndone
Oth. Out strumpet! weep'st thou for him to my face?
Def. O banish me, my Lord, but kill me not.
Oth. Downe strumpet
Def. Kill me to morrow, let me liue to night,
Oth. Nay if you striue
Def. But halfe an houre,
Oth. Being done, there is no pause
Def. But while I say one prayer.
Oth. It is too late. Smothers her.

Emilia at the doore

Æmil. My Lord, my Lord? What hoa?
My Lord, my Lord
Oth. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?
I that am cruell, am yet mercifull,
I would not haue thee linger in thy paine?
So, so
Æmil. within. What hoa! my Lord, my Lord?
Oth. Who's there?
Æmil. O good my Lord, I would speake a word with you
Oth. Yes: 'Tis Æmilia: by and by. Shee's dead.
'Tis like she comes to speake of Cassio's death,
The noise was high. Ha! no more moouing?
Still as the Graue. Shall she come in? were't good?
I think she stirres againe. No, what's best to do?
If she come in, she'l sure speake to my wife.
My wife, my wife! what wife? I haue no wife.
O insupportable! O heauy houre!
Me thinkes it should be now a huge Eclipse
Of Sunne, and Moone; and that th'affrighted Globe
Did yawne at Alteration.
Æmil. I do beseech you
That I may speake with you. O good my Lord.
Oth. I had forgot thee: O come in Æmilia.
Soft, by and by, let me the Curtaines draw.
Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now?

Enter Æmilia

Æmil. O my good Lord, yonders foule Murthers done.
Oth. What now?
Æmil. But now, my Lord,
Oth. It is the very error of the Moone,
She comes more neere the Earth than she was wont,
And makes men mad.
Æmil. Cassio, my Lord, hath kill'd
A young Venetian, call'd Rodorigo.
Oth. Rodorigo kill'd: and Cassio kill'd?
Æmil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.
Oth. Not Cassio kill'd? Then Murther's out of tune,
And sweet Reuenge growes harsh.
Def. O falsely, falsely murdered.
Æmil. Alas! what cry is that?
Oth. That? What?
Æmil. Out and alas! that was my Lady's voice.
Helpe, helpe, hoa, helpe. O Lady speake againe,
Sweet Mistris, speake.
Oth. A guiltie deed.
Æmil. O who hath done this deed?
Def. Nobody; I my selfe, farewell
Commend me to my kinde Lord. O farewell.
Oth. Why how should she be murdred?
Æmil. Alas, who knowes?
Oth. You heare her say her selfe, it was not I.
Æmil. She said so: I must needs report the truth.
Oth. She's like a Liar gone to burning hell,
'Twas I that kill'd her.
Æmil. O the more Angell she, and you the blacker Deuel.
Oth. She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.
Æmil. Thou do'st belye her, and thou art a Deuell
Oth. She was false as water.
Æmil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
That she was false. O she was heauenly true.
Oth. Cassio did top her: Ask thy husband else.
O I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell
But that I did proceed vpon iust grounds
To this extremity. Thy Husband knew it all.

Æmil

Emil. My Husband?
Oth. Thy Husband.
Emil. That she was falſe to Wedlocke?
Oth. I, with Caſſio. had ſhe beene true,
If Heauen would make me ſuch another world,
Of one entyre and perfect Chryſolite,
I'ld not haue ſold her for it.
Emil. My Husband?
Oth. I ſay ſhe that told me on her firſt,
An honeſt man he is, and hates the ſlime
That ſticks on filthy deeds.
Emil. My Husband?
Oth. What needs this iterance Woman?
I ſay, thy Huſband.
Emil. O Miſtreſs,
Villany has made mockes with loue,
My Husband ſay ſhe was falſe?
Oth. He Woman
I ſay thy Husband. Do'ſt vnderſtand the word?
My Friend, thy Huſband honeſt, honeſt Iago.
Emil. If he ſay ſo, may his pernicious ſoule
Rot halfe a grain a day, he lies to the heart:
She was too fond of her moſt filthy bargaine.
Oth. Ha?
Emil. Do thy worſt.
This deede of thine is no more worthy Heauen,
Than thou was worthy her.
Oth. Peace, you were beſt.
Emil. Thou haſt not halfe the power to do me harme,
As I haue to be hurt. O Gull, O dolt,
As ignorant as dirt: thou haſt done a deed
(I care not for thy Sword) ile make it known,
Though I loſt twenty liues. Helpe, helpe, ho, helpe.
The Moore has kild my Miſtreſs, Murther, murther.

Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago.

Mon. What is the matter? How now Generall?
Emil. Oh, are you come Iago, you haue done well,
That men muſt lay their Murthers on your neck.
Gra. What is the matter?
Emil. Diſprooue this Villaine, if thou be'ſt a man:
He ſayes, thou told'ſt him that his wife was falſe:
I know thou did'ſt not, thou'rt not ſuch a Villaine.
Speake, for my heart is full.
Iago. I told him what I thought, and told no more
Than what he found himſelfe was apt, and true.
Emil. But did you euer tell him,
She was falſe?
Iago. I did.
Emil. You told a Lye, an odious damned Lye.
Vpon my Soule, a Lye, a wicked Lye.
She falſe with Caſſio?
Did you ſay with Caſſio?
Iago. With Caſſio, Miſtreſs?
Go too, charme your tongue.
Emil. I will not charme my Tongue;
I am bound to ſpeake,
My Miſtreſs heere lyes murthered in her bed.
All. O Heauens, forefend.
Emil. And your reports haue ſet the Murder on.
Oth. Nay ſtare not Maſters,
It is true indeede.
Gra. 'Tis a ſtrange Truth.
Mont. O monſtrous Acte.
Emil. Villany, villany, villany.
I thinke vpon't, I thinke I ſmell't: O villany,
I thought ſo then; I'le kill my ſelfe for griefe.
O villany, villany!
Iago. What, are you mad?
I charge you get you home.
Emil. Good Gentlemen, let me haue leaue to ſpeake
'Tis proper I obey him; but not now.
Perchance Iago, I will ne're go home.
Oth. Oh, o', oh.
Emil. Nay lay thee downe and roare,
For thou haſt kild the ſweeteſt Innocent,
That ere did lift vp eye.
Oth. O ſhe was foule!
I ſcarce did know you Vncle: there lies your Neece,
Whoſe breath (indeed) theſe hands haue newly ſtopt,
I know this acte ſhewes horrible and grim.
Gra. Poore Deſdemon!
I am glad thy Father's dead:
Thy Match was mortall to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thred in twaine. Did he liue now,
This ſight would make him do a deſperate turne,
Yea, curſe his better Angell from his ſide,
And fall to reprobation.
Oth. 'Tis pittifull, but yet Iago knowes
That ſhe with many a Solemne Vow,
And prayſe, reuoked me to lye on her.
And ſo ſhe did.
Emil. Why, ſtops vp the Aire.
Curſe his better Angell from his ſide,
And fell to reprobation.
Oth. 'Tis pittifull, but yet Iago knowes
That ſhe with many a Solemne Vow,
And prayſe, reuoked me to lye on her.
And ſo ſhe did.
Emil. Why, ſtops vp the Aire.
It was a Handkerchiefe, an Antique Token
My Father gaue my Mother.
Emil. O Heauen! O heauenly Powres!
Iago. Come, hold your peace.
Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out, I peace?
No, I will ſpeake as liberall as the North:
Let Heauen, and Men, and Diuels, all, all cry againſt me,
Yet, all, I will ſpeake out.
Iago. Be wiſe, and get you home.
Emil. I will not.
Gra. Fye your Sword vpon a Woman.
Emil. O thou dull Moore,
That Handkerchiefe thou ſpeak'ſt of
I gaue my Husband.
Iago. Villanous Whore!
Emil. She gaue it Caſſio? No, alas I found it,
And I did giue't my Husband.
Iago. Filth, thou lieſt.
Emil. By Heauen I do not, I do not Gentlemen.
O murderous Coxcombe! what ſhould ſuch a fooles
Do with ſo good a wife?
Oth. Are there no ſtones in Heauen,
But what ſerues for the Thunder?
Precious Villaine!
Gra. The woman falls
Sure he hath kild his wife.
Emil. I, I: pray me by my Miſtreſſe ſide.
Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kild.
Mon. 'Tis a notorious Villaine: take you this weapon
Which I haue recouered from the Moore:
Come, guard the doore without, let him not paſſe,
But kill him rather. He after that ſame villaine,
For 'tis a damned Slaue.

Exit
Gra.

Oth. I am not valiant neither
But every puny whipster gets my Sword.
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.
Æmil. What did thy Song bode Lady
Hearke, canst thou heare me? I will play the Swan,
And die in Musicke. Willow, Willow, Willow.
Moore, shee would have died to morrow Moore,
Mine and my Mothers Maid, for her Mother cride
Poore Soule sate sighing by a Sycamore tree,
Sing all a greene Willow,
Her hand on her bosome, her head on her knee,
Sing Willow, Willow, Willow:
The fresh streames ran by her, and murmur'd her moanes,
Sing Willow, Willow, Willow:
Her salt teares fell from her, and softned the stones,
Sing Willow, Willow, Willow:
Lay by these.
Sing Willow, Willow, Willow:
Prethee hie thee, he'le come anon.
Sing all a greene Willow must be my Garland.
Let nobody blame him, his Scorne I approve.
Nay that's not next. Hearke who is't that knocks?
Des. It's the wind.
Oth. I call'd my Love false Love; but what said he then?
Sing Willow, Willow, Willow:
If I court moe Women, you may couch moe men.
So get you gone, good night, mine eyes do itch,
Doth that bode weeping?
Des. 'Tis neither here nor there.
Oth. I have seene the day, that with this little arme,
Wilde Catt of Arabie,
Put out the eyes of the proud Commander,
Make mocks with the blood of the Turbond Heathen,
Man and Wife is one flesh, and one bed,
Nay, though thou prov'st as salt as Seamy Sow,
Or Sodomy Gomorrah, with all their Tribe,
Yet there's a heaven kisses the pollution.
Come swear it, damne thy selfe,
Lest being like one of Heaven, the Divels themselves,
Should fear to seize thee, therefore be double damn'd,
Swear thou art honest.
Des. Heaven doth truly know it.
Oth. Heaven truly knowes that thou art false as Hell.
Des. To whom my Lord? with whom? how am I false?
Oth. Ah Desdemon, away, away, away.

Enter Lodouico, Æmilia and Iago.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?
Oth. That's he that was Othello: here I am.
Lod. Where is that Viper?
Bring the Villaine forth.
Oth. I look down towards his feet, but that's a Fable,
If that thou be'st a Divell, I cannot kill thee.
Lod. Wrench his Sword from him.
Iago. I bleed Sir, but not kill'd.
Oth. I am not sorry neither, I'ld have thee live:
For in my sense, 'tis happiness to dye.
Lod. O thou Othello, that was once so good,
Fall'n in the practice of a damned slave,
What shall be said to thee?
Oth. Why any thing:
An honourable murderer, if you will,
For nought did I in hate, but all in honour.
Lod. This wretch hath part confest his Villany.
Did you and he consent in Cassios death?
Oth. Ay.
Des. Deere Generall, I never gave you cause.
Oth. I believe it, and I aske your pardon.
Will you, I pray, demand that demy-Devil,

Why he hath thus ensnar'd my Soule and Body.
Iago. Demand me nothing: what you know, you know:
From this time forth I never will speake word.
Lod. What not to pray?
Gra. Torments will ope your lips.
Oth. Well thought on.
Lod. Sir,
You shall understand what hath befalne,
Which as I think, you know not. Here is a Letter
Found in the pocket of the slaine Rodorigo,
And here another, the one of them imports
The death of Cassio to be undertooke
By Rodorigo.
Oth. O Villaine.
Cas. Most heathenish and most grosse.
Lod. Now here's another discontented paper
Found in his pocket too, and this it seemes
Rodorigo meant t'have sent this damned villaine:
But that belike Iago in the interim
Came in, and satisfied him.
Oth. O the pernicious Caitiffe,
How came you Cassio by that handkerchefe
That was my wives?
Cas. I found it in my Chamber:
And he himself confest but even now,
That there he dropt it, for a speciall purpose,
Which wrought to his desire.
Oth. O Villaine!
Cas. There is besides in Rodorigos Letter,
How he upbraides Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the Watch: whereon it came
That I was cast: and even but now he spake
(After long seeming dead) Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.
Lod. You must forsake this roome, and go with us:
Your Power and your Command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this Slave,
If there be any cunning Cruelty,
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It shall be his. You shall close Prisoner rest,
Till that the Nature of your fault be knowne
To the Venetian State. Come away.
Oth. Soft you a word or two before you go.
I have done the State some service, and they know't
No more of that. I pray you in your Letters,
When you shall these unluckie deeds relate,
Speake of me as I am. Nothing extenuate,
Nor set down ought in malice.
Then must you speake
Of one that lov'd not wisely but too well:
Of one not easily jealious, but being wrought,
Perplexed in the extreame. Of one whose hand
(Like the base Indian) threw a Pearle away
Richer than all his Tribe. Of one, whose subdu'd Eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting moode,
Drop teares as fast as the Arabian Trees
Their Medicinable gumme. Set you downe this.
And say besides, that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant, and a Turbond-Turke
Beate a Venetian, and traduc'd the State,
I took by the throat the circumcised Dogge,
And smote him, thus.
Lod. O bloody period.
Gra. All that is spoke is marr'd.
Oth. I kist thee ere I kill'd thee. No way but this,
Killing my selfe, to dye upon a kisse.

Cas Th s d d Ieare, but thought he had no weapon:
For he was great of heart
Lod Oh Spartan Dogge
More fell then Anguish, Hunger, or the Sea.
Looke on the Tragicke Loading of this bed
This is thy worke
The Object poyzons Sight,
Let it be hid. Gratiano, keepe the house,
And seize vpon the fortunes of the Moore,
For they succeede on you. To you, Lord Gouernor,
Remaines the Censure of this hellish villaine.
The Time, the Place the Torture: O enforce it:
My selfe will straight aboord, and to the State,
This heauie Act, with heauie heart relate. Exeunt.

THE TRAGEDIE OF
Anthonie, and Cleopatra.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Demetrius and Philo.

Philo.

Nay, but this dotage of our Generall
O'erflowes the measure: those his goodly eyes
That o're the Files and Musters of the Warre,
Have glow'd like plated Mars:
Now bend, now turne
The Office and Deuotion of their view
Vpon a Tawny front: his Captaines heart
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The Buckles on his breast, reneages all temper
And is become the Bellowes and the Fan
To cool a Gypsies Lust.

Flourish. Enter Anthony, Cleopatra, her Traine, with Eunuchs fanning her.

Looke where they come:
Take but good note, and you shall see in him
(The triple Pillar of the world) transformed
Into a Strumpets Foole: behold and see.
Cleo. If it be Loue indeed, tell me how much.
Ant. There's beyond it Measure for the Louer.
Cleo. Then must thou needs finde out new Heauen, new Earth.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Newes (my good Lord) from Rome.
Ant. Grates me: the summe.
Cleo. Nay hear them Anthony.
Fulvia perchance is angry: Or who knowes
If the scarce-bearded Cæsar haue not sent
His powerfull Mandate to you. Do this, or this,
Take in that Kingdome, and enfranchise that:
Perform't, or else we damne thee.
Ant. How my Loue?
Cleo. Perchance? Nay and most like
You must not stay here longer, your dismission
Is come from Cæsar, therefore heare it Anthony.
Where's Fulvia's Process? Cæsars, I would say both?
Call in the Messengers. As I am Egypts Queene,
Thou blushest Anthony, and that blush of thine
Is Fulvias Cheeke-paies Anthony: the Messengers
Let Rome in Tyber melt, and the wide Arch
Of the ranged Empire fall: Heere is my space,
Kingdomes are clay: Our dungie earth alike

Feeds Beast as Man: the Nobleneſſe of life
Is to do thus: when ſuch a mutuall paire,
And ſuch a twaine can doe't, in which I binde
One paine of puniſhment, the world to weete
We ſtand vp Peereleſſe.
Cleo. Excellent falſhood
Why did he marry Fulvia, and not loue her?
I'le ſeeke thee ere I die: but I can tell you
That ſhall be mercy. Anthony will be himſelfe.
Ant. But ſtirred by Cleopatra.
Now for the loue of Loue, and her ſoft houres
Let's not confound the time with Conference harſh,
There's not a minute of our liues ſhould ſtretch
Without ſome pleaſure: now what portion is't?
Mes. Heare me Anthonie.
Ant. Fulvia is dead.
Mes. Sir Fulvia is dead.
Ant. Dead.
Mes. Why many Starres haue fall'n, and many Kingdomes
Haue ſuffered change: but ſince the Infant Dewe
Hath fed on Vernall Flowres, a greater Soule
Hath paſſed from the Bodies of the Dead
Then Fulvia: Had ſhe Teares, that now are dry?
Cleo. Ile ſee thee in my Chamber: Selfe-vnkindneſſe,
Knowes it is euill: Soone Monſters that we feare:
Solue Abſence, Abſence ſhall ſolue Loue: falſe ſtreight
Weepe for with Weeping.
Ant. The firſt Soldiers boone
Then Rome, call Fulvia home, let her appeaſe
The Commonwealth: Catch thee Fortune, and adieu.
Cleo. Why ſhould he not leaue me in this minute, and ſtand
Were we but parted? we ſtand not apart now:
The cruell Element is not more ſubtle, nor ſwift
Then Anthonies Loue: Come my Queene,
Laſt night you did deſire it. Speake not to vs.

Dem. Is Cæſar with Antonius priz'd ſo ſlight?
Philo. Sir ſometimes when he is not Anthony,
He comes too ſhort of that great Property
Which ſtill ſhould go with Antony.
Dem. I am full ſorry that he approues the common
Liar who thus ſpeakes of him at home: but I hope
Things will be better.
Philo. To morrow (my Lord) will you happy

Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus, Lamprius a Soothſayer, Ramnius, Lucilius, Charmian, Iras, Alexas the Eunuch, and Alexas.

Char. I. Alexas, Sweet Alexas, moſt any thing Alexas, almoſt moſt abſolute Alexas, where's the Soothſayer that you praiſed ſo to the Queene? O that I knew this Husband, which you ſay muſt change his Hornes with Garlands.
Alex. Soothſayer.
Sooth. Your will?
Char. Is this the man? Is't you ſir that know things?
Sooth. In Natures infinite booke of Secreſie, a little I can read.
Alex. Shew him your hand.
Enob. Bring in the Banket quickly: Wine enough,

Cleo.

Cleopatra's health to drinke.

Char. Good sir, giue me good Fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foretell.

Char. Pray then, foretell me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet farre fairer then you are.

Char. He meanes in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid.

Alex. Vex not his prescience, be attentive.

Char. Hush.

Sooth. You shall be more beloving, then beloued.

Char. I had rather heate my Liuer with drinking.

Alex. Nay heare him.

Char. Good now some excellent Fortune. Let me be married three times ere supper time, and my best wish is, I haue power enough to endure it. I haue one braue thing more to aske thee. When thou dost prophesie of Cæsar Augustus (Cæsar, I meane) aske me what my Wish is.

Sooth. You haue spoke already to the Lady what you desire.

Char. Quicke, quicke, good Diuine. Spit it out.

Sooth. You shall be more beloued, and haue more cause to be beloued.

Char. Then bring me my Coronation robes, and let me hold my Crowne vpon my head. Prythee now many boyes and wenches must I haue.

Sooth. Euery one of your wishes was a wombe, & foretels euery wish a Madam.

Char. Oh Excellent, I loue long life better then figges.

Alex. You haue seene and proued a fairer former fortune then that which is to approach.

Char. Then belike my Children shall haue no names. Prythee how many boyes and wenches must I haue.

Sooth. If euery one of your wishes had a wombe, & foretels euery wish a Madam.

Char. Oh Excellent, I loue long life better then figges.

Alex. You haue seene and proued a fairer former fortune then that which is to approach.

Char. Then belike my Children shall haue no names. Prythee how many boyes and wenches must I haue.

Sooth. If euery one of your wishes had a wombe, I cannot but foretell you, you are fruitfull.

Char. Is this well done?

Sooth. It is well done, and fitting for a Princesse descended of so fruitfull a Nile-mud.

Char. Diuine Seruant, what comfort is there in thy Art, if Cæsar shall liue well by it? I haue his Sister with child, and by common report, she is as honest as the Moone.

Sooth. For Egypt and you, I haue spoke already.

Char. Prythee tell her but a worky-day Fortune.

Sooth. Your Fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how, giue me particulars.

Sooth. I haue said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of Fortune better then she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of Fortune better then I, where would you choose it.

Iras. Not in my Husbands nose.

Char. Our worser thoughts Heauens mend.

Alexas. Come, his Fortune, his Fortune. O let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis I beseech thee, and let her dye too, and giue him a worse, and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grauie fifty fold a Cuckold. Good Isis I beseech thee this Prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight, good Isis I beseech thee.

Iras. Amen, deere Goddesse, heare that prayer of the people. For, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wiued, so it is a deadly sorrow, to beholde a foule knaue vncuckolded. Therefore deere Isis keep decorum, and Fortune him accordingly.

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo now, if it lay in their hands to make me a Cuckold, they would make themselues Whores, but they'ld do't.

Enter Cleopatra.

Enob. Hush, heere comes Anthony.

Char. Not he, the Queene.

Cleo. Saue you, my Lord.

Enob. No Lady.

Cleo. Was he not heere?

Char. No Madam.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth, but on the sodaine A hoinane thought of seriousnesse cross'd him. Enobarbus!

Enob. Madam.

Cleo. Seeke him, and bring him hither. Where's Alexas?

Alex. Heere at your seruice. My Lord approaches.

Enter Antony with a Messenger.

Cleo. We will not looke vpon him. Goe with vs. Exeunt.

Mess. Enobarbus's Wife

Fuluia the mother of the Gods?

Ant. Against my Brother Lucius?

Mess. I: but soone that Warre hath end,

And the time's state

Made friends of it, hauing their force ioynt 'gainst Cæsar,

Whose better issue in the warre, from Italy,

Vpon the first encounter driues them.

Ant. Well what worst?

Mess. The Nature of bad newes infects the Teller.

Ant. When it concernes the Fooles or Cowards. On.

Things that are past are done with me. 'Tis this,

Who tells me true, though in his tale lye death,

I heare him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labienus

Hath with the Parthian force extended Asia,

From Euphrates his conquering Banner shooke, from Syria to Lydia

And to Ionia, whilst——

Ant. Antony thou would'st say.

Mess. O my Lord.

Ant. Speake to me home,

Mince not the generall tongue,

Name Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome,

Rayle thou in Fuluia's phrase, and taunt my faults

With such full licence, as both truth and malice

Haue power to vtter. O then we bring forth weeds,

When our quicke minds lye still, and our ills told vs

Is as our earing. Fare thee well a while.

Mess. At your pleasure my Lord. Exit Mes.

Enter another Messenger.

Ant. From Sicyon how the newes? Speake there.

1. Mes. The man from Sicyon, is there such an one?

2. Mes. He stayes vpon your will.

Ant. Let him appeare.

These strong Egyptian fetters I must breake,

Or lose my selfe in dotage.

Enter another Messenger with a Letter.

What are you?

3. Mes. Fuluia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where dyed she?

Mes. In Sicyon, her length of sickenesse,

With what else more seruious

Importeth thee to know, this bears.

Ant. Forbeare me.

There's a great Spirit gone thus did I desire it.

What our contempts doth often hurle from vs,

We wish it ours again. The present pleasure,
By reduction is working does become
The opposite of it: for I saw's good to me ong gon,
The hand could pluck her back that fell her on
I must from this enchanting Queene breake off,
Ten times vilanie harmes more then the best know
My idle selfe doth hurt me.

Enter Enobarbus.

How now Enobarbus.

Eno. What's your pleasure, Sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why then we kill all our Women. We see how mortall an vnkindnesse is to them, if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Vnder a compelling occasion let women die. It were pity to cast them away for nothing, though, betweene the losing and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noyse of this, dies instantly. I haue seene her die twenty times vpon farre poorer moment. I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act vpon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past mans thought.

Eno. Alacke Sir, no, her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure Loue. We cannot call her winds and waters sighs and teares, they are greater storms and Tempests than almanackes can report. This cannot be cunning in her, if it be, she makes a shower of Rayne as well as Ioue.

Ant. Would I had neuer seene her.

Eno. O sir, you had then left vnseene a wonderfull peece of worke, which not to haue been blest withall, would haue discredited your Trauaile.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why sir, giue the Gods a thankefull Sacrifice: when it pleases their Deputies to take the wife of a man from him, it shewes to man the Tailors of the earth: comforting therein, that when the Bootes are worne out, they are members to make new. If there were no more Women but Fulvia then is it well you are rid of a new. Those petty browne Corriuals, worne-out Stockes of Ladies whom you desire not, are gone of course. Desire them not at their best.

Ant. The beauties of the wide world driue breadth than the Scale,
Can not enlarge my entertaine.

Eno. And it could, well might you haue broach'd heere comfort. You haue subdued Pompeys eye at Cleopatra, which drowned more Sailes than heere.

Ant. No more of this. Answeres
Let our Friends
Heere I leaue what to propose I shall breake
The matter of Fulvia and my hast to the Queene,
And get her loue to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more vrgent touches
Do strongly speake to vs, but the Letters too
Of many our contriuing Friends in Rome,
Petition vs at home. Sextus Pompeius
Hath giuen the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The Empire of the Sea. Our slippery people,
Whose Loue is neuer link'd to the deseruer,
Till his deserts are past, begin to throw
Pompey the great, and all his Dignities
Vpon his Sonne, who high in Name and Power,
Higher then both in Blood and Life stands vp
For the main Souldier. Whose quality going on,
The sides o'th' world may danger. Much is breeding,
Which like the Courser heere hath yet but life,
And not a Serpents poyson. Say our pleasure,
To such whose places vnder vs, require
Our quicke remoue from hence.

Eno. I shall do't.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Alexas, and Iras.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is,
Who's with him, what he does.
I did not send you. If you find him sad,
Say I am dancing; if in Mirth, report
That I am sudden sicke. Quicke, and returne.

Char. Madam me thinkes if you did loue him deerely,
You do not hold the method to enforce
The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Char. In each thing giue him way, crosse him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a foole the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too farre. I wish forbeare,
In time we hate that which we often feare.

Enter Antony.

But heere comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sicke and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to giue breathing to my purpose.

Cleo. Helpe me away deare Charmian, I shall fall,
It cannot be thus long, the sides of Nature
Will not sustaine it.

Ant. Now my deerest Queene.

Cleo. Pray you stand farther from me.

Ant. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know by that same eye there's some good news.
What says the married woman you may go?
Would she had neuer given you leaue to come.
Let her not say 'tis I that keepe you heere,
I haue no power ouer you: Men you are
Ant. The Gods best know.

Cleo. O neuer was there Queene
So mightily betrayed: yet at the first
I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Why should I thinke you can be mine, & true,
(Though you in swearing shake the Throanes of the Gods)
Who haue beene false to Fulvia?
Riotous madnesse
To be entangled with those mouth-made vowes,
Which breake themselues in swearing.

Ant. Most sweet Queene.

Cleo. Nay pray you seeke no colour for your going,
But bid farewell and goe.
When you sued staying,
Then was the time for words. No going then,
Eternity was in our Lippes and Eyes,
Bliss in our browes bent, none our parts so poore,
But was a race of Heauen. They are so still,
Or thou the greatest Soldier of the world,
Art turn'd the greatest Liar.

Ant. How now Lady?

Cleo.

Cleo I would I had thy inches, thou should'st know
There were a heart in Egypt.
Ant. Heare me Queene
The strong necessity of Time, commands
Our Services awhile, but my full heart
Remaines in use with you. Our Italy,
Shines o're with Civil swords: Sext. Pompeius
Makes his approach to the Port of Rome,
Equality of two Domestique powers,
Breed scrupulous faction: The hated grown to strength
Are newly grown to Love: The condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his Fathers Honour, creepes apace
Into the hearts of such, as have not thriv'd
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten,
And quietnesse, growing sicke of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my going,
Is Fulvias death.
Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom
It does from childish fondnesse. Charge me not
Ant. She's dead my Queene.
Looke here, and at thy Soldiers eye read
The Garboyles she awakes: at the last, best,
See when, and where she died.
Cleo O most false Love
Where be the Sacred Vials thou should'st fill
With sorrowfull water? Now I see, I see
In Fulvias death, how mine receiv'd shall be.
Ant. Quarrell no more, but be prepar'd to know
The purposes I beare: which are or cease,
As you shall give th'advice. By the fire
That quickens Nylus slime, I go from hence
Thy Souldier, Servant, making Peace or Warre,
As thou affects.
Cleo Cut my Lace Charmian come,
But let it be: I am quickly ill, and well,
So Antony loves.
Ant. My precious Queene forbeare,
And give true evidence to his Love, which stands
An honourable Triall.
Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I prythee turne aside and weepe for her,
Then bid adieu to me, and say the teares
Belong to Egypt. Good now, play one Scene
Of excellent dissembling, and let it looke
Like perfect Honour.
Ant. You'll heat my blood no more?
Cleo You can not hear it yet: but if you can
Ant. Now by my sword
Cleo And target. Still he mends,
But this is not the best. Looke prythee Charmian,
How this Herculean Roman do's become
The carriage of his chafe.
Ant. I'le leave you Lady.
Cleo. Courteous Lord, one word.
Sir you and I must part, but that's not it:
Sir you and I have lov'd, but there's not it:
That you know well: something it is I would:
O my Oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.
Ant. But that your Royalty
Holds Idlenesse your subject, I should take you
For Idlenesse it selfe.
Cleo 'Tis sweating Labour
To beare such Idlenesse so neere the heart
As Cleopatra this. But Sir, forgive me,
Since my becomings kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you. Your Honor calles you hence,
Therefore be deafe to my unpractis'd Feare.
And all the Gods go with you. Upon your Sword
Sit Laurell Victory, and smooth successe
Be strew'd before your feete.
Ant. Let us go.
Come: Our separation so abides and flies,
That thou residing here, goes yet with me,
And I hence fleeting, here remaine with thee.
Away. Exeunt

Enter Octauius reading a Letter, Lepidus and their Traine.

Octa. You may see Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Noble Nature, to be
Th'absolute Soldiers of Triangular Roome:
Nor the Ammunition of our Mind
Our Wing and Buckler, to the brawny hand
Of our wilde Opposer. And to that end,
Your Ability in Warre,
Lep. I shall nothing take
Upon what I have done before, unlesse
Octa. Yesterday I told you of a Parley, even at
Lep. Antony and Pompey
Are you prepar'd to meet them?
Octa. Else should I much forget my selfe, Lepidus.
Lep. Would I had done well with you in Spaine.
Octa. But I did not good hope,
Least my Sword made there should grow up in my house.
You are an Old Soldier Lepidus,
Good Limmets
Lep. I must not think
There are Evils enow to darke all Greekish Rome,
How it may grow and have no Nurse,
Where fore the Patient Citizen, the matron,
Are you prepar'd to meet Mark Antony
And Pompey presently?
Octa. Yesterday I told you of it.
Lep. 'Tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entertaine it
With so full a Love, as you deale Courtesie
To Pompey, your Ambassador, at Sea,
And Antony, whose Absence seales the Feare
Which might else call him on, to the Moore Sea,
Lepidus, I have heard in Egypt
Octa. Nay certainly, I have heard the Ptolomies Pyramises are very goodly things, without contradiction I have heard that.
Lep. Pompey bad me aske you for his Kinsman, but you have answered before me.
Octa. Do you plot, Sir, on Pompey?
Lep. No, Caesar, I work not on him, whom I think honest.
Octa. Not honest to him, whom I call honest.
Lep. Why Caesar, Pompey is not honest to you, without he have those Vertues in him, that I account him of.
Octa. Those Vertues are in him, as Mountaines are in the Sea. Common as good Captaines are in a Theefe. As high Dales as the Alpes are in Rome. For the Vice of Pompey, it is growne so much, that it drinkes his Vertues up, as the Sunne Rivers: but his Vertues living in his Badnesse, are to him, as the Showre to the Ditch, that makes it both unsauerie alike. Is it not strange, Lepidus, that Antony should be a Drunkard, and Pompey should know it, and neither of them have the Vertue to auoyd it?
Lep. Will you go see the Barres?
Octa. Will you lead your Army through the Field? I feare you make short Iourneys, in regard of the Citie.
Lep. I have direct them how they should follow. But pray you go.
Octa. I am not pleas'd inly, that I am present with this Preparation, which wounds my Purse in the leuying. Pompey's Stile of Dealing with Antony, makes his Demands like a Reasonable Foe, that sounds not when he parleys for Defiance. Many a time and oft, haue I found him marching, euen to the Ensigne of his Enemies, downe with his Bonnet, his Neck bare, his Eyes like Sutlers clapt vpon their Sacke, his Speech tame, like a Bankrupts, that had almost forgot to draw: he is quite lost in his Base, that he is carried into by Antony. For this vile Peace, I doubt he shall as well be hated of his Friends, as loued of his Foes: and deserues to lose both, as he that with the Feare of a Woman, or Boy, embraces the Life of the Enemie.
Lep. Your Speech is passion: but pray you stirre no Embers up. Here comes the Noble Pompey.
Mes. Him and his Longing Friends: we have neither Fleet nor Battaile, but they grow Pale with meere Feare, and make the Sea serue them, which they ear and wound with keeping it. Not a Ship in the Port, but can report of a Nauie fit for the Warre preparing, and expect to be dispatch'd ere look to be.
Octa. Welcome to Rome.
Lep. Thanke you.
Octa. Sit.
Lep. Sit Sir.
Octa. Nay then.
Lep. I learne this Meeting tends to Peace.
Pom. Were they prophane that said I left my Father unrevenged, for I will not know my Hands are whetted for his Loue, till I have his Honour tride.

[illegible]

Mes. [illegible] long-tayle word,

[illegible] Mes. [illegible] Pirates

Cæsar and Anthony have well [illegible],
His Wife that [illegible],
His Brother [illegible],
Not [illegible] Anthony
Pom. I know it, Menas,
How else it may give way to greater,
Were it not that we stand vp against them all,
'Twere pregnant they should square between themselues,
For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their Swords: but how the feare of vs
May cement their diuisions, and binde vp
The petty difference, we yet not know.
But as our Gods will haue it, enuy'd hands
Our Lots [illegible] to our strongest hands
Come Menas. Exeunt

Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Enobarbus 'tis a worthy deed,
And [illegible] becomes you well, to intreat your Captaine
To [illegible]
Enob. [illegible],
For [illegible],
Let [illegible],

[illegible]
[illegible], Cæsar, [illegible],
but [illegible]
Ant. I was [illegible], when not [illegible] Antonius
Do [illegible]
Do [illegible]
Ant. Sit here [illegible]
Tye [illegible]
Or [illegible]
[illegible]
Are [illegible]
Thy [illegible]
Cæsar. You [illegible], Antonius, when you [illegible]
Ant. Sir Cæsar
Ant. No Lepidus, excuse me,
The [illegible],
[illegible],
The [illegible]
Cæs. [illegible], [illegible],
[illegible]

Ant. [illegible] I [illegible] for the [illegible], [illegible] more [illegible]
Egyp. [illegible]
Ant. [illegible], one word, speake no more
Egyp. [illegible] should be [illegible], I had a moft for-

[illegible] presence therefore [illegible]
Ant. [illegible] Confederate ſtone,
Cæs. [illegible]
To [illegible] for it cannot be,
We [illegible]
So [illegible] Yet [illegible],
What Hope [illegible] Raunch [illegible] to cage
Ariſwood. I [illegible]
Agr. Give me leave Cæſar.
Cæs. Speake Agrippa.
Agr. [illegible] Sweet by the Mother of [illegible],
[illegible] Great Marke Anthony is now a widdower.
Cæs. Say not, ſay Agrippa. Cleopater [illegible] you, your proofe [illegible].
Ant. I am not [illegible] yet [illegible] heere Agrippa
further [illegible].
Agr. To [illegible] perpetuall [illegible],
[illegible] you Bonds [illegible] your hearts
[illegible] Anthony.
[illegible] with [illegible]
Now [illegible] whose
Vertue, and [illegible] praiſes [illegible]
[illegible] from [illegible],
And [illegible],
[illegible], whose [illegible]
Are [illegible] Traines would betrayes,
Where now [illegible] betweene her loue to both,
Would [illegible]
Draw [illegible] [illegible] ſpake,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Cæs. Now [illegible] how Anthony is [illegible],
With [illegible] already.
Ant. [illegible], Agrippa,
[illegible],
To [illegible]
Cæs. [illegible] to Cæſar,
And [illegible].
Ant. Nay [illegible].
(The [illegible] that ſo [illegible] ſhewes)
Dreaded [illegible] me [illegible] by hand
Further [illegible] from [illegible],
To [illegible] Brothers [illegible],
And [illegible]
Cæs. [illegible]
And I beſeech [illegible] Brother
Do [illegible] deeply [illegible]
In [illegible], and our hearts, and neuer
[illegible]
Ant. Happily, Amen.
Ant. I [illegible] to draw my Sword 'gainſt Pompey,
For [illegible] [illegible], and great
Of [illegible] [illegible],
Leaſt [illegible] [illegible].
A [illegible],
Ant. [illegible],
Or [illegible] Pompey [illegible],
[illegible]
Ant. Where [illegible]?
Cæs. About the Mount-Meſena.
Ant. What [illegible] by land?
Cæs. Great, and encreaſing:
But by Sea he is an abſolute Maſter.
Ant. So is the fame,
Would we had ſpoke together. Haſt we for it,
Yet [illegible] we put our [illegible] in Armes, diſpatch we
The buſineſſe we have [illegible] of
Cæſar. With moſt gladneſſe,
And do [illegible] you to my Siſters view,

Whether straight ile lead you
Anth. Let vs Lepidus not wracke your company
Lep. Noble Anthony, not heare ile thou vnderame me.

Flourish. Exeunt.

Manet Enobarbus, Agrippa, Mecenas.

Mec. Welcome home Enobarbus
Eno. Hale sir, hale sir, welcome my worthy Mecenas. My honourable friend Agrippa
Agrip. Good Enobarbus
Mec. We haue cause to be glad that matters are so well digested. You staid well by't in Egypt
Eno. I, sir, we did sleepe day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.
Mec. Eight wilde Boares roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelue persons there.
Eno. Truely it was the report of a sober man, but I made it more than it was: for there was no breakfast to speake of, no body ate but I, and that I did eate before I came, that it was in the world notable.
Mecenas. She is a rare Queene, she must be square other.
Enob. When she first met Marke Anthony she purst vp his heart vpon the riuer of Sidnis.
Agrip. There she appear'd indeed, or my reporter deuis'd well for her.
Eno. I will tell you.
The Barge she sat in, like a burnisht throne
Burnt on the water: the poope was beate gold,
Purple the Sailes, and so perfumed that
The Windes were loue-sicke
With them the Owers were dier,
Which to the tune of Flutes kept stroake, and made
The water which they beate to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her owne person
It beggerd all discription: she did lye
In her Pauilion cloth of Gold of Tissue,
O'repicturing that Venus where we see
The fancy outwork Nature. On each side her,
Stood pretty Dimpled Boyes like smiling Cupids,
With diuers coulour'd Fannes whose wind did seeme,
To glowe the delicate cheekes which they did coole
And what they vndid did
Agrip. Oh rare for Anthony
Eno. Her Gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many Mermaides tended her i'th eyes,
And made their bends adornings. At the helme
A seeming Mermaide steeres. The Silken Tackle,
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the office. From the Barge
A strange inuisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adiacent Wharfes. The City cast
Her people out vpon her: and Anthony
Enthron'd i'th Market place did sit alone,
Whistling to the ayre, which but for vacancie,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in Nature
Agrip. Rare Egyptian.
Eno. Vpon her landing Anthony sent to her,
Inuited her to Supper. She replyed
It should be better, he became her guest
Which she entreated: our Courteous Anthony,
Whom neuer the word of No woman heard speake,
Being barber'd ten times o're, goes to the Feast
And for a ordinary, paies his heart,
For what his eyes eate onely
Agrip. Royall Wench:
She made great Cæsar lay his Sword to bed,
He ploughed her and she cropt
Eno. I saw her once
Hop forty Paces through the publike streete
And hauing lost her breath she spoke, and panted,
That she did make defect perfection
And breathlesse power breathe forth
Mece. Now Anthony must leaue her vtterly
Eno. Neuer, neuer, he will not
Age cannot wither her, nor custome stale
Her infinite variety: other women cloy
The appetites they feed, but she makes hungry,
Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
Become themselues in her, that the holy Priests
Blesse her when she is Riggish
Mece. If beauty, Wisedome, Modesty can settle
The heart of Antony, Octauia is
A blessed Lottery to him
Agrip. Let vs go. Good Enobarbus, make your selfe my guest whilst you abide here
Eno. Humbly sir I thanke you. Exeunt

Enter Anthony, Cæsar, Octauia between them.

Anth. The world and my great office, will
Sometimes diuide me from your bosome
Octa. All which time before the Gods my knee shall bow my prayers to them for you
Anth. Good night sir. My Octauia
Read not my blemishes in the worlds report
I haue not kept my square, but that to come
Shall all be done by the rule. Good night deere Lady
Good night sir
Cæsar. Good night. Exeunt

Enter Soothsayer.

Anth. Now sirrah you do wish your selfe in Egypt
Sooth. Would I had neuer come from thence, nor you thither
Anth. If you can, your reason?
Sooth. I see it in my motion, haue not in my tongue: but yet hie you to Egypt againe
Anth. Say to me, whose Fortunes shall rise higher Cæsars or mine?
Sooth. Cæsars. Therefore (oh Anthony) stay not by his side.
Thy Demon (that's the spirit that keepes thee) is
Noble, Courageous, high vnmatchable,
Where Cæsars is not. But neere him, thy Angell
Becomes a feare, as being ore-powr'd: therefore
Make space enough betweene you.
Anth. Speake this no more
Sooth. To none but thee: no more but when to thee.
If thou dost play with all thy skill, thou shalt
Not be expos'd with euidence to Non-suite,
Not be exprest in stone, stampes, moneys, and Publish'd through the Ayre. Your part is this
Your Starre is noble, and Rules where
Anth. Well
Say to me, whose Fortunes shall rise higher Cæsars or mine? Exit.
Hence with your stamps. Go
Out of my sight. Were it other Men, Dice obey him,
And in high amorous hearts blowing paints,
Victory is of two themselues rebukeable.
His Cocks do winne the Battaile, still of mine,
When it is all to naught, and his Quailes euer
Beate mine (inhoop'd) at odds. I will to Egypt:

And

As I haue made mine Embassage for my peace,
I shall my pleasure see. O welcome Ventigius.

Enter Ventigius.

You must to Parthia your Commission see ye.
Follow me, and receiue it. Exeunt

Enter Lepidus, Mecenas and Agrippa.

Lepidus. Trouble your selues no further, pray you hasten your Generals sayle.

Agr. Sir Mecenas and my selfe but bid farewell to Octauius, and wee come.

Lep. To shame me at your Souldiers dressing,
Which will become you both to haue seene.

Mec. We shall as I conceiue the iourney, be at Mount before you Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter, my purposes do draw me much about, or else would your company.

Agrip. Sir good successe.

Lep. Farewell. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras and Alexas.

Cleo. Giue me some Musicke, Musicke, moody foode of vs that trade in loue.

Omnes. The Musicke hoa.

Enter Mardian the Eunuch.

Cleo. Let it alone, let vs to Billards, come Charmian.

Char. My arme is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleopa. As well a woman with an Eunuch, plaid as with a woman. Come you'le play with me sir?

Mard. As well as I can Madam.

Cleo. And when good will is shewed,
Though't come too short
The Actor may plead pardon. Play me Nine holes,
Giue me mine Angle, wee'le to the Riuer there
My Musicke playing farre off, I will betray
Tawny fine fishes, my bended hooke shall pierce
Their slimy iawes, and as I draw them vp,
Ile thinke them euery one an Antonius,
And say, ah, ha, y'are caught.

Char. Twas merry when
You wagerd on your Angling, when your diuer
Did hang a salt fish on his hooke, which with
A lusty sweat he drew vp.

Cleo. That time? O times
I laugh'd him out of patience, and that night
I laugh'd him into patience, and next morne
Before the clocke did take the Commons part,
I made him sicke with drinking.
In time of my Tawny Antonius, and I
I wore his Sword Philippan. O from Italie.

Enter a Messenger.

Ramme thou thy fruitfull tidings in mine eares,
That long time haue been barren.

Mess. Madam Madam.

Cleo. Antonius dead?
If thou say so Villaine,
Thou kil'st thy Mistris
But well and free,
If thou so yeild him.
There is Gold, and here
My bluest veines to kisse,
A hand that kings
Haue lipt, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First Madam he is well.

Cleo. Why there's more Gold.
But sirrah marke, we vse
To say the dead are well: bring it to that,
The Gold I giue thee will I melt and powre
Downe thy ill vttering throate.

Mess. Good Madam heare me.

Cleo. Well go too I will
But there's no goodnesse in thy face if Antony
Be free and healthfull, so tart a fauour
To trumpet such good tidings. If not well,
Thou should'st come like a Furie crown'd with Snakes,
Not like a formall man.

Mess. Will't please you heare me?

Cleo. I haue a mind to strike thee ere thou speak'st
Yet if thou say Antony liues, 'tis well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not Captiue to him,
Ile set thee in a shower of Gold, and hayle
Rich Pearles vpon thee.

Mess. Madam he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou'rt an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar, and he, are greater friends then euer.

Cleo. Make thee a Fortune from me.

Mess. But yet Madam

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does allay
The good precedence, fie vpon but yet,
But yet is as a Gaolor to bring forth
Some monstrous Malefactor. Prythee Friend,
Powre out the packe of matter to mine eare,
The good and bad together: he's friends with Cæsar,
In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free.

Mess. Free Madam, no I made no such report,
He's bound vnto Octauia.

Cleo. For what good turne?

Mess. For the best turne i'th bed.

Cleo. I am pale Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he's married to Octauia.

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence vpon thee.

Strikes him downe.

Mess. Good Madam patience.

Cleo. What say you? Strikes him.
Hence horrible Villaine, or Ile spurne thine eyes
Like balls before me, Ile vnhaire thy head,

She hales him vp and downe.

Thou shalt be whipt with Wyer, and stew'd in brine,
Smarting in lingring pickle.

Mess. Gracious Madam,
I that do bring the newes, made not the match.

Cleo. Say 'tis so, I do Prouince I will giue thee
And make thy fortunes proud to blow vpon you.
Shall make a peace or warre, as meete you iudge,
And are you glad the two are married well.

Mess. If she be faire we tell her so, and she
Is faire, who knowes it better then her selfe.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liu'd too long. Draw a knife.

Mess. Nay then I'll runne.
What meane you Madam, I haue made no fault. Exit.

Char. Good Madam keepe your selfe within your selfe,
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some Innocents scape not the thunderbolt.
Melt Egypt into Nyle, and kindly creatures
Turne all to Serpents. Call the slaue againe,
Though I am mad, I will not bite him. Call?

Char. He is afeard to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him,
These hands do lacke Nobility, that they strike
A meaner then my selfe: since my eyes
Haue giuen me cause to caute them. Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger againe.

Though it be honest, it is neuer good
To bring bad newes: giue to a gratious Message

An suit of tongues, but as ev'ry dying soul
The nerues, when they be tost.
Mes. I haue done my duty.
Cleo. Is he married?
I cannot hate thee worser then I do,
If thou again say yes
Mes. He is married Madam.
Cleo. The Gods confound thee.
Do I looke old?
Mes. Should I not Madam?
Cleo. Oh, would thou had'st neuer seene me!
Sohot'ning Egypt were (ere) merry, and made
A Cesterne for scal'd snakes. Go get thee hence,
Had thou Antonies eyes to command,
Thou would'st appeare most ougly (ly) married?
Mes. I craue your highnesse pardon.
Cleo. He is married?
Mes. Take no offence that I would not offend you,
To punish me for what you make me do
Seemes much as if you did command me one
Cleo. Oh that he were here with his head on his shoulders,
That art not worth the breath of my displeasure,
The Matchlesse Roman would confound the world Rome
And all too deere to me
Eyes they are cruell, else they would be kinder,
Cleo. Good your highnesse patience.
Cleo. In praising Antony I haue dispraised Cæsar.
Cleo. Many times Madam.
Cleo. I am paid for't now, lead me from hence,
I faint, oh Iras Charmian, 'tis no matter,
Go to the Fellow, good Alexas bid him
Report the feature of Octauia, her yeares,
Her inclination, let him not leaue out
The colour of her haire. Bring me word quickly,
Let him for euer depart (Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
The other waies a Mars. Bid him Alexas
Bring me word how tall she is. Pity me Charmian,
But do not speake to me. Lead me to my Chamber
Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter Pompey at one doore with Drum and Trumpet: at another Cæsar, Lepidus, Agrippa, Menas, Soldiers, Musicke.
Pom. Your hostages I haue, so haue you mine
And we shall talke before we fight
Cæs. Most meete that first we come to words,
And therefore haue we
Our written purposes before vs sent,
Which if thou hast considered, let vs know,
If 'twill tye vp thy discontented Sword,
And carry backe to Cicelie much tall youth,
That else must perish here.
Pom. To you all three,
The Senators alone of this great world,
Chiefe factors for the Gods. I do not know,
Wherefore my Father should reuengers want,
Hauing a Sonne and friends since Iulius Cæsar
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was't
That moued pale Cassius to conspire? And what
Made all-honor'd honest, Romane Brutus,
With the armed rest, Courtiers of beauteous freedome,
To drench the Capitoll, but that they would
Haue one man but a man? and that is it
Hath made me rigge my Nauie. At whose burthen,
The anger'd Ocean foames, with which I meane
To scourge th'ingratitude, that despightfull Rome
Cast on my Noble Father.
Cæs. Take your time
Ant. Thou can'st not feare vs Pompey with thy sailes
We'le speake with thee at Sea. At land thou know'st
How much we do o're count thee.
Pom. At land indeed
Thou dost o're count me of my Father house:
But since the cuckoo builds not for himselfe,
Remaine in't as thou may'st.
Lep. Be pleas'd to tell vs
(For this is from the present) how you take
The offers we haue sent you.
Cæs. There's the point
Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth imbrac'd.
Cæs. And what may follow
To try a larger fortune.
Pom. You haue made me offer
Of Cæsar, Pompey, but not the remainder
Of mine owne goods.
Lep. 'Tis your suit. Be pleas'd
To let vs heare it Pompey.
Pom. Let me haue your hand Menas:
Ant. Let me heare it Pompey.
Pom. Let me haue your hand Agrippa:
Ant. Let me heare it Pompey.
Pom. Let me haue your hand Menas:
I did not think sir to haue met you here,
Ant. For I haue kept me from the Cup. Prythee Peace,
Pom. I know you are,
What colour is it shall be hoysted on my face,
For in my Conscience I must call you Coward,
To make vp mine, their valiant
Lep. Be pleas'd
Pom. I haue spoke Lepidus, thus we are agreed:
Let our compositions may be written
And seal'd betweene vs,
Cæs. That's the next to do
Pom. Weele feast each other, ere we part, and let vs
Draw lots who shall begin.
Ant. That will I Pompey.
Pom. No Antony take the lot: but first or last,
your fine Egyptian cookerie shall haue the fame, I haue
heard that Iulius Cæsar grew fat with feasting there.
Ant. You haue heard much.
Pom. I haue fair meaning Sir
Ant. And fair words to them
Pom. Then so much haue I heard,
And I haue eate Ant. Pompey can't be
Eno. No more that too much.
Pom. What sayst you
Eno. A certaine Queene to Cæsar in a Mattes
Pom. I know thee now, how art thou Souldier?
Eno. Well, and well am like to do, for I perceiue

Foure Feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand,
I neuer hated thee: I haue seene thee fight,
When I haue enuied thy behauiour.

Enob. Sir, I neuer lou'd you much, but I ha'prais'd ye,
When you haue well deseru'd ten times as much,
As I haue said you did.

Pom. Inioy thy plainenesse,
It nothing ill becomes thee
Aboord my Galley: I inuite you all.
Will you leade Lords?

All. Shew's the way, Sir.

Pom. Come. Exeunt. Manet Enob. & Menas.

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would ne're haue made this Treaty. You and I haue cause to burne our Nights.

Enob. Ant. Say, this becomes him,

Men. Or else he is a verie Asse.

Enob. You haue spoke already vnwisely enough, I pre'thee.

Men. And well too, I thinke.

Enob. And well too, if they bleed.

Men. Marke Antony.

Enob. Tye vp thy discontented Sword, and carry it as you finde it.

Men. Shall we take vp the Captaines, and Lepidus, since he sleepes out the Maine of this Businesse?

Enob. Let's to Billiards: come Menas.

Men. I'le follow.

Enob. Rare Egyptian Queene!

Men. Of Egypt, Sir, he married the Widdow Queene.

Enob. Her husband is dead, Menas.

Men. Pray you, Sir?

Enob. 'Tis certaine.

Men. Then is Cæsar and he, for euer knit together.

Enob. If I were not to Dine at this Feast, I would not Prophesie so.

Men. I think the policie of that purpose made more then a Marriage betweene Cæsar and Cleopatra.

Enob. That's not so good. But you haue made the band to assemble: they'l seeke their Treasure together, we'l beene very merry (if I be not deceiued in the Fortune of my hope) and I thinke to Egypt.

Men. Would we had all such wives as we thinke of!

Enob. Come, let's all take a Whiffe, and purge vp Wit'h Marke Antony I dare him therefore to the Fray, and command him wedding Cæsar, and as I finde his Squandring shake the Feast vpon Cæsar, and at the Stratagem of his Fleet depriue Antonie of halfe his Nauie, for mocking me to my Beard. Here comes the Captaines.

Men. I shall not need to say much more, for I perceiue by you that you may be Come Sir, will you aboord?

Enob. I'le take it for I haue vs'd my Throate in Egypt.

Men. Come, let's away. Exeunt.

Musicke plays.

Enter two or three Seruants with a Banket.

1 Heere they'l be man. Some o'th'their Plants are ill rooted already, the least winde i'th'world will blow them downe.

2 Lepidus is high Conlord.

1 They haue made him drinke Almes drinke.

2 As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out, no more: reconciles them to his entreatie, and himselfe to th'drinke.

1 But it raises the greatest warre betweene him & his discretion.

2 Why this it is to haue a name in great mens Fellowship: I had as liefe haue a Reede that will do me no seruice, as a Partizan I could not heaue.

1 To be call'd into a huge Sphere, and not to be seene to moue in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pittifully disaster the cheekes.

A Sennet sounded.

Enter Cæsar, Antony, Pompey, Lepidus, Agrippa, Mecenas, Enobarbus, Menas, with other Captaines.

Ant. Thus do they Sir: they take the flow o'th'Nyle
By certaine scales i'th'Pyramid: they know
By'th'height, the lownesse, or the meane: If dearth
Or foizon follow. The higher Nilus swels,
The more it promises: as it ebbes, the Seedsman
Vpon the slime and Ooze scatters his graine,
And shortly comes to Harueste.

Lep. You'haue strange Serpents there?

Ant. I Lepidus.

Lep. You Serpent of Egypt, is bred now of your mud by the operation of your Sun: so is your Crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit, and some Wine. A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be,
But I'le not out.

Enob. Not till you haue slept: I feare me you'l be in till then.

Lep. Nay certainely, I haue heard the Ptolomies Pyramises are very goodly things: without contradiction I haue heard that.

Menas. Pompey, a word.

Pom. Say in mine eare, what is't.

Men. Forsake thy seate I do beseech thee Captaine,
And heare me speake a word.

Pom. Forbeare me till anon. Whispers in's Eare.
This Wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o'thing is your Crocodile?

Ant. It is shap'd sir, like it selfe, and it is as broad as it hath bred: It is iust so high as it is, and moues with it owne organs. It liues by that which nourisheth it, and the Elements once out of it, it Transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it owne colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange Serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so, and the teares of it are wet.

Cæs. Will this description satisfie him?

Ant. With the Health that Pompey giues him, else he is a very Epicure.

Pomp. Go hang, Sir, hang: tell me of that? Away!
Do as I bid you. Where's this Cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of Merit thou wilt heare me,

Ride from thy Bosome.
Pom. I thinke th'art mad: the matter?
Men. I haue euer held my cap off to thy Fortunes.
Pom. Thou hast seru'd me with much faith: what's else to say? Be iolly Lords
Ant. These Quicke-sands Lepidus,
Keepe it fast from you.
Men. What say'st thou?
Pom. What a Wretch
Men. Wilt thou be Lord of all the world?
That's twice
Pom. How should that be?
Men. But entertaine it, and although thou think me poore, I am the man will giue thee all the world.
Pom. Hast thou drunke well?
Men. No Pompey, I haue kept me from the Cup.
Thou art if thou dar'st be, the earthly Ioue:
What ere the Ocean pales, or skye inclippes,
Is thine if thou wilt ha't.
Pom. Shew me which way?
Men. These three World-sharers, these Competitors
Are in thy vessell. Let me cut the Cables,
And when we are put off, fall to their throates:
All there is thine.
Pom. Ah this thou should'st haue done
And not haue spoke on't. In me 'tis villanie:
In thee it had been good seruice. Thou must know
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine Honour:
Mine Honour: it. Repent that e're thy tongue
Hath so betraide thine act. Being done vnknowne,
I should haue found it afterwards well done,
But must condemne it now. Desist, and drinke.
Men. For this,
I'le neuer follow
Thy pall'd vnthrifts more,
Who seekes and will not take, when once 'tis offer'd,
Shall neuer finde it more.
Pom. This health to Lepidus
Ant. Beare him ashore,
Ile pledge it for him Pompey.
Eno. Heere's to thee Menas.
Men. Enobarbus, welcome
Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.
Eno. There's a strong Fellow Menas.
Men. Why?
Eno. A beares the third part of the world man; seest not?
Men. The third part then is drunke: would it were all, that it might go on wheeles
Eno. Drinke thou: encrease the Reeles.
Men. Come.
Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian Feast.
Ant. It ripens towards it. Strike the Vessels hoa.
Here is to Cæsar
Cæs. I could well forbeare't, 'tis monstrous labour
When I wash my braine, and it grow fouler
Ant. Be a Child o'th' time.
Cæs. Possesse it, Ile make answer: but I had rather fast from all, foure dayes, then drinke so much in one.
Eno. Ha, my braue Emperor, shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals and celebrate our drinke?
Pom. Let's ha't good Soldier
Ant. Come: let all take hands,
Till that the conquering Wine hath steep't our sense,
In soft and delicate Lethe.
Eno. All take hands.
Make battery to our eares with the loud Musicke,
The while I'le place you, then the boyes shall sing,
The holding euery man shall beate as loud,
As his strong sides can volley.

Musicke Playes. Enobarbus places them hand in hand.

The Song.

Come thou Monarch of the Vine,
Plumpie Bacchus with pinke eyne:
In thy Fats our Cares be drown'd,
With thy Grapes our haires be crown'd,
Cup vs till the world go round,
Cup vs till the world go round.

Cæs. What would you more? Pompey good night. Good brother
Let me request you off: our Graues must haue
A time to ope. Good Antony excuse vs,
You see we haue burnt our cheekes: Strong Enobarb
Is weaker then the Wine, and mine owne tongue
Spleets his meere infirmity. Good Antony
Excuse your weaknesse. Pardon we do you wrong,
Good Antony excuse
Pom. Let me request you off:
Ant. Your Letters did withhold our breake-faste then.
Pom. Good night, good Emperor
Ant. Good Antony, your hand.
Pom. Good night, Noble Captaine, and braue Admirall
Before we part, we'll plot what's to be done.
Men. Hoa, Noble Captaine, come. Exeunt

Enter Ventidius as it were in triumph, with the dead body of Pacorus before him.

Ven. Now darting Parthia, art thou strooke, and now
Possest with flight? Rome should not else be safe,
Make eyes of Heauen, Enobarbus Sword is warme,
The fleeting Parthian seemes to waste it's Meds,
Meanes not his pace to reach. And now with Antony
Let me offer vp my gratulations
Of Conquest to the Gods. Let me
Pay Captaine
Ven. O Emperor,
Thy Captaine had not power place noted well
May make too great an act. For learne this Silius,
Better to leaue vndone, then by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when him we serue away.
Caesar and Antony haue euer wonne
More in their officer, then person. Sossius
One of my place in Syria his Lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renowne,
Which he atchiu'd by the minute, lost his fauour.
Who does i'th' Warres more then his Captaine can,
Becomes his Captaines Captaine: and Ambition
The Souldiers vertue rather makes choose out loſſe
Then gaine which darkens him.
I could do more to do Antonius good,
But 'twould offend him. And in his offence,

Shou'd

Shouldmy performance perish.

Rom. Thou hast Ventidius that, without the which a Souldier and his Sword graunts scarce distinction: thou wilt write to Antony

Ven. Ile humbly signifie what hath past,
That may call word of Parthia we have effected,
How with his Banners and his well paid ranckes,
The ne're-yet-beaten Horse of Parthia,
We have quited our selves.

Rom. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposes to Athens, whether with what haste
The way we meet the time may well permit
We shall appeare before him. On Octavia, passe along.
Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa at one doore, Enobarbus at another.

Agr. What are the Brothers parted

Eno. They have dispatcht with Pompey, he is gone,
The other three are Sealing. Octavia weepes
To part from Rome: Cæsar is sad, and Lepidus
Since Pompey feasted, as the Romanes use, is troubled
With the Greene Sicknesse

Agr. 'Tis a Noble Lepidus

Eno. A very fine one: oh, how he loves Cæsar

Agr. Nay but how deerely he adores Mark Antony

Eno. Cæsar? Why he's the Jupiter of men

Agr. What's Antonius, he's the God of Iupiter?

Eno. Spake you of Cæsar? How, the non-pareil?

Agr. O Antonius, O thou Arabian

Eno. Would you praise Cæsar, say Cæsar: go no further.

Agr. Indeed he plied them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loves Marke Antony, yet he loves Pompey,
Hoo Hearts, Tongues, Figures,
Scribes, Bards, Poets, cannot
Thinke speake, cast, write, sing, number hoo,
His love to Antony. But as for Cæsar,
Kneele downe, kneele downe, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves.

Eno. They are his Shards, and he their Beetle, so.
This is to horse: Adieu Noble Agrippa

Agr. Good Fortune worthy Souldier, and farewell.

Enter Cæsar, Anthony, Lepidus and Octavia.

Antho. No further Sir

Cæsar. You take from me a great part of my selfe,
Use me well in it. Sister prove such a wife
As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest bond
Shall passe on thy approofe. Most Noble Antony
Let not the peece of Vertue which is set
Betwixt us as the Cyment of our love
To keepe us better knit, now serve the turne to batter
The Fortresse of it: for better might we
Have lou'd without this meane, if on both parts
This be not cherisht.

Ant. Make me not offended,
In your distrust.

Cæsar. I have said.

Ant. You shall not finde,
Though you be therein curious the least cause
For what you seeme to feare, so the Gods keepe you,
And make the hearts of Romanes serue your ends.
We will heere part

Cæsar. Farewell my deerest Sister, fare thee well,
The Elements be kinde to thee, and make
Thy spirits all comfort: fare thee well

Octa. My Noble Brother.

Ant. The Aprill's in her eyes, it is Loves spring,
And these the showers to bring it on: be cheerefull.

Octa. Sir, looke well to my Husbands house; and—

Cæsar. What Octavia?

Octa. I'le tell you in your eare.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can
Her heart informe her tongue.
The Swannes downe feather
That stands upon the Swell at the full of Tide:
And neither way inclines

Eno. Will Cæsar weepe?

Agr. He has a cloud in's face.

Eno. He were the worse for that were he a Horse, so is he being a man.

Agr. Why Enobarbus
When Antony found Iulius Cæsar dead,
He cried almost to roaring: And he wept,
When at Philippi he found Brutus slaine.

Eno. That year indeed, he was troubled with a rheume,
What willingly he did confound, he wail'd,
Believe't till I weepe too.

Cæsar. No sweet Octavia,
You shall heare from me still: the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come Sir, come,
Ile wrastle with you in my strength of love,
Looke heere I have you, thus I let you go,
And give you to the Gods.

Cæsar. Adieu, be happy

Lep. Let all the number of the Starres give light
To your faire way.

Cæsar. Farewell, farewell. Kisse Octavia.

Ant. Farewell. Trumpets sound. Exeunt

Enter Cæsar, Mecenas, Agrippa, and Attendants.

Cæsar. Where's Antony?

Mec. He's not with Cæsar.

Cæsar. Foolish Lepidus! Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger as before.

Agr. Cæsar, thou hast subdu'd his worst, and dar'st not looke upon us, but when he is farre off, raile'st.

Cæsar. I have many times heard Lepidus but now? When Antony is not enough who all might command at once,
Come hither Sir.

Mes. My Noble Lord Marke Antonie

Cæsar. What saies he of my Sister Octavia?

Mes. He does not call her Sister.

Cæsar. Why?

Mes. My Lord is come home, I looke her in the face: and Saw her Cæsar her Brother, and Cæsar Antony.

Cæsar. Of the base stile of a meane

Mes. Name of Marke.

Cæsar. Did she not heare her speake?
Is she shrill Tongu'd or low?

Mes. Madam I heard her speake, she is low voic'd.

Cæsar. That's not so good: he cannot like her long.

Cleo. Like her? O Isis, 'tis impossible

Cæsar. I think so too. Cleopatra dull of tongue, & dwarfish
What Majesty is in her gate, remember
If ere you look't on Majestie.

Mes. She creepes her motion, & her station are as one
She shewes a body, rather then a life,
A Statue, then a Breather

Cæsar. Is this certaine?

Mes. Or I have no observance.

Cæsar. Three in Egypt cannot make better note.

Cæsar. He's very knowing, I do perceive't,
There's nothing in her yet.

The

The Fellow has good iudgement.
Char. Excellent.
Cleo. Guesse at her yeares, I pry'thee.
Mess. Madam she was a widow.
Cleo. Widdow? Charmian hearke.
Mess. And I do think she's thirtie.
Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is't long or round?
Mess. Round euen to faulting with't.
Cleo. For the most part too, they are foolish that are so. Her haire what colour?
Mess. Browne Madam: and her forehead
As low as she would wish it.
Cleo. There's Gold for thee,
Thou must not take my former sharpenesse ill,
I will employ thee backe againe: I finde thee
Most fit for businesse. Go, make thee ready,
Our Letters are prepar'd.
Char. A proper man.
Cleo. Indeed he is so: I repent me much
That so I harried him. Why me think's by him,
This Creature's no such thing.
Char. Nothing Madam.
Cleo. The man hath seene some Maiestie, and should know.
Char. Hath he seene Maiestie? Isis else defend: and serving you so long.
Cleopa. I haue one thing more to aske him yet good Charmian: but 'tis no matter, thou shalt bring him to me where I will write, all may be well enough.
Char. I warrant you Madam. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Octauia.

Ant. Nay, nay Octauia, not only that,
That were excusable, that and thousands more
Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd
New Warres 'gainst Pompey: Made his will, and read it,
To publicke eare, spoke scantly of me,
When perforce he could not
But pay me tearmes of Honour: cold and sickly
He vented then most narrow measure: lent me,
When the best hint was giuen him: he not look't,
Or did it from his teeth.
Octauia. Oh my good Lord,
Beleeue not all, or if you must beleeue,
Stomacke not all. A more vnhappie Lady,
If this deuision chance, ne're stood betweene
Praying for both parts:
The good Gods will mocke me presently,
When I shall pray: Oh blesse my Lord, and Husband,
Vndo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
Oh blesse my Brother. Husband winne, warre Brother,
Prayes, and distroyes the prayer, no midway
'Twixt these extreames at all.
Ant. Gentle Octauia,
Let your best loue draw to that point which seekes
Best to preserue it: If I loose mine Honour,
I loose my selfe: better I were not yours
Then your so branchlesse. But as you requested,
Your selfe shall go between's, the meane time Lady,
Ile raise the preparation of a Warre
Shall staine your Brother, make your soonest haft,
So your desires are yours.
Oct. Thanks to my Lord.
The Ioue of power make me most weake, most weake,
You reconciler: Warres 'twixt you twaine would be,
As if the world should cleaue, and that slaine men
Should soader vp the Rift.

Ant. When it appeeres to you where this begins,
Turne your displeasure that way, for our faults
Can neuer be so equall, that your loue
Can equally moue with them. Prouide your going,
Choose your owne company, and command what cost
Your heart he's mind to
Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus and Eros.

Eno. How now Friend Eros?
Eros. There's strange Newes come Sir.
Eno. What man?
Eros. Cæsar & Lepidus haue made warres vpon Pompey
Eno. This is old, what is the successe?
Eros. Cæsar hauing made vse of him in the warres 'gainst Pompey: presently denied him riuall, would not let him partake in the glory of the action, and not resting here, accuses him of Letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey. Vpon his owne appeale seizes him: so the poore third is vp, till death enlarge his Confine.
Eno. Then would thou hadst a paire of chaps, no more and throw betweene them all the food thou hast, they'le grinde one another. Where's Antony?
Eros. He's walking in the garden thus, and spurnes
The rush that lies before him. Cries Foole Lepidus,
And threats the throate of that his Officer,
That murdred Pompey.
Eno. Our great Nauie rig'd.
Eros. For Italy and Cæsar, more Domitius,
My Lord desires you presently: my Newes
I might haue told heereafter.
Eno. 'Twill be naught, but let it be: bring me to Anthony.
Eros. Come Sir,
Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa, Mecenas, and Cæsar

Cæs. Contemning Rome he has done all this, & more
In Alexandria: heere's the manner of't:
I'th' Market-place on a Tribunall siluer'd,
Cleopatra and himselfe in Chaires of Gold
Were publikely enthron'd: at the feet sate
Cæsarion whom they call my Fathers Sonne,
And all the vnlawfull issue, that their Lust
Since then hath made betweene them. Vnto her,
He gaue the stablishment of Egypt, made her
Of lower Syria Cyprus, Lydia absolute Queene.
Mece. This in the publike eye?
Cæs. I'th' common shew place, where they exercise.
His Sonnes he there proclaim'd the King of Kings,
Great Media Parthia, and Armenia
He gaue to Alexander. To Ptolomy he assign'd,
Syria Silicia and Phœnicia. She
In th' abiliments of the Goddesse Isis
That day appear'd, and oft before gaue audience,
As 'tis reported so.
Mece. Let Rome be thus informed.
Agri. Who queazie with his insolence already,
Will their good thoughts call from him.
Cæs. The people knowes it,
And haue now receiu'd his accusations
Agri. Who does he accuse?
Cæs. Cæsar: and that hauing in Sicilie
Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part o'th' Isle. Then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping vnrestor'd. Lastly, he frets
That Lepidus of the Triumpherate should be depos'd,
And being that, we detaine all his Reuenue.
Agri. Sir, this should be answer'd.
Cæsar. 'Tis done already, and the Messenger gone:
I haue told him Lepidus was growne too cruell,

That he his high Authority abus'd,
And did deserue his change: for what I haue conquer'd,
I grant him part: but then in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd Kingdoms, I demand the like
Mec. Hee's neuer yeeld to that.
Cæs. Nor must not then be yeelded to in this.

Enter Octauia with her Traine.

Octa. Haile Cæsar, and my Lord, haile most deere Cæsar.
Cæsar. That euer I should call thee Cast-away.
Octa. You haue not cause to, nor haue you cause.
Cæs. Why haue you stay'd vpon vs thus? you come not Like Cæsars Sister, The wife of Anthony
Should haue an Army for an Vsher, and
The neighes of Horse to tell of her approach
Long ere she did appeare. The trees by the way
Should haue borne men, and expectation fainted,
Longing for what it had not. Nay, the dust
Should haue ascended to the Roofe of Heauen,
Rais'd by your populous Troopes: But you are come
A Market-man: one that's come home, and haue presented
The ostentation of our loue, which left vnshewne,
Is often left vnlou'd: we should haue met you
By Sea, and Land, supplying euery Stage
With an augmented greeting.
Octa. Good my Lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My Lord Marke Anthony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for Warre, acquainted
My greeued eare withall: whereon I begg'd
His pardon for returne.
Cæs. Which soone he granted,
Being an abstract 'tweene his Lust, and him.
Octa. Do not say so, my Lord.
Cæs. I haue eyes vpon him,
And his affaires come to me on the wind: what is he now?
Octa. My Lord, in Athens.
Cæsar. No, my most wronged Sister, Cleopatra
Hath nodded him to her. He hath giuen his Empire
Vp to a Whore, who now are leuying
The Kings o'th'earth for Warre. He hath assembled,
Bocchus the King of Lybia, Archelaus
Of Cappadocia, Philadelphos King
Of Paphlagonia: the Thracian King Adallas,
King Manchus of Arabia, King of Pont,
Herod of Iewry, Mithridates King
Of Comagene, Polemon and Amintas,
The King of Mede, and Lycaonia,
With a more larger List of Scepters.
Octa. Ay me most wretched,
That haue my heart parted betwixt two Friends,
That does afflict each other. (breaking forth
Cæs. Welcome hither:
Your Letters did with-holde our
Prosperous Artes when you were wronged,
And were he neuer so ingrate, there your heart,
Be it not tainted with the Crime, which drawes
Our vengeance, and detestings,
But let deere passage gaine your eare
How well you're come. Welcome to Rome,
Nothing more dere to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the marke of thought: and the high Gods
To do you Iustice, make their Ministers
Of vs, and those that loue you. Best of comfort,
And euer welcome to vs. Agrip. Welcome Lady.
Mec. Welcome deere Madam,
Each heart in Rome does loue and pity you,
Only th'adulterous Anthony, most large
In his abhominations, turnes you off,
And giues his potent Regiment to a Trull
That noyses it against vs.
Octa. Is it so sir?
Cæs. Most certaine. Sister welcome: pray you
Be euer knowne to patience. My deer'st Sister. Exeunt

Enter Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be euen with thee, doubt it not.
Eno. But why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou hast forespoke my being in these warres,
And say'st it is not fit.
Eno. Well, is it, is it.
Cleo. If not, denounc'd against vs, why should not
We be there in person.
Eno. Well, I could reply: if we should serue with Horse and Mares together, the Horse were meerely lost:
the Mares would beare a Souldiour and his Horse.
Cleo. What is't you say?
Eno. Your presence needs must puzle Anthony,
Take from his heart, take from his braine, from's time,
What should not then be spar'd. He is already
Traduc'd for Leuity, and 'tis said in Rome,
That Photinus an Eunuch, and your Maides
Manage this warre.
Cleo. Sinke Rome, and their tongues rot
That speake against vs. A Charge we beare i'th' Warre,
And as the president of my Kingdome will
Appeare there for a man. Speake not against it,
I will not stay behinde.

Enter Anthony and Camidius.

Eno. Nay I haue done, here comes the Emperor.
Ant. Is it not strange Camidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brandusium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian Sea,
And take in Troine. You haue heard on't (Sweet?)
Cleo. Celerity is neuer more admir'd,
Then by the negligent.
Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might haue well becom'd the best of men
To taunt at slacknesse. Camidius, wee
Will fight with him by Sea.
Cleo. By Sea, what else?
Cam. Why will my Lord, do so?
Ant. For that he dares vs to't.
Eno. So hath my Lord, dar'd him to Single fight.
Cam. I, and to wage this Battell at Pharsalia,
Where Cæsar fought with Pompey. But these offers
Which serue not for his vantage, he shakes off,
And so should you.
Eno. Your Shippes are not well mann'd,
Your Mariners are Muliters, Reapers, people
Ingrost by swift Impresse. In Cæsars Fleete,
Are those, that often haue 'gainst Pompey fought,
Their shippes are yare, yours heauy: no disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at Sea,
Being prepar'd for Land.
Ant. By Sea, by Sea.
Eno. Most worthy Sir, you therein throw away
The absolute Soldiership you haue by Land,
Distract your Armie, which doth most consist
Of Warre-marke-footmen, leaue vnexecuted
Your owne renowned knowledge, quite forgoe
The way which promises assurance, and
Giue vp your selfe meerely to chance and hazard,
From firme Securitie.
Ant. Ile fight at Sea.

Cleo.

Cleo. I haue fifty Sailes Cæsar none better.
Ant. Our ouer-plus of shipping will we burne,
And with the rest full mann'd, from th'head of Action
Beate th'approaching Cæsar. But if we faile,
We then can doo't at Land. Enter a Messenger
Thy Businesse?
Mes. The Newes is true, my Lord, he is descried,
Cæsar has taken Toryne.
Ant. Can he be there in person? 'Tis impossible
Strange, that power should be. Canidius,
Our hundreth Legions, the Horse by Land,
And our twelue hundreth Archers, meete me on my Ship,
Away my Thetis.
Enter a Souldier.
How now worthy Souldier?
Sould. O Noble Emperor, do not fight by Sea,
Trust not to rotten Planke: Do you doubt
This Sword, and these my Wounds? Let th'Egyptians
And the Phœnicians goe a ducking: We
Vse to ride all a horse, and vent our Land
As well as other men.
Ant. Well, well, away. exit Ant. Cleo. & Enob
Sould. By Hercules I thinke I am i'th right.
Cam. Soldier thou art: but his whole action growes
Not in the power on't: So our Leaders leade,
And we are Women's men.
Sould. You keepe by Land the Legions and the Horse whole, do you not?
Ven. Marcus Octauius, Marcus Iusteius,
Publicola, and Celius are for Sea:
But we keepe whole by Land. This speede of Cæsars
Carries beyond beleefe.
Sould. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions,
As beguil'd all spies.
Can. Who's his Lieutenant, heare you?
Sould. They say one Taurus.
Can. Well I know the man.
Enter a Messenger.
Mes. The Emperor calls Canidius.
Can. With Newes the times with Labour,
And throwes forth each minute, some. exeunt

Enter Cæsar with his Army, marching

Cæs. Taurus?
Tau. My Lord.
Cæs. Strike not by Land,
Keepe whole, prouoke not Battaile
Till we haue done at Sea. Do not exceede
The Prescript of this Scroule: Our fortune lyes
Vpon this iumpe. exit.
Enter Anthony, and Enobarbus.
Ant. Set we our Squadrons on yond side o'th'Hill,
In eye of Cæsars battaile, from which place
We may the number of the Ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. exit.

Canidius Marcheth with his Land Army one way ouer the Stage, and Taurus the Lieutenant of Cæsar the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a Sea fight.

Alarum. Enter Enobarbus and Scarus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught, I can behold no longer:
Thantonia the Egyptian Admirall,
With all their sixty flye, and turne the Rudder
To see't, mine eyes are blasted.
Enter Scarrus
Scar. Gods & Goddesses, all the whole Synod of them
Eno. What's thy passion?
Scar. The greater Cantle of the world, is lost
With very ignorance, we haue kist away
Kingdomes, and Prouinces.
Eno. How appeares the fight?
Scar. On our side, like the tokened Pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yon ribaudred Nagge of Egypt,
(Whom Leprosie o'take, and gleeke!) when vantage like a paire of Twines appeard
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,
The Breeze vpon her, like a Cow in Loue,
Doth follow, and flies
Eno. That I beheld:
Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not
Endure a further view.
Scar. She once so high at it,
The Noble ruine of Magnes Anthony,
Claps on his Sea-wing, and (like a doting Mallard)
Leauing the fight in height, flies after her:
I neuer saw an Action of such shame,
Experience, Manhood, Honor, neuer before,
Did violate so it selfe.
Eno. Alacke, alacke.
Enter Canidius.
Can. Our Fortune on the Sea is out of breath,
And sinkes most lamentably. Had our Generall
Been what he knew himselfe, it had gone well:
O he has giuen example for our flight,
Most grossely by his owne.
Eno. I, are you thereabouts? Why then goodnight indeede.
Can. Toward Peloponnesus are they fled.
Scar. 'Tis easie toot,
And there I will attend what further comes.
Canid. To Cæsar will I render
My Legions, and my Horse, six Kings already
Shew me the way of yielding.
Eno. I'le yet follow
The wounded chance of Anthony, though my reason
Sits in the wind against me.
Enter Anthony with Attendants.
Ant. Hearke the Land bids me tread no more vpon't,
It is asham'd to beare me. Friends, come hither,
I am so lated in the world, that I
Haue lost my way for euer. I haue a Ship,
Laden with Gold, take that, diuide it, flye,
And make your peace with Cæsar.
Omnes. Fly? Not we.
Ant. I haue fled my selfe, and haue instructed cowards
To runne, and shew their shoulders. Friends be gone,
I haue my selfe resolu'd vpon a course,
Which has no need of you. Be gone,
My Treasure's in the Harbour. Take it. Oh,
I follow'd that I blush to looke vpon,
My very haires do mutiny, for the wiues
Of those that I haue kill'd, and they them
For fear, and doting. Friends be gone, you shall Haue Letters from me to some Friends, that will
Sweepe your way for you. Pray you looke not sad,
Nor make replyes of loathnesse, take the hint
Which my dispaire proclaimes. Let them be left
Which leaues it selfe: to the Sea-side straightway:
I will possesse you of that shipping and Treasure.

[illegible] me I prevaile [illegible] prayer vnto you,
[illegible] to [illegible] I [illegible] compound,
Therefore I [illegible] [illegible] Dram [illegible]
Eros [illegible]
Eros [illegible] Messenger [illegible] him.
Ant. [illegible]
Cleo. [illegible]
Cleo. [illegible]
Ant. [illegible]
Eros [illegible]
Ant. [illegible]
Cleo. [illegible]
Ant. [illegible] Empresse
Eros [illegible]
Ant. Yes my Lord yes he at Parthos passe
Had [illegible] [illegible]
The [illegible]
That [illegible] and Fortune on him
Do [illegible]
Lose [illegible]
Cleo. [illegible]
Eros. The Queene my Lord, the Queene
Ant. [illegible]
Hee [illegible]
Cleo. [illegible]
Eros. Most Noble Sir, the Queene
Her [illegible]
Your [illegible]
Ant. Thou [illegible]
A [illegible]
Eros Sir, the Queene.
Ant. O [illegible]
How I [illegible]
By [illegible]
Strou'd [illegible]
Cleo. O my Lord, my Lord
Forgi [illegible]
You [illegible]
Ant. [illegible]
My [illegible]
A [illegible]
That [illegible]
To [illegible]
Cleo. [illegible]
Ant. Now [illegible]
To [illegible] Trenches, dodge
And [illegible]
[illegible]
Make [illegible]
How [illegible]
That [illegible]
Do [illegible]
Ant. [illegible]
A [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Lose [illegible]
Wee [illegible]
Your [illegible]
Ant.

Ant. To him againe, tell him he weares the Rose
Of youth vpon him: from which, the world should note
Something particular: His Coate-Shippes, Legions,
May be a Coward, whose Minister would prevaile
Vnder the seruice of a Child, as soone
As't's Commander of Cæsar. I dare him therefore
To lay his gay Comparisons apart,
And answer me declin'd, Sword against Sword,
Our selues alone: Ile write it. Follow me.
Eno. Yes like enough, high-battel'd Cæsar will Vnstate his happinesse, and be Staged to'th'shew
Against a Sworder. I see mens Iudgements are
A parcell of their Fortunes, and things outward
Do draw the inward quality after them
To suffer all alike, that he should dreame,
Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will Answer his emptinesse; Cæsar thou hast subdu'de
His iudgement too.

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. A Messenger from Cæsar.
Cleo. What no more Ceremony? See my Women,
Against the blowne Rose may they stop their nose,
That kneel'd vnto the Buds. Admit him sir.
Eno. Mine eyes euen sympathize. If Cleopatra dead,
The Leuerty we lift do to his pride, does make
Our Faith meere folly: yet he that can endure
To follow with Allegeance a falne Lord,
Does conquer him that did his Master conquer,
And earnes a place i'th'Story.

Enter Thidias.

Cleo. Cæsars will.
Thid. Heare it apart.
Cleo. None but friends: say boldly.
Thid. So happy are they Friends to Anthony
Eno. He needs as many (Sir) as Cæsar has,
Or needs not vs. If Cæsar please, our Master
Will leape to be his Friend. For vs you know,
Whose heads, we are, and that is Cæsars.
Thid. So Thus then thou most renowned, Cæsar intreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st
Further then he is Cæsars.
Cleo. Go on, right Royall.
Thid. He knowes that you embrace not Anthony
As you did loue, but as you fear'd him.
Cleo. Oh.
Thid. The scarre's vpon your Honor, therefore he Does pitty, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserued.
Cleo. He is a God,
And knowes what is most right. Mine Honour
Was not yeelded, but conquer'd meerely.
Eno. To be sure of that, I will aske Anthony. [
Sir, sir, thou art so leakie
That we must leaue thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee. Exit Eno.
Thid. Shall I say to Cæsar,
What you require of him: for he partly begges
To be desir'd to giue. It much would please him,
That of his Fortunes you should make a staffe
To leane vpon. But it would warme his spirits
To heare from me you had left Anthony,
And put your selfe vnder his shrowd, the vniuersall Landlord.
Cleo. What's your name?
Thid. My name is Thidias.
Cleo. Most kinde Messenger,
Say to great Cæsar this in disputation,
I kisse his conquering hand. Tell him, I am prompt
To lay my Crowne at's feete, and there to kneele.
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath, I heare
The doome of Egypt.
Thid. 'Tis your Noblest course:
Wisedome and Fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Giue me grace to lay
My duties on your hand.
Cleo. Your Cæsars Father oft,
(When he hath mus'd of taking kingdomes in)
Bestow'd his lips on that vnworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses.

Enter Anthony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Fauours? By Ioue that thunders. What art thou Fellow?
Thid. One that but performes
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To haue command obeyed.
Eno. You will be whipt.
Ant. Approch there: ah you kite. Now Gods & diuels
Authority melts from me of late. When I cried hoa,
Like Boyes vnto a muse, hounds would start forth,
And cry your will. Haue you no eares?
I am Anthony yet. Take hence this Iack, and whip him.

Enter a Seruant.

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a Lions whelpe,
Then with an old one dying.
Ant. Moone and Starres,
Whip him. Were't twenty of the greatest Tributaries
That do acknowledge Cæsar, should I finde them
So sawcy with the hand of she here, what's her name
Since she was Cleopatra? Whip him Fellowes,
Till like a Boy you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Take him hence.
Thid. Marke Anthony.
Ant. Tug him away: being whipt
Bring him againe, the Iacke of Cæsars shall Beare vs an arrant to him. Exeunt with Thidias.
You were halfe blasted ere I knew you: Ha?
Haue I my pillow left vnpressed in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawfull Race,
And by a gem of women, to be abus'd
By one that lookes on Feeders?
Cleo. Good my Lord.
Ant. You haue been a boggeler euer,
But when we in our viciousnesse grow hard
(Oh misery on't) the wise Gods seele our eyes
In our owne filth, drop our cleare iudgements, make vs
Adore our errors, laugh at's while we strut
To our confusion.
Cleo. Oh, is't come to this?
Ant. I found you as a Morsell, cold vpon
Dead Cæsars Trencher: Nay, you were a Fragment
Of Gneius Pompeyes, besides what hotter houres
Vnregistred in vulgar Fame, you haue
Luxuriously pickt out. For I am sure,
Though you can guesse what Temperance should be,
You know not what it is.
Cleo. Wherefore is this?
Ant. To let a Fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you: be familiar with
My playfellow, your hand, this Kingly Seale,
And plighter of high hearts. O that I were
Vpon the hill of Basan to outroare
The horned Heard, for I haue sauage cause,
And to proclaime it ciuilly, were like

[illegible] necke who ludo's the Hangman thanke,
[illegible]
Enter a Servant to them.
[illegible] Sound, my Lord
[illegible]
[illegible] hence forth
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Exit Thid
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Nyle
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Lord

[illegible] Captaines to my Lord,
Ant. Do so wee speake to them,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Come on my Queene,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Each with his speedy Sword. Exeunt.
Ene. Now see you three Lightning, to be turned
To be behaved out of these and that mode
I tell thee wife peake of Kings and Emperors
And mutation in our Captaines straine,
Remember heart we have our praise to reason,
Unites the Sword it fights with, Lord make
Some way to cause on. Exeunt.

Enter Cæsar, Antony, Octavia with Army, Cæsar reading a Letter.

Cæs. Hees less me Pay [illegible] glad power
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

He shall not heare thee, or from Cæsars Campe,
Say I am none of thine.
Ant. What say'st thou?
Sold. Sir he is with Cæsar.
Eros. Sir, his Chests and Treasure he has not with him.
Ant. Is he gone?
Sol. Most certaine.
Ant. Go Eros, send his Treasure after, do it,
Detaine no iot I charge thee: write to him,
I will subscribe gentle adieu's and greetings,
Say, that I wish he never finde more cause
To change a Master. O my Fortunes have Corrupted honest men. Dispatch Enobarbus. Exit

Flourish. Enter Agrippa, Cæsar, with Enobarbus, and Dollabella.

Cæs. Go forth Agrippa, and begin the fight:
Our will is Antony be tooke alive:
Make it to knowne.
Agrip. Cæsar, I shall.
Cæs. The time of vniuersall peace is neere:
Proue this a prosp'rous day, the three nook'd world
Shall beare the Olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Anthony is come into the Field.
Cæs. Go charge Agrippa,
Plant those that haue reuolted in the Vant,
That Anthony may seeme to speed his fury
Vpon himselfe. Exeunt.
Enob. Antony did reuolt, and went to Iewry on Affaires of Antony, there did dissuade
Great Herod to incline himselfe to Cæsar,
And leaue his Master Antony: for this paines,
Cæsar hath hang'd him. Canidius and the rest
That fell away, haue entertainment, but
No honourable trust: I haue done ill,
Of which I do accuse my selfe so sorely
That I will ioy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Cæsars.

Sol. Enobarbus, Anthony
Hath after thee sent all thy Treasure, with
His Bounty ouer-plus. The Messenger
Came on my guard, and at thy Tent is now
Vnloading of his Mules.
Eno. I giue it you.
Sol. Mocke not Enobarbus,
I tell you true: Best you safe the bringer
Out of the hoast, I must attend mine office,
Or would haue done my selfe. Your Emperor
Continues still a Ioue. Exit
Eno. I am alone the Villaine of the earth,
And feele I am so most. O Anthony,
Thou Mine of Bounty, how would'st thou haue payed
My better seruice, when my turpitude
Thou dost so Crowne with Gold. This blowes my heart,
If swift thought breake it not, a swifter meane
Shall outstrike thought: but thinking will not do't. I feele
I fight against thee! No I will go seeke
Some Ditch, wherein to dye: the foulest best fits
My latter part of life. Exit.

Alarum. Drummes and Trumpets.

Enter Agrippa.

Agrip. Retire, we haue engag'd our selues too farre:
Cæsar himselfe has worke, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. Exit.

Alarums.

Enter Anthony, and Scarrus wounded.

Scar. O my braue Emperor, this is fought indeed,
Had we done so at first, we had droue them home
With clowts about their heads. Far off
Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.
Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.
Ant. They do retyre.
Scar. We'l beat 'em into Bench-holes, I haue yet
Roome for six scotches more.

Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten Sir, and our aduantage serues
For a faire victory.
Scar. Let vs score their backes,
And snatch 'em vp, as we take Hares behinde,
'Tis sport to maul a Runner.
Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.
Scar. Ile halt after. Exeunt

Alarum. Enter Anthony againe in a March. Scarrus, with others.

Ant. We haue beate him to his Campe: Runne one before, & let the Queen know of our guests: to morrow
before the Sunne shall see's, we'l spill the blood
That ha's to day escap'd. I thanke you all,
For doughty handed are you, and haue fought
Not as you seru'd the Cause, but as't had been
Each man like mine: you haue shewne all Hectors.
Enter the Citty, clip your Wiues, your Friends,
Tell them your feats, whil'st they with ioyfull teares
Wash the congealement from your wounds, and kisse
The Honour'd gashes whole.

Enter Cleopatra.

Giue me thy hand,
To this great Fairy, Ile commend thy acts,
Make her thankes bleed anew. Oh thou day o'th'world,
Chaine mine armed neck, leape thou, Attyre and all
Through proofe of Harnesse to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.
Cleo. Lord of Lords.
O infinite Vertue, comm'st thou smiling from
The worlds great snare vncaught.
Ant. My Nightingale,
We haue beate them to their Beds.
What Gyrle, though gray
Do something mingle with our younger brown, yet ha we
A Braine that nourishes our Nerues, and can
Get goale for goale of youth. Behold this man,
Commend vnto his Lippes thy fauouring hand,
Kisse it my Warriour: He hath fought to day,
As if a God in hate of Mankinde, had
Destroyed in such a shape.
Cleo. Ile giue thee Friend
An Armour all of Gold: it was a Kings.
Ant. He has deseru'd it, were it Carbunkled
Like holy Phœbus Carre. Giue me thy hand,
Through Alexandria make a iolly March,
Beare our hackt Targets, like the men that owe them.
Had our great Palace the capacity
To Campe this hoast, we all would sup together,
And drinke Carowses to the next dayes Fate

Which promises Royall peril. Trumpeters
With brazen dinne blast you the Cities eare,
Make mingle with our rattling Tabourines
That heauen and earth may strike their sounds together
Applauding our approach. Exeunt

Enter a Centery, and his Company, Enobarbus Followes

Cent. If we be not relieued within this houre,
We must returne to the Court of guard: the night
Is shiny, and they say we shall embattaile
By the second houre in the Morne
Watch. This last day was a shrewd one to vs.
Eno. O bear me witnesse night.
3 What man is this?
1 Stand close, and listen him.
Eno. Be witnesse to me O thou blessed Moone,
When men reuolted shake their Codes of Brother-hood
When men shall breake Lawe in their owne behalfe,
Call on thee fayre and true at all Markes,
And send thy shine through Hearts corrupted. Hearke,
Watch. O Soueraigne Mistris of true Melancholly,
The poyson of the garden finde it out,
Ere it embrace his life. Another speake.
Eno. O Soueraigne Mistris of true Melancholly,
The poyson of the garden finde it out,
Ere it embrace his life. Another speake.
2 Peace, Hearke further

The Soule and Body rise not more in parting,
Then greatest feare going off
Cæs. To'th Monument
Mardian go tell him we lament his fortune,
Say that the fact I spoke was Antonie,
And word it prythee, pregnantly: hence Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my death: to'th Monument.
Exeunt

Enter Anthony, and Eros.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?
Eros. I Noble Lord
Ant. Sometime we see a cloud that's Dragonish,
A vapour sometime, like a Beare or Lyon
A towred Citadell, a pendant Rocke,
A forked Mountaine or blew Promontorie
With Trees upon't that nodde unto the world,
And mocke our eyes with ayre.
Thou hast seene these Signes,
They are blacke Vespers Pageants.
Eros. I my Lord
Ant. That which is now a Horse even with a thought
The Racke dislimes, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water
Eros. It does my Lord
Ant. My good knave Eros, now thy Captaine is Even such a body: here I am Antony,
Yet cannot hold this visible shape (my knave)
I made these warres for Egypt, and the Queene,
Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine:
Which whilst it was mine, had annext unto't
A Million more (now lost) she Eros has
Packt Cards with Cæsar, and false-plaid my Glory
Vnto an Enemies triumph
Nay, weepe not gentle Eros, there is left vs
Our selves to end our selves.
Enter Mardian.
O thy vile Lady: she has robb'd me of my Sword.
Mar. No Antony,
My Mistris lov'd thee, and her Fortunes mingled
With thine entirely
Ant. Hence: horrible villaine, or Ile spurne thee hence:
Prythee away.
Mar. Not for the feare of death.
Ant. Hence horrible villaine, or Ile spurne thee hence,
And shall see me no more: away.
Mar. Death of one person, can be paid but once,
And that the worst gift Cæsar hath: he cannot do
Is done vnto thy hand: the last he spake
Was Antony, most Noble Antony
Then in the midst a teare dropt from his eye,
The name of Antony it was divided
Betweene her heart, and lips: she rendred life
Thy name so buried in her.
Ant. Dead then?
Mar. Dead.
Ant. Vnarme Eros, the long dayes task is done,
And we must sleepe. That thou depart'st hence safe
Does pay thy labour richly: Go. exit Mardian
Off pluck off,
The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keepe
The battery from my heart. O cleave my sides.
Heart, once be stronger than thy Continent,
Crack thy frayle Case. Apace Eros, apace
No more a Souldier: bruised pieces go,
You have been Nobly borne. From me awhile. exit Eros
I will o'retake thee Cleopatra, and
Weepe for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is Torture: since the Torch is out,
Lye downe and stray no further. Now all labour
Marres what it does: yea, very force entangles
Itselfe with strength: Seale then and all is done.
Eros! I come my Queene. Eros! Stay for me,
Where Soules do couch on Flowers, we hand in hand,
And with our sprightly Port make the Ghosts gaze:
Dido, and her Æneas shall want Troopes,
And all the haunt be ours. Come Eros, Eros

Enter Eros

Eros. What would my Lord?
Ant. Since Cleopatra dyed,
I have held in such honour, that the Gods
Detest my baseness. I, this day, with my Sword,
Quarried the World, and o're green Neptunes backe
With Ships, made Cities, condemned to facke
The Conge of a Woman, base Ne'r ennobled
Thus she who (even) by her death, our Caesarean
Hath Conquerour of my selfe. Thou art sworne Eros,
That when the exploits done and come, when now
Is come indeed. When I should see behinde me
The inevitable prosecution of disgrace and horror,
That on my command, thou then would'st do it to me.
Do't, the time is come. Thou strik'st not me,
'Tis Cæsar thou defeat'st. Put colour in thy Cheeke.
Eros. The Gods with-hold me,
Shall I do that, which all the Parthian Darts,
(Though enemy) lost aym, and could not.
Ant. Eros,
Wilt thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy Master thus with pleach'd Armes, bending downe
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'de
To penetrative shame, whilst the wheel'd Seate
Of fortunate Cæsar, drawne before him, branded
His baseness that ensued?
Eros. I would not see't.
Ant. Come then: for with a wound I must be cur'd.
Draw that thy honest Sword, which thou hast worne
Most use-full for thy Country.
Eros. O sir, pardon me
Ant. When I did make thee free, sworst thy not then
To do't when I bad thee? Do't at once,
Or thy precedent Services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.
Eros. Turne from me then that Noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.
Ant. Lo thee
Eros. My hand is Lawfull.
Ant. Let it do at once
The thing why thou hast sworne to do.
Eros. My deere Master,
My Captaine, and my Emperor: Let me say
Before I strike this bloody stroke, Farewell.
Ant. 'Tis said man: and farewell.
Eros. Farewell great Chiefe. Shall I strike now?
Ant. Now Eros. Kills himselfe.
Eros. Why there then.
Thus I do escape the sorrow of Antonies death.
Ant. Thrice-Nobler than my selfe!
Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what
I should, and thou could'st not: my Queene and Eros
Have by their brave instruction got vp on me
A Nobleness in Record: But I will be
A Bridegroome in my death, and run into't
As to a Lovers bed. Come then, and Eros,
Thy Master dies thy Scholler: to do thus
I learnt of thee. How, not dead? Not dead?
The Guard, how? O dispatch me.

Enter

Enter a Guard.

1. Guard. What's the noise?

Ant. I haue done my worke ill Friends:
Oh make an end of what I haue begun.

2 The Starre is falne.

1 And time is at his Period.

All. Alas, and woe

Ant. Let him that loues me, strike me dead.

1 Not I

2 Nor I

3 Nor any one. exeunt

Dercetus. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly
This sword but shewne to Cæsar with this tydings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Where's Anthony?

Derce. There Diomed there.

Diom. Lines he: wilt thou not answer man?

Ant. Art thou there Diomed?
Draw thy sword, and giue mee,
Sufflising strokes for death.

Diom. Most absolute Lord
My Mistris Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did shee send thee?

Diom. Now my Lord.

Anth. Where is she? (feare

Diom. Locks in her Monument: she had a Prophesying
Of what hath come to passe: for when she saw
(Which neuer shall be found) you did suspect
She had dispos'd with Cæsar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead:
But fearing since how it might worke, hath sent
Me to proclaime the truth, and I am come
I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late good Diomed: call my Guard I prythee.

Dio. What hoa: the Emperors Guard,
The Guard, what hoa? Come, your Lord calles.

Enter 4. or 5. of the Guard of Anthony.

Ant. Beare me good Friends where Cleopatra bides,
'Tis the last seruice that I shall command you.

1 Woe, woe are we sir, you may not liue to weare
All your true Followers out.

All. Most heauy day.

Ant. Nay good my Fellowes, do not please sharp fate
To grace it with your sorrowes. Bid that welcome
Which comes to punish vs, and we punish it
Seeming to beare it lightly. Take me vp.
I haue led you oft, carry me now good Friends,
And haue my thankes for all. Exit bearing Anthony

Enter Cleopatra, and her Maides aloft, with Charmian & Iras.

Cleo. Oh Charmian, I will neuer go from hence

Char. Be comforted deere Madam.

Cleo. No, I will not:
All strange and terrible euents are welcome,
But comforts we dispise; our size of sorrow
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
As that which makes it.

Enter Diomed

How now? is he dead?

Diom. His death's vpon him, but not dead.
Looke out o'th other side your Monument,
His Guard haue brought him thither

Enter Anthony, and the Guard.

Cleo. Oh Sunne,
Burne the great Sphere thou mou'st in, darkling stand
The varrying shore o'th'world. O Antony, Antony, Antony
Helpe Charmian, helpe Iras helpe: helpe Friends
Below, let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace,
Not Cæsars Valour hath o'erthrowne Anthony,
But Anthonie's hath Triumpht on it selfe.

Cleo. So it should be,
That none but Anthony should conquer Anthony,
But woe 'tis so.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying; onely.
I heere importune death a-while, vntill
Of many thousand kisses, the poore last
I lay vpon thy lippes.

Cleo. I dare not Deere,
Deere my Lord pardon: I dare not.
Least I be taken: not th'Imperious shew
Of the full-Fortun'd Cæsar, euer shall
Be brooch'd with me, if Knife, Drugges, Serpents haue
Edge, sting, or operation. I am fate:
Your Wife Octauia, with her modest eyes,
And still Conclusion, shall acquire no Honour
Demuring vpon me. but come, come Anthony,
Helpe me my women, we must draw thee vp
Assist good Friends.

Ant. Oh quicke or I am gone.

Cleo. Heere's sport indeede.
How heauy weighes my Lord?
Our strength is all gone into heauinesse,
That makes the weight. Had I great Iuno's power,
The strong wing'd Mercury should fetch thee vp,
And set thee by Ioues side. Yet come a little,
Wishers were euer Fooles. Oh come, come, come,

They heaue Anthony aloft to Cleopatra.

And welcome, welcome. Dye where thou hast liu'd,
Quicken with kissing: had my lippes that power,
Thus would I weare them out.

All. A heauy sight.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying.
Giue me some Wine, and let me speake a little.

Cleo. No, let me speake, and let me rayle so hye,
That the false Huswife Fortune, breake her Wheele,
Prouok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word (sweet Queene)
Of Cæsar seeke your Honour, with your safety. Oh.

Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant. Gentle heare me,
None about Cæsar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My Reuolation, and my hands, Ile trust,
None about Cæsar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at: but please your thoughts
In feeding them with those my former Fortunes
Wherein I liued. The greatest Prince o'th'world,
The Noblest: and do now not basely dye,
Not Cowardly put off my Helmet to
My Countreyman. A Roman, by a Roman
Valiantly vanquish'd. Now my Spirit is going,
I can no more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't dye?
Hast thou no care of me, shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is
No better then a Stye? Oh see my women:
The Crowne o'th earth doth melt. My Lord?
Oh wither'd is the Garland of the Warre,

The Souldiers pole is falne: young Boyes and Gyrles
Are leuell now with men: The oddes is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkeable
Beneath the visiting Moone
Char. Oh quicke elfe, Lady.
Iras. She's dead too, our Soueraigne
Char. Lady.
Iras. Madam.
Char. O Madam, Madam Madam.
Iras. Royall Egypt, Empreſſe
Char. Peace, peace, Iras
Cleo. No more but in a Woman, and commanded
By ſuch poore paſſion, as the Maid that Milkes,
And does the meaneſt chares. It were for me,
To throw my Scepter at the iniurious Gods,
To tell them that this World did equall theirs,
Till they had ſtolne our Iewell. All's but naught
Patience is ſottiſh, and impatience does
Become a Dogge that's mad: Then is it time,
To ſmile at the ſcorne of Fate, when it moſt ſtrikes,
And death is neereſt. How do you Women?
What, what good cheere? Why how now Charmian?
My Noble Gyrles? Ah Women, women, Looke
Our Lampe is ſpent, it's out. Good Sirs, take heart,
Wee'l burie him. And then, what's braue, what's Noble,
Let's doo't after the high Roman faſhion,
And make death proud to take vs. Come, away,
This caſe of that huge Spirit now is cold
Ah Women, Women! Come, we haue no Friend
But Reſolution, and the breefeſt end.
Exeunt, bearing off Anthonies body.

Enter Cæſar, Agrippa, Dollabella, Mecenas with his Companie of Warre.

Cæſar. Go to him Dollabella, bid him yeeld,
Being ſo fruſtrate, tell him,
He mockes the pawſes that he makes
Dol. Cæſar, I ſhall.
Enter Decretas with the ſword of Anthony
Cæſ. Wherefore is that? And what art thou that dar'ſt
Appeare thus to vs?
Dec. I am meſſenger of Decretas,
Marke Anthony I ſerued who beſt was worthie
Beſt to be ſerued: whileſt he ſtood vp and ſpoke
He was my Maſter, and I wore my life
To ſpend vpon his haters. If thou pleaſe
To take me to thee, as I was to him,
Ile be to Cæſar: if thou pleaſe not,
I yeeld thee vp my life.
Cæſar. What is't thou ſay'ſt?
Dec. I ſay, O Cæſar, Antonie is dead
Cæſar The breaking of ſo great a thing, ſhould make
A greater cracke. The round World
Should haue ſhooke Lyons into ciuill ſtreets,
And Citizens to their dennes. The death of Anthony
Is part of this world: but it ſtrange day
Nor the nature of the world
Dec. He is dead Cæſar,
Not by a publique Miniſter of Iuſtice,
Nor by a power knowne: but by that fierce hand
Which wrought with his Honour in the Acts it did,
Hath with the Courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart. This is his Sword,
I robb'd his wound of it: behold it ſtain'd
With his moſt Noble blood.
Cæſ. Looke you ſad friends,
The Gods rebuke me, but it is Tydings
To waſh the eyes of Kings.
Dol. And ſtrange it is,
That Nature muſt compell vs to lament
Our moſt perſiſted deeds.
Mec. His taints and Honours, wag'd equall with him
Eno. A Rarer ſpirit never
Did ſteere humanity: but you Gods will giue vs
Some faults to make vs men. Cæſar is touched.
Mec. When ſuch a ſpacious Mirror's ſet before him,
He needes muſt ſee himſelfe.
Cæſar. O Anthony,
I haue followed thee to this, but we do launch
Diſeaſes in our Bodies. I muſt perforce
Haue ſhewne to thee ſuch a declining day,
Or looke on thine: we could not ſtall together,
In the whole world. But yet let me lament
With teares as Soueraigne as the blood of hearts,
That thou my Brother, my Competitor,
In top of all deſigne; my Mate in Empire,
Friend and Companion in the front of Warre,
The Arme of mine owne Body, and the Heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle; that our Starres
Vnreconciliable, ſhould diuide our equalneſſe to this.
Heare me good Friends,
But I will tell you at ſome meeter Season,
The buſineſſe of this man lookes out of him.
We'l heare him what he ſayes
Enter an Ægyptian.
Whence are you?
Ægyp. A poore Egyptian yet, the Queen my miſtris
Confin'd in all ſhe has, her Monument
Of prayers, feares, griefe, doubts,
That ſhe preparedly may frame her ſelfe
To'th way ſhe's forc'd to.
Cæſar. Bid her haue good heart,
She ſhall know of vs, by ſome of ours,
How honourable, how kindly, Wee
Determine for her. For Cæſar cannot leaue to be vngentle
Ægyp. So the Gods preſerue thee. Exit.
Cæſ. Come hither Proculeius. Go and ſay
We purpoſe her no ſhame: giue her what comforts
The quality of her paſſion ſhall require,
Leaſt in her greatneſſe, by ſome mortall ſtroke
She do defeate vs. For her death in Rome,
Would be eternall in our Triumph. Go,
And with your ſpeecheſt'ſt bring vs what ſhe ſayes,
And how you finde of her.
Pro. Cæſar I ſhall. Exit Proculeius.
Cæſ Gallus go you along. Where's Dolabella, to ſecond Proculeius?
All. Dolabella.
Cæſ. Let him alone: for I remember now
How he's imployd: he ſhall in time be ready.
Go with me to my Tent, where you ſhall ſee
How hardly I was drawne into this Warre.
How calme and gentle I proceeded ſtill
In all my Writings. Go with me, and ſee
What I can ſhew in this. Exeunt

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian

Cleo. My deſolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis paltry to be Cæſar
Not being Fortune, he's but Fortunes knaue,
A miniſter of her will. And it is great

To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shames ates accidents, and blurs vp change;
Wiues sleepes, and neuer palates more the dung,
The beggers Nurse, and Cæsars.

Enter Proculeius.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the Queene of Egypt,
And words to make true vertue what faire meanes
From meanes'd to haue vs grant thee
Cleo. What's thy name?
Pro. My name is Proculeius.
Cleo. Anthony
Did tell me of you, bad me trust you, but
I doe not greatly care to be deceiu'd
That haue no vse for trusting. If your Master
Would haue a Queene his Beggar, you must tell him,
That Maiesty to keepe decorum, must
No lesse beggre things then Kingdomes: Pleasure
To giue me conquer'd Egypt for my Sonne,
He gaues me so not what I owe
Would willingly haue in my gift.
Pro. Be of good cheere:
You're fallen into a Princely hand, feare nothing,
Make your full reference freely to my Lord,
Who is so full of Grace, that it flowes ouer
On all that needes: Let me report to him
Your sweet dependancie, and you shall find
A Conqueror that will pray in aydes for kindnesse,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.
Cleo. Pray you tell him,
I am his fortunes Vassall, and send him
The Greatnesse he has got. I hourely learne
A Doctrine of obedience, and would gladly
Looke him i'th' face.
Pro. This I'le report (deere Lady)
Haue comfort, for I know your plight is pittied
Of him that caus'd it.
Pro. You see how easily she may be surpriz'd.
Guard her till Cæsar come.
Iras. Royall Queene.
Char. O Cleopatra, thou art taken Queene.
Cleo. Quicke, quicke, good hands.
Pro. Do not your selfe such wrong, who are in this
Releeu'd, but not betraid.
Cleo. What of death too that rids our dogs of languish
Pro. Cleopatra, do not abuse my Masters bounty, by Th'vndoing of your selfe: Let the World see
His Nobleneſſe well acted, which your death
Will neuer let come forth.
Cleo. Where art thou Death?
Come hither come; Come, come, and take a Queene
Worth many Babes and Beggers.
Pro. O temperate Lady.
Cleo. Sir, I will eate no meate, Ile not drinke sir,
If idle talke will once be necessary
Ile not sleepe neither. This mortall house Ile ruine,
Do Cæsar what he can. Know sir, that I
Will not waite pinnion'd at your Masters Court,
Nor once be chastiz'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octauia. Shall they hoyst me vp,
And shew me to the shouting Varletarie
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt.
Be gentle graue vnto me, rather on Nylus mudde
Lay me starke-nak'd, and let the water-Flies
Blow me into abhorring; rather make
My Countries high pyramides my Gibbet,
And hang me vp in Chaines
Pro. You do extend
These thoughts of horror further then you shall Finde cause in Cæsar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done thy Master Cæsar knowes,
And he hath sent for thee: for the Queene,
Ile take her to my Guard.
Pro. So Dolabella,
It shall content me best. Be gentle to her,
To Cæsar will speake, what you shall please,
If you imploy me to him. Exit Proculeius.
Cleo. Say I would dye.
Dol. Most Noble Empresse, you haue heard of me.
Cleo. I cannot tell.
Dol. Assuredly, you know me.
Cleo. No matter sir, what I haue heard or knowne.
You laugh when boyes or Women tell their Dreames,
Is't not your trade?
Dol. I vnderstand not, Madam.
Cleo. I meane I had rather see you smile then know
Our selfe to be so lightly tempted, and
Burne in your thought, mad.
Dol. If it might please ye.
Cleo. His face was as the Heau'ns, and therein stucke
A Sunne and Moone, which kept their course, & lighted
The little O'th' Earth.
Dol. Most Soueraigne Creature.
Cleo. His legges bestrid the Ocean: his rear'd arme
Crested the world. His voyce was propertied
As all the tuned Spheres, and that to friends:
But when he meant to quaile, and shake the Orbe,
He was as rattling Thunder. For his Bounty,
There was no winter in't. An Anthony it was,
That grew the more by reaping: His delights
Were Dolphin like, they shew'd his backe aboue
The Element they liu'd in. In his Liuery
Walkt Crowners and Crownets: Realmes & Ilands were
As plates dropt from his pocket.
Dol. Cleopatra.
Cleo. Thinke you there was, or might be such a man
As this I dreampt of?
Dol. Gentle Madam, no.
Cleo. You Lye vp to the hearing of the Gods:
But if there be, nor euer were one such
It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuffe
To vie strange formes with fancie, yet to imagine
An Anthony were Natures peece, 'gainst fancie,
Condemning shadowes quite.
Dol. Heare me, good Madam:
Your losse is as your selfe, great: and you beare it
As answering to the weight, would I might neuer
Ore-take pursu'de successe: But I do feele
By the rebound of yours, a grace sincere
My very heart at roote
Cleo. I thanke you sir.
Know you what Cæsar meanes to do with me?
Dol. I am loth to tell you what I would you knew.
Cleo. Nay pray you sir.
Dol. Though he be Honourable.
Cleo. He'le lead me then in Triumph.
Dol. Madam he will, I know't. Flourish.
Enter Proculeius, Cæsar, Gallus, Maecenas,
and others of his Traine.
All. Make way there Cæsar.

Or I [illegible] Cæsar's eyes
Thought [illegible] Were there a man,
[illegible]
[illegible], I'd be [illegible]
[illegible] I know [illegible] are mightiest
For [illegible] that [illegible] and when we fall,
We [illegible] name
And [illegible]
[illegible]
Now [illegible] could not what acknowledg'd
[illegible] Rome Conquer'd [illegible] bee yours,
[illegible]
[illegible] Martha [illegible]
[illegible] Mee [illegible] The [illegible] cheer'd,
Make [illegible] your [illegible] Neece Queen,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Our [illegible]
That we [illegible]
[illegible] Mee Mad[illegible], Lord.
[illegible] Honorio.
[illegible] and Irene.
Cleo. How [illegible] Cæsar [illegible]
[illegible] Notorylate.
[illegible]
[illegible], [illegible], [illegible] bright day is done,
And [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] ahead, and [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible], will,
Enter Dolabella
Dol. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] your command
[illegible]
[illegible] never yet,
[illegible] before,
[illegible], I have [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] your debter.
[illegible]
[illegible] Cæsar. Exit
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] shewne
[illegible]
[illegible] Heroes shall
[illegible]
[illegible] wed,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Iras fawcie Lictors
[illegible]
[illegible]
Extemporall [illegible]
Our Alexandrian Revels: Anthony
[illegible] and I shall see
Some [illegible]
[illegible]
Iras. O the good Gods!
Cleo. Nay [illegible]
[illegible] I never see: But I am sure my Nailes
Are stronger then mine eyes.

Cleo.

Cleo. W[illegible] the way to foole their preparation,
And to conquer their most abus'd intents.

Enter Charmian.

Now Charmian.
Shew me my Women like a Queene: Go to
My best Attyre; I am againe for Cydnus,
To meete [illegible]
(Now [illegible]
And when [illegible]
[illegible]

W[illegible]

Enter Clowne.

[illegible]
The [illegible]
Hee'l [illegible]
Cleo. Let him come in. [illegible]
What poore an Instrument
May do a noble deede: he brings me Liberty.
My Resolution's plac'd, and I have Nothing of feare in me. [illegible]
Is Antonie dead?
[illegible]
Cha. O Sir, Sir,
Cleo. A [illegible]
Haue [illegible]
The [illegible]
Cha. [illegible] but [illegible]
[illegible] of [illegible] to [illegible]
[illegible] power.
Cleo. Remember (thou) yet hast bodyed eares?
Cha. Very many: Madam, to [illegible] of [illegible] they [illegible] a very poore one.
[illegible]
[illegible]
Cleo. Farewell.
Cha. I haue you a joy: the Worme.
Cleo. I prethee
Cha. Yet [illegible] you,' make
Worme will [illegible]
Cleo. I prethee
Cha. Your [illegible] the Worme is not to be [illegible], but [illegible] to [illegible] there is no [illegible] the Worme
Cleo. Take [illegible]
Cha. Very [illegible]
Cleo. Will [illegible]
Cha. Your [illegible] Law [illegible], you have [illegible] new [illegible] Woman [illegible], [illegible] her not Beleeve, [illegible] their [illegible], [illegible]
[illegible] their [illegible], [illegible]
make [illegible]
Cleo. Well, [illegible] gone, farewell.
Cha. Yes, [illegible] I will [illegible] worme. Exit
Cleo. Give me my Robe, put on my Crowne, I have Immortall [illegible] in me. Now no more
The [illegible], Charmian shall [illegible]
Haue [illegible] Now [illegible] Mee [illegible]

Anthony [illegible]
[illegible] my Noble Act. I feare
I [illegible] Cæsar, when [illegible]
To [illegible] the [illegible], He [illegible]
Now [illegible]
I [illegible],
[illegible]
Charmian, I [illegible]
[illegible]
Haue [illegible]
[illegible], Now [illegible]
The [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
O [illegible] Exit
[illegible]
[illegible]
Now [illegible]
A [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Crowne-way,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Dol. [illegible] you ſtare vpon a Augurer!
That [illegible]
[illegible],
[illegible],
[illegible],
[illegible],
That was my Barber.
[illegible] Pompeyes
[illegible] Ouerdone
This Charmer [illegible] ſhe

In her ſtrong toyle of Grace.

Dol. Heere on her breſt,
There is a vent of Blood, and ſomething blowne,
The like is on her Arme.
[illegible] Aſpickes trace,
Applyed cleaues haue ſlime vpon them, ſuch
As the Aire [illegible] vpon the Caues of Nyle.
Cæſ. Moſt probable
That ſo ſhe dyed; for her Phyſitian tells mee
[illegible] ſhe hath purſu'de Conclusions infinite
[illegible] to dye. Take vp her bed
And [illegible] Women from the Monument,
[illegible] be buried by her Anthony,
No Graue vpon the earth ſhall clip in it
A payre ſo famous. High euents as theſe
[illegible] thoſe that make them: and their Story is
[illegible], ſhall [illegible] Glory weepe
Braſt [illegible] to be lamented. Our Army ſhall

And [illegible] Rome. Cæſar Lentulus [illegible]
[illegible] Ouer, and this great Solemnity Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF CYMBELINE.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Our poorest Subiects
Our Gentlemen
Our Lords
And Subiects
2 Gent. Beyond Sea.
1 Gent. But I pray you, what's the reason
Why the King his Daughter
That late married against
Your pleasure, but rather
Her Husband banished
Her Father
Is out-ward
Be such dat very heart.
2 Nay but the King
1 He that hath offended the Queene,
That most offended the Maiesty. Before a Creature,
Although they wear their faces to the ayre
Of the King, looke as if he heard that set
Glad at the thing they frowle at.
2 And why so?
1 He that hath misus'd the Princesse, is thing
Too bad, for bad report: and he that hath her,
(I meane, that married her, alacke good man,
And therefore banish'd, is a Creature, such,
As to seeke through the regions of the Earth
For one, his like, there would be something failing
In him, that should compare. I do not thinke,
So fayre an Outward, and such stuffe within
Endowes a man, but he.
2 You speake him fayre
1 I do extend him (Sir) within himselfe,
Crush him together, rather then vntold
His measure duly.
2 What's his name, and Birth?
1 I cannot delate him to the roote. His Father
Was call'd Sicilius, who did ioyne his Honor
Against the Romanes, with Cassibulan,
But had his Titles by Tenantius, whom
He serued with Glory and admir'd Successe
So gain'd the Sur-addition Leonatus
And had (besides this Gentleman in question)
Two other Sonnes, who in the Warres o'th time
Dy'de with their Swords in hand. For which, their Father
Then old, and fond of yssue, tooke such sorrow
That he quit being: and his gentle Lady
Big of this Gentleman our Theame: deceast
As he was borne. The King he takes the Babe
To his protection, calls him Posthumus Leonatus,
Breeds him, and makes him of his Bed-chamber,
Puts to him all the Learnings that his time
Could make him the receiuer of, which he tooke
As we do Ayre, fast as 'tis ministred,
And in Spring became a harvest: Liu'd in Court
(Which rare it is to do) most prais'd, most lou'd,
A sample to the youngest: to the more Mature,
A glasse that feated them: and to the Graue
An eare-full. What hee can well do, is well worth the hearing,
For you must know, the Emperor accounts him
His Seruant.
2 You speake him properly.
1 His meane Mariage
Do's more then breed suspition.
2 What's his name?
1 Is it fit I speake it, being done: and to none
To whom it is spoke in time, which will be
Since it is done, not yet.
2 Is it a Mayd?
1 Verily I speake it in the freedome of my knowledge:
It is a Mayd.
2 If it be sinne to say so, I yoake mine Oxe
As soone as I engage it.
1 Before well thought on.
The two young Apprehenders were about the Businesse,
Hauing knowledge of the Mariage, and
Watch to marke when Fauour finish'd.
2 Is it true?
1 Most true, if euer truth were pregnant by circumstance.
But that you shall not want, some will say.

Enter two Ladies.

1 How? how? your Mistris.
Enioy her honor'd Spirit.
2 And with her leaue, so doe I.
1 Good dames, bright eyes, we met the Court well.
2 But that the Beautious Imogen is sad,
My Husband's Mistris.
1 Madame, know you not
The Riches of the Spirit of Leonatus?
2 Yes, but better, if you please to tell.
1 Only this (let the rest go)
2 All of his Wealth.
1 That he enchants Societies into him,
Halfe all mens hearts to take, or leaue his part.
2 Why men and women
1 Cannot but part with part of their wits, than
Their loues, at first sight: they are rather frighted
Than in loue, that may sweare, they are made worse:
And not the best of their good Lookes, their Finenesse,
Their Clothes are left worse. But not to heape
Feathers vpon Swallowes, or Ice vpon Seas,
Or Odours amongst Roses, or Waters in the Ocean,
More then in him I heare (which is indeed
Almost beyond beleefe) of great and good
If linked to what is fame, goes to vnderstood.
How comes it all heapes vp to perfection?
Vpon what Meanders of the Sea, Ouer-peering
What Rocke, the Tributary of what Vertue
Which workes with him?
2 Both Male and Female.
1 You haue me, you haue me.
2 Your Husband's his Companion.
1 He deserues such Blessings,
As euer Father yet saw: some speed to heare
How I speake of him.
2 It may be griefe to her.
1 Hearing of him much.
2 Allow my Husband, less than a publike Moone.
1 Then you haue an vnder-taking.
2 Faith not much.
1 Good Madame, pardon me.
2 Do you meane it?
1 I know not how it tooke her,
But it did seeme to shake her.
2 Sir, as I told you alwayes, her Sorrow is
Her owne Companion, and Space enough
Betweene her and her Ayre.
1 Pray leaue her alone.
2 Sir, she alone should presse her selfe, and shee shall:
A Mile or two hence.
1 I pray you do, we'll speake
More of her soone.
2 Come your way.
1 Whensoeuer
You haue cause to thinke on any part of this Businesse,
Thinke on me.
2 Euery day.
1 Not as a Doctor may thinke by his Patient's Symptomes,
Nor as a Louer thinke by the Paine he sees
Confin'd from the Beloued, nor as a Friend
Vsing his Freedome, nor as the Sicke vse
Effects of their Fantasie, nor as Women vse
To Feares created, when not Feares are due:
Beleeue it.
2 Will you walke not with vs?
1 Madame, my Businesse is not to the purpose.
I take my Leaue of you.
2 Good Sir, you apprehend him well.
1 Attend the Queene, and Princesse.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Queene, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Qu. No be assur'd you shall not finde me (Daughter)
After the slander of most Step-Mothers,
Euill-eyed vnto you: You're my Prisoner, but
Your Gaoler shall deliuer you the keyes

Qu. Pray walke a while.

Lord. Let's see the Boy at Tennis.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Cymbeline, Lords, Pisanio, Queene, Cloten, Lucius, Lords, Gentlemen, Guard.

Cym. Now say what would Augustus Lucius with us?

Luc. This Princes, the requiring of your Queene
Hath thus commanded.

2 Now say what tribute of late pay'd it to him?

Cym. You must know,
Till the injurious Romans did extort
This tribute from us, we were free: Cæsars Ambition
Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch
The sides o'th' World, against all colour here
Did put the yoke upon's, which to shake off
Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
Our selves to be.

2 Know you the reason on't?

Cym. Before we were subdued,
Our Kingdome stood alone for Tribute, and
Would so have kept for ever.

2 Then Britaine
Must be subdued again.

Cym. Not to be parted
With our old Liberty, gain'd and eas'd so long
That due to us, as Earth to the Center.

2 Your Highnesse
Knowing the mortall'st of this Action: Note
The dangers, which incurre by not complying:
Perhaps, he hath
Some mutiny at home, to check him here
And make him faint abroad.

Queene. Remember sir,
My Liege, the Britaines hold their Libertie
Above their Lives. And I doubt not, you
Will stir up your Subjects, to a spirit
Of Honour and Courage equall to Your Progenitors.

Cym. Lucius, I am sorry
That this effect of mine intended love
Is counted Theame of Honour: But must not Change my Profession: My Kingdome stands on it
The Romans must have Tribute of us, so
Have we subscribed.

Luc. Then Warre is Royall.

Cym. Yes Lucius, with your King.

Luc. Then no more Tribute, Sir.

Cym. Our Scorne hath sworne it.

Luc. Let proud Augustus know,
What the Britaines will do: Scorne for Scorne,
And as they smile at Danger, when it comes,
When it is gone, they Scorne it: And Augustus
Shall know, that Britaine dreads not his Alliance,
More then his Warre.

Cym. Nor must his Friendship, Sir
Preserve him from our Anger: How warre prospers
We shall within this houre understand.

Luc. Then Iupiter, I spread my Complaint
On thy Lowd Eagle: Tell the Crabbed Bird
That Mars bestrides the Lazie Pacing Clouds,
And Dekes in Sweat, 'twixt his Stiffe Sinewes, fixing
Beneath his Shaking Helmet. Thus Augustus
Doth make his Entrance more easie: Prosperous
Be your Abode in Britaine, as the Mind
Of mighty Warre shall answer.

Cym. Thus farre with Honour.

Luc. Farewell Great King,
Till Warre have blunted his taste of our Swords,
And Noyse so parted.

Cym. Stay Lucius with the Queene.

Luc. Sir, that I will.

Cym. Come with my Sister, you
Our Wars are blamelesse, but our hands are Cruell.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Iachimo, Posthumus, Philario, Frenchmen, Dutchmen, Spaniards.

Iach. Believe it Sir, I have seene him in Britaine:
And he was then accounted for your Rich
And unparagon'd Mistris is dead, and I am
Advis'd to give her Sorrow a Sleepe,
That it may waken longer then the Widowes
That have mourn'd for last Husbands.

Iach. Will you hear more?

Post. Spare your Arithmetick, never count the Turnes:
Once, and a Million.

Iach. I shall but deceive you longer:
And the Businesse I have spoke of, is
Not a Commodity for every Dealer,
Nor Customer for every Price.

Post. Sir, I commend you well.

Iach. But you have heard the Story elsewhere: His Father
Being I can say, almost Bankrupt in Legacies,
Besides what he hath spent in Warres, can lay
But weake Injunctions: Which he hath now Commanded
Shall be executed Doubly: Halfe to me,
Halfe to his Friend.

Post. I do not envie his Fortunes,
Nor anything belonging to him: He best can
Limit the Gentlenesse of his Kindnesse: He is a Man
I know not how much more, then he himself
Can well report of: As little as a Man's Modesty
Can speake him: And his Pleasures, to boot, as great
As do become a Man: Touching the Weight
Of his Other Graces, let them speake of them
That know them better.

Iach. His Stay in France can make him better known:
Or that Crosse Starres, that raigne at his Nativity
Perform'd that Office too.

Post. He had the Dregges
Of a Cold Disposition to Temperance.

Iach. Sir, he spent Practise more to the Swift Delights of a Horse, then Grounds for Science, for the Idle Spending of Time, then any Proofe of Capacity.

Post. I wish no better, then have him hold that Purpose, and succeed in't.

Iach. Will you continue Belou'd Sir, in the good Opinion of the Lady?

Post. She holds me worthy.

Iach. Will you hold her worthy Sir, that is worthy to hold you?

Post. Sir, you extend my Action.

Iach. Then Sir, you hold part with the Queene.

Post. Sir, I hold my Mistris as I cherish my Honour, without Comparison.

Iach. Sir, the Loue of Wife and Husband, is not like this: That may loose it selfe by Disunion: One may Ride behinde another: One may Weare a Feather, another Weare the Horse that beares it: One may Keepe the Doore, another Enter: One may be Glad, another Sad: And the Indifferent Children of one Pye, Loaf, or Dish, may Quarrell: But the Neere Bond of Man and Wife, Sir, is Vnsensible, like the Sister Vnities, and cannot fall Asunder without Dismembring.

Color Patch

to extend him, be it but to fortifie her judgement, which else an easie battery might lay flat, for taking a Begger without less quality. But how comes it, all's well that ends well yet, Still the fine's the crowne: Whose praise?

Post. Not her's that laies vp her prayse, Not to let speech runne before her Modestie, or make her blush at the description of that which shee hath done, beeing like our Statues, purer and more weighty then our Coine, which were they not grac'd by the Princes stamp, would but counterfeit Lead guilded, and passe for what they are not, but for what they seeme, which shall be ever to me, as the Inscription of Caesars Superscription, Tribute I owe it, and pay it, Custome bids me, and by her selfe I am well assur'd to pay what I owe.

Iach. What lace of her Chastitie could he haue, to bring him thus to talke of it?

Post. Me thinkes I see him now.

Iach. I, so you doe, and taste his Tongue with the tincture of Seas and Countries: Based on the Testimonie of your owne sight, (I must thinke) a Sharpe appetite, Loyalty, and Affection, all chain'd, all bonded, may coupe with Men of any Clymate, and Complexion, and digest what it findes there. But put the case that she would direct her obedience to this mans Honour, or that this Gentleman would breake his Faith to his Master, for the worke, and the place which you and I know of, where could he finde a Purer Woman?

Post. Still close, as sure as Heauen holds a quire out of wicked Spirits.

Iach. You make my all of the Diuell, though he do the right note to the Hower of the Clocke. Is she not a Faire Creature?

Post. Faire to looke vpon, the best Coniunction, the Moone and Starres, to speake truely, she growes with.

Iach. Why should I write this to you, vnlesse you were the Grasse that should feed my Horse, that I might nimbly and speedily turne him to my purpose? Cannot a neate Seruice, a quicke Obedience, your owne Affaires, still worke you in mine? Or the like, the loue you beare to the Partie you worke for, binde you to my turne? I feare not.

Post. Before I take Commission with you, I beseech you informe me, what is the instruction? for then I know what the businesse is, what the losse is, what the hinderance, what the hazard is of this taske? Say your mind to my Vnderstanding.

Iach. Well then, there is one in Britaine, who I serued before his Exile, his Mistris hath her Picture; is of her Beautie a Parragon, but of her Feature, she hath that which well naturde, may make vnboly Theeuery no Sinne to looke on: Gods blessing on his Face, if he neuer see it more than I haue done, which hauing bin view'd with a iudicious eye, is the Treasure of her Frame, she has one more rich.

Post. Well, you haue this her Face, the Mole vnder her left Pap to friend it withall.

Iach. Will you hearken further?

Post. Your Ring may be stolne too, so your braue Mistris liuery: Close your quarrell in it with the Gentleman that owes it: If I make my wager rather against your confidence, than her reputation: And to bate you an aduantage, I doubt not of your good knowledge, either to keepe or gaine me my Ring, I hold it as your voluntarie Motion, and not my Deseruing.

Post. Why, I can but deliuer you what she has giuen me, and suppose her ability and my Diligence will not be wanting, whereupon I will in her name, pray her to accept your loue, which else would grow cold and sterue with griefe.

Iach. This is her Honour? Let me request from you a Token, that I may speake of her truely? My Ring I hold deare as my finger, 'tis part of it.

Post. You may speake of her as well as I can, for I am much more obliged to her Honour than you can imagine.

Iach. But my Ring, let me haue some signe of it to enforce the speech of your Perswasion.

Post. Well, I haue not cost it you, for your Ring I will haue none of it.

Iach. Why, you are too curious, good Sir, to lay on my Trifle, and you are full sorrie you haue bid me returne so much, mistaking the worth of your Gift: Perchance you are sorrie you haue rayl'd so infinitely at me, but your Gentlenesse (I see) is yet vnwounded, for your better defence, you will take your Ring againe, and not offer it to him that did but call him Villaine: For which twenty times I take my leaue of you.

Post. Yours by the Gods.

Iach. Do not swear by them vnworthily: For I am sorrie I haue giuen occasion to you to doubt that I haue done any thing but what hath appeared Noble to me: If you shall please to thinke me worthie of an Honourable Trust, vse it freely, you are as well acquainted as any Man I know, with your owne Estimation, and my Report shall goe no further than you shall please: You shall no sooner command, than I will doe: I doubt not but you will finde me readie: And now vpon my Faith and Honour, adieu.

Post. Will you? I shall but lend my Diamond till my Ring can come to you: Time, I hope, will not grow slacke.

Iach. Nay, you may take it againe when you please for that.

Post. Will my Lord say so?

Iach. I, and write to me soone

[illegible] your Diamond too [illegible] come off, and [illegible] in [illegible] you have craft in, See your Iewell, this your owne, and now Gisni are y' [illegible]

To give him welcome Exit.
Imo Continues well my Lord?
His health beseech you
Iach Well Madam
Imo Is he disposed to mirth? I hope he is,
Iach Exceeding pleasant: none a stranger there,
So merry, and so gamesome: he is called
The best of Reuelers
Imo When he was here
He did incline to sadnesse, and often times
Not knowing why
Iach. I never saw him sad
There is a Frenchman, his Companion one
An eminent Monsieur, that it seems much loues
A Roman Conquest, and his Fellowes
Are nightly pleasant guests with us: he is brought
Your Lord I meane laies siege to my poore thoughts, and Commands them downe to yeeld to his subiection.
But his Reputation is as high
With women, yet that hee hath thought worthy

Has not his equall: no more men are much too blame.
Imo Not he I hope.
Iach Not he:
But your Honour's bounty towards him might

In the imputation of a Kingdome, Talents
Which, I doubt not, you sometime will bestow
To my Master.

Iach Long liue the Queene!
To your command. Once more Madam all health and solace
Be with your Highnesse.
Imo I pray you Sir
Deliuer with what vnrestrained loue and solace
Your Master doth expect my welcome. Will you, pray you?
Iach I shall not feare
(I was about to say) enough: but how Should I feare to doe too much for such Noble entertainment? Please you
Imo You are very welcome.
Some other time, or what concernes me; pray you
Take good note of things: I loue it: it is more
Fit for me then they do. For certainties
Either past remedies, or timely knowing,
The remedy then borne. Discouer to me
What both you spare to tell.
Iach Had I this cheeke
To bathe my lips upon: this hand, whose touch,
(Whose every touch would force the feelers soule
To the oath of loyalty. This obiect, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here: should I (damn'd then)

must take me vp for swearing, as if I borrowed mine oathes of him and might not spend them at my pleasure.

2 What got he by that? you haue broke his pate with your Bowle.

3 If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would haue run all out.

Clot When a Gentleman is disposed to sweare: it is not for any Standers by to curtaile his oathes. Ha?

2 No my Lord, nor crop the eares of them.

Clot Whoreson dog! I gaue him satisfaction? would he had been one of my Rancke.

2 To haue smelt like a Foole.

Clot. I am most vext more at any thing in th'earth: a pox on't I had rather not be so Noble as I am: they dare not fight with me, because of the Queene my Mother: every Iacke Slaue hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go vp and downe like a Cocke, that no body can match.

2 You are Cocke and Capon too, and you crow Cocke, with your comb on.

Clot. Sayest thou?

2 It is not fit your Lordship should vndertake euery Companion that you giue offence to.

Clot. No, I know that: but it is fit I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 I, it is fit for your Lordship only.

Clot Why so I say.

1. Did you heare of a Stranger that's come to Court night?

Clot A Stranger, and I not know on't?

2 He's a strange Fellow himselfe, and knowes it not.

1. There's an Italian come, and 'tis thought one of Leonatus Friends.

Clot Leonatus? A banisht Rascall, and he's another, whatsoeuer he be. Who told you of this Stranger?

1 One of your Lordships Pages.

Clot Is it fit I went to looke vpon him? Is there no derogation in't?

2 You cannot derogate my Lord.

Clot Not eas'ily I thinke.

2 You are a fit Foole if they are: you are a Foole and gentleman scarce, therefore your Issues being foule, may do not disgrace.

Clot. Come, I'le see this Italian: what I haue lost to day at Bowle, I'le winne to night of him. Come go.

3 I attend your Lordship. Exit.

That such a crafty Diuell as is his Mother
Should yeeld the world this Asse! A woman, that
Beares all downe with her Braine, and her Sonne,
Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,
And leaue eighteene. Alas poore Princesse,
Thou diuine Imogen, what thoughts it is,
Betwixt a Father by thy Step-dame gouern'd,
A Mother hourely coyning plots: A Wooer,
More hateful than the [illegible]
O thy deere Husband! Then hast lost the dearest
O the diuorce, he'l take the Heauens boldnesse
The walls of thy deere Honour. Keepe vnshak'd
That Temper'd as thy mind, that thou maist stand
T'enioy thy banish'd Lord, and this great Land. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Imogen, in her Bed, and a Lady.

Imo. Who's there? My woman, Helen?

La. Please you Madam.

Imo. What houres is it?

Lady. Almost midnight, Madam.

Imo. I haue read three houres then:
Mine eyes are weake,
Fold downe the leafe where I haue left: to bed.
Take not away the Taper, leaue it burning:
And if thou can'st awake by course o'th'clock,
I prythee call me. Sleepe hath seiz'd me wholly.
To your protection I commend me, Gods,
From Fayries and the Tempters of the night,
Guard me beseech yee. Sleepes.

Iach me from the Trunke

Iach. The Crickets sing, and man's o're-labor'd sense
Repaires it selfe by rest: Our Tarquine thus
Did softly presse the Rushes, ere he waken'd
The Chastity he wounded. Cytherea,
How bravely thou becom'st thy Bed, fresh Lilly,
And whiter than the Sheetes: that I might touch,
But kisse, one kisse. Rubies vnparagon'd,
How deere they doo't. 'Tis her breathing that
Perfumes the Chamber thus: the flame o'th Taper
Bowes toward her, and would vnder-peepe her lids,
To see the enclosed Lights, now Canopied
Vnder these windowes, White and Azure, lac'd
With Blew of Heauens owne tinct. But my designe
To note the Chamber, I will write all downe:
Such, and such pictures. There the window: such
The adornement of her Bed, the Arras, Figures,
Why such, and such: and the Contents o'th Story.
Ah, but some naturall notes about her Body,
Aboue ten thousand meaner Moueables
Would testifie, t'enrich mine Inuentorie.
O sleepe, thou Ape of death, lye dull vpon her,
And be her Sense but as a Monument,
Thus in a Chappell lying. Come off, come off,
As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard.
'Tis mine, and this will witnesse outwardly,
As strongly as the Conscience do's within:
To'th'madding of her Lord. On her left breast
A mole Cinque-spotted: Like the Crimson drops
I'th bottome of a Cowslippe. Here's a Voucher,
Stronger than euer Law could make; this Secret
Will force him thinke I haue pick'd the lock, and t'ane
The treasure of her Honour. No more: to what end?
Why should I write this downe, that's riveted,
Screw'd to my memorie. She hath but late reading late,
The Tale of Tereus, here the leafe's turn'd downe
Where Philomele gaue vp. I haue enough,
To'th'Trunke againe, and shut the spring of it.
Swift swift you Dragons of the night, that dawning
May bare the Rauen's eye. I lodge in feare,
Though this a heauenly Angell: hell is heere.

Clocke strikes

One, two, three: time, time. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clotten, and Lords.

1 Your Lordship is the most patient man in losse, the most coldest that euer turn'd vp Ace.

Clot It would make any man cold to lose.

1 But not euery man patient after the noble temper of your Lordship; You are most hot, and furious when you win'st

Enter Posthumus, and Pisanio.

Post. Feare [illegible] I would I were assure
To owne her [illegible] as I am bold, her Honour
Will [illegible]
Iach. Will [illegible] make to him?
Post. Not [illegible] the change of Time,
[illegible] Winters fitte, and wish
That warmer dayes would come. In these fear'd hope
I barely gratifie your loue: they failing
I must [illegible]
Pis. Your very goodnesse, and your company,
O're-pay[illegible] I cannot. Do't, and your King,
Hath [illegible] Great Augustus, Caius Lucius,
Will [illegible] throughly. And I think

He'le grant the Tribute, send th' Arrerages,
Or looke vpon our Romane, whose remembrance
Is yet fresh in their griefe
Post. I do beleeue (Statist though I am none, nor like to be,
That this will prooue a Warre; and you, shall heare
The Legion now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not-fearing-Britaine, than haue tydings
Of any penny Tribute paid. Our Countrymen
Are men more order'd, than when Iulius Cæsar
Smil'd at their lacke of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his frowning at. Their discipline,
Now wing-led with their courages, will make knowne
To their Approuers they are People, such
That mend vpon the world. Enter Iachimo.
Pis. See Iachimo.
Post. The two-yong'st Harts, haue posted you by land,
And Winds of all the Corners kiss'd your Sailes,
To make your vessell nimble.
Pis. Welcome Sir.
Post. I expect the quicknesse of your answere, made
The speed not fellow'd of your setting-forth.
Iach. Your Lady,
Is one the best eyes I haue look'd vpon?
Post. And therewithall the best, or let her Beauty
Looke through a Casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.
Iach. Heere are Letters for you.
Post. Their tenure good I trust.
Iach. 'Tis very like.
Post. Was Caius Lucius in the Britaine Court,
When you were there?
Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.
Post. All is well yet.
Sparkles this Stone as it was wont, or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?
Iach. If I haue lost it,
I should haue lost the worth of it in Gold.
I'le make a iourney twice as farre, t'enioy
A second night of such sweet shortnesse, which
Was mine in Britaine, for the Ring is wonne
Post. The Stones too hard to come by.
Iach. Not a whit,
Your Lady being so easy.
Post. Make not it Sir
You lose your Sport. I hope you know that we Must not continue friends.
Iach. Good Sir, we must
If you keepe Couenant. Had I not brought
The knowledge of your Mistresse home, I grant
We were to question further, but now
Proclaime me the welcom'st Lord of her Honor.
Let me with you. Your Ring may not be wronger
Other than you haue doing, prescribe but
By bonds, and words.
Post. If you can make't apparant
That you haue tasted her in Bed, my hand,
And Ring is yours. If not, the foule opinion
You had of her pure Honour, gaines, or loses,
Your Sword or mine, or Masterfull Leasue both
To who shall finde them.
Iach. Sir, my Circumstances
Being so neere the Truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to beleeue, whose strength
I will confirme with oath, which I doubt not

You'l

You'l giue me leaue to spare, when you shal finde
You needde it not.
Post. Proceed
Iach. First, her Bed-chamber
(Where I confesse I slept not, but profesſe
Had that was well worth watching) it was hangd
With Tapſtry of Silke and Siluer: the Story
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Cydnus swell'd aboue the bankes, or for
The preſſe of Boates, or Pride. A peece of Worke
So braue'y done, ſo rich, that it did take
In Workemanſhip, and Value, which (I wonder'd
Could be ſo rare, and not exactly Regarded
Since many holde it ſtrange
Post. This is true
And this you might haue heard one to queſtion,
Or by ſome other.
Iach. More particulars
Must iuſtify my knowledge
Post. So they muſt
Or doe your Honour iniury.
Iach. The Chimney
Is South the Chamber, and the Chimney-piece
Chaſte Diana, bathing: neuer ſaw I figures
So likely to report themſelues: the Cutter
Was as another Nature: dumbe: outwent her,
Motion, and Breath left out.
Post. This is a thing
Which you might from relation likewiſe reape,
Being, as it is, much ſpoke of
Iach. The Roofe o'th' Chamber,
With golden Cherubins is fretted: Her Andirons
(I had forgot them) were two winking Cupids
Of Siluer, each on one foote ſtanding nicely
Depending on their Brands.
Post. This is her Honour.
Let it be granted you haue ſeene all this (and praiſe
Be giuen to your remembrance) the deſcription
Of what is in her Chamber nothing ſaues
The wager you haue laide.
Iach. Then, if I haue can
Pale, I begge but leaue to ayre this Iewell: See,
And now 'tis vp againe: It muſt be married
To that your Diamond, Ile keepe them
Post. Ioue——
Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?
Iach. Sir (I thanke her) that
She ſtript it from the Arme: I ſee her yet:
Her pretty Action, did out-ſell her gift,
And yet enrich'd it too: ſhe gaue it me,
And ſaid, ſhe prized it once.
Post. May be ſhe pluckt it off
To ſend it me.
Iach. She writes ſo you may feele
Post. Would ſhe had neuer come: Heere, take this too,
It is a Baſe-ſlaue, that with a Mercenary eye,
Killes me to looke on't: Let there be no Honour,
Where there is Beauty: Truth where Semblance: Loue,
Where there's another man: The Vowes of Women,
Of no more bondage be to where they are made,
Than they are to their Vertues, which is nothing:
O, abuſe meaſure to ſo
Phil. Haue patience Sir,
And take your Ring againe, 'tis not yet wonne:
It may be probable ſhe loſt it: or
Who knowes if one her women, being corrupted
Hath ſtolne it from her.
Post. Very true,
And ſo I hope he came by't: backe my Ring,
Render to me ſome corporall ſigne about her
More euident than this: for this was ſtolne,
Iach. By Iupiter, I had it from her Arme.
Post. Hearke you, he ſweares: by Iupiter he ſweares
'Tis true, my keepe: my Ring, I am gone
Euen to my ſhip, and in a ſhort Aduantage
Ay worſe: and why ſhould I ſpeake? why ſhould you
Ay, by a Gracious, Gentle, Noble Goddeſſe,
That in this vnclaſpe: to vnlocke: Iniurie,
Is ſtronger than no truſt: Where is a Thouſand Ducats, for
This, take your Honour: all the Treaſure of Her
Doores, this Ring, and all that owes me: you.
Ile make your Vantage, ſtay
This ſwore enough to be beleeu'd
That parts not from your hand
Post. Neuer, neuer
Shee's with the Diuell bound
Iach. If you ſeeke
For further ſeruice of me, vnder her Breaſt
(Worthy her preſent) lyes a Mole, right proud
Of that moſt delicate Lodging: By my life
I kiſſ'd it, and it gaue me preſent hunger
To feede againe, though full. You do remember
This ſtaine vpon her?
Post. I, and it doth confirme
Another ſtaine, as bigge as Hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.
Iach. Will you heare more?
Post. Spare your Arithmatike,
Neuer count the Turnes: Once, and a Million.
Iach. I'le be ſworne.
Post. No ſwearing:
If you will ſweare you haue not done it, you lye,
And I will kill thee, if thou do'ſt deny
Thou'ſt made me Cuckold.
Iach. I'le deny nothing.
Post. O that I had her here to teare her Limb-meale.
I will go there and do't, i'th' Court, before
Her Father. Ile do ſomething Exit.
Phil. Quite beſides
The Gentleman of your Profeſſion. You haue wonne:
Let his ſword make thee worke before him. If
Hee'ſ aduantage, kill him, or put the preſent wrath
Hee ſhall finde in you to't.
Iach. Great, how I meane to doe't. Exeunt.

Enter Poſthumus.

Poſt. Is there no way for Men to be, but Women
Muſt be halfe-workers? We are all Baſtards,
And that moſt venerable man, which I
Did call my Father, was I know not where
When I was ſtampt. Some Coyner with his Tooles
Made me a counterfeit: yet my Mother ſeem'd
The Dian of that time: ſo doth my Wife
The Non-pareil of this. O Vengeance, Vengeance!
Me of my lawfull pleaſure ſhe reſtrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance: did it with
A pudency ſo rotten, as her vnchaſt ſeeming
Made me beleeue me ſeene Hercules
(Much more than man) come to her: and on her
Thus hotly: but her
As Chaſte, as vnſunn'd Snow. O all the Diuels
This yellow Iachimo in an houre, was't not?

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pisanio reading of a Letter.

Pis. How of Adultery? Wherefore write you not What Monsters her accuse? Leonatus
O Master, what a strange infection

Scæna Tertia.

Scæna Quarta.

The freezing houres away? We haue seene nothing,
We are beastly, subtle as the Fox for Prey,
Like Warlike as the Wolfe for what we eate
Our Viands haue been Caues, Our Cage
We make a Quire, as doth the prisoned Bird,
And sing our bondage freely.
How you speake
Did you but know the Cittie Vsurers,
And fearefull Merchants rarely inhabite Court,
And you could see the dangers we abide
The feare's as bad as falling. The toyle of Warre,
A paine that only seemes to seeke out danger
I'th name of fame and honour, which dyes i'th search,
And hath as oft a slanderous Epitaph,
As record of fayre Act. Nay many times
Doth ill deserue, by doing well, a worse
Must curse it selfe at the Cradle. That Boyes, but scarce
Tye Woorld may reade in me. My Body's mark'd
With Roman Swords, and my report, was once
First, with the best of Note. Cymbeline loued me,
And when a Souldier was the Theame, my name
Was not farre off. Then was I as a Tree
Whose boughes did bend with fruit. But in one Night,
A Storme, or robbery (call it what you will)
Shooke downe my mellow hanging fruit, and left me bare.
And left me bare to weather
Vncertaine lyfe and
Bel. Vnder faire pretence of these harmes,
Both pitty vs, but eye vs not, as things
Beneath their Visitation. Oftentimes
Beleeue me, I (rememb'ring how much mine
Was dearer, ere a Sutor could prefer
More pouerfull to my will) haue mixt my Rewards
The Seasons of their turnes. But vpright Youth
This is not Hunters language, he that strikes
The Venison first shall eate the Hart first,
To winne our Loues we doe that often finde,
And when we haue our Prizes (which not alter'd, Appeares poore as it did) we cast them downe,
Imagine so my Sonnes were we, their Father
Liues in their Error. Feare him not. Sit down. Exeunt.
How hard it is to hide the sparkes of Nature!
These Boyes know little they are Sonnes to the King,
Nor Cymbeline dreames that they are aliue.
They thinke they are mine, and though trayn'd vp thus meanely
I'th Caue wherein they bow their hinges haue
The Soules of Princes, on whose noble ends
Rest on them (as doth Heauen) ruines, or rights,
Beyond their sphere, their hopes beyond their houses,
Their walkes as free as Deere that vse our ayre
In vnconfin'd disposition. As they grow
Their Mindes shall blesse them, as their Prayers are heard.
The Romane Power comes in search, and what
Shall then oppose their safeties, but our breathes?
And when they smell it, Dogges find Deere, and Deere
Fly other things. Our Liues are forfeit to them.
A Day or two determines all. Meane time
Inferior Flyes, Garded with Golden Wings,
This Pisanio
Strikes his Intelligence through. Cymbeline welcomes
His owne Reuenge with it. My Conscience knowes
Thou didst not willingly banish me, whereon
At three, and two yeeres old, I stole these Babes
Thinking to barre thee of Succession, as
Thou reft'st me of my Lands. Euriphile,
Thou was't their Nurse, they took thee for their mother,
And euery day do honor to her graue.
My selfe Belarius, that am Morgan call'd
They take for Naturall Father. The Game is vp. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Imo Thou told'st me when we came fro horse, y place
Was neere at hand. Ne're long'd my Mother so
To see me first, as I haue now. Pisanio, Man.
Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind
That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that sigh
From th'inward of thee? One, but painted thus
Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
Beyond selfe-explication. Put thy selfe
Into a hauiour of lesse feare, ere wild selfe
Vanquish my stayed Senses. What's the matter?
Why tender'st thou that Paper to me, with
A looke vntender? If't be Summer Newes
Smile too't before: if Winterly, thou need'st
But keepe that countenance still. My Husbands hand?
That Drugdamn'd Italy, hath out-craftied him,
And he's at some hard point. Speake man, thy Tongue
May take off some extremity, which to read
Would be euen mortall to me.
Pis. Please you read,
And you shall finde me (wretched man) a thing
The most vnworthy to be found of Fortune

Imogen reades.

My Affaires (Pisanio) haue pleased the Strumpet in my bed, the Testimonies whereof lies bleeding in me. I speak not of weake Surmizes, but I am profest to Reuenge as my Loue, and as certaine as I loue her. My Reuenge I put part, thou (Pisanio) must dispatch for me: if my Faith be not tainted with the breach of hers, let thine owne hand take away her life. I shall giue thee opportunity at Milford-Hauen. She hath my Letter for the purpose, where, if thou feare to strike, and to make me certaine it is done, thou art the Pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyall.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my Sword, the Paper
Hath cut her throat already? No, 'tis Slander,
Whose edge is sharper then the Sword, whose tongue
Out-venomes all the Wormes of Nyle, whose breath
Rides on the posting windes, and doth belye
All corners of the World. Kings, Queenes, and States,
Maides, Matrons, nay the Secrets of the Graue
This viperous slander enters. What cheere Madam?
Imo. False to his Bed? What is it to be false?
To lye in watch there, and to think on him?
To weepe twixt clock and clock? If sleep charge Nature,
To breake it with a fearefull dreame of him,
And cry my selfe awake? That's false to's bed? Is it?
Pis. Alas good Lady.
Imo I false. Thy Conscience witnesse Iachimo,
Thou did'st accuse him of Incontinencie,
Thou then look'dst like a Villaine, now, me thinkes

[illegible] goodenough. Some Iay of Italy
(Whose mercenarie was for painting) hath betrai'd him.
Poore I am heere, a Garment out of fashion
And for I am richer then to hang by th'wayes,
I meane to scape. To peeces with me. Oh
Meere Vowes are worne as Traitors. All good seeming
By thee to me put on, and I dare skorne
Destruction. Thou, thou Iustice that thy Ballance
Iust hangs in Heaven, and dost spit fire and flames
Immediately on Villaines,
Pis. Mistake me not
Imo. I doe not tell me so my deere, that Title
Is worne out of the Booke. Alas Pisanio,
Were man but constant, he were perfect. That one error
Fill'd with repentance all the ensuing Ages
And mended the Worlds memorie. Be constant now.
Pis. Whether constancie, or no, that I know not,
It is no Treason I am sure to hold
All Vertues in a Servant, as Truth, Diligence,
Secrecie, Obedience, and the rest that follow
To his Master, and the Master of his Master.
If ever Yet in all I did deserve your Chiding,
My Master, and makes me put into contempt the Suites
Of Princes, Fellowes shall be serv'd before
You Lord of Queenes. Come, you are angry.
Imo. Well, well, no more of it. Obedient Seruant,
For by that Name must I henceforth call thee,
Thou should'st to this hand of mine have writ
Command as great as any Monarchs, as
Obedient as the Scroule in the Booke.
Therefore to Milford-Haven. Sir, you something
Must know concerning me. O good Pisanio,
Could but my Lord perceive how fondly I
Dote on his false heart. But to your Charge.
What Art thou running hence, see thou do not Linger to looke back on him, or begin
To call thy Master backe, or speake his name
Or weep that he is gone, you must suppresse
This Passion, least it betray you, and
Be pluckt back to his Torment.
Pis. Madam, so I do.
Imo. Nay, and you doe more than so, you marre
All that you undertake. Doe as I bid you,
Grieve as I would, spend a just teare for me,
For I must looke as if I had but lost
A Neighbours Slave, not my deere Lords
Who is the Map of him, no more of him.
Pis. Madam, I will.
Imo. Then if you can, downe to the Haven,
Follow the Story once more to the Sea,
And when you there have made me mocke the Mad,
That I so long have babled to the Billowes,
Marke the Encounter. Then returne
Before the Element visit you to day,
Least after your diurnall Performance,
All greedie Eare grow Violent. Farewell.
Away, away
Cut off the Remembrance of my Lord, you must
Be Souldier to me, and obey the Tenor
Of Princely Commaund. For I am proceeding
On Enterprize to him, though Parents frowne,
Though Feare, and Heauen crosse me, though my Marriage
Their sacred Vow, though every drop of Bloud
Should chide this Resolution, I will follow
The Lambe entreats the Butcher. Wher's thy knife?
Thou art too slow to do thy Masters bidding
When I desire it too.
Pis. O gracious Lady,
Since I receiv'd command to do this businesse,
I have not slept one wincke.
Imo. Do't, and to bed then.
Pis. Ile wake mine eye-balles first.
Imo. Wherefore then
Did'st undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd
So many Miles with a pretence? This place?
Mine Action? and thine owne? Our Horses labour?
The Time inviting thee? The perturb'd Court
For my being absent? whereunto I never
Purpose returne. Why hast thou gone so farre
To be unbent? when thou hast ta'ne thy stand,
Th'elected Deere before thee?
Pis. But to win time
To lose so bad employment, in the which
I have consider'd of a course. Good Lady
Heare me with patience.
Imo. Talke thy tongue weary, speake
I have heard I am a Strumpet, and mine eare
Therein falsehood can take no greater wound,
Nor tent to bottome that. But speake
Pis. Then Madam,
I thought you would not backe againe
Imo. Most like,
Bringing me heere to kill me
Pis. Not so neither.
But if I were as wise, as honest, then
My purpose would prosper well. You cannot be,
But that my Master is abus'd. Some Villaine,
Land-leager to this Aire, hath done you both
This cursed injurie.
Imo. Some Roman Curtezan?
Pis. No, on my life.
Ile give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody signe of it. For 'tis commanded
I should do so. You shall be miss'd at Court,
And that will well confirme it.
Imo. Why good fellow,
What shall I do the while? where bide? How live?
Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my Husband?
Pis. If you'll backe to the Court,
Imo. No Court, no Father, nor no more adoe
With that harsh, noble, simple nothing.
That Cloten, whose Love-suite hath been to me
As fearefull as a Siege.
Pis. If not at Court,
Then not in Britaine must you bide.
Imo. Where then?
Hath Britaine all the Sunne that shines? Day? Night?
Are they not but in Britaine? I'th' worlds Volume
Our Britaine seemes as of it, but not in't,
In a great Pool a Swanne-lesse Pond, my life thinke
Is as deepe discredited as Roman.
Pis. I am most glad
You thinke of other place. Th'Ambassador,
Lucius the Romane comes to Milford-Haven
To morrow. Now if you could weare a mode
Darke as your Fortunes, and but disguise
That which t'appeare it self must not yet be,
But by self-danger, you should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view; yea, happily neere
The residence of Posthumus; so nie (at least)
That though his Actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourely to your eare
As truely as he moves.
Imo. O for such means,
Though perill to my modestie, not death on't
I would adventure.
Pis. Well then, heere's the point:
You must forget to be a Woman: change
Command into obedience. Feare and Nicenesse
(The Handmaids of all Women, or more truely
Woman it pretty self) into a wagtish courage,
Ready in gybes, quicke-answer'd saucie and
As quarrelous as the Weazel. Nay, you must
Forget that rarest Treasure of your Cheeke,
Exposing it (but oh the harder heart,

Alacke

[illegible] He goes hence frowning, but it honours us
That we haue giuen him cause.
Clo. 'Tis all the better,
Your valiant Britaines haue their wishes in it.
Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the Emperor
How it goes here. It fits vs therefore ripely
Our Chariots and our Horsemen be in readinesse:
The powres that he already hath in Gallia
Will soone be drawne to head, from whence he moues
His warre for Britaine.

Scena Septima.

[illegible] Arviragus
[illegible] welcome, and
A [illegible]
W[illegible] Cousin, what ha's
I [illegible] you
Be [illegible] Come, our Mistresse
[illegible] Weare [illegible]
[illegible]
Fa[illegible] Now peace be here,
Poore [illegible] keep here.
Cym. Thankes [illegible].
Arm. [illegible], yet from [illegible]
Cym. The [illegible] Cookes
Would [illegible] be Cooke
Bel. Stay, come not in:
But that it eates our [illegible], I should take
Heere were a Fary
Cym. What straunge matter, Sir
Bel. By [illegible] Angel [illegible]
As earthly Paragon. Beyond Duration
No clutter'd with a Boy
Enter Imogen
Imo. Good [illegible] not:
Before I [illegible] thee, [illegible] thought
I [illegible]
I [illegible], nor with [illegible]
Good [illegible]. Heere's my [illegible] my Meate,
I would [illegible]
As [illegible] my Meate, [illegible]
We [illegible]
Cym. My [illegible]
Arm. All [illegible] come to dust,
As 'tis no better [illegible]
We [illegible]
Imo. I [illegible]
Know, if you [illegible], I should
[illegible]
Bel. Where [illegible]?
Imo. To [illegible] Have.
Bel. What [illegible]?
Imo. Fa[illegible], who
Is bound [illegible] Mistrisse,
To whom [illegible] danger,
I am [illegible]
Be. Pray [illegible]
Thankes [illegible] out [illegible]
by this rude [illegible] We [illegible],
I want'd [illegible], we shall [illegible]
Ere you [illegible] to day, and taste
Boyes, you are welcome.
Gui. Were I a woman, youth,
I should woo hard, but be your Groome in honesty.
I [illegible],
Arm. Be [illegible] my Comfort
Here's a man [illegible] as my Brother
And [illegible]

After long absence) such is yours. Most welcome:
Be free as you [illegible], for you are [illegible] amongst Friends.
Imo. Amongst Friends?
If Brothers: would it had been so, that they
Had been my Fathers Sonnes, then had my prize
Been [illegible], and so more equall ballasting
To thee Posthumus.
Bel. He wrings at some distresse.
Gui. Would I could free't.
Arm. Or, whate're [illegible],
Whate'er [illegible], what danger: Gods!
Bel. Heare me Boyes.
Imo. Great me,
That had a Court no bigger than this Cave,
That did attend [illegible] vertues, and had the vertue
Which [illegible] Conscience seal to them, saying by
That nothing-gift of differing Multitudes
Could [illegible] peere these [illegible]. Pardon me Gods,
I'ld change my [illegible] to be Companion with them,
Since Leonatus [illegible].
Bel. I [illegible] before.
Boyes: wee've [illegible] our Hunt. Faire youth come in;
Discourse is heavy, fasting: when we have supp'd
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy Story,
So farre as thou wilt speake it.
Gui. Pray draw neere.
Arm. The Night to th'Owle,
And Morne to the Larke less welcome.
Imo. Thankes Sir.
Arm. I pray draw neere. Exeunt.

Scena Octava.

Enter two Roman Senators and Tribunes.

1. Sen. This is the tenor of the Emperors Writ,
That since the common men are now in Action
'Gainst the Pannonians, and Dalmatians,
And that the Legions now in Gallia are Full weake to undertake our Warres against
The [illegible] that we [illegible]
The Gentry to this businesse. He creates
Lucius Pro Consul: and to you the Tribunes
For this immediate Levy, he commands
His absolute Commission. Long is Caesar.
Tri. Is Lucius Generall of the Forces?
2. Sen. I.
Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?
1. Sen. With those Legions
Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levie
Must be supplyant: the words of your Commission
Will tye you to the numbers, and the time
Of their dispatch.
Tri. We will discharge our duty Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter [illegible] two [illegible]

Clot. I am neere to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapp'd it truely. How fit his Garments serve me! Why should his Mistris who was made by him that made the Taylor, not be it cool? The rather (saving reuerence of the Word) for 'tis thought a Woman shall comes by's there. I must pay the Workman, I dare speake it to my owne, for 'tis not Vanity in one for a man, and the Gaile, to confesse in his owne Chamber I meane,

the Lineaments my body are as well drawne as his [illegible] more stirring, more euident, more certaine, more
[illegible] beyond him in some one Article.
[illegible] Where is my Master? Pisanio, my Head will [illegible]
[illegible] Scene, [illegible] Mistresse,
[illegible] all [illegible] Ear [illegible]
[illegible] Mother [illegible] Bellarius [illegible]
[illegible] Sword [illegible] neither [illegible]
[illegible] euery [illegible] see [illegible]
and the [illegible] not deceiue me. Exit

Scena Secunda.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, Aruiragus and Imogen from the Caue.

Bel. You are not well (Remember [illegible] Cadence,
Welcome to your Winter Hearing.
Arui. Welcome, my Heere
Are we not Brothers?
Imo. So man and man should be,
But [illegible] and Clay, [illegible]
Were I [illegible] alike. I am very [illegible],
[illegible] Go not about my Sex, I doubt it not Sir.
Imo. So I hope I am not, yet I am not well.
But not [illegible] as
To [illegible] to dye, ere [illegible] please you, leaue me,
Stick to your Iournall course: the breach of Custome,
Is breach enough. I am sick: for your being by me
[illegible] the Society is no comfort
[illegible] sociable. I am not very sicke,
[illegible] pray you stay here,
[illegible] a worse [illegible]
Stead my [illegible].
Gui. I [illegible] I haue [illegible]
[illegible] Country, I wish [illegible],
As [illegible] my Father.
Bel. What [illegible]?
Arui. I [illegible] to Cry to 'Sh? Forsake me
Lest [illegible] Fairies and [illegible] know not why
I [illegible] and I haue heere you all,
[illegible] Treason, [illegible] Treason. The Heere at doore,
And [illegible] I [illegible] dye, I'le stay.
My [illegible]
Bel. [illegible]
O [illegible], Nature breeds Gentlenesse!
[illegible] Cowards & Beetles [illegible]
No [illegible], and Brasse, Courage, and Grace.
[illegible] Father yet were this [illegible],
[illegible] would better seeme.
[illegible] Mome.
Arui. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye [illegible]
Arui. You [illegible] so please you Sir.
Imo. [illegible] Creatures.
Cause, what yet I [illegible]
Our Courtiers say, all's [illegible] Court
[illegible], and [illegible] Rome
[illegible] as [illegible] Dish,
Poore Tributaries, [illegible]
[illegible] are [illegible]
[illegible] Image
[illegible]
[illegible] betweene [illegible],
[illegible] [illegible],
Arui. [illegible] one, cry'd [illegible] together,
[illegible]
Bel. [illegible]
We'll [illegible] sometime, come answer'd.
Arui. [illegible]
Bel. [illegible]
For you must [illegible]
Imo. Well, [illegible]
[illegible], Exit
[illegible] Are [illegible]
Two [illegible] were I [illegible] happier Caues [illegible] and Gentler [illegible]
Arui. [illegible] Angels [illegible]
[illegible] Cowards,
[illegible] Rocks, Caues,
As [illegible] Brothers, as [illegible],
As [illegible]
Arui. [illegible]
As [illegible], [illegible]
[illegible] Temple
[illegible] Soule
[illegible] Aye
[illegible]
[illegible] Sayes [illegible]
[illegible],
The [illegible] [illegible],
[illegible],
[illegible]
Arui. [illegible], [illegible]
[illegible] Creatures [illegible]
[illegible], [illegible]
Bel. [illegible], [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] that [illegible]
Hath [illegible].
Bel. [illegible]
[illegible] know [illegible]
[illegible] I [illegible] Ambush.
I [illegible], and yet
I know't [illegible] Heere
[illegible] you, and [illegible]
[illegible], pray you away,
Let [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Mountaines?
[illegible] What, [illegible]?
[illegible]
[illegible] Answering
[illegible]
[illegible], [illegible]
[illegible], [illegible] Therse.
[illegible]? Haue not I
An [illegible] Heart, [illegible]
[illegible] for I weare not
My Dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art:

[illegible] What company
[illegible]
[illegible] Noble
Cymbeline [illegible] Britaine, at Cesars
[illegible] Sonne: I long as first
[illegible] Queene, I, and at
[illegible] Nor feare,
[illegible] could stare him and
[illegible] were one, strong: perhaps
[illegible] Court, for wee
[illegible], Seruice, as hard-lawes, and in time
[illegible] trooper can, I dare it: cheering,
[illegible] breake her and weare
[illegible] probable
[illegible] bring, the Capers ground we feare,
[illegible] feare the bodyguard to take
Macedon, was [illegible] he was
[illegible] I could haue
[illegible] Noble Fidele
[illegible] Boy Fidele sicknesse
[illegible], may [illegible]
[illegible] sweet,
[illegible] throat, I haue true
[illegible] Creeke
[illegible] Sea,
[illegible] once Queene,
[illegible] Euill
[illegible] or lost (though valour
[illegible] deme Polidore
[illegible] Reuenges
[illegible] would teare vs through
[illegible] for danger
[illegible] to our Rocke,
[illegible] delay
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] blood,
[illegible]. Exit.
[illegible] Fidele
[illegible] thou blazon'st
[illegible], But yet they are as gentle
As [illegible] Violet,
[illegible] and answer, as rough
[illegible] the rudest winde,
[illegible] not take the Mountaine Pine,
As [illegible] peere. Vse. I'm wonder
That a [illegible] should name them
[illegible], honour vnsought,
[illegible] from other Valour
That [illegible] growes in them, hee's a crop
As [illegible] fowl'd yet, 'tis strange
What [illegible] here to vs portentous,
Or what [illegible] vs.

Enter Guiderius.

Gui. Where's my Brother?

I have sent Cloten walking not to bed
In Embassie to her Mother his Bodies hostage
For his return.
Bel. My ingenuous instrument,
(Hearke Polydore, it sounds but what occasion
Hath Cloten thus now to give notice, hearke.
Gui. Is he at home?
Bel. He went hence even now.
Gui. What does he meane?
Since death of my dear Mother
It hath not visited his

Arm. So, so.

SONG.

Gui. Fear no more the heate o' the Sunne,
Nor the furious Winters rages,
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone and tane thy wages
Golden lads and girles all must
As chimney sweepers come to dust.
Fear no more the frowne o' the great,
Thou art past the Tyrants stroake,
Care no more to clothe and eate,
To thee the Reede is as the Oake:
The Scepter, Learning, Physicke must
All follow this, and come to dust.
Gui. Fidele's more than dead.
Arm. Boy
Gui. Why

A maiden fle, of which her life's in danger. Heauens,
How dee, 'y you at once do touch me. In open.
The great part of my comfort, gone. My Queene
Vpon a desperate bed, and in a time
When feareful Warres point at me. Her Sonne gone,
So needfull for this present: it stroakes me, ay?
The hope of comfort. But for thee, fellow
Who needs must know of her departure and
Dost seeme so ignorant, we'l force it from thee
By a sharpe Torture.
Pis. Sir, my life is yours
I haue by fetch at your will. But for my Mistris,
I nothing know where she remaines (why gone,
Nor when she purposes returne. Beseech your Highnes,
Hold me your loyall Seruant.
Lord. Good my Liege,
The day that she was missing, he was here,
I dare be bound he's true and shall performe
All parts of his subiection loyally. For Cloten,
There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will no doubt be found.
Cym. The time is troublesome.
We'l slippe you for a season, but our iealousie
Do's yet depend.
Lord. So please your Maiesty,
The Roman Legions all from Gallia drawne,
Are landed on your Coast, with a supply
Of Romane Gentlemen, by the Senate sent.
Cym. Now for the Counsell of my Son and Queen,
I am amaz'd with matter.
Lord. Good my Liege,
Your preparation can affront no leſſe (ready-
Then what you heare of. Come more, for more you're
The worlds, but to put those Powres in motion,
That long to moue.
Cym. I thanke you: let's withdraw
And meete the time as it seekes vs. We feare not
What can from Italy annoy vs, but
We grieue at chances here. Away. Exeunt
Pisa. I heard no Letter from my Master, since
I wrote him Imogen was slaine. 'Tis strange.
Nor heare I from my Mistris, who did promise
To yeeld me often tydings. Neither know I
What is betide to Cloten, but remaine
Perplext in all. The Heauens still must worke
Wherein I am falſe, I am honest: not true, to be true.
These present warres shall finde I loue my Country,
Euen to the note o'th'King, or I'le fall in them:
All other doubts, by time let them be cleer'd,
Fortune brings in some boats that are not steer'd. Exit

Scena Quarta.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, Aruiragus

Gui. I cannot finde those Runnagates, that haue
Bel. I saw them not.
Arui. What pleasures, would the finde in this, to locke it
From Action, and Aduenture.
Gui. Nay what hope
Haue we in hiding vs? For this way the Romanes
Must or for Britaines slay vs, or receiue vs
For barbarous and vnnaturall Reuolts
During this life, we still day-light feare

Bel. Sonnes,
Wee'l higher to the Mountaines, there secure vs.
To the King's party there's no going: newnesse
Of Cloten's death (we being not knowne, not muſſer'd Among the Bands) may driue vs to a render
Where we haue liu'd, and so extort from's that
Which we haue done, whose answer would be death
Drawne on with Torture.
Gui. This (sir) a doubt
In such a time, nothing becomming you,
Nor satisfying vs.
Arui. It is not likely,
That when they heare their Roman horſes neigh,
Behold their Quarters with their trampling broke
And expectation clowded with their dust,
That we will stay to question: poore the day,
To know from whence we are.
Bel. O, I am known
Of many in the Army. Many yeeres
(Though Cloten then but young) you see, not wore him
From my remembrance. And besides, the King
Hath not deseru'd my seruice, nor your loues,
Who finds in my exile the wrong I bore
The certainty of this hard life: aye hopelesse
To haue the courtesie your Cradle promis'd,
But to be paſt the Suns remotest Line,
To land vpon a Shore of Venus,
Gui. Leaue vs to Better to cease to be. Pray Sir, to th' Army
I am not growne so tender: but I haue
Therein a mind that dares me to a greater care,
Then dare for what.
Arui. By heauens I do not know
Why I can owe my Country more, then you:
You haue me, rather you my Father. Such
For loue, you call me Brother, and such we are
For loue, and duty, and as he hates our hinderer
Let him finde fortune's stormes as we do his,
Who seeks a minute what a life together
May make vp to a yeare. Goe with me as with
Your Father: for your kindnes I will thanke you
Like Brothers, and command as Masters, actiue
As Knights of Rome, and no lesſe honoured
Then Captaines of Cassibelan. Sir, you
Are not your Children yet, but they are mine:
For this from stiller seates we look not on,
Then when they sit on Thrones, nor do we meane
To know (before the dreſſed) how many
Wounds make a seruice: nor how many dead
Prouoke a slaughter. Were the matter mine,
If all the Legions of the Empire stood
Leuied to make this day good, I would
Not draw a Target in't, nor helpe to saue
The life of any Roman. Pray you now,
You and your sonne are well met: the day
Your enemies power gathers, we shall stretch
Our vtmost vertues well in't. I am gone.
Looke through a Rocke, and goe to Duty with you.
Bel. Well said, braue Boyes,
Would Nature that you were not (as you are)
My Children: you haue such a Father there:
But (what thing'ſt thou) that I could not looke dead,
Did I stand by thy wife? Thou'ſt stroke me, Boy,
To the worlds mirth, and mine, where I did scarce
Know sorrow further off. But thy faire Mother,
And my good Mistris, would haue answer'd well
Her Sonnes reproofe. Who shall I swear is false?
Pisanio? Haue I not seene him true?
Or Imogen? That any humane power
Could driue me to a thought of falſehood in her?
Nor tremble at the thought. Yet I did more than
To looke vpon the bloody Cloten, to haue
The benefit of his blest Beames, remaining
So long a poore vnknowne.
Gui. By heauens I'le go
If you will bleſſe me Sir, and giue me leaue,
I'le take the better care: but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me by
The hands of Romans.
Arui. So say I, Amen.
Bel. No reason I (since of your liues you set
So slight a valuation) should reſerue mine
My crooked life more care. Haue with you Boyes.
If in your Country warres you chance to dye,
That is my bed too Lads, and there I lye.
Lead, lead. The time seemes long, their blood thinks scorne
Till it flye out and show them Princes borne. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Posthumus alone

Post. Yea bloody cloth, I'le keep thee, for I wish'd thee.
Shall after quit my mone. Can skill in Wounds
Haue seene more, and from whence? Come on, how many Haue with a Wound made better these, then these Those

Iupiter descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting vpon an Eagle: he throwes a Thunder-bolt. The Ghosts fall on their knees.
Iupiter. No more you petty Spirits of Prouidence
Offend our hearing: hush. How dare you Ghosts
Accuse the Thunderer, whose Bolt you know)
Sky-planted batt'ring all rending Oake,
Poore shadowes of Elizium, peace, and rest
Vpon your never-withering banks of flowres,
Be not with mortall accidents oppreſt,
No care of yours it is, you know 'tis ours.
Whom best I loue, I croſſe; to make my guift
The more delay'd, delighted: be content,
Your low-laide Sonne, our Godhead will uphold
His Comforts ſtrucke, his Ire, as we are neere,
Our louing Starre reigne on a Birth, a [illegible]
Our Temple was he married. Riſe, and hence,
He ſhall be Lord of Lady, Queene.
And happier much by his Affliction made
This Ile ſhall vnto his Britaine, and his

Expreſſe Impatience, eaſily will vs pleaſe:
Mount Eagle to my Palace Cryſtalline. Aſcends
Sicil. He came in Thunder, his Celeſtiall breath
Was ſulphurous to ſmell: the fiery Eagle
Stoop'd, as to foote vs: his Aſcention is
More ſweet then our bleſt Fields: his Royall Bird
Prunes the immortall wing, and cloves his Beake,
As when his God is pleaſed.
All. Thankes Iupiter.
Sicil. The Marble Pauement cloſes, he is entered
His radiant Roofe. Away, and to be ſtill
Let vs [illegible] what's not to be tri'd. Vaniſh
Poſt. Sleepe, ſlaue, and thinke of this: a Garment ſhe,
A Father to me, and thou haſt created
A Mother and two Brothers. But how came
Good [illegible] and Harſh: Faire Weather comes, that depend
On Creatures, Fauour, Dreame as I haue done,
Wake and find nothing. But alas I ſwerue.
Many [illegible] are the Aduerſities of darkneſſe,
And cheriſh'd [illegible] Errour, ſo am I
That [illegible] Gaoler cleare, and knowe not why.
What's yonder that [illegible] this ground? A Booke. O rare one,
Be not, as is our fangled world, a Garment
Nobler then that it covers. Let thy effects
So follow, to be most vnlike our Courtiers
As good as promiſe.

Reades

When as a Lyons whelpe ſhall to himſelfe vnknowne, without ſeeking finde, and be imbraced by a peece of tender Aire: And when from a ſtately Cedar ſhall be lopt branches, which being dead many yeares, ſhall after reuiue, be ioyned to the ſtocke, and freſher grow, then ſhall Poſthumus end his miſeries, Britaine be fortunate, and flowriſh in Peace and Plentie.

'Tis ſtill a Dreame: or elſe ſuch ſtuffe as Madmen
Tongue, and braine not: either both, or nothing,
Or ſenſeleſſe ſpeaking, or a ſpeaking ſuch
As ſenſe cannot vnrowle. Be what it is,
The Action of my life is like it, which Ile keepe
If but for ſimpathy.

Enter Gaoler.

Gao. Come Sir, are you ready for death?
Poſt. Ouer-roaſted rather: ready long ago.
Gao. Hanging is the word, Sir, if you be ready for that, you are well Cook'd.
Poſt. So I hope a good repaſt to the Spectators, the diſh payes that ſhot.
Gao. A heauy reckoning for you Sir. But the comfort is you ſhall be cal'd to no more payments, leaſt to mere Tuctoe Pigs, which are often the ſadneſſe of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for want of meate, depart reeling with too much drinke: ſorry that you are payed too much, and ſcarſe and Browne, both empty: the Brauer he beares, for being too light, the Purſe too light, being drawne of teares: the Cord, in contradiction you ſhall now loſe for the want of a penny Cord, it ſtrikes vpon mine owne account. You haue no more Debtor, and Creditor but it: of what's paſt, is, and to come, the diſcharge: your neceſſity Sir, is this booke and Counters; to the Acquittance it owes.
Poſt. I am merrier to dye, then thou art to liue.
Gao. Indeed Sir he that ſleepes, feeles not the Toothache: but a man that were to ſleepe your ſleepe, and a hangman to helpe him to bed: I think he would change places with his Officer: for look you Sir, you know not which way you ſhall go.
Poſt. Yes indeed do I, fellow.
Gao. Your death has eyes in's head then: I haue not ſeene him ſo pictur'd: you muſt either be directed by ſome that take vpon them to know, or to take vpon your ſelfe that which I am ſure you do not know: or iump the after-inquiry on your owne peril: and how you ſhall ſpeed in your iourneyes end, I thinke you'l neuer returne to tell one.
Poſt. I tell thee, Fellow, there are none want eyes, to direct them the way I am going, but ſuch as winke, and will not vſe them.
Gao. What an infinite mocke is this, that a man ſhould haue the beſt vſe of eyes, to ſee the way of blindneſſe: I am ſure hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Knocke off his Manacles, bring your Priſoner to the King.
Poſt. Thou bring'ſt good newes, I am call'd to be made free.
Gao. I'le be hang'd then.
Poſt. Thou ſhalt be then freer then a Gaoler, no bolts for

for the dead.

Gen. Vnleſſe a man would marry a Gallowes & beget yong Gibbets, I neuer ſaw one ſo prone: yet on my Conſcience, there are verie Knaues deſire to liue, for all he be a Roman, and there be ſome of them too that die againſt their wils; ſo hould I if I were one. I ſhould we were all for one minute, and then to come againe to my preſent paine, but my will hath a ſtrange deſire to ſtay

Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline Queene Cornelius, Ladies, Lords, Pisanio, and Lucius.

Cym Stand by me, Cornelius, ſtand: I am
Prethee ſolace my Heart, wee is my heart,
That the poore Soules that ſtand in feare of me
Whoſe raggies, ſhaming gilded Armes, that make
Their baſeneſſe (more apparant) cannot be ſtain'd
Neſſe, be happy that can make their peace
Our Grace can ſeale vnto
Luc. I neuer ſaw
Such Noble fury in ſo poore a Thing;
Such precious deeds in one that promiſes
But beggery, and poore lookes.
Cym. No tydings of him?
Pisa. He hath been ſearch'd among the dead & living
But no trace of him
Cym. To my griefe, I am
The heyre of his Reward: which (I will adde
To you (the Liuer, Heart and Braine of Britaine)
By whom I grant he liues. Tis your part
To ſeale it (where you ſee) beyond it.
Bel. Sir,
In Cambria are we borne, and Gentlemen
Further to boaſt, were neyther true nor modeſt,
Vnleſſe I adde, we are honeſt.
Cym Bow your knees:
Ariſe my Knights o'th'Battell, I create you
Companions to our perſon, and will fit you
With Dignities becomming your eſtates.
Enter Cornelius and Ladies.
There's buſineſſe in theſe faces: why ſo ſorrie?
Greet you our Victorie? you know not how
A mother of Great Britaine
Corn. Hayle great King,
To ſowre your happineſſe I muſt report
The Queene is dead.
Cym Who worſe than a Phyſitian
Would this report become? but I conſider,
By Medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will ſeize the Doctor too. How ended ſhe?
Corn. With horror, madly dying like her life,
Which (being cruell to the world) concluded
Moſt cruell to her ſelfe. What'ſ more to fear'd,
I was to report to your Maieſtie: the Queene
Cam'ſt in her Cloſet; where we (with wet cheekes
Were preſent) ſeeing her diſtilled
Cym Prythee ſay
Corn. Firſt ſhe confeſſ'd ſhe never lou'd you: only
Affected Greatneſſe got by you, not you
Married your Royalty, was wife to your place:
Abhorr'd your perſon
Cym She alone knew this:
And but ſhe ſpoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed
Corn Your daughter, whom ſhe bore in hand to loue
With ſuch integrity, ſhe did confeſſe
Was as a Scorpion to her ſight, whoſe ſting
(Whilſt yet ſhe had her powre to finde the life
Of her deſigne) ſhe did confeſſe ſhee had
For you a mortall Minerall, which being tooke,
Should by the minute feede on life, and ling'ring,
By inches waſte you. In which time ſhe purpoſed
(By watching, weeping, tendance, kiſſes) to
Oreome you with her ſhew, and in time
(When ſhe had fitted you with her craft to worke)
Her Sonne into th'adoption of the Crowne.
But failing of her end by his ſtrange abſence,
Growing ſhame-ſtricken at her impudence,
Dreaded Gods anger, haſted her to exact
Her ſeaſon'd death.
Cym. Heard you all this her Women?
Lad. We did ſo pleaſe your Highneſſe.
Cym Mine eares
Were not nice to ſo foule a Speech: which leaues
Me cares (that I ſhould feare) nor griefe, nor ſtay
For in a Miſtreſſe which I thought her Huſband
Hath her not only dyed poyſoner to me,
But fell & bitter. A Miſtreſſe to my Bed,
Such a Traytreſſe to my Throne, that ſtriues
To take from me the day-light. Out of doores,
Stay not to anſwer me: eſcape the preſence
Of my incenſed eye, leſt what is paſt
Should take new form in you. Our ſorrowes were Eaſie, if ſharpe ſenſe (as their ſtrong motiue is)
Could make an end of all. Proceed Cornelius,
How does the Queene?
Corn. She ſtrangled her Women
Luc. Worſe and worſe:
Poore Ladies will be found as full of Cruelty
And power (if they will practiſe) as their Lords.
This comes too ſtrong a ſtreſſe: if ſhe had liu'd
Long, it is like ſhe did not thinke you fit
For more than ſorrow. Will you heare more?
Cym Like a bell
Downe-beaten with the ſame meaſure he
Which he times others. You haue ſtaid me long:
Expect me not without more ſtrength, leſt I
Chance to ſtumble: Hee that comes alone
To ſeeke a ſtranger without bloud, I know
Feares worſe than death, and death it ſelfe. You do
Like Theeues, who ſtanding in their owne offence,
Preſume that Iuſtice hath it ſelfe condemn'd
What it does threaten. Let me haue no more
Of your reſpect than in our Princely ſeruice
You did deſerue accompt vpon your Honours,
And ſcarce ſhall haue the Cuſtome. Baſhfull ſinne
Keepes honeſt Creatures dumbe. Morne, and next day
Expect to be commanded: prythee Cornelius,
Withdraw, and take the Ladies. Who is next?
Exeunt Cornelius and Ladies.
Then comes the time
Of thoſe foule deeds your wrongs haue often done
Vnchaſtiſed by Lords. Be not as theſe are,
Afraid to ſpeake at full. Pisanio,
Stand forth: and by thy bluſhes, let me read
What thy tongue dares not: whom doſt thou yet adore
Hath thy maſter
Pisa. Your daughter, whom ſhe bore in hand to loue
With ſuch integrity, ſhe did confeſſe
Was as a Scorpion to her ſight, whoſe ſting
(Whilſt yet ſhe had her powre to finde the life
Of her deſigne) ſhe did confeſſe ſhee had
For you a mortall Mineral

The whole world shall not save him.
Pis. Not too hot:
First pay me for the Nurse-hood of your Sonnes,
[illegible] the cost of their lost
[illegible]
Cym. Nurse of my Sonnes?
Pis. I am too blunt and saucy: Here's my knee:
[illegible] Sonnes,
[illegible] Mighty Sir
[illegible]
And [illegible] Lords, to my Legge,
[illegible]
Cym. How now Pisanio?
Clo. Sonnes, your Fathers loue (Megge)

[illegible]

But I am truest speaker. You call'd me Brother
When I was but your Sister: I you Brothers,
When we were so indeed.
Cym. Did you ere meete?
Arm. I my good Lord.
Gui. And at first meeting lou'd,
Continu'd so, vntil we thought he dyed.
Cor. By the Queenes Drammes she swallow'd.
Cym. O rare instinct!
When shall I heare all through? This fierce abridgement,
Hath to it Circumstantiall branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Where? how liu'd you?
And when came you to serue our Roman Captiue?
How parted with your Brothers? how first met them?
Why fled you not to me? And with what stricture?
All your three Actions with the Basenesse wrapt
I know not how much more should be demanded,
And all the Time by euery what? How time,
From what (there's but an houre since it was Morne)
Vnto this instant? Name, Birth, Parentage?
Of euery these are yet vnspoken, and hearke Boy
Immediately.
Pos. Let me pause.
The powre that I haue on you, is to spare you
The malice towards you, to forgiue you. Liue
And deale with others better.
Cym. Nobly doom'd.
We'll learne our freedome of a Sonne-in-Law:
Pardon's the word to all.
Arm. You holpe vs Sir,
As you did meane indeed to be our Brother,
Ioy'd are we, that you are.
Post. Your Seruant princes. Good my Lord of Rome
Call forth your Soothsayer: As I slept, me thought
Great Iupiter vpon his Eagle backt
Appear'd to me, with other spritely shewes
Of mine owne Kindred. When I waked, I found
